7. Continued
STRANGWAYS
Sorry, Potter, my Manging Director is a creature of habit. He ahs a call booked through to me every evenign about this time.
PLEYDELL-SMITH
Hurry back, old boy, before the cards get cold.
STRANGWAYS
(smiling)
Twenty minutes .... and don't try doctoring a hand for me while I'm away.
POTTER
SMIRNOFF
VODKA
British govt announces new textile quota plan

SCRiPTiNG 007

BEHIND THE WRITING OF THE JAMES BOND MOVIES

CLÉMENT FEUTRY

Scripting 007: Behind the writing of the James Bond movies

Clément Feutry

Version 2.4 (July 13, 2025)

This eBook is in no way distributed, commissioned or endorsed by EON Productions / Danjaq or their partners MGM / UA / Amazon or Ian Fleming Publications. The author of this book also make no claim of ownership of any intellectual property owned by these stakeholders. This is simply a free academic fan-book devoted to the James Bond films, and more precisely their writing and the unsung heroes behind it.

The opinions expressed reflect solely those of the author and those of the individuals cited in the quoted passages.

Table of content:

00 Introduction....4
01 Dr. No....13
02 From Russia with Love....81
03 Goldfinger....111
04 Thunderball....159
05 You Only Live Twice....313
06 On Her Majesty's Secret Service....339
07 Diamonds Are Forever....421
08 Live and Let Die....495
09 The Man with the Golden Gun....515
10 The Spy Who Loved Me....579
11 Moonraker....677
12 For Your Eyes Only....717
13 Octopussy....779
13.5 Never Say Never Again (and Warhead)....819
14 A View to a Kill....891
15 The Living Daylights....961
16 Licence to Kill....1037
17 GoldenEye....1111
18 Tomorrow Never Dies....1253
19 The World Is Not Enough....1365
20 Die Another Day....1421
20.5 Jinx....1457
21 Casino Royale....1479
22 Quantum of Solace....1507
23 Skyfall....1535
24 Spectre....1539
25 No Time to Die....1623
26 Afterword....1643

Introduction

My first contact with the world of James Bond was a GoldenEye VHS that was at home. At the time, I was too young to understand the entire Cold War context associated with the film but I'll let you imagine the effect that the tank sequence could have had on a kid of around ten years old.

Since then, my youth was characterized by the systematic recording on VHS of each rebroadcast on television of the Bond films that I didn't already have, in order to be able to watch them again (or see them at all, sometimes there was school the next day).

This is basically how I became a James Bond fan; but not only like that. Besides the films universe, my cousins (living in the same french village) had a Gamecube and games like Agent Under Fire or Nightfire, so split-screen games on Skyrail or with the combo: golden gun + speed set on 250 (+ the grappling hook/jetpack while we were at it) were common and a large part of my childhood and thus of my love for this fictional character.

The next decades will only strengthen my enthusiasm for James Bond with the discovery of Ian Fleming's novels, continuations authors and others things (such as comics), as well as a role as editor on the French fan-site www.commander007.net to share my passion.

Bond fans are generally proud of their collections; they can collect anything and everything according to their incomes such as figurines, certain editions of books/DVDs, watches, vehicles diecast, film props, promotional materials, soundtracks, etc... What I mainly collect are the scripts of the James Bond films: these pieces of paper which describe/list the actions and dialogues which must take place on the screen. What the actors/doubles should do when the cameras are rolling and what the technical teams should prepare in advance.

The main reason why I like reading this type of material is that, after twenty years of watching these same films over and over, I now know them almost by heart and it is therefore difficult for me to watch them again. To the extent that there are always more or less significant differences between what was planned on paper and what was filmed or kept during editing, scripts are for me ways of rediscovering the plot of theses films with a dose of surprise that I no longer find in the films alone.

Of course, the more dated the script is in relation to the filming, the more its content tends to move away from what we find on the screen; to the point of sometimes having virtually nothing to do with the film we all know. This is undoubtedly my favorite type of script, one that gives the impression of discovering a never-before-seen James Bond film through the pages.

Getting the hands on James Bond scripts, however, is not the easiest thing; it took me a lot of investment in terms of time and money. Rare are the times when this type of document is put up for sale and the bids can quickly reach four figures and be won by someone other than you who will have basically bid at the last second before the deadline. Exchanges between collectors are also practical but quickly reach their limits. (By the way, please not come to me and ask me to give you a copy of my documents: I won't answer you).

Today by revealing part of the content of my documents I will undoubtedly reduce the monetary value of my own collection a little. Nevertheless I believe that the information they contain should benefit the entire fan community rather than just a handful of wealthy fans keeping them in their private display cases. This is the History (with a capital H) of the James Bond cinematographic saga and too little has been written about this important part that was the writing of theses films.

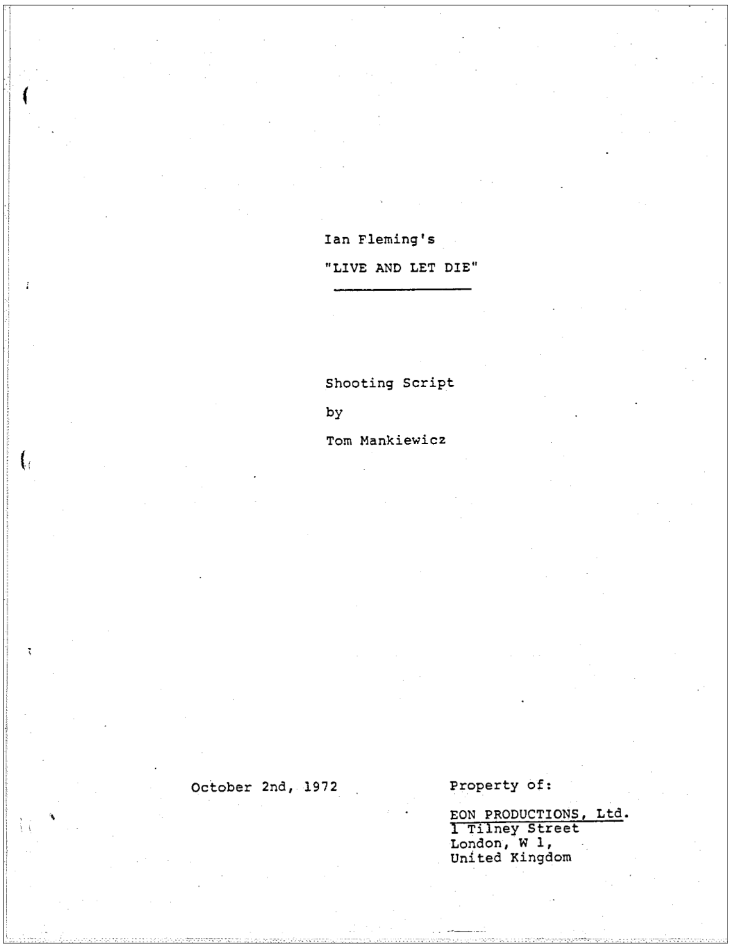
With this publication I hope to be able to shed a little light on this little-covered subject, correct certain false urban legends and also pay tribute to the various screenwriters and others who contributed to the writing of theses films (sometimes without being credited) and whose talent and effort (much of which goes unrecognized, with screenwriters often abandoning many scenes during the writing process) have brought us the James Bond adventures we know and cherish.



Ian Fleming's
"LIVE AND LET DIE"

Shooting Script
by Tom Mankiewicz

October 2nd, 1972

Property of:
EON PRODUCTIONS, Ltd.
1 Tilney Street
London, W 1,
United Kingdom

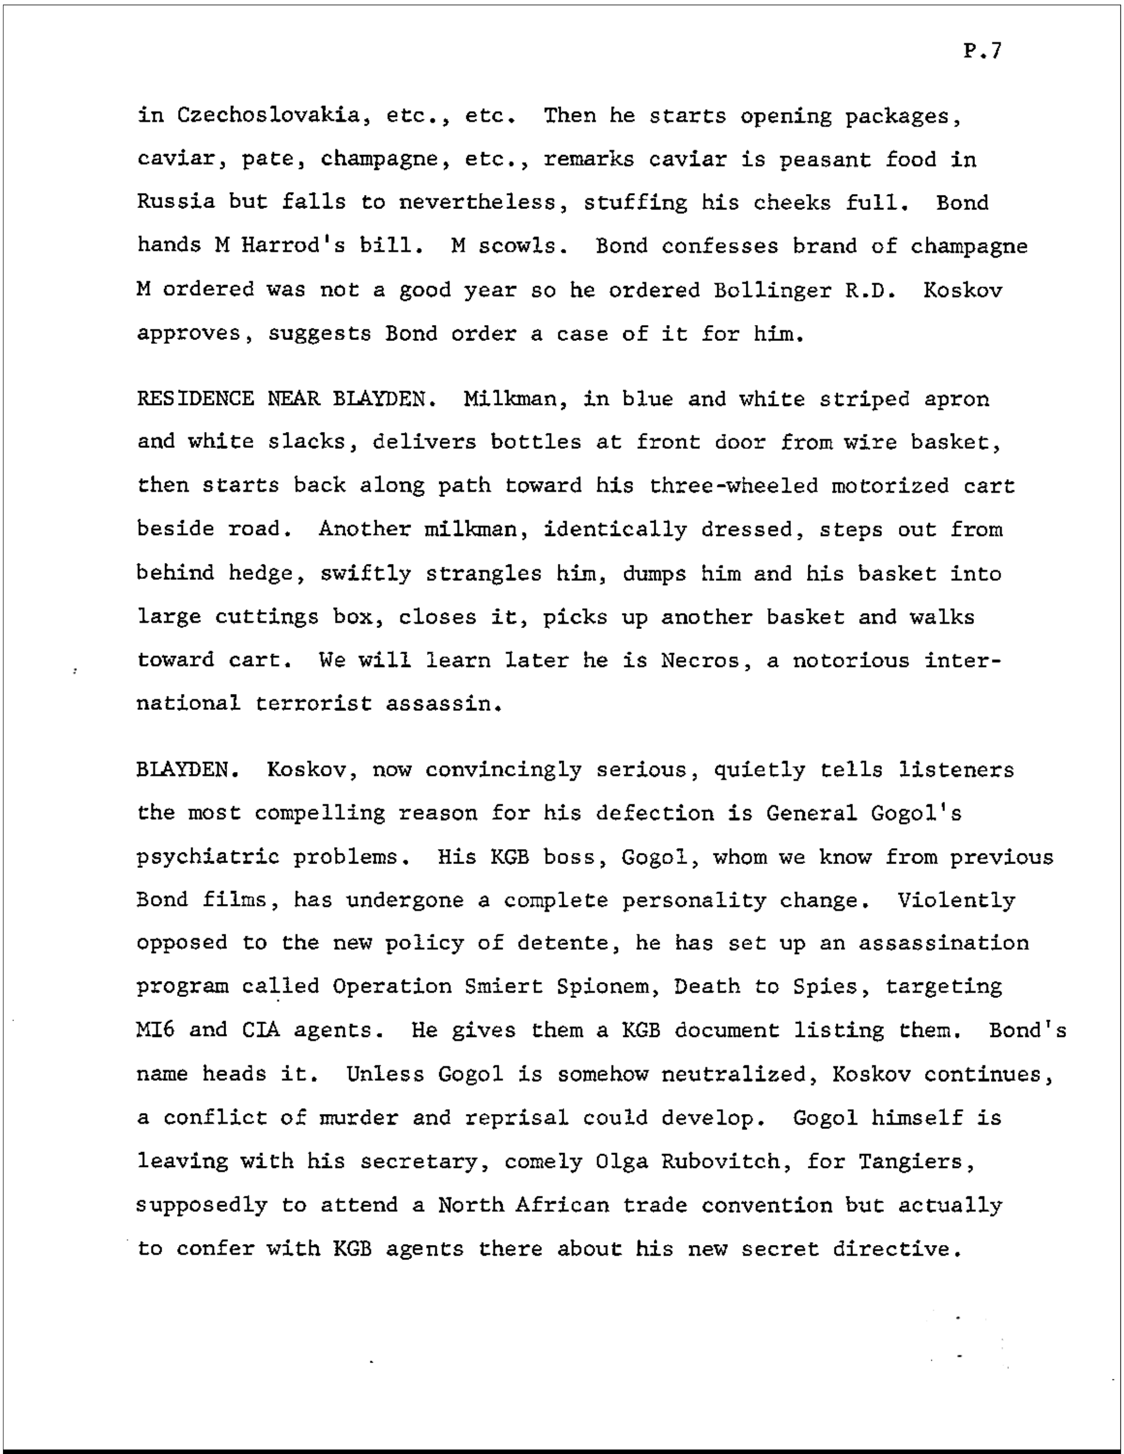
Of course, despite the hundred documents studied, we will ultimately only scratch the surface of this very very vast subject because who knows how many other scripts have existed and are kept away from our envious eyes in boxes or hard drives of the inaccessible archives of EON Productions/MGM, or among private collectors' houses and even lost somewhere or forever?

But we must first make the distinction between two types of documents: the "treatments" and the "scripts" (also called "screenplays").

Both types of documents begin with cover pages where it is generally appropriate to indicate:

1) the title of the film.
2) the author(s).
3) the type of document (treatment, first script, second revised script, etc.)
4) the date the document was completed.

Treatments are usually the first type of documents that are written by screenwriters: they are a summary of the story of the future film. This can be more or less detailed; some treatments can be less than 10 pages long while others in extreme cases can reach over 80 pages! Sometimes certain dialogues and one-liners can be written if the writers have a flash of genius, but the writing of treatments is more a phase aimed at defining the general unfolding of the story rather than the dialogues.



P.7

in Czechoslovakia, etc., etc. Then he starts opening packages, caviar, pate, champagne, etc., remarks caviar is peasant food in Russia but falls to nevertheless, stuffing his cheeks full. Bond hands M Harrod's bill. M scowls. Bond confesses brand of champagne M ordered was not a good year so he ordered Bollinger R.D. Koskov approves, suggests Bond order a case of it for him.

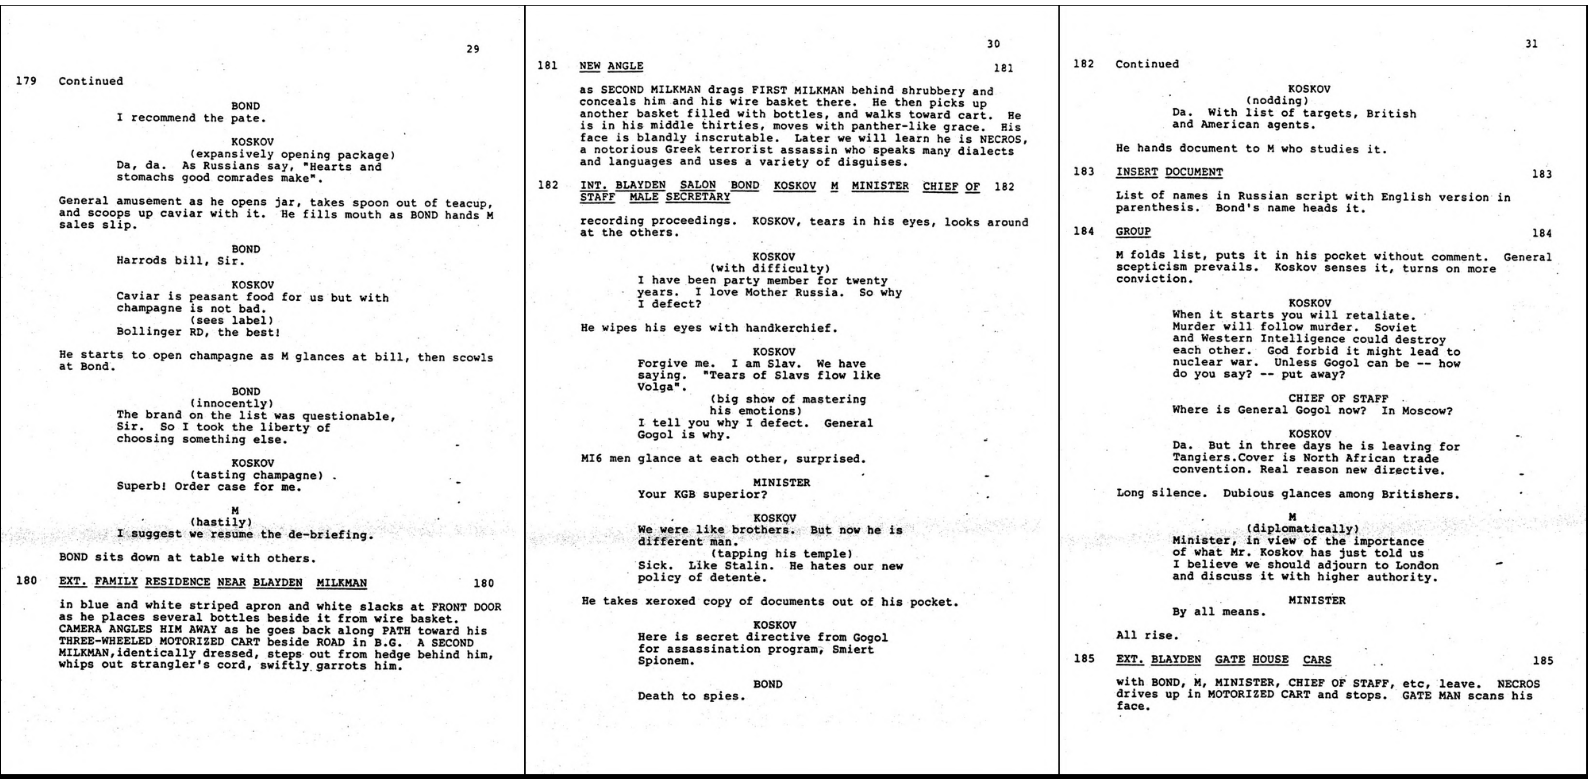
RESIDENCE NEAR BLAYDEN. Milkman, in blue and white striped apron and white slacks, delivers bottles at front door from wire basket, then starts back along path toward his three-wheeled motorized cart beside road. Another milkman, identically dressed, steps out from behind hedge, swiftly strangles him, dumps him and his basket into large cuttings box, closes it, picks up another basket and walks toward cart. We will learn later he is Necros, a notorious international terrorist assassin.

BLAYDEN. Koskov, now convincingly serious, quietly tells listeners the most compelling reason for his defection is General Gogol's psychiatric problems. His KGB boss, Gogol, whom we know from previous Bond films, has undergone a complete personality change. Violently opposed to the new policy of detente, he has set up an assassination program called Operation Smiert Spionem, Death to Spies, targeting MI6 and CIA agents. He gives them a KGB document listing them. Bond's name heads it. Unless Gogol is somehow neutralized, Koskov continues, a conflict of murder and reprisal could develop. Gogol himself is leaving with his secretary, comely Olga Rubovitch, for Tangiers, supposedly to attend a North African trade convention but actually to confer with KGB agents there about his new secret directive.

A page from a 01/23/1986' The Living Daylights treatment, written in the typical prose style inherent to the treatments.

Screenwriters generally write several treatments as the story evolves and once they arrive at one deemed sufficiently satisfactory by themselves, the producers and the director (if there is already one at that stage); they then write a first script.

The main difference between a treatment and a script/screenplay is that in the latter: absolutely all the dialogues spoken by the characters are now written down on paper. Likewise, a script generally contains a little more detail on everything, including the action scenes.



29

179 Continued

BOND
I recommend the pate.

KOSKOV
(expansively opening package)
Da, da. As Russians say, "Hearts and stomachs good comrades make".

General amusement as he opens jar, takes spoon out of teacup, and scoops up caviar with it. He fills mouth as BOND hands M sales slip.

BOND
Harrods bill, Sir.

KOSKOV
Caviar is peasant food for us but with champagne is not bad.
(sees label)
Bollinger RD, the best!

He starts to open champagne as M glances at bill, then scowls at Bond.

BOND
(innocently)
The brand on the list was questionable, Sir. So I took the liberty of choosing something else.

KOSKOV
(tasting champagne)
Superb! Order case for me.

M
(hastily)
I suggest we resume the de-briefing.

BOND sits down at table with others.

180 EXT. FAMILY RESIDENCE NEAR BLAYDEN MILKMAN 180

in blue and white striped apron and white slacks at FRONT DOOR as he places several bottles beside it from wire basket. CAMERA ANGLES HIM AWAY as he goes back along PATH toward his THREE-WHEELED MOTORIZED CART beside ROAD in B.G. A SECOND MILKMAN, identically dressed, steps out from hedge behind him, whips out strangler's cord, swiftly garrots him.

30

181 NEW ANGLE 181

as SECOND MILKMAN drags FIRST MILKMAN behind shrubbery and conceals him and his wire basket there. He then picks up another basket filled with bottles, and walks toward cart. He is in his middle thirties, moves with panther-like grace. His face is blandly inscrutable. Later we will learn he is NECROS, a notorious Greek terrorist assassin who speaks many dialects and languages and uses a variety of disguises.

182 INT. BLAYDEN SALON BOND KOSKOV M MINISTER CHIEF OF STAFF MALE SECRETARY 182 recording proceedings. KOSKOV, tears in his eyes, looks around at the others.

KOSKOV
(with difficulty)
I have been party member for twenty years. I love Mother Russia. So why I defect?

He wipes his eyes with handkerchief.

KOSKOV
Forgive me. I am Slav. We have saying. "Tears of Slavs flow like Volga".
(big show of mastering his emotions)
I tell you why I defect. General Gogol is why.

MI6 men glance at each other, surprised.

MINISTER
Your KGB superior?

KOSKOV
We were like brothers. But now he is different man.
(tapping his temple)
Sick. Like Stalin. He hates our new policy of detente.

He takes xeroxed copy of documents out of his pocket.

KOSKOV
Here is secret directive from Gogol for assassination program, Smiert Spionem.

BOND
Death to spies.

31

182 Continued

KOSKOV
(nodding)
Da. With list of targets, British and American agents.

He hands document to M who studies it.

183 INSERT DOCUMENT 183

List of names in Russian script with English version in parenthesis. Bond's name heads it.

184 GROUP 184

M folds list, puts it in his pocket without comment. General scepticism prevails. Koskov senses it, turns on more conviction.

KOSKOV
When it starts you will retaliate. Murder will follow murder. Soviet and Western Intelligence could destroy each other. God forbid it might lead to nuclear war. Unless Gogol can be -- how do you say? -- put away?

CHIEF OF STAFF
Where is General Gogol now? In Moscow?

KOSKOV
Da. But in three days he is leaving for Tangiers.Cover is North African trade convention. Real reason new directive.

Long silence. Dubious glances among Britishers.

M
(diplomatically)
Minister, in view of the importance of what Mr. Koskov has just told us I believe we should adjourn to London and discuss it with higher authority.

MINISTER
By all means.

All rise.

185 EXT. BLAYDEN GATE HOUSE CARS 185

with BOND, M, MINISTER, CHIEF OF STAFF, etc, leave. NECROS drives up in MOTORIZED CART and stops. GATE MAN scans his face.

The same scenes in a 04/25/1986' script are now spread over 3 more detailed pages, with all dialogues centered on the page to distinguish them from descriptions, and always preceded by the name of the character (in capital letters) speaking them.

Multiple scripts are usually written after the first, with scenes and dialogue added, changed, or deleted as the creative process progresses and the script passes through the hands of various writers for rewrites.

Because yes: in general, on big films like those that interest us, it is not uncommon to see several screenwriters succeed one after another (making Live and Let Die and Die Another Day the only exceptions to the rule in the saga). Finally, a "shooting script" is produced, which is supposed to be the document used for the filming.

It is of course important for filmmakers to have a final or an almost final script as quickly as possible in order to be able to budget the film and allow the various departments behind the cameras (such the ones responsible for the creations of the sets, stunts, logistics, costumes, specials effects or in charge of casting) to prepare at their best everything they need to work their magic when the filming will start.

In theory and ideally the shooting script is supposed to be completed before filming. In fact, filming is sometimes start with a shooting steps out of the car, scans the area. A voice calls: *

BF REV. 4/1/99 24A

ND PARKS THE BMW. 68A *

MALE VOICE
Can I help you? *

This is SASHA DAVIDOV, a moderately built European man, with an open, friendly face. *

BOND
I'm looking for Elektra King.
(he produces an ID card)
James Bond. Universal Exports. *

Davidov takes the card. Reads it. Deadpan: *

DAVIDOV
So how are things at MI-6, Mister Bond? *

Bond sizes the man up, giving nothing away: *

BOND
... Perhaps first you'd like to tell me how things are at Mossad - Mister Davidov. *

Davidov breaks into a self-depricating laugh: *

DAVIDOV
I left Mossad 10 years ago, Mr. Bond. But we do keep in touch.
(extends a hand in friendship)
Call me Sasha. Head of Security. Nice to meet you - *

BOND
(amused)
James.
(shaking hands, focused on Davidov)
... And now you can call off the thugs standing behind me with the guns. *

Davidov is impressed Bond knew. *

DAVIDOV
Please don't call them thugs. It gets them upset. *

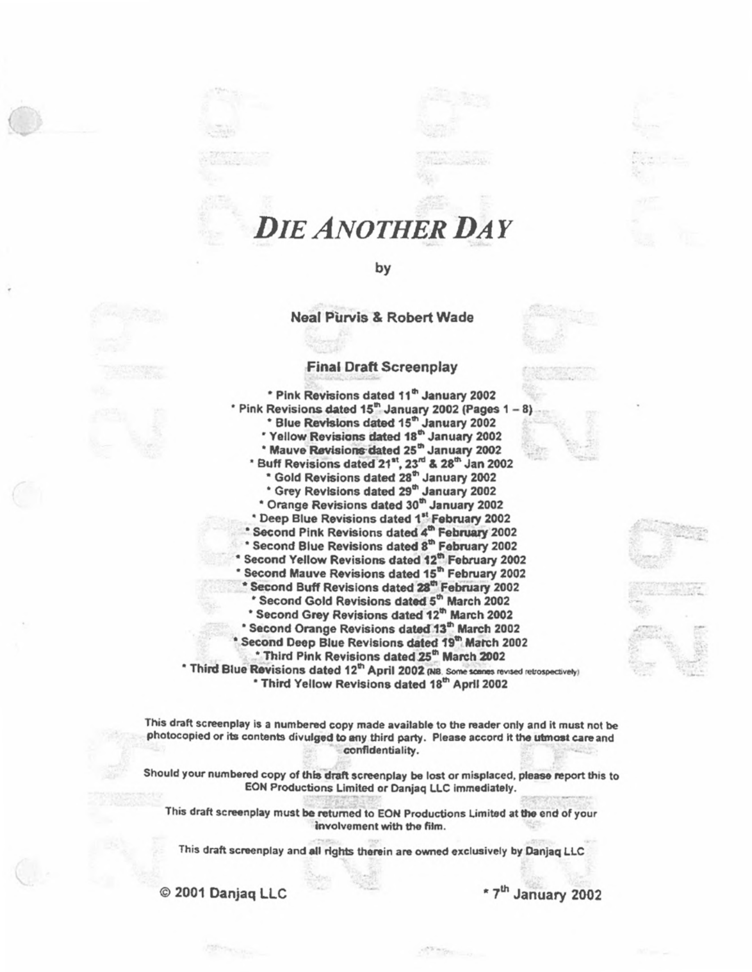
He motions behind Bond - and sure enough, THREE CONSTRUCTION WORKERS SHOULDER THEIR WEAPONS. *

As Bond and Davidov share a smile, we BEGIN TO HEAR THE HIGH PITCHED WHINE OF A GULFSTREAM JET. *

(CONTINUED)

script that is still not completed (which is hardly surprising when you announce a release date before even having a first line written down on the paper...) and the script is thus perpetually rewritten during the shooting of the film. The pages added/altered to the shooting scripts during these revisions are generally not white, but colored. For example, all pages dated from March 4th revisions will be pink and all pages dated from April 16th will be blue. In the end the script of the film may look like a little rainbow.

A script for a James Bond film should be around 120 pages. There is a general rule in the film industry saying that one page of a script equals approximately one minute of screen time. It is of course not an exact science but it is still a principle which often turns out to be approximately exact. So when you see scripts that exceed 140 pages, or 2 hours 20 minutes, you should start to worry...



DIE ANOTHER DAY

by

Neal Purvis & Robert Wade

Final Draft Screenplay

* Pink Revisions dated 11th January 2002
* Pink Revisions dated 15th January 2002 (Pages 1 – 8)
* Blue Revisions dated 15th January 2002
* Yellow Revisions dated 18th January 2002
* Mauve Revisions dated 25th January 2002
* Buff Revisions dated 21st, 23rd & 28th Jan 2002
* Gold Revisions dated 28th January 2002
* Grey Revisions dated 29th January 2002
* Orange Revisions dated 30th January 2002
* Deep Blue Revisions dated 1st February 2002
* Second Pink Revisions dated 4th February 2002
* Second Blue Revisions dated 8th February 2002
* Second Yellow Revisions dated 12th February 2002
* Second Mauve Revisions dated 15th February 2002
* Second Buff Revisions dated 28th February 2002
* Second Gold Revisions dated 5th March 2002
* Second Grey Revisions dated 12th March 2002
* Second Orange Revisions dated 13th March 2002
* Second Deep Blue Revisions dated 19th March 2002
* Third Pink Revisions dated 25th March 2002
* Third Blue Revisions dated 12th April 2002 (NB. Some scenes revised retrospectively)
* Third Yellow Revisions dated 18th April 2002

This draft screenplay is a numbered copy made available to the reader only and it must not be photocopied or its contents divulged to any third party. Please accord it the utmost care and confidentiality.

Should your numbered copy of this draft screenplay be lost or misplaced, please report this to EON Productions Limited or Danjaq LLC immediately.

This draft screenplay must be returned to EON Productions Limited at the end of your involvement with the film.

This draft screenplay and all rights therein are owned exclusively by Danjaq LLC

© 2001 Danjaq LLC   * 7th January 2002

Once the film is released, it can often appear that names have been omitted from the credits for the writing section. This is because the writing credits are not intended to credit all the writers who contributed to the film, only those who made the largest contributions. This may seem very strange, not very logical and unfair, but you should first know that it is not the filmmakers who decide who can be credited or not.

These films involving American studios (United Artists / MGM) and many American screenwriters, the credits are defined by the Writers Guild of America which is a sort of union representing the American screenwriters and their interests. (We say "the" Guild but there is two guilds in reality: the Writers Guild of America, East and the Writers Guild of America West).

The Guild has a whole manual that explains the conditions required for a screenwriter to obtain a credit on a film.

Jeffrey Caine, one of the writers of GoldenEye, tells us more about the procedure:

> - Jeffrey Caine[1] : When a film is completed [...], the producers of the film [...] has to send to the Writers Guild of America what they call "tentative writing credits". They put up the name or names of people they think needed to get credit on the screen. And if one of the writers objects to that, feels he was left out or got the wrong credit, then you [he] object and there is a process. What happens in that process [...] first of all they send you a copy of the final shooting script, so you can check everything against that. And they send you a copy of all the scripts written by all the writers who were on the project. [...] Then you include a statement [for the Guild] saying why you think you should have had credit on the film. [The Guild] sit on this issue for about three weeks, as a > board/committee of three, all professional screenwriters. And they return their decision, and the decision is final. [...] When you lose credit on a film, when your name is not on the screen, you don't get your [financial] production bonus [that you should receive], you don't get "residuals", which is money paid periodically [to you for rebroadcasts, DVD/streaming edition releases, etc...], and it's one less credit on your CV. It matters to us [writers] whether we get a credit or not. [...] If there is another writer involved, you have to have done 33% of the script. How you judge that? It's not about how many pages; they make a judgment on what you've done with the characters, the plot, the dialogues, etc... And sometimes the decisions [of the Guild] are very strange, people do question them, but that's the system. You have to just live with it.

As a filmmaker or film studio you do not want to quarrel with the Guild, you have to respect their decisions otherwise you will be boycotted by its members, who represent a very large part of American screenwriters (who will no longer come to work on your future films). As a result, the Guild is a powerful organization that filmmakers must deal with and accept the writing credits imposed by it.

In any cases in Bond films, the screenwriters are not solely responsible for the films' storylines. Writing Bond is a collaborative process in which the producers, director, stunt people and others (such as sometimes the actors who play Bond) participate in numerous meetings about the story with the screenwriters in order to define or redefine its content and discuss all kinds of ideas to incorporate or not. Richard Maibaum and Tom Mankiewicz, two of the screenwriters most involved in writing the Bond's films, tell us more about this aspect:

> - Richard Maibaum[2] : After I write and submit my first draft of the screenplay, revisions are discussed in committee. [...] Who are the us? [In the case of Thunderball, Maibaum explains that the group consists of himself, producers Cubby Broccoli, Harry Saltzman, Kevin McClory, director Terence Young, set designer Ken Adam and editor Peter Hunt]. Mr. S[altzman] is inclined to first reject ideas not his own but can usually be persuaded. Mr. B[roccoli] accepts them readily unless they conflict with his own ideas fixers. Mr. B is hipped on Bond's gadgets, Mr. S on Bond's dames. [...] Both are concerned with Bond's image as a super sleuth, duper-brawler, super-lover. Both dislike too much dialogue and press for action! [...] Most important is that everyone is expected to say exactly what he thinks. The wildest notion is encouraged. [...] And all this is accompanied by an obbligato of insistently ringing telephone which Mr. Saltzman seems incapable of not answering.

> - Tom Mankiewicz[3] : I made up the story, Cubby made up the story, Harry made up the story, Guy [Hamilton] made up the story. It's always been a committee in the beginning; there's always been a writer there to make up the story but so many people have ideas and especially when they're old hands at Bond, they know how to write a Bond story correctly.

The documentary From script to screen from the DVD bonuses of Die Another Day also shows various of these meetings, with in particular the screenwriters Neal Purvis and Robert Wade dissecting the writing in the company of producers Barbara Broccoli and Michael Wilson around a table.

"When we used to go to [story] meetings", says set designer Peter Lamont, "[Cubby's] edict was if you've got anything to say, say it, because it could be thrown out as being absolutely ridiculous, but it might be bloody good"[4]. So the contributors are quite varied, for example you will see that at one point Octopussy was very shortly developed from an idea submitted by a cameraman while leaks from Sony in 2014 showed us that the studios behind these films such as MGM also participate heavily in the creative process, offering feedback on the script and ideas for improving the story (and reducing the budget).

> - Albert Broccoli[5] : [For the scripts] we're all involved. I am very much involved. I'd like to think that I'm a very important part of this. I have been from the very beginning with my then-partner Harry Saltzman. We said what we wanted to say. And I'd like to think that I'm still a creative producer. I have the ideas and they have to be written, so we employ writers to do that. I don't think even the greatest writer in the world can just sit down and write a James Bond story to my liking. They need our discussions. And when I say "our", I mean not mine alone. I mean our director, our executive directors, and many others. There are many who come in only for consultation, and then there's Ken Adam's set designs. All are important. That's the way we are. It is a team that does Bond. It isn't any one of us.

The participants themselves draw inspiration from Ian Fleming's original novels and draw on current events, so that sometimes an article from a scientific journal, TV report, a magazine such as National Geographic or even a postcard can inspire part of the plot of the next Bond film. And of course, once on the shooting set, the director and actors sometimes improvise certain unforeseen actions or dialogues.

This book is intended for audiences who already know the Bond films well enough to be able to spot and appreciate the differences that were made from page to screen. I advise you to take out (as I did) your DVDs, Blu-Rays or go to the video on demand platform where these films are currently available in order to refresh your memory because I will not go back to certain elements that I assume you already know. Likewise, I invite you to consult the list of the known deleted scenes of the James Bond films (which I previously wrote with colleagues here: https://www.commander007.net/2021/orbis-non-sufficit/) to the extent that these scenes appear very often in the scripts.

As far as I am concerned, feel free to quote reasonable amount in your future publications/articles/discussions/videos on James Bond with the due credit: this book is precisely written with the aim of enriching knowledge about this saga.

Scripting 007 is the result of hundreds (even thousands) hours of research, writing, translation, page layout, rereading, making me get up every day at 4:00 a.m. to get through it; it's consumed most of my "free" time.

I am aware, however, that the writing style will remain heavy because there is a lot of information to assimilate and retain at once.

Keep in mind that I'm french. So you'll have all my excuse for slaughtering the language with all my broken English; I'm very used to read it, but I rarely write in English. Anyway you are very smart people, so I believe you will eventually end up to understand what I have written in a so poorly way.

Previous English version of this e-Book were in fact translations from french, this is not the case of this edition. With the exception of (very) few one: all the quotes of this edition are not translation, but are the exact original English source texts (with just, when deemed necessary, spelling/orthography correction and prose layout adaptation).

Finally, you will note throughout this book that the quotes you will see in a gray background are extracts from documents (scripts, treatments, novels), while the quotes in a blue background are external quotes from people who worked on the films or other, added to provide some context.

One of the frustrations encountered while writing this book was not being able to fully master the word processing software. The rendering of the font on the PDF is different from what I had on Libreoffice and the copy/paste function produces gibberish. Therefore I also offer a Libreoffice version (the French Openoffice, designed with version 7.6.2.1) which allows you to copy/paste/print without problems and all with the illustrations in HD (copy/paste them on Paint illustrations is a way to view them at the original size if necessary). You can even export it to PDF to have a PDF with HD images (in this case I recommend checking the options "export bookmarks" and set the "visible bookmark levels" to 1).

Sources/references from chapter 0: Introduction

1. "Goldeneye: In Conversation with Screenwriter Jeffrey Caine" YouTube video by Lives In The Pictures : https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=KYX1BKw4r3A
2. An untitled essay by Richard Maibaum (1965), will later become "My word is his Bond: A view from the Back" by Richard Maibaum in Esquire magazine (June 1695 issue).
3. Bondage magazine, Mankiewicz's interview by Richard Schenkman (issue #8, 1980).
4. "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
5. "Moonraker: The Officially Authorized Magazine" by Warren Publishing Company (1979).

Now....meet the most extraordinary gentleman spy in all fiction.........
JAMES BOND
Agent 007...
007
THE FIRST JAMES BOND FILM ADVENTURE!
IAN FLEMING'S
Dr. No
007 THE DOUBLE "0" MEANS HE HAS A LICENSE TO KILL WHEN HE CHOOSES...WHERE HE CHOOSES...WHOM HE CHOOSES!

Release date (premiere) : 5 October 1962

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Screenplay by Richard Maibaum, Johanna Harwood, Berkely Mather"

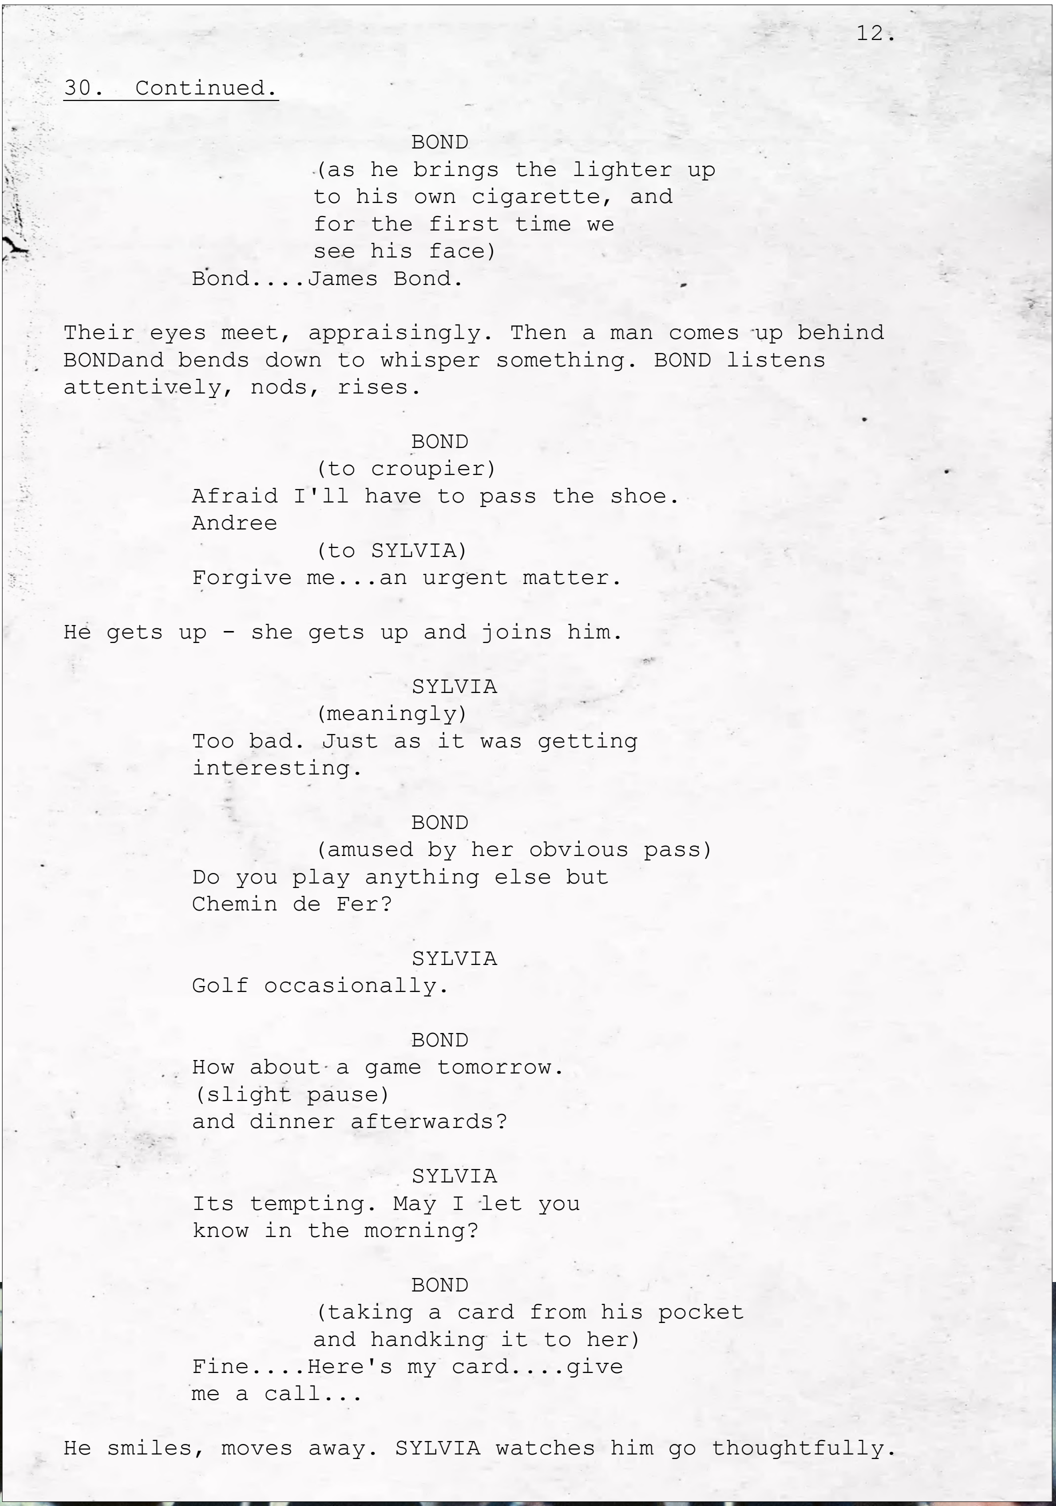
Director :............................Terence Young
Producers :...........Albert R. Broccoli & Harry Saltzman
Director photography :..........Ted Moore
Set Designer :...........................Ken Adam
Composer :.......................Monty Norman
Editor :.....................................Peter Hunt
Title sequence :...............Maurice Binder



12.

30. Continued.

BOND
(as he brings the lighter up to his own cigarette, and for the first time we see his face)
Bond....James Bond.

Their eyes meet, appraisingly. Then a man comes up behind BONDand bends down to whisper something. BOND listens attentively, nods, rises.

BOND
(to croupier)
Afraid I'll have to pass the shoe.
Andree
(to SYLVIA)
Forgive me...an urgent matter.

He gets up - she gets up and joins him.

SYLVIA
(meaningly)
Too bad. Just as it was getting interesting.

BOND
(amused by her obvious pass)
Do you play anything else but Chemin de Fer?

SYLVIA
Golf occasionally.

BOND
How about a game tomorrow.
(slight pause)
and dinner afterwards?

SYLVIA
Its tempting. May I let you know in the morning?

BOND
(taking a card from his pocket and handking it to her) Fine....Here's my card....give me a call...

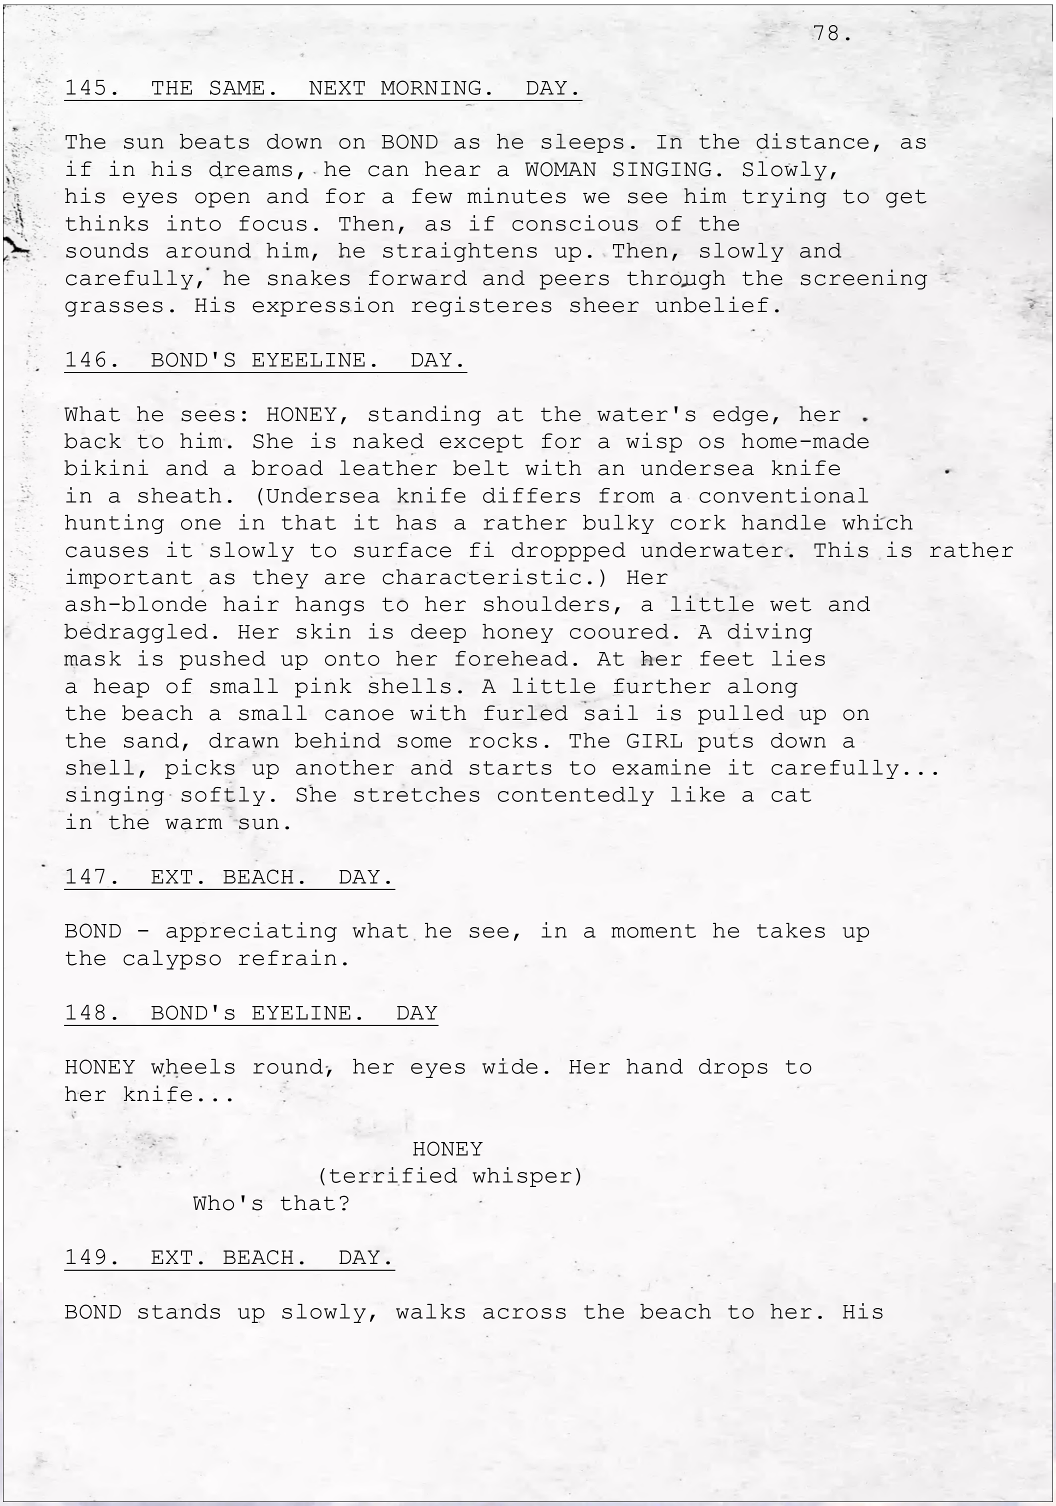
He smiles, moves away. SYLVIA watches him go thoughtfully.

CHAPTER 1



78.

145. THE SAME. NEXT MORNING. DAY.

The sun beats down on BOND as he sleeps. In the distance, as if in his dreams, he can hear a WOMAN SINGING. Slowly, his eyes open and for a few minutes we see him trying to get thinks into focus. Then, as if conscious of the sounds around him, he straightens up. Then, slowly and carefully, he snakes forward and peers through the screening grasses. His expression registeres sheer unbelief.

146. BOND'S EYEELINE. DAY.

What he sees: HONEY, standing at the water's edge, her back to him. She is naked except for a wisp os home-made bikini and a broad leather belt with an undersea knife in a sheath. (Undersea knife differs from a conventional hunting one in that it has a rather bulky cork handle which causes it slowly to surface fi droppped underwater. This is rather important as they are characteristic.) Her ash-blonde hair hangs to her shoulders, a little wet and bedraggled. Her skin is deep honey coloured. A diving mask is pushed up onto her forehead. At her feet lies a heap of small pink shells. A little further along the beach a small canoe with furled sail is pulled up on the sand, drawn behind some rocks. The GIRL puts down a shell, picks up another and starts to examine it carefully... singing softly. She stretches contentedly like a cat in the warm sun.

147. EXT. BEACH. DAY.

BOND - appreciating what he see, in a moment he takes up the calypso refrain.

148. BOND's EYELINE. DAY

HONEY wheels round, her eyes wide. Her hand drops to her knife...

HONEY
(terrified whisper)
Who's that?

149. EXT. BEACH. DAY.

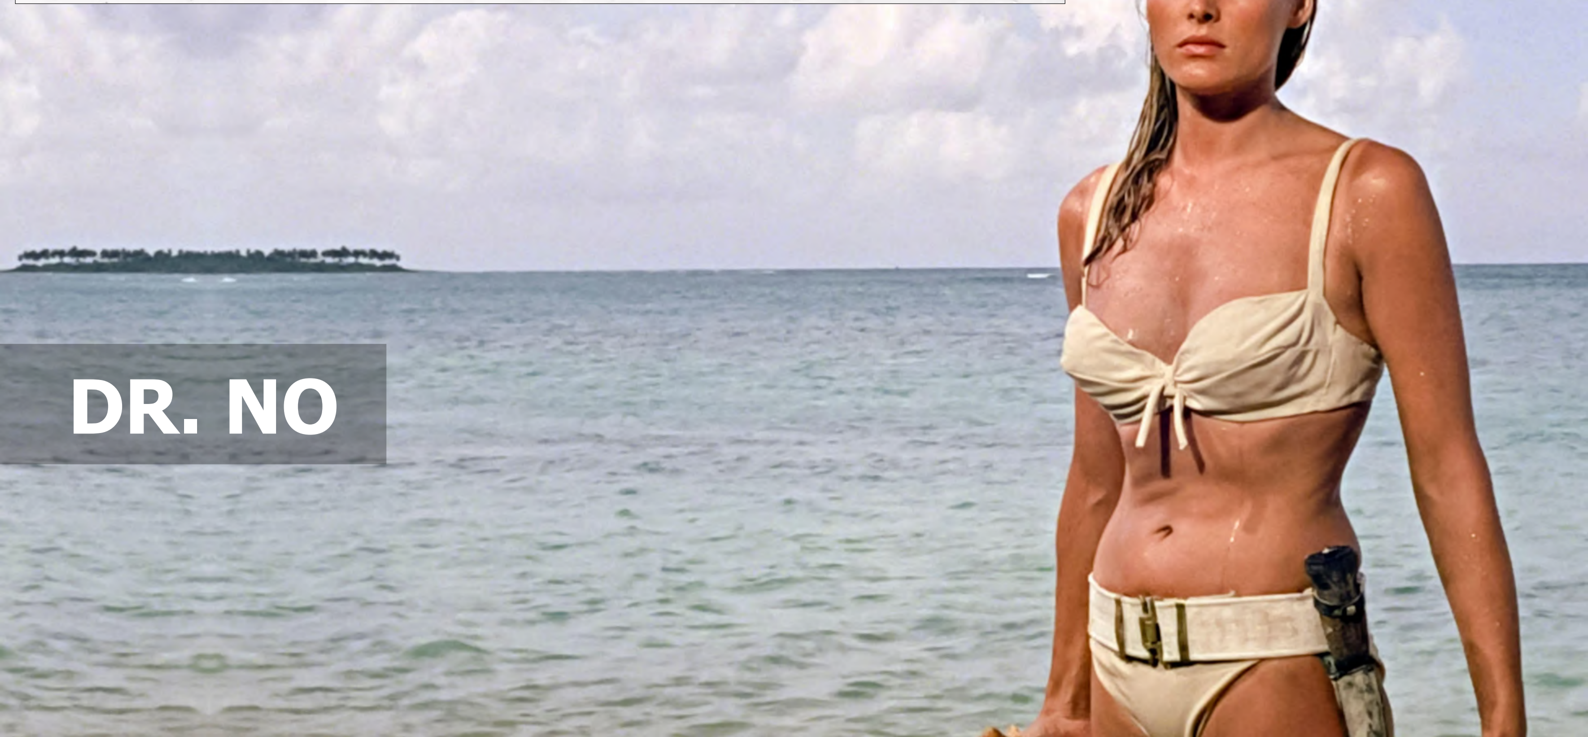
BOND stands up slowly, walks across the beach to her. His

Cast:

James Bond :........................Sean Connery
Dr. Julius No :..................Joseph Wiseman
Honey Ryder :...................Ursula Andress
Quarrel :............................John Kitzmiller
Felix Leiter :................................Jack Lord
Dent :...............................Anthony Dawson
Mlle Taro :...........................Zena Marshall
Sylvia Trench :...................Eunice Gayson
M :..Bernard Lee
Moneypenny :.......................Lois Maxwell
Boothroyd (Q) :.....................Peter Burton

Main filming locations: Jamaica and UK.

It was in 1962 that the public was able to discover an adventure featuring a new kind of secret agent in the cinema. The man has a certain sense of class; is surrounded by beautiful women, lives dangerously, doesn't hesitate to kill in cold blood (including an unarmed opponent), travels to exotic islands and settings, and encounters an enemy larger than life. The action is also present, although it is still very far from the breathtaking action scenes that the franchise will be able to offer just two or three years later. The atmosphere is more at investigation/mystery than in future productions of the secret agent. To summarize very briefly the key to the success of the film: the right people at the right time, especially behind the camera but also in front with a Sean Connery who gives all his charisma and credibility to the character.



DR. NO

Table of contents

Dr. No

Literary origins....................16
Enter Harry Saltzman....................22
Then arrives Albert R. Broccoli....................24
Enter the first writers....................26
Enter Richard Maibaum....................30
Richard Maibaum and James Bond....................34
September 7, 1961' treatment: canal, seashells and monkey....................39
Dr. No is a monkey?....................46
September 25, 1961' treatment: Merriman, sharks and China....................47
October 3, 1961' revised script: scars and driver....................51
More people and more scripts....................56
The spectre of the Fourth draft screenplay....................60
Fifth draft screenplays....................67

Literary origins

- Ian Fleming[1] : My plots are fantastic, while being often based upon truth. They go wildly beyond the probable but not, I think, beyond the possible.

The writing of the film Dr. No (and its sequels) begins with Ian Lancaster Fleming[2], born on May 28, 1908 in London into a family of prosperous bankers with Scottish origins.

In 1921, the future creator of James Bond entered Eton College, then was admitted to the Sandhurst Military Academy in 1926. However, not having the soul of a soldier, he resigned the following year.

His mother then sent him to Kitzbuhel (in Austria) to improve his German in preparation for an entrance exam to the Foreign Office. Ian then finds himself in a small school, Tennerhof, run by the author Phyllis Bottome (who encouraged him to use his imagination to write fiction) and her husband.

In 1928, he enrolled at the University of Munich and the following year at the one of Geneva. Stays, if not studies, also accomplished by his hero James Bond; In addition, he learned to ski and climb and dated several girls. Fleming failed the Foreign Office entrance exam in 1931.

Thanks to his mother's connections, he was hired by the Reuter press agency in October 1931. He learned the basics of journalism and obtained his first important article in April 1933, when he went to Moscow to follow the trial of six British engineers. But that year, thinking that he would not make fortune at Reuter, he left the agency to work in an investment bank, then for a stockbroker, with whom he remained until 1945. He later admitted that he was "the world's worst stockbroker".

Fleming spreads out in clubs, plays bridge, makes friends in the press; he has lots of girlfriends, plays rounds of golf or bets at Le Touquet. Meanwhile, his brother Peter became a respected travel writer.

When the war broke out, Fleming was mobilized in September 1939 in the Naval Intelligence Division as an assistant to its director, Admiral Godfrey (one of the models of "M") and then to his successor, Edmund Rushbrooke. For this purpose Fleming will be given the rank of commander.

In 1942 he attended a conference in Jamaica about U-boats on and fell in love with the island. He then promised himself not only to return there after the war, but also to build a house in where he could write books, including one which would be: "the spy story to end all spy stories", he said a little later.

Although he never saw the battlefield or spied behind enemy lines, Fleming worked tirelessly during the War and was pretty much involved in every section of the whole cycle of Britain intelligence, having knowledge of some of Britain and America’s most closely guarded wartime secrets. His energetic personality and imagination were valuable skills. He attended countless committees, liaised between the Admiralty and Bletchley Park (where code-breakers deciphered enemy communications, notably the Enigma), the Americans or the PWE propaganda body. He created the commando unit 30 Assault Unit (tasked with capturing secret enemy documents/technologies on the frontline) or also helped to set up the operation Mincemeat (disinformation operation to make the Germans believe that the Allies would invade the Balkans and Sardinia instead of Sicily, which was their real objective).

Demobilized in November 1945, Ian Fleming joined the press group headed by Lord Kemsley (publisher, among others, of Sunday Times), as director of the foreign news service and, faithful to the promise he made to himself, had a house built in Jamaica which he named Goldeneye.

Fleming continues to see Ann O'Neill, with whom he has flirted for years. Finally, pregnant of him, he married her in March 1952 in Jamaica.

Fleming claims to have invented James Bond to recover from the shock of getting married at the age of forty-three. The birth of Bond took place on his typewriter in 1952 at Goldeneye. The name and first name of his hero, which he wanted "as ordinary as possible", were borrowed from an ornithologist whose book Birds of the West Indies was near Fleming. The novel will be published by Jonathan Cape in 1953, under the title Casino Royale.

In total, twelve Bond novels and nine short stories written by Fleming were published from 1953 to 1965:

- 1953: Casino Royale
- 1954: Live and Let Die
- 1955: Moonraker

- 1956: Diamonds Are Forever
- 1957: From Russia, With Love
- 1958: Dr. No
- 1959: Goldfinger
- 1960: For Your Eyes Only ; collection of short stories containing:
  - From a View to a Kill
  - For Your Eyes Only
  - Quantum of Solace
  - Risico
  - The Hildebrand Rarity
- 1961: Thunderball
- 1962: The Spy Who Loved Me
- 1963: On Her Majesty's Secret Service
- 1964: You Only Live Twice
- 1965: The Man With the Golden Gun
- 1966: Octopussy and the Living Daylights ; collection of short stories containing:
  - Octopussy
  - The Property of a Lady
  - The Living Daylights
  - 007 in New York

IAN FLEMING CASINO ROYALE
LIVE AND LET DIE Ian Fleming
IAN FLEMING MOONRAKER
IAN FLEMING Diamonds are Forever
IAN FLEMING FROM RUSSIA, WITH LOVE
Dr. NO IAN FLEMING
IAN FLEMING GOLDFINGER
IAN FLEMING FOR YOUR EYES ONLY
IAN FLEMING THUNDERBALL
IAN FLEMING THE SPY WHO LOVED ME
IAN FLEMING ON HER MAJESTY'S SECRET SERVICE
IAN FLEMING THE SPY WHO LOVED ME
IAN FLEMING YOU ONLY LIVE TWICE
OCTOPUSSY AND THE LIVING DAYLIGHTS FLEMING

(The last two books were published posthumously, after Fleming's death in 1964.)

At the beginning of 1956, Fleming was invited by his friend Ivar Bryce to join a scientific expedition on the island of Inagua populated by Caribbean flamingos[3]. The men slept in tents, they used a swamp-buggy (described by Bryce as "a kind of Land-Rover mounted with huge wheels, giant tyres that supported the strange vehicle on the surface[4]") to cross the swamps; it was a real adventure which would later inspire the fictional island of Crab Key (and his "dragon"). Fleming would later inscribe in Bryce's copy of the book: "To Ivar, who as usual, provided the background"[5].

In June 1956, producer Henry Morgenthau III approached Fleming about a television series project he had in mind. To be filmed in Jamaica, it's about Commander Jamaica: a spy who have adventures on the island.

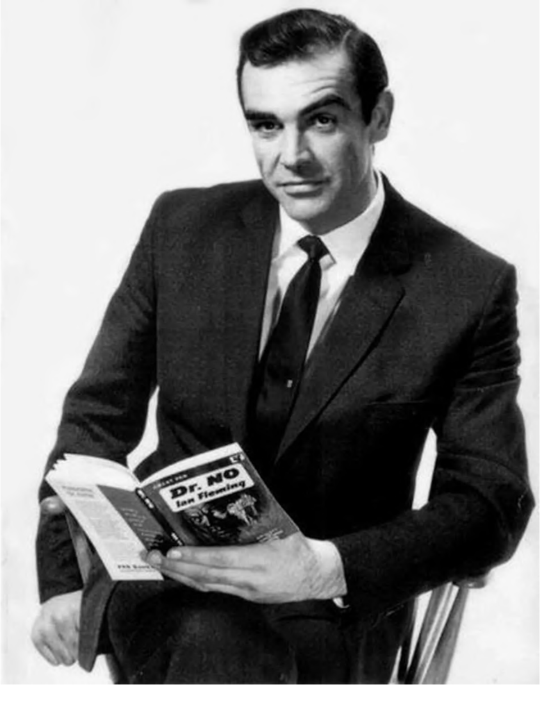
Ian Fleming then wrote a 9 page outline for the show and a 28 page script for the first episode. In it, Fleming imagine a villain called Dr. No, an "international freelance spy of Chinese-German extraction" who use electronic inferences to divert from their course Anglo-American missiles from a test station located on the Turks Islands.

The story involve an American secret agent named James Gunn who investigate the electronic inferences that are coming from Jamaica, under the cover of a treasure hunt. Gunn fight against Dr. No's "Chinese-Negro" henchmen, who notably use some Jamaican's superstitions to ward off curious onlookers. (More info on that that in the bonus section at the end of the book).

When the TV series failed to materialize, Fleming reused his outline to write his sixth Bond novel, Dr. No, which has been published in 1958.

In the novel, James Bond is sent on a mission to Jamaica by M. Since 007 has just recovered from the poisoning inflicted by Rosa Klebb at the end of the previous book, From Russia, With Love, M considers that this new assignment will be like a vacation for his agent. The task is a simple assignment to investigate the disappearance of the head of the Caribbean station of the Secret Service: Commander John Strangways, and his secretary. It's very likely that these two went on a romantic getaway, it is believed (although in reality, they were murdered by three fake blind men).

Strangways was working on the National Audubon Society's dispute with a roseate spoonbill bird sanctuary on Crab Key Island. The island's owner, Dr. Julius No, had promised to maintain the sanctuary when he bought the place and started exploiting guano there. However one of two people Audubon stationed on the island are dead, one of them was badly burned and was muttering something about a "dragon". Later, two other Audubon members who came to Crab Key were killed in a plane crash.



Before leaving, M forces 007 to abandon his Beretta .25, since the silencer of the gun has unexpectedly gotten stuck in Bond's belt during the fight against Klebb. In exchange Bond receive a Walther PPK and a Smith & Wesson, deemed more reliable and more powerful by the armorer (Major Boothroyd).

Arriving in Jamaica, James Bond finds his old friend Quarrel (whom he met in the novel Live and Let Die). Meanwhile he notices an Asian photographer who is a little too curious about him but who doesn't reveal any information when he tries to question her by force.

Bond then meets the acting Governor of the colony who, not wanting any problems before his retirement, is not pleased with his presence. His deputy Colonial Secretary Pleydell-Smith is more cooperative but the file they had on Dr. No has mysteriously disappeared.

Bond discovers that his hotel room has been searched, that a basket of poisoned fruit has been sent to him and he finds a centipede in his bed while he sleeps.

Thinking that Strangways has been murdered, he decides to go with Quarrel to Crab Key to see if there is a connection between Dr. No and Strangways disappearance.

There, they come across Honeychile Rider, a pretty woman coming out of the water naked (with just a belt with a knife at her waist); who was on the island to collect shells to earn a living. Spotted by No's henchmen, the three protagonists flee through the swamps and reach the camp where the people of the Audubon society were previously located. They discover traces of a fire on site which match with the statements of the man (and Honey) who claimed to have seen a "dragon" on the island.

They spend the night there, which gives Bond the opportunity to learn a little more about Honey, including how she saves money to go to the United States to have surgery of her broken nose.

In the early morning, Quarrel comes to look for Bond because he has spotted the "dragon". The "dragon" rushes straight towards them and it's turns out to be some sort of swamp buggy dressed as a dragon. They try to destroy it but in vain. The vehicle flamethrower targets them and Quarrel is killed.

Bond and Honey are captured and brought to Dr. No's base where they are welcomed like in a luxury hotel. During dinner with the Doctor, 007 learns that No was once a member of the Chinese Tong, but was captured after stealing a large amount of money from their treasury. They cut off both of his hands to punish him before shooting him, leaving him for dead.

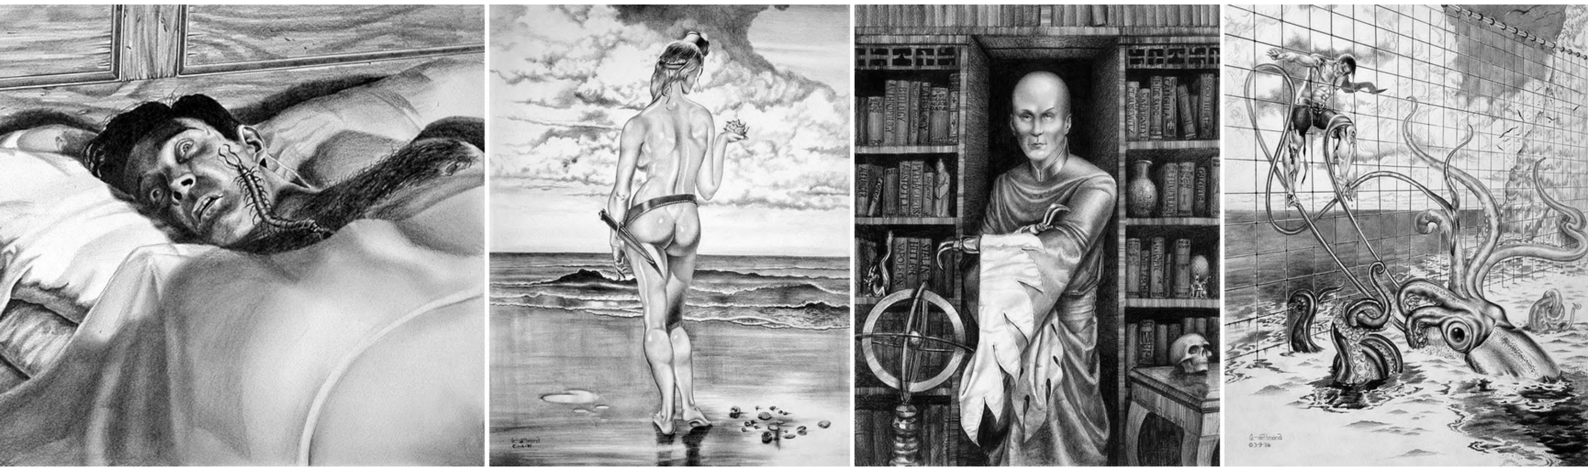
No is now working with the Russians and has built an underground complex from which he can sabotage US missile tests located in the Turks and Caicos Islands.

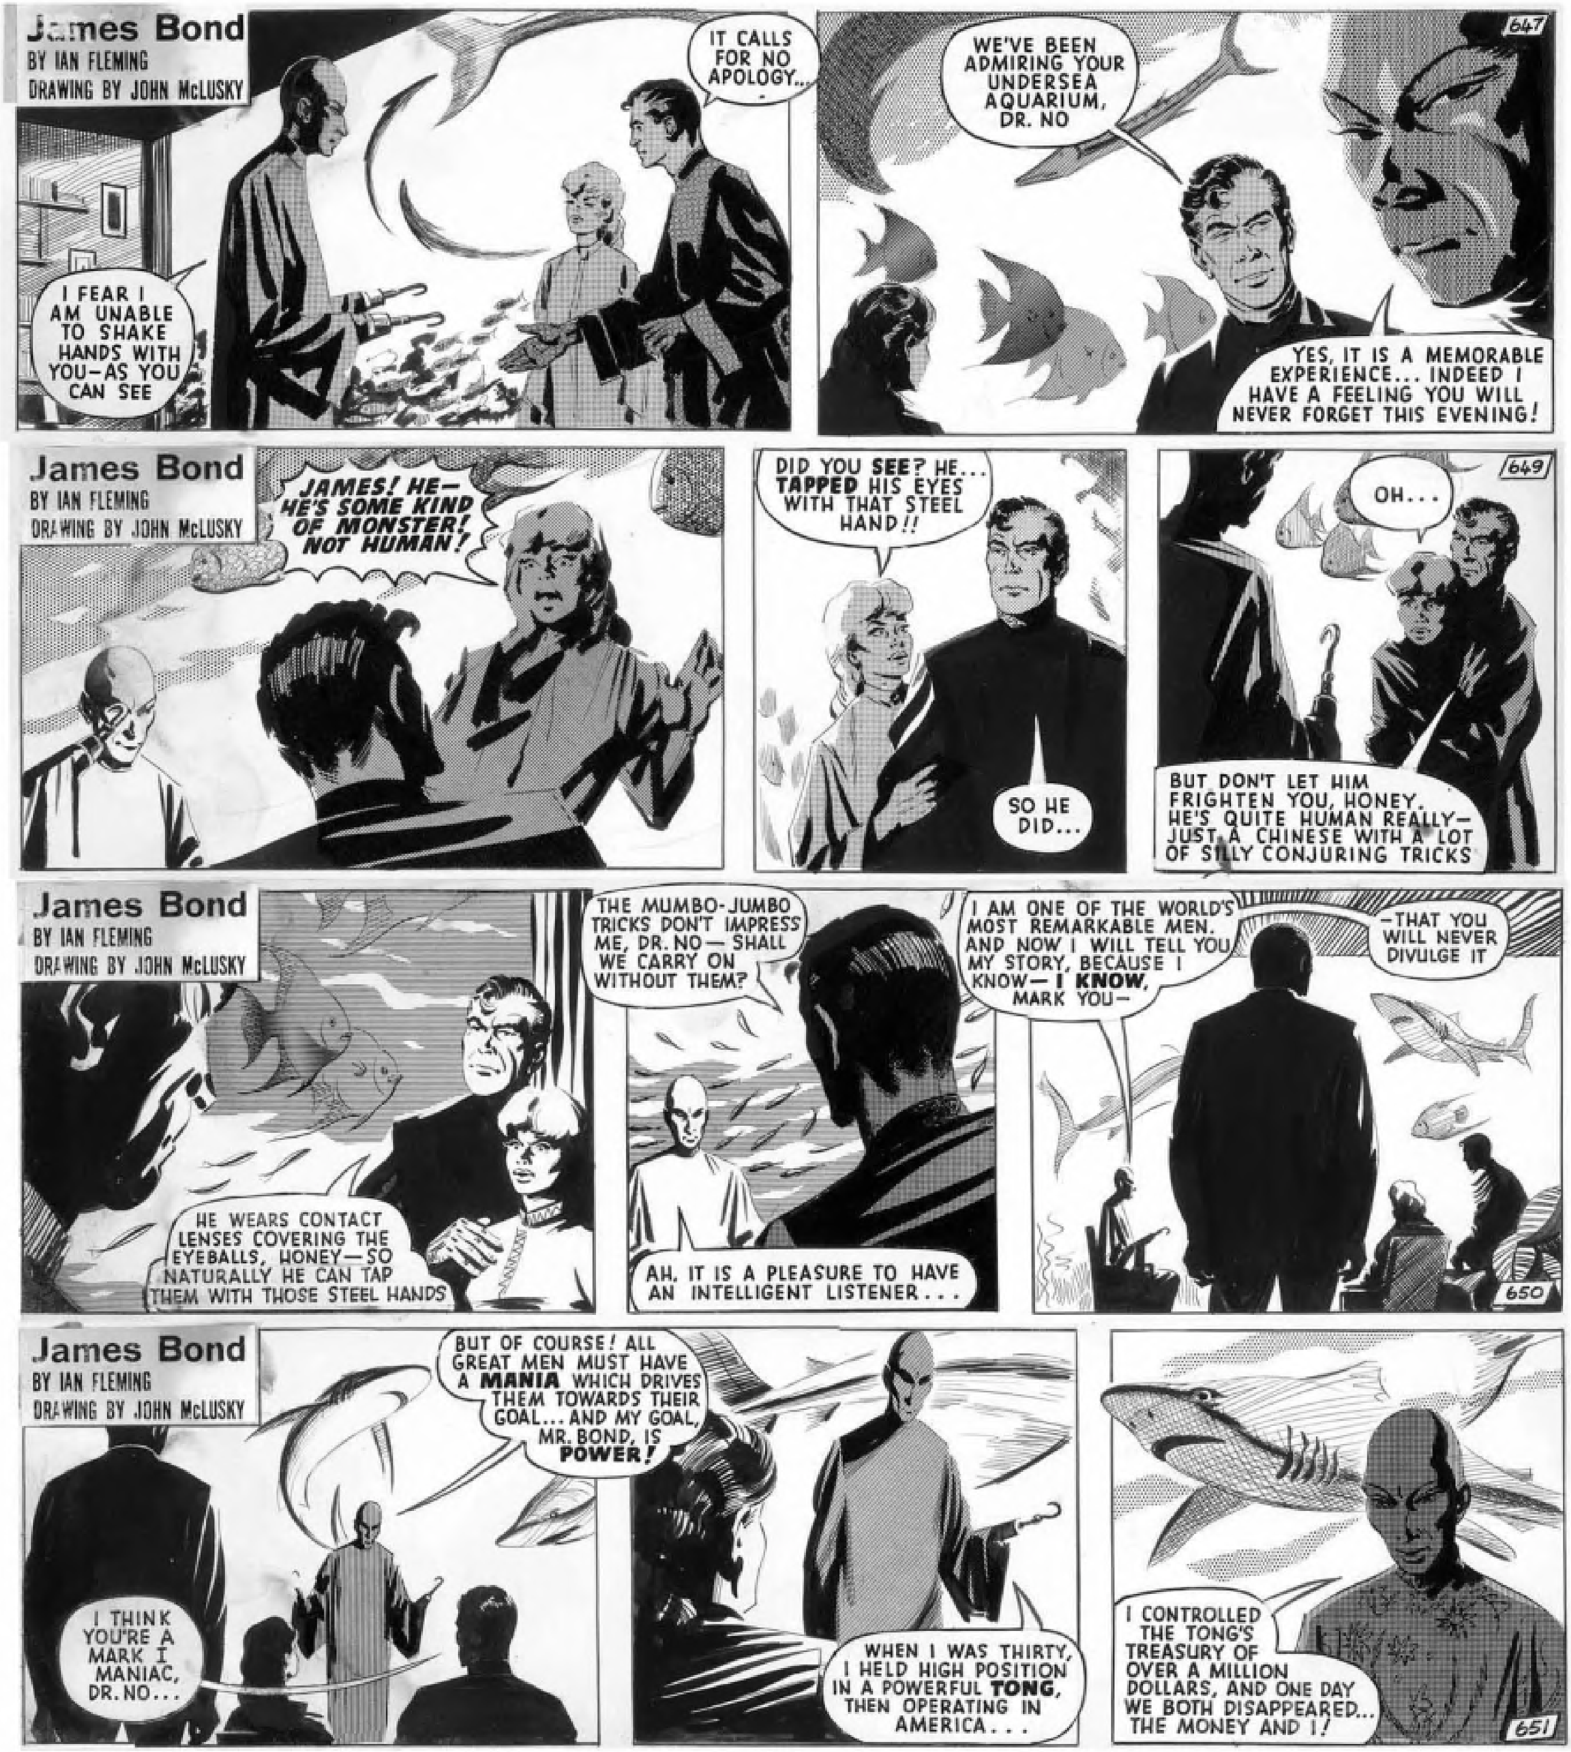
Interested in the human body's ability to resist and survive pain, No forces Bond to take part in an obstacle course built into his facility's ventilation system while Honey is tied up to be devoured by crabs. No watches as Bond struggles with suffering from electric shocks, heat, and large venomous spiders. The ordeal ends with a fight against a giant squid in captivity. Bond managed to survive using improvised and stolen items like a lighter and a knife.

After his escape from the squid' pool, Bond heads to docks where guano is being loaded onto a supply boat by crane; Dr. No supervising the operations. Discreetly approaching the crane, Bond manage to kill the driver and take control of the machine. He thus pours a stock of guano on the doctor who dies of suffocation.

Bond then goes looking for Honey, finds her and flees with her from No's base aboard the "Dragon". Back in Jamaica, 007 has a good time with Honey...

Scenes from the novel illustrated by George Almond for 007 Magazine.





James Bond
BY IAN FLEMING
DRAWING BY JOHN McLUSKY
I FEAR I AM UNABLE TO SHAKE HANDS WITH YOU—AS YOU CAN SEE IT CALLS FOR NO APOLOGY...
647
WE'VE BEEN ADMIRING YOUR UNDERSEA AQUARIUM, DR. NO
YES, IT IS A MEMORABLE EXPERIENCE... INDEED I HAVE A FEELING YOU WILL NEVER FORGET THIS EVENING!
James Bond
BY IAN FLEMING
DRAWING BY JOHN McLUSKY
JAMES! HE— HE'S SOME KIND OF MONSTER! NOT HUMAN!
DID YOU SEE? HE... TAPPED HIS EYES WITH THAT STEEL HAND!!
SO HE DID...
649
OH...
BUT DON'T LET HIM FRIGHTEN YOU, HONEY. HE'S QUITE HUMAN REALLY— JUST A CHINESE WITH A LOT OF SILLY CONJURING TRICKS
James Bond
BY IAN FLEMING
DRAWING BY JOHN McLUSKY
HE WEARS CONTACT LENSES COVERING THE EYEBALLS, HONEY—SO NATURALLY HE CAN TAP THEM WITH THOSE STEEL HANDS
THE MUMBO-JUMBO TRICKS DON'T IMPRESS ME, DR. NO— SHALL WE CARRY ON WITHOUT THEM?
AH. IT IS A PLEASURE TO HAVE AN INTELLIGENT LISTENER...
I AM ONE OF THE WORLD'S MOST REMARKABLE MEN. AND NOW I WILL TELL YOU MY STORY, BECAUSE I KNOW— I KNOW, MARK YOU——THAT YOU WILL NEVER DIVULGE IT 650
James Bond
BY IAN FLEMING
DRAWING BY JOHN McLUSKY
I THINK YOU'RE A MARK I MANIAC, DR. NO...
BUT OF COURSE! ALL GREAT MEN MUST HAVE A MANIA WHICH DRIVES THEM TOWARDS THEIR GOAL... AND MY GOAL, MR. BOND, IS POWER!
WHEN I WAS THIRTY, I HELD HIGH POSITION IN A POWERFUL TONG, THEN OPERATING IN AMERICA...
I CONTROLLED THE TONG'S TREASURY OF OVER A MILLION DOLLARS, AND ONE DAY WE BOTH DISAPPEARED... THE MONEY AND I!
651

Before the films even existed, the Daily Express adapted the Bond novels into comic strips: comic published at a rate of 3 or 4 images daily. The Dr. No one dates from 1960 and the image above represent four days of publications.

Enter Harry Saltzman

Herschel (known as "Harry") Saltzman[6] was born on October 27, 1915 to a Jewish family in Canada. This one subsequently moved to Ohio (United States), where young Harry made a little money by cleaning the floors of a vaudeville theater after school; first contact with the world of the mise-en-scène.

At the age of 15, he decided to leave his family and joined a circus. He subsequently studied economics and political sciences in Paris in 1932.

In the City of Lights, Harry became a talent scout who supplied performers to music halls and circuses. This led him to work in 1938 for an agency with around forty theaters in Europe.

However, like many of his contemporaries, his life changed with the arrival of the War. He returned to Canada to enlist in the Royal Canadian Air Force and was later recruited by the psychological warfare division of the OSS intelligence agency. Saltzman's exact activities during the war remain shrouded in mystery, but he spent most of his time in Europe and North Africa.

After the war he stayed in France where he assisted in reconstruction activities and the creation of a cinematographic division for UNESCO. Realizing that he will not be able to make the world a better place, he returned to show business and the circus world.

Saltzman also met his second (and penultimate) future wife, Jacqueline Colin.

At the end of the 1950s, Harry made money in the United States in the business of coin-operated rides such as mechanical horses. Then he joined NBC where he learned lessons in production. Saltzman then formed his own production company in 1954 and produced the series Captain Gallant of the Foreign Legion.

Harry having always been an ambitious man, has his attention now turned to the cinema and partnered with screenwriter Ben Hecht to make films. The Iron Petticoat will be the only one to come out, in 1956.

He later formed another partnership, Woodfall Film, with Tony Richardson and John Osborne from Royal Court Theatre of London. The idea is to adapt a play into a film. Usually traveling between New York, London and Paris, Saltzman decided to settle permanently in the British capital during the filming. The first two films of Woodfall (Look Back in Anger and The Entertainer) are failures at the box office and disagreements mount between Harry and his partners: he leaves Woodfall (either by himself or by exclusion: the versions differ).

When Osborne asks him what he's going to do now, Saltzman replies, "I bought the Bond books rights". Indeed, Saltzman had Brian Lewis as his lawyer. Lewis was also Ian Fleming's lawyer and helped the two men to meet in December 1960. For $50,000, Saltzman purchased a six-month option on the film rights of Fleming's novels.

Luckily James Bond received an unexpected publicity boost shortly after when, in March 1961 issue of the magazine Life, From Russia, With Love appear in President John Kennedy's list of ten favorite books. Bond books sales were about to take off, with the total sales of paperback, in United Kingdom alone, doubling from 323,000 in 1960 to 670,000 in 1961[7].

Despite this, no studio/distributor however rushes to Saltzman's door when he seeks financing to make Bond.

Time passes and the six months are about to expire…

Then arrives Albert R. Broccoli

Albert Romolo Broccoli[8] was born in New York in 1909 into an Italian-American immigrant family. To those who was close to him, he was nicknamed "Cubby" (a nickname his cousin Pat DiCicco gave him because he thought Albert looked like the comic book character Abie Kabibble).

Through hard work, Cubby's parents acquired a farm where they grew vegetables (including broccolis) and for a time, Cubby seemed destined to make a living from working in the fields. When an expansion plan goes wrong, Cubby abandons the peasant life and goes to work as a salesman for a coffin manufacturer.

In 1934 he went to spend his vacation in Los Angeles with his cousin Pat who had became an agent in Hollywood. The world of cinema then made an impression on Cubby and he moved to California where he worked as a shampoo salesman in San Francisco before moving in with his cousin in Los Angeles.

After a short career at a jeweler, he began one in the cinema by becoming a subordinate at 20th Century-Fox. Around this time Cubby married, became friends with filmmaker Howard Hughes and had the opportunity to work with him as an assistant director on The Outlaw (1943), directed and produced by Hughes.

When World War II broke out, Cubby joined the Navy where he organized shows with Hollywood stars, intended to boost the morale of American soldiers.

After the war, Broccoli divorced and briefly became a Christmas tree salesman. He returns to the world of cinema by working in the talent agency Famous Artists of Charles K. Feldman, then remarried in 1961.

Cubby now decide to establish himself as a producer and end up forming a partnership called Warwick Films with director Irving Allen, in order to make a film in England: The Red Beret (1953).

Commercial success is there and Warwick Films continues the creation of new films, involving in them people who would later have an impact in the creation of the James Bond' films such as screenwriter Richard Maibaum, director Terence Young, cinematographer Ted Moore or stuntman Bob Simmons.

Albert had a child in 1956, Tina, and in 1958 he was interested in adapting the James Bond novels for the cinema. Broccoli, however, learns that his wife Nedra has cancer (which will quickly prove fatal) and having to stay after her, he sends his partner to negotiate alone with Ian Fleming. However, Irving Allen not seeing potential in Bond, negotiations with Fleming proved to be a failure.

In lieu of Bond, Broccoli continued to make other films with Allen on other subjects and married for the third (and last) time in 1959 with Dana Wilson, screenwriter and novelist, who gave him a daughter the following year: Barbara.

Shortly after the film The Trials of Oscar Wilde (1960) and its commercial failure, Broccoli and Allen decided to separate and dissolve Warwick Films after twenty films.

Subsequently Broccoli tried to develop a new film with screenwriter Wolf Mankowitz. Cubby, however, is not enthusiastic about the script and confides to him that he wants to make a James Bond movie instead. Mankowitz encouraged him to go in that direction, but Cubby knew that someone else had previously acquired the temporary rights to adapt Fleming's novels: Harry Saltzman.

Mankowitz, however, knows Saltzman and knows that the latter's plan to bring Bond to the cinemas is falling apart as his six-month option is coming to an end. Mankowitz offer to Broccoli to meet Saltzman.

Albert Broccoli, Sean Connery, Ian Fleming and Harry Saltzman some time later...

Enter the first writers

So Cubby and Harry end up meeting and decide to form a 50-50 partnership to produce James Bond's first cinematic adventure together[9].

At the end of June 1961 they meet United Artists who agree to distribute the film and finance it to the extent of $1 million of the time[10] (including $140,000 for the rights and the writing of the script[11]). UA would have the right of approval on various things like the screenwriters and the script, but United Artists wasn't really an intrusive company.

> - Cubby Broccoli[12] : Since taking control of United Artists in February 1951, Arthur Krim, Robert Benjamin and later Eric Pleskow consistently displayed an unusual combination of ingenuity, taste and business acumen [...]. There were many reasons for UA's success. But perhaps the most important was the company's sense of how to strike the right balance between the film-maker's creative independence, essential for artistic integrity, and the studio's financial control, essential for corporate health and stability. [...] Once UA had given their approval, they let me get on with it.

> - David Picker, a UA executive[13] : UA would finance every film as an independent production. On approval of budget, script, director and cast, the producing entity would have total creative control and final cut of the film... Only if the film went over budget would UA have the right to step in and get involved creatively.

They finalize the acquisition of the rights from Fleming (who will take $100,000 per film + a 5% of the profits per film[14]) and the production company EON Production is then formed by Cubby and Harry, as is Danjaq (the one managing the film rights to Bond), named in reference to their wives Dana and Jacqueline.

Logic would dictate that 007's first adventure in the cinema would be adapted from the very first novel. However Cubby and Harry don't have the rights to Casino Royale; Fleming having already sold them to someone else (Gregory Ratoff) earlier[15]. However, they have those on the eight other novels (plus a collection of short stories) already released. A choice must be made and we then hesitate between Dr. No and the latest one: Thunderball.

Note that these two novels take place in two British colonies (Jamaica and the Bahamas), making them eligible for Eady Levy plan subsidies. This Eady plan was a boon for filmmakers in Britain after World War II. This was a tax on the British box office which was partially reinvested in the British film industry. Thus the major Hollywood studios saw part of the British profits escape them and these were then redistributed to films filmed in the United Kingdom, as envisaged here. It was in addition one of the reasons why Cubby and Irving Allen went on England to make the Warwick Films' first movie almost a decade earlier.

The reasons why Dr. No was chosen as the first Bond film differ. David Picker of United Artists later explained that the reason was simple: money. Indeed Dr. No would be less expensive to produce, especially compared to 007's big aquatic adventure[16]. Albert Broccoli has another version: the rights to the novel Thunderball being disputed in court (between Fleming and Kevin McClory, we will have the opportunity to come back to this), it did not seem a good idea to choose it[17].

Johanna Harwood is apparently the first screenwriter to work on the film Dr. No. According to an interview with her in Retro Cinema, just before a deal was reached with United Artists, Saltzman (she was his assistant/secretary) sent her a telegram instructing her to get to work on writing Dr. No or Thunderball[18]. In Paris where she was living at the time, she begins to write.

Johanna Harwood Clément was born in Ireland in 1930. During wartime, her mother wartime sent her to boarding school in Oxford[19]. One day she was visiting a school friend's and looked through her collection of books, "and I discovered in one of them, to my astonishment, that there was a woman who made documentaries. I thought: well, women do that, women make films; I'd like to make films"[20].

Understanding French and now wanting a career in cinema as a director, she went to France to study at the Institut des hautes études cinématographiques (Institute for Advanced Cinematographic Studies) in Paris[21].

She began her career in the industry in the 1950s as a script supervisor girl responsible for continuity on Return to Glennascaul (1951)[22]. She is responsible for observing and ensuring that what is shot is in perfect harmony from one shot/scene to another. It was also at a similar post that she later joined the production The Red Beret from Warwick Films, directed by Terence Young[23]: "I was the assistant script girl (the script girl was Betty Harley). It took two of us because Irving Allen had pretensions to being a director [he was indeed one], and quite often he would shoot one scene while Terence Young shot another elsewhere"[24].

She stayed on the same post for Warwick next film*: Hell Below Zero*[25].

In 1954 she worked on Franco-British production Knave of Hearts (Monsieur Ripois) directed by René Clément, whom she would eventually marry[26]. She also worked on Mr. Arkadin (1955)[27].

In the late 1950's Harwood wrote in the magazine Nursery World a short pastiche of James Bond (as a child, playing cards with his nanny), entitled Some Are Born Great. She also works for Famous Artists in London[28].

When her boss leaves to work in Paris, she discovers that the London offices of Famous Artists are now rented by Harry Saltzman[29]. The latter asks her what she wants to do now: Harwood replies that she wants to write film scripts.

Saltzman then suggests she become his assistant, this way she can write some treatments and scripts for him[30]. She will notably write several scripts for him which, ultimately, were not filmed[31].

"Harry Saltzman, like Irving Allen, was totally lacking in tact, and Broccoli, as their partner, provided the same favor to both: he picked up the pieces", remembers Harwood. "Saltzman was hard at work, but never mean. His forte? Selling ideas. There, he was unbeatable. His weakness? Wanting to get involved in everything else. There, it was rather disastrous. It seems that this trait later developed into megalomania, but I was spared of that because I only knew him as a poor. Saltzman and his family were living in France at the time. The Woodfall's first films were only critical successes, and no one wanted to lend money to keep shooting. So Saltzman moved to Paris, in association with a friend, André Smagghe, who had a production company. I wrote Arti- cles of War, Un homme de trop, City of Spades, (none of which were shot at the time) and I adapted, also for Saltzman, an American play called Maybe Tuesday which ran for four weeks in the provinces but couldn't find a theater in London. Woodfall's latest film, Saturday Night and Sunday Morning, had not yet been released, but Saltzman had judged it as bad as the others. He was wrong. It was a great success and Saltzman's reputation went up again in London. It certainly helped in the negotiations for the rights to Fleming's books. When Dr. No started, he moved back to London"[32].

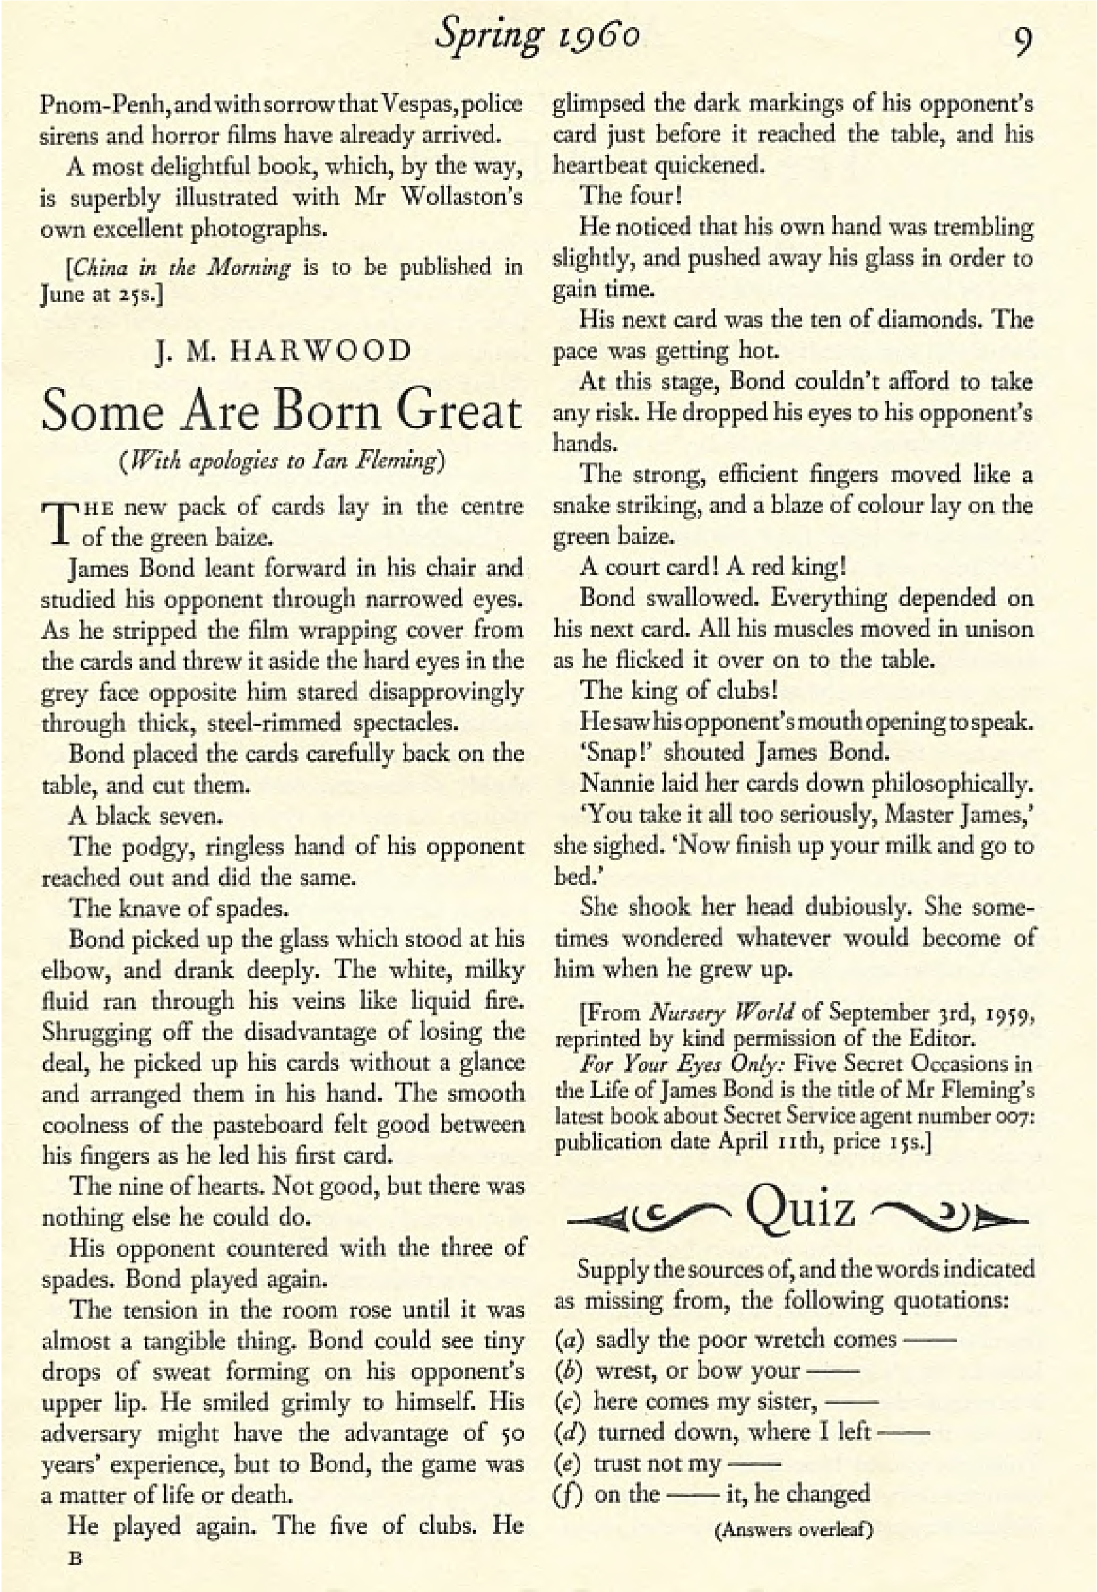
What Johanna Harwood wrote for Dr. No was, according to her, "a full screenplay"[33] very faithful to the novel: "when I adapt a book, I do try to stay close to the book; after all you've spent a lot of money buying the rights"[34]. And that, while thinking "I thought Dr. No [novel] really was one of the less good ones. I can't imagine why they chose it"[35].



Spring 1960 9

Pnom-Penh, and with sorrow that Vespas, police sirens and horror films have already arrived.

A most delightful book, which, by the way, is superbly illustrated with Mr Wollaston's own excellent photographs.

[China in the Morning is to be published in June at 25s.]

J. M. HARWOOD

Some Are Born Great

(With apologies to Ian Fleming)

THE new pack of cards lay in the centre of the green baize.

James Bond leant forward in his chair and studied his opponent through narrowed eyes. As he stripped the film wrapping cover from the cards and threw it aside the hard eyes in the grey face opposite him stared disapprovingly through thick, steel-rimmed spectacles.

Bond placed the cards carefully back on the table, and cut them.

A black seven.

The podgy, ringless hand of his opponent reached out and did the same.

The knave of spades.

Bond picked up the glass which stood at his elbow, and drank deeply. The white, milky fluid ran through his veins like liquid fire. Shrugging off the disadvantage of losing the deal, he picked up his cards without a glance and arranged them in his hand. The smooth coolness of the pasteboard felt good between his fingers as he led his first card.

The nine of hearts. Not good, but there was nothing else he could do.

His opponent countered with the three of spades. Bond played again.

The tension in the room rose until it was almost a tangible thing. Bond could see tiny drops of sweat forming on his opponent's upper lip. He smiled grimly to himself. His adversary might have the advantage of 50 years' experience, but to Bond, the game was a matter of life or death.

He played again. The five of clubs. He glimpsed the dark markings of his opponent's card just before it reached the table, and his heartbeat quickened.

The four!

He noticed that his own hand was trembling slightly, and pushed away his glass in order to gain time.

His next card was the ten of diamonds. The pace was getting hot.

At this stage, Bond couldn't afford to take any risk. He dropped his eyes to his opponent's hands.

The strong, efficient fingers moved like a snake striking, and a blaze of colour lay on the green baize.

A court card! A red king!

Bond swallowed. Everything depended on his next card. All his muscles moved in unison as he flicked it over on to the table.

The king of clubs!

He saw his opponent's mouth opening to speak.

'Snap!' shouted James Bond.

Nannie laid her cards down philosophically.

'You take it all too seriously, Master James,' she sighed. 'Now finish up your milk and go to bed.'

She shook her head dubiously. She sometimes wondered whatever would become of him when he grew up.

[From Nursery World of September 3rd, 1959, reprinted by kind permission of the Editor. For Your Eyes Only: Five Secret Occasions in the Life of James Bond is the title of Mr Fleming's latest book about Secret Service agent number 007: publication date April 11th, price 15s.]

Quiz

Supply the sources of, and the words indicated as missing from, the following quotations:

(a) sadly the poor wretch comes ——
(b) wrest, or bow your ——
(c) here comes my sister, ——
(d) turned down, where I left ——
(e) trust not my ——
(f) on the —— it, he changed

(Answers overleaf)

B

However Harwood is only there temporarily. Since screenwriter Wolf Mankowitz had helped them meet, Cubby and Saltzman thought of him to write the final script for Dr. No.

Cyril Wolf Mankowitz[36] was born in 1924's London into a Jewish family of Russian origin who sold antiques. Armed with a scholarship, he was educated at Downing College, Cambridge. There he met his future wife with whom he married in 1944.

After his studies, Mankowitz worked in a bookstore and began to write. In 1952 he published his first novel Make Me an Offer and continued in 1953 with A Kid for Two Farthings, based on his experience growing up in a Jewish community. When this novel was adapted for the cinema by Carol Reed in 1955, he was the himself the screenwriter.

Mankowitz also writes for the theater. In 1958, he wrote the book for the musical Expresso Bongo which was adapted into a film the following year. He continued to write for the cinema, then came in 1961 Dr. No.

After Dr. No, Mankowitz wrote another film and notably became one of the authors of the parody film Casino Royale of 1967.

During his life he tried his hand as a theater impresario, wrote biographies of Charles Dickens and Edgar Allan Poe and three authoritative works on porcelain. He also ran an antiques and porcelain business.

Having problems with the taxman, Mankowitz moved with his family to Ireland in the early 1970s, where the tax policy was more advantageous towards writers. In 1971 his only collection of poetry was published.

In the 1980s his problems with the British tax authorities worsened and he found himself financially bankrupt. He took a teaching position at the University of New Mexico in 1982 before returning to Ireland in the late 1980s. He published his last novel A Night With Casanova in 1991.

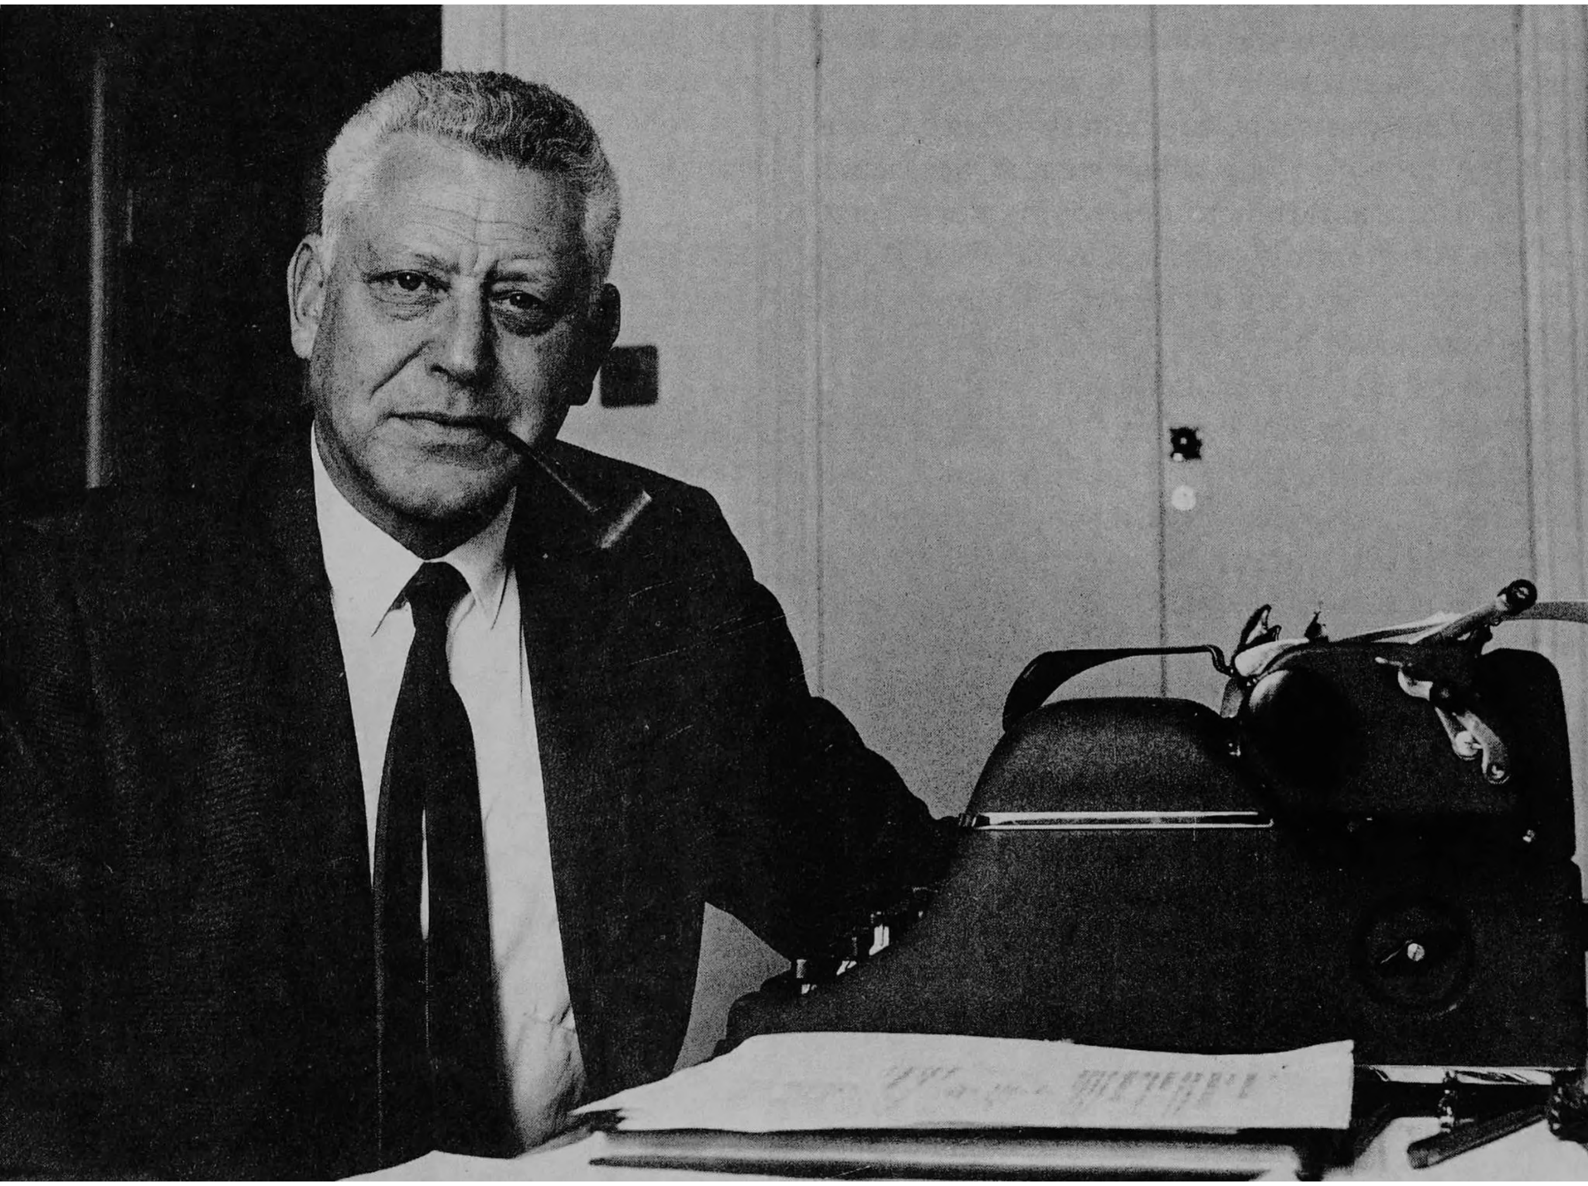
His life ended in Ireland in 1998, at the age of 73, while he was suffering from cancer.

On July 21, 1961 Mankowitz was hired and later submitted a 102-page script of a first draft of Dr. No, which overall is faithful to Ian Fleming's novel[37]. According to those who have read it, it includes Bond's ordeal in the ventilation shaft and even the final confrontation against a giant squid (which here attacks a tied-up Honey). Bond's introduction was to be on a shooting range with Major Boothroyd[38]. The producers were, however, aware that it would be difficult to film this script convincingly, particularly for the passage of the squid.

Enter Richard Maibaum

Screenwriter Richard Maibaum, who had written several films for Broccoli during the Warwick Films times, is also engaged in parallel to write... Thunderball. According to the book The James Bond Archives: with the aim of making it the second James Bond film.

Maibaum complete a Thunderball script on August 18, 1961 (we will have the opportunity to talk about it later). Since the legal case over the rights to Thunderball novel would obviously not be settled before a certain period of time, the production prefers to concentrate all its efforts on Dr. No. Thus, Maibaum join Mankowitz to the writing of the Jamaican adventure of James Bond.



Contrary to what some might think, the screenwriter who wrote the highest number of James Bond adventures was not British but American. Richard Maibaum is in fact born in New York on May 26, 1909. Like many Richards in the United States, his nickname is "Dick".

"As a kid, I used to sneak into theatres, risking my life to climb up fire escapes and [passing] through men's rooms"[39], Maibaum recalls. Looking back on his childhood, the screenwriter describes himself as a "compulsive reader", particularly of Alexandre Dumas[40], and having written a 150-page novel at the age of nine: "about Indians and stuff like that, [when I think about it today] it's laughable now"[41].

Maibaum attended Evander Childs High School (where he met his future wife)[42], attended New York University[43] and then in 1930 entered the dramatic arts department of the University of Iowa; "the best thing I ever did"[44]. "Everything I learned about the theater had its beginning here under [Professor Edward C.] Mabie"[45]. While writing plays and performing as a theatrical actor, Maibaum graduated with a Phi Beta Kappa in 1931[46], and in 1932 he received a master's degree. "I wrote eleven three-acts plays in one year"[47], he remembers.

Around 22 and still at the University of Iowa, his anti-lynching play The Tree became a Broadway production in 1932 under the direction of the young Robert Rossen[48].

Returning to New York after graduation, Maibaum spent 1933 as an actor at the Shakespearean Repertory Theater on Broadway[49]. "In all I played in 17 Shakespearean plays"[50], including the role of Iago in Othello[51].

As a young playwright in early 1930s New York, Maibaum struggled to sell his plays during the Great Depression[52]. In 1933, the year Hitler came to power in Germany, Maibaum having met several German Jewish refugees, attacked Nazism in his play Birthright[53] also directed by Rossen.

Maibaum continues to write theater including Sweet Mystery of Life (1935), a comedy that would later serve as the basis for the film Gold Diggers of 1937 (1936), although he was not involved in the writing of the film. In 1935, he married Sylvia Kamion[54].

His rapid rise as a playwright quickly landed him a job as a screenwriter for the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, one of the most powerful and prestigious studios in Hollywood.

Maibaum's first film credit is The Old School Tie (1936) at MGM. "I was called into [producer] Harry Rapf's office"; the latter introduces Maibaum to screenwriter/novelist Cyril Hume who had wrote some Tarzan, saying that the two will work together from now on[55]. And "despite never having know one another before, we collaborated. We worked on nine films together. Cyril was a very important factor in my development as a screenwriter. [...] You see, I was a playwright and he was a novelist, and I think that is why we worked well together"[56].

Following this first encounter, Maibaum co-wrote for MGM with Hume: They Gave Him a Gun (1937), Live, Love and Learn (1937), The Bad Man of Brimstone (1937) and Stablemates (1938).

He wrote another play with Harry Clork, See My Lawyer, which will be produced in New York by George Abbott. It was one of Maibaum's most successful plays, with 224 performances from 1939 to 1940[57].

From 1938 to 1942, Maibaum participated in films' writing for other major film studios: Columbia, Paramount and 20th Century Fox. He is notably one of Alfred Hitchcock's many writers on Foreign Correspondent.

Richard Maibaum joined the United States Army in 1942 for World War II where he was commissioned as a captain in the Signal Corps. "For the Industrial Services Division I wrote and produced nine films, which were screened in factories to show war workers their importance in our military effort. Eventually, I became the director of the Combat Films Division, where all the combat film taken by cameramen was funneled into Washington for various propaganda or morale purposes. I had a great many writers, directors, producers, and editors I could call on. [...] I did some interesting documentaries in the service: Appoint- ment in Tokyo, The Liberation of Rome, Twenty-Seven Soldiers"[58]. Maibaum also handles top-secret footage captured by cameramen and will emerge from the war with the rank of lieutenant colonel.

"While I was in the Army, a friend of mine, Harry Tugend, got to be the executive producer at Paramount. When the war ended [...] Harry said to me: I'd like to have you with me"[59]. Maibaum returned to Hollywood, as a producer and writer under contract to Paramount. The first film he produced and wrote was O.S.S. (1946) which stars the actor Alan Ladd in a fictional story about the OSS, the forerunner of the CIA. This was the beginning of a successful association with Ladd.

Maibaum produced three more films and in 1949 he produced and wrote with Cyril Hume The Great Gatsby, starring Ladd. Three other films followed, including one with Ladd.

Around 1949 he left Paramount and remained for "a year and a half without being able to get a job"[60].

Then in the 1950s, when producers Albert R. Broccoli and Irving Allen of the newly formed Warwick Films signed Alan Ladd for three films, the actor asked them to bring Maibaum in to work on the writing[61]. Maibaum moves with his family to England and thus participates in the first two Warwick films: The Red Beret (directed by Terence Young) and Hell Below Zero.

He returned to the University of Iowa in 1954, this time to teach. "I got a letter from a university professor asking me if I would write [a television] series. I said no. I wouldn't do the writing. I told him they had the talents there, in the students"[62]. Thus Maibaum supervises the students for the writing of the series.

He also began writing for television himself, including The Kate Smith Evening Hour as well as the episode Fearful Decision of The United States Steel Hour, co-written with Cyril Hume. The two screenwriters will adapt the episode into a film: Ransom!, in 1956. That same year came out Bigger Than Life, written with Hume.

Maibaum wrote other films for Warwick such as The Cockleshell Heroes (1955), Zarak (1956), No Time to Die (1958), The Man Inside (1958); some directed by Terence Young.

"In 1956 or 1957 [...] Cubby gave me two of the James Bond books to read. I read them and liked them enormously. Cubby was very excited, too, but Irving Allen didn't share his enthusiasm. So Cubby put them aside"[63], says the screenwriter.

Maibaum also became an executive producer at MGM-TV in 1958, for whom he wrote and produced the television series The Thin Man (1957–59). He also wrote the screenplay for the film The Day They Robbed the Bank of England (1960). Its close ties with the Writer's Guild of America however, led him to resign in 1960, during a screenwriters' strike[64].

After another movie, Battle at Bloody Beach, he was invited by Albert Broccoli to write James Bond in 1961. "I didn't know Saltzman at the time, but Cubby told him about me"[65]. His future career is now sealed: from then his next screenwriting credits will almost only be James Bond films.

He will participate to their writings until License to Kill ; doing the latter when he was almost 80 years old. Three notable exceptions where he was not called upon are You Only Live Twice, Live and Let Die and Moonraker; periods during which Maibaum would then write his only two post-1961 non-Bond films (besides Chitty Chitty Bang Bang): Jarrett (1973) and *S*H*E* (1980).

During his time aboard the James Bond franchise, he and his co-writers were nominated (but never won) for a few awards:

- Mystery Writers of America, Edgar Allan Poe award for Best Foreign Film Script:

- Goldfinger
- Thunderball

• Writers Guild of America, category best script adapted from another media:

- The Spy Who Loved Me
- For Your Eyes Only

Maibaum also wrote projects for cinema or television which never came to fruition, such as a version of Logan's Run in 1968, a film with Don Pendleton's Mack Bolan character around 1972, an adaptation of the Robert Ludlum's novel The Gemini Contenders in 1977-1978, or even a rewrite for a Batman film project by Michael Uslan (1979).

Richard Maibaum died of a heart attack at Los Angeles on January 4, 1991, at the age of 81[66], leaving behind two sons (Matthew and Paul) and a granddaughter (Shanna Claire).

Richard Maibaum and James Bond

Maibaum on the writing of his 13 Bond films, compiled from the numerous interviews he gave and essays he wrote:

"He was a terrific writer", Maibaum says of Ian Fleming, "I'm always surprised when I go back and read [his books again] how great they are"[67]. "I had […] great admiration for him. [...] I think […] the best of them all [his novels] was, of course, […] On Her Majesty's Secret Service, by far"[68]. "I met [him] several times while he was still alive, but I did not speak to him about screenwriting. He didn't seem very interested"[69]. According to the screenwriter, "the only thing he ever asked me" was about From Russia with Love and what he wanted to know was if rats would be in the film; "It was the only question he ever ask me"[70].

Fleming also told Maibaum that he found the films funnier than his novels. "He was a little bemused and a little obtuse about it, I thought, because he really didn't understand that we were trying to make them funnier. That was the thing we changed most about his books"[71]. "Bond was pretty humorless in the books, and the dimension of humor that we put there was, I thought, very helpful to the pictures" and their successes[72].

"There is little doubt in my mind, however, that the success off the Bond films stems directly from the success of the novels, Fleming's way of telling a story and his tongue-in-cheek attitude towards love, death, violence and all the other ingredients that make his books so entertaining, have delighted millions of people all over the world. His books are, in parts, savage. We have made the humor savage, but, as the films have proved, people today enjoy sick jokes"[73].

With Goldfinger "we took into consideration the audience's growing sophistication. We dared to do something seldom done in action pictures: we mixed what was funny with what was serious"[74].

"The first golden rule for a writer is to read... Read everything and anything. Something seen in a book or publication will invariably prove useful later"[75].

"It takes considerable research and constant alertness to news of industrial and military devices which could conceivably be useful in Bond's adventures"[76]. "I have to read all kinds of scientific journals and military manuals"[77]. "I hope I haven't given the impression that I am solely responsible for including all these gadgets and gimmicks in the films. Everyone connected with [the making of theses films] is on the lookout for striking new devices"[78].

"The most difficult thing" about writing a Bond film, according to the screenwriter, "is coming up with a great caper for the villains"[79]. "But once you've got the caper, you're off to the races and the rest is fun"[80] because "the rest falls into place. Because the caper dictates what sort of a villain it is, what the sub-villains will be, what Bond will do, where it will be and so forth"[81].

"We all knew that Dr. No was an interesting and colorful work, but none of us really thought that it was going to be the surprise hit that it later became", he says[82]. Maibaum specifies that starting the saga with this film rather than Thunderball "was one of the best things that ever happened"[83]. Similarly, Maibaum considered it was a good thing that Cubby had to wait until the 1960s to make Bond because society (and censorship) was more open to this type of film than a few years earlier: "cutting out the sex and violence would damage 007 irreparably"[84].

"Joseph Wiseman was just sensational [as the villain] and I owe a lot to him. When he read that line: I thought you were less dumb, but I see you are nothing more than a stupid policeman ; I knew that was the tone that all villains should have: a touch of elegance"[85]. Maibaum will also declare that this is one of his favorite lines of dialogue from the entire saga[86].

"Hitchcock told me [once]: if you have 13 bumps in a film, I know I'll have an exciting picture. By bumps we mean shocks... High-points... Thrills. The old lady in Goldfinger who suddenly appears with a machine-gun at the gate: she's bump. Fiona in Thunderball, who is not as we think falling for Bond, but trying to kill him: she's another bump. [...] The producers and I have never been satisfied with a mere 13 bumps. We always aim for 39. And if I exhaust my ideas, Cubby or Harry or someone else in our group will always turn up trumps with bumps"[87].

Writing begins with redaction of a treatment: "We always write a treatment anywhere from fifty to eighty pages" because "as Cubby says, he didn't want any surprises. He wants to know before he starts where he's going and it also helps the writer too"[88].

"It takes me nine or ten weeks to produce the first draft and if all is going well, I am writing 12, 14 or even 16 hours a day. [...] Once the first draft is complete, we have group discussion and then I may need another four or five more weeks for revision"[89].

Speaking of these group discussions or script conferences, Maibaum gives an example for Thunderball: "We [the writers] were helped with at least enthusiastic suggestions from Terence Young, himself a writer, producers Harry Saltzman and Cubby Broccoli, art director Ken Adam and editor Peter Hunt. A hell of a group! When we are together ideas fly in swarms, quickly and loudly around the conference table. Terence is always full of ideas, usually about Bond quips, and Harry and Cubby are good when it comes to the action, gadgets, action, girl and action aspects"[90].

As stunts grew in importance, so did stuntmen. "Usually, they take the ones that we suggest, but very often they'll go far beyond it, you know, and they'll suggest things to us too"[91].

"Suggestions by producers, directors, scenic artists, special effects wizards, stunt specialists, et al. are undoubtedly helpful. But when all that is on the table, it is the writer or writers who must synthesize it coherently with their own ideas"[92].

"One of my strong points as a collaborator: I have a tolerance of other people's ideas and am able to select the good ones and fight like hell against those I think are bad. I am able to take an idea someone else has thought of and go beyond it"[93].

> - Cubby Broccoli[94] : [Maibaum] was also a genial character, easy to get on with, which is no small bonus in the nervous atmosphere of motion-picture making. His greatest plus as a scriptwriter was on construction. He was good on ideas, too, but his strength lay in constructing a viable framework on which we could build. No scriptwriter, at least not on the kind of pictures we make, can operate in isolation. We know what we want and make our own creative input, then writers take these ideas and run with them.

"Further revisions are made if and when certain stars are signing for parts. They may require extra re-writing to suit their personality or image. Obviously when Honor Blackman became our Pussy Galore, I had to write in something enabling her to throw Bond judo style. Her TV fans would have expected this"[95].

"The reason the Bond movies have been successful is that certain charm which has been associated with them", says Maibaum. "Not a sickly, lugubrious charm, but the charm Sean Connery"[96].

Maibaum will dislike George Lazenby[97] and during the Roger Moore period he will find "that the charm is gone. It's so bad I kind of flinch. I may be guilty of it myself"[98]. While Maibaum "loves Roger"[99] and finds "he's a very delightful and witty outgoing person"[100], he likes him less as James Bond. "Roger's light approach took over and permeated everything, it upset the balance"[101].

"Some people like Roger better than Sean. I certainly don't. I think Roger does very well. He's suave, witty, and so forth, but as far as I'm concerned, he has a dimension of disbelief. He does what I consider unforgivable: he spoofs himself and he spoofs the part"[102]. He's "very good with the light stuff"[103], "Roger knew he wasn't a muscle man the way that Sean was. You wouldn't believe that he could knock down a guy the way Sean did and so on. So he didn't try to"[104].

"Roger insists on making some script changes. He's very proud of them and tells everybody. And some of his improvements are just awful. Sean would come up with pretty witty lines at times. Sean is a witty man. And so is Roger. But God, the lines, please..."[105].

"The most important thing in the Bond pictures is a pretense of seriousness"[106]. "When the actor doesn't believe the part and doesn't believe the story then the audience starts not to believe it"[107]. "As a writer I think one of my contributions to the Bonds is that I maintained a pretense of seriousness [in these films]. I took them seriously"[108].

As a result, Maibaum saw the arrival of Timothy Dalton as a breath of fresh air: "We had seven pictures with Roger and they became lighter and lighter. You couldn't become too serious, but that was beginning to wear a little thin. What we're doing here [with License to Kill] is making it more serious. The humor is more ironical than funny. l think it's about time we did that"[109].

"The best James Bond will always be Sean Connery, but Timothy is the best actor of the four of them"[110].

Of the directors, Maibaum said of Terence Young in particular that "he has not been given the great credit he deserves for the style of the Bond films"[111]. He calls it "the best we've had at doing at romantic scene"[112]. As for John Glen, Maibaum believes that he excels in action, calling him "the finest action director in the world. Its hard to find anything better than the Bonds in terms of action and excitement. When I see every action picture imitating all the things we have done for so many years, I realize what Glen has accomplished. His action sequences are always stunning and different. [...] Writers aren't always so happy with their directors, but I'm just delighted with John and have been from the start"[113].

"A director can ruin a good script, but he can never save a bad script"[114].

In his later years Maibaum considered From Russia with Love as his favorite Bond film[115] and the "most successful artistically"[116]. His "least favorite" one happens to be Moonraker[117], which he once described as "space colony crap"[118]. His favorite Bond Girl was "Carole Bouquet in For Your Eyes Only. She's so beautiful. The next one is Daniela Bianchi in From Russia With Love. What a beautiful girl!"[119], "and, my God, that scene in the stateroom is probably the sexiest scene in [all] the Bonds"[120]. "I've never liked another [Felix] Leiter" than Jack Lord in Dr. No[121].

"The banter between [Moneypenny] and Bond does insinuate potential intimacy but thus far has not flowered, I'm not sure why. Perhaps Moneypenny is an anachronistic virtue symbol which Bond unaccountably respects. Perhaps he needs a motive other than pure pleasure to stimulate him into action. Lois Maxwell's attractiveness as Moneypenny inclines me toward the first supposition"[122].

"We do the same thing but change it enough so that the audience doesn't object. In fact, I think it amuses them"[123]. "What keeps me going is the desire to do another good film. I enjoy doing it because it's a challenge to come up with new material. You use up so many locales, so many possibilities of plot, so many characters and stuff like that. But we always find some new aspect, and that's the challenge. That's what's exciting"[124].

September 7, 1961' treatment: canal, seashells and monkey

- Johanna Harwood[125] : Once United Artists provided money, Mankowitz and Maibaum are hired to rewrite my script. They spend some weeks working together in a country hotel.

Through hard work, the duo Mankowitz & Maibaum completed a 42-pages treatment entitled "Doctor No" on September 7, 1961. Harwood name doesn't appear on the cover (and she have "absolutely nothing to do with this one"[126]).

The treatment opens with a credits sequence in which we see the "Three Blind Beggars"; they are notably described as "Chigroes" who walk in various places in Kingston (Jamaica). "Chigroes" is a diminutive of "Chinese Negroes" and it is worth remembering that the sensitivities of the time towards racism were not the same as today, and that "Chigroes" was also the word used by Fleming himself in the novel.

Once the credits are over, our three guys arrive at the Queen's Club where John Strangways, Pleydell Smith (spelled without a hyphen), Duff (a member of the police) and a certain Hugh Buckfield are playing bridge. Buckfield is described as a wealthy Englishman with Creole origins in early middle age; he is in the maritime trade.

As in the film, Strangways leaves and is murdered in the Club parking lot by the three beggars (who take his body away with them).

At Strangways' bungalow, his secretary, Jane, tries to contact a certain "Christopher" by radio. A camera shot shows a statue of Christopher Columbus located in Panama and a cargo ship, the SS Orinoco, sailing in the Panama Canal. A canal pilot named Alonzo (that's "Christopher") transmits to Jane a coded message by radio that seems important when suddenly the conversation is cut short: the Three Blind Beggars showed up at Strangways' house, killed the secretary and stole a file called "Dr. No".

At Universal Exports they are worried about Strangways, who is not giving any reports or news, when suddenly the Three Blind Beggars finally transmit something that seems to surprise the radio operators.

James Bond, at Les Ambassadeurs, is playing cards with a certain Sylvia (the treatment doesn't requires Bond's revelation to reach a crescendo). He receives a phone call from Universal Exports and prepares to leave; Sylvia reproaches him for not offering her a chance to take her revenge at cards. Bond gives/lends her money and his address ("Apartment 3c, Baker Street Mansions") where she can return it to him.

- Novel Casino Royale, chapter 5: Bond's car was his only personal hobby. One of the last of the 4½-litre Bentleys with the supercharger by Amherst Villiers, he had bought it almost new in 1933 and had kept it in careful storage through the war. It was still serviced every year and, in London, a former Bentley mechanic, who worked in a garage near Bond's Chelsea flat, tended it with jealous care. Bond drove it hard and well and with an almost sensual pleasure. It was a battleship-grey convertible coupé, which really did convert, and it was capable of touring at ninety with thirty miles an hour in reserve.

The literary 007 mainly drives Bentleys in Fleming's novels. After the destruction of his Bentley 4½ Litre 'Blower' in Moonraker, Bond will buy a grey Bentley Mark VI at the end of the novel. In Goldfinger, Bond drives a company car, a grey Aston Martin DB3. It is precised that Bond bought a new Bentley in Thunderball, a R-Type Continental Mark II that he had made rebuilt (grey, with Mark IV' engine, convertible). He calls his Mark II the "locomotive" and "loves it more than all the women who have passed through his life". Bond, however, refuses to be the slave of a car, because as splendid a car is, it's never more than a means of transport.

007 arrives at MI6/Universal Exports HQ in his "vintage Bentley", passes Moneypenny and enters M's office. His boss explains that the radio operators realized that the last radio transmission from Jane/Strangways seemed different from usual, beside these two have disappeared. Bond must go to Jamaica to investigate this but before leaving, M gives his agent "a latest type revolver" which he must use instead of his Beretta (the model of the said revolver is not specified, we are just told it's the same that the three blind beggars have). M also says that Status 00 is being criticized by other government departments, which will likely lead MI6 to denying its involvement more strongly in the future.

(However, these elements: the denial of the MI6 and the fact that most of the adversaries that 007 will encounter possess the same state-of-the-art revolver, will never be exploited in the rest of the treatment)...

Bond returns home and discovers Sylvia in his bed: she has lost the money at gambling and is prepared to repay him in kind. Bond says it's a big debt but he's going to do his best with the little time he has...

Arriving at Kingston airport, Bond telephone Pleydell Smith, who is the Colonial Under Secretary, and arrange a meeting at Queen's Club with him (unlike the film Bond is not followed and there is no photographer or treacherous driver).

Before joining Pleydell Smith, Bond takes a look at the bungalow where the secretary was killed. There he meet Duff who explains to him in particular that it is unlikely Strangways and Jane eloped, and all that seemed to interest Strangways in life was playing bridge and collecting seashells (Bond puts one seashell in his pocket).

Later that day, Bond is playing cards with Duff, Pleydell Smith and Hugh Buckfield (who is surprised to never had heard of Universal Exports, whereas he works in the shipping business). Buckfield says he hopes to do business with Bond and Universal Exports in the future; 007 tells him that he is interested in conchology (the study of shellfish). Buckfield recommends a certain Gomez, a Cuban refugee who is a big seller of shellfish.

The shell that we are talking about here is an "elegant Venus" (Hysteroconcha dione). This is a nod to the novel whose title of chapter 8 is "The Elegant Venus", in reference to this type of shell that Honeychile collects on the beach of Crab Key and whose naked appearance in front of Bond is compared by Fleming/Bond to the painting The Birth of Venus by Sandro Botticelli.

Bond goes to the bazaar, to Gomez's shop at night (it's still open). Here he sees a half-Chinese girl named Honey who is trying to sell seashells to Gomez's assistant. Bond meets Gomez and shows him the shell recovered from Strangways's bungalow: Gomez says he has never seen one like this in Jamaica and therefore cannot help him. Bond notices that one of the seashells Honey is trying to sell is similar to the Strangways' one.

Honey leaves the store and Bond decides to catch up with her. He approaches her, and if at first his sophisticated charms don't seem to get him anywhere, Honey slowly seems to soften. They get into a carriage and she pretends not to know the kind of shell Bond is talking her about. Honey disappears from 007's sight when he is busy paying the carriage driver; 007 tries to catch her but loses her. Bond asks a fishing boat crew if they have seen the girl: no. Otherwise Bond asks the owner of the boat, who turns out to be a man named Quarrel, if he can take him tomorrow to the places where shellfish can be found: yes. The writers have visibly decided that Bond and Quarrel don't know each other here, unlike in the novel.

During the night Bond discovers that he is not alone in his bed: a large centipede climbs on top of him. 007 kills it with his shoe. Earlier in the day, Bond had seen this type of centipede, not naturally present in Jamaica, in Gomez's shop...

On the London side, M and a member of American intelligence are talking. The American says their agent "Christopher" was murdered, probably by sailors from the SS Orinoco who was heading towards Crab Key, an island which belongs to a certain Dr. No. M told the American that Strangways and his secretary were probably killed too.

From Quarrel's boat, Bond sees six naked women harvesting seashell on the coast (not at Crab Key, coast from elsewhere), he identifies Honey a little further away and goes to see her. Honey admits that the elegant venus type of shells are located not far away and that she didn't told him previously because she wanted to keep this harvest spot for herself. Suddenly a certain Pus-Feller described as "the boss of the shell-fishers" arrives with his men and attacks Bond who tries to fight back, but 007 is quickly forced to flee towards the forest.

Pursued, Bond arrives at a ruined fort in the forest and is attacked by Pus-Feller's men. (Unfortunately I was unable to identify which filming location the scriptwriters possibly had in mind for this fort). A man, who turns out to be Felix Leiter, comes to Bond's rescue and helps him get rid of his attackers. (And it's interesting to note that Leiter is not a character who is present in the novel Dr. No, although he appears in other novels that preceded or followed).

The screenwriters therefore decided to add Leiter in the film and this treatment tells us that (as in the literary work) Leiter and Bond have already worked together in the past. The American agent explains that he is in this fort on a mission to establish who killed "Christopher" (from the fort he observes the SS Orinoco). 007 explains that his mission is to investigate the disappearance of Strangways and since their two missions seem to be linked, they decide to team up. Leiter have a file with an old photo of Dr. No as well as notes on his past connections with the Tongs.

Bond and Leiter decide to begin their joint investigation on Gomez's side and go to his shop: Gomez is not there. 007 phones Pleydell Smith telling him he wants to talk about Gomez; Pleydell Smith invites him to go to Buckfield's house this evening where a party is being organized: Buckfield will perhaps be able to help him?

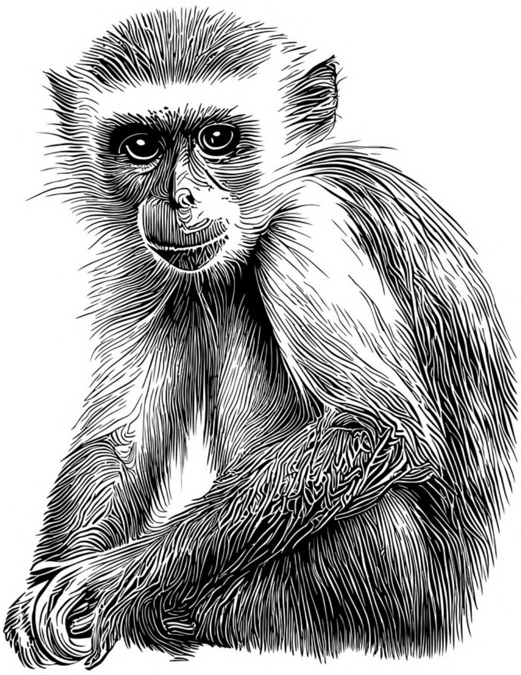
When Bond returns to his hotel he discovers Honey waiting for him. She has decided to accept Bond's offer (that he buy her some shellfish) and is ready to take him to her fishing/harvest spot which turns out to be in Crab Key, where there is also said to be a dragon. But for the moment 007 doesn't want to miss his meeting with Buckfield and says to Honey: "do you know how to bathe, or do I have to help you?".

007 goes to the party taking place at Hugh Buckfield's beachside residence, accompanied by a well-dressed (and we imagine very clean) Honey. He leaves her to go speak privately with Pleydell Smith and Buckfield.

Smith pretend to Buckfield that Gomez wants to join Universal Exports and that Bond does a little routine investigation on him. Buckfield says Gomez appears to him to be a Cuban agent and that he is making propaganda materials like pamphlets. Li-Ying, Buckfield's Capuchin monkey, at one point jumps onto the table and grabs a Gomez's pamphlet and pretends to read it, which amuse everyone.

Bond and Honey leave Buckfield place by car but are followed by a hearse with the three blind beggars in it. A chase begins at the end of which the hearse went off the road. On the body of one of the men still alive, Bond notices Strangways' watch; he asks what happened to Strangways but the man only has time to say two words before dying: "dragon dogs" in Chinese.

Later Quarrel takes Bond, Honey and Leiter by boat to Crab Key. 007 and Honey get off and look for/collect elegant venus shells at Honey's spot. At one point Honey goes to a place not far from the beach where she exchanges her haversack for another containing scrolls written in Chinese. Bond asks her why and she tells him that the reason she has permission to fish on Crab Key is because she is delivering/recovering these scrolls/messages to and from Pus-Feller. Bond wants to explore the island further but Honey is against the idea because of the dragon.



A motor-launch boat with a loudspeaker arrives and tells Quarrel to prepare to be boarded. Leiter tells Quarrel to step on the gas but the enemy boat opens fire, Quarrel dies and the fuel tank is hit. Felix manages to jump into the water before the boat explodes and hide from the crew of the enemy boat by remaining hidden behind a piece of wreckage.

Similar to the film, the boat's crew asks Bond and Honey (who are on the island's coastline) to come out of hiding. They dig in the sand to shelter themselves from bullets; the crew says they will send dogs.

In the enemy boat, a person with a Chinese jacket and clamps for hands (whose face is not seen by the spectators) examines Quarrel's body as it floats on the surface of the water (Leiter saw this and his face reflects the expression of surprise)...

We find Bond and Honey in a jungle-type setting (Leiter is not with them), he accuses her of having led him into a trap. She defends herself by saying that she didn't know what was going to happen; when she asked Pus-Feller for permission to bring Bond to Crab Key, he agreed. They see traces of the dragon made "by no vehicle Bond has ever seen before". 007 observes with binoculars workers working the guano and sees that the SS Orinoco is docked at Crab Key.

Guards with dogs approach them; they take refuge in a cave located behind a waterfall. The plan now is to wait until nightfall and try to steal a boat to escape the island. While waiting for this moment, the treatment asks us for "a very intensive examination of the erotic possibilities" that could take place behind the waterfall...

At nightfall they see a glimpse of the dragon which "at this point in the story [...] looks as real as we can possibly make it"; Bond can't explain what it really is to Honey.

Arriving later at the docks, they come across Leiter (who has stolen a guard's uniform) who tells them about the vision he saw of Dr. No, Bond's reaction is to "ask Leiter if he has been smoking the same pipe Dr. No and Honey smoke". They see Gomez and Pus-Feller enter a building where a small arsenal is stored. 007 now believes that Dr. No is supplying weapons to pro-Cubans (think of it as communist revolutionaries) in the Caribbean.

In the warehouse, Dr. No (we only see his shadow) attacks Gomez with one of his claw; Gomez then runs towards the jungle. While Leiter tries to steal a boat, Bond and Honey are spotted by guards and their dogs; they also scamper towards the jungle under the cover of the mist coming from the sea. They come across a cemetery with two statues of dragon dogs at the entrance (at first they scare them/us, thinking that they are real dogs jumping on them).

Bond looks for signs of recently dug graves and finds one. He digs and comes across Strangways' body (the scene is meant to be dramatic: suddenly there is a blue light, like a lightning, showing the body and Honey screams). The "dragon" shows up: he chases Gomez who ends up getting burned by it.

We now see that Bond and Honey are surrounded; dominating the scene near a large black Capuchin monkey statue is the silhouette of Dr. No (again his face hidden from the view of Bond and the spectators, "there is a flicker of light over the figure for a moment; then he turns and disappears into the mist"). It's hopeless: Bond decides to surrender and is taken prisoner with Honey and Gomez (who is still alive). We now clearly see that the dragon is a vehicle with a flamethrower and machine guns, disguised as the mythical creature.

In the cell at the back of the "dragon", Gomez, in his last breaths before dying, tells Bond that Dr. No betrayed him and that the SS Orinoco is loaded with explosives and must explode when it will passes through the locks of the Panama Canal, while flying the Cuban flag.

One of the locks of the Panama Canal in the 1960s.

The dragon arrives at a hangar where Bond and Honey get out. Pus-Feller begins to hit Honey; Bond tries to intervene but is overpowered by the guards. Pus-Feller orders them to bring Bond to Dr. No; he will take care of Honey himself.

While guano is loaded on board the SS Orinoco to hide/cover the crates with explosives and Bond is dragged into the doctor's base (apparently carved into the rock), Leiter discreetly heads towards the dragon' hangar.

007 arrives in a room where Doctor No (again barely visible) is waiting for him. The latter removes the claws he has instead of hands and Buckfield's monkey (Li-Ying) jumps on the table. "Dr. No" now removes his rubber mask to reveal Buckfield's face:

> - Buckfield: After the death of my old friend and master [Doctor No], whose grave you had the decency to visit this evening, it was necessary for me to preserve the myth of his invulnerability, though I may say, without being immodest, that I improved the efficiency of the Black Monkey, Tong.

Buckfield explains that you have to be (or at least seems to be) Chinese to be able to be at the head of an organization like that; hence why he disguises himself as the deceased Dr.

No. Bond asks him why he want to blow up the Panama Canal while his arms deal with Gomez seemed lucrative:

> - Buckfield: When the Panama Canal is blown up by a ship flying the Cuban flag, it will draw undoubtedly reprisals from the American government against Cuba [the Panama Canal was a US territory at that time]. The ensuing Russian counter-action should produce a highly-desirable state of chaos, in which a resolute and efficient [criminal] organization like the Black Monkey should become the dominant factor in the Caribbean. My family have for six generations fought to maintain the tradition of aristocracy in these islands, Mr. Bond. There will be a revival of these ideals under my rule.

Buckfield concludes by telling Bond that he has been an excellent agent and that he would have liked to have him in his service, but since that is impossible, he is going to kill him.

Buckfield pulls out a gun but his monkey tries to take it from his hands (like he did with Gomez's pamphlet earlier). Bond takes the opportunity to jump on the weapon, retrieve it and ask Buckfield to help him get out of his base. With Buckfield not intending to help, Bond now threatens him with one of Dr. No's claws.

While Leiter is saving Honey who is being beaten (a scene which include Leiter killing Pus-Feller), Hugh Buckfield leads Bond to a boat (the blood under his Dr. No mask seems to indicate that Bond used the claws). As guards begin to advance towards Bond and Buckfield, everyone is distracted (Bond included) by the sound of the dragon driven by Leiter: Buckfield attempts a maneuver to escape.

Leiter uses the flamethrower on guards who were threatening Bond and the 007 joins Leiter and Honey inside the dragon. Bond makes sure to block the controls of the flamethrower so that it no longer stops. Then Bond, Leiter and Honey jump off the moving dragon's which finishes its course in the SS Orinoco which is now starting to ignite by the flamethrower.

The three fellow steal a boat and move away from the island where a series of explosions, each more violent than the last, is taking place, including one which will be fatal to Buckfield.

In the silence following the last explosion, a noise is heard on the boat and Li-Ying jumps on Bond's shoulder. "The camera comes in close on the monkey's gibbering ironic laughter and we fade out and END".

Dr. No is a monkey?

The presence of the monkey Li-Ying in this treatment has caused a lot of ink to be spilled by taking up an (exaggerated) conception according to which Mankowitz & Maibaum had made Dr. No himself a monkey. As you can see, this is not the case: not only is the monkey not Dr. No, but he is not even a villain (Bond even owes him his life). He's just the pet of the villain.

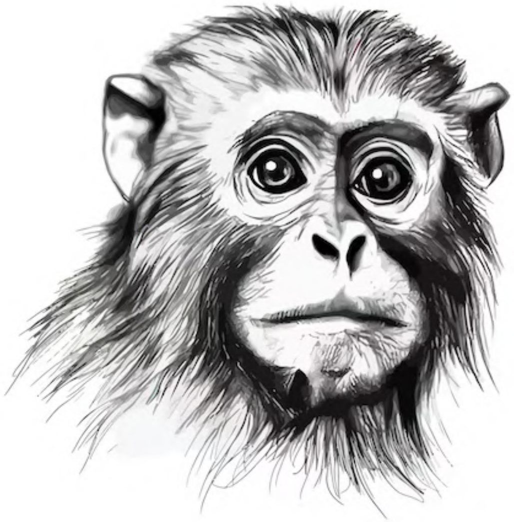
This misunderstanding comes from the fact that the producers didn't like the character of Buckfield and his pet. They were expecting to find the Dr. No of the novel in the treatment but the writers had decided otherwise, as Maibaum explains: "When Wolf and I began working on the script, we decided that Fleming's Dr No was the most ludicrous character in the world. He was just [Sax Rohmer's] Fu Manchu with two steel hooks. It was 1961, and we felt that audiences wouldn't stand for that kind of stuff any more. So, bright boys that we were, we decided that there would be no Dr No"[127].

Dissatisfied, Cubby asks them to stick more closely to Ian Fleming's novel, notably by removing the monkey from the story[128]. It became a sort of recurring quote-unquote "joke", as Maibaum recalls: "Cubby wasn't going to forget it. Even now, fifteen films later, if we got into an argument, [and] we argued all the time, he hit me with [a] Dr. No is a monkey!"[129].

The fact that years passed and memories faded is probably the reason why Broccoli[130] and Maibaum[131] (plus Harwood[132] and Terence Young[133]) started themselves to think (and publicly declare) that the monkey was Dr. No...

Unless there was a treatment that I don't have where Dr. No was really a monkey? But it should be noted that the book The Incredible World of 007 contains an interview with Cubby Broccoli in which he is asked if Doctor No was really a monkey at the time of writing. Cubby then asked his wife Dana to bring him the treatment/script, specifying that "this will only be the second time [in my life] that I've seen it". After reading it, the interviewer (only) notes that "[this document] indicates that the villain was named Buckfield"[134].

Harwood explain she never read the treatment, she got the "information" from Broccoli and Saltzman[135]. "Others just repeated what they had been told", she adds[136].



September 25, 1961' treatment: Merriman, sharks and China

On September 25, 1961, Richard Maibaum and Wolf Mankowitz complete a second treatment. This revised version have 53 pages and the few major changes it contains make it immediately closer to the film as you will see.

The treatment begins in a similar way to the one of September 7 and we notice that the writers list some Kingston monuments for the walking of the three blind beggars. In terms of additional details we also have a first name: "Trevor" Duff, "Pleydell-Smith" now takes a hyphen and "S.S. Orinoco" has additional punctuation. We also notice that secretary Jane now uses the callsign "WXN" and that a gunshot kills "Christopher" in Panama.

The three blind beggars arrive a few seconds later at the secretary's house, ask her where Strangways keeps his seashells (not here, according to her). They take the files on Dr. No and Crab Key, ask Jane to make the transmission to London and kidnap her! They take her to a fort where Dr. No is (face hidden from spectators as usual). He also asks her where the Strangways' seashells are; the secretary refuses to cooperate and with his hands/ mechanical hooks he tears her dress. The scene ends with Jane screaming as Dr. No raises one of his hooks...

A little further, after the scenes at Les Ambassadeurs, there is a dialogue between Bond and Moneypenny ("M's secretary", while the previous treatment wrote "the secretary on duty"). They talk about a "long-projected tryst, which never seems to come off".

The weapon that M gives to Bond is here a "Walther" so recent that "no one else has [it] yet" (...while Bond will later discover that the three blind beggars have some). There's again M's warning about criticism of 00 agents privilege. (Those last two elements still won't get any more developed than that)...

After his second meeting with Sylvia, Bond travels to Jamaica and telephones to Pleydell-Smith. There is a small additional scene where Leiter watches Bond go to Strangways' bungalow, which add some suspense (since the audience doesn't know yet who is that guy). On site Bond doesn't find the seashells in the bungalow itself but in a package that Strangways has just received.

From there Bond goes to the Jamaica Institute described as a "combination [of a] museum-library-zoo". Mr. Kellaway, the curator, identifies the seashells as "elegant venus" but he doesn't know where Strangways found them. In fact Kellaway even says that several years ago, one of his associates was found dead while searching for the source of these seashells. The police concluded to an accident, but Kellaway still have doubts about that. He provides Bond with a list of dealers who can help him.

On the list is the store Retail and Export of Francisco Gomez (where there is no Honey this time). Bond spots some "elegant Venus" in the store but when he goes to ask Gomez for information on them, he realizes that the shells have disappeared from the showcase.

There is then a scene where Bond is playing cards with Pleydell-Smith, Hugh Buckfield and Duff. Bond asks about Gomez, saying he is considering him for business with Universal Exports. Pleydell-Smith describes him as an anti-Castro Cuban refugee, Buckfield says he has reservations about the man but can't talk about it for the moment (he's still waiting to receive some information on the subject). Buckfield asks Bond where he's staying: at the Myrtlebank Hotel (note that in the novel it's in two words: "Myrtle Bank").

At the said hotel, Leiter is seen discreetly spying on Bond. During the night, 007 is confronted by the centipede he had previously seen at Gomez's shop.

The next day we find Bond piloting (himself) a boat, time to time observing beaches with his binoculars. On one of them he sees a bag full of seashells, approaches, and a cult scene from the film takes place: Bond sees Honey "practically" naked coming out of the water. The writers must have judged that it was necessary to dress her up a little more than in the novel to obtain from the terrible censorship of the BBFC (British Board of Film Censors) and its American equivalent a classification other than the one reserved for adults. The treatment describes Honey as "Eurasian": "half Caucasian, half Chinese". She sings a calypso song and Bond continues it.

Bond tries to talk to her about shells but she swims off to a cove where six other girls are diving for shells. "Enchanted", Bond heads to a hut where Pus-Feller and his men are packing the seashells. Bond asks to examine their wares: Pus-Feller accept as long as Bond don't takes interest in the girls. Bond asks Pus-Feller if he knows Strangways and shows him his elegant venus. Pus-Feller replies that he doesn't know any Strangways and that he will go see if he has any seashells similar to Bond's one.

Meanwhile Bond goes to chat with Honey; she tells him that she has been living and working here since her parents died and that if Pus-Feller sees one of his girls talking to a stranger, it might make him really angry. When Bond talks to her about elegant venus she seems to no longer want to discuss with him.

Pus-Feller and his men return to Bond and jump on him. He manages to free himself and draw his Walther; Pus-Feller then uses Honey as a human shield. As Pus-Feller's men don't remain inactive, Bond flees towards a jungle.

Pursued, he hides and notices that Pus-Feller is wearing Strangways' watch. As in the previous treatment, Bond reaches an old ruined fort (the same one where Doctor No was seen earlier); he notices dirt that has recently been turned over and discovers the bodies of Strangways and his secretary. Finally Leiter comes to save Bond who is attacked by Pus-Feller's men. In this treatment Bond and Leiter don't already know each other; introductions are made in a Jeep as they return to Kingston.

They go to Bond's hotel room (where a fruit basket has been delivered). 007 offers a fruit to Leiter who then examines it with a magnifying glass and advises Bond not to eat it because it seems that they have been poisoned. They get to know each other better (the dialogues that took place in the fort in the previous scenario).

Things are similar to the previous treatment: they go to Gomez's store, not there; Bond contacts Pleydell-Smith and is invited to the party at Buckfield's house. At his hotel Bond is wearing a white tuxedo jacket when Honey suddenly shows up at his door, her face is a little bruised because she was beaten by Pus-Feller.

She wants to bring him to Crab Key because she need the money Bond proposed to her, because she now want to escape Jamaica and Pus-Feller. She seems to know the way and knows a fisherman they can rent a boat from: a certain Merriman (strangely Quarrel has disappeared in this new version of the treatment). 007 calls room service but here there is no dialogue regarding taking a bath.

Bond and Honey go to the party: it's very similar to the previous treatment, except there's no monkey anymore and Buckfield tries to flirt with Honey (who rejects him in favor of Bond). On the way back, Bond and Honey are attacked by the three blind beggars on the road, they die instantly (no words "dragon dogs").

Merriman brings Bond, Honey and Leiter to Crab Key with his boat. We notice that there is no longer the scene with the scrolls written in Chinese. The enemy boat arrives, kills Merriman and things proceed as before for a time (we note, however, that the employees that Bond observes on the island exploit now bauxite instead of guano).

Bond and Honey end up finding Leiter but instead of seeing Gomez and Pus-Feller as in the previous treatment, it is Gomez and Hugh Buckfield that they see at the warehouse. 007 now believes that Dr. No is a Chinese agent supplying Gomez with weapons via Buckfield for the pro-Cubans in the Caribbean.

Dr. No's shadow attacks Gomez, things proceed similarly to before, but instead of coming across a graveyard, Honey and Bond come upon some sort of pagoda (where there is obviously no body of Strangways). The vehicle that serves as the basis for the "dragon" is described as a "Marsh Wagon". They are captured, the dying Gomez tells Dr. No's plan concerning the explosives loaded boat heading to the Panama canal. They are then brought to Pus-Feller who begins to beat Honey, Bond tries to intervene and is knocked out by the guards.

When Bond regains consciousness we have the impression that he is in a luxury suite; there are notably two Chinese masseuses at his service (with a double martini, wardrobe provided, etc.). Honey has a similar treatment and it's not unlike the movie. They are informed that Dr. No is inviting them to dinner and they go to join him.

In a beautiful room, Dr. No joins his guests. He is described as being in his fifties and with hair shaved to the skull. They chat a bit, Dr. No says he will be explicit and frank as much as Bond wants but for now, before dinner, he would like Bond to witness the creation of a vacancy on his staff. Dr. No pulls a rope which reveals a window behind which is a lower aquarium filled with sharks. Hugh Buckfield, tied to a rope, is plunged into the aquarium and devoured by sharks. Dr. No explains that Buckfield was a fiasco: he failed to prevent Bond and Gomez from discovering the true nature of the future journey of the S.S. Orinoco.

Dr. No suggests going to dinner and during it he explains that the destruction of the Panama Canal's lock and the subsequent reactions of the Americans and Russians will create a state of chaos in the Caribbean that communist China and he himself intends to exploit. "After Russia and the United States have exhausted each other, Red China will be the dominant force in the world". However, No would need a man to replace Buckfield and he is thinking about Bond for that. 007 isn't up for it, but No thinks it can be arranged by subjecting him to chemical treatment with drugs that would alter specific areas of his personality. This is the reason why Bond and Honey are still alive.

Dr. No asks 007 if he is willing to accept this chemical treatment, explaining the advantages he would have in doing so.

Bond has another idea in mind and expresses it by attacking Dr. No (note: there were no guards with them during dinner). Dr. No, however, intends to defend himself using his mechanical hands and there is the "most violent" hand-to-hand combat "that the director and stunt men can devise". The two men, who are bleeding, are at one point exhausted and Honey intervenes to save Bond from a blow that would have been fatal. Bond eventually manages to knock out No and remove his "remaining hook" arm.

007 brings Dr. No back to consciousness and asks for his help to get out of his lair. Since he is not cooperative, Bond breaks a window with a chair and threatens to throw him into the shark tank. Dr. No leads them to the dragon hangar; Bond uses him as a human shield to keep his men away, ties No to the dragon and climbs inside with Honey.

007 leads the dragon towards the docks area, burning Pus-Feller and his men with the flamethrower (note: it is night). 007 blocks the controls of the dragon's flamethrower and jumps off with Honey as the vehicle (and Dr. No tied to it) finishes its course in the S.S. Orinoco with flames and smoke.

Bond and Honey see Leiter, join him and sail away from Crab Key aboard a boat as the S.S. Orinoco is gradually exploding. Our heroes' boat heads towards Kingston as Bond puts his arms around Honey. The end.

To summarize this second version of the scenario: Buckfield's monkey has disappeared and Dr. No and Hugh Buckfield are now two different person. Bond and Leiter don't know each other from before. Cuba mention is still here (did its inclusion in theses first treatments could be explained by the failed Bay of Pigs Invasion which happened a little earlier in April 1961?). While Cuban agent Gomez, seashells and the Panama Canal remain in the treatment; the villain works for China and no longer for a criminal organization. Also the part where Bond and Honey are captured on Crab Key is more refined, more similar to the film. Strangely, it is at the level of Quarrel that we move away from the film, if the character existed in the novels: here he was renamed Merriman for unknown reasons.

October 3, 1961' revised script: scars and driver

After these two treatments, on October 3, 1961, Richard Maibaum & Wolf Mankowitz finished (?) a real script. I only have 100 pages of this script, I'm missing the rest (if it existed). Some pages in my copy are revisions dated October 18.

The opening is similar to the two treatments seen previously. In terms of notable changes we notice that John Strangways has an eye patch (a reference to the novel) and his secretary is no longer called Jane but Mary Trueblood (also as in the novel). We don't see her contact "Christopher" and when the three blind beggars come to kidnap her, they set the house on fire before leaving (another reference to the novel).

Mary is brought to Dr. No at the fortress (at night); he wants to know who "Christopher" is and since she doesn't want to answer, he uses his claws. The scene cuts and in Colón, Panama, we see "Christopher" (who is no longer named Alonzo but Landis) being shot and killed.

In the next scene we are introduced to Bond, described as "in his early thirties, slender, tall, athletic, with dark rather cruel good looks except for very clear blue-grey eyes".

If at this stage of the writing the producers have already had Sean Connery in mind for the role since several months[137], the description of Bond here nevertheless echoes the general one found in the novels, and more particularly a passage from Thunderball in which Domino observes 007:

> - Thunderball*, chapter 11: He was about six feet tall and somewhere in his middle thirties. He had dark, rather cruel good looks and very clear blue-grey eyes that were now observing her inspection sardonically. A scar down his right cheek showed pale against a tan so mild that he must have only recently come to the island.

(As we will see later, Maibaum had already used this same description for Bond when he was earlier writing the movie script of Thunderball).

If in this script of Dr. No the agent's revelation little by little is still not present, a cult line nevertheless appears:

> - Bond: Bond. James Bond.

Sylvia (who now received the name "Trenchard") still wants recover her money after her losses and Bond gives her half of his chips and his address, which is now "Fenmore Gardens, Flat Seven".

During the exchange between Bond and Moneypenny, we note that she has one of Strangways' seashells on her desk:

> - Moneypenny: Johnny Strangways only sent me that a few days ago. Isn't it lovely? What they call a Venus Elegans.
> - Bond: Elegant Venus. Perfect gift for you, Moneypenny.

The big difference in M's office is the now presence of the armourer: Major Boothroyd who gives Bond a "Walther PPK3". (There are still these lines leading to nowhere about how normally only Bond has this weapon and 00 prerogative being criticized).

Geoffrey Boothroyd and Ian Fleming.

In 1956, Ian Fleming and Geoffrey Boothroyd, a fan of the Bond' novels, began discussing which weapon 007 should use. His reader had written to him to tell him that he thought that the Beretta .25 that Bond had used so far in the novels was a "lady's gun, and not a really nice lady at that". Boothroyd recommends the Smith and Wesson .38 Special Centennial Airweight, a Berns-Martin Triple Draw holster (rather than a chamois holster in which the gun could get stuck), and an S&W .357 Magnum (which Bond would keep in his car).

When Fleming asks him what weapons could be carried by Russian enemy agents, Geoffrey Boothroyd responds by giving him a long list of weapons including the Walther PPK. Fleming not only took in account some of Geoffrey Boothroyd's advice, but introduced a character named Major Boothroyd into the novel described as "the greatest small-arms expert in the world".

So in the novel Dr. No, Bond was forced to abandon his old Beretta for the Walther PPK (with a Berns-Martin Triple Draw holster) and a S&W .38.

In the film the character will be named Boothroyd by M. After the film From Russia with Love, where he is referred to by M as "equipment officer" (still credited as Boothroyd in the credits), the character will become the mythical "Q" in Goldfinger.

For more information on how Bond got his PPK, read the article The Guns Of James Bond written by Ian Fleming himself in the March 19, 1962 issue of Sports Illustratred: https://archive.org/details/Sports-Illustrated-1962-03-19/mode/2up

When Bond returns home in his Bentley, he find Sylvia playing golf like in the film. Arriving in Jamaica, a driver appears in the story and we see that "Arthur" Pleydell-Smith now have a secretary (named Miss Taro) when Bond calls the latter to verify that it is really him who sent a "limousine" with a driver. (Taro's role, here anecdotal, will gain importance during the film writing process).

Things unfold similarly to the film (followed by Leiter, Bond confronts the fake driver who ends up committing suicide).

Bond then goes to Queen's Club where he finds Pleydell-Smith and Duff. Pleydell-Smith tells Bond that Strangways has recently started collecting seashell and 007 decides to follow this lead. Hugh Buckfield joins them and invites Bond to play bridge with them tonight.

Bond then goes to the Jamaica Institute where the curator is a certain Professor Cartwright (and no longer a Mr. Kellaway). Bond says his company is doing a study on what Jamaican products they could exploit and wonders if elegant Venus could be an interesting one. When 007 wants to see those from the institute, a member of the museum informs Cartwright that the collection of elegant Venus has disappeared: it has just been stolen. Cartwright says one of his assistants (Beardsley) interested in these kind of seashells was found dead some years ago. He provides Bond with a list of dealers who could help him.

There's the scene at Gomez's boutique, those at Queen's Club and at the hotel with the centipede (we note that the script specifies that Bond's body is covered with various scars, "mementoes of past adventures").

After this, there is a small scene in London where the Chief of Staff informs M of the progress that 007 transmitted to him (in the novels the Chief of Staff is Bill Tanner, but this first and last name isn't mentioned here).

Bond encounters Honey "Ryder" (who is still half Chinese, and have in her last name a Y rather than a I) who is singing on the beach a calypso similar to Marianne (with the lyrics found in the novel, where the calypso is named Marion).

> - Honey: Go away.
> - Bond: You shouldn't look like that if you want to keep people away.

In this script she stops Bond from approaching with a knife. He tells Honey he wants to buy her shells and she tells him that Pus-Feller, her "boss", sells them. Bond takes out an elegant Venus to show her and she goes to Pus-Feller cove. 007 joins her, talks a little about seashell with Pus-Feller and tells him he is interested in elegant Venus. We note that, as Fleming did for characters of color in his novels, the writers also include deliberate spelling errors intended to indicate an accent:

> - Pus-Feller: You write hit foh me.

Pus-Feller tries to attack Bond with a machete as soon as his back is turned but an instinctive cry from Honey warns him. 007 disarms Pus-Feller but his men come to help him, and after a few martial arts chop and gunshots, Bond flees into the jungle. They shoot at each other as they move through the vegetation and Bond eventually loses them and arrives at the fort. Bond sees someone, Leiter:

> - Leiter: Good morning, Mr. Bond...

Bond jumps on him:

> - Leiter: What was that for? [The punch].
> - Bond: You tell me. You've been breathing down my neck since I got here [in Jamaica].

Leiter explains that he is from the CIA and that he wanted to warn him earlier at the airport about the driver. They talk about "Christopher" and Strangways; observe the S.S. Orinoco with binoculars and Pus-Feller' girls whom Bond describes as "my playmates". They see Honey hijack Bond's boat (she's actually fleeing from her life in Pus-Feller's Cove after he beats her up when Bond managed to flees). 007 returns to Kingston in a jeep with Leiter.

When they go to Gomez's store, the script specifies that the three blind beggars pass by them on the street. Gomez is not here. Back at his hotel, Bond receives a call from Pleydell-Smith while he's in the middle of his "yogi" (yep, Bond is doing yoga).

As in the previous treatments, 007 is invited to Buckfield's house and Honey comes to his room. She wants to make money to get away from Pus-Feller, "He keeps us there. If a girl tries to leave, he beats her". She tells Bond the shells come from Crab Key. Pus-Feller is probably looking for Honey, so Bond decides to bring her to Buckfield's small party rather than leaving her alone in his hotel room.

- Buckfield: Amazing chap, isn't he, Arthur [Pleydell-Smith]? Steps off the plane and finds the most beautiful girl I've ever seen on the island.
- Bond: Thank you.
- Buckfield: You may find the competition's rather spirited.
- Bond: Not unless they [the competition] can speak Chinese. That's all she does [speak].
- Buckfield: I think I ought to warn you. I speak a little Chinese.

Buckfield tells Bond and Pleydell-Smith that Gomez is actually a Cuban agent and leaves the two men to talk amongst themselves. When Bond finishes his conversation with Pleydell-Smith, he sees that Buckfield is with Honey. Suddenly an "attractive young woman" shouts "James!":

- Alison: Darling! Whatever are you doing in Jamaica?
- Bond: Hello, Alison. I thought it was Cannes for you this year.

Bond apologizes, saying he has to leave, and joins Buckfield and Honey. 007 tells the latter that they have to go (Buckfield was trying to flirt with Honey, but the Bond/Buckfield face-to-face on this subject was toned down compared to the September 25' treatment). They leave by car:

- Bond: What was he telling you?
- Honey: He wanted to see me, later tonight, after you left me...
- Bond: The old rake. You didn't want to see him, did you?
- Honey: No.

After the attack of the three blind beggars on the road (where Bond discovers that one of them has a Walther identical to his own), Bond, Honey and Leiter go to Crab Key by boat, alone (there is no Merriman, nor Quarrel, this character had simply disappeared from plot!). However, we can note a probable reference to the literary work:

- Bond: No telling how far this breeze might carry the sound of our motor.
- Honey: We call it the Undertaker's Wind...

(The Undertaker's Wind is the title of the 17th chapter of Live and Let Die and is briefly mentioned in the novel Dr. No).

After rowing hard to avoid crashing the boat into a rock towards which they were heading dangerously, Bond and Honey go onto the island. Shortly after, a boat with Dr. No's men (but without No himself) arrives and opens fire; notably blowing up the boat of our three friends in which Leiter was (he however survives, although Bond and Honey believe him dead from/for now). Bond then tells Honey that he hasn't really been honest with her and that he's some "sort of policeman".

Later the famous "very intensive examination of the erotic possibilities" behind the waterfall turns out to have yielded nothing conclusive (Bond kisses Honey, carries her to the cave, camera shot of the waterfall and... That's all).

They end up finding Leiter, see Gomez and Pus-Feller again at the warehouse as in the treatment of September 7th (which had been replaced by Gomez and Buckfield in the one of the 25th). On the other hand, the person they speak with is not Dr. No but Buckfield. Gomez complains to him that he was fooled:

> - Gomez: The Orinoco will not sail under the Cuban flag on such a mission! I countermand it!
> - Buckfield: Dr. No's orders are not subject to Cuban compliance. They implement the policy of the Chinese People's Republic, not yours.

Gomez flees after being attacked (there are no claws from Dr. No since he is not there) before being burned by the dragon. Bond and Honey are captured.

My copy of the script unfortunately ends at the point where Bond is knocked out or overpowered by the guards while attacking Pus-Feller who was in the process of assaulting Honey.

Three days after the completion of this treatment, UA's European division head George Ornstein wrote to the UA' executive David Picker:

> - George Ornstein[138] : I must tell you that personally, I have not been impressed to date with Maibaum's work and only hope that he will come up with something much better this time as we have had many story conferences with him.

More people and more scripts

The writing continues (and I miss the scripts that followed). Thinking that the writers weren't quite going in the right direction, it was at one point decided to bring back Johanna Harwood: "the producers asked me to rewrite my first script, incorporating everything that could be saved from the Maibaum/Mankowitz version"[139]. The screenwriter confides that she never worked with Maibaum, Mankowitz or Fleming during the writing of the film, or met them to discuss it[140].

Terence Young was also hired as the film's director. Having himself started his career in the film industry as a screenwriter (it is worth noting that Young was also credited as co-writer alongside Richard Maibaum in 1958' No Time To Die), he contributed certain passages of the script.

The director Terence Young.

- Terence Young[141] : We had, at one time, I believe, five different scripts on Dr. No [...]. And finally Cubby Broccoli nearly killed Harry. I mean physically. [...] He said, "Look, we've paid all this fucking money for this James Bond book and we're not using a word of it. Now, Terence is a writer; he's the quickest writer I know. He's got 10 days to put it back; he can take all the scripts we have and collect them, and whatever he writes we're going to be stuck with, and Harry, if it's bad, it's your fault". He blamed Harry, because Harry was in charge of the script.

Harwood also says that Saltzman was the driving force behind the script: "I practically never saw Broccoli. I never, for instance, got any feedback to say Cubby Broccoli hadn't liked something; I often wondered if he actually read the stuff. It was always Saltzman who wanted to change things"[142].

- Terence Young[143] : That's how this girl, Johanna Harwood, who was my continuity girl on a previous picture, got in it with me. We took a room at the Dorchester Hotel, and we worked day and night. I used to give her things to write, like I'd say, "James Bond comes out of this, gets in the car, and drives off. Just put it in, wearing this...", and I'd go on writing another scene with dialogue. She did that and she did it very well. [...] We gave her screen credit and she became a fairly well-know writer for about one year until they found out she was not really a writer.

- Johanna Harwood[144] : This declaration by Terence Young is entirely imaginary! We never wrote anything together, in the Dorchester or elsewhere! He really had a nerve to invent a story like this and give it to the press!

"You [basically] want to discredit anything Terence Young says in an interview", adds Harwood who is not complimentary of the director's work on the script. According to her, Young merely paraphrased the novel while writing in a non-visual manner, and she had to rewrite it again afterward[145].

> - Terence Young[146] : I spent a considerable amount of time re-writing the [Bond's] scripts. But I didn't take the screen credit for it because I think it's a mistake for a director to have his name on the screenplay. If he does, he can never argue with actors, or persuade them that a scene is good, because they get the impression he's defending his own work.

Harwood had to do several back and forth trips between France and England but it was eased by the fact she had kept her old apartment in London[147].

> - Johanna Harwood[148] : The script conferences were almost always at Saltzman's, but there weren't many of them. One with Joseph Wiseman. Another one when I had the idea for the Goya and a memorable meeting that lasted so long that there was no public transport in London to get home! (Which gave me a great example of Young's caddishness!).

She was never heard any feedback from United Artists[149].

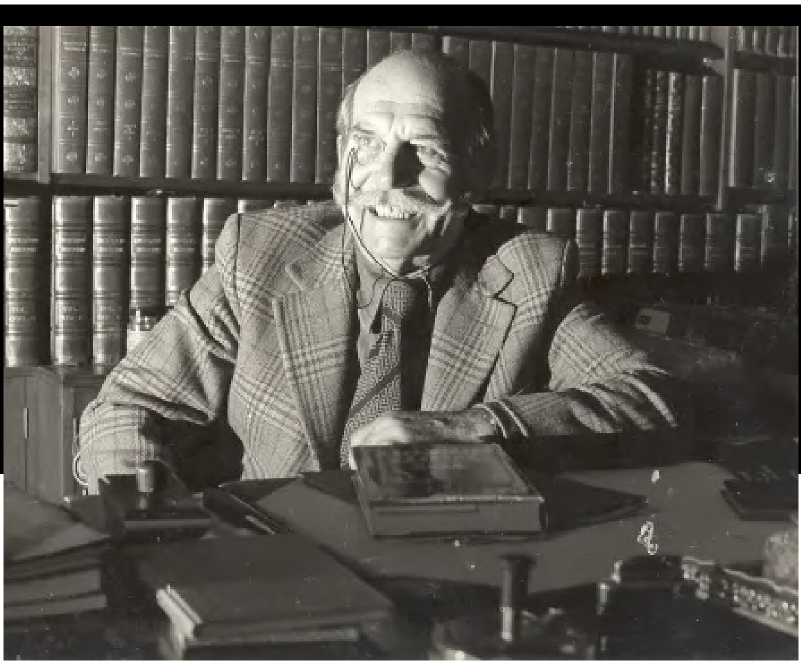
Cubby Broccoli also says that his wife Dana, who was a writer, participated to some degree in the writing: "Her input wasn't always visible, Dana is a very lowprofile lady, but the writers appreciated the help she gave them"[150].

> - Cubby Broccoli[151] : [Ian Fleming] never interfered in any way. There was no agreement giving him approval of the scripts, but we let him see them just the same, partly as a courtesy but mainly because we valued his expertise. He was not concerned about the stories, but occasionally he'd make marginal notes in his minuscule handwriting, mostly on matters of protocol. For instance, Bond should never call M by that title in the Club; he should always address him as "Admiral".

Maibaum said the same thing about Fleming[152].

Ian Fleming had some disappointments and problems getting involved in previous (failed) attempts to make James Bond films or TV show before EON, perhaps it was one of the reasons why he didn't seek to get more involved in this Dr. No movie.

At Fleming's suggestion, however, the novelist Berkely Mather was brought in to rewrite the dialogue[153] and in particular, according to Harwood, to "masculinise" the dialogues she had written[154], "though I had always used Fleming's" ones, she adds[155].



Berkely Mather[156] is the pen name of John Evan Weston Davies, born in England in 1909. His family immigrated to Australia in 1913. After studying medicine and military service in Australia, John Evan returned to England at the age of 20 years.

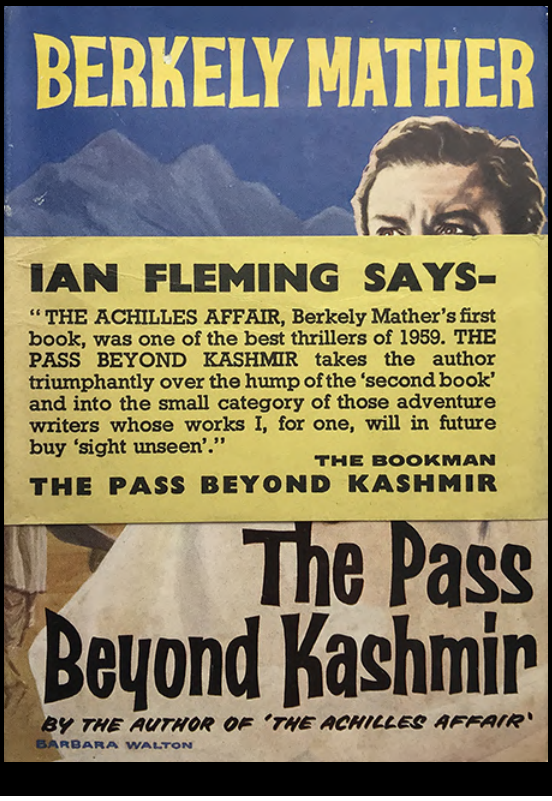
After a few difficult years during the Great Depression, he rejoined the ranks of the army in 1932 and was posted to India to serve with a battery of the Royal Field Artillery stationed in Lahore. There he pretends to be a senior officer with more ranking than he really has, and the lie (and the privileges linked to it) last for a few years before the truth is discovered.

He is transferred to a branch of the Indian Army and spent several happy years traveling around India. His literary career began around 1940 when he submitted a short story to a British Indian magazine. Since he was a serving soldier, it couldn't be published under his own name: he needed a pen name. Inspiration came to him when he saw two signs in the street: Berkeley Grill and a chemist named Mather (and yes: he made a spelling mistake).

After the war he submitted a radio play to the BBC which accepted it. He now writes for the BBC's new medium, the television, becoming a prolific and extremely fast screenwriter, able to complete a 30-minute television script in 8 to 12 hours.

In 1957, Mather created the character Detective Chief Inspector Charlesworth, who would feature in several detective series over the next four years and become one of the first popular television detectives.

He left the army in 1959 and established himself as a full-time writer. His first novel, The Achilles Affair, was published in 1959 and proved to be a commercial and critical success. Ian Fleming described it in the Sunday Times as "a thriller which I can recommend without reservation". But this is his second novel, The Pass Beyond Kashmir, in which he draws inspiration from his life and experiences in India, which has placed him internationally as a leading thriller writer.



"THE ACHILLES AFFAIR, Berkely Mather's first book, was one of the best thrillers of 1959. THE PASS BEYOND KASHMIR takes the author triumphantly over the hump of the 'second book' and into the small category of those adventure writers whose works I, for one, will in future buy 'sight unseen'."
THE BOOKMAN

This book also received praise from Ian Fleming and then Mather was asked to participate in the writing of Dr. No. On this occasion Mather borrows his son's copy of the novel to get to work and prefers a lump sum payment rather than the percentage of the film's profits that he had been offered.

Although film was his least favorite medium and he disliked adapting the work of others, he did contribute as we will see to the next two Bond films. Broccoli and Harry Saltzman purchased the film adaptation rights of The Pass Beyond Kashmir and an announcement was even made in November 1964 that they were going to produce it[157], but ultimately no film came of it.

Mather later decided to concentrate on writing novels and published a total of fifteen novels, ranging from thrillers to historical adventures.

Berkely Mather died at the age of 85 in 1996.

Mather had two meeting with the producers and Young on November 27th and 29th 1961. A latter stating the terms of his employment redacted by his agent between theses two meeting reveals it was understood revisions work from Mather will not exceed two weeks and that he will be paid 1 000 £ for it. A clause state that "Berkely Mather stipulates that he shall receive no screen credit for the work done under this agreement".

- Wynne Weston-Davies (Berkely Mather's son)[158] : He hated working on films [...], unlike television and radio, there was too much interference from producers, directors, actors and other interested parties. For that reason, once he had been paid, he almost always insisted that his name be removed from all credits (very ill-advisedly since that meant that he then missed out on any possible residuals).

- Johanna Harwood[159] : I knew nothing of Mather past, but he was obviously still posing, this time as a "pukka sahib", when I meet him with Saltzman.

Harwood says that Saltzman was unhappy with the work delivered by Mather, as the characters sounded "like Chicago [mafia] hit men"[160], and that she had to make changes afterward. Harwood later stated that she was not very happy with the film, which she found to be just average[161]. She said that her biggest contribution to the film is "anything that vaguely resembled the original book is something I fought hard and long for"[162].

Ken Adam's (the production designer) initial reaction to the script was no more enthusiastic: "My wife Letitzia read [the script and said]: You can't possibly do this. You would prostitute yourself. I remember being offered a profit participation deal by Cubby and Harry. But because of my reservations about the script, I turned down the offer"[163].

At one point, Saltzman also tried to approach for the writing Nigel Kneale, with whom he had worked at Woodfall, but he wasn't interested: "I'd read one of Ian Fleming's books and not liked it. So I said really I'd prefer not to"[164].

The spectre of the Fourth draft screenplay

A "Fourth draft screenplay" dated December 12, 1961 (132 pages) has on the cover page only the names of Richard Maibaum and Wolf Mankowitz. The document also contains traces of dialogue by Berkely Mather[165], although his name doesn't appear on the cover (Mather originally didn't want to be credited for his work on the film).

Things are now closer to the finished film and also, curiously, closer to the novel (whereas usually films adaptions tend to move away from the source materials as the writing progress).

The script begins with the "Three Blind Beggars" who are walking in Kingston. A passerby gives them money and the three men says "bless you, Master" to him.

They continue to move forward, and when they reach the foreground, the film's credits play overlay. Our three guys walk through various locations in Kingston, each time the sky gets darker as time passes and the credits end.

Strangways and Pleydell-Smith play bridge. Contrary to the documents studied before, there is no longer Duff and Buckfield with them but a certain Professor Dent (whom we are told is a "metallurgist by profession"), and Potter ("a recently-arrived business man from London").

The rest unfolds like the film: the death of Strangways while he walks to his Sunbeam Alpine (a reference to the novel), his secretary's (curiously renamed Mary Prescott) death, and the MI6' communications room.

An MI6 man goes to "Les Ambassadeurs" casino and asks for James Bond, telling an attendant to "tell him that his Aunt Eileen has taken a turn for the worse".

Bond is currently playing cards against Sylvia "Trenchard" and in this script the revelation of his face now happens little by little (like the film): a tribute to the appearance of Paul Muni in the movie Juarez of 1939[166].

Finally: "as the hand with the lighter comes up to his face, we see him now for the first time. Dark, rather cruel good looks and a faint scar down one cheek. His dinner jacket is good and he wears it well".

After dialog with Sylvia that differs from the film, Bond goes to the MI6 HQ. We learn through his dialog with Moneypenny that he is "supposed to be on recuperation leave" (following a bullet he took in the liver).

007 receives from M the mission to find Strangways, and gets a Walther PPK from the armorer:

> - Bond: The clients have never complained [with the Beretta]. They've usually been tickled to death with it.
> - M: Operative word "tickle". Miss a vital spot and they probably would laugh at you... [...] A dead agent, Double-?7 [sic!], is about as much use to us as football boots to my maternal grandmother.

"Bond comes out of M's office. He is trying to stuff the Walther into a shoulder holster that is not big enough for it. He gives it up, looks at the gun with distaste, then drops it in his side pocket". M's voice on the intercom tells 007 that the armorer will deliver to him a brand new holster.

After a second encounter with Sylvia at his flat, Bond lands in Jamaica. At the airport a girl tries to photograph him and 007 leaves with the chauffeur. Here we notice that the Quarrel character is in this script, since he is following Bond with Felix Leiter.

Bond decides to confront the chauffeur and the fight choreography is not quite like in the film with passages like "[Bond] jerks him back up against car. The Chauffeur tries to bring his knee up into Bond's crutch, at the same time jabbing for his eyes with fingers in V-sign. Bond chops him across adam's apple with edge of palm. The Chauffeur drops, gurgling". There is also a part where Bond seems to beat Jones which is on the ground, hidden from the audience by the hood of the car (to avoiding troubles with the censor, I guess).

The chauffeur end up to killing himself with the cigarette. Bond goes to the Government House. 007 discusses recent events with Pleydell-Smith and Duff: it is again said that Professor Dent is a "metallurgist" (instead of a mineralogist).

Bond and Duff goes to Strangways' house and in this script the Three Blind Beggars are near. They hesitate to kill Bond, especially with Duff around, and decide to not to.

In the house:

> - Duff: There's the blood patch [on the floor]. They've grouped it as... O RH positive... Which doesn't help much...
> - Bond: On the contrary... It does help. I happen to know that was the blood group of them both...

After changing cloth and drink a bit of gin at his hotel, Bond goes meet Strangways' card partners. This lead him to Quarrel.

Following Quarrel to Puss-Feller place, Bond is grabbed by behind by Puss-Feller.

> - Quarrel: Ain't no use struggling. Puss-Feller wrestles octopuses; that's how he get he name.

In the film Quarrel will says alligators instead. Hence the dialogue of the script was more faithful to the novel (in which we can read "dey calls him Pus-Feller seein' how him once fought wit' a big hoctopus"). Further, once Leiter properly introduced to the story, we learn another thing about Pus-Feller: he "could have been among the greats at light-heavy-weight, till he bought this place and gave up fighting for eating".

At Pus-Feller's restaurant, Bond, Leiter and Quarrel have a discussion and meet again the photograph girl. There is an interesting detail in this scene: Quarrel says that Strangways and him went to Crab Key the night before Strangways was killed.

007 goes to see Dent, and Dent goes to see No from whom he receive a tarantula.

Bond obviously survive the spider and goes see Pleydell-Smith; he receives his Geiger counter and meet miss Taro. Later there is the incident on the road with the Blind Beggars when Bond drives to her place, in a scene similar to the film. Things continues to unfold like the movie and Taro is put into detention.

Next scene is the Professor Dent death, which looks like this:

> Figure glances round, sees bedroom door ajar, creeps over, listens, pushes door gently open, peers round door, sees barely visible dark forms under sheet, kicks door open, raises gun and fires four times into forms. (Silenced "coughing" shoots (which done properly can sound horrible)).

- Bond (out of the darkness): Good evening... Professor.

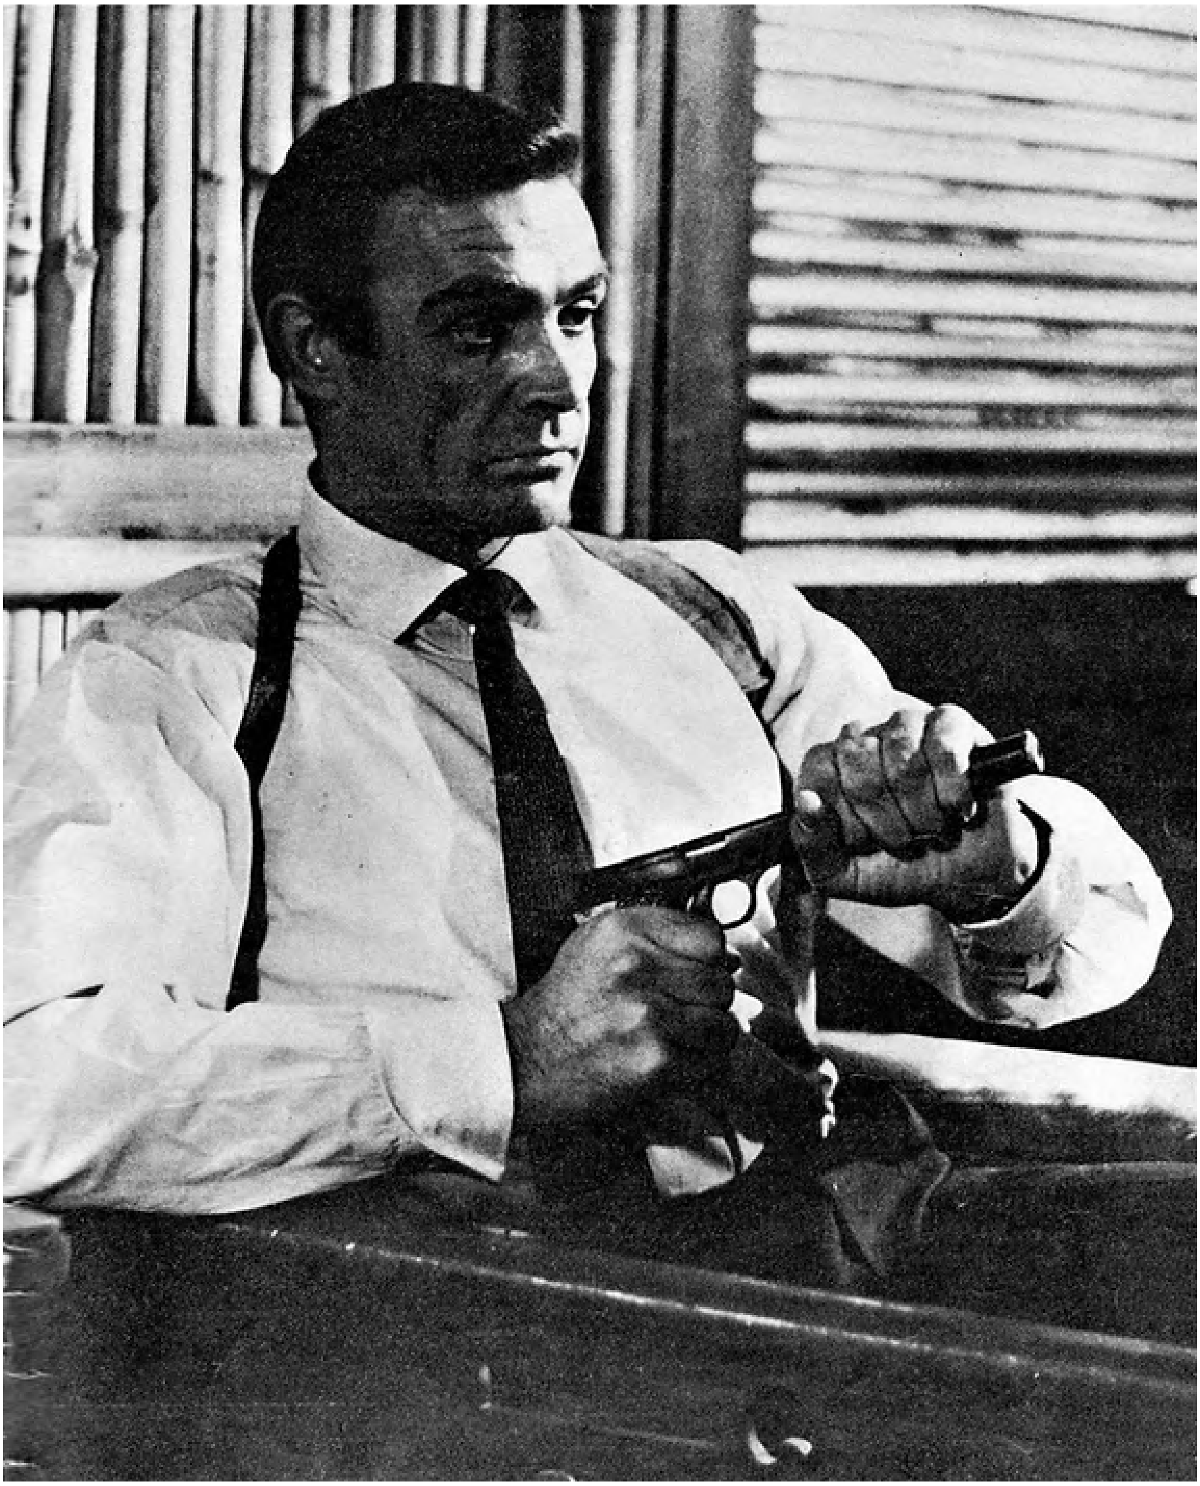
The room springs to life as lights comes on. Bond is seated in chair, one leg over the arm, left hand on table light switch... Walther in right. Dent swings on Bond, snarling. Two "plunks" are drowned in roar of Bond's unsilenced gun. The Professor does not stagger forward: he spins backwards as if somebody has kicked him in the chest, slamming up against a flimsy Chinese table and crushing it as he collapses. [...]

Bond rises and crosses to him. He doesn't need to examine him closely, he knows exactly where he's hit him: right between the two nipples. He blows fumes away from his gun and replaces it carefully in shoulder holster.



Bond and Quarrel go to Crab Key and there is a very similar to the movie encounter with "Honeychile Rider" (which is now correctly spelled with a I, compared to the first script where screenwriters wrote it a Y).

So an enemy boat show up and they menage to escape the dogs and their handlers as in the film. Our three companion settle in a cave and Bond and Honey have a discussion. She talk about herself and there is bit of dialogue that didn't make it into the film or into next script, like:

> - Bond: Who's been looking after you since [the death/disappearance of your father]?
> - Honey: Nobody. I can look after myself... I suppose that's not quite the truth. When I was very little, Mamie looked after me.
> - Bond: Who's Mamie?
> - Honey: My old black nurse. She's dead now.
> [...]
> - Bond: But, damn it all... Do you mean to say that the Authorities just let you wander round Jamaica on your own...?
> - Honey: Oh no... They were always trying to catch me... To put me in an orphanage or something. But I was too smart for then. When they got too troublesome I just used to take my canoe and go off to one of the outer islands.

And the more surprising is to come:

> - Honey: Anyhow... I've made quite a lot of money selling shells. Soon I'll have enough for my fare to New York.
> - Bond: What will you do there?
> - Honey: Look for a sugar daddy.
> - Bond (reacting violently): What??? Do... Do you know what a sugar daddy is?
> - Honey: I ought to... Only here they call them plantation owners... And they're not nearly so generous as in New York. Look...
> Bond is completely out of his depth.
> - Bond (quietly... earnestly): Listen, Honey... There's a lot in life that you won't get between "A" and "T" in the encyclopedia. You know a lot... Yes, yes... I'm not going to argue with you tonight... But you've got to forget all this...
> - Honey (wide-eyed innocence... Tears not far away): But why? If a sugar daddy liked me, he might give me enough to go to college and learn to be a real marine biologist... Like my father...

This is a reference to this scene of the novel:

> - Chapter 11: "I thought I'd be a call girl". She said it as she might have said "nurse" or "secretary".
> "Oh, what do you mean by that?". Perhaps she had picked up the expression without understanding it.
> "One of those girls who has a beautiful flat and lovely clothes. You know what I mean", she said impatiently. "People ring them up and come and make love to them and pay them for it. They get a hundred dollars for each time in New York. That's where I thought I'd start".

Then there is the "dragon", the death of Quarrel, the decontamination, and they are greeted by "sister" Rose and "sister" Lily. They bring Bond and Honey to their rooms where a soporifics awaits them in their coffee.

We have now the scene where Dr. No and his "mechanical hand" come to see Bond and Honey asleep. We note in this script that the Doctor apply a stethoscope on Bond's heart and examine his pupils with a light.

They wake up later and the stage directions tell us that, as a woman, Honey is more interested in the clothes than in having been drugged...

It's time for them to meet with No in the large room with the aquarium and the "One million dollars, Mr. Bond" line. Dr. No offers drink and Bond asks for a "medium dry Vodka Martini, with a twist of lemon peel, powdered ice, shaken, not stirred", while Honey asks a Coca-Cola (a reference to the novel).

There is dialog rather different for the film and Bond is trying to steal the lighter he used to light his cigarette. Dr. No make him understand he saw that.

> - Bond: Forgive me... Congenital kleptomania. My aged aunt Agatha did six months for shop-lifting.
> - Dr. No (whispering): You are a very... Very... Funny man, M. Bond.

There is now the dinner scene, the dialogs are also different here. For example the Tongs are never mentioned in this script:

> - Dr. No: [The Americans] can't do nothing to counter it. They are fools, Mr. Bond... And I am the greatest living authority on electronic jamming. If they weren't fools, they'd me working for them. I worked for the Germany during the war. After the war, I offered my services to the Americans... Offered, mark you. They refused. They said I was behind the times... I... I who lost theses in my experiments in radiation (showing his hooked hands)... Scarified them willingly... Knowingly... To become the greatest expert in the world.

A little further, a more important change was made with respect to the novel:

> - Bond: With your sort of disregard for human life, you can only be working for East.
> - Dr. No (contemptuously): East? West? Points of the compass, Mr. Bond. Each as brutishly stupid as the other. I work for S.P.E.C.T.R.E...
> - Bond: Spectre? Never heard of them... And I thought I knew all the nuts.
> - Dr. No: Special Executive for Counter-Intelligence, Terrorism, Revenge and Extortion...
> - Bond: They sound a pleasant bunch. (He looks around and shrugs). Albeit a little theatrical... If this is their headquarters.
> - Dr. No: Headquarters? Don't talk like a fool, Bond. Or are you trying to make me lose my temper? No, this is not their headquarters. Crab Key is but a microcosm of the organisation... Syndicate... Call it what you will. Do you think that the diversion of a few miserable rockets is the be-all and end-all of our efforts...?
> - Bond (looking at him levelly): I'm calling your bluff. What is?
> - Dr. No (after the slightest pause, looking at him equally levelly): Ultimate Control... Complete... All-Powerful... Of the world... And beyond.

> Bond looks at him for a further few moments in silence. Then throws his head back with a shout of laughter.
> - Bond: I see. Doctor, I said "nuts" just now. I apologize for the coarseness of my speech. The psychiatric term, I believe, is paranoia... Illusions of grandeur...

The production has indeed decided to avoid politicizing the plot by affiliating the villain with a foreign power. "First, it's old-fashioned; second, it's calculated to [not] induce pointless controversy", explains Broccoli[167]. Harwood also mentions economic reasons: "it was really the East European market they hoped not to lose"[168]. Maibaum has the same memories: "United Artists did not want the Russians to be out-and-out villains. That was really done for reasons of motion-picture distribution, thinking that maybe someday Bond might go [be distributed] to Russia"[169].

Thus in this script (and maybe the earlier I don't have), Dr. No works for "SPECTRE": a criminal organization which will only appear in Fleming's literary work in the following novel, Thunderball.

> - Dr. No: Laugh, you fool, if you wish. You haven't much more time...
> - Bond: I'm sorry... Rude of me. Actually I'm most interested. All right, Crab Key is just a... A...? A microcosm...
> - Dr. No: Don't underrate it though. [...]
> [...]
> - Bond: And thereafter you'll go on to blackmail other countries when they start their experiments, is that it?
> - Dr. No: Call it blackmail... Protection... You oversimplify either way. They experiment with our goodwill... Or not at all. East and West. We're above nationalism... We and the Swiss Banks...
> [...]
> - Dr. No: Money is a vulgar necessity... In the initial stages... Yes.
> - Bond: Fifty million dollars or your rocket finishes upside down on top of the Alps or somewhere. Still blackmail, Doctor... Or protection. You're not even original. Al Capone anticipated you... Hitler followed him... Same motivation... Same twisted mentality...
> - Dr. No: You've gone to far, Bond. Who are you to stand in judgment over us? A cheap carrier of a hired gun... Your Double-0 number giving you the license to be judge, jury and executioner...
> - Bond: But not for hire to you or your kind...
> - Dr. No: Not to anybody... Ever again, Bond...

Bond has definitely gone to far because Dr. No has now had enough of him and starts to beat him with his hooks. Bond spits at him ("this is not orthodox Bondsmanship, but it is included as the only really defiant gesture he can make under the circumstances", specify the screenwriters).

The scene dissolves to a small prison cell where Bond ended up. 007 climbs into the ventilation, then travels through the pipes with water, and puts on a protective suit. Finally we have the reactor room and the death of Dr. No in the reactor's cooling elements.

007 now goes looking for Honey. In the script she is in her room. Bond goes there:

> Honey is standing in a pathetic last stance... A bottle of whisky upraised as a weapon. She looks unbelievingly at them [Bond and Sister Lily]... Then half collapses. Bond dashes forward and catches her. Being Bond, he also manages to catch the bottle before it hits the floor. Holding Honey upright with one arm, he pulls the cork with his teeth, takes a huge slug straight from the bottle, throws it aside, sweeps Honey up into his arms and makes for the door [...].

007 heads towards the exit and sees the two dragon's drivers preparing to flee in a boat. He puts Honey on the ground and confronts the two men before stealing their boat. The boat sails away and here Leiter is nowhere to be seen:

> - Bond: That reminds me. Leiter's bit late with his cavalry... (He smiles down at her, gently pulls her towards him). The hell with him, anyway...
> THE END.

> - Johanna Harwood[170] : Saltzman gave Mather's script back to me and told me to "cut anything you don't like". Which I happily did. [My new version] can't have been the fourth because that one still has Mather lines in it (the football boots!) which I had cut out.

Fifth draft screenplays

A 132 pages "fifth draft screenplay" dated on the cover "8.1.1962" has "J. M. Harwood" name now present alongside those of Maibaum and Mankowitz (still no Berkely Mather name however). Harwood is a woman who does a job considered at that time to be the one of a man, hence maybe the fact that there are only her initials (her first name will, however, appear later in the film's credits). "I think this title page must have been added later, [...] but certainly not by me, as Mankowitz, Maibaum and I never written anything we could have signed together", says Harwood[171].

Things are more close to the movie in it and the most interesting to note is the dialog between Bond and No. We find in it globally what will be in the film but worded with little differences. For example, Bond specifies that he wants a vodka dry martini, with "Polish Vodka, of course".

The dinner begins directly with Bond asking No to send Honey away. "She should amuse the guards", says the doctor as Bond rushes to defend her, without a bottle in hand (no comment on the Dom Perignon, then).

During the dinner, No insists that:

> - Dr. No: You will send a radio message to your American friend, telling him that this island is harmless and that you will return to Kingston in one of my boats on the next tide... That is, in six hour time...

No wants to gain time (the launch of the American rocket taking place within these six hours). He breaks part of the table with his claw when Bond refuses. Some little changes here too:

> - Dr. No: They can do nothing against my jamming devices, because I am a genius... And the Americans are fools. If they weren't, they would have had me working for them. I was a scientist in Germany [...] offered [my services], mark you... And they refused. They said my work on radio rays was of no interest to them. No interest! I lost my hands through my experiments, but I have become the greatest radiation power expert in the world.

When Bond later asks why S.P.E.C.T.R.E. wants to sabotage the launch of the American rocket:

> - Dr. No: To prove we can! Imagine it! East and West, both helpless in our hands. We will decide who wins a war... We will decide who reaches the moon. [...] We will demand power and money...

(No "same old dream" but rather "Dreams!"). No specifies that his staff will die in the explosion of the island but he will leave it on a plane.

Before leaving the room, No tells Bond that it is time for him to make the radio call to Leiter; Bond still refuses and tells him asylums are full of Napoleons and even:

> - Bond: You can't win the world with a painted dragon and a few electronic tricks.

Wounded in his ego, No beats Bond with his hook (the script requires blood) just before saying that he will keep him alive so that he will sees with his own eyes the failure of the American launch.

A second "Fifth draft screenplay" who bear the same "8.1.1962" date on the cover (but with revisions inside from "9.3.62" regarding the dinner with No) is 134 page longs. Some of the differences with the film stated bellow were already present in the 4th draft screen and in the other 5th draft screenplay.

In the first page, the films credits are still playing over the walking of the Three Blind Beggars.

Dent is still described as a "metallurgist" and when Strangways (who have still with a patch over his right eye) leave his card partners, there is additional dialogue compared to the film:

> - Potter: What is his wretched company, anyway?
> - Dent: He's the Caribbean Agent for Universal Exports... [To a waiter] The usual.
> - Potter: Universal Exports? Never heard of them.

A little later we observe that the casino in which James Bond is have been renamed "Le Cercle" in this script (rather than "Les Ambassadeurs").

Bond still play against Sylvia Trenchard, but she now introducing herself to Bond as "Trench":

> - Bond: I admire your courage, Miss...?
> - Sylvia: Trench... Sylvia Trench...
> He lights her cigarette.
> - Sylvia: And I admire your luck, Mr...?
> - Bond: (as he brings the lighter up to his own cigarette, and for the first time we see his face): Bond... James Bond.

So Bond face is not described anymore, and equally important: Sylvia have now dialog where she introduce herself (it was not the case in the "fourth draft screenplay"). With this introduction the audience now know the name of the girl, and the line "Bond... James Bond", which would become iconic, is now in this script an introduction manner that Bond has borrowed to Sylvia.

Bond goes to the MI6 building near Regent's Park where he arrives at Moneypenny's office (without tossing his hat), then after a conversation similar to the film, finds himself in the office of M (described as "man in his middle fifties, well-set up, with something of the Navy about him").

The dialogue is again very similar to the film, Major Boothroyd (described as "short, slim man with sandy hair") comes to present the Walther PPK to Bond. M confiscates the Beretta ("They catch each others' eyes. They really understand each other perfectly"), Moneypenny, Sylvia (dressed in a pajama top belonging to Bond) who golfs at Bond's place... "Camera pans down to take in his toes curling inside his silk evening socks and her bare ones on tiptoe. The golf club drops onto the carpet; then, as his tie foins it, we... FADE OUT".

In the scene that follows, Bond takes a BOAC flight to Jamaica (not a PanAm flight), is photographed, and meets a driver who tells him "I'm Mistuh [Mr.] Jones suh... Chauffeur from Government House". Bond tells him that he will verify the reservation with the House, even calling him "Mistuh Jones" in return. 007 gets Pleydell-Smith on the phone, there is an additional line of dialogue where Pleydell says to his secretary: "Thank you, Miss Taro. I'll call when I want you".

Bond and Jones leave the airport, followed by a car containing Felix Leiter (described as a "tall thin hatchet-faced man") and Quarrel (described as a "humorous-looking, intelligent Cayman Islander"). The driver points out to Bond that they are being followed, Bond asks him to lose them. Jones accelerates, "narrowly missing local bus labeled Brownskin Gal, scattering three laden donkeys and two fat, bandana-ed market women driving them".

As in the film they take a secondary path; Bond finds himself alone with the driver and he begins to question him, continuing to address him as "Mistuh Jones". The man commits suicide.

Later, after the scenes with Pleydell-Smith and Duff, when Bond returns to his hotel, he is served the ingredients of a Gin and Tonic (in the film it will be a vodka martini). Before leaving his room, he pours himself and drinks (while in the Bond film prefers not to drink, presumably for fear that there will be poison in his drink).

Later, Bond follows Quarrel to Pus-Feller's restaurant (described as "an immense negro in immaculate white shirt and slacks, multi-hued cummerbund and matching bow tie"). Here Felix Leiter is really introduced to the story:

> Behind him, and unknown to him, Leiter has appeared in door. He gently takes Bond's wrist and equally gently shoves a Walther into his kidneys.
> - Leiter (tender): Gently, bud, gently. Let's not get excited, eh?
> Bond stiffens. His position is now untenable and he's not a bloody fool. Leiter stretches round in front of him and takes his gun. He looks at two identical weapons with slightly raised eyebrows.

The exchange that follows is very similar to the film and it is interesting to note that the stage directions say: "[Quarrel] looking murderous, steps forward and expertly frisks Bond. (Expertly means to start at sock level and rub and tap lightly upwards. A favorite place for keeping a second gun or a knife is taped to the inside of the thigh. Quarrel evidently knows this)".

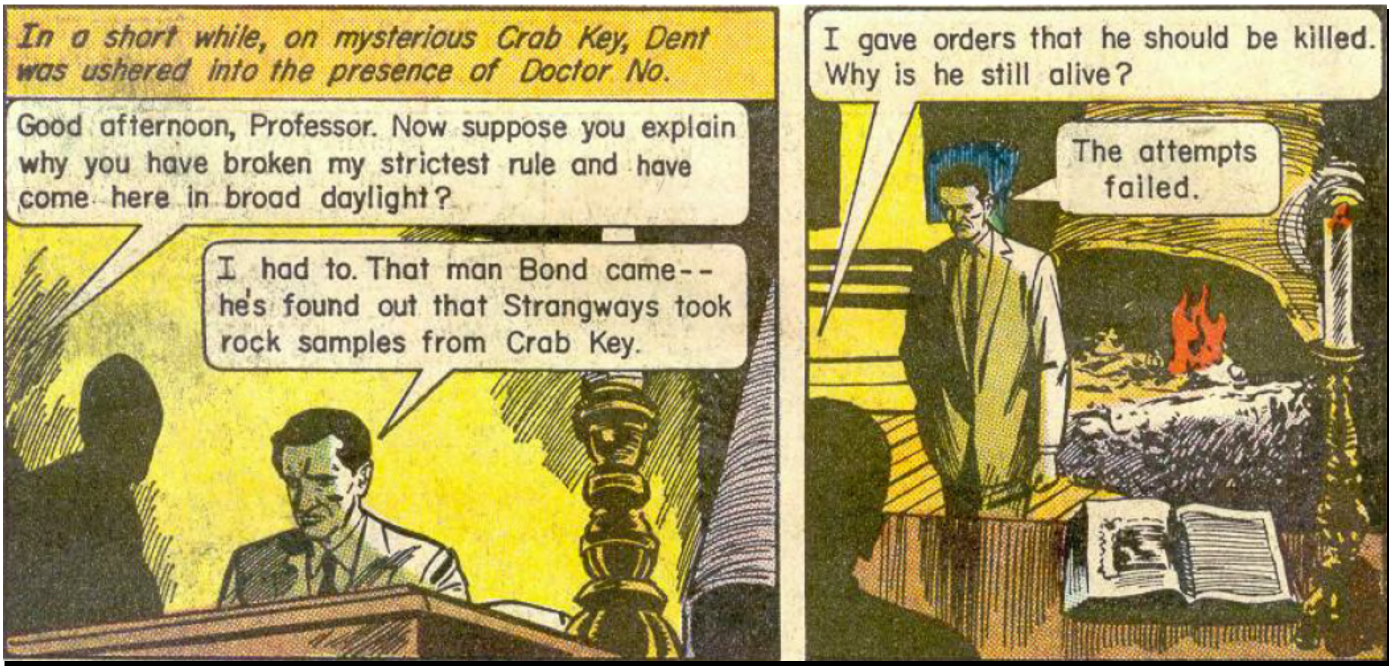
The next scene takes place in Pus-Feller's restaurant/nightclub. The script tells us that "in the background, four attractive girls, wearing just what they are forced to by law, are going through a particularly Jamaican type of Twist". (This will somehow be replaced by the Byron Lee and the Dragonaires's group of music in the film).

Bond later goes to a laboratory where he wishes to see Professor Dent; Dent then decides to go to Doctor No's island. Here is how the places are described:

> The reef and distant bauxite plant are just coming into view. The launch nears the land, approach a bustling quayside, where several small cargo boats are moored, in the process of being loaded with bauxite. On the quay stand several hand-operated cranes. Mounds of the red bauxite nearby. The air is full of dust.

> Behind the quay the sheer walls of the mountainside rise almost immediately. A couple of Chinese Negroes help professor Dent onto land. Armed guards stand at either end of quay and at the gates which lead to a wired-in compound built against the rock. In it are a couple of chairs, some spare equipment, a few small sheds, padlocked. The Chinese Negroes and professor enter the compound, cross to a small iron door set in the mountainside. A Chinese Negro presses a bell [...].

Ultimately, Dent enters the spider's room, but we are far from the minimalist one that Ken Adam will ultimately build: the place is described as "No's apartment". The walls are polished marble and the Doctor is in the room. All we see of No during this scene is his shadow and a corner of his office. No said to Dent "Good afternoon... Professor", making "Professor" sound like an insult according to the stage directions. No touch a button, the door behind Dent closes automatically and a strong beam of light falls on him.



In a short while, on mysterious Crab Key, Dent was ushered into the presence of Doctor No.
Good afternoon, Professor. Now suppose you explain why you have broken my strictest rule and have come here in broad daylight?
I had to. That man Bond came-- he's found out that Strangways took rock samples from Crab Key.
I gave orders that he should be killed. Why is he still alive?
The attempts failed.

The adaptation of the film into a comic strip by Classics Illustrated is based in part on the shooting script and uses certain scenes like here.

The dialogue that follows is very similar to the one of the film, then No hands a cage to Dent (the audience is not supposed to see that there is a tarantula in it, but "something black and furry").

> - Dr. No: Since your attempts at assassination have been so ineffectual... Let's try "natural causes" this time...

Between the moment when Bond crushes the tarantula with his shoe (no calls for humorous music in the script, in case you were wondering) and when he sees Pleydell-Smith again, the script called for a scene where Bond notices the cage of the tarantula on the ground (it looks like someone threw it into his room from outside). Also another scene between Moneypenny and M in the latter's office:

> - Moneypenny: Signal from Double 07, sir.

> - M: What the devil does he want this [the Geiger counter] for?
> - Moneypenny: No idea, sir.
> - M: Hm... All right. Get it out to him on tonight's plane.
> - Moneypenny: Yes, sir. It's en route already.

When Pleydell-Smith gives Bond the Geiger, 007 says: "Well... Well a birthday present by Aunt Eileen...".

The rest of the script unfolds like the film until Bond finds himself alone at Miss Taro's house. (Or almost: there's not in the script the humorous line "I think they were on their way to a funeral" after the three beggars' hearse goes off the road).

After Taro is taken away by the authorities, Bond is "humming A Lovely Way to Spend an Evening" while returning to the house. 007 settles in and Professor Dent arrives.

Dent shoot on the bed, but surprise: "The room springs to life as the light comes on. Bond is seated in chair [...] left hand on table light switch". (Unlike in the film, viewers were not supposed to know that Bond wasn't in the bed before Dent shot).

The two men talk and there is something surprising in the script here. This document not give one, but three versions of the professor's death (to be able to face censorship, probably)!

The first is the one that we will find (a little differently) in the film:

> - Bond: Who are you working for, Professor?
> - Dent: I may as well tell you... You won't live to use the information... I'm working for...
> [Dent] makes a sudden swift movement towards his gun, picks it up and levels it at Bond. As his finger tightens on the trigger.
> - Dent (triumphantly): ...Dr. No!
> His finger tightens on the trigger, but the hammer clicks down on an empty chamber..
> - Bond: Only six bullets in a Smith and Wesson, Professor... And I counted them...
> [Bond] raises his own gun deliberately, squeezes the trigger. Dent spins backwards as if somebody has kicked him, slamming up against a flimsy Chinese table and crushing it as he collapses. He rolls right over onto his back... Brings his leg as up under his chin and an agonized convulsion [...] then lies still. Bond raises and crosses to him. He doesn't need to examine him closely, knowing exactly where he's hit him. He blows the fumes away from his gun, and goes to the bed, where we see two interlaced "forms" made from the bolster and pillow. They are ripped by shots, [...] feathers are scattered. Bond picks up the phone and dials. His eyes are hard. DISSOLVE TO.

In the movie, Dent doesn't say "Dr. No!", Bond continues to shoot him after the first bullet and doesn't go to the phone. Having a hero behave like this, basically killing an unarmed opponent in cold blood, was something unusual for viewers of the time.

The "first alternative version" given by the script is the following lines:

> - Dent (triumphantly): ...Dr. No!
> But Bond's inattention has only been assumed. He fires also, but must that much faster, and just that much more accurately. Dent's bullet smacks into the wall > behind him, and Bond's bullet hits Dent in the center of the chest. Dent spins backwards as though somebody had kicked him, slamming up against a flimsy Chinese table and crushing it as he collapses. He rolls right over onto his back... Brings his legs up under his chin in an agonized convulsion... [...].

Dent made a sudden lunge for his gun. Both men fired at the same time.

Finally the "second alternative version" is presented as follows:

> - Dent: ...I may as well tell you... You won't live to use the information. I'm working for...
> [Dent] makes a sudden swift movement towards his gun, but Bond's inattention has been only assumed. Before Dent can reach the gun, Bond has fired. Dent spins backwards as though somebody has kicked him [...].

> - Johanna Harwood[172] : Indeed, it was done out of caution, because we were afraid the British censors wouldn't allow a cold-blooded murder from Bond. Personally: I was against it. I thought our hero was going to lose the esteem of the spectators.

Bond, Leiter and Quarrel then find themselves in a boat heading to Crab Key. Things are similar to the movie but there are some dialogues that are slightly different:

> - Leiter: Let me go with him...
> - Bond: We've argued all the way out. Strangways happened to be a friend of mine... Anyhow, it's my beat.

We now arrive at one of the most iconic scenes of the film and even of the entire saga: the first meeting between Bond and Honey. Here's how the script describes this moment:

The sun beats down on Bond as he sleeps. In the distance, as if in his dreams, he can hear a woman singing. Slowly, his eyes open and for a few minutes we see him trying to get thinks into focus. Then, as if conscious of the sounds around him, he straightens up. Then, slowly and carefully, he snakes forward and peers through the screening grasses. His expression registers sheer unbelief.

What he sees: Honey, standing at the water's edge, her back to him. She is naked except for a wisp of home-made bikini and a broad leather belt with an undersea knife in a sheath. (Undersea knife differs from a conventional hunting one [and the screenwriters explain in what]). Her ash-blonde hair hangs to her shoulders, a little wet and bedraggled. Her skin is deep honey colored. A diving mask is pushed up onto her forehead. At her feet lies a heap of small pink shells. [...] The girl puts down a shell, picks up another and starts to examine it carefully... Singing softly. She stretches contentedly like a cat in the warm sun. [...].

- Honey (terrified whisper): Who's that?

The rest of the dialogue is the same as in the film (except that the price of shellfish takes a hit, they are worth $5 in Miami instead of the $60 in the film) and there is an additional passage:

> - Honey (with some scorn): Anyhow, you'd never find the bed [where to catch the shellfish]. Your chest is big enough... But not the right shape.
> - Bond (lips twitching, eyes running over Honey's chest): No... You've got the edge on me there...
> - Honey (impatiently): I meant for diving...

We also note that her name is now spelled "Ryder" with a Y in this "5th draft" (rather than the "Rider" of the novel or of the "4th draft"). Her full first name, Honeychile, is also absent in this new draft (while it was present in the "4th draft" and the novel).

The boat with the machine gunner arrives ("Bond rolls over, shielding Honey's body with his"), then in the next scene they go deeper into the jungle.

> - Bond: Damn mosquitoes.
> - Honey: Rub water all over yourself... They don't like that.
> [...]
> Their eyes meet. He recognizes her innocence... A new facet for Bond.
> - Honey: There. What did I tell you? I know lots of things that you don't.
> This moment, which could easily be the most delightful in their whole encounter, is broken by the distant baying of hounds.

Later, Bond and Honey wash and then talk in a cave (not in the open air as in the film). When she mentions the black widow spider, Bond has an additional line of dialogue where he exclaims, "God Almighty!".

There is now the "dragon" fight, Quarrel death and 007 thinks the same fate awaits him:

> He knows it is the end. He turns towards Honey and takes her in his arms, holding her head against his chest so she cannot see what is happening. He waits. The moment seems endless.

But they are captured alive instead and there are similar scenes to the movie inside Dr. No's lair.

Time for 007's first meeting with No, and to describe the doctor; the script states "apart from his slanting eyes he might be an European business man". The vodka martini is introduced here (by Dr. No) for the first time; No serves Honey a Coca-Cola. Also this script introduces the fact that No's aquarium has glass which magnifies the fish.

> - Ken Adam[173] : The one problem I had, because we had no money, was we asked for stock shots of fish. But we wanted sharks or something, and instead they were sort of goldfish size. It was a disaster. I had designed this big space to rear project or front project these fish onto, and suddenly these small fish became enormous and completely unbelievable. That's why we had to introduce appropriate dialogue and the magnifying effect.

They head towards the dinner table. While there is no Goya's painting in the script, there would be one in the film:

> - Ken Adam[174] : There was an English scriptwriter, Johanna Harwood, and she said, "wouldn't it be funny if we had a famous stolen picture in his apartment?". And that's how the Goya Duke of Wellington ended up in Dr No's apartment.

> - Johanna Harwood[175] : Ken Adam's remark is hearsay. He wasn't at the meeting when I mentioned (specifically) the Goya.

(The Portrait of the Duke of Wellington painting has been recently stolen from London's National Gallery, which explain why Bond reacts to hits presence in the film. Terence Young also credits Harwood for the portrait inclusion in the film[176], and she confirmed it herself[177]).

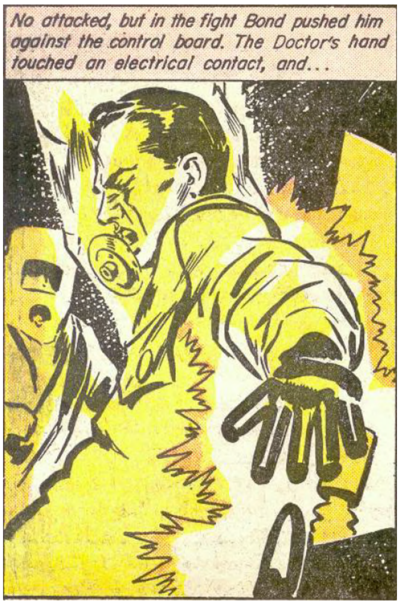
They have dinner together. The scene and the dialogues are now very faithful to the film (especially with the mention of the Tongs), although a "she can amuse the guards" will be changed to a "I'm sure the guards will amuse her" because of censorship.

After the pipe sequence, we reach the death of Doctor No (in this script he falls into the pool after his metal hands come into contact with an electrical circuit during the fight against Bond).

"We last see his metallic hands, clawing wildly, until they too disappear. Nearly vomiting, Bond turns shakily and begins to descend from [the] gantry".

Honey isn't tied up and on the verge of drowning (or being eaten by crabs) in the script, but still in her room with the bottle of whisky, as in the 4th draft.

Bond fights for a boat and they sail away (the script doesn't call for Crab Key exploding, just smoking). They now find themselves adrift in the ocean. There's no more fuel, but good old Leiter comes to the rescue:



No attacked, but in the fight Bond pushed him against the control board. The Doctor's hand touched an electrical contact, and...

> - Leiter: I've brought the Marines...
> - Bond (with a wry grin, as he helps Honey to her feet): You picked a helluva time to come to the rescue...
> THE END.

After writing, Wolf Mankowitz had doubts and thought the film would be bad, even shitty ("piece of crap", reports Cubby[178]). He doesn't want his name associated with it and asks Broccoli for it not to appear in the credits. Request granted. (When he finally sees the film later, he will however regret his decision and calls Broccoli to have his name back on the credits, but bad timing: it was too late to change them[179]).

Berkely Mather, who also originally didn't wanted to be credited, was however credited at the end.

According to the "Final Production Budget" submitted on December 12, 1961, and held by the Film Finances Archive: 49,365 £ were spent in the "story and script" category[180]. Payments to four writers were, on paper and in descending order: 7,000 £ for Wolf Mankowitz, 5,100 £ for Richard Maibaum, 1,000 £ for Berkely Mather and far less for Johanna Harwood, with only 300 £[181].

Filming began in Jamaica on January 16, 1962. The producers assembled a brilliant team, Connery is sparkling in the role, Terence Young made him James Bond, Maurice Binder blows us away from the beginning with his title sequence and the gunbarrel; Ken Adam built sublime sets, Monty Norman and John Barry invent one of the most famous instrumental cinematographic themes, and Peter Hunt gives us a new type of montage. Everything comes together to highlight the work of the screenwriters and ensure that the film (and this new saga currently being launched) are a success.

Sources/references from chapter 1: Dr. No

1 Ian Fleming, "How To Write A Thriller" unabridged article/essay.

2 For Ian Fleming biography, see for the sources:
"The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).
"Ian Fleming" by Andrew Lycett (1995).
"The James Bond Bedside Companion" by Raymond Benson (1984).
"Ian Fleming: The Complete Man" by Nicholas Shakespeare (2023).
Francis Lacassin's foreword in Fleming's omnibus edition by Robert Laffont, 1986.
Ian Fleming Publications website: https://www.ianfleming.com/ian-fleming/

3 "The James Bond Bedside Companion" by Raymond Benson (1984).

4 "You Only Live Once: Memories of Ian Fleming" by Ivar Bryce (1984 edition).

5 "You Only Live Once: Memories of Ian Fleming" by Ivar Bryce (1984 edition).

6 For Harry Saltzman biography, see for the sources:
"When Harry Met Cubby" by Robert Sellers, 2019.
"The Man who got the Bond Going" article in the Calgary Herald (1966).
"Harry Saltzman: Producer, showman, the man who gambled on James Bond and won" in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #4, spring 1996).
Harry Saltzman's Wikipedia page.

7 "Bond and Beyond: The Political Career of a Popular Hero" by Tony Bennett and Janet Woollacott (1987); via "Dr. No: The First James Bond Film" by James Chapman (2022).

8 For Albert Broccoli biography, see for the sources:
"When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

9 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
"When Harry Met Cubby" by Robert Sellers, 2019.

10 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
"When Harry Met Cubby" by Robert Sellers, 2019.

11 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

12 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

13 "Musts, Maybes, and Nevers: A Book About the Movies" by David V. Picker, 2013.

14 April 10, 1962 financing agreement between Danjaq and United Artists via "Dr. No: The First James Bond Film" by James Chapman (2022).

15 "The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).

16 "Musts, Maybes, and Nevers: A Book About the Movies" by David V. Picker, 2013.

17 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

18 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

19 "Meet the Irishwoman who wrote the first James Bond movie" by Shauna McGreevy on RTÉ (January 11, 2025): https://www.rte.ie/culture/2025/0111/1489697-meet-the-irishwoman-who-wrote-the-first-james-bond-movie/

20 "Meet the Irishwoman who wrote the first James Bond movie" by Shauna McGreevy on RTÉ (January 11, 2025): https://www.rte.ie/culture/2025/0111/1489697-meet-the-irishwoman-who-wrote-the-first-james-bond-movie/

21 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

22 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

23 007 Magazine, http://www.007magazine.co.uk/johanna_harwood_interview.htm , Harwood's interview by Frédéric Albert Lévy, 2022.

24 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in French with the author (2024).

25 007 Magazine, http://www.007magazine.co.uk/johanna_harwood_interview.htm , Harwood's interview by Frédéric Albert Lévy, 2022.

26 007 Magazine, http://www.007magazine.co.uk/johanna_harwood_interview.htm , Harwood's interview by Frédéric Albert Lévy, 2022.

27 "Meet the Irishwoman who wrote the first James Bond movie" by Shauna McGreevy on RTÉ (January 11, 2025): https://www.rte.ie/culture/2025/0111/1489697-meet-the-irishwoman-who-wrote-the-first-james-bond-movie/

28 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

29 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

30 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

31 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in French with the author (2024).

32 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in French with the author (2024).

33 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in English with the author (2024).

34 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

35 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

36 For Wolf Mankowitz biography, see for the sources:
"Obituary: Wolf Mankowitz" article in The Independant by John Calder (May 22, 1998).
"Wolf Mankowitz, Novelist And Screenwriter, Dies at 73" article in The New York Times by Sarah Lyall (May 28, 1998).
"Writer Wolf Mankowitz dies, aged 73" article in The Irish Times by Hugh Linehan (May 23, 1998).
Wolf Mankowitz's Wikipedia page.

37 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
38 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
39 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).
40 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).
41 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).
42 "Speaking of Writing" by Sylvia Kamion Maibaum and Richard Maibaum (2019).
43 "Richard Maibaum, Screenwriter For James Bond Films, Dies at 81", The New York Times (January 9, 1991).
44 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).
45 "Playwright Visits Iowa City: Richard Maibaum Stop Over on Way From New York to West Coast" article from an (unknown) newspaper.
46 University of Iowa Libraries website: https://aspace.lib.uiowa.edu/agents/people/975
47 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).
48 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).
49 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).
50 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).
51 University of Iowa Libraries website: https://aspace.lib.uiowa.edu/agents/people/975
"Speaking of Writing" by Sylvia Kamion Maibaum and Richard Maibaum (2019).
52 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).
53 Symposium by Richard Maibaum for the Writer's Guild of America, Beverly Hills, California, October 1987; via "Speaking of Writing" by Sylvia Kamion Maibaum and Richard Maibaum (2019).
"On the New Drama, the New Play" (Presentation at Northwest Drama Conference, Eugene, Oregon, 1962); via "Speaking of Writing" by Sylvia Kamion Maibaum and Richard Maibaum (2019).
54 University of Iowa Libraries website: https://aspace.lib.uiowa.edu/agents/people/975
"Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).
55 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).
56 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).
57 See My Lawyer page on Internet Broadway Database: https://www.ibdb.com/broadway-production/see-my-lawyer-13191
58 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).
59 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).
60 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).
61 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age by Pat McGilligan (1986).
62 "Broadway Writer Guides TV Serie" article in The Gazette (February 7, 1954).
63 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age by Pat McGilligan (1986).
64 Maibaum's resign letter to George Shupert (VP of MGM-TV).
"Maibaum Kinship With Writers Cues Exit As Exec Prod" article in The Hollywood Reporter (May 5, 1960).
65 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).
66 "Richard Maibaum, Screenwriter For James Bond Films, Dies at 81", in The New York Times (January 9, 1991).
67 "Writing Bond" by Mark A. Altman in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).
68 Criterion banned audio commentary of Dr. No: https://www.the007dossier.com/2011/04/21/banned-james-bond-commentaries
69 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).
70 Criterion banned audio commentary of Dr. No: https://www.the007dossier.com/2011/04/21/banned-james-bond-commentaries
71 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).
72 "Richard Maibaum: Veteran Screenwriter for a Brand-New Bond" interview by Lee Goldberg and Edward Gross in Starlog magazine (issue #120, July 1987).
73 Showtime magazine, April 1965 issue.
74 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).
75 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).
76 "Deus Ex Machina, 1965 Model", essay by Richard Maibaum (1965).
77 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).
78 "Deus Ex Machina, 1965 Model", essay by Richard Maibaum (1965).
79 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).
80 "Richard Maibaum: Veteran Screenwriter for a Brand-New Bond" interview by Lee Goldberg and Edward Gross in Starlog magazine (issue #120, July 1987).
81 Maibaum Interview for Canadian Television, Spring 1985, Pacific Palisades; via "Speaking of Writing" by Sylvia Kamion Maibaum and Richard Maibaum (2019).
82 Criterion banned audio commentary of Dr. No: https://www.the007dossier.com/2011/04/21/banned-james-bond-commentaries
83 "James Bond: 27 years and still licensed to kill" by Mark A. Altman (?) in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).

84 "Great Gatsby Employs Two Generations of Farrows" (also know as "Low Moral Tone and All That Jazz, or Gatsby Revisited"), article by Richard Maibaum (Los Angeles Times; July 15, 1973).

85 "James Bond: 27 years and still licensed to kill" by Mark A. Altman (?) in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).

86 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).

87 "Writing the Bond films" by Richard Maibaum in James Bond in Thunberball magazine published by Sackville.

88 Symposium by Richard Maibaum for the Writer's Guild of America, Beverly Hills, California, October 1987; via "Speaking of Writing" by Sylvia Kamion Maibaum and Richard Maibaum (2019).

89 "Writing the Bond films" by Richard Maibaum in James Bond in Thunberball magazine published by Sackville.

90 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

91 Symposium by Richard Maibaum for the Writer's Guild of America, Beverly Hills, California, October 1987; via "Speaking of Writing" by Sylvia Kamion Maibaum and Richard Maibaum (2019).

92 "Cheers, 007!" article by Richard Maibaum in The Hollywood Reporter (July 14,1987).

93 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).

94 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

95 "Writing the Bond films" by Richard Maibaum in James Bond in Thunberball magazine published by Sackville.

96 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).

97 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).
"Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).
"James Bond: 27 years and still licensed to kill" by Mark A. Altman (?) in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).

98 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).

99 "Licensed to Thrill" interview by Edward Gross in Starlog Yearbook magazine (issue #5, 1989).

100 "Licensed to Thrill" interview by Edward Gross in Starlog Yearbook magazine (issue #5, 1989).

101 "Creating a Thriller, Their Words Are Their Bond" by Aljean Harmetz in The New York Times (July 9, 1989).

102 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).

103 "Licensed to Thrill" interview by Edward Gross in Starlog Yearbook magazine (issue #5, 1989).

104 Symposium by Richard Maibaum for the Writer's Guild of America, Beverly Hills, California, October 1987; via "Speaking of Writing" by Sylvia Kamion Maibaum and Richard Maibaum (2019).

105 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).

106 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).

107 Symposium by Richard Maibaum for the Writer's Guild of America, Beverly Hills, California, October 1987; via "Speaking of Writing" by Sylvia Kamion Maibaum and Richard Maibaum (2019).

108 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).

109 "Nobody still does it better" by Mark A. Altman in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).

110 "Creating a Thriller, Their Words Are Their Bond" by Aljean Harmetz in The New York Times (July 9, 1989).

111 "James Bond: 27 years and still licensed to kill" by Mark A. Altman (?) in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).

112 "James Bond: 27 years and still licensed to kill" by Mark A. Altman (?) in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).

113 "Nobody still does it better" by Mark A. Altman in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).

114 "Darr Smith" in Daily News (March 30, 1949).

115 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

116 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).

117 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).

118 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).

119 "Licensed to Thrill" interview by Edward Gross in Starlog Yearbook magazine (issue #5, 1989).

120 "James Bond: 27 years and still licensed to kill" by Mark A. Altman (?) in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).

121 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).

122 "007's Secret weapon" unpublished essay/article by Richard Maibaum (1965).

123 "A View to a Kill: the official movie magazine" (1985).

124 "An Interview with James Bond Screenwriter Richard Maibaum" by Edward Gross on mania.com (2000): http://www.mania.com/interview-james-bond-screenwriter-richard-maibaum_article_19648.html

125 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in English with the author (2024).

126 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in English with the author (2024).

127 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

128 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

129 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

130 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

131 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

132 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

007 Magazine, http://www.007magazine.co.uk/johanna_harwood_interview.htm , Harwood's interview by Frédéric Albert Lévy, 2022.

133 "The Terence Young Interview" by Richard Schenkman in Bondage magazine (issue #10, 1981)

134 "The Incredible World of 007" by Lee Pfeiffer and Philip Lisa (1992).

135 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in English with the author (2024).

136 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in English with the author (2024).

137 Cubby's memo from 23th August 1961; via "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).

138 "Dr. No: The First James Bond Film" by James Chapman (2022).

139 007 Magazine, http://www.007magazine.co.uk/johanna_harwood_interview.htm , Harwood's interview by Frédéric Albert Lévy, 2022.

140 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.
007 Magazine, http://www.007magazine.co.uk/johanna_harwood_interview.htm , Harwood's interview by Frédéric Albert Lévy, 2022.

141 "The Terence Young Interview" by Richard Schenkman in Bondage magazine (issue #10, 1981).

142 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

143 "The Terence Young Interview" by Richard Schenkman in Bondage magazine (issue #10, 1981).

144 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in English with the author (2024).

145 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

146 Showtime magazine, August 1964 issue.

147 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in French with the author (2024).

148 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in French with the author (2024).

149 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in French with the author (2024).

150 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

151 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

152 Criterion banned audio commentary of Dr. No: https://www.the007dossier.com/2011/04/21/banned-james-bond-commentaries

153 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

154 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

155 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in English with the author (2024).

156 For Berkely Mather biography, see for the sources:
"Obituary: Berkely Mather" article in The Idependent by Jack Adrian Sunday (April 14, 1996).
"Berkely Mather Biography" on Ostara Publishing website: http://www.ostarapublishing.co.uk/article-124.html
"Berkley Mather/Early Bond Scripts" page on Christies's website: https://www.christies.com/en/lot/lot-1290246
Berkely Mather's Wikipedia page.

157 "Films that never happened: The Pass Beyond Kashmir" article on Cinema Retro website: https://cinemaretro.com/index.php?/archives/292-films-that-never-happened-the-pass-beyond-kashmir.html

158 Ewbank's auction page "James Bond Doctor No (1962). Original Letter of Contract between Berkely Mather and Eon Productions Ltd., for the Script Services of Berkely Mather, 1961".

159 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in English with the author (2024).

160 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

161 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

162 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

163 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Ken Adam and Dr. No.

164 "Into the Unknown: The Fantastic Life of Nigel Kneale" by Andy Murray (2006); via When Harry Met Cubby by Robert Sellers (2019).

165 "Berkley Mather/Early Bond Scripts" page on Christies's website: https://www.christies.com/en/lot/lot-1290246

166 "The Terence Young Interview" by Richard Schenkman in Bondage magazine (issue #10, 1981).

167 When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

168 "When Harry Met Cubby" by Robert Sellers (2019).

169 "James Bond at twenty-five" by Alexander Cockburn in American Film magazine (volume 12, number 9, July/August 1987).

170 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in English with the author (2024).

171 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in English with the author (2024).

172 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in French with the author (2024).

173 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

174 "James Bond: the early years" article by Lucinda Everett in The Telegraph (2012).

175 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in French with the author (2024).

176 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

177 "Dr. No: The First James Bond Film" by James Chapman (2022).

178 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

179 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

180 "Dr. No: The First James Bond Film" by James Chapman (2022).

181 "Dr. No: The First James Bond Film" by James Chapman (2022).

Meet
James
Bond, secret agent 007
His new incredible
women...
His new incredible
enemies...
His new incredible
adventures...
HARRY SALTZMAN AND ALBERT R. BROCCOLI PRESENT
IAN FLEMING'S
FROM RUSSIA WITH LOVE
STARRING
SEAN CONNERY AS JAMES BOND
PEDRO ARMENDARIZ LOTTE LENYA
ROBERT SHAW BERNARD LEE as "M"
DANIELA BIANCHI
RICHARD MAIBAUM JOHANNA HARWOOD LIONEL BART JOHN BARRY
HARRY SALTZMAN AND ALBERT R. BROCCOLI TERENCE YOUNG
TECHNICOLOR
EON PRODUCTIONS LTD.
UNITED ARTISTS

Release date (premiere): 10 October 1963

Writing credit as per title sequence:
“Screenplay by Richard Maibaum, adapted by Johanna Harwood”

Director :............................Terence Young
Producers :...........Albert R. Broccoli & Harry Saltzman
Director photography :...........Ted Moore
Set Designer :..............................Syd Cain
Composer :...............................John Barry
Editor :.......................................Peter Hunt
Title sequence :..........Robert Brownjohn
Main song vocals :..................Lionel Bart tells BOND to watch Anita's beautiful mouth. A trap-door in area around mouth opens, KRILENCU appears, comes through opening, dangles from it, drops to the ground. KERIM fires,kills him. Says sons will dispose of body. It will take Russians a day or so to realise KRILENCU's absence will be permanent. He thinks it safe for BOND to return to his hotel.

11.

DISSOLVE:

INT. BRIDAL SUITE. NIGHT

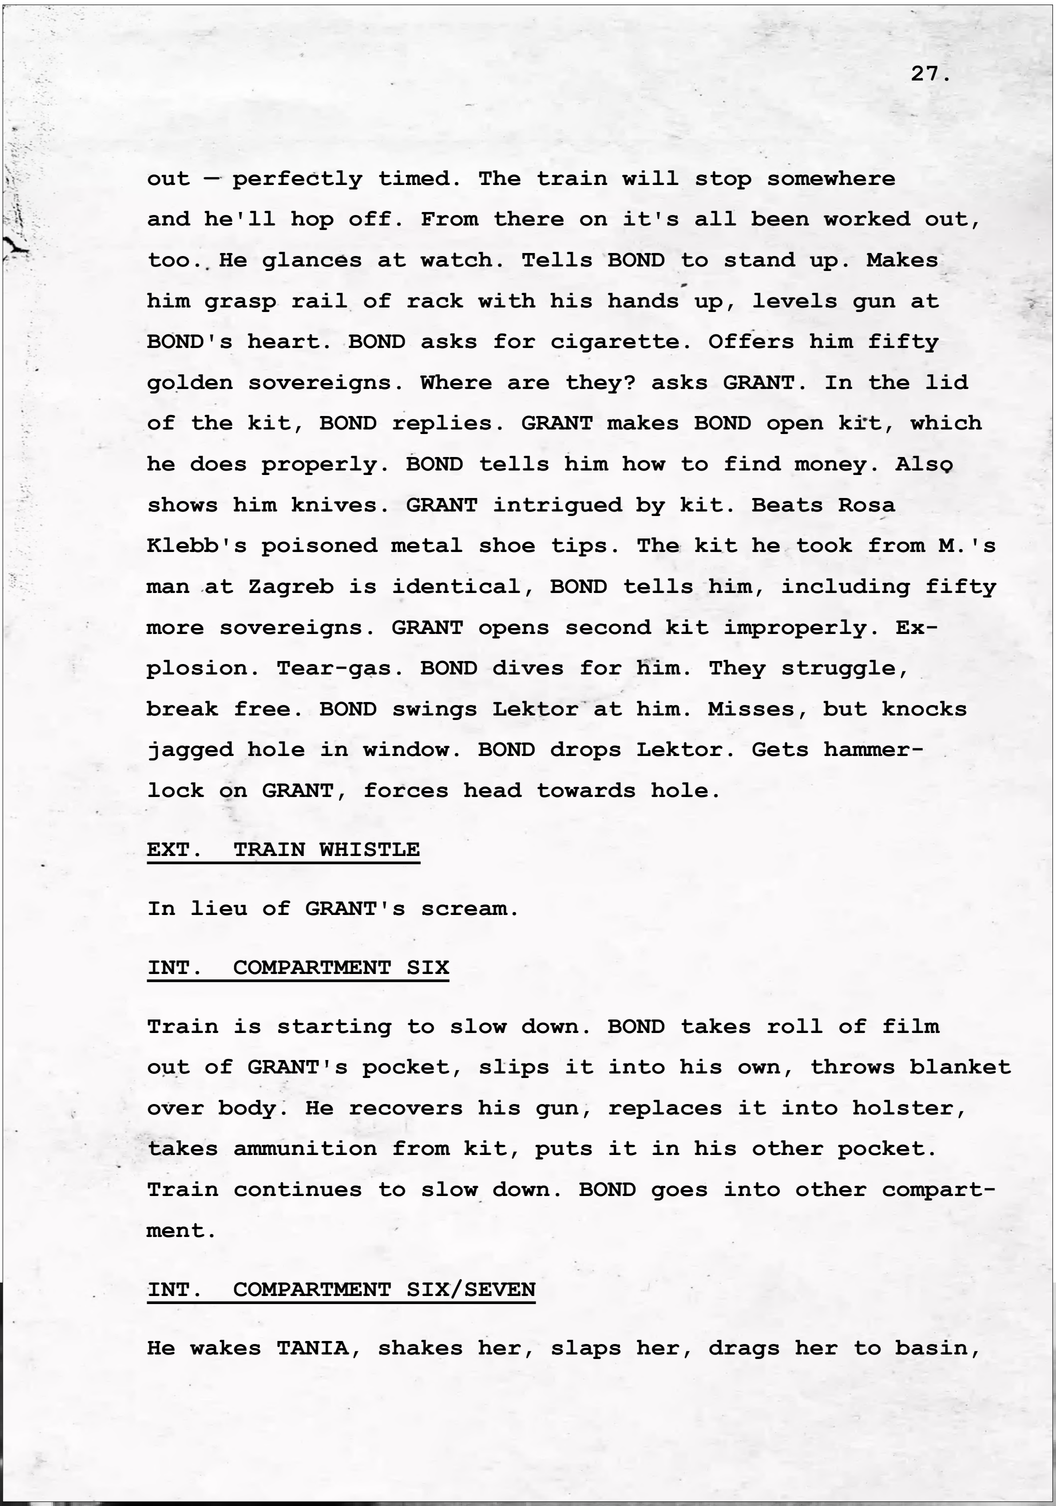
BOND enters. He switches on light. As he takes off jacket, tie, and unbuttons shirt, he cases the place. The usual routine. He throws shirt onto sofa, pours himself a drink, looks out at lovely view of Istanbul. Suddenly he hears an unidentifiable sound from bedroom. It is repeated. He tenses, gets revolver, switches off light. The place is now bathed in moonlight. He moves cautiously to bedroom doorway. A GIRL'S VOICE: "Poor Mr. Bond. Come to bed. You must be tired." He glances into bedroom from behind door. He can see into a mirror, illuminated by moonlight, TATIANA in bed covered with a sheet. He steps into....

INT. BEDROOM

He lowers revolver, approaches bed. How did she get there? he asks. She walked down two flights, she replies. "Like that?" "Oh, no, that would not be kulturny. My things are under the bed." He puts the gun on the night stand. "Well, I'm coming to bed." "Oh, no, you mustn't." "But it's my bed and you asked me." "That was only an expression. To out — perfectly timed. The train will stop somewhere and he'll hop off. From there on it's all been worked out, too. He glances at watch. Tells BOND to stand up. Makes him grasp rail of rack with his hands up, levels gun at BOND's heart. BOND asks for cigarette. Offers him fifty golden sovereigns. Where are they? asks GRANT. In the lid of the kit, BOND replies. GRANT makes BOND open kit, which he does properly. BOND tells him how to find money. Also shows him knives. GRANT intrigued by kit. Beats Rosa Klebb's poisoned metal shoe tips. The kit he took from M.'s man at Zagreb is identical, BOND tells him, including fifty more sovereigns. GRANT opens second kit improperly. Explosion. Tear-gas. BOND dives for him. They struggle, break free. BOND swings Lektor at him. Misses, but knocks jagged hole in window. BOND drops Lektor. Gets hammerlock on GRANT, forces head towards hole.

CHAPTER 2

FROM RUSSIA WITH LOVE



27.

EXT. TRAIN WHISTLE

In lieu of GRANT's scream.

INT. COMPARTMENT SIX

Train is starting to slow down. BOND takes roll of film out of GRANT's pocket, slips it into his own, throws blanket over body. He recovers his gun, replaces it into holster, takes ammunition from kit, puts it in his other pocket. Train continues to slow down. BOND goes into other compartment.

INT. COMPARTMENT SIX/SEVEN

He wakes TANIA, shakes her, slaps her, drags her to basin,

Cast:

James Bond :........................Sean Connery
Tatiana Romanova :........Daniela Bianchi
Ali Kerim :....................Pedro Armendáriz
Rosa Klebb :...........................Lotte Lenya
Donald "Red" Grant :............Robert Shaw
Morzeny :..............................Walter Gotell
Krilencu :...............................Fred Haggerty
Kronsteen :.........................Vladek Sheybal
Sylvia Trench :...................Eunice Gayson
Vavra :..............................Francis De Wolff
M :...Bernard Lee
Moneypenny :.......................Lois Maxwell
Boothroyd (Q) :...........Desmond Llewelyn

Main filming locations: Turkey, Italy and the UK.

Second mission for our secret agent and this one plunges us into a very Cold War and Hitchcockian atmosphere. A brilliantly paced thriller, where the cast introduces a mysterious curvaceous blonde and a warm ally called Ali Kerim; while Connery confirms that he was born to play James Bond. The bad guys are not left out, notably Red Grant who will be the subject of an unforgettable hand-to-hand combat sequence on the Orient Express. The formula is being refined with the introduction of gadgets, more action and a pre-title sequence. No wonder that From Russia with Love will became one of the films that filmmakers tried to go back to during the following decades, as we will have the opportunity to see.

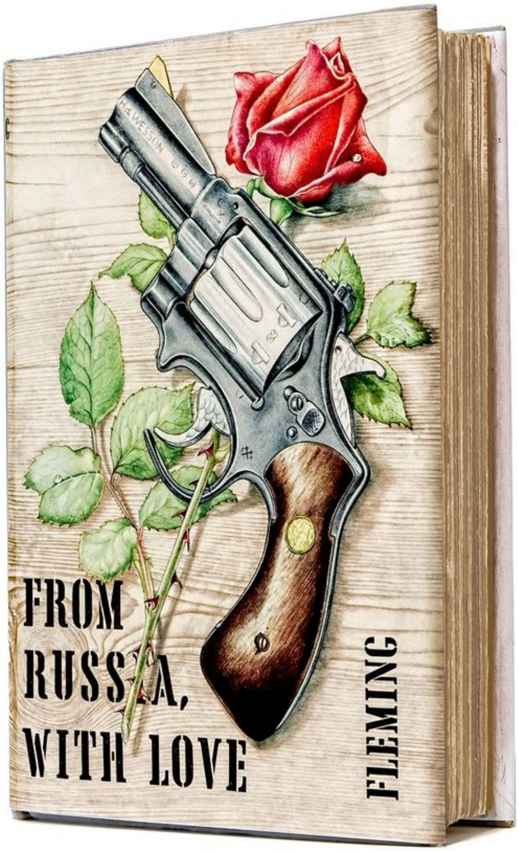
Table of contents

From Russia with Love

From the novel, with love....84
Trio of writers....86
January 28, 1963' treatment....90
Revisions: yacht, helicopter and gasoline barrel....94
March 18, 1963 script: Jennifer and the Iron Crab....97
More revisions: Sylvia and less abrupt end....104
Just few more thing....107

From the novel, with love

When Broccoli and Saltzman began their James Bond adventure, the plan was not to just make one film but several. For the second, the idea of doing Thunderball (on which the judicial contention is still not clearly resolved) is definitively set aside in favor of From Russia, With Love, then considered one of the best Bond novels and one of the most popular, thanks to President Kennedy's publicity boost. That, plus the exoticism of Istanbul.



In the novel published in 1957 (with a coma in the title of its first editions), the head of Section T (Turkey) of the Secret Service, Darko Kerim, is contacted in Istanbul by an alleged Soviet encryption female officer: the attractive Tatiana Romanova. The latter tells him of her project to defect/move to the West. As a pass to the United Kingdom, Tatiana promises to bring with her the Spektor: a Russian coding machine. (Fleming during the War having visited on various occasions Bletchley Park, where Alan Turing and his colleagues were trying to crack the Germans Enigma, this kind of machine talks to him. Fleming had even imagined a plan to steal Egnima's codes during the war: the operation Ruthless).

Romanova, however, imposes a condition: it's has to be the agent James Bond, with whom she claims to have fallen in love when seeing a photo of him in a files she was handling, who comes in person to help her reach England.

Sensing the trap, M and 007 try to imagine what the Russians expect to gain in this round, but still agree to give it a shot because the Spektor worth the effort and the dangers.

What they all don't know is that behind this mission lies a SMERSH conspiracy, aimed at taking revenge on 007 by eliminating him for good, while sullying the reputation of the British secret service. SMERSH, meaning "death to spies", is in Fleming's novels a Russian counter-espionage agency that Bond has crossed the path (and interfered with the plans) in previous novels. Colonel-General Grubozaboyschikov at the head of SMERSH tasked his colleagues Kronsteen (a great chess player) and Colonel Rosa Klebb with designing and executing the plan that implicate Tatiana and the Spektor.

In Istanbul, Bond meets Darko Kerim and the two spend time together while waiting for Tatiana to approach them. During this time Bond not only visits Istanbul with Darko, spies on a Russian meeting using a hidden periscope, but is also involved in a story with a Bulgarian gangster who collaborates with the Soviet Union: Krilencu. This Krilencu tried to kill Kerim with first a bomb placed in his office, then in a gypsy camp. Eventually, Bond helps Kerim to kill Krilencu with a sniper rifle.

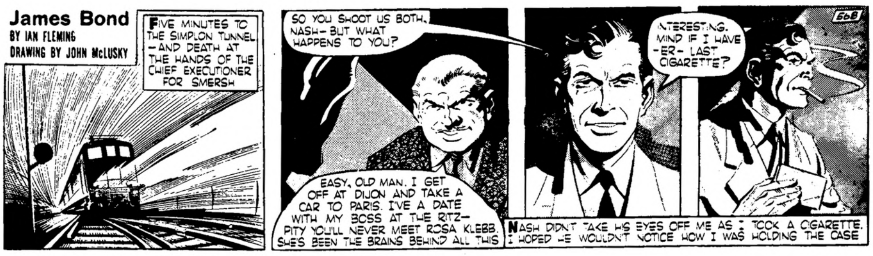
When he returns to his hotel, Bond finds Tatiana in his bed. They have sex together and she retrieve the Spektor. Bond wants to fly Tania and the machine back to England, but she insists on taking the Orient Express. This choice makes Bond uncomfortable, but he accepts it anyway. Bond, Darko and Tatiana then board the train in which there are three MGB men.

On board, Darko Kerim manages to get rid of two of them but is found dead with the third.

At Trieste train station a man introduces himself to Bond as Captain Norman Nash, saying he was sent by M as extra protection for the remainder of the journey. The man is in reality Donovan "Red" Grant: SMERSH's Chief Executioner.

During the trip, Grant drugs Romanova and confronts Bond. Instead of immediately killing 007, Grant reveals SMERSH's plan which involves a letter saying that Tatiana will give a film of them making love to the newspapers if Bond doesn't marry her, that 007 had promised her marriage on the condition that she steals it Spektor, etc... Grant adds in particular that he is going to kill Bond with a bullet to the heart, that the Spektor is bobby-trapped to explode during its examination by the British, and that he is going to meet Rosa Klebb (head of Otdyel II, the SMERSH department responsible for operations and executions) at the Ritz hotel in Paris.

As they talk, Bond discreetly places his metal cigarette case in a book which he places in front of his heart. When Grant shoots, the case and the book stop the bullet: Bond pretends to be dead then attacks and eliminates Grant.



James Bond
BY IAN FLEMING
DRAWING BY JOHN McLUSKY
FIVE MINUTES TO THE SIMPLON TUNNEL —AND DEATH AT THE HANDS OF THE CHIEF EXECUTIONER FOR SMERSH
SO YOU SHOOT US BOTH, NASH— BUT WHAT HAPPENS TO YOU?
EASY, OLD MAN. I GET OFF AT DIJON AND TAKE A CAR TO PARIS. I'VE A DATE WITH MY BOSS AT THE RITZ— PITY YOU'LL NEVER MEET ROSA KLEBB. SHE'S BEEN THE BRAINS BEHIND ALL THIS INTERESTING. MIND IF I HAVE —ER— LAST CIGARETTE?
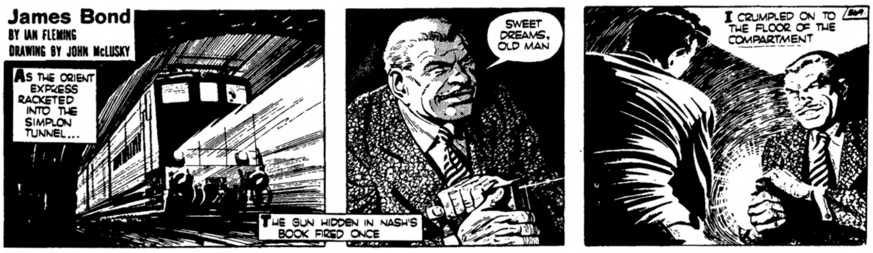
568
NASH DIDN'T TAKE HIS EYES OFF ME AS I TOOK A CIGARETTE. I HOPED HE WOULDN'T NOTICE HOW I WAS HOLDING THE CASE



James Bond
BY IAN FLEMING
DRAWING BY JOHN McLUSKY
AS THE ORIENT EXPRESS RACKETED INTO THE SIMPLON TUNNEL...
SWEET DREAMS, OLD MAN
THE GUN HIDDEN IN NASH'S BOOK FIRED ONCE
I CRUMPLED ON TO THE FLOOR OF THE COMPARTMENT 569

James Bond
BY IAN FLEMING
DRAWING BY JOHN McLUSKY
THE BULLET FROM NASH'S GUN HAD STRUCK MY CIGARETTE CASE. HE THOUGHT I WAS DEAD
AS HE REACHED TO KILL THE DRUGGED TANIA, I SLID MY KNIFE FROM ITS FOREARM SHEATH AND STRUCK UP AT NASH WITH ALL MY STRENGTH 570

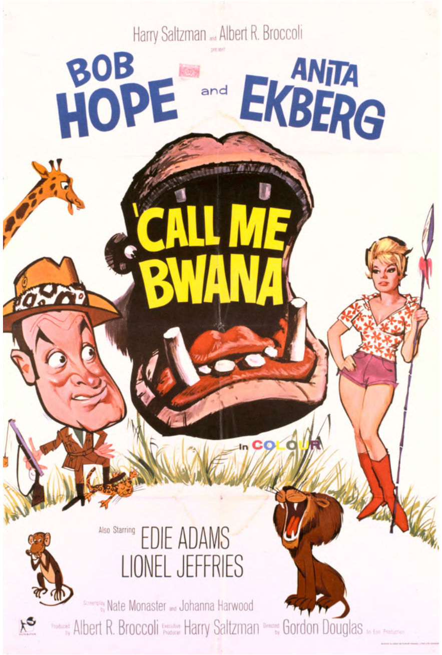
James Bond
BY IAN FLEMING
DRAWING BY JOHN McLUSKY
MY KNIFE THRUST WENT HOME. NASH SCREAMED, THEN I FELT HIS HANDS AT MY THROAT AS HE FELL ON ME
I FELT NASH'S TRICK BOOK UNDER MY HAND
AND I FIRED IT AT POINT BLANK RANGE
571

Later, after successfully delivering Romanova and the trapped Spektor, Bond goes to the Ritz hotel at Paris and meets Rosa Klebb. After failing to kill Bond with a gun hidden in a telephone, Klebb succeeded in poisoning Bond with tetrodotoxin using a blade hidden in her shoe; she is then captured by French agent René Mathis and his men as Bond collapses to the ground.

Fleming was at this time a little tired of writing Bond's novel and the end of From Russia, With Love is as disturbing as it is unexpected: leaving us in the dark about Bond's fate. Is he dead from the poisoning or not? (Well, if the reader have good reason to think that he is probably dead by the end of the book, the next one will prove them wrong).

Trio of writers



Harry Saltzman and Albert R. Broccoli
BOB HOPE and ANITA EKBERG
CALL ME BWANA
in COLOUR
Also Starring EDIE ADAMS
LIONEL JEFFRIES
Nate Monaster and Johanna Harwood
Albert R. Broccoli Harry Saltzman Gordon Douglas

After Dr. No, Johanna Harwood continues to write for EON on their next film: not a James Bond film but Call Me Bwana, a comedy released in early 1963 featuring actors Bob Hope and Anita Ekberg.

In it, an American spy agency hires Matt Merriwether, believed to be the greatest expert on Africa, to retrieve, before it can be located by the Communists, a missing secret space probe that crashed in Africa. However, Merriwether's reputation is a fraud, as he has never set foot in Africa. So he finds himself embarked on this adventure in which he has no idea of what to do.

"The original idea came from an English journalist. I think he was a friend of the Broccolis", remembers Harwood[1]. "Funnily enough, before I started work, I was told not to write Hope's lines in the script. It was up to his personal writers to fill in the blanks!"[2].

Nathan Monaster, Paul Jarrico and regular Bob Hope's screenwriters also participated in the writing of this non-Bond film.

A little later, writing From Russia with Love begins, apparently began with Harwood.

On August 22, 1962, she completed a first 125-page script[3]. According to The James Bond Archives, the screenplay is faithful to Fleming's book: with the exception of the addition of SPECTRE to the plot and an opening sequence set in Hong Kong in which 007 puts an end to a network of drugs/diamonds/humans traffickers and leaves with a girl ("I didn't write the opening sequence at Hong Kong. It was added later", rectifies Harwood[4]).

The ending was also different, with Tatiana sacrificing herself to save Bond and dying in his arms. Harwood, with an eye for detail, also provided timetables and the dispositions of the Orient Express[5].

Dr. No comes out and starts to gain momentum: "There was absolute panic in the production, because suddenly they had a huge success on their hands and they didn't know why", says Harwood[6]. This means discussions to try to determine what things were the keys of the success of Dr. No in order to try to replicate them in the script of this new Bond adventure.

At one point Saltzman asked Harwood and Terence Young to rework the script together. "We only worked together for one afternoon", recalls Harwood[7]. According to her, Young's rewrite ideas were bad and would had made the script worse than its original state[8]. "Never once [in the afternoon he] asked me what I thought"[9]. Feeling that Young wouldn't listen to what she had to say, she decided to quit the production of the film[10].

DOUBLE O
JAMES BOND IS MISSING
DOUBLE OR NOTHING
AND TIME IS RUNNING OUT...
KIM SHERWOOD

Fun fact: In 2022, Kim Sherwood began to publish the literary trilogy "Double O" which tells the adventures of other Double-O agents than those of James Bond 007. In it, 003 is named Johanna Harwood as a tribute/reference to the screenwriter.

"I immediately went to tell Harry Saltzman that if I stayed, he would have to pay two salaries instead of one for the same result, since collaboration was a word that obviously didn't belong in Terence Young's lexicon. [...] I wouldn't say that Young's behavior was particularly sexist. He just thought he was better than everyone else"[11].

From Russia with Love will be the last James Bond on which Harwood will work; after leaving the film she decided to also turn her back on films writing in general[12]. "I wrote a French film Ne jouez pas avec les Martiens and that was it. For personal reasons I wanted to live in Paris and I could hardly write French film scripts in English. I enjoyed the film industry in general. When I stopped enjoying it, I left it. I stopped loving it half way through From Russia with Love"[13]. Harwood would spend the next 20 years condensing novels for the Parisian Reader's Digest[14], "enjoyed it as much as writing scripts, as a matter of fact, and it's far less stressful"[15].

Harry Saltzman always wanted to make other films in addition to those of James Bond and his attention was currently focused on the spy novel The Ipcress File by Len Deighton. In October 1962, at the time of the release of Dr. No, Saltzman approached Deighton to offer him to adapt his novel for the big screen[16]. (He would also ask Harwood to write a first draft for it and she delivered a complete one, "written long before the film was actually made" she recalls[17]).

During his meetings with Deighton that followed, Saltzman suggested that Deighton write of From Russia with Love[18], despite the fact that the novelist had never written a film until then.

THE IPCRESS
SS FILE

Leonard Cyril Deighton[19], better known as Len Deighton, is a British author. Often considered one of the three best spy novelists of his time (along with Ian Fleming and John le Carré), he is also a highly acclaimed military historian, food writer and graphic designer.

Born in London on February 18, 1929, Deighton joined the Special Investigations Branch of the RAF at the age of 17 because it offered a chance to be formed as a photographer.

After completing his national service, Deighton attended St Martin's art school in London in 1949. Three years later, he won a scholarship to the Royal College of Art, from which he graduated in 1955. There he met someone who would become a long-time friend: Raymond Hawkey, who would end up designing the covers of several of his books (and some of Ian Fleming's).

After leaving university, Len Deighton worked as a BOAC airline steward, wrote for magazines and illustrated over two hundred book covers. In 1960 he also worked as an artistic director in a London advertising agency. A passionate gastronome, he wrote and illustrated on the subject in 1961 for the Daily Express and the Observer.

It was around this time that Deighton switched from illustration to words as his favored medium when he moved to France. Len Deighton's first four novels, including bestsellers The Ipcress File and Funeral in Berlin, feature a spy who is less glamorous but more realistic and insolent than 007: a small official so unobtrusive that his name is never even revealed. The character later became "Harry Palmer" when Harry Saltzman produced film adaptations of the novels in the 1960s, with Michael Caine in the role.

Saltzman won't be the only producer to give Deighton a chance to write the script for a James Bond film, indeed the author would also collaborate with Kevin McClory in the 1970s (as we will see later).

Deighton continued to write spy novels in the 1970s, and in the 1980s he launched a new series of around ten novels featuring a certain Bernard Samson as a hero.

In 2012 he published the e-book James Bond: My Long and Eventful Search for His Father: his souvenirs of Ian Fleming, Kevin McClory and Harry Saltzman.

At 90 years old, the author is still active and divides his time between California, Portugal and Guernsey with his second Dutch wife and his family.

"I wasn't keen to write any kind of screenplay", reveals Deighton, "but Harry was planning a recce in Istanbul with Terence Young the director and the Production Designer Syd Cain (Ken Adam was working on Dr. Strangelove). It was winter and a trip to Turkey with all expenses paid, clever companions and a fee as well, promised to be a fabulous experience, and so it was"[20].

Deighton thus accepts and the four men leave for Turkey. "Harry demonstrated this creative power. We took breakfast together every day so that he could guide me and teach me how film stories worked. It was a wonderful course in movie making, especially as the rest of each day was spent roaming around Istanbul with Harry plus the director and art director talking about locations and building the sets back in England[21]".

In particular, Deighton remembers discussing with Saltzman on how he would consider writing a scene with Rosa Klebb. Deighton had planned to knock Bond out from behind: as a surprise both for him and for the audience. "No, no, no, no", Saltzman replied, explaining to the writer that he should rather first show a shot of Klebb waiting for Bond in ambush, in order to get the audience's adrenaline pumping[22]. "The chance to tell the audience something the hero does not know is a unique advantage for a screen writer", says Deighton, who has learned a lesson[23].

"From Istanbul I went to spend Christmas in Beirut, a town I knew and liked, and returned to London for New Year. I kept in touch with Harry during the writing; let's say I probably delivered the screenplay in February [1963]", Deighton recalls[24]. During his time on the film, Deighton deals mainly with Harry: "I saw Cubby from time to time but our conversations were just friendly day-to-day comments. I never discussed films with him"[25].

"I completed the script of From Russia with Love. How many of my ideas reached the screen, I don't know. I didn't keep a copy of the script and I never got around to watching the final film", Deighton says[26].

Screenwriter Richard Maibaum joined this film because, according to himself, Deighton was having difficulty making progress: "he did about thirty-five pages; but it wasn't going anywhere, so they brought me in"[27]. "In fact, I wrote that script in just six weeks. [...] It still remains my favourite", Maibaum declared around 1987[28].

"It wasn't a disappointment. Everyone knows that screenplays are not written; they are rewritten", says Deighton[29].

January 28, 1963' treatment

There is a 71-pages treatment dated January 28, 1963. The author (or authors) is not specified, but it appears to have been written during the Maibaum period. Overall this treatment is very similar to what viewers will see in the film, but is a little closer to the novel in certain aspects.

As for Dr. No, the filmmakers want to avoid the storyline being linked to international politics and thus the SPECTRE is included in the story as the big villain rather than the Russian SMERSH. A cable dated January 15, 1963 from United Artists to Harry Saltzman says "unanimous feeling is [villain] should be SPECTRE or some similar third force and not Russians as in book"[30].

Some characters affiliated with SMERSH in the novel become members of the SPECTRE (like Klebb, Grant or Kronsteen), a new character is created (Morzeny) and Blofeld from the latest novels is added to the story. Probably to avoid connotation and confusion with SPECTRE, the name of the Soviet cipher machine was also changed from Spektor to Lektor.

During the opening lines of this treatment, we can note that it was originally imagined to superimpose the opening credits on the stalking sequence in the garden with Grant (rather than making it a separate sequence and therefore having a pre-title sequence). We are told that Morzeny is wearing an old German commando cap with a skull insignia.

According to Terence Young, the idea of killing a fake Bond during SPECTRE training exercise was Harry Saltzman's idea[31]. Guy Hamilton (like many others) would later say of the producer: "his ideas come out like spaghetti and out of ten: nine are terrible. But the tenth is wonderful"[32]. This one clearly falls into the latter category. Ken Hugues, who participated in the writing of the film The Ipcress Files, adds about Saltzman and his bouncing ideas: "Harry has such an energetic mind he gets ideas in the middle of the night which are in complete contradiction to what we discussed the day before. As fast as I'd write up his old ideas, he'd change to a new one"[33].

The plot directly move on to the scene of Grant's massage (here the scenes of the chess tournament and with Blofeld arrive only after Klebb has met Grant and then Romanova).

Regarding the masseuse, we read: "she either has nothing on underneath [the shirt she takes off], or a smallish bra (depending on where the film is shown)".

Concerning the scene between Klebb and Romanova, Rosa asks Tatiana in particular if she is a "virgin" (the latter admits to having had three affairs).

The description of Rosa Klebb is reminiscent of the novel: for example her breasts are like "badly-packed sand-bags" or she have a "toad-like" appearance. Speaking about the novel, Grant is described by Morzeny as an "ex-Irish boxing champion with homicidal tendencies". It is also specified that SMERSH was recently "deactivated".

Kronsteen (of German origin, we are told), Klebb and Blofeld don't meet on the latter's yacht, but at the SPECTRE HQ on Haussmann street in Paris, "as in [the novel] Thunderball", as noted by the screenwriter(s) themselves.

When Moneypenny tries to contact 007, he is on a boat. She said she contacted all of his female friends and was delighted to find out he wasn't with any of them. However, on the boat Bond is with a woman (whose identity is unknown to us).

A little further, the Q-Branch' suitcase presented by Boothroyd also contains a cyanide pill hidden as in the novel (and which will remain unused). On the other hand, the suitcase doesn't include a sniper rifle, nor the gas grenade used to trap it. Also present in the suitcase is a silencer for a "Beretta". As we will have the opportunity to discover later: Bond is armed with a Beretta in this treatment (which is in agreement with the novel, which was written before Dr. No, but in contradiction with the previous film).

After passing through his boss's office, Bond doesn't write "From Russia with Love" on the photo for Moneypenny.

Arriving at Istanbul, 007 and the driver (in a Rolls) are followed (by a Dusenberg) and 007 goes directly to his hotel. He asks to change rooms (not because of microphones; he didn't look for them in this treatment, but because there is no shower). He only meet Kerim the next day and this one is named "Darko Kerim" (like in the novel, "Kerim Bey" appears on other pages, however this is not a name but a reference to a subtlety of the Turkish language, where the word "Bey" is a title of respect equivalent to "sir" mainly placed after the first name of a man). The character is described according to the novel (which includes a gold earring). He is, among other things, a spice merchant (like in Fleming's novel).

After taking a look with the periscope with 007; Kerim goes to the Blue Mosque to contact Tatiana to tell her that Bond is in town (Klebb and Kronsteen are there and watching them). On the other hand, there is no scene where a bomb explodes at Kerim's place.

Grant's presence in the background in Istanbul is much more discreet/reduced here than in the film: he notably doesn't appear at the gypsy camp, nor at the Hagia Sophia mosque, and one of his assassinations in the film is carried out by anonymous SPECTRE's agents in this treatment.

Arriving at the scene of the killing of Krilencu, the sniper rifle is actually a gadget hidden in one of Kerim's walking-stick.

> Kerim takes a German Snooperscope out of the bag, hands it to Bond, then converts the walking-stick into a rifle with a skeleton butt, which is also a twist breech. He affixes a silencer and clips on the Snooperscope.

Unlike the novel, the poster behind which Krilencu lives doesn't represent Marilyn Monroe in Niagara but "a famous woman film star, one currently starring in a United Artists release"...

When Bond meets Tania at his hotel, in addition to the fact that the treatment specifies that she is brunette, he reveals to her among other things that they will travel under the identity of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur/Caroline Somerset via the Orient-Express.

From page 35 the writing changes (the characters are thicker), what follows was probably written later. Unlike the film, Bond asks Tania to take a photo of the Lektor with the help of a tiny camera (rather than an audio description that he records).

There is a scene where Bond and Kerim replace an optical instrument in the periscope with a bomb (in order to trigger the explosion of the consulate; this is how Bond enters in the building in this treatment). As well as another scene where a son of Kerim blows up what looks like the ambassador's limousine with him in it (but it's actually a mannequin) just before the explosion at the consulate. This adds an action scene compared to the novel (novel in which the Russians simply gave the Spektor to Tatiana who then brought it to Bond who is waiting for her at the train station).

There is also an additional scene compared to the film where customs checks the passports of passengers on the Orient-Express and enter with the driver into Benz's cabin, but don't see his body or the one of Kerim (hidden behind luggage). Also when customs checks Bond's suitcase: they take the Lektor for a typewriter.

We can also note that Grant is using a "stethoscope-like hearing device" to listen the conversation between Bond and Stefan Tempo (one of Kerim's son).

Further on, it is 007 himself who puts a sedative in Tania's drink: Bond explains to Grant that the Lektor is the important matter and that Tatiana would have been a problem when getting off the train.

When Bond is at Grant's mercy and shows him that the suitcase also contains a knife and ammunition, Grant comments that "Rosa would love this. Beats those poisoned metal tips on her shoes". When Grant opens the suitcase "there is a dull explosion, accompanied by the sound of hissing pressure and a spray of foaming liquid hits his face". A few lines later, the screenwriter(s) tells us "(the damage done to his face must be masked from camera)". 007 kills Grant by forcing his head onto the sharp edges of glass from a hole made in a window pane during the fight.

After that, we can notice that Bond plunges Tania's head into a sink filled with water to wake her up. After getting off the Orient-Express, Bond and Tania get into the car of a certain Metkovic (and not Rhoda) (Bond pretending to be Grant, his meeting with Metkovic takes place without violence). More importantly: in this treatment they are not attacked by a helicopter.

So they calmly arrive at the dock, a man shows up and runs towards Metkovic; Bond and Tania flee by boat.

The scene where Kronsteen dies takes place in a building in Venice (still no yacht for Blofeld). In this scene Blofeld dismiss Kronsteen, who then takes an elevator to leave. During the descent, a large pellet falls to the floor of the elevator and then he dies. Gas/poison? The treatment is unclear.

Five boats in a V formation appear in front of Bond. 007 heads straight for them and at the last moment the pilot of the boat on which he arrives decides to turn away from Bond's path and ends up (with flames) in the of one of the other SPECTRE's boats. Bond with three remaining pursuers passes near the island of San Giorgio Maggiore and enters the Grand Canal of Venice. He avoids a collision with a boat containing passengers. Here the SPECTRE's boats separate, some trying to take other channels in order to cut off the "route" to Bond.

A SPECTRE boat, to avoid another, swerve abruptly and end up on the shore where it crashes into a building. Regarding the other two boats, Bond simply lose them in the canals. It should be noted that Morzeny doesn't appear in this boat chase sequence.

The finale with Rosa Klebb doesn't take place in a hotel but at the place of a certain Martucci, described as the MI6's man from in Venice (Rosa pretends to be Martucci's sister). There Bond lets go the Lektor on Klebb's foot who collapses to the ground in pain. He then kicks Rosa's injured foot and, in doing so, the poisoned tip of her shoe embeds itself into Rosa's other foot.

After Rosa death, there is an end scene with "Bond, his head in Tania's lap, is snoring peacefully" in a gondola in Venice canal.

Revisions: yacht, helicopter and gasoline barrel

The second treatment that we are going to talk about is 43 pages long and is undated. However, it seems to be more recent than the previous one. Some things mentioned before are also found here (others not), I won't go into them again.

The gunbarrel sequence is present in this treatment and is described as a "trademark". We are only in the second film of the saga and the gunbarrel is already considered an iconic/inseparable element of Bond (the credits remain, however, superimposed on the action). Further on we notice that the scenes with Blofeld now take place on his yacht (there is, however, no fish fight yet).

Interestingly, a script from March 18, 1963 describes this yacht as a "large, beautiful boat similar to one owned by a well-known Greek shipping tycoon", suggesting a real person as a model for Blofeld. In this treatment his identity was given: "[Aristotle] Onassis-type yacht".

Aristotle Onassis (1906-1975) was a famous Greek shipowner, he acquired the world's largest privately-owned shipping fleet and was one of the world's richest and most famous men. Onassis has invested in other areas such as real estate, media, airlines and was involved in cases that often touched on important geopolitical and economic issues.

As his relationship with the opera soprano Maria Callas is making headlines, on his yacht, the Christina O, he undertakes cruises every summer with a list of the most prestigious guests as Greta Garbo, the King of Egypt or Winston Churchill as well.

Few year after the release of the movie From Russia with Love, Onassis will be famous for his relation (and then marriage) with "Jackie" Kennedy, the widow of the U.S. assassinated ex-president.

(In the end, Blofeld's yacht in the movie isn't the Christina O, but another yacht called the Delos, not owned by Onassis).

When Moneypenny tries to contact 007, he is in a boudoir with a girl, "maybe Ursula" (Honey from Dr. No) we can read!

Here the Q-Branch's suitcase still contains a cyanide pill and still not contain any sniper rifle (however there is no longer Beretta silencer inside).

Kerim Bey (the first name "Darko" no longer appears in this scenario) is also the largest carpet merchant in Turkey (and no longer a spices merchant). Grant still doesn't have as much presence as he have in the film.

HOPE EKBERG

For the mouth through which Krilencu comes out, we are now told of a "huge poster of Anita Eckberg [sic!] in UA film". A very modest way of just saying Call Me Bwana!

For the scene where the SPECTRE's voyeurs shoot a film of Bond and Romanova, the screenwriter(s) recommend(s) filming it in two ways in order to satisfy the different censorship organisms: one where we see the sweaty faces cameramen in addition to their cameras (for Europe) and the other with only the cameras (for the United States).

The sequence with the helicopter is present this time, but differs from the one of the film. As soon as Bond and Tania get off the train (at night), a helicopter (with a searchlight) approaches before they have boarded Rhoda's truck. Bond tries to pass himself off as Grant, but not knowing the agreed signal he fails. The helicopter crew spots Tania and dives on her, then on Bond. 007 tries (without effect) to fight the helicopter with his gun and takes cover near some rock formations. The pilot who hadn't seen one of theses rock end up crashing into it.

Later, we also note that Morzeny kills Kronsteen with a silenced pistol. On the boat that takes Bond and Tatiana to Venice, 007 throws the tape containing his sexual encounters with her into the water after saying: "Officially, I suppose I should present this to the National Archives".

The boat chase is somewhat different and contains Morzeny. The enemies arrive from starboard: Bond defends himself with his pistol. He manages to hit the pilot of one of the boats who then crashes his boat into another: that makes two pursuing boats eliminated out of five. Bond and two other SPECTRE's boats enter a canal (which is not one of Venice) but a third approach the turn incorrectly and ends up on the shore where it crashes into a rock formation. Bond gets rid of the two remaining boats via gasoline barrel and a flare gun (like in the film).

> - Terence Young[34] : [During the War] I was in an army division in tanks, and we were taken down to do a rehearsal of the landing in Normandy. [...] They said the Germans were going to [...] set fire to the sea; we'd had a report that they had been putting oil things under the water. They did, but they ran out of oil. And we did a rehearsal where we had to drive our tanks through the thing, so that's why we used that stunt later [in the movie].

Finally, after the scenes with Rosa at Martucci's place, the treatment ends with Bond kissing Tania on the gondola. He suddenly stops and looks around:

> - Tatiana: What is it you are looking for, James?
> - Bond: A camera, darling.

"He looks directly into ours". END.

March 18, 1963 script: Jennifer and the Iron Crab

FADE IN:
1. EFFECT SHOT (AS IN DR. NO).

Thus start a "Final Draft Screenplay" of 125 pages, dated March 18, 1963. On the cover, only the name of Maibaum appears.

In addition, there is also a set of revised page from 2, 9, 11, 16, 17, 18 April 1963. Berkely Mather joined the production at one point for revisions, but since I don't know when, I don't know from who theses revisions are.

After the gunbarrel, the credits are still superimposed on the action: "the individual cards must be spaced so as not to obscure continuity", we can even read.

In this sequence in the garden, the action is a little different than the film: we see "Bond" doing noise by knocking a chair, in order to attract Grant and ambush him. "Bond" wait for him, but his opponent appears behind him and strangle him. The audience was only supposed to see the face of Grant after the death of the fake Bond: "Grant is deeply tanned, in his late twenties, with a small, roundish head and regular features under tight reddish-gold curls. His eyes are expressionless".

The scene dissolve to the one where Grant is massaged. Rosa Klebb arrive in helicopter and is welcomed by Morzeny and Rhoda. She is described as "in her late forties she is a squat, toad-like woman. Her hair, an odd shade of orange is scraped back into a tight bun. Her face exudes malevolence, cruelty, and authority. [...] Morzeny and Rhoda salute as though she were a Field Marshal".

They pass the training area where there is some kind of cell, in an April revised page we read:

- Morzeny: Agents who have failed. And as such, expendable. I use them for targets.
- Klebb: There is no substitute for experience in actual killing. Is the man I requested ready?

Morzeny gestures for Rhoda, who gives her the dossier.

- Klebb: Donald Grant, convicted murderer, escaped Dartmoor Prison 1960... Recruited in Tangiers, 1961...
- Morzeny: A homicidal paranoiac. Superb material, but his methods were crude. His response to training and indoctrination has been remarkable. We have never had a better man here.

When Klebb hit Grant with the brass knuckles, "Grant sags slightly at the knees. The next instant he is upright again as though nothing had happened".

Later Tatiana Romanova, who is described as 24 years old, meet Klebb. We can note Rosa saying "I am told you have had several admirers. Three, to be exact. Did you enjoy their... Attentions?" (The first part will be later be changed in "You have had three lovers" during revisions). The second sentence about enjoying their intention was indeed shoot, but cut during the editing to please the British censors. (Maibaum also wrote an alternate version of this scene "for Europe" countries, with dialog like: "Are you virgin, camarade Corporal? [...] How many men? [...] Did you enjoy it?". However, there is no evidence that an alternate version was ever shoot).

As in the film, Rosa says "A real labour of love" during the scene: a sentence present in Fleming's novel and which give its title to chapter 9.

After the scenes with Tatiana, the chess tournament, we are on SPECTRE's yacht: Blofeld's Siamese fishs weren't there originally. They were however added in April revised material.

After that, we see Bond. In this script he isn't with Honey Ryder but with a certain Jennifer, that Bond call "Jenny", in a situation similar of the film.

> - Jennifer: We should do this more often, once a year is hardly enough.
> - Bond (a little breathless himself): Hardly but that's one of the disadvantages of being a traveling man.
> - Jennifer: You do things so well. Why can't you stay in England and menage my estate or something?
> - Bond: I'll consider it when I retire. Lunch?
> - Jennifer: Must we?
> Camera pans to a picnic basket and a bottle of champagne in an ice bucket.
> - Bond: Pity to let that Perignon '53 get warn.
> [He fill two glasses. We now see that Jennifer wears bra and bikini and Bond swimming trunks].
> - Jennifer: To us!
> - Bond: And our annual picnics. [Taking a sandwich in the basket] Specialty of the house. Paté de fois gras.

Instead of taking the sandwich she puts her arms around his neck and kisses him. Sound of a buzzer, "a device usually used by doctors to alert them they are required". Bond says to Jennifer he his sorry, he must do a business call.

> - Jennifer: That blasted cricket or whatever it is. [...] What kind of business are you in anyhow?!
> - Bond: Universal Exports, darling. Real live-wire, go, go, go outfit. On the ball all the tine.

Bond take the phone in his Bentley and call HQ. Moneypenny is on the line, and there is the "old case" dialogue of the film.

Come then M's briefing, receiving Boothroyd's suitcase (still with a cyanide pill and without a sniper rifle), and another Moneypenny scene. Bond then flight to Istanbul.

He meet Kerim's son. The exchange starting with "Can I borrow a match?" wasn't in this scene originally but added in an April, 16 revision. They leave in a car and are followed:

> - Chauffeur: They always follow us when we go to the airport. We always follow them. It's an understanding we have.
> - Bond: Why not just send each other official reports? You'd both save a lot of petrol.

007 meet Kerim, some background details about Kerim (issued from the novel) were present in this script:

> \- Bond: So I gathered from your chauffeur. Intelligent young chap.
> \- Kerim: Thank you. He is my son. His mother was a Bessarabian wildcat I won in a fight with some Kurds.
> [...]
> \- Bond: You must visit us in England some time.
> \- Kerim: Never. The climate and the women are too cold. Except my mother. She was an English governess my father saw bathing on the shore of the Sea of Marmara. He took a fancy to her so he put her aboard his fishing boat and sailed up the Bosphorus back to Trebizond. They had fifteen children. But let us talk about this odd business of yours.

After doing so, Bond goes to his hotel. Later, after the explosion at Kerim's office, they go to the periscope. "Too bad we cannot hear as well as see. Q Branch is working on it", precises Kerim. While leaving the place, Kerim says to Bond that he shouldn't stay at his hotel this night:

> \- Bond: What if the girl tries to reach me at the hotel? Shouldn't I be there?
> \- Kerim: That is bad psychology, James. No girl likes a man to come when she whistle. Don't make yourself too available.
> \- Bond: You're right, but you didn't see those legs...

Direction the gypsy camp. The script describe the place as the "castle of the eight towers":

> The place is completely enclosed. Along the forty-foot walls stone steps run up at intervals to the parapet. Openings at the bottom of the corner towers lead to dungeon-like caves. The several acres of ground surface is covered with grass. A small ruined minaret stands roughly in the middle of the field, surrounded by a gypsy encampment. Caravans, tents, lean-tos. Several fires are burning. There are long plank tables at which men and women are seated, eating. Children play about and there are horses grazing.

Sitting at the table in the camp, there is an interesting line:

> \- Kerim: I drink too much... I also consume vast quantities of women. The Iron Crab will get me as it got my father. They would put on my tombstone: "this man died from living too much".
> \- Bond: An honourable disease. But don't go too soon, Darko. We need you.

Before writing his From Russia, with Love novel, Ian Fleming went at the end of 1955 to Istanbul, for assisting an Interpol conference which he through to be interesting for the thriller writer he was (and as well for the Sunday Time, from whom he worked for)[35]. His stay would coincide with the Istanbul riots of that year (on which he would also write in the Sunday Time). At Istanbul, Fleming met a number of the town's leading merchants and businessmen, including a shipowner named Nazim Kalkavan, with whom a friendship will instantly develop[36].

On a paper, Fleming made a note of a few Kalkavan's words: "K. I have always smoked and drunk and loved too much. In fact I have lived not too long but too much. One day the Iron Crab will get me. Then I shall have died of living too much"[37].

Fleming will leave Turkey on the Simplon-Orient-Express and a few month later, back in Jamaica, he will write From Russia, with Love, inspired by his trip to Istanbul and by Kalkavan, who would inspire him the character of Darko Kerim.

> - Chapter 15: These things are important to men. Or at least they are to me. Like my father, I [Kerim] consume a large quantity of women. But, unlike him, I also drink and smoke too much, and these things do not go well with making love. [...] Suddenly one day my heart will fail. The Iron Crab will get me as it got my father. But I am not afraid of The Crab. At least I shall have died from an honourable disease. Perhaps they will put on my tombstone "This Man Died from Living Too Much".

Fleming will never forget Kalkavan's "Iron Crab" analogy and begun to use the words in relation of his own heart disease[38]. It's an analogy that few of his biographers also used for evoke his heart attack's death.

Back to the script: there isn't much of the belly dancer in it. The character is here, but she have no dance; she play a zither-like instrument instead...

The girl fight is however present, like the attack on the gypsy camp but is somewhat a little different from the movie with scenes like that:

> - Kerim: Krilencu!
> Kerim fires at him. His gun jams. Kerim's curses are lost in the din. He grasps gun by butt, charges forward.
> Kerim, fighting his way toward Krilencu. Bond follows him into melee, his gun momentarily useless with friend and foe struggling around him. Kerim clubs at a Bulgar with his gun butt, knocks him senseless, then picks the man up and throws him at two others coming toward him.
> [...] [Bond] fires pointblank [...] sees Krilencu aiming at Kerim. [...] Krilencu fires just as a gypsy comes between him and Kerim. The gypsy falls.
> [...] A Bulgar throws a knife at Bond. He ducks. The knife strikes another Bulgar poised to stab Bond.

The most notable element was that Grant never appears in this scene in this March 18 script. Kerim is not injured too. Theses two elements were later added in April revisions.

On another revised pages, we note as Bond is asking as a favor the stopping of the two girls's fight:

> - Kerim: He will do as you ask, but he says your heart is too soft to be a real gypsy.
> - Bond (pouring himself another drink): It's not that. It's just that I hate to see good material wasted.

Bond and Kerim later go in town to kill Krilencu (described like "a cadaverous lantern-jawed desperado"). Here Call Me Bwana is mentioned black on white for the poster "with Hope's profile along left side and the rest the head and shoulders of Anika Ekberg".

Kerim "fastens the barrel to the butt, loads, takes the scope from Bond, clips it on top of the barrel, affixes silencer" and use Bond's shoulder to steady the gun and kills Krilencu.

007 goes back to his hotel, order food on phone in a way that reminds the novel:

> \- Bond: Breakfast for one at mine, please. Yogurt, green figs, coffee, very strong... Goodnight.

"Bond's hands, using pen as ruler, measure distances between objects to see if they are as he left them. Satisfied, he puts pen back, pours himself a drink. [...] He takes another cigarette out of the case, walks to bedroom door, taps a fine powder out of cigarette onto knob, bends down to look at it. Fingerprints revealed by effect of powder".

Bond takes his gun and enter the bedroom where he find Tatiana in the bed. The scene is closer to the novel, with a dialogue like that:

> \- Tatiana: Poor Mr. Bond. Come to bed. You must be tired... You look very improper.
> \- Bond: What about you? And how did you get here?
> [...]
> \- Bond: Well, I'm coming to bed.
> \- Tatiana: Oh. no. You mustn't.
> \- Bond: It's my bed. You suggested it.
> \- Tatiana: That was only to introduce myself.
> [...]
> \- Tatiana: You look just like your photograph.
> \- Bond: You look better than your photograph.
> \- Tatiana: Why do you look at me like that? It upsets me.
> \- Bond: You upset me, too. What have you got on anyway?
> \- Tatiana (lowering sheet to reveal a black ribbon around her throat): This.
> He lifts up the bottom of the sheet. She is wearing black stockings. He drops sheet.
> \- Bond: You came here like that?
> \- Tatiana: Oh, no. That would not have been kulturny. My other things are in the bathroom.
> [...]
> \- Tatiana: Thank you. I think my mouth is too big.
> [...]
> \- Tatiana: You are very handsome. Just like my favourite hero. He is in a book by one of our great novelists, Lermontov...
> \- Bond (putting his arms around her): Tania, this is no time to discuss Russian literature...

So Bond and Tatiana have sex, unaware that they are filmed. There is an interesting note about the peoples behind the recording camera: "(Optional for Europe: camera angle widens to include glistening face of [an] operator, watching. Glimpsed behind him, the face of Rosa Klebb)". In revised pages the operator had been replaced by Grant.

We now find Tatiana at St. Sophia mosque, she left a magazine inside, which Bond retrieve. He open it and we see a blueprint. Contrary to the film: they are not observed by anyone during this scene.

Come the ferry / M's office scene: Moneypenny isn't here in this script.

After stealing the Lektor, they board the train and things are similar to the movie. She try her new outfit offered by Bond:

> \- Tatiana: I will wear this one in Piccadilly.

- Bond: You'll positively stop traffic.

This would later be changed in revision in "You won't. They've got some new laws there now". Perhaps in reference to the Street Offences Act 1959 aimed primarily at reducing public solicitation by prostitute in England and Wales.

So Darko Kerim Bey die and, at Sofia train station, Bond inform his son Stefan Tempo of that, while Grant is listening with a stethoscope.

Bond then meet Grant who pretends to be Nash. He put sedative in Tatiana glass and when Bond confront him about it:

- Grant: M's orders. In case you'd gone soft on her. She'd have held us.
- Bond (lowering his gun): Sorry. I'm not soft on her, but M's right, as usual.

In April's revisions it was changed to:

- Grant: I'm here on M's orders. I can get you and the Lektor out, but there's no provision for the girl. You want to over-ride those orders?
- Bond: No. All right, what's the plan?

When Grant disarm him and explain SPECTRE's plan, dialogue is slightly different but basically similar to the movie. In April's revision, the line "Red wine with fish. That should have told me something" was followed by:

- Grant: Don't let it worry you. I've seen 'em eat caviar on cream cakes where I come from.
- Bond: Who do you come from? SMERSH?
[...]
- Grant: Yeah. 8 mm production job shot in the bridal suite at the Kristal Palas, starring James Bond and Tatiana Romanova. Something else she didn't know. Best show I ever saw. What a performance. You should both get Oscars.

When Grant open the attaché-case, it explode in his face. There is fight in which Grant menage to grab a knife from the attaché-case but 007 "circles behind grant, twist knife out of his hand, clamps a hammerlock one him, one arm around in neck the other twisting Grant's arm" and force Grant's head toward a jagged hole in the window to kill him.

The helicopter scene now takes place in daylight with "helicopter roaring down toward [Bond], blades whirling murderously. Bond flings himself down into the grass. Helicopter passes over him, the blades missing him by only a few feet".

007 fire with his Walther and hit the pilot. The "out of control" helicopter crash near to Bond.

After Kronsteen's death by Morzeny's poisonous shoes, we find Bond and Tania again in "their" boat:

> - Tatiana: You still do not believe me about Kerim.
> - Bond: While you slept I had an interesting conversation. All I'll tell you is I respect your motives. We both doing a job.
> - Tatiana: That was true when I came to your room. I thought only of my country, but not now...

The boat chase against Morzeny and his men is similar to the film, but take place in nighttime (with SPECTRE's boat having projectors).

The flaming boats dissolve on a lighter's flame while Bond light a cigarette in an elegant hotel suit of Venice. He is busy talking on the phone when Rosa Klebb, wearing a chambermaid disguise a grey hair-wig, enters the room. Tatiana recognize her and scream when she see the blades popping up of the shoes.

007 dodge her attack, take a chair "like a lion-tamer" and pin her against a wall while she curse him in Russian.

> - Bond: Watch you language, Colonel.

Finally, Bond menage to "drives the poisoned blade into the ankle of her other foot".

> - Bond: She had her kicks.
>
> As he watches Klebb die o.s. and the music from below the balcony becomes louder and louder.
>
> FADE OUT.
>
> THE END

More revisions: Sylvia and less abrupt end

Another copy of the March 18, 1963 script with more revised page was produced. In fact these are dated from all the length of the shooting (which happened between April 1st to August 2nd, 1963[39]). The following dates can be read on the pages: 9, 11, 16, 17 April, 1, 2, 27 May, 12, 17, 19 June, and 22 July. Maibaum is still the only credited on the cover page, even if at this stage Berkely Mather had made contributions for sure.

Inside we can note that Jennifer name was changed to Sylvia (Trench, from Dr. No) and dialogues adjusted in consequence, in pages dated 22nd, July.

After talking with Moneypenny on the phone, Bond's Bentley is on a highway, Sylvia "is nested against him. He is driving with one had, chewing a chicken leg with the other".

When Bond arrives at Istanbul later:

> - Chauffeur: The Russians follow us; we follow them. Sort of understanding we have...
> - Bond: Very friendly.
> - Chauffeur: Not those two, sir... They're Bulgarians... The Russians always use Bulgarians for the really dirty work... The driver's a strong-arm man... The other's a killer.
> - Bond: I knew I should have stayed in bed...

The two "Bulgarians" in the script are in fact Grant and a "pockmarked man". (But like in the film, the pockmarked man will end up trussed, gagged and killed by Grant a little later).

The Gypsy fight more is more like in the film and later, it is Bond who shoot the gun which kill Krilencu.

> - Kerim: That paid many debts, for others, but increases mine to you.
> - Bond: Forget it. With a Double 0 number it's on the house anyhow.

Coming back to his hotel, Bond "slides knife out of side of [his Q's suit]case, opens [a] bottle with it". Then he discover Tatiana in his bed; the dialogue is close to the film, but with few extra lines:

> - Bond: You look better than yours [photograph]. Much, much better...
> - Tatiana (sitting up): If you are looking for concealed weapons...
> She gestures to indicate "Where would I be carrying it?". Bond grins, plays with the black ribbon.
> - Tatiana: You do not think it is kulturny?
> - Bond: I'll tell you something kulturny. You're one of the most beautiful women in the world...
> - Tatiana: Thank you. I think my mouth is too big.
> - Bond: It's just the right size. For me anyway.

A kulturny line can be heard in the promotional trailer of the film, but it was cut during the editing.

The next day Bond is followed as he leaves his hotel. He jump off of his taxi at a traffic jam and hence loose his tails. He enter St. Sophia to retrieve a blueprint from Tatiana, but Bond's tail is here again and observe Tatiana. Bond overpower the man (in the film, Bond find its body: killed by Grant).

The ferry / M's office scene is shorter than the film, but ends with "James, it is so difficult to concentrate when you are doing that", while M and Moneypenny (who had been added during revisions) listen.

Kerim's son Stefan Tempo have inexplicably been renamed Mehmet in this script (which also abandon the idea of giving Grant a stethoscope).

Later Grant takes action, and overpower 007. He "frisks Bond swiftly, finds gunmetal cigarette case, tosses it onto seat"; which add a little suspense for those in the audience who had read the novel (since this cigarette case save Bond's life in it).

When Grant talk about the SPECTRE's plan:

- Bond: [A] film?
- Grant: Best show I ever saw. Shot in the bridal suite at the Kristal Palas, starring James Bond and Tatiana Romanova. Something else she didn't know about. What a performance!
- Bond: We should both get Oscars...

Later "the cartridge explodes, tear gas hissing into Grant's face. [...] Blinded, Grant fires wildly, emptying the gun, the shots muffled by the silencer. Shots shoot out lights leaving lit only blue security lamp. The cartridge continues hissing, filling compartment with smoke. Grant drops gun, gropes for Bond, both men gasping for air. Grant grapples with Bond, who breaks away from him, grabs the Lektor, and smashes the window for air".

At the end of the fight, Bond strangle Grant with his own garrote-watch, as in the movie.

The helicopter chase is closer to the film than ever, with Bond having the sniper rifle and hitting with it a man who was holding a grenade.

The boat chase still take place at nighttime.

We now find Bond and Tania on the terrace of their hotel at Venice. "From somewhere below them comes the tenor voice of a gondolier singing title song in Italian". Then there is the final confrontation with Rosa Klebb who is disguised as a chambermaid. In this script, Bond still menage to have Rosa poisoning herself: "He slide the chair down. [...] He twist it, turning foot with blade inward, to cut ankle of her other foot".

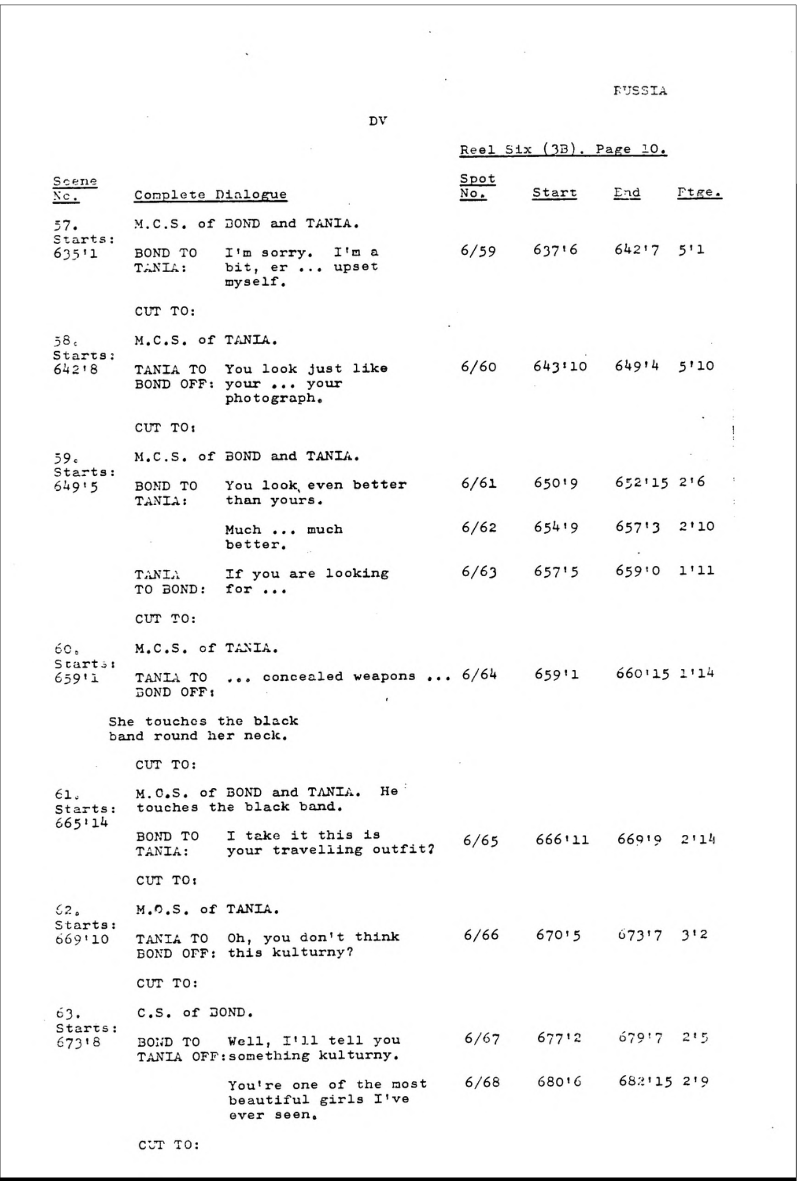
In the movie, the death of Klebb will be different, with Tatiana shooting her with a gun.

Terence Young about the helicopter scene: "this was my idea, it was a steal, of course, from Hitchcock's North by Northwest", in which the hero is chased by a cropduster. However, according to Maibaum, it was Broccoli's idea.

- Maibaum[40] : They couldn't get it right [having Bond kick Rosa's foot so that she kills herself]. In the scene the gun has been kicked out of Klebb's hand. I was standing with Cubby on the set watching them shooting the scene and I said to him: "for God's sake, there's a gun laying on the floor. Why doesn't the girl pick it up and shoot her?". Sometimes a writer should be on the set.

The end of this script is less abrupt than before since a scene (similar to the film) with Bond and the girl in a gondola have been added. However the scene will be shoot with an extra line when Bond is looking at the negative of the film taken by SPECTRE at the hotel: "He was right you know. What a performance!". It was a reference to the other "What a performance!" delivered by Grant earlier, when he confronted Bond in the Orient Express.

Both "What a performance!" lines were cuts during the editing at the request of the censor, which caused an awkward "jump" in the gondola sequence. Fun fact: the dialogue nevertheless happen in the french dubbed version of the film, with Bond saying to Tatiana "Il avait raison tu sais. Beau spectacle". (Grant's version of it is however not present in the french version).



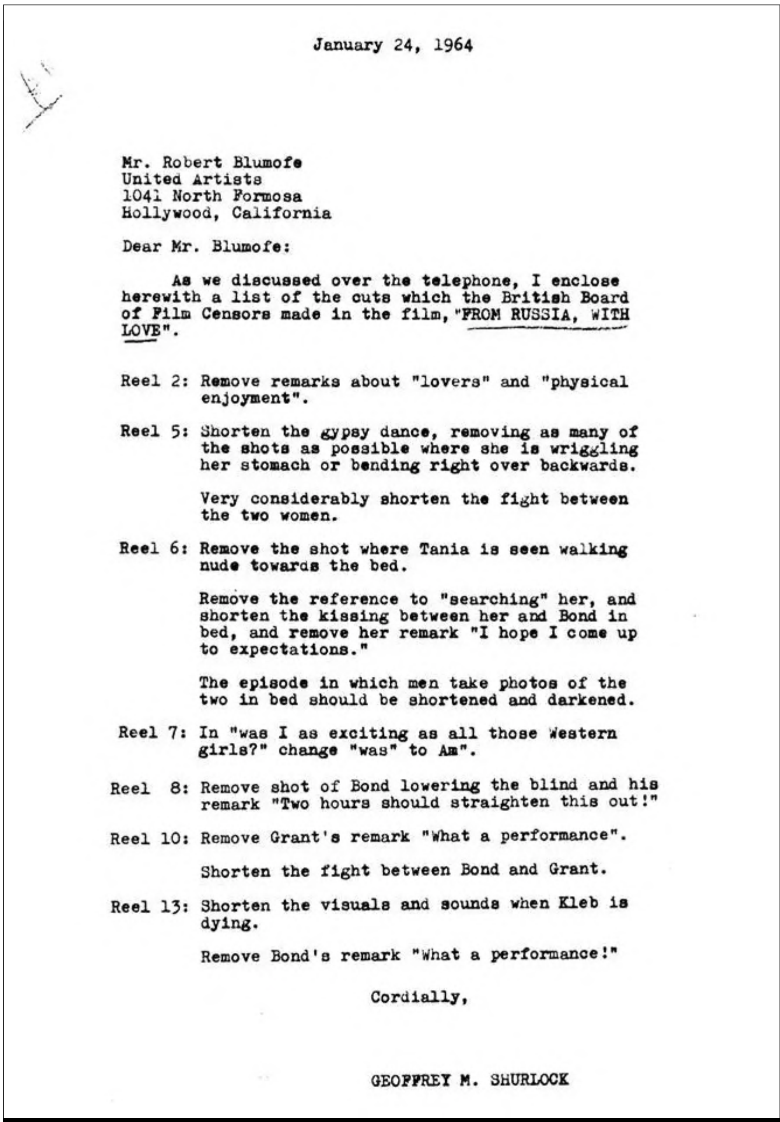
RUSSIA

DV

Reel Six (3B). Page 10.

Scene No.	Complete Dialogue		Spot No.	Start	End	Ftge.
57. Starts: 635'1	M.C.S. of BOND and TANIA.
	BOND TO TANIA:	I'm sorry. I'm a bit, er ... upset myself.	6/59	637'6	642'7	5'1
	CUT TO:
58. Starts: 642'8	M.C.S. of TANIA.
	TANIA TO BOND OFF:	You look just like your ... your photograph.	6/60	643'10	649'4	5'10
	CUT TO:
59. Starts: 649'5	M.C.S. of BOND and TANIA.
	BOND TO TANIA:	You look even better than yours.	6/61	650'9	652'15	2'6
		Much ... much better.	6/62	654'9	657'3	2'10
	TANIA TO BOND:	If you are looking for ...	6/63	657'5	659'0	1'11
	CUT TO:
60. Starts: 659'1	M.C.S. of TANIA.
	TANIA TO BOND OFF:	... concealed weapons ...	6/64	659'1	660'15	1'14
	She touches the black band round her neck.
	CUT TO:
61. Starts: 665'14	M.C.S. of BOND and TANIA. He touches the black band.
	BOND TO TANIA:	I take it this is your travelling outfit?	6/65	666'11	669'9	2'14
	CUT TO:
62. Starts: 669'10	M.C.S. of TANIA.
	TANIA TO BOND OFF:	Oh, you don't think this kulturny?	6/66	670'5	673'7	3'2
	CUT TO:
63. Starts: 673'8	C.S. of BOND.
	BOND TO TANIA OFF:	Well, I'll tell you something kulturny.	6/67	677'2	679'7	2'5
		You're one of the most beautiful girls I've ever seen.	6/68	680'6	682'15	2'9
	CUT TO:

Extract from a undated "international" "export script". I'm not sure to know what the precises uses theses types of scripts had, but I guess it was used for the editing, synchronising, revoicing and foreign dubbings. Anyway it's nowadays useful to know what dialogue was cuts during the editing.



January 24, 1964

Mr. Robert Blumofe
United Artists
1041 North Formosa
Hollywood, California

Dear Mr. Blumofe:

As we discussed over the telephone, I enclose herewith a list of the cuts which the British Board of Film Censors made in the film, "FROM RUSSIA, WITH LOVE".

Reel 2: Remove remarks about "lovers" and "physical enjoyment".

Reel 5: Shorten the gypsy dance, removing as many of the shots as possible where she is wriggling her stomach or bending right over backwards.

Very considerably shorten the fight between the two women.

Reel 6: Remove the shot where Tania is seen walking nude towards the bed.

Remove the reference to "searching" her, and shorten the kissing between her and Bond in bed, and remove her remark "I hope I come up to expectations."

The episode in which men take photos of the two in bed should be shortened and darkened.

Reel 7: In "was I as exciting as all those Western girls?" change "was" to Am".

Reel 8: Remove shot of Bond lowering the blind and his remark "Two hours should straighten this out!"

Reel 10: Remove Grant's remark "What a performance".

Shorten the fight between Bond and Grant.

Reel 13: Shorten the visuals and sounds when Kleb is dying.

Remove Bond's remark "What a performance!"

Cordially,

GEOFFREY M. SHURLOCK

Some of the requests made by the British censors can be found in this letter. Some scenes however survived, like the "remarks about lovers".

Just few more thing…

As actor Peter Burton was unavailable to play Boothroyd again, Desmond Llewelyn replaced him and thus became a cult actor in the saga. Llewelyn recalls that during filming, Terence Young objected to him being named Boothroyd: he couldn't be the same character as in Dr. No because of the actor change[41]. As a result, the character of Llewelyn is not named during the scene with M and Bond (but was still credited as Boothroyd in the final credits).

On the subject of credits, Maibaum says, "Johanna [Harwood] got an adaptation credit, because she worked some with the director, Terence Young, and made several good suggestions. I was a little put out that she was given an adaptation credit because I didn't think she deserved it, but there are always politics in these things"[42].

> - Johanna Harwood[43] : I was credited on From Russia with Love because my agent insisted, citing my first draft. Maibaum's objection is a bit much! I could just as well have objected to him having a credit on Dr. No! I had a proper contract for this second film, also at my agent's insistence.

Deighton didn't get a credit (and it's unknown how much of his contribution ended up in the film). Neither Berkely Mather, despite having rewrite some scenes and dialogue. We owe him in particular a more thriller aspect, Mather having added more presence to Red Grant as Bond's shadow in Istanbul; making him murder people and tail 007[44].

Note that Robert Shaw, who will play Grant, was initially tempted to refuse the role, calling the script "rubbish", before being convinced by his wife to swallow his pride[45]. Had Mather already enhanced Grant's role when this happened?

Like Deighton before him, Maibaum will go to Istanbul for the making of the film, as seen in a photo of him with Saltzman, getting his shoes shined. Berkely Mather also went to Istanbul for the film[46]. On her side, Johanna Harwood says she never went on any a trip for this film or the previous one[47].

According to documents held at London's The National Archives, payments to four writers were, on paper and in descending order: 6,875.63 £ for Richard Maibaum, 1,500 £ for Len Deighton, 1,500 £ for Berkely Mather and 675 £ for Johanna Harwood[48].

Sources/references from chapter 2: From Russia with Love

1 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in French with the author (2024).

2 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in French with the author (2024).

3 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).

4 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in English with the author (2024).

5 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).

6 "When Harry Met Cubby" by Robert Sellers (2019).

7 007 Magazine, http://www.007magazine.co.uk/johanna_harwood_interview.htm , Harwood's interview by Frédéric Albert Lévy, 2022.
Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

8 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

9 "Meet the Irishwoman who wrote the first James Bond movie" by Shauna McGreevy on RTÉ (January 11, 2025):
https://www.rte.ie/culture/2025/0111/1489697-meet-the-irishwoman-who-wrote-the-first-james-bond-movie/

10 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

11 007 Magazine, http://www.007magazine.co.uk/johanna_harwood_interview.htm , Harwood's interview by Frédéric Albert Lévy, 2022.

12 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

13 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

14 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

15 "Meet the Irishwoman who wrote the first James Bond movie" by Shauna McGreevy on RTÉ (January 11, 2025):
https://www.rte.ie/culture/2025/0111/1489697-meet-the-irishwoman-who-wrote-the-first-james-bond-movie/

16 "James Bond: My Long and Eventful Search for His Father" by Len Deighton (2012).

17 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in English with the author (2024).

18 "James Bond: My Long and Eventful Search for His Father" by Len Deighton (2012).

19 For Len Deighton biography, see for the sources:
"The Len Deighton Dossier" website : https://deightondossier.net/author/
Len Deighton's Wikipedia page.

20 "James Bond: My Long and Eventful Search for His Father" by Len Deighton (2012).

21 "N*ew Q&A by Len Deighton*" in The Len Deighton Dossier website:
http://deightondossier.blogspot.com/2012/11/deighton-dossier-exclusive-new-q-by-len.html

22 "James Bond: My Long and Eventful Search for His Father" by Len Deighton (2012).

23 "James Bond: My Long and Eventful Search for His Father" by Len Deighton (2012).

24 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

25 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

26 "James Bond: My Long and Eventful Search for His Father" by Len Deighton (2012).

27 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).

28 "James Bond: A Celebration" by Peter Haining (1987).

29 "James Bond: My Long and Eventful Search for His Father" by Len Deighton (2012).

30 "BFI Film Classics: From Russia with Love" by Llewella Chapman (2022).

31 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).

32 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

33 "When Harry Met Cubby" by Robert Sellers (2019).

34 Criterion banned audio commentary of From Russia with Love:
https://www.the007dossier.com/2011/04/21/banned-james-bond-commentaries

35 "The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).

36 "The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).

37 "The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).

38 "The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).

39 "BFI Film Classics: From Russia with Love" by Llewella Chapman (2022).

40 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
"Saturday Night at the Movies 007 Screenwriter Richard Maibaum Part 2" on YouTube Steve Rubin's channel:
https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=80CBHIhQ6JI

41 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

42 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).

43 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in English with the author (2024).

44 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).

45 "Don't Let the Bastards Grind You Down: How One Generation of British Actors Changed the World" by Robert Sellers (2011); via "When Harry Met Cubby" by Robert Sellers (2019).

46 Wynne Weston-Davies (Berkely Mather's son) at Ewbank's auction page "James Bond - Goldfinger (1964) Berkely Mathers Association copy script": https://www.ewbankauctions.co.uk/20240607B-lot-8025A-James-Bond-

Goldfinger-1964-Berkely-Mathers-copy-script-title-page-reads?view=lot_detail&auction_id=928

47 Johanna Harwood interview conducted in French with the author (2024).

48 "BFI Film Classics: From Russia with Love" by Llewella Chapman (2022).

JAMES BOND IS BACK IN ACTION!
EVERYTHING HE TOUCHES TURNS TO EXCITEMENT!
ALBERT R. BROCCOLI and HARRY SALTZMAN present
SEAN CONNERY as AGENT 007
in IAN FLEMING'S
"GOLDFINGER"
TECHNICOLOR
GERT FROBE as GOLDFINGER
HONOR BLACKMAN as PUSSY GALORE
SHIRLEY EATON
UNITED ARTISTS

Release date (premiere):
17 September 1964

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Screenplay by Richard Maibaum and Paul Dehn"

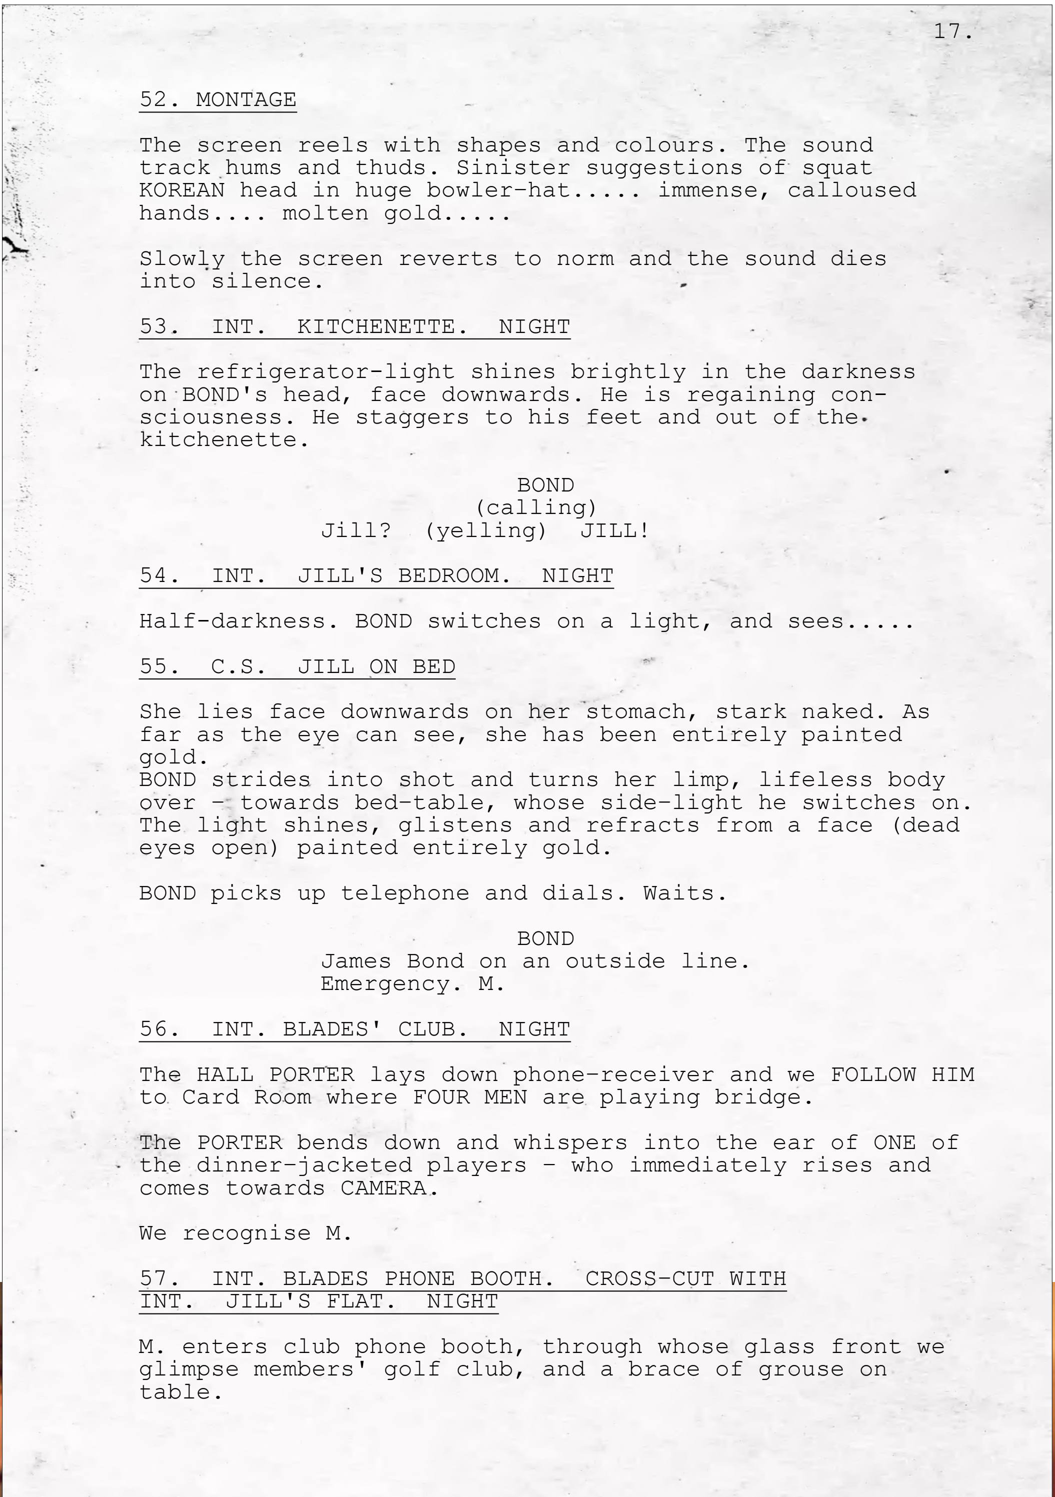
Director :..............................Guy Hamilton
Producers :...........Albert R. Broccoli & Harry Saltzman
Director photography :..........Ted Moore
Set Designer :...........................Ken Adam
Composer :..............................John Barry
Editor :.......................................Peter Hunt
Title sequence :..........Robert Brownjohn
Title song vocals :.............Shirley Bassey



17.

52. MONTAGE

The screen reels with shapes and colours. The sound track hums and thuds. Sinister suggestions of squat KOREAN head in huge bowler-hat..... immense, calloused hands.... molten gold.....

Slowly the screen reverts to norm and the sound dies into silence.

53. INT. KITCHENETTE. NIGHT

The refrigerator-light shines brightly in the darkness on BOND's head, face downwards. He is regaining consciousness. He staggers to his feet and out of the kitchenette.

BOND
(calling)
Jill? (yelling) JILL!

54. INT. JILL'S BEDROOM. NIGHT

Half-darkness. BOND switches on a light, and sees.....

55. C.S. JILL ON BED

She lies face downwards on her stomach, stark naked. As far as the eye can see, she has been entirely painted gold.
BOND strides into shot and turns her limp, lifeless body over - towards bed-table, whose side-light he switches on. The light shines, glistens and refracts from a face (dead eyes open) painted entirely gold.

BOND picks up telephone and dials. Waits.

BOND
James Bond on an outside line.
Emergency. M.

56. INT. BLADES' CLUB. NIGHT

The HALL PORTER lays down phone-receiver and we FOLLOW HIM to Card Room where FOUR MEN are playing bridge.

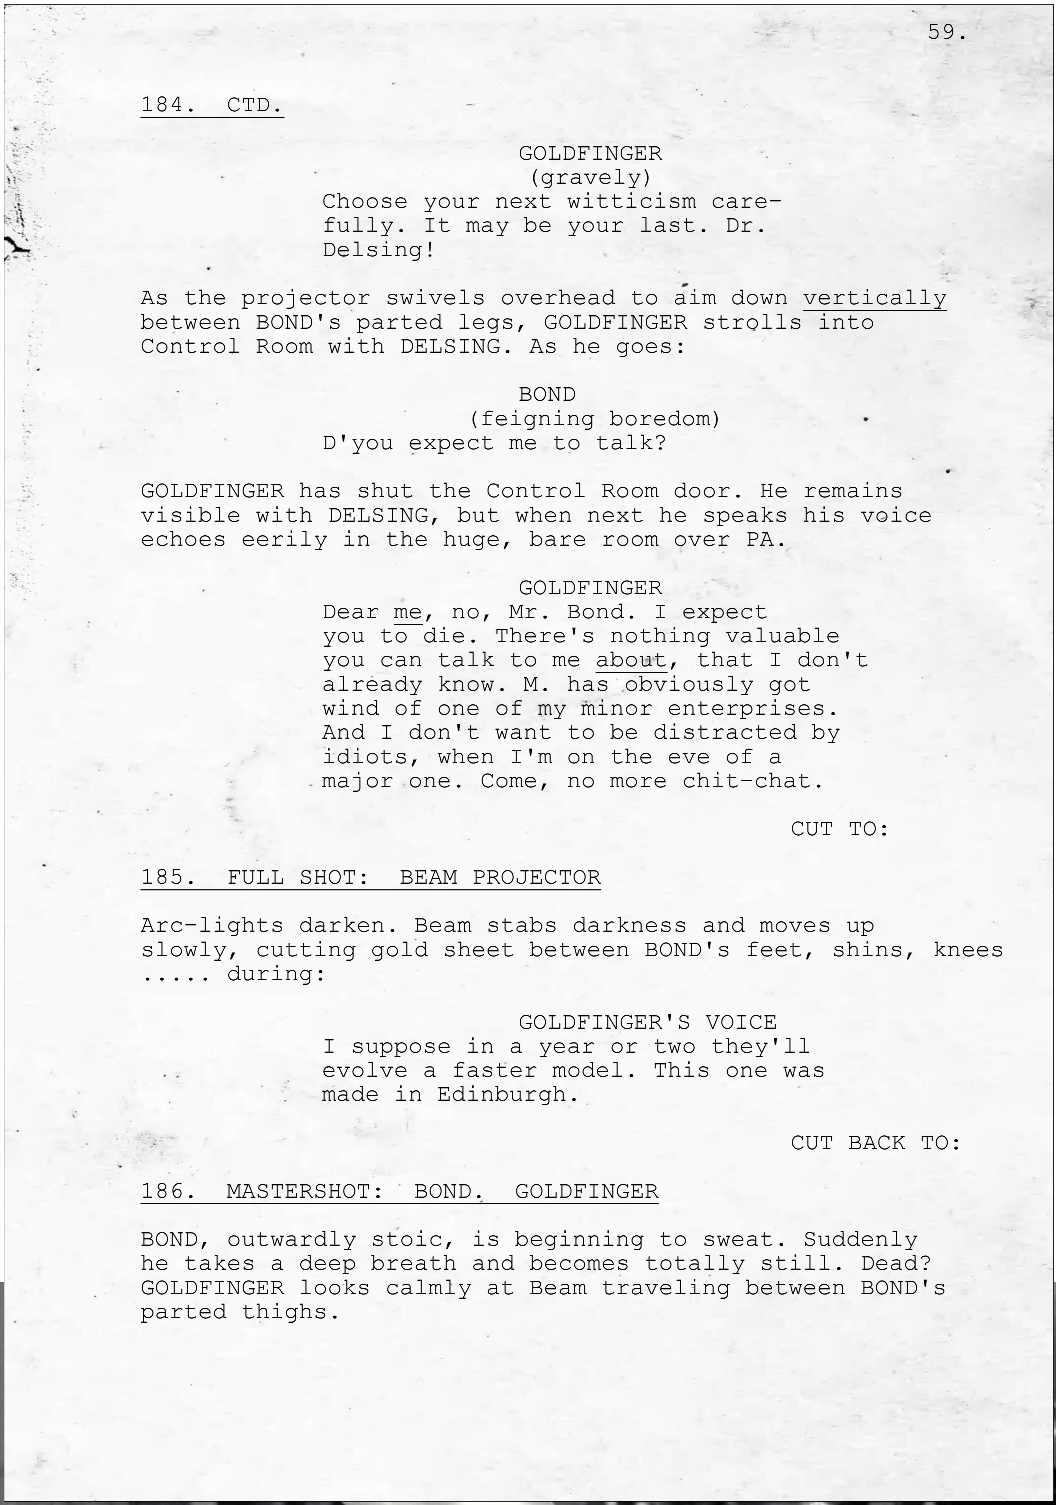
The PORTER bends down and whispers into the ear of ONE of the dinner-jacketed players - who immediately rises and comes towards CAMERA.

We recognise M.

57. INT. BLADES PHONE BOOTH. CROSS-CUT WITH
INT. JILL'S FLAT. NIGHT

M. enters club phone booth, through whose glass front we glimpse members' golf club, and a brace of grouse on table.

CHAPTER 3



59.

184. CTD.

GOLDFINGER
(gravely)
Choose your next witticism carefully. It may be your last. Dr. Delsing!

As the projector swivels overhead to aim down vertically between BOND's parted legs, GOLDFINGER strolls into Control Room with DELSING. As he goes:

BOND
(feigning boredom)
D'you expect me to talk?

GOLDFINGER has shut the Control Room door. He remains visible with DELSING, but when next he speaks his voice echoes eerily in the huge, bare room over PA.

GOLDFINGER
Dear me, no, Mr. Bond. I expect you to die. There's nothing valuable you can talk to me about, that I don't already know. M. has obviously got wind of one of my minor enterprises. And I don't want to be distracted by idiots, when I'm on the eve of a major one. Come, no more chit-chat.

CUT TO:

185. FULL SHOT: BEAM PROJECTOR

Arc-lights darken. Beam stabs darkness and moves up slowly, cutting gold sheet between BOND's feet, shins, knees ..... during:

GOLDFINGER'S VOICE
I suppose in a year or two they'll evolve a faster model. This one was made in Edinburgh.

CUT BACK TO:

186. MASTERSHOT: BOND. GOLDFINGER

BOND, outwardly stoic, is beginning to sweat. Suddenly he takes a deep breath and becomes totally still. Dead? GOLDFINGER looks calmly at Beam traveling between BOND's parted thighs.

Cast:

James Bond :.........................Sean Connery
Auric Goldfinger :.....................Gert Fröbe
Pussy Galore :..................Honor Blackman
Oddjob :................................Harold Sakata
Jill Masterson :......................Shirley Eaton
Tilly Masterson :....................Tania Mallet
Felix Leiter :..............................Cec Linder
M :..Bernard Lee
Moneypenny :.......................Lois Maxwell
Q :.................................Desmond Llewelyn

Main filming locations: Switzerland, USA and UK.

Cult. The film that will define the standard formula of the saga, it contains all the elements that make James Bond the success that it has become. The megalomaniac villain brilliantly played by Gert Fröbe, the indestructible Oddjob with his menacing hat, the incredible set of the interior of Fort Knox imagined by Ken Adam, the laser, the legendary song by Shirley Bassey including the first notes by John Barry that are already setting the tone or the Aston Martin DB5 which will become the car par excellence associated with James Bond (even if it must be admitted that its almost systematic re-use since the Brosnan era has a lot to do with it). A film also with a little more humor than the previous ones. The film (and its star) will be immersed in "Bondmania", this completely crazy public craze for the character, with all kinds of merchandises, and a wave of imitative/parody spy films.

GOLDFINGER

Table of contents

Goldfinger

Bond in novels....114
Goldfinger: the novel....116
Reflections on the adaptation of the novel....118
May 19, 1963' treatment: Mexico, Curry, DB3 and laser....119
July 8, 1963' treatment: Bentley, premature death and tank....127
First draft' script: Sierra, horsebox and golden Pussy....132
Enter Mather and Paul Dehn....138
December 23, 1963' script: dead dog, DB5 and inside Fort Knox....140
Maibaum's reaction....152
Connery's reaction....153
February 26, 1964' script....154

Bond in novels

The film Goldfinger is undoubtedly the one who perfected the formula of the previous films and paved the way for the following ones. It is here that all the quintessential codes and ingredients come together and are sometimes even being introduced. This includes:

- A pre-title sequence with action, unrelated (or little related) to the plot.
- A song with lyrics against a backdrop of naked women as a credit sequence.
- Flirting with Moneypenny.
- Briefing with M.
- Obtaining gadgets (and/or a vehicle) from Q.
- About three Bond girls.
- A charismatic villain with a grandiose plan.
- A first duel or civilized meeting with him (such as a game of cards or golf).
- A memorable henchman.
- A villain's lair (and other places) which are just as memorable/exotics.
- Action with music notes from the James Bond Theme.
- A bit of humor, with notably puns and double entendres.
- A last-minute death trap from which Bond escapes...
- ...Before ending up in the girl's arms.

To this end, it is interesting to see what there is of the literary Bond in this winning film formula. What are the differences between the Bond from the films and the one from the novels? What did the screenwriters keep, what did they left out, what did they invented?

One of the things that differs between the two universes is that the literary Bond has and uses very few of the gadgets of the Q Branch: knives hidden in shoes, the Identicast (similar to the Identigraph from the film From Your Eyes Only), a suitcase (in which gun magazines, gold sovereigns, a throwing knife are hidden), the few pieces of equipment from the Aston Martin in Goldfinger, diving suit, false documents, and... Not much more! In fact, 007 has the following thought in From Russia, With Love:

> - Chapter 26: He puffed away at his cigarette. If only it had been a trick one, magnesium flare, or anything he could throw in the man's face! If only his Service went in for those explosive toys!

Gadgets are really the hallmark of the films and not of the literary Bond. Humor, with its one-liners, (and sometimes turning to a comedy aspect), is also something specific to films and described by the filmmakers as important for releasing tension of the spectators following scenes that leave them gripping their seats[1] (and also to help to pass the censorship). The James Bond of the novels doesn't particularly have a sense of humor and he sometimes thinks during his downtime about how he dislike taking human lives.

One of the other differences between the two medias is that Fleming writes for "warm-blooded heterosexual adults"[2] ("They're [my novels] not meant for schoolboys"[3]), while the filmmakers make films for the whole family, children/schoolboys included.

One thing both universes have in common is Bond's excessive drinking and smoking. Like his creator, James can smoke up to 70 cigarettes a day (!) and, there is no doubt: he is what you might call an alcoholic. If we take the sole example of On Her Majesty's Secret Service: Bond consumes no less than 46 alcoholic drinks in this novel. One that he consumes in almost every book is the simple martini, dry-martini or vodka martini (which he sometimes specifies "shaken, not stirred").

He occasionally combines his consumption of alcohol with the one of drugs: in Moonraker he accompanies his champagne with benzedrine (amphetamine) before his card game against Hugo Drax. He also uses it to stimulate himself on missions, particularly when he swims in Live and Let Die, or to stay awake and alert as in The Spy Who Loved Me.

In terms of food, it is not surprising that one of the dishes that Bond regularly eats is scrambled eggs, being Ian Fleming's favorite dish.

Physically, the character is described as having blue-gray eyes and a mouth that giving him a cruel appearance ("quality" that the women he meets like). A comma-shaped lock of black hair falls across his forehead and he has a scar on his right cheek (the source of which Fleming never explained). For his clothing style, James Bond favors the dark blue tropical suit (sometimes he does not wear the jacket), Sea Island silk or cotton shirts with a black knitted silk tie, black shoes or moccasins, and a Rolex Oyster Perpetual watch[4].

Under his costume 007 wears a chamois holster to carry his Beretta .25, which is replaced after Dr. No, by a Berns-Martin Triple Draw holster to transport his Walther PPK.

Bond lives in a comfortable Regency-style apartment in the Chelsea neighborhood and has a housekeeper named May to look after his property.

In the office he shares a secretary with other 00 agents: from Moonraker to Thunderball her name is Loelia Ponsonby. When Miss Ponsonby leaves to get married around On Her Majesty's Secret Service, she will be replaced by a certain Mary Goodnight.

In front of M, Bond doesn't have this "I know everything about everything" side that he can have in the films.

Finally, if Bond can prove to be sexist in the books as on screen, the filmmakers have nevertheless decided not to include the racist, homophobic and anti-Semitic sides of the character in the films and their screenplays. Indeed in the novels 007 is a man of his time who can sometimes use the words "negro/negress", think that Koreans are "rather lower than apes in the mammalian hierarchy"[5], that "women were for recreation"[6] or that gays are "a herd of unhappy sexual misfits, barren and full of frustrations"[7].

A complete biography of the literary character (including his childhood, studies, career, appearance, tastes, vices, attitudes and other habits & skills) can be found on the following website page that I had compiled few years ago, in the section "Biographie du James Bond de Ian Fleming": https://jamesbond007.net/Categorie/les-romans-de-ian-fleming/

Goldfinger: the novel

IAN FLEMING
GOLDFINGER
IAN FLEMING
GOLDFINGER

Regarding the novel Goldfinger of 1959 in particular, the plot begins with James Bond who, while at a Miami airport after stopping a Mexican heroin trade, is accosted by Junius Du Pont (a man he crossed during Casino Royale). Du Pont asks him to observe his canasta partner, Auric Goldfinger, because he thinks the latter is cheating; although Goldfinger is the richest man in England. 007 accepts and quickly realizes that Goldfinger is indeed cheating with the help of his "companion", Jill Masterton, who spies on Du Pont's cards with a pair of binoculars. Bond forces Goldfinger to admit his cheating and pay a compensation to Du Pont; Bond also has a brief relationship with Jill.

Coincidentally, back in London, Bond is given the mission by M to investigate Goldfinger's activities. The man would smuggle gold out of England according to the Bank of England and the M also suspects him of being the treasurer of SMERSH. 007 knows from his conversation with Goldfinger in Miami that he is a regular at the Royal St. Marks golf club in Sandwich (fictitious golf club, probably based on the Royal St. George's).

Bond thus organizes an "accidental" meeting at the club during which the two men agree to compete in golf for $10,000. During the match Bond notices that Goldfinger is cheating again but manages to beat him at his own game. Goldfinger is furious but pays Bond what he owes him and invites him to dinner at his residence in Reculver.

007 accepts the invitation and goes to the residence where he meets Goldfinger's handyman, a Korean black belt in karate named Oddjob who wears a sharp bowler hat. Bond suggests he's in the drug business in order to make Goldfinger an offer, but Goldfinger doesn't take the bait. Later 007 plants a tracker on Goldfinger's Rolls-Royce and follows him in an Aston Martin DB3 (DB Mark III) from England to Switzerland.

On the road, Bond sees Goldfinger hiding a gold ingot under a bridge and becomes suspicious about another car driven by a woman. Afraid that she might be an enemy agent, he disables her car by crashing into her. Bond puts her in his Aston: she says her name is Tilly Soames and claims to be a golfer who is going to participate in a championship in Switzerland.

Goldfinger stops at one of his factories in Switzerland where his workers dismantle his Rolls-Royce to melt the body which is actually made of gold. The gold will be transformed into an airplane seat for an Indian airline, a country where the value of gold is much higher than in England. Near the factory, Bond surprises Tilly trying to assassinate Goldfinger. 007 confronts her and she reveals to him that she is in reality Tilly Masterton, Jill Masterton's sister. She tells Bond that she wants revenge because Goldfinger had Tilly killed, by painting her with gold.

Bond and Tilly are however spotted and captured. 007 is then tied up on a circular saw' table where Goldfinger interrogates him with the help of Oddjob. In a desperate attempt to avoid being cut in two by the saw, Bond offers Goldfinger to work for him; which Goldfinger first refuses before accepting.

007 regains consciousness in New York: Goldfinger didn't kill him. He wants Bond and Tilly to work as his "secretaries" for one of the biggest heists in history that he prepares, Operation Grand Slam: robing the gold of Fort Knox. To do this, Goldfinger brings together six of the biggest crime syndicate leaders in the United States, including a certain Pussy Galore, a lesbian, who is at the head of the organization The Cement Mixer.

Bond and Tilly attend the meeting where details of the Operation Grand Slam are revealed: poisoning the drinking water around Fort Knox with a sedative, posing as members of the Red Cross, using a nuclear warhead to open the gold vault, evacuating the gold with the help of a hundred trucks and a train. One of the gang leaders, Helmut Springer, refuses to be part of the operation and is killed by Oddjob.

After the meeting, Bond learns from Goldfinger that the drinking water will actually be poisoned with a deadly substance and that Goldfinger intends to flee with his share to Russia on a Soviet cruiser.

Aware of the plan, Bond leaves a note describing the operation in the toilet of Goldfinger's private plane; hoping that when the airport cleaning crew comes across it, they will deliver it to Felix Leiter of Pinkerton (the note states that a reward will be offered if anyone delivers it to Felix).

On D-day, the operation Grand Slam begins and it turns out that someone actually delivered the message to Leiter. The soldiers of Fort Knox that everyone thought dead or asleep get up and attack Goldfinger's men and the ones of the gang leaders before they had the chance to enter the vault. During the battle Tilly is killed by Oddjob and his hat. Goldfinger, Pussy Galore and Oddjob manage to escape.

Two days later Bond is drugged as he is about to take a flight to London. He wakes up on a plane where Goldfinger, Pussy Galore and Oddjob are: the leaders of SMERSH want Bond to be brought back to Russia. 007 manages to break a window, which causes the plane to depressurize: Oddjob is sucked out of the plane and Bond strangles Goldfinger to death. With a gun, Bond forces the crew to land in the sea, where 007 and Pussy are rescued. The novel ends as Bond is about to make love to her...

Reflections on the adaptation of the novel

On April 30, 1963, Richard Maibaum writes to producers Broccoli and Saltzman his opinion on the novel and how to adapt it. He begins by pointing out the problems: there isn't enough action at the beginning and not enough romance. While in his eyes, Dr. No is a "mystery" story, From Russia with Love a "suspense" one, Goldfinger is for him a "duel" story between two men. He then emphasizes that the subject is indeed the story of a duel and not one of a robbery.

Maibaum believes the novel's plot has holes, such as the coincidence of Bond meeting Goldfinger just before being assigned a mission on him. He foresees some problems that removing SMERSH from the story would cause: "it reduces Goldfinger's lust for gold to a merely psychopathic obsession". What does he do with his gold? For the scene in the novel where Goldfinger hides an ingot in France: who will this ingot be intended for now? And where does Goldfinger fly to in the end now that Russia won't be involved? Maybe we can fly him to a country never expressly mentioned? "I agree that Smersh should not be involved, or Spectre".

Maibaum also thinks that the film should open with an action scene, "perhaps in Mexico, as in the book". 007 should also discover something more in Goldfinger's room than Jill helping him cheating, but what? Maibaum doesn't know yet, he suggests perhaps ingots marked with a Z? After Jill's death, Bond could inform M of his discovery. M would then contact Colonel Smithers and launch an investigation into Goldfinger. Thus the problem of coincidence would be resolved: it is this chance meeting that would lead 007 to his mission.

Maibaum also thinks that the idea of Jill being painted gold is "too good and [too] startling to be throw away as it is in the book" where Bond learns it just through a dialogue with Tilly. Maibaum insists on making the scene with the circular saw disappear: it's a melodrama thing as old as time, according to him: "it's comic by now". He says he is considering replacing it with a laser that he read about in the magazine Life.

Finally, Maibaum ends his letter by suggesting actor Victor Buono for the role of Goldfinger.

May 19, 1963' treatment: Mexico, Curry, DB3 and laser

On May 19, 1963, several months before the release of From Russia with Love, Richard Maibaum completes a 61-page treatment for Goldfinger. Everything is very faithful to Fleming's original work, as evidenced by the numerous "as in the novel" that you will read below. We are going to talk more precisely about a revised version (which bears the same date but surely completed later) of 59 pages; having read both there are few differences, just a few corrections which are not worth to be noted.

These treatments open with the gunbarrel and we see that it is once again (as a time envisaged for From Russia with Love) planned to superimpose the credits on the action sequence. About this action we find ourselves directly in the South American café with Bonita and explosions, with a calm Bond sipping his drink:

> - Bond: Another revolution?
> - Bonita: Who cares?

Unlike the film, there is no earlier scene where we see 007 infiltrate and plant bombs, and for good reason: in this treatment it doesn't seem to be him who planted them! Indeed Felix Leiter joins Bond at the café and tells him that the mission is accomplished. 007 walks to a telephone booth, dials a number and speaks through a handkerchief to mask his voice, similar to the novel:

> - Bond: Senior Blackwell? I'm from England. That white stuff you've been shipping over there and to the States has killed quite a few young people. Damaged a lot of others. We got your warehouse tonight. Get out of business and stay out or next time it'll be you.

Leiter tells Bond that they should quickly leave the country now: there is a flight to Miami tomorrow. In the meantime, Bond, who has an opportunity with Bonita, intends to spend the night with her. He joins her room and things unfold like the film ("the Capungo" arrives, reflect in the eye, he ends up electrocuted, "positively shocking").

After that we have a shot of a plane landing. At Miami airport, Bond and Leiter learn that another flight that was supposed to take them to Washington has been delayed. 007 is going to stay in Miami a little longer: he wants to take this opportunity to drink until he becomes drunk (he hasn't been drunk in years, we are told).

Leiter knows it is the fact that he killed someone (Capungo) that is bothering Bond and tries to cheer him up with phrases from the novel (Bond's inner thoughts that he has in the first chapter when he reflects on the life he has taken). An example: "People are killing other people all the time [...] miners dig uranium for H-bombs and taxpayers put up the dough to manufacture them".

At one point Leiter leaves because he has things to do. While 007 is ordering another drink, a man named "DuPont" recognizes Bond and goes to see him (the character is therefore spelled differently from the novel in which he appears as Junius "Du Pont"). We are told that Bond and DuPont took part in a big game in a French casino a few years ago (those who have read the novel Goldfinger know that these are the events of Casino Royale). Almost like in the novel, DuPont wants to hire Bond to find out if Auric Goldfinger, his gin partner, is cheating.

If Bond is initially not interested, he quickly finds himself at the "Floridiana Cabana Club" investigating for DuPont, who introduces him to Goldfinger. After DuPont clarifies that Goldfinger is agoraphobic (an important element of the third chapter of the novel, which bears the name The Man With Agoraphobia), reason why he sits in front of the hotel, 007 goes to investigate toward Goldfinger's hotel room. There he discovers Jill Masterson (with an S, unlike the novel where it is "Masterton") who helps Goldfinger cheat (similar to the novel/film). Bond takes a photo as proof. After talking with her, Bond speaks to Goldfinger on the radio and forces him to apologize and pay restitution to DuPont and himself (which includes a ticket to the Silver Meteor, as in Fleming's).

There's then a scene where Bond and Jill sip champagne at Goldfinger's expense on the train; then we find Bond working (night shift) at Universal Exports. He hates office work and he is in the company of Moneypenny. He has a translation of a Russian combat manual; she asks what it is and he makes a delicate demonstration on her. The phone rings: it's Jill who wants to invite him to her house (Bond tries to hide his telephone conversation from Moneypenny).

007 goes to Jill's apartment in London and discovers her body, painted in gold.

We then find Bond in M's office. "So Bond's womanizing has finally caught up with him" thinks M, who is worried about 007's Universal Exports cover, but Bond says he did not call the authorities. 007 checked: Goldfinger wasn't in town but he'd like to investigate further. M is hesitant, it's not his department's responsibility, but he tells Bond that Colonel Smithers of the Bank of England might be interested by Goldfinger.

Bond goes (without M) to the Bank of England and meets Smithers who tells him about his fight against gold smuggling. According to Smithers, Goldfinger is a respectable man (he wouldn't smuggle), but since Bond discovered that the bottom of his suitcases were plated with gold when he searched his room in Florida, an investigation should be carried out.

Aston Martin DB Mark III

007 goes to the MI6 garage where he chooses a gray Aston Martin DB III. "Curry", the dispatcher, tells him the car has a few options: heavy-duty bumpers, a phone, head-lights and other lights that can change color, a long-barreled Colt .45 in a compartment, and a receiver to track a tracking beacon (Curry gives him one). In short: what we find in the novel (and most of these gadgets will ultimately remain unused in the rest of the story).

On the road the phone rings, it's M who asks his agent if he had been drinking: a woman found Jill's body, but when the police arrived she was not painted gold. Bond, disconcerted, almost crashes into a Ford Popular.

Goldfinger and Oddjob arrive in Rolls to the golf club Royal St. Marks. Bond is there, he speaks with Goldfinger:

- Bond: By the way, how's that nice Miss Masterson?
- Goldfinger: You haven't heard? She passed away. Yesterday as a matter of fact. I've only just learned about it myself.
- Bond: Dead? Of what? How?
- Goldfinger: The newspaper account was very vague.

They agree to compete in a golf game for money. They go onto the course with their caddies (a certain "Foulks" or "Foulkes" for Goldfinger; Hawker for Bond; Oddjob is not with them).

- Bond: How's the agoraphobia? Doesn't all this wide open space bother you? Your hearing seems to have improved, too.
- Goldfinger: Let's play golf, Mr. Bond.

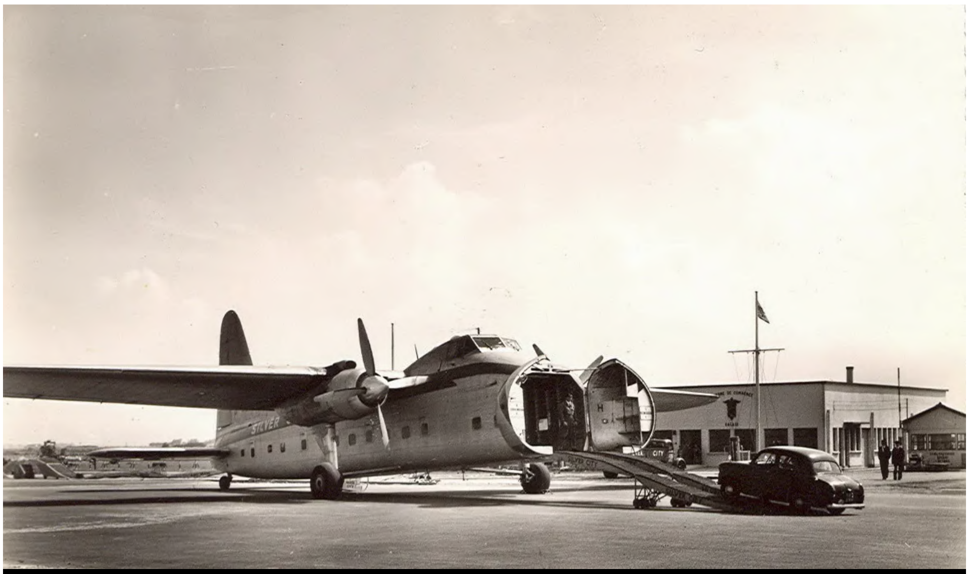
At one point Bond criticizes Goldfinger for making noise with the coins in his pocket (an attitude which distracts Bond). On the 17th hole, Goldfinger cheats similar to the movie (Foulks/Foulkes drops a ball out of his pants). In this treatment it is Hawker (and not Bond) who has his foot on Goldfinger's real ball. 007 wins by cheating like in the novel/film and Goldfinger invites him to dinner tonight at his house (a place called The Grange).

Bond goes there (the place is described according to the novel) and is greeted by Oddjob who leads him to Goldfinger. They talk, Goldfinger says he wants to hire him but for the moment he has to leave to resolve a problem with one of his employees. Goldfinger leaves with Oddjob, leaving Bond alone at The Grange.

007 takes the opportunity to search the premises: he sees Koreans working on the Rolls in a workshop and, in Goldfinger's room, he discovers a statue of a woman painted in gold as well as a camera. Goldfinger and Oddjob return; Oddjob demonstrates to Bond his power with his bare hands (as well as the one of his hat) on various objects. Goldfinger tells Oddjob that he can have the cat (seen in previous scenes) for dinner.

> - Goldfinger: You see my power, Mr. Bond. [...] If Oddjob had used the appropriate single blow on any one of seven spots in your body, you would be dead now.
> - Bond: Very interesting, Goldfinger. I only know five ways to kill Oddjob with one blow.

As they go to dinner, the treatment cuts directly to a scene at an airport where Goldfinger, Oddjob and the Rolls board a Bristol plane. Before the plane takes off, Bond boards it and places a tracking beacon in the Rolls. He then gets back to his Aston Martin and phones M to tell him that he will take the next flight (as in the novel M tells him that someone gave Scotland Yard a tip saying that Bond had undeclared money).



Bristol Type 170 Freighter.

Later Bond follows Goldfinger on the roads of France and Switzerland and notices that he is not the only one: a brunette at the wheel of a Triumph convertible who "driving like a man" also follows Goldfinger. 007 deliberately hits her car. She introduces herself to him as Tilly Soames:

> - Bond: It isn't often you see a girl you'd ram a car for.
> - Tilly: So you did it on purpose!
> - Bond: Of course. Aren't you flattered?
> [...]
> - Tilly: Mr. Bond, I'm definitely not interested.

After dropping Tilly off somewhere in Switzerland, Bond goes to Goldfinger's enterprise at night. There he sees Tilly again, who has a sniper rifle with her. 007 stops her from shooting Goldfinger in time. She then reveals to him that she is Jill's sister and that she is the person who removed the gold paint from her body. She also explains that Goldfinger has a girl painted (without killing) every month (a detail present in the novel).

Oddjob and guards suddenly appear; 007 tries to pull out his weapon but is overpowered by the Korean. They are brought to Goldfinger who explains to Bond that part of the Rolls is made of gold and is being recast into airplane seats. There is the famous line of dialogue which gives its name to the three parts of the novel:

> - Goldfinger: Mr. Bond, they have saying in Chicago [about crossing path with someone]. Once is happenstance. Twice is coincidence. The third time it's enemy action.

We now find Bond tied to a table in the "Pressure Room" and unlike the novel, he is not threatened by a circular saw but a laser (as in the film); the screenwriter also makes reference to it:

> - Goldfinger: The red light you see above you is a laser beam. It is many times more efficient then the most powerful circular electrical saw. I find it invaluable in our industrial processes.

> - Richard Maibaum (about the saw in the novel)[8] : It would have looked like something out of The Perils of Pauline and the audience would have laughed us out of the theater!

Goldfinger would prove to be the first film to feature this technology on screen. The famous exchange of the film ("Do you expect me to talk? - No, Mr Bond, I expect you to die!") is isn't present here. And while the laser progresses, the scene suddenly cuts and we find Bond regaining consciousness in company of Tilly in a room. 007 believes he is in "heaven"; Oddjob comes to bring clothes and 007 makes demands on him like in the novel (bourbon, cigarettes, see Goldfinger, "Chop-chop").

Oddjob carries them out, including the visit of Goldfinger who then comes to explain that they are currently in New York and now his employees (Bond as a sort of assistant/secretary of Goldfinger and Tilly as Bond's secretary). He has a project that will bring him (and them) a lot of money. There are some brilliant dialogues from the novel which are repeated here such as "my hand hesitated to destroy a utensil with the durability I observed in yourself", "all my life I have been in love with gold, its color, its brilliance, its divine heaviness", "I invest, I smuggle, I steal" or even "What are we going to do? Rob the end of the rainbow?".

(For the moment Goldfinger doesn't reveal to Bond that the target is Fort Knox). When Goldfinger leaves him alone with Tilly, Bond kisses the latter but she "furiously" breaks the kiss saying "I hate men!" and that she will kill him if he touches her again:

> - Bond: The challenge is attractive. But don't worry: I won't take it up.

Bond has Tilly make copies of a memo as Goldfinger requested. Later we find Bond, Tilly, Goldfinger and Oddjob in a conference room with six organized crime gangsters, including a woman: Pussy Galore. Goldfinger makes the introductions and explains to his audience that he wants to rob Fort Knox: this is the operation Grand Slam. There are many dialogues here that again paraphrase the novel.

We note that the substance with which Goldfinger wants to "poison" the water reserves around Fort Knox is called "GBX" here (instead of the simple "GB" of the novel). According to Goldfinger it converts into a gaseous state on contact with oxygen and would not be fatal:

> - Goldfinger: Every time a tap is turned, a toilet flushed, a shower turned on, in short, whenever water is used, GBX gas will be released. [...] [Its effect] induces narcosis for forty-eight hours.

An atomic warhead will be used to blow up Fort Knox's massive vault door. The gangster Helmut Springer doesn't wish to participate in Goldfinger's project and is eliminated off-screen (the famous fall down the stairs, as Goldfinger also says in the novel).

Later Bond, Oddjob and Tilly make plans for the robbery. Goldfinger reveals to them that the GBX is in fact deadly. Once alone with Tilly, Bond makes her type a message which says that if it is found by anyone, it must be transmitted to Felix Leiter of the CIA (there is a reward for whoever transmits the message to him).

After that we find Bond in a Beechcraft plane with Goldfinger, Oddjob, the gangsters; flying over Fort Knox to study it. When air traffic control points out to the pilots that it is a restricted area, Goldfinger in the novel responds that they are doing scouting for Paramount. In this treatment, Paramount is replaced by United Artists (which then produces the Bond films). During this scene Bond learns that Pussy prefers women:

> - Bond: What have you and Tilly got against us anyhow?

007 hides the message for Leiter in the plane's toilet.

A little later, most of them disguised as Red Cross medical personnel, Bond, Tilly, Goldfinger, Oddjob, the gangsters and their men (and women, for Pussy's gang, disguised as nurses) arrive in a bus convoy to Fort Knox (there is no question of a train in this treatment, unlike the novel). They pose as an emergency medical team tasked with investigating what is happening there. (It should be noted that Goldfinger's operation takes place at night).

Before they can even enter Fort Knox' vault, the American soldiers who pretended to be dead from the GBX get back up and launch the assault. There is a shootout between the soldiers and the men/women of the gangsters. Bond takes the opportunity to take a knife hidden in his shoe (detail from the novel) in order to stab Goldfinger but Oddjob intervenes. 007 tries to escape with Tilly but Oddjob kills her with his hat. Leiter joins 007.

Goldfinger removes his doctor disguise: underneath he have an American army disguise. Thanks to this he manages to escape in the company of Oddjob and Pussy.

Later at La Guardia Airport, Felix explains that it was a close call: a man who was cleaning the Beechcraft only found 007's message late. Bond takes a Boeing 377 Stratocruiser plane to take him back to London and it turns out that Goldfinger, Oddjob and Pussy have hijacked his flight. They get the other passengers off and take off (while avoiding a plane that was landing on the runway!).

In the air, Goldfinger reveals that he knows that Bond is a 00 agent and points to one of the men accompanying him:

> - Goldfinger: Herr Braun is an ex-gestapo man who also worked briefly with Smersh. He recognized you.
> [...]
> - Bond: You kept me alive once. It was a mistake. Why make it again?

> - Goldfinger: Because you're a valuable agent and may conceivably be used as a hostage.

Pussy unexpectedly kisses Bond, discreetly slipping him a message (from one mouth to the other) that says: "I'm with you". She serves drinks and food and takes the opportunity to slip him a screwdriver. Bond runs to a window and sticks the screwdriver in it while Pussy takes care of Braun. Oddjob is sucked out of the plane through the broken porthole; the plane loses altitude.

Once stabilized, Goldfinger holding a gun exits the cockpit; 007 disarms him and there is a hand-to-hand fight between the two men at the end of which Bond strangles his opponent. He then resuscitate Pussy who had lost consciousness.

The pilots land on the water (the screenwriter imagines using "miniatures" of the plane and of the weather-boat contacted by radio by Bond to shoot these scenes). A little later, on the weather-boat, the treatment ends like the novel: Pussy asks Bond if he will visit her at Sing Sing penitentiary:

> - Bond: I thought you didn't like men.
> - Pussy: I never met one until now.

Bond tells her she needs some T.L.C. (Tender Loving Care) and that they will start now...

As you can see, what you need to remember from this May 19th, 1963 treatment is that it is basically an almost direct adaptation of the novel. Apart from the beginning in South America with Leiter (not disabled and still at the CIA), the fact that Bond sees Jill's body painted in gold, the absence of a Goldfinger linked to Russia/SMERSH, the use of a laser instead of the saw: we don't deviate from the plot of the novel and a lot of dialogue and descriptions are taken directly from it.

On May 20th, Maibaum wrote a letter to the producers in which he explained some of his choices to counter problems of the book that were "too big for even a Fleming audience to accept". We can cite:

- Not everybody in Fort Knox is drinking water at the same time, the plan can only be accomplished via a gas according to Maibaum.
- The train would have been a "murder" from a film production point of view and Goldfinger needs to get to Fort Knox faster, hence the buses.
- The action at Fort Knox is at night to prevent aerial observation from disrupting Goldfinger's plan and also because it will reduce the size of the movie sets to be built.
- For the plane hijacking at the end, Maibaum wanted to prevent Bond from losing consciousness a third time in the film by removing the novel's idea of a syringe injection.
- The fact that Pussy slips a message to Bond by kissing him is inspired by a real incident that took place in a narcotics rehabilitation center.
- It wouldn't have looked good to have Leiter only at the end of the film, he had to be added at the beginning.
- Maibaum have the sensation that it is long [Goldfinger is actually Fleming's longest novel] but that he was able to condense things down. For length reasons he abandoned the ingot deposit in France. He told the producers not to be scared by the length of the New York reunion scene, "it can be great entertainment".

- "I've kept the Lesbian angle, but played it as man-hating, a perfectly acceptable, recognizable proclivity". [Homosexuality is something that the filmmakers were afraid the censors, as well as those responsible for screening the film and the public more generally, would not receive well].

(Note that in addition to Miss Galore's sexual orientation, her very name is a source of problems cause of it's sexual consonance. As Cubby Broccoli explains: "We were also advised against using the name. But our view was quite simple: we were filming the book; Pussy Galore was a pivotal character in the story; that's what Fleming named her; there seemed no reason to call her anything else. Dick Maibaum was prepared to change it to Kitty Galore, but Fleming, rightly, thought that would be nonsense, since millions who'd read the book would be mystified. In those days we didn't submit scripts beforehand to so-called censors"[9]).

Maibaum ends his 20th, May letter by saying that Dr. No was well received in Kansas City and cite a review that said "YES to NO": "might be a good slogan to use". He concludes by specifying that he hopes that director Terence Young (currently filming in Turkey) doesn't try to make From Russia with Love comical…

July 8, 1963' treatment: Bentley, premature death and tank

Let's now see a second treatment entitled "second treatment" written by Richard Maibaum and dated July 8, 1963. Contrary to what one might think, although it is more recent than those of May 19, the descriptions are strangely less detailed, even in the scenes that these two treatments have in common (in fact it is only 33 pages long, almost half as long as the ones of May).

The treatment opens as in May, with Bonita and Bond already in the café and the explosion. We are told that he is wearing a white jacket and a black tie. The first important difference is that the man who comes to see Bond to tell him that the mission is accomplished is no longer Felix Leiter but "M's man in Central America". An unnamed "Latin[o]". There is also no longer the scene where Bond makes a phone call to Blackwell.

Later, after the electrocution in the bath and the plane has landed in Miami, Leiter greets and congratulates Bond at the airport. He told him that he had reserved a room for him at the Floridiana at the expense of the CIA and had arranged with M so that he would have a little leave.

At the Floridiana bar, Bond and Leiter sip a martini and a bourbon (Bond is not melancholic here). 007 hears a woman with an English accent ordering a gin and tonic. He turns around and sees Jill Masterson sitting alone at a table; he asks the bartender to give her his professional card (Universal Exports) on which he has written: "England expects every man to do his duty. May I join you?". She turns to him with a smile, but Bond sees a man sitting at Jill's table: Goldfinger. DuPont joins Goldfinger to ask him for a revenge at gin, Goldfinger introduces him to Jill as his secretary (Bond overhears the conversation).

Leiter has to leave and Bond accompanies him to the hotel lobby. After his friend leaves he asks for Jill's room and phone, but no one picks up. While looking for her near the pool he sees Goldfinger and DuPont playing gin. After observing them for a few seconds, Bond looks towards the balconies that overlook the area and heads towards Jill's room. Here he catches her helping Goldfinger to cheat (and takes a photo of the scene).

After chatting with her a bit, he speaks via radio with Goldfinger, telling him that "it's terribly un-English" to cheat. He will keep the photo to himself if Goldfinger makes a reservation for them on the Silver Meteor with champagne and caviar... On the other hand, at no time Bond ask Goldfinger to admit to DuPont that he cheated or to reimburse him.

We return to familiar territory since for a few lines things happen as in the May treatment: they take the train, then Bond on night duty, discovery of Jill painted in gold (she holds the business card that Bond had given her at the Floridiana).

Bond informs M and M says that the Bank of England asked him to investigate Goldfinger a few weeks ago. M takes out a file on Goldfinger from his office in which it is said that the man has Latvian origins; his professional activities are mentioned (metalworking, jewelry, Mecca Airlines). M asks his Chief of Staff to relieve the agent who is on the Goldfinger case to put 007 in his place, as well as to build a solid cover for him (Bond would be someone from the underworld).

Bond goes to the Service' garage where a "Q-Branch man" gives Bond a "Bentley" equipped with gadgets (the same as on the Aston Martin DB III in the novel) and a tracking beacon.

On the way to the Royal St. Marks (note that Bond never goes to the Bank of England in this treatment), 007 receives a phone call from M who tells him that Jill's body was not covered in gold when the police found it.

At the golf club there are the scenes between Bond, Goldfinger, Hawker and Foulkes. Then comes those at The Grange and French/Swiss routes, which are also similar to those in May treatment (however no phone call from M regarding a denunciation of undeclared money).

The dialogues with Tilly are not detailed here: we are just told that he tries his charms on her but that it leads him to nothing. He later sees her in the woods and stops her from killing Goldfinger. Here an important change is made: after that Oddjob appears and knocks Bond unconscious with a karate hold, Tilly tries to run away but Oddjob throws his hat after her and kills her!

007 is brought to Goldfinger who questions him. Bond tells him he's there because he's looking to get hired by him. He then sees the Rolls being melted down and asks where Tilly is. Goldfinger replies that she is obviously crazy and that he has taken her to a sanitarium to receive a treatment at his own expense.

007 is taken to the "Pressure Chamber" where he is threatened by the laser. Goldfinger wants to know who Bond works for. Bond ends up telling him that he is a member of the underworld (as his cover says), that he has heard of Goldfinger's operations involving gold and has seen an opportunity to rob him. Goldfinger says he knows that Bond is indeed a member of the underworld because one of his contacts at Scotland Yard retrieved the file they have on him. Bond is now throwing out a line of dialogue like "what now?".

- Goldfinger: Can you drive a tank, Mr. Bond?

Bond tells him yes and Goldfinger has him untied.

> - Goldfinger: Oddjob has reported to me that you saved my life, Mr. Bond [by neutralizing Tilly]. Ordinarily I am not swayed by sentimental considerations, but in view of your other qualifications I believe I am justified in what I am about to propose to you. [...] There is a place for you in my organisation. As you have discovered, I'm interested in gold. All my life I have been in love with its colour, its brilliance, its divine heaviness. [...] I invest, I smuggle, I steal.

He explains to Bond that he is with associates on a project that will bring in big profits; there is a million dollars in gold for Bond at stake. Of course Goldfinger must ensure Bond's loyalty, that's why Oddjob won't leave him for an instant, he says.

> - Bond: We'll get along just fine. Won't we, Oddjob?

Goldfinger's private jet lands at an airport in Kentucky. There Bond, Goldfinger and Oddjob are greeted by a certain Al Mercer described as an "impressive-looking young executive type" whom Goldfinger introduces as the "general manager of Compo Manufacturing" (Bond also sees Pussy Galore). Mercer drives Bond, Goldfinger, and Oddjob to the Compo Manufacturing plant, which, according to Mercer, builds "anything from baby carriages to swamp-dredgers".

Arriving in Goldfinger's office, the latter inquires with Mercer about the arrival of certain goods (which he designates by code names: "Consignment C", "Consignment D", "Consignment T", etc...). Everything was apparently well received. They go to a conference room to meet Goldfinger's associates (Solo, Strap, Midnight, Springer, Ring); Goldfinger introduces Bond as his secretary. A sixth associate arrives a little late: Pussy Galore.

Goldfinger finishes the presentations and two Koreans bring a cart on which lie 396 gold bars: 66 (corresponding to 1 million dollars) for each of his partners as payment for what they delivered.

Our villain then explains to his associates that he wants to rob Fort Knox and details his plan with the help of a model. The plan now includes spreading GBX gas using Pussy Galore's flying circus (no longer via water pipes). There are also trucks, buses, and more surprisingly:

- Goldfinger: Mr. Bond will drive a tank provided by Mr. Springer from a factory in Detroit which he sent here by road transport. Mr. Bond will crash through the Depository outer door. He will then [...] tow an atomic cannon to the vault door. It is now being assembled in our Security Building and was brought in by crate via Mr. Solo [...]. I am not at liberty to divulge its point of origin. Suffice to say, it came from the same shipper as the shell. [...] The cannon will be fired by remote control and demolish the door of the vault.

Springer wants to speak to Goldfinger privately; they go to Goldfinger's office and Springer says he doesn't want to be involved in his operation. The answer is irrevocable: "Goldfinger shoots him" and brings Bond and Oddjob to help him to hide the body in a cupboard:

- Bond: So he wanted out. I don't blame him.
- Goldfinger: You do not approve of Operation Grandslam?
- Bond: would if I thought it would work, but you double-talked them about the shell. That gold will be radioactive for fifty years.
- Goldfinger (with a smile): Of course it will.

Goldfinger explains to him that by irradiating the gold from Fort Knox he intends to increase the value of the stock of gold he already has in his possession, "When I press that button, I will be the richest man in the world". Bond speculates that the atomic device comes from China, that China has an interest in seeing the American economy collapse, to which Goldfinger responds: "I advise you not to speculate on that, Mr. Bond. I deal with anyone who can help me achieve my purpose".

This is all well and good, but "Where does that leave me? I don't want to get paid off in radioactive gold". Goldfinger reassures Bond by telling him that he will be paid as agreed and as the conversation continues, he reveals that the GBX is deadly (and argues with a line from the novel, saying that 60 000 people die in road accidents each year in the United States; so same number who would die at Fort Knox is not really a big thing when you think about it).

A little later, Bond and Goldfinger join the gangsters and make some preparations. 007 speaks with Pussy, asking her what she plans to do with her share: "buy an island and put up a sign No men allowed?". She says she is more tempted to buy back her hometown to get revenge on the people who thought they were too good for her. Bond kisses her but no reaction from Pussy other than telling him to stop wasting his time: she is immune.

In the factory parking lot, Mercer kills Springer's driver (Goldfinger had told his other associates that Springer was in the infirmary, hiding his death from them). Bond helps Mercer carry Springer's body (on which he has stashed the tracking beacon and a paper to give to Leiter that he typed). Mercer and a Korean take the two bodies and the car to a road where there is a precipice near a bend and throw everything there. The car caught fire but Springer's body is thrown from it during the action.

A Red Cross-style convoy with all our people disguised as medical personnel arrives at Fort Knox at night (note: at no time is there a scene where we see the Pussy pilots spray the gas). It's obviously a somewhat apocalyptic setting with soldiers pretending to be dead.

The tank come down from the truck on which it was transported, and Bond at the controls break down the door of the Deposit with it. He returns to get the cannon in which a warhead is installed. Goldfinger asks 007 to put the cannon in the intended location but Bond jumps from the tank and knocks the cannon's remote triggering device out of Goldfinger's hands.

As this is happening, the American soldiers get back up and start attacking the army of gangsters. Leiter joins Bond and tells him he replaced the GBX with something less deadly (he doesn't explain how). During the battle Goldfinger hears Leiter call Bond "007".

Oddjob stumble on Bond and visibly gives him a hold which knocks Bond unconscious. Goldfinger removes his doctor's uniform to reveal an American colonel's uniform: claiming to have captured prisoners and having to bring them to HQ for interrogation, he manages to escape in a military car with Oddjob, Pussy and Bond (unconscious).

Goldfinger goes to his private jet and everyone boards for Cuba. Goldfinger has radioed that he has Bond in hostage with him in order to be not intercepted in flight. Here we are told that Pussy helped to foil Goldfinger's plan when she learned that Goldfinger was actually using her to kill 60 000 people. Pussy passes a note to Bond that say she is with him, 007 breaks a window of the plane with a tray of food. Oddjob is sucked out of the aircraft; Bond kills Goldfinger in a hand-to-hand fight. Pussy takes control of the plane and manages to land it on an airfield while the landing gear refuses to work.

In a hotel, Bond is on the phone with Leiter who tells him that the late Goldfinger's gold reserve in Switzerland has been seized. After hanging up he joins Pussy in bed who asks him if he will visit her in "Leavenworth". He thinks there are extenuating circumstances in her case, tells her she needs T.L.C. and that they will start now...

First draft' script: Sierra, horsebox and golden Pussy

After apparently another treatment dated August 7, 1963[10] (which I don't have), Maibaum ended up writing a complete 124-pages "First Draft" script.

This one opens again with the credits superimposed and Bonita dancing with "inviting" eyes, in front of Bond. She detaches a small key (of her bedroom door) from her bracelet and drops it at Bond's feet. When he bends down to pick it up, the explosion takes place in the background. While everything continues to explode and there is panic, Bond calmly sips his drink. He is joined by a "young" Latino named Sierra:

- Sierra: Forgive me for being late. There were last-minute complications.
- Bond: You took care of them very nicely, I'd say...
- Sierra: Thank you. It has been a pleasure to do business...
- Bond: Yes, the property has definitely depreciated in value...
[Bonita approaches].
- Bond: Another revolution?
- Bonita: Who cares? I dance.

After separating from Sierra, Bond joins Bonita in her room. She is naked in her bath:

- Bond: Sorry, I came as I was. Your invitation didn't say not to dress.

There's some dialogue like this was the third time Bond had come to see her dance, that she would be a sensation in London, "you would like to take me?". Concerning the reason why he carries a weapon he explains to her "My grandmother's, I wear it for sentimental reasons" (in the film the justification that Bond gives is "inferiority complex"). Shortly afterwards Bond spots Capungo's reflection in Bonita's eyes and there is an action scene similar to the film; "positively shocking".

007 is met at the Miami airport by Leiter and they go to the Floridiana. At the bar, there is Jill at a table described as British with "golden" hair and a golden dress. Bond take looks at her as she orders cigarettes (he disapproves her brand choice):

- Bond: I hate to see our natural resources wasted like that...

Via a waiter, Bond passes her his card (with the inscription) and sees Goldfinger sitting at Jill's table. The description of the man echoes the novel: "He is short, with a thick powerful body and a huge, round head. His face, tanned a deep red-brown, is moon-shaped under carroty crew-cut hair, the eyes hidden behind dark glasses with a yellow frames. He wears a gold brocade evening jacket with the tie to match. His age is indeterminable but he is probably in the early forties. He exudes vitality and power, a though, ruthless man directed by a scientist's brain".

Jill and Goldfinger are joined by a certain Simmons (and no longer DuPont) who comes to ask for his revenge at cards. Simmons offers Goldfinger to also eat with him but our villain only eats dishes specially prepared for him, "I'm a believer in scientific nutrition" he says. (Hearing this, Bond and Leiter think that the girl needs a square meal and not "nuts", which is what they understand by "scientific nutrition").

As in the July 8 treatment, Leiter leaves and 007 tries to find Jill in the hotel, sees/hears Goldfinger (in yellow swimming trunks) and Simmons playing. A little further on, 007 photographs the cheating and speaks to Goldfinger (a reservation for them on the Silver Meteor with champagne and caviar, no request from Bond regarding that poor Simmons).

007 then returns to London with Jill, we see him in the office with Moneypenny and M.

When he goes to Jill's apartment he discovers her body painted in gold. After he exited the apartment, a shot was supposed to show Oddjob emerging from the shadows. There is then the scene in M's office similar to the one mentioned in the treatment of July 8. Here it is Bond himself who suggests to M an underworld cover.

> - M: What do you know about gold?
> [...]
> - Bond: I know it when I see it, which isn't very often.

007 collects his gadgetized Bentley (same gadgets as before) of "racing-green" color from the dispatcher, here named Brackett. There is then the golf game. We notice here that Oddjob accompanies Goldfinger on the course (and helps him to cheat; Foulkes is, however, still present). They talk a little during the game; Bond says in particular that he works at Universal Exports: "[we export] everything from sewing machines to tanks", but he add that he is thinking of leaving the company.

After winning the game, Bond is invited by Goldfinger to his home, The Grange. The house is notably described as "ugly". When Goldfinger and Oddjob go away, Bond goes to the garage. While Goldfinger's driver goes outside to smoke, Bond grabs a wrench and removes the plate from the Rolls Royce in order to place the tracking beacon provided by Brackett. During the operation he drops the wrench on the ground. The driver comes back and sees what's going on. 007 then kills him with a karate blow to the head and hides the body in the trunk of the Rolls.

Followed by the Goldfinger's "golden-furred" cat, Bond comes across a statue of a golden woman. He will discover by examining the room that the statue houses a camera filming him, the lens of which is located in the navel. As he hears Goldfinger's Mercedes coming back, 007 hastily arranges to make people think that it was the cat who destroyed the film of the camera that was filming him.

There is Oddjob's demonstration, following by:

> - Goldfinger: If Oddjob struck you on any of seven places on your body, you would be dead.
> - Bond: Really? I only know five ways to kill a man with a single blow.

Goldfinger mentions the cat for dinner to Oddjob. Later, Bond leaves The Grange. After a few meters he stops on the side of the road and discreetly returns to Goldfinger's house. There he takes the driver's body out of the trunk and places it behind the wheel of the Rolls, connects a garden hose running from the exhaust pipe to the inside of a window of the vehicle and turns on the engine.

In the next scene, Bond watches the Rolls being loaded into a Carvair (no longer Bristol) plane. A camera shot was also supposed to show us Tilly and her white Triumph being loaded onto the plane.

Arriving in Switzerland, we observe that it is Goldfinger who is driving the Rolls himself (Oddjob is sitting next to him). 007 seems to notice that Tilly is also following Goldfinger and ram her Triumph with his Bentley:

> \- Bond: If you touch me there again you'll have to marry me.
> [She slaps him].
> \- A passerby: Maintenant le knock-out ! [Now the knockout!].
> \- Tilly: You bloody fool! What were you trying to do?
> \- Bond: Some girls should always be angry. It makes them more beautiful.
> \- Tilly: Oh, shut up!

She ends up getting into the Bentley. On the road, Bond still tells her that "it's isn't often you see a girl you'd ram a car for", but Tilly's reaction here is pleasant towards him, so that the scene to end by:

> [Tilly meets his gaze, smiles, and leans back].
> \- Tilly: There's a lovely little chalet in Coppet... The faster you drive, the sooner we'll get there...

In the next scene Bond and Tilly are in their pajamas. She gets out of bed and gets dressed, thinking he is still asleep. But Bond is awake and he decides to follow her. She walks to Goldfinger's factory and takes a sniper rifle from a golf bag. Bond then stops her from shooting Goldfinger. As they talk, Oddjob and Koreans appear behind them; Oddjob knocks 007 unconscious and kills Tilly with his hat.

007 wakes up tied to a chair outside the Rolls foundry operation. Very quickly Goldfinger (who dodges the question of what happened to the girl) asks Oddjob to place Bond in the "Laser Room". Goldfinger questions Bond (and informs him of Tilly's death) in the same manner as before, Bond stick to his cover of a criminal wanting to steal gold from him. We notice here that Goldfinger no longer mention a tank before freeing Bond:

> \- Goldfinger: [...] You have certain qualities I respect. You are resourceful and intelligent. Your highest recommendation is that you have several times outwitted me. Your ingenuity in making my chauffeur's death appear as a suicide was particularly noteworthy.

A plane containing Oddjob, Bond and Goldfinger lands at Idlewild (JFK) in New York where all these people then board a private jet. During the flight 007 drinks a martini until Goldfinger tells him to ask the pilot to come. Bond goes to look for the pilot, who turns out to be Pussy Galore, described as having "violet" eyes (reference to the novel). Goldfinger wants to know why they are late and things about the flight conditions. Once the girl leaves:

> \- Bond: I approve of your taste in pilots.
> \- Goldfinger: I use Miss Galore because she is a superb flyer, not for her looks.

> - Bond: I hope you don't disapprove of your employees socializing. After business hours, of course.
> - Goldfinger: I'm afraid you'd find her singularly uninterested. And there will be no after business hours, as you call them. We will be on a split-second schedule.

They land in Kentucky, not far from girls of the "Foley Sisters Flying Circus" who perform somersaults with their planes. They are greeted by a certain Kolb whom Goldfinger presents as the "general manager of Kengold Sand and Gravel". They go there in a Lincoln.

In Goldfinger's gold-designed office, Kolb/Goldfinger makes a phone call to a fifty-year-old named Salty who lives in an "Addison Mizner" type of house in Florida. Through the window Salty watches through binoculars a boat that appears to be US Coast Guard exchanging crates with another boat. On the phone, Salty tells Goldfinger that they just made delivery.

Then there's the big meeting with the gangsters (Pussy Galore is present, not as a gangster but as a member of Goldfinger's organization):

> - Goldfinger: Gentlemen, I shall now ask you a simple question. Would you like to continue your association with me in this venture, and net yourselves a hundred times what you have already received? [...] In gold.
> - Ring: You got a formula for refining it out of garbage or somethin'?

Goldfinger outlines the plan of his operation Grand-slam (Fort Knox, the GBX, the flying circus that Pussy bought, the cannon; however, there is no question of a tank here). 007 goes briefly chat with Pussy at the end of the meeting:

> - Bond: I need a large drink. Will you join me?
> - Pussy: Never touch it.
> - Bond: Smoke?
> [She shakes head].
> - Bond: No weaknesses of any kind? Mahjong? Marijuana? Men?
> - Pussy: You're getting colder.
> - Bond: Money, obviously. I'm in for a million. What about you?
> [...]

Springer says he doen't want to participate in the operation and discusses it privately with Goldfinger in his office. Goldfinger tells him that Kolb will help him to transport his already earned gold. Bond and Goldfinger then discuss the real issues of the operation Grand-slam. 007 then writes a note to Leiter.

Springer leaves with his driver in his Cadillac, with his gold bars in a trailer; he takes a route indicated by a "Detour" sign. Shortly after his passage we see a Korean remove the sign. On the road they come across a small truck pulling a horse trailer (with horses in it): it is Bond who is driving it, Oddjob next to him. Kolb is in the back with a Thompson submachine gun with which he shoots at the Cadillac's tires. Springer's car ends up in a ditch and there is an exchange of gunfire between Kolb and Springer/HisDriver, until the latter's death.

They load the bodies into the Cadillac (Bond stashes the message for Leiter in Springer's pocket) and push it into some sort of ravine/hill. Before leaving, they detach the horse trailer and attach instead the trailer containing Springer's gold. (A little later, a scene shows a farmer and his dog, intrigued by the horses now running free, finding the wreck of the car).

There is then a scene showing some sort of party thrown for the gangsters and their men in which Pussy Galore, painted in gold, dances very sensually on a table. Goldfinger watches from his desk, his face impassive. Bond, Oddjob and Kolb return from their escapade; Goldfinger invites them to join the party.

007 joins Pussy in a sort of dressing room where she is removing her paint (Oddjob still follows closely). Here the dialogues of "buy yourself an island and put up a sign No men allowed?" come into play. (There is however no mention of redeeming one's hometown here). Bond kisses her but no reaction from Pussy, apart from her telling him to stop wasting his time because she is immune. Oddjob urges Bond to get out.

In the next scene we see the pilots of the "Foley Sisters Flying Circus" spreading (at night) the GBX above Fort Knox (we notice that it is envisaged in the script to use models to film these scenes).

Disguised as doctors, the convoy of "Red Cross" vehicles (including buses) of Goldfinger and the gangsters goes to Fort Knox (still at night). They blow up a first portal with Bangalore torpedoes. A "tractor" (driven by a Korean) pulling the cannon is unloaded from a truck and a shell is unloaded from the trunk of Goldfinger's car and inserted into it. In the trunk of the car there is also a suitcase which contains the remote firing system for the cannon but when Goldfinger tries to activate it: nothing happens.

Goldfinger tells the others that he will repair the device. Bond grabs a small sledgehammer and destroys the suitcase with it. Oddjob comes upon Bond and as they fight, a flare pierces the sky and the American soldiers who were pretending to be dead launch the assault with Leiter. 007 dives under a car, Oddjob doesn't chase him (Goldfinger prevent him to do so). There is a shootout (Goldfinger hears Bond and Leiter talking), the gangster leaders are captured alive. At one point the fight goes a bit into hand-to-hand combat with Koreans attacking Bond and Leiter (with a crowbar). In the confusion Goldfinger, Oddjob, and Pussy knock out and capture Bond, then flee the scene.

They meet Kolb at the airport, board Goldfinger's jet and take off. In flight Goldfinger reveals to Bond that he knows he is 007: "at least I have the consolation of knowing that I was bested by a worthy opponent". Bond asks if Goldfinger is going to Cuba:

> - Goldfinger: There are other islands which offer splendid hospitality. Too bad you will not share it with us.
> - Bond: And I've always liked the Caribbean. I'm partial to calypso. Do you know "Underneat the Mango Tree"?

Starfighter jets eventually appear near Goldfinger's plane and radio an order to land; Pussy comes to inform Goldfinger. As Goldfinger goes on the radio to inform that 007 is on board ("if we go down in flames, he goes with us"), Bond asks Pussy:

> - Bond: You're not exactly the maternal type, but how many kids do suppose that GBX would have killed?

Since she was not aware of the lethal nature of the GBX, Bond explains it to her.

Goldfinger eventually returns and says that Bond may have done him a favor by foiling his plan: "Like Alexander, with no more worlds left to conquer, I might have become bored and neurotic". Pussy gives 007 a magazine inside which is hidden a wrench.

007 uses it to break a window then throws the wrench in Kolb's face when he tries to pull out his gun. Oddjob is sucked out of the plane and everything waltzes into the plane. Goldfinger appears with a gold revolver and Bond unbuckles his belt to avoid getting shot, then there is hand-to-hand combat.

While Goldfinger is strangling him, Bond manages to grab a paperweight in the shape of a statue of a golden girl and repeatedly smashes Goldfinger's head with it until killing him (and probably more). The script specifies that there are no plans to show Goldfinger's head after Bond have finished with it: it will remain off-screen.

007 joins Pussy, who will desperately try to land the plane in Miami:

- Bond: What do we do now? Make love or [are we trying to reach] Miami?
- Pussy: Let's try Miami first...

They lands on an airport runway covered with foam (by the firefighters) while the landing gear refuses to operate. They jump from the plane just before it catches fire. Felix Leiter joins them and informs them that the gold reserve in Switzerland of Goldfinger has been seized. They get in the back of Leiter's jeep and while he drives there is dialogue about Leavenworth and the T.L.C. Bond kisses Pussy then asks Leiter where they are going:

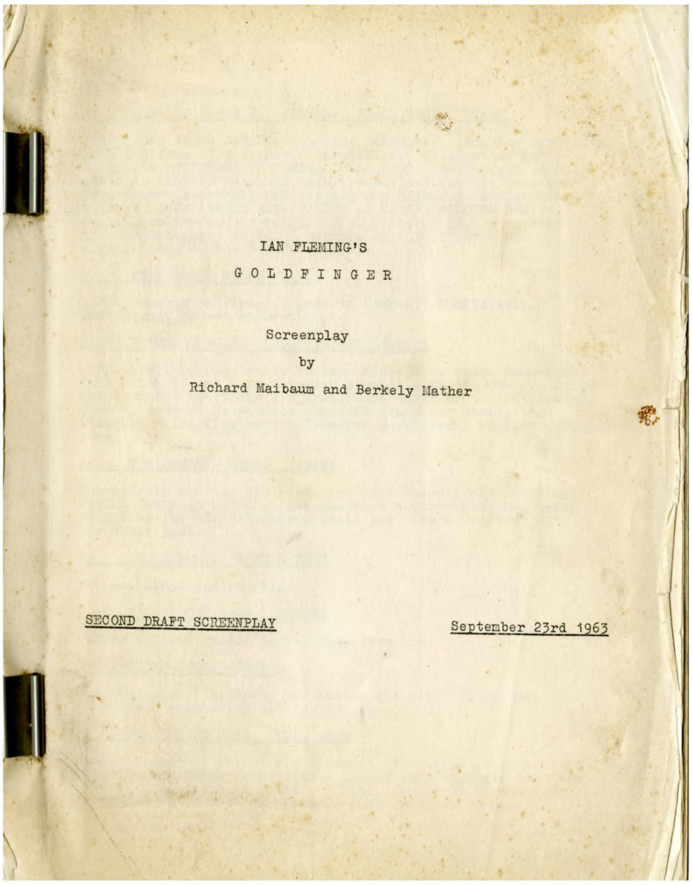
- Leiter: The Floridiana, of course. I booked you in ten minutes ago...

007 kisses the girl again and "THE END".

Enter Mather and Paul Dehn

Berkley Mather came as usual to make (uncredited) revisions on Maibaum's script and a layer of revisons is completed on September 23, 1963.

For Guy Hamilton, the director of this opus: "Maibaum had done a very good job but it was very American. Now, I liked my Commander Bond very straight, with short hair, and certainly when he goes to the Bank of England and in the M scenes he has to be properly English"[11].



IAN FLEMING'S
GOLDFINGER

Screenplay
by Richard Maibaum and Berkely Mather

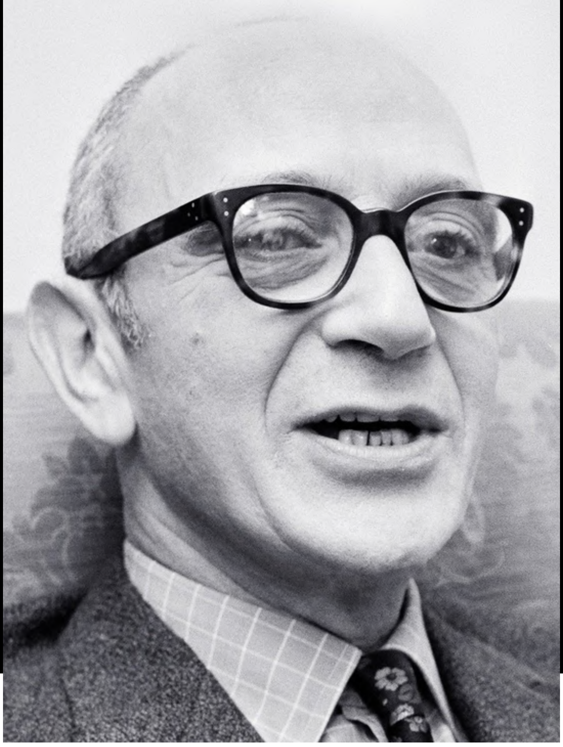
SECOND DRAFT SCREENPLAY

September 23rd 1963

Guy Hamilton, the director.

Harry Saltzman plans to bring British screenwriter Paul Dehn.



Born on November 5, 1912 in Manchester, Paul Edward Dehn[12] was educated at Shrewsbury School and Brasenose College, Oxford. While at Oxford, Dehn wrote film reviews for weekly undergraduate journals. This led him to begin a career in 1936 as a film critic for several London newspapers.

According to the writer and former British spy John Le Carré, Dehn worked within the Special Operations Executive (SOE) as an assassin during World War II. He also co-wrote the training manual for his agents.

Dehn was a film critic for the News Chronicle until its closure in 1960, then for the Daily Herald until 1963.

He subsequently wrote plays, operettas and musicals for the stage. Dehn also wrote song lyrics for two films, Moulin Rouge (1952) and Innocents (1961).

In 1949 or 1950, Dehn began a collaboration with the composer James Bernard. Dehn asked Bernard to collaborate with him on the film's original story of Seven Days to Noon, which earned them an Oscar for writing.

During the 1960s, Dehn focused on writing spy film scripts including Goldfinger, then The Spy Who Came in from the Cold (1965) and The Deadly Affair (1967). Aside from these spy films, his best-known scripts are those for the sequels of The Planet of the Apes.

Dehn will continue to write for opera and will sign his final film script by adapting Murder on the Orient Express of Agatha Christie in 1974; for which he was once again nominated for an Oscar. He died shortly after, in 1976.

"So we got Paul Dehn", Hamilton continues, "who very quickly wrote some very good scenes, basically the English Club type of scenes. He gave a nice balance between the slam-bang and a bit of wut. My other concern was, having seen Dr. No and Russia, I felt Bond was only as good as his villains and there was a great danger in him becoming Superman. Consequently, tension goes if you know he's always going to win every time. The villain has to be a convincing threat"[13].

December 23, 1963' script: dead dog, DB5 and inside Fort Knox

This brings us to a script of Goldfinger of 118 pages, dated December 23, 1963. Surprisingly, the preface page also contains a (truncated) quote from the poet Thomas Hood:

> Gold! Gold! Gold! Gold!
> Bright and yellow, hard and cold
> Melted, graven, hammer'd and roll'd;
> Hoarded, barter'd, bought and sold,
> Stolen, borrowed, squander'd, doled,
> Price of many crimes untold.
> Gold! Gold! Gold! Gold!

On the other hand, the preface doesn't consider it useful to display the names of the screenwriters (this script is a revised version by Paul Dehn of the Maibaum/Mather script). Its content, which perhaps introduces a little more fantasy and fun than previously, is similar to the film with however some important differences (comparisons will be made in relation to the film, not in relation to previous scripts/treatments).

The script begins (without indication of gunbarrel) with a pre-title similar to the film. However, Bond's diving suit doesn't feature a seagull but a dead dog!

> The hairless distended cadaver of a dog, legs pointing stiffly skyward [...] The dead dog rises clear of the water to reveal James Bond's face, his teeth clamped to the cadaver's under belly.

Bond uses a classic throwing grappling hook (not a grappling gun), eliminates a group of two guards (instead of just one, and with a knife) and plants the explosives. There's the scene at the El Scorpio club and he joins Bonita. The reason he says he carries his gun is still "For sentimental reasons. It was my grandmother's". He gets rid of Capungo similar to the film, "quite shocking" (instead of "positively shocking").

The script indicates that there is a credits sequence and even describes it: images from the film projected onto a girl painted in gold on a black background (as in the film, except for the ending, where it was requested a hand holding a brush soaked in golden paint to appears).

In Miami, Leiter meets Bond who is in good company at the Fontainebleau. However in this script, Bond doesn't remember Dink's first name and asks her "darling, what is your name?" when making presentations. Infuriated, Dink leaves on her own (and without a slap on the butt). Things continue to differ from the film: here a certain Simmons (whom Felix knows) joins Leiter and Bond who are talking. During the discussion between the three, Simmons tells Leiter that he doesn't seem to be in luck: he plays cards against a certain Goldfinger who tends to win too much. Leiter thinks Goldfinger must be cheating if he wins so often. Simmons says the man is a millionaire: it would be strange if he needed to cheat.

In the film Bond is interested in Goldfinger at M's request (which is not the case here). Simmons goes to play with Goldfinger, Bond observes and returns to his hotel where he meets Dink again, still upset:

> - Dink: My name is Dink, and I hate you.
> - Bond: Dink, if you stay right here for five minutes, you won't be the only one.

When Bond surprises Jill, there is no "Bond. James Bond" but:

> - Jill (to Goldfinger): [...] He needs Jacks and nines.
> - Bond: And you need a tremendous spanking.

The dialogues with Jill are somewhat different from the film but relatively similar. We will note a stage indication saying that Dink approaches Simmons when he begins to win against Goldfinger.

Jill and Bond end up in bed (not in a room in Fontainebleau, but in Jill's apartment in London). Instead of Leiter calling him, it's Bond who phones Moneypenny to tell her that he won't be in the office until Monday. "I'd just like to stay in bed for the weekend" (during this phone call, Jill kisses 007 and Moneypenny thinks that Bond is blowing a kisses to herself over the phone and she responds with a kissing sound; Moneypenny will end up to understanding that he is in good company). There is no dialogue about Dom Pérignon or the Beatles.

After discovering Jill's body painted in gold, Bond calls M (not Leiter) who is playing bridge at the Blades. M takes the call in a phone box at the club:

> - Bond: 007 here, sir. I'm in a bedroom...
> - M: That doesn't surprise me.
> - Bond: In the flat of a Miss Masterson...
> - M: I'm sure she's charming.
> - Bond: She was charming, sir. She's dead.
>
> [...]
>
> - M: Then if you've killed her, it's a matter for the police.
>
> [...]

Bond goes join M at Blades; when he arrives they get into a Daimler with a driver. In the car they talk about Goldfinger and M tells his agent that he's assigning him to this case (there's M's admonishment that he shouldn't make it personal). They arrive at the Bank of England; what happens there is very similar to the film.

Contrary to what we will see on screen, the scene doesn't end with a mention of Q-Branch (instead M tells Bond to not forget to return the ingot when he'll be done with it).

Moreover, in this script Bond doesn't go directly to the Q-lab since there is a scene absent from the film in which a member of the MI6 questions Bond about Goldfinger (in order to be sure that he has well memorized the information about him).

The scene takes place in Bond's office, with 007 throwing knives at a pin-up poster hanging on the door during the discussion. We learn among other things that before 1937 Goldfinger's name was "Zbysz", that his father was a jeweler in Riga (Latvia), his mother of Mongolian origin, and that he won a prize at Ascot with one of his horses. At one point M comes to join them and when he opens the door: a knife thrown by Bond at the poster barely misses him, passing a millimeter from his ear!

> - M: I want you to report to Q right away. You don't deserve it, but we're lending you a car. And making [looking at the knife behind him] a small deduction from your salary.

Goldfinger is the first film where the character played by Desmond Llewelyn will be named "Q". In his novels Fleming of course mentions an armorer named Boothroyd and also a certain "Q Branch" which provides equipment. In chapter 3 of Casino Royale it reads: "Have a talk to Q about rooms and trains, and any equipment you want". If this mention however probably refers to the Q Branch rather than a man named Q, however perhaps this is the reason why we find a character with this code name in the films?

Unlike the film, gas parking meters was the fourth gadget Bond and the audience were supposed to see in the Q-lab. In the script there are three others before: a small fire truck whose fire hoses do not spit water but flame-thrower style fire, a long stick with an artificial hand at the end which is used to activate a switch on a wall (there is an explosion when it is activated and the hand disintegrates), and a General Post Office van whose sides fall and reveal two men behind machine guns and a radio operator. On the other hand, there is no bulletproof vest "gadget" in the script.

Q gives Bond a (single) tracking beacon and presents him with an Aston Martin DB5. "The car has some other interesting modifications. Here's an amusing little wheeze...". The audience will not know more for the moment: in this script the scene stops before Q tells us more about theses modifications. Later, Cubby Broccoli will tell Guy Hamilton that he thinks the scene and the film would be more interesting if the spectators see Q presenting the gadgets rather than by being surprised by them later[14]...

We head to the golf club St. Mark's. Things unfold similarly as in the film but we can note that the balls are Dunlop (and not Slazenger) or this line:

> - Goldfinger: You can speak freely in front of Oddjob. He's dumb.

After their game, Bond and Goldfinger chat at the golf club with dialogues quite different from the film, like:

- Goldfinger: Your word, Mr. Bond? And whose word is that? The word of a Treasury Investigator? The word of a Fraud Squad policeman masquerading as clumsily as the one the Bank of England sent here a month ago? Strangers are always trying to get us into trouble, aren't they Oddjob? Oddjob, whatever happened to that silly little Madrasi stranger who tried to get us into trouble in Zanzibar?

Oddjob's demonstration with his hat here makes a tree as a victim (and not a statue):

- Bond (humorously): Well, I'll eat my hat!

We move to Switzerland, the opportunity to notice that Tilly still drives a white convertible Triumph here (and not a Ford Mustang). We note also that in the script she doesn't have a sniper rifle with which she shoots near Bond: instead she stops her car when Goldfinger's stops and leaves when he does the same (Bond notice this). 007 punctures a tire on the Triumph using his gadget described as a "knife flicking from Aston's hub cap".

Later in the script, before we find Bond lugging around in the woods at night near "AURIC ENTERPRISES", there is a scene in which he collects equipment from the Aston: namely night binoculars and a grenade (which was hidden in a shaker; you can see one in the Q's lab scene of the film).

Unlike the film, Bond doesn't venture out of the woods (there are not all the scenes around Goldfinger's installations): he directly surprises Tilly and her sniper rifle.

- Bond: Masterson? I knew her...
- Tilly: Now I know you. She loved you. (Pause) And you're breaking my back.
[Bond gets off of her back and lies down next to her].
- Tilly: I'm beginning to see why.
- Bond: Why what?
- Tilly: Why she loved you.
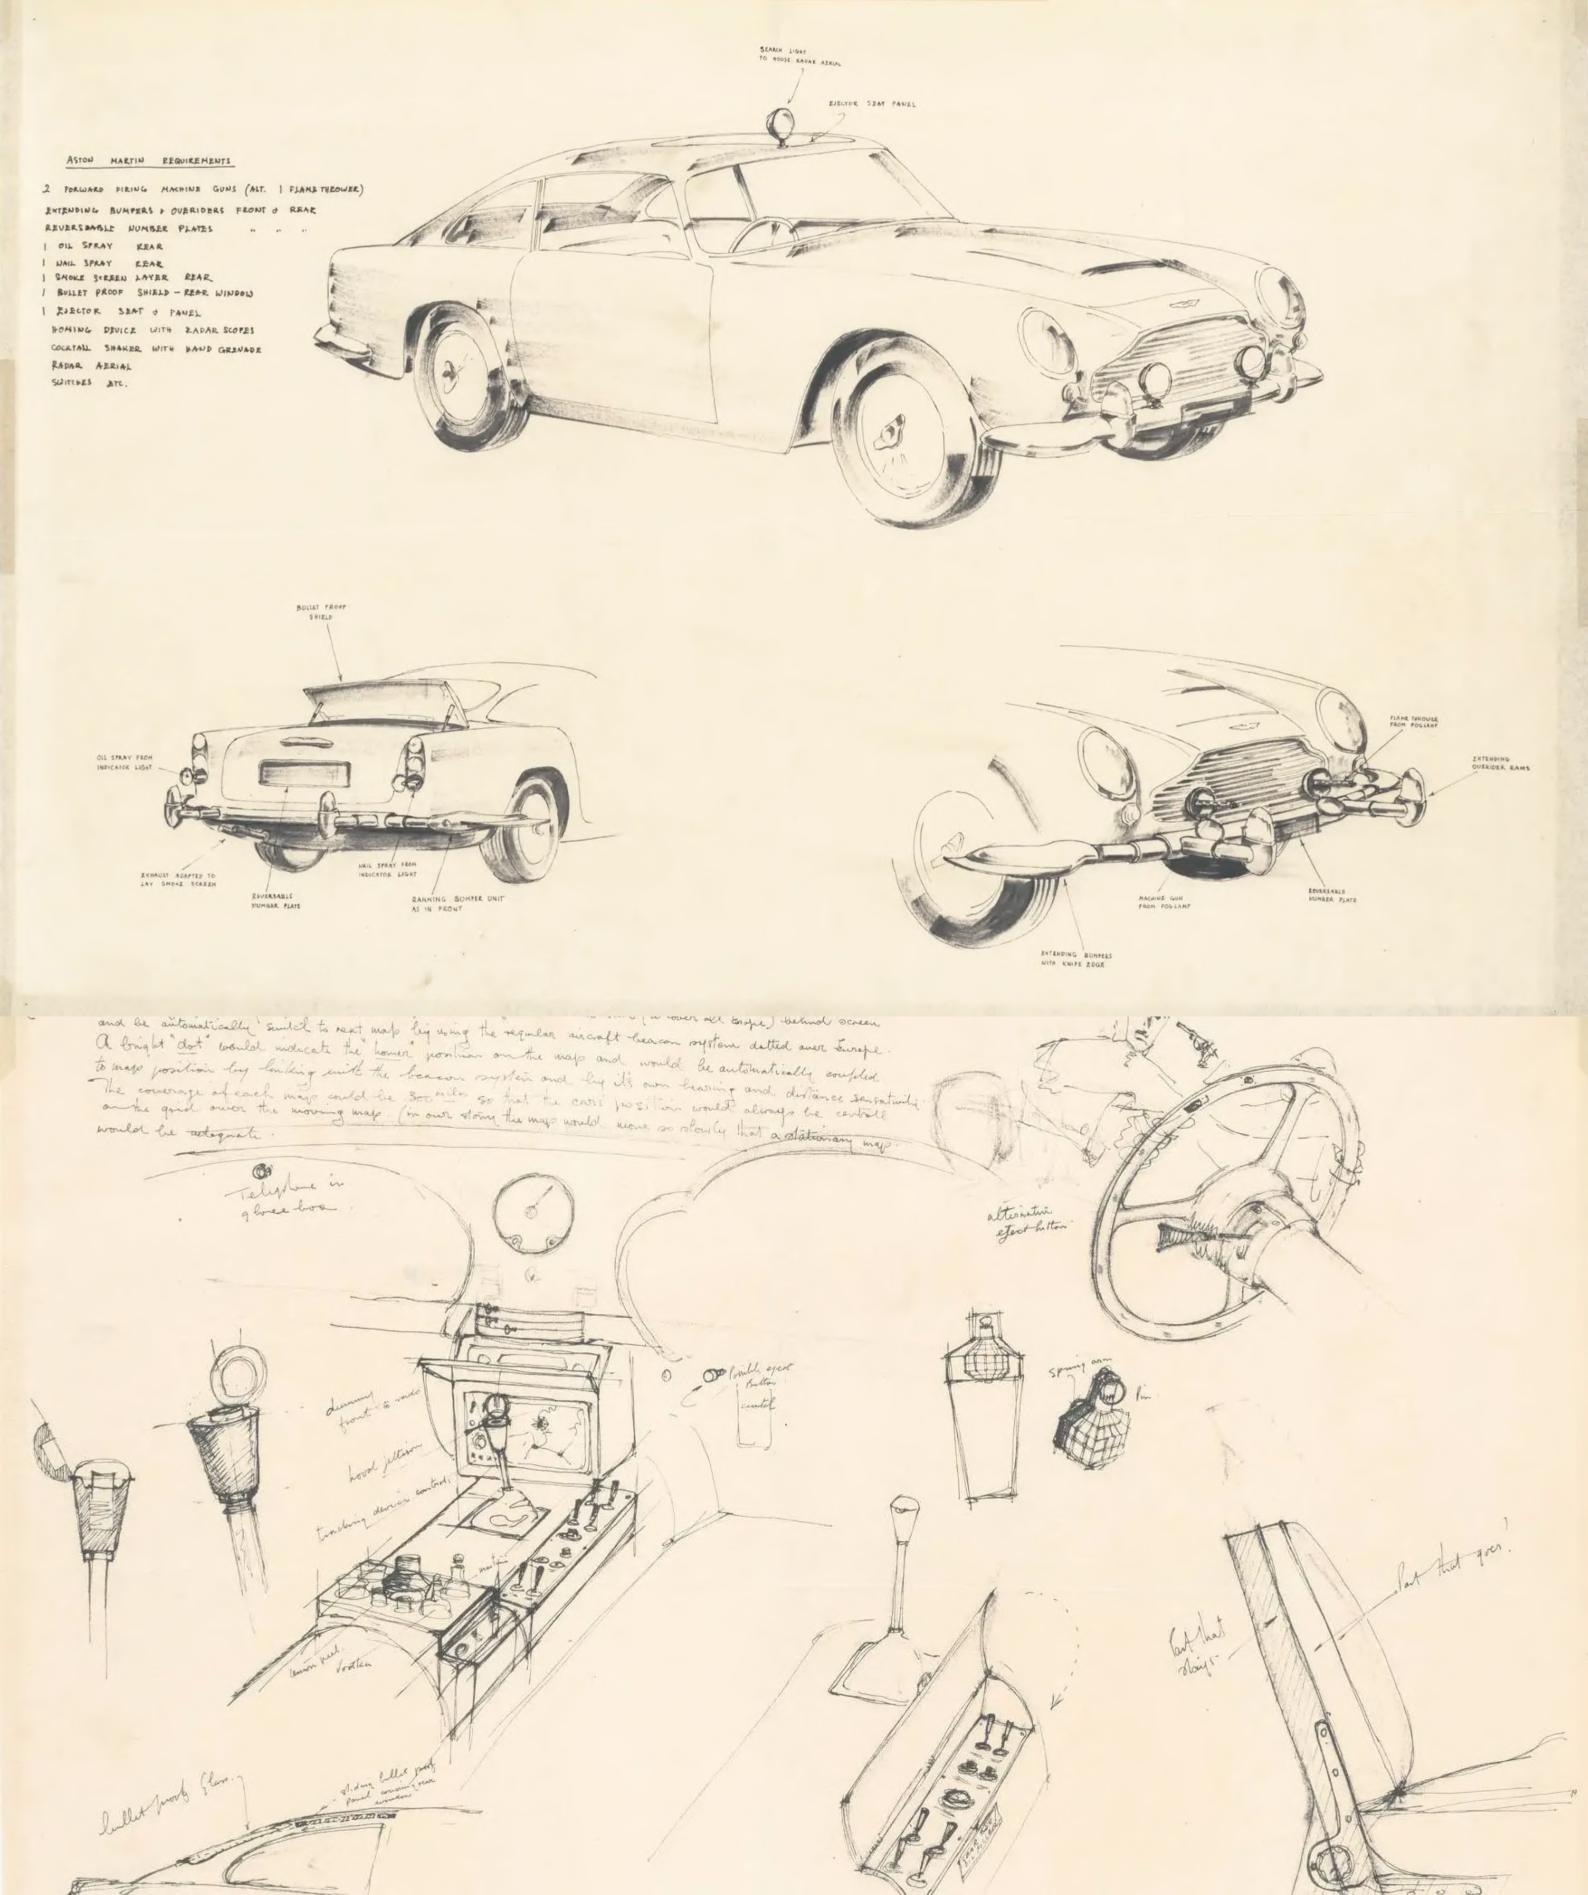
- Bond: Tilly darling, I have a quite ridiculous feeling that this is neither the time nor the place to...

Bullets end up around them; they head towards the Aston Martin and a chase begins.

There are some interesting indications: for example to activate the bulletproof plate at the back of the car, Bond had to turn a window handle (the ones used at the time to raise or lower them). Another funny thing, the smoke screen button is the one of the cigarette lighter.

The most surprising thing in this sequence is the presence of an additional gadget when 007 has to stop and Tilly has to get out: Bond presses a button, the headlights open and a jet of flame thrower is projected which sets three guards on fire. We note that Bond is captured here by a guard who managed to sneak up behind him (in the film he reacts quite emotionally by running and stopping towards Tilly's body).

Flame thrower (at the front grille) and grenade in a shaker in Ken Adam's early drawings.



ASTON MARTIN REQUIREMENTS

2 FORWARD FIRING MACHINE GUNS (ALT. 1 FLAME THROWER)
EXTENDING BUMPERS & OVERIDERS FRONT & REAR REVERSABLE NUMBER PLATES " " "
1 OIL SPRAY REAR
1 NAIL SPRAY REAR
1 SMOKE SCREEN LAYER REAR
1 BULLET PROOF SHIELD – REAR WINDOW
1 EJECTOR SEAT & PANEL
HOMING DEVICE WITH RADAR SCOPES
COCKTAIL SHAKER WITH HAND GRENADE
RADAR AERIAL
SWITCHES ETC.

and be automatically switch to next map by using the regular aircraft beacon system dotted over Europe behind screen. A bright "dot" would indicate the "homer" position on the map and would be automatically coupled to map position by linking with the beacon system and by it's own bearing and distance sensitivity. The coverage of each map would be 300 miles so that the cars position would always be central on the grid over the moving map. (in our story the map would move so slowly that a stationary map would be adequate.

SEARCH LIGHT TO HOUSE RADAR AERIAL
EJECTOR SEAT PANEL
BULLET PROOF SHIELD
OIL SPRAY FROM INDICATOR LIGHT
EXHAUST ADAPTED TO LAY SMOKE SCREEN
REVERSABLE NUMBER PLATE
NAIL SPRAY FROM INDICATOR LIGHT
RAMMING BUMPER UNIT AS IN FRONT
FLAME THROWER FROM FOGLAMP EXTENDING OVERIDER RAMS
MACHINE GUN FROM FOGLAMP
REVERSABLE NUMBER PLATE
EXTENDING BUMPERS WITH KNIFE EDGE Telephone in glove box alternative eject button dummy front to radio hood jettison tracking device controls martini lemon peel
Vodka
Possible eject button control
Spring arm
Pin
Part that goes!
Part that stays bullet proof Glass.
sliding bullet proof panel covering rear window

This is the origin story of some of the car's gadgets:

> - Guy Hamilton[15] : I was having a lot of trouble with parking tickets in London around that time, so my ambition was to have a revolving number plate, you know. So that was my contribution to the supercar.

> - Ken Adam[16] : I had a Jaguar which was continuously being damaged by people parking badly. Having guns at the back of the Aston Martin and the overriders becoming like boxing gloves and so on, became part of me releasing my frustrations.

Concerning the ejection seat, it is activated in the script by pulling the handbrake and is in two stages: first there is a sort of hydraulic rods which raises the seat to the level of the roof and then it ejects. The seat (and the guard in it) heads towards Oddjob's car who "impassively drives on... Refusing to avoid a (for us!) highly satisfactory bump, crunch and a cut-short scream", we read.

For the rest of the chase we note that contrary to the film, there is no machine gun on the DB5; instead Bond takes a grenade out of the glove compartment to throw it at the mirror in front of him. Finally the Aston crashes into a tree (and not a wall).

A semi-conscious Bond is taken to the laser room via a workshop (where Koreans are dismantling the gold doors of the Rolls).

> - Goldfinger: Ah! Good evening 007.
> - Bond: Is that to be my new prison number?
> [...]
> - Goldfinger: If you want to know how I found out, I made two telephone calls. [...] That Aston Martin's a Q-car, if ever I saw one. It'll be interesting to dismember it. Now we must dismember you, mustn't we[?].

Goldfinger also explains to Bond that the gold he takes out of England is re-molded into seats which are installed into planes that flying to China. There is the cult dialogue line from the film, a little different here:

> - Goldfinger: Dear me, no, Mr. Bond. I expect you to die.

As explained earlier, there was no scene where Bond spies on Goldfinger's facilities; so he never heard the words "Operation Grand Slam" compared to the film. Here the simple mention of 008 is enough for Bond to get out of it:

> - Goldfinger: You're quite right [...] If 007, whom I know and despise, get killed, I shall be tailed by an unknown 008 who might, unlike you, be an opponent worthy of my respect. [...] Better the stupid 007 I know, than the clever 008 I don't.

Goldfinger also explains that he is about to carry out a big project and that having 007 at his side should protect him from interference if SIS/MI6 thinks Bond is handling the situation by seeing him at his side. The laser scene ends with Bond still conscious (he is not put into sleep) and Pussy Galore arriving and being informed that Bond will be on tomorrow's flight.

The plane scene is quite different, Goldfinger and Oddjob are also in the plane. Bond at one point gets up and goes towards the cockpit, Pussy Galore gives him a martial arts hold and he ends up on the ground, which greatly amuse Oddjob who "laughs and laughs and laughs".

> - Pussy: As pilot of your private jet, Mr. Goldfinger, I will. fly you to Hades and back. But passengers will keep the hell out of my cockpit. Specially if they're men.

Goldfinger asks her if Bond made advances towards her: "Nope. At the co-pilot [Susan]", Pussy replies.

Goldfinger explains that he slipped a (coded) message inside Bond's passport in Geneva and there is a scene where M phones a certain Don, who is in Washington, and tells him that 007 is coming to the United States and sent a message saying that he didn't need assistance. M still asks Don to keep an eye on him and ends his phone call with "Love to Peggy. And save me a puppy"!

On the plane, a Chinese stewardess (unnamed) collects the food/drink trays:

> - Goldfinger: Were the mice tasty, Oddjob?
> - Oddjob: A-a-a-a-arrh!

There is not the scene from the film which takes place in the plane bathroom and we learn that Bond smokes Chesterfields (which is quite funny insofar, as it was the Jill's brand that 007 disagreed with in the "first draft" script).

The plane lands, they are greeted by Kisch whom Goldfinger introduces to Bond as his "lieutenant". He informs Goldfinger that his "guests" are waiting for him at the farm. Bond, Pussy, Goldfinger, Oddjob board a helicopter which takes them to the said farm. There four men (Solo, Vandernek who is Wall Street-type, Strap who is old gangster type and Springer) are waiting them while playing croquet (or only Mr. Solo).

(I'm missing 3 pages of the script here, in which it looks like Bond and Oddjob are with Goldfinger and listening him talking to the gangsters in a room).

When the room transforms, the script tells us that it must be as spectacular and simultaneous as possible and gives ideas like the large map or the model. The gas here is according to the script "Tri-Oxy-Metatholuene (or whatever!)" aka TOM (this will be renamed "Delta 9" in the film). Also a dialogue seems to echo Goldfinger's absurd plan in the novel by criticizing it:

> - Vandernek: Mr. Strap, at a rough calculation, it would take 300 trucks four days to remove fifteen billion dollars' worth of bullion at 80 bars to the ton. By then it is conceivable that even the Federal Police would have become alert to the possibility of larceny. All great robberies have been ruined by greed. We must content ourselves with less.

[...]
- Goldfinger: [...] Those who are interested [...] will each appoint a representative to load a maximum of five tons of gold on to your personal tractor-trailers at a time when you yourselves will be far from the operational scene, establishing your alibis elsewhere.

- Richard Maibaum[17] : Fleming never bothered his head about how long it would take to transport the gold from Fort Knox, or how many men and vehicles it would require. Obviously it would take weeks, hundreds of trucks and hundreds of men. The problem we faced wasn't an easy one. Why, we asked ourselves, would a man want to break into Fort Knox and not carry anything away?

Bond, Oddjob and Goldfinger go out to let the "gangsters" deliberate. Bond asks Goldfinger why he doesn't pay them the million he owes them while he has the money to do so: "[let's] say that I have a distaste for paying unnecessary debts". 007 also asks what will happen if one of them is not up for joining his project:

- Goldfinger: Do you take me for an idiot? If he opt out this project, he opt out of this life.

007 asks his enemy how much he hopes to steal:

- Goldfinger: I'm not greedy. Say six 2-ton truckloads [2.5 million dollars, "give or take a hundred thousand"].

As Goldfinger informs Bond that he estimates it will only take about 30 minutes for the authorities to be alerted, we discover that Bond, pretending to do calculations, is discreetly writing a note saying that an air raid will precede a break-in at Fort Knox. At one point Goldfinger asks to see what 007 is writing down and only sees another paper with calculations:

- Goldfinger: You will never be a Goldfinger, Mr. Bond. Not even a Woolworth or a Rockefeller. [Burning the calculation paper with a lighter] A security precaution.

Meanwhile Pussy is serving champagne to the gangsters. Mr. Springer (not Solo) is not up for it and asks to see Goldfinger. Kisch uses a periscope hidden under/in the model of Fort Knox to observe the other 3 and then kills them with gas, which seems to surprise him somewhat: "Holy mackerel! The stuff works".

Springer is brought to Goldfinger/Bond/Oddjob and says he doesn't want to be a part of it. Goldfinger asks Pussy about the others and she answer: "They're sleeping on it".

While Goldfinger is busy writing a check to Springer, Bond takes the opportunity to retrieve a tracking beacon hidden in the heel of his shoe.

- Goldfinger: To whom shall I make the check out?
- Springer: The Las Vegas Sisters of Mercy Orphenage Inc., Mr. Goldfinger.
- Goldfinger: You have a conscience, Mr. Springer?
- Springer: I have a tax-front.

Bond touches Pussy in a rather daring place and she gives him a karate hold. By doing so Bond can now borrow Springer's pocket handkerchief to wipe his eye and give it back to him (with the warning paper and tracking beacon hidden inside).

> - Bond: I seem to make a habit of putting my hands in the wrong places. Oh well... (To Pussy) Third time lucky.

Springer leaves in a Cadillac (the driver is not Oddjob but an average Korean; it will be a Lincoln in the film) and is followed by Leiter and his colleague whom the script name Johnny.

Bond, Goldfinger, Oddjob and Pussy go for a walk near the stables where they come across a veterinarian with whom Goldfinger is talking about Goldilocks (one of his racing mares). 007 and Pussy go further way (Goldfinger told Pussy to be nice with Bond in case friends of his were watching him: "Do take his arm, without breaking it if possible"). Goldfinger tells Oddjob that they'd better leave Bond and Pussy between themselves.

Once alone, 007 asks Pussy if the gangsters really "sleep"? Pussy turns out to be particularly more amoral in this script, as evidenced her telling him that it's a more powerful gas than that and asking him what is the harm in killing gangsters anyway!

Meanwhile Springer discovers that it is not his usual driver who is driving his Cadillac but a Korean who shoots him down and disposes of the body and the car in a scrapyard, similar to the film. The descriptions of the scrapyard scene include several comparisons, it is obvious that the author of this passage imagined something with a lot of style: "bird's eye shot [...] a valley road through mountain made of dead cars [...] a scavenging turkey-buzzard perched on a rusty radiator like an obscene mascot [...] arena's center [...] its open door swinging like the maimed wing of a dying bird", to name just a few.

The idea of getting rid of the body in the scrapyard came neither from Maibaum, nor from Mather, nor from Dehn but from Wolf Mankowitz, who has remained on good terms with the producers since Dr. No, as he tells it:

> - Wolf Mankowitz[18] : One day, I went to see Harry and Cubby about something else, and they were sitting there pondering and pondering. I said, "What's the problem?". And they said, "We gotta get rid of this body, and nobody can come up with a good new way of getting rid of it...". Well, I'd been looking at that day's Times, and there was a full-page article about the Mafia disposing of bodies by sticking them in the boots of cars and getting the cars trashed in one of those things. I said to them, "Look, I'll give you an idea but it'll cost you £500 in cash, which you'll have to pay me before I leave here". They said okay [...] and that was the scene.

We briefly see Bond and Pussy embracing while lying in the straw (there are no karate holds). Pieces of straw fall through the floor and land on the hat of Oddjob, who stands guard while sitting on the ground floor, "he rolls his eyes resignedly up at the ceiling".

> - Bond: Pussy, you need to settle down, have kids and marry a quiet husband. Not in that order, of course. Have you anyone in mind?
> - Pussy: No. I never had time to look.

A bit odd to hear Bond talk about marriage and having children (even though he probably only does it as part of his mission) and Pussy's response seems to overshadow the homosexuality of the literary version of the character...

The pilots of Pussy's flying circus (one of whom is named "Denise") fly over Fort Knox to display their gas. We note that the script calls for a "spectacular car-crash" on the ground with one or more drivers (we will not really find this in the film).

A little further on, the gates of Fort Knox are torn off by a mobile crane, bulldozers and explosives and Kisch takes a bunch of keys from the body of a guard to open the final gate (in the film Goldfinger's men use explosives and a laser). Once Goldfinger's men have taken over the scene, a helicopter carrying Pussy, Goldfinger (already dressed like an American colonel), Oddjob and Bond arrives and lands.

- Guy Hamilton[19] : Fleming let us down in the book, because all the villains get as far as Fort Knox but they all get arrested outside and end of story. You can't do that in a movie. You can't say we're going a heist on Fort Knox and then say "sorry kids, we haven't got in". Once we found the solution of how to get into Fort Knox, then everything went according to plan.

- Richard Maibaum[20] : Cubby kept saying, "There's something wrong, there's something about this. If you make a story about trying to break into Fort Knox and stealing all that gold you gotta get in there and you gotta see it and you got to show it to the audience". Everybody [...] said that not even the President of the United States has never been in the inside of Fort Knox. And Cubby says, "That's all the more reason why the audience should get a big kick out of going in there. What I see in there is a cathedral of gold".

So they go inside Fort Knox in this script, notably described as "prison-cages filled not with people but with gold bars".

Goldfinger then reveals to Bond (and the viewers) his real plan: detonating an atomic bomb at Fort Knox to increase the value of the gold he owns. Goldfinger's links to China are not very clear but certainly the "You are watching, Mr. Bond, the birth and emergence, as the world's richest and strongest Great Power, of communist China" that he throws at Bond seems indicate closer ties than they are in the film.

> - Richard Maibaum[21] : Goldfinger's main purpose in radiating the gold of Fort Knox [...] was to increase the value of his own gold holdings. He needed a particularly dirty bomb so he got it from the Red Chinese, who, before Nixon's visit [in 1972], wanted financial panic in the West.

The assault by Bond's allies is launched and Goldfinger quickly joins Pussy (without killing anyone with a gold revolver) with whom he flees by helicopter:

> - Pussy: The never-gas. It was supposed to last 48 hours...
> - Goldfinger: Pussy, my dear, I deceived you. The effect of the gas doesn't last for 48 hours. It lasts for ever. It's fatal.
> - Pussy (seeing the supposedly dead soldiers moving around downstairs): Funny kind of fatal.

Pussy asks if he intended for her girls to kill 60 000 people and Goldfinger replies that that as many pedestrians die in traffic accidents every year.

In the vault are Bond, Oddjob and the bomb. Broadcast over loudspeakers, Leiter's voice urges whoever is in the vault to surrender (at this point Leiter believes Bond to be dead, having mistaken Springer for him):

> - Leiter: We are getting impatient. We can flood, electrify or seal-off all sections of the vaults and sub-vaults. You cannot escape

There's a fight against Oddjob that is less impressive/long than in the film (with words like "[Bond] leaps from floor, like a crouched puma [...] Bond does the karate-jump of all time"). Oddjob ended up electrocuted "outlined like a neon sign" but not by Bond's fault, but the one of Leiter who decided to carry out the threat of electrifying the grilles (without seeing what was happening inside the vault).

Bond defuses the bomb as tear gas sent by Leiter and his men fills the room. He then leaves the building, hands in the air, under the eyes and guns of an entire armada waiting behind the door.

At this point you're probably wondering how Leiter was alerted of the Goldfinger's plan and how the deadly gas wasn't dispersed since it didn't come from Pussy. The answer to the first question is that Bond managed to slip a message into Goldfinger's vet's bag. As for why the gas was not diffused: it seems that a mechanic from Pussy's flying circus, who was in reality a colleague of Felix under cover, disconnected the gaze-spreading device on the planes.

A little later it turns out that Goldfinger and Pussy are on Bond's plane. 007 asks Goldfinger if he hijacked the plane alone: "No, Mr. Bond. With the usual hired help" and two Koreans appear from behind a curtain. This is an interesting thing since we know that in the film at least one Korean was cut during this sequence. In the script the Koreans will be thrown to the front of the plane "out of shot" as the plane dives once the gunshot has taken place.

The script ends very strangely. The plane is in distress and... We cut to stretcher bearers carrying two bodies under white sheets. They place Oddjob's hat on the first, as well as gold dentures and gold thimbles on the second. Leiter and the mechanic identify the bodies while Bond and Pussy stand behind them. Bond "looks up, straight into camera, and sees audience":

> - Bond: We made it.

A red theater curtain falls, rises briefly to show Bond and Pussy embracing, and falls again: "NEXT... COME... (FORTHCOMING TITLE [OF THE NEXT FILM])".

"THE END".

Maibaum's reaction

January 21, 1994, Maibaum wrote a letter to Harry Saltzman which began with "I like your concept of Diamonds Are Forever". The screenwriter goes on to say that he is happy with the continuity changes made by Dehn in a new script of Goldfinger but is worried about the tone which he finds too comical (and filled with too many gadgets). Here are some of his observations and ideas:

- The dead dog is "too repulsive" for Maibaum who finds it also arrives too early in the film. He wonders what to substitute it for: an alligator? A shark?
- When it comes to Tilly's death, Maibaum points out that previously it occurred while Bond was unconscious. This poses a problem now that this it is no longer the case because according to him normally "no beautiful girl gets killed if Bond is around to save her".
- He doesn't like Pussy putting Bond on the ground in the cockpit "for obvious" (and unspecified) reasons.
- On the other hand he likes that Bond hears Goldfinger's plan from the model rather than directly revealed to him by Goldfinger.
- Maibaum wonders why Goldfinger is going to such trouble to get rid of Springer. He suggests that the bodies of the other gangsters also be placed in the trunk of Springer's car in order to justify the going to the scrapyard.
- He doesn't really understand why the bomb has to be inside Fort Knox while if it exploded outside the effect would be the same: "I know you must put it inside, so we see it, but find a reason".
- Maibaum imagines that Bond and Pussy could escape the falling plane by sharing the same parachute. "It can be the first instance in history of a dame being screwed in mid-air. I've seen two men on a [para]chute before, but never a guy and a gal in flagrante delicto. Coitus in the clouds. I'm only half serious but the idea intrigues me"!
- He suggests changing the theater curtain in the end to bars instead, as if Bond were visiting Pussy in prison.
- "[Bond] is just a patsy, and a comic one at that. [...] Parts of the script you sent me sound as if it were written for Bob Hope and not Sean Connery. [...] The main thing to do with the script now is is to achieve the proper balance between the suspense and the sex and the fun. As of now I feel it's out of whack on the side of the "fun"".

In another version of this letter, Maibaum also says that the problem of Bond being passive/powerless for much of the script is still not resolved. Likewise, the female characters are not developed enough and Pussy is particularly "unpleasant" because she does nothing to redeem herself (Maibaum also says he misses her gold-painted dance).

> - Richard Maibaum: There is much too much of the gadgets on the Aston. Especially after Tilly is killed. It becomes ridiculous. Don't forget, two girls are killed in this picture. If you write and play this for farce, you can't expect the audience to respond to their deaths. It's a matter of taste. What I'm trying to say is that you haven't balanced your elements of humor and drama properly, the very thing that made No and Russia successful.

Connery's reaction

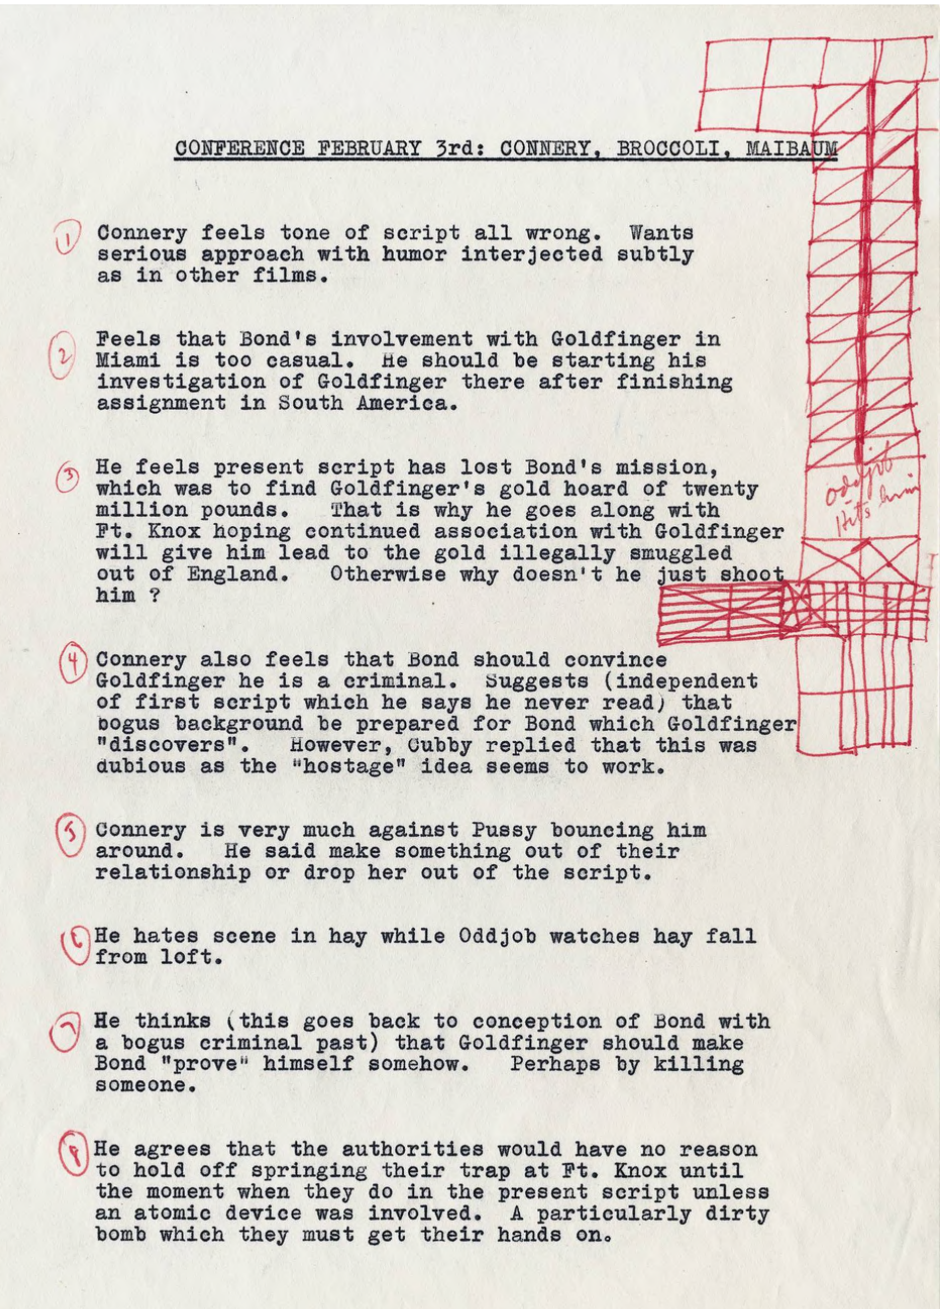
A conference took place on February 3, 1964 between Maibaum, Broccoli and Sean Connery during which the three discussed of the script, which Maibaum noted was "Dehn's rewrite of my first draft". Connery's opinions on the script are noted and we learn that the actor also thinks that the tone of the script is completely off the mark: he wants something more serious with humor introduced in a subtle way.

He also thinks that Bond's involvement with Goldfinger in Miami is too coincidental (it should be part of his mission), he hates the scene in the straw with Oddjob who is bellow, thinks that hiding the message via the vet isn't dangerous enough, and he doesn't like the ending with the theater curtain. Connery thinks that Bond should make Goldfinger believe that he has a criminal past (Maibaum points out that Connery hadn't read his first draft in which it was the case. Cubby for his part thinks that the idea of having Bond in hostage is better). While at it, Bond should prove himself to Goldfinger, maybe by killing someone.

To Connery, the fact that Oddjob crushes the golf ball with his hands in the script is ludicrous.

"He feels that Bond is overshadowed completely by Goldfinger throughout the script", write Maibaum.

Finally, Connery is very much against Pussy Galore "bouncing him around", and he even thinks about removing Pussy entirely from the script if nothing comes off of their relationship!



CONFERENCE FEBRUARY 3rd: CONNERY, BROCCOLI, MAIBAUM

① Connery feels tone of script all wrong. Wants serious approach with humor interjected subtly as in other films.

② Feels that Bond's involvement with Goldfinger in Miami is too casual. He should be starting his investigation of Goldfinger there after finishing assignment in South America.

③ He feels present script has lost Bond's mission, which was to find Goldfinger's gold hoard of twenty million pounds. That is why he goes along with Ft. Knox hoping continued association with Goldfinger will give him lead to the gold illegally smuggled out of England. Otherwise why doesn't he just shoot him ?

Oddjob hits him

④ Connery also feels that Bond should convince Goldfinger he is a criminal. Suggests (independent of first script which he says he never read) that bogus background be prepared for Bond which Goldfinger "discovers". However, Cubby replied that this was dubious as the "hostage" idea seems to work.

⑤ Connery is very much against Pussy bouncing him around. He said make something out of their relationship or drop her out of the script.

⑥ He hates scene in hay while Oddjob watches hay fall from loft.

⑦ He thinks (this goes back to conception of Bond with a bogus criminal past) that Goldfinger should make Bond "prove" himself somehow. Perhaps by killing someone.

⑧ He agrees that the authorities would have no reason to hold off springing their trap at Ft. Knox until the moment when they do in the present script unless an atomic device was involved. A particularly dirty bomb which they must get their hands on.

February 26, 1964' script

Richard Maibaum said: "On Goldfinger I did a first draft. Harry Saltzman didn't like it, and he brought in Paul Dehn, a good writer, to revise. Then Sean Connery didn't like the revisions, and I came back to do the final screenplay. That was the first time that happened: where I was followed by someone and then called back to finish up"[22].

According to The James Bond Archives, Maibaum went to England to work with Dehn to write the final script. Taking into account the observations made, on February 26, 1964 they delivered a new "final draft screenplay". My copy of 105 pages also contains revisions from March 12, 1964.

This script is naturally closer than ever of the film so now, for example, we find a seagull instead of a dead dog in the first page. The line from Bond to Bonita about why he always have his gun is however "Doctor's orders".

> 29. MAIN TITLE AND CREDITS
> Superimposed over surrealistic figure of gold-painted girl in front of backgrounds of bullion bars stacked on trolley, gold coins, crucible pouring molten gold, etc.

The introduction of Miami that follow is very close to what have been shoot, including the blimp in the sky and the ice-skating ring behind Leiter, described as "a tall, strong-featured, slightly-greying man". In fact sequences were filmed in Miami around 20th January, one month before the date on the cover of this script[23].

Things continue to be similar to the film, including Bond hand on Dink's butt: "he pats her affectionately on her way". Goldfinger is a "tall, powerful, commanding, red-headed, in his middle forties. He wears on incongruous yellow cap, finger-tip lengthy gold terrycloth robe and gold sandals. With his majestic paunch he looks, except for a conspicuous hearing-aid in one ear, like a decadent Roman Emperor".

Further: "Jill, reclining on the settee, her back towards him. She is almost naked except for the briefest of bikinis. (ALTERNATE SHOT in black bra and panties)".

> - Jill (into mike): He needs jacks and nines...
> - Bond: And you need the mother of all spankings.
> She gasps, turns, instantly speaks into mike.
> - Jill (into mike): The maid just came in!

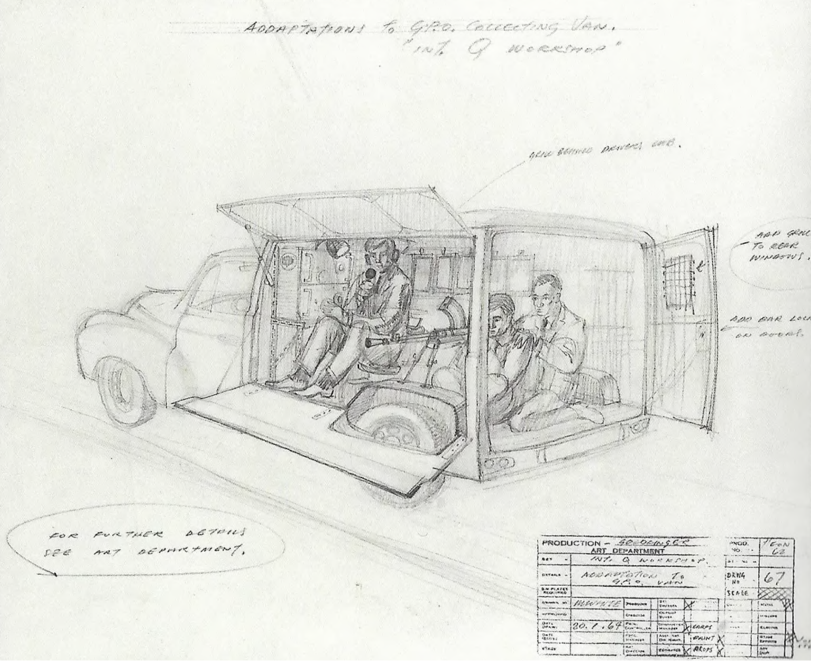
Later:

> - Bond: [...] That's as bad as listening to the Beatles wearing ear-muffs... Or watching a sunset from the rim of the Grand Canyon through dark glasses...

In the film the "wearing" will be replace by "without", which quite considerably change the sens of the sentence (and the Grand Canyon line will be absent of the film).

Further, Bond go to Q Branch. The mail van with machine fun operator is still in this script but will eventually be cut from the film. (Well not exactly, you still can see a glimpse of it projected on the golden girl in the title sequence).

Bond receive his homer devices from Q with "and we'd appreciate its return along with all other equipment, intact for once, when you return from the field". The script precise that Q deliver the line "acidly". Originally Desmond Llewelyn, the actor who played Q, had other idea about Q's relationship with Bond:



ADDAPTATIONS TO G.P.O. COLLECTING VAN.
"INT. Q WORKSHOP"
GRILL BEHIND DRIVERS CAB.
ADD GRILL TO REAR WINDOWS.
ADD BAR LOCK ON DOORS.
FOR FURTHER DETAILS SEE ART DEPARTMENT.
PRODUCTION - GOLDFINGER
ART DEPARTMENT
INT. Q WORKSHOP.
ADDAPTATION TO G.P.O. VAN
PROD. No. EON 62
DRWG No 67
SCALE
M.WHITE
20.7.64

> - Desmond Llewelyn[24] : After rehearsals, I was working at the desk as Bond comes in. And I got up to greet him. And I though: "this is Bond, this is James Bond and I'm just an ordinary civil servant. I must admire him as everybody else does". And Guy [Hamilton] says "No, no, no, no. You don't take any notice of this man, you don't like him. He doesn't treat your gadgets with any respect at all".

This idea will be the be the defining point of Q-Bond relation from this film and almost all the others to comes.

The scene still not include the presentation of the DB5's gadgets, instead:

> - Bond: Anything else?
> - Q: You're unusually eager to get cracking on this one, 007.
> - Bond: That's putting it mildly, Q.
> - Q: Then I won't detain you for more than an hour or so; if you give me your undivided attention. We've installed some rather interesting modifications...
>
> They climb in and drive the Aston out onto the test track.
>
> DISSOLVE TO:
>
> 94. EXT. ST. MARK'S. PRO SHOP. DAY

So golf match it is, just a very little longer than in the film (with a scene in which Goldfinger make noise with the coins in his pockets). At the end of it Oddjob still throw his bowler hat against a three. "Well bowled, Oddjob", comments Bond.

Tilly still drive a Triumph and later, when Bond infiltrate the perimeter of Entreprises Auric, we note that Goldfinger is smoking a cigar with Ling (who smoke a pipe). Talking about smoking, in the script Bond has to press the cigarette-lighter of his Aston Martin to deploy the smoke screen from it.

After Tilly death, we note that Bond carry her himself and place her body in the back of the Aston Martin. After having ejected the Korean beside him, Bond activate another gadget of the car: "punch thrusts out from beneath front bumper and crashes into back of Car Number Three in front of it, sending it hurtling off to the side". However, still no machine-gun gadget in this script.

Bond is "stripped to the waist" on the laser table and later Pussy Galore is described "in her late twenties" (Honor Blackman will rather be in her very late thirties). We can note that she mention Goldfinger as "Mr. G." in several instance in that script (and Bond does it too, once).

Bond, Pussy and Mei-Li land in the United States and at the stud farm there is Kisch described as "a dapper, self-assured American of Mongolian ancestry". From the CIA side:

> - Johnny: He's still at the farm.
> - Leiter: I should have brought a copy of Fanny Hill.

There is the scenes where Goldfinger explain his plan to the gangsters, then Mr. Solo leave the stud with Oddjob, due to a "previous engagement" says Goldfinger to Bond (in the film it will be a "pressing engagement"). Thus is no comment from Bond when Solo and his car goes back to the stud in a cubic shape: "for once Bond, hopes crushed, is speechless".

Later at Fort Knox, we can notice that the second door is teared down with limpet mines and a bulldozer (rather than a laser).

Oddjob kills Kisch with his hat in that script, then 007 has to confront Oddjob. This include scenes like:

> Bond, seated in electric fork-lift, bars stacked on fork, drives it at him. Oddjob eludes it. Bond turns it, tries to operate lift to drop bars on Oddjob. Some of them hit him. He seems impervious, reaches down, picks up lift, overturns it. Bond is sent sprawling. He scrambles away from Oddjob, sees dolly loaded with bars, runs to it, pushes it, picks up speed, shoves dolly which comes hurtling at Oddjob. Oddjob stops it, shoves it back at Bond, who just gets out of the way. Dolly crashes against wall. Bond avoids scattering gold bars.

Bond retrieve and throw Oddjob's toward his adversary:

> Oddjob avoiding bowler which clatters against bomb. Oddjob picks it up, puts it on, folds arms again. [...] [Bond] reaches up toward panel, grasps loose cable (about the size of a bull whip) around insulation, some fifteen feet from sputtering end. He stands up, cracks cable as as though it were indeed a bull whip. It snakes out toward Oddjob in B.G. As sputtering end of cable hits his iron bowler. There is a tremendous spark. Oddjob stiffens and is electrocuted. He slumps to the ground, the bowler smoking.

The bomb is disarmed just one second from disaster. "He got the bad news hot off wire", Bond will says to Leiter about Oddjob (which will be change to "He blew a fuse" in the movie).

When Goldfinger is sucked out of the plane:

> - Bond (gasping): Tight squeeze, old man?

Time to eject from the falling plane:

> 521. EXT. CLOUD
> Parachute floats down out of it.
>
> 522. CLOSE SHOT. BOND. PUSSY

He wears the harness. Their arms are entwined around each other, her legs locked behind his.

523. CLOSE UP. THEIR HEADS
Close together.

- Bond: Ever jump before?
- Pussy: Never like this...

As their lips meet and they float down out of shot...
DISSOLVE OVER ROAR OF HELICOPTER MOTOR TO...

But this is no time to be rescued...

- Wynne Weston-Davies (Berkely Mather's son)[25] : I was present (employed by Harry Saltzman as a messenger in case my father needed anything that he had left at home) on several days during the shooting of Goldfinger at Pinewood Studios in 1964 [...]. My father sat in a chair marked "Writer" next to the director Guy Hamilton whilst I stood just behind them. Every now and then Sean Connery would stop and say something like, "No, no. I can't say that. Jasper [Mather's nickname], give me a line...". My father would scratch his head for a few minutes and come up with an alternative which suited Connery better whereupon a continuity girl would run out with a clipboard and take down whatever my father had said and dash backstage to have an army of typists amend the shooting script. That was pretty much how the whole film was shot.

Goldfinger will have its premiere on September 17, 1964. That day Paul Dehn will send a cable to Maibaum saying: "Congratulations on Goldfinger. Am proud to have collaborated with you"[26].

The film will be a record success with a tsunami of spectators in cinemas, some of theses in the United States showing the film 24/7 to satisfy the demand. Bond had become a phenomenon, Connery one of the world's greatest celebrities, and the Aston Martin DB5 one of the most famous cars in cinema (reinforced by the arrival in stores of the famous Corgi's diecast). Ian Fleming was no longer there to see this "Bondmania" taking the world: the creator of James Bond having died at the age of 56 on August 12, 1964, before the release of Goldfinger.

1 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).
"Writing the Bond films" by Richard Maibaum in James Bond in Thunberball magazine published by Sackville.
2 Televised interview of Fleming by the CBC (Canadian Broadcasting Corporation) (August 17, 1964).
3 Televised interview of Fleming by the CBC (Canadian Broadcasting Corporation) (August 17, 1964).
4 "The Literary James Bond" on BAMF Style website: https://bamfstyle.com/2014/05/28/literary-james-bond/
"The Suits of Ian Fleming's James Bond Illustrated" on Bond suits website: https://www.bondsuits.com/the-suits-of-ian-flemings-james-bond-illustrated/
5 Ian Fleming's "Goldfinger" (1959).
6 Ian Fleming's "Casino Royale" (1953).
7 Ian Fleming's "Goldfinger" (1959).
8 "Writing the Bond films" by Richard Maibaum in James Bond in Thunberball magazine published by Sackville.
9 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
10 Spy Octane #1 by Matthew Field and Ajay Chowdhury (2024).
11 "Adrian Turner on Goldfinger" by Adrian Turner (1998).
12 Paul Dehn biography, see for the sources:
Paul Dehn's Wikipedia page.
13 "Adrian Turner on Goldfinger" by Adrian Turner (1998).
14 "Adrian Turner on Goldfinger" by Adrian Turner (1998).
15 "Inside Goldfinger" DVD bonus.
16 "Celebrating Goldfinger's 60th Anniversary" on 007.com : https://www.007.com/celebrating-goldfingers-60th-anniversary/
17 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
18 "Kiss Kiss Bang! Bang! The Unofficial James Bond Film Companion" by Alan Barnes and Marcus Hearn (1997).
19 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
20 Symposium by Richard Maibaum for the Writer's Guild of America, Beverly Hills, California, October 1987; via "Speaking of Writing" by Sylvia Kamion Maibaum and Richard Maibaum (2019).
21 "007 & the Cold War" in Commentary magazine (volume #72, issue #4, October 1981).
22 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).
23 "Production Notes - Goldfinger" on MI6-HQ website: https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/movies/gf_production
24 "Inside Goldfinger" DVD bonus.
25 Ewbank's auction page "James Bond - Goldfinger (1964) Berkely Mathers Association copy script": https://www.ewbankauctions.co.uk/20240607B-lot-8025A-James-Bond-Goldfinger-1964-Berkely-Mathers-copy-script-title-page-reads?view=lot_detail&auction_id=928
26 "Adrian Turner on Goldfinger" by Adrian Turner (1998).

LOOK UP!
LOOK DOWN!
LOOK OUT!
HERE COMES THE BIGGEST BOND OF ALL!
ALBERT R. BROCCOLI and HARRY SALTZMAN present
SEAN CONNERY
IAN FLEMING'S
"THUNDERBALL"
KEVIN McCLORY
TERENCE YOUNG
RICHARD MAIBAUM and JOHN HOPKINS
KEVIN McCLORY, JACK WHITTINGHAM and IAN FLEMING PANAVISION
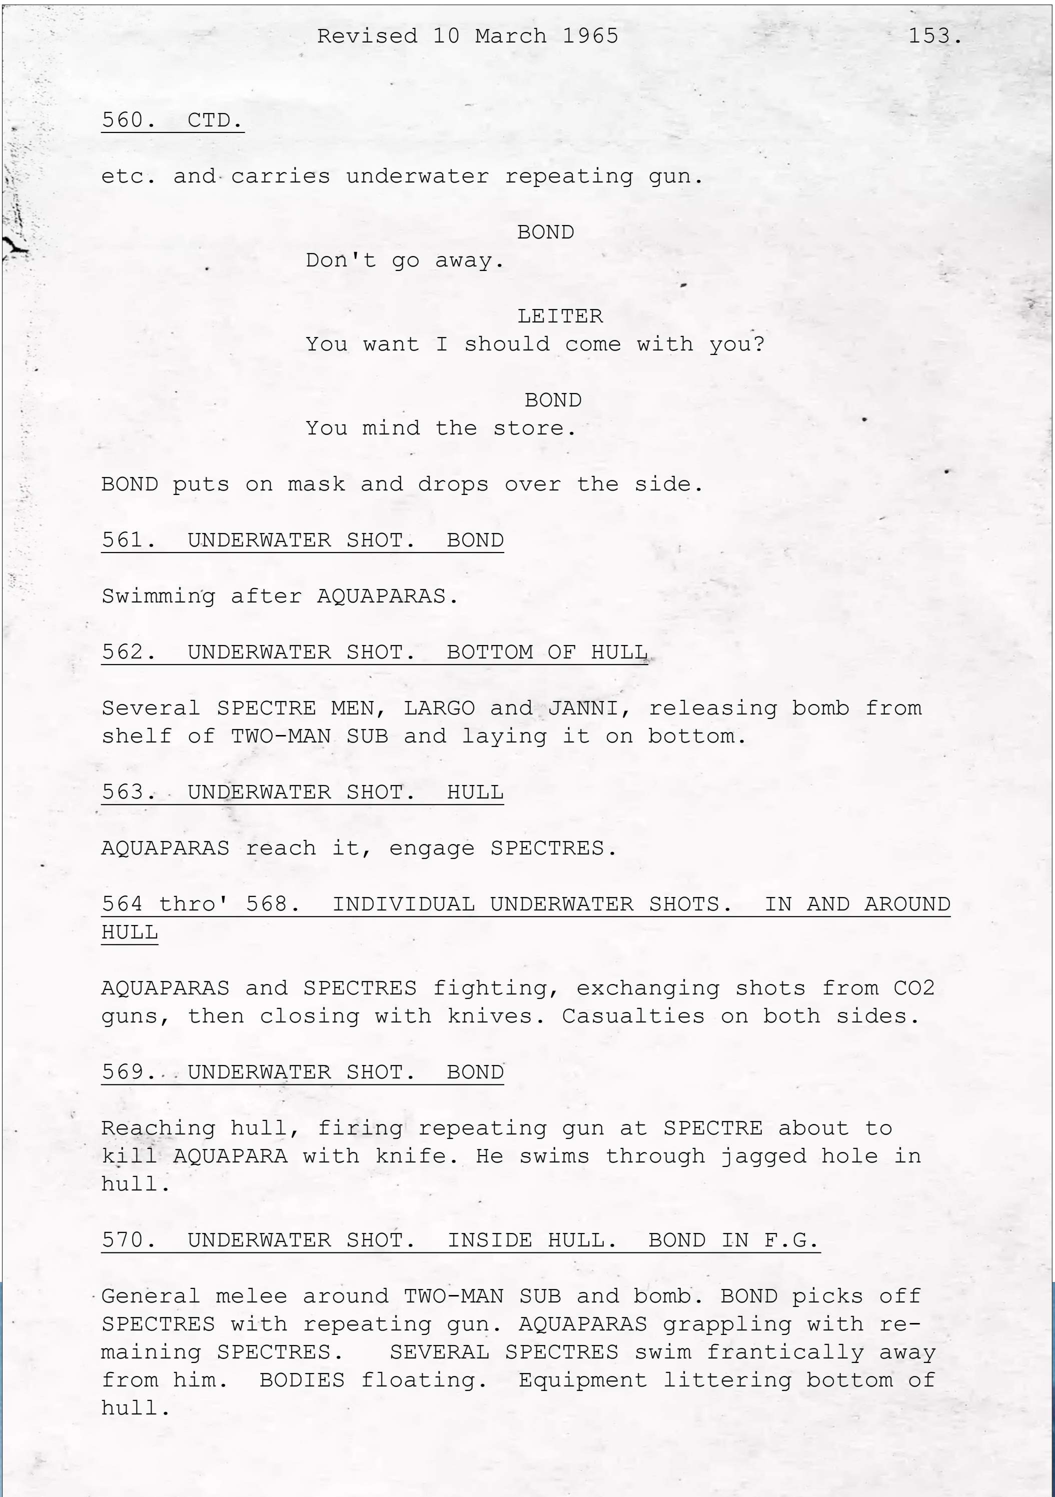
TECHNICOLOR
UNITED ARTISTS

Release date (premiere):
9 December 1965

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Screenplay by Richard Maibaum and John Hopkins. Based on an original screenplay by Jack Whittingham. Based on the original story by Kevin McClory, Jack Whittingham and Ian Fleming"

Director :...........................Terence Young
Producers :.......Kevin McClory, Albert R. Broccoli & Harry Saltzman
Director photography :..........Ted Moore
Set Designer:............................Ken Adam
Composer :...............................John Barry
Editors :.....Peter Hunt and Ernest Hosler
Title sequence :...............Maurice Binder
Title song vocals :.....................Tom Jones



Revised 10 March 1965 153.

560. CTD.

etc. and carries underwater repeating gun.

BOND
Don't go away.

LEITER
You want I should come with you?

BOND
You mind the store.

BOND puts on mask and drops over the side.

561. UNDERWATER SHOT. BOND

Swimming after AQUAPARAS.

562. UNDERWATER SHOT. BOTTOM OF HULL

Several SPECTRE MEN, LARGO and JANNI, releasing bomb from shelf of TWO-MAN SUB and laying it on bottom.

563. UNDERWATER SHOT. HULL

AQUAPARAS reach it, engage SPECTRES.

564 thro' 568. INDIVIDUAL UNDERWATER SHOTS. IN AND AROUND HULL

AQUAPARAS and SPECTRES fighting, exchanging shots from CO2 guns, then closing with knives. Casualties on both sides.

569. UNDERWATER SHOT. BOND

Reaching hull, firing repeating gun at SPECTRE about to kill AQUAPARA with knife. He swims through jagged hole in hull.

570. UNDERWATER SHOT. INSIDE HULL. BOND IN F.G.

General melee around TWO-MAN SUB and bomb. BOND picks off SPECTRES with repeating gun. AQUAPARAS grappling with remaining SPECTRES. SEVERAL SPECTRES swim frantically away from him. BODIES floating. Equipment littering bottom of hull.

CHAPTER 4

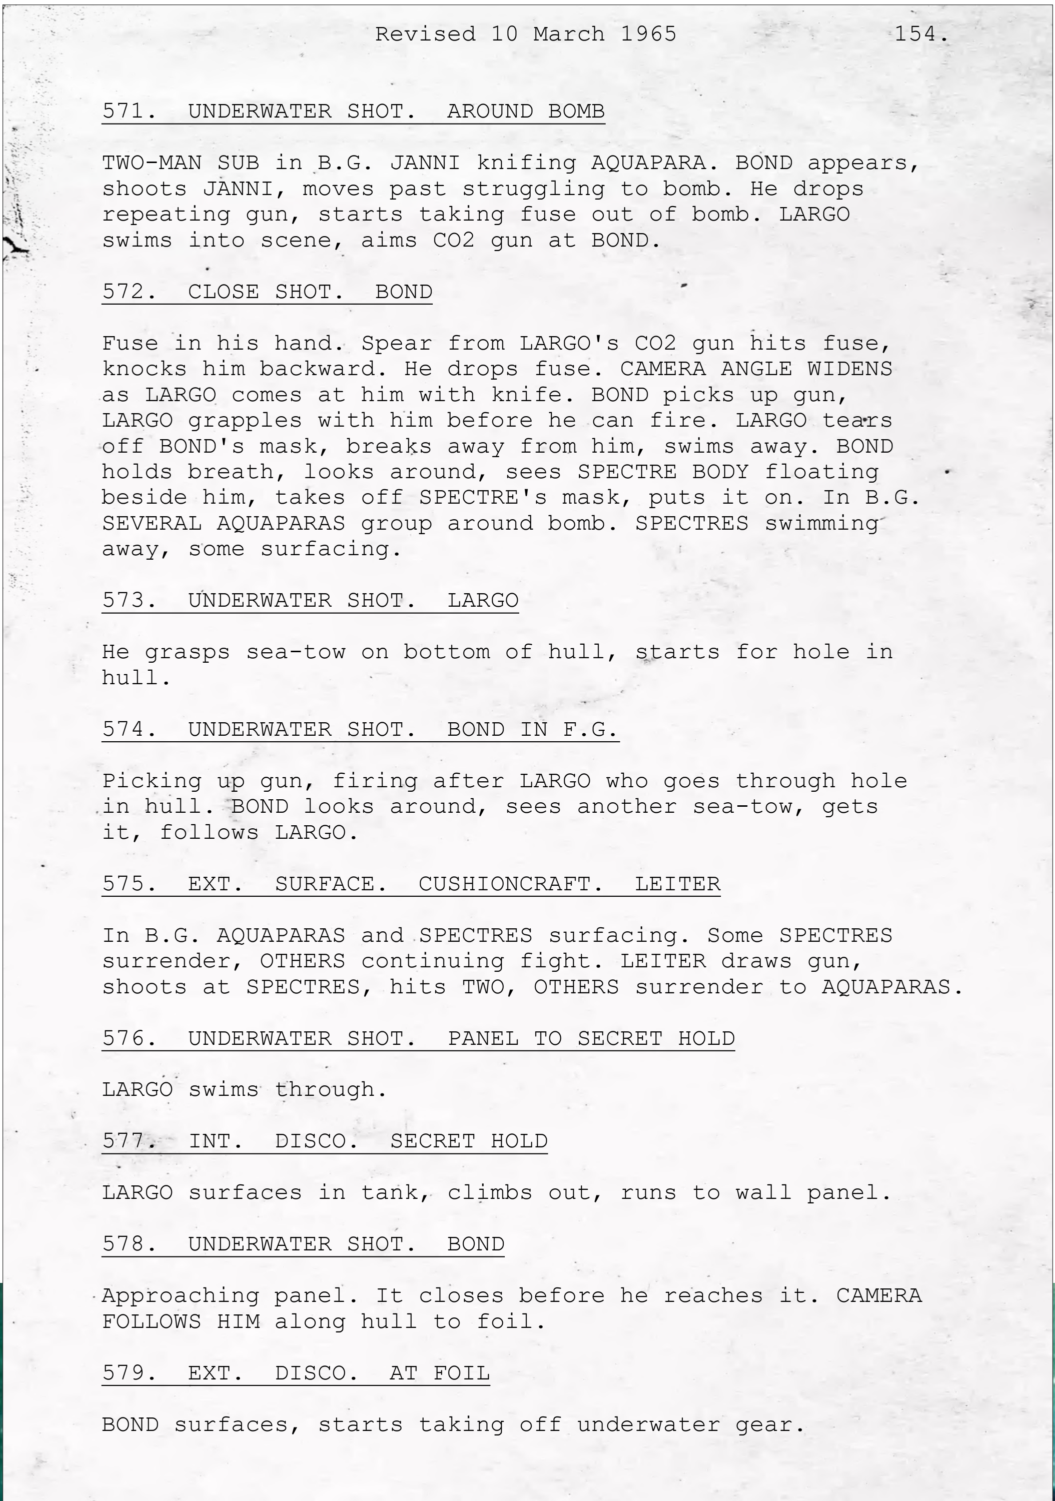
THUNDERBALL

Cast:

James Bond :	Sean Connery
Emilio Largo :	Adolfo Celi
"Domino" Derval :	Claudine Auger
Fiona Volpe :	Luciana Paluzzi
Felix Leiter :	Rik Van Nutter
Paula Caplan :	Martine Beswick
Lippe :	Guy Doleman
Patricia Fearing :	Molly Peters
Pinder :	Earl Cameron
M :	Bernard Lee
Moneypenny :	Lois Maxwell
Q :	Desmond Llewelyn

Main filming locations: Bahamas, France, United States and UK.

The most aquatic of all the James Bond films. Some will say that the time spent in the depths makes the film really slow but I just find these sequences fascinating. On the other hand, I find more problematic certain effects which have aged poorly, such as these accelerated sequences or projected backgrounds (which plagued so many Bond's films). Although much less iconic than its predecessor Goldfinger, this film presents us with a more active James Bond than in the last one and at the top of his form, just like his interpreter Sean Connery. Everything is bigger than before up to the gates of excess, with more budget, more girls and more gadgets... And even more producers! However, the road to Thunderball was long and paved with obstacles to arrive at a such a film and that's what we're going to talk about now.



Revised 10 March 1965 154.

571. UNDERWATER SHOT. AROUND BOMB

TWO-MAN SUB in B.G. JANNI knifing AQUAPARA. BOND appears, shoots JANNI, moves past struggling to bomb. He drops repeating gun, starts taking fuse out of bomb. LARGO swims into scene, aims CO2 gun at BOND.

572. CLOSE SHOT. BOND

Fuse in his hand. Spear from LARGO's CO2 gun hits fuse, knocks him backward. He drops fuse. CAMERA ANGLE WIDENS as LARGO comes at him with knife. BOND picks up gun, LARGO grapples with him before he can fire. LARGO tears off BOND's mask, breaks away from him, swims away. BOND holds breath, looks around, sees SPECTRE BODY floating beside him, takes off SPECTRE's mask, puts it on. In B.G. SEVERAL AQUAPARAS group around bomb. SPECTRES swimming away, some surfacing.

573. UNDERWATER SHOT. LARGO

He grasps sea-tow on bottom of hull, starts for hole in hull.

574. UNDERWATER SHOT. BOND IN F.G.

Picking up gun, firing after LARGO who goes through hole in hull. BOND looks around, sees another sea-tow, gets it, follows LARGO.

575. EXT. SURFACE. CUSHIONCRAFT. LEITER

In B.G. AQUAPARAS and SPECTRES surfacing. Some SPECTRES surrender, OTHERS continuing fight. LEITER draws gun, shoots at SPECTRES, hits TWO, OTHERS surrender to AQUAPARAS.

576. UNDERWATER SHOT. PANEL TO SECRET HOLD

LARGO swims through.

577. INT. DISCO. SECRET HOLD

LARGO surfaces in tank, climbs out, runs to wall panel.

578. UNDERWATER SHOT. BOND

Approaching panel. It closes before he reaches it. CAMERA FOLLOWS HIM along hull to foil.

579. EXT. DISCO. AT FOIL

BOND surfaces, starts taking off underwater gear.

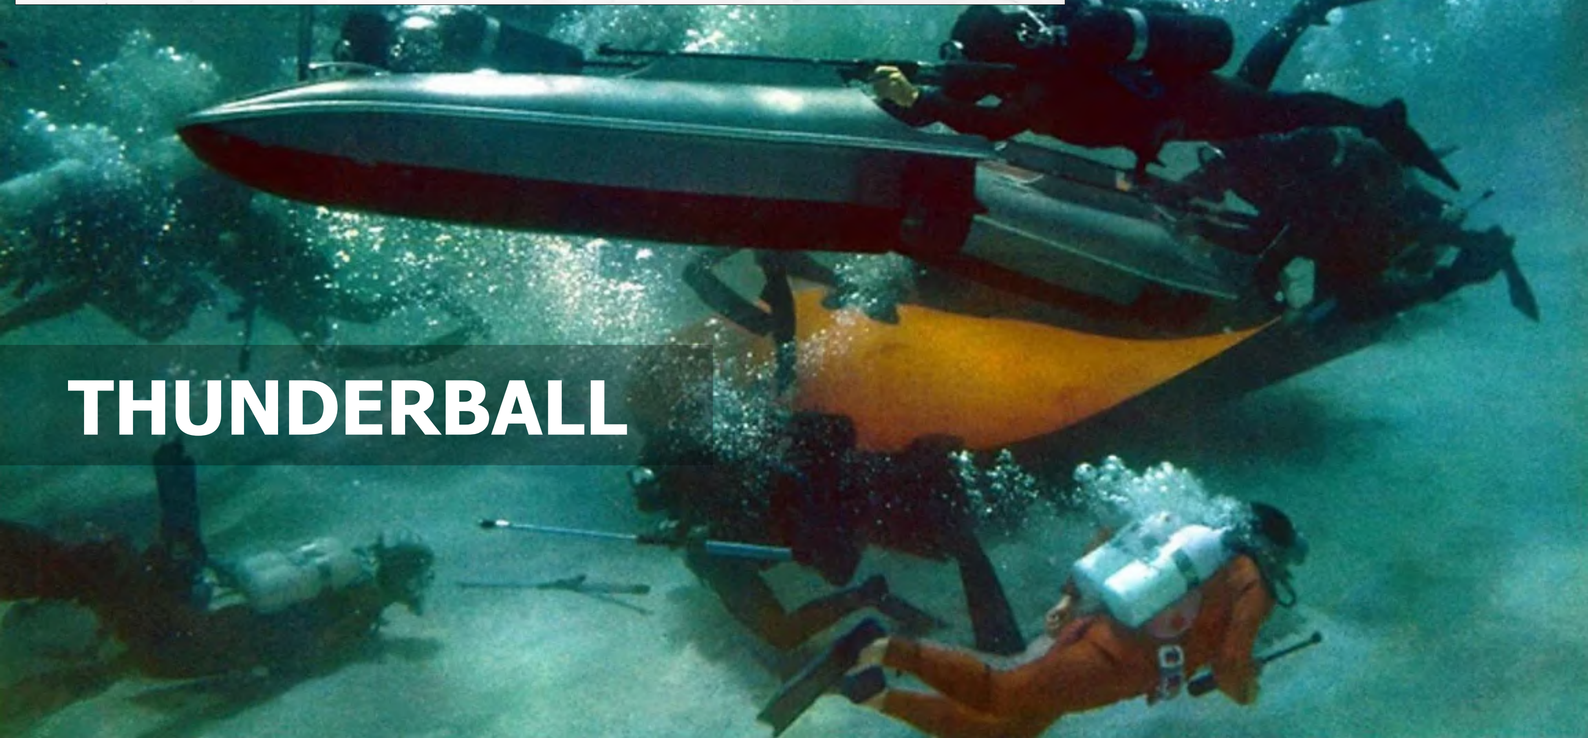


Table of contents

Thunderball

Bond and the Bridge....162
Doing a Bond film....168
The Cuneo's treatment(s): actors, atomic bomb and underwater battle....170
Fleming's reaction....173
Fleming's first treatment: Mafia, Largo and Domino from the Ghost Squad....175
A new writer: Jack Whittingham....184
New Whittingham's opening: Sophia, Petachi and informant....188
The shadow of Hitchcock and other matters....190
Fleming's second treatment: Valiant's wreck, boyfriend and Leiter death....193
Whittingham's treatment: two bombs, scientist, house and suicide....197
Bahamas scouting trip....202
Whittingham's first scripts: Truman, greedy Gaby and baccarat....206
When the plot becomes a novel: SPECTRE, Shrublands and Player's sailor....219
Whittingham's third script: double, Vulcan and scientist's motivation....228
The last months....231
See you in court: the 1961 edition....236
1961: EON's first script....239
A comic strip that disappoints....253
See you in court: the 1963 edition where Kevin McClory gains Thunderball screen rights....255
McClory and EON joining forces....263
"First draft": Fiona, Angelo, Palazzi, Double-O-stars and Paula....265
October 1964 revised script: breaking the fourth wall....269
New treatment: travesty, Aston Martin, shark pen....270
November 30, 1964: jetpack, Cushioncraft and Aluminaut....272
Some others scrapped ideas....284
1965: enter John Hopkins: Lipson, Daleks and Derval....285
Maibaum's opinion on a rough cut of the film....303

Summary table at the end of the chapter.

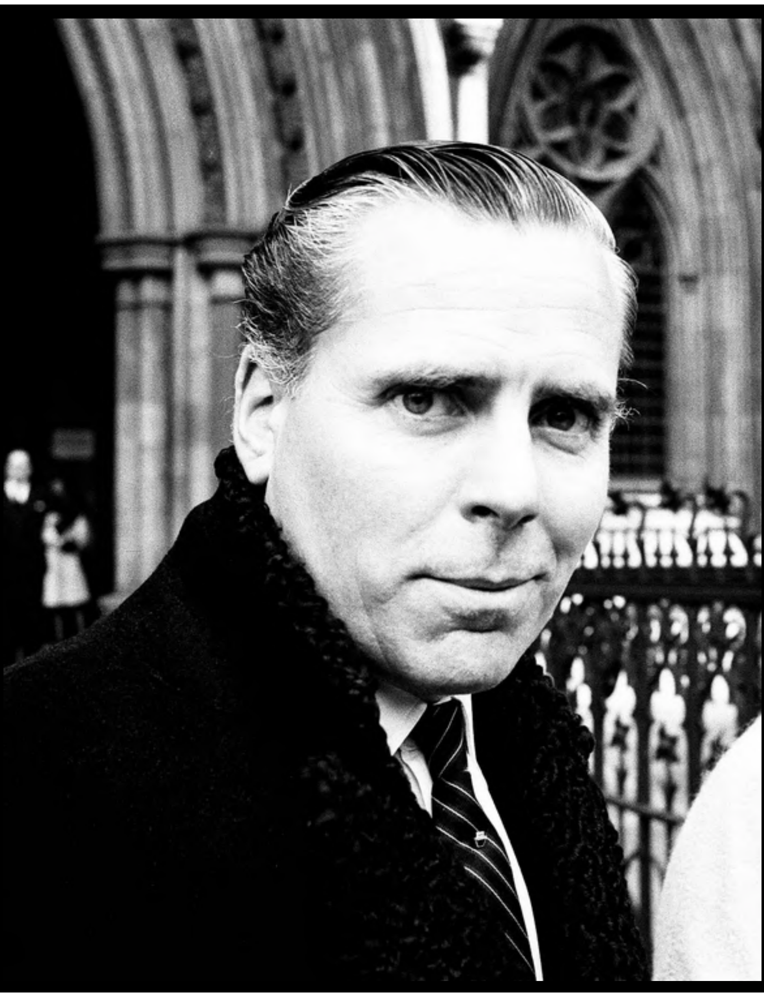
Bond and the Bridge

Note: presence of a summary table at the end of the chapter.

Like Bond historian John Cork once wrote in his article Inside Thunderball in Ian Fleming Foudation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #3), Thunderball constitutes an important episode in the James Bond cinematographic saga. It raised the budget, the marketing, and of course the box office to proportions that had never been achieved before. After Thunderball, no action scene was too big for Bond, no girl or piece of technology was out of his reach. It's also an important entry in the literary saga with the introduction of SPECTRE and Blofeld and of a long conflict that will result over the cinematographic rights of the novel.

Thunderball is also something that has grown, that has changed, and that has metamorphosed since the first attempt to make it the very first adventure of 007 on screen in 1959-1960 (a few years before Dr. No), to a novel in 1961, until the gigantic hit of 1965, before becoming Never Say Never Again in 1983.

One of the essential names when we talk about the development of Thunderball is the one of Kevin McClory: an Irishman in search of fame; a rather eccentric man who knows a lot of people and who made many fine promises throughout his life (which he was far from always fulfill).



Kevin O'Donovan McClory[1] was born on June 8, 1924 in Ireland. Suffering from dyslexia, he is not a student who shines at school. He become a sailor at 16.

During World War II, as a radio officer in the British merchant navy, McClory twice came under attack from German U-boats; he notably survived in terrible conditions on a lifeboat which drifted hundreds of kilometers for two weeks, seeing some of his companions die during the ordeal. This left him with severe frostbite and an inability to speak for more than a year after the incident. A pronounced stutter will remain a trace of these events when he regained his voice. McClory spend the rest of the war serving in the British Royal Navy.

After the war, he began a career in cinema at Shepperton Studios as a handyman. He rose to the rank of assistant to John Huston on films such as The African Queen (1951) and Moulin Rouge (1952). He works on The Cockleshell Heroes (1955) of Cubby Broccoli's Warwick Films as a location manager.

McClory is also assistant director of Huston on Moby Dick (1956) then, the same year, associate producer and second unit director on another aquatic film: Around the World in 80 Days, produced by Michael Todd. McClory and Todd managed to finish the film, despite the fact that they were competing for Elizabeth Taylor and quarreling about it.

After Around the World in 80 Days, McClory decides to take a vacation and goes to the Bahamas for the first time. He fell in love with the place and began to think that these clear waters would be ideal for filming underwater movie scenes.

In 1957, he led a 25-men expedition in an attempt to circumnavigate the world. He filmed a documentary about the adventure, One Road, as well as a series of advertisements for its sponsor (Ford Motor Company). The team completed the journey in 104 days.

Around 1958, during his world tour, McClory read something that would set the cogs of Thunderball in motion, as he remembers:

> - Kevin McClory[2] : I read Reader's Digest. There was a little short story by an American writer named [Leon] Ware, about a boy who ran away from home and made his home on the San Francisco bridge. I read this, and kind of liked it, so on the way back [from the world tour] [...] I ran into Mike Todd in Hawaii, in Honolulu. He wanted me to come back and work for him, but I had decided I didn't want to work for anyone anymore. You know, it was about time I did something on my own, so I told him. I'll always remember this: he said, "Well, what are you going to do?" and I said, "Make an underwater picture, in very wide screen". But then I'd just read this [Ware] story and he said, "Tell me about it", so I told him about the boy who ran away from home and all that, and I said: "I think I'll switch it to London; Tower Bridge, and a Cockney kid. It'll have a lot of appeal and human interest". He said: "Kevin, make the underwater picture", and I said, "Why do you say that?". He said: "Well, I know you, and if you make this boy and the bridge film, you'll go to festivals and win a lot of awards. But remember: you can't eat awards [that's not what will bring food to your plate]". Prophetic words!

Enter then the second protagonist of our Thunderball's genesis story: Ivar Bryce.

"In march 1958, my wife and I were at our house Balcony House, [in] Nassau, Bahamas", remembers Bryce[3]. "One evening, Kevin McClory was invited to our house by a mutual friend. My wife and I both found McClory a charming and interesting man. He has worked on [...] films and had at that time just finished a tour round [of] the world. [...] During the time we were in Nassau, we saw him quite often"[4].

"In April we returned to New York", continue Bryce[5]. McClory came one day, "he said that he had just read a story which it seemed to him would make a wonderful film"[6]. The story was Ware's The Boy and the Bridge[7]. When Bryce finished to read it, he told McClory that he found it delightful and "it would be great fun if he and I could do it together"[8].

Ivar Bryce.

Ivar Bryce (and more particularly his wife) was rich, and McClory needed money to do the film. Bryce however wasn't in film-making business, "I was infected by [McClory] excitement, and I told him that although it sounded wonderful, film production was not really for me"[9]. Anyway, the following day McClory persisted and Bryce accepted and made a check of 30,000 $ for setting the production in motion[10].

A detail we didn't talked about yet but which will be very important for later: Ivar Bryce was also a close friend of Ian Fleming since childhood, when there respective families/governess bring them one day of 1917 on the same beach[11]. Like says the cover of Fleming's biography that Bryce would later write in the 70's: the friendship between the two men "go back to their days at Eton. From that time on they were often together, Bryce an observer in Fleming's romances, or risking huge stakes on the tables of Europe's casinos. In the war, their [...] activities brought them into frequent contact. It was Bryce who [showed] Ian Fleming that Jamaica was the place for him to live, and discovered the estate on which Fleming built his famous house, Goldeneye. When Fleming began to write, they grew even closer and from the appearance of Casino Royale until Fleming's tragic death, barely a week went by without some new enterprise being planned or one of Fleming's flamboyant letters winging its way to Bryce"[12].

As usual Bryce talks about his new project to his old friend Fleming, that he wants to get into the film industry alongside McClory. Ian, who is now a little wary of the industry after failing to bring Bond to the screen in the past, then advises Bryce to be careful[13].

Bryce and McClory having decided to become partner to make the movie The Boy and the Bridge, Bryce contacted his attorney and friend Ernest Cuneo to make the legal papers. As Bryce, Cuneo is also a great friend of Ian Fleming:

Ernest Cuneo[14] (1905-1988) began his life as a professional American football player. At Columbia University he was also interested in journalism, art and law. He conclued his studies with a bachelor of laws in 1931 and became legal secretary to Fiorello H. LaGuardia, who was then a congressman representing New York. He would later write a book on him in 1955: Life with Fiorello.

When World War II broke out, General William Donovan, who was head of the OSS, appointed Cuneo as liaison officer between his organization, the British, the FBI, the US State Department and President Franklin Roosevelt. It was during this period that Ernest Cuneo met Commander Ian Fleming and also Ivar Bryce (who then worked for the OSS); a strong friendship will form with both of them. In homage to him, Fleming would later name a taxi driver from his novel Diamonds Are Forever "Ernest Cureo", after having made his research trip to Las Vegas with Cuneo.

In March 1951, Cuneo, Bryce and small group of investors bought NANA (North American Newspaper Alliance). Fleming would be a part of it (as European Vice President of NANA). Cuneo left the post of President of NANA in 1963 but continued to write there as a columnist and military analyst until 1980.

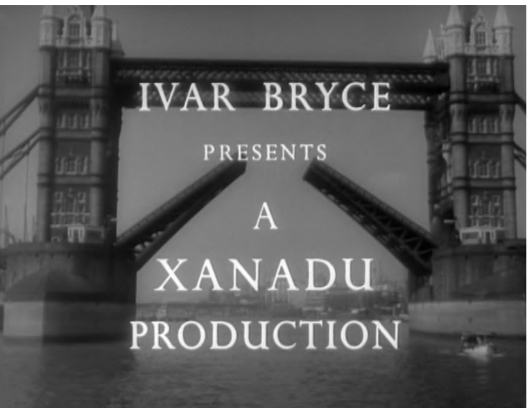
Among one of his writing, Cuneo started to wrote his remembrances of Ian Fleming. The more than 80 pages manuscript was, to my knowledge, never finished or published. For having reading its draft, I can however state that some part of it were included in chapter 4 of Fergus Fleming's The Man with the Golden Typewriter.

"In the Spring of 1958, I think the beginning of April, Bryce came to see me", remembers Cuneo[15]. "He told me that he had agreed to finance a film to be produced by Kevin McClory. We discussed the terms of his arrangement, and I strongly advised him against investing in the production of films. He did not accept my advice and so I prepared the partnership agreement with McClory's lawyer"[16]. The contract was signed May 6, 1958[17]. On Bryce's suggestion[18], the production company was called Xanadu Productions (named after one of Bryce's home in the Bahamas: Xanadu).

Xanadu Productions

The partnership between Bryce and McClory is supposed to be limited to one film only, "I was informed that under New York law, the partnership could not be extended to any other project or film without a memorandum in writing effect", stated Bryce[19].

Bryce invested more money in Xanadu Productions and McClory went to London to start the pre-production of The Boy and the Bridge, co-wrote the movie script and started to filming it, as its director.



IVAR BRYCE
PRESENTS
A XANADU PRODUCTION

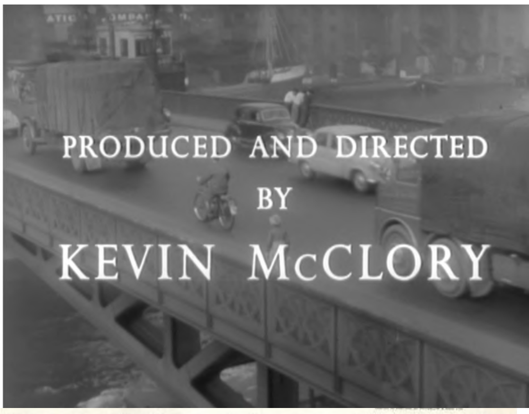
THE BOY AND THE BRIDGE
COPYRIGHT © MCMLIX XANADU PRODUCTIONS ALL RIGHTS RESERVED
MADE ON LOCATION IN LONDON FROM TWICKENHAM STUDIOS, ENGLAND. PROCESSED AT HUMPHRIES LABORATORIES.



PRODUCED AND DIRECTED
BY
KEVIN McCLORY

"When shooting started, I was astonished at the size of the operation [...] and the enormous expense of it all", declared Bryce[20]. "McClory did however finish shooting the film in time. Money kept on being spent and I was told by friends connected to the industry that the whole film seemed to be costing much to much"[21].

The black and white movie tells the story of Tommy, a little boy who runs away from home because he

COLUMBIA PICTURES presents A XANADU PRODUCTION
IAN MACLAINE · LIAM REDMOND in KEVIN McCLORY'S "THE BOY AND THE BRIDGE" "U"
Screenplay by GEOFFREY ORME, KEVIN McCLORY and DESMOND O'DONOVAN
Based on Story by LEON WARE
Produced and Directed by KEVIN McCLORY
This copyright advertising material is leased and not sold and is the property of National Screen Service Limited, and upon completion of the exhibition for which it has been leased it should be returned to National Screen Service Limited thinks his father has been arrested by the police for murder (which is not the case). Homeless, he decides to discreetly take up residence in Tower Bridge where he will meet a seagull. He decides to call the animal Sammy and it become his "friend". The movie has the boy evolving from the behind-the-scenes parts of the bridge, like the machinery. Tommy remains almost invisible, understanding little of what he sees, while the worker also notices, but doesn't understand, traces of his passage (like if there is some kind of phantom on the bridge).

The Boy and the Bridge (1959).

While the film was being edited, Ivar Bryce, who was in the United States, asked Ian Fleming to see how things were progressing and to give him advice[22]. So, one morning in November 1958, Ian met Kevin for a private screening of a rough cut of the film in Piccadilly[23]. Fleming really liked McClory's film, saying to Bryce that "the photography and direction are splendid and the whole thing stands up excellently" (although he found the movie too sentimental)[24].

The same month Bryce writes to Cuneo: "Kevin and I are on the best terms. [...] I am convinced that we have an award-winning picture"[25]. Princess Margaret expected at the premiere of the film was also probably another source of enthusiasm.

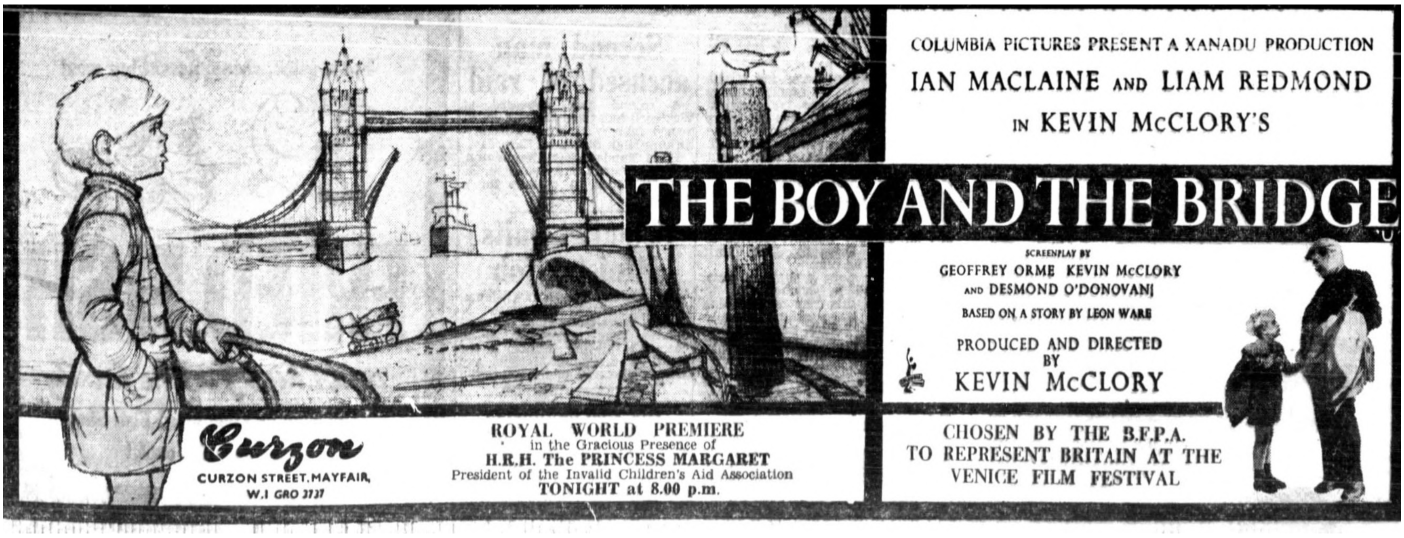
> - Ivar Bryce[26] : In February 1959, when The Boy and the Bridge was completed and distribution was arranged, McClory came to Nassau. [...] McClory felt confident that he had produced a film which would make a great deal of money. McClory wanted to move on to bigger and better things and conceived the idea of building a film studio in the Bahamas. The climate was perfect for photography [...] [and] it could offer considerable tax advantages to American [filmmakers] and at the same time could probably obtain the subsidies which accrued to British productions. We discussed plans at considerable length and I told McClory I would be delighted to re-invest in the studio company the capital I [would] recovered and the profits I [would] made from The Boy and the Bridge. [...] We even made inquiries about a disused aeroplane hangar which we tough could be adapted as a studio.

Bryce starts to discuss this Bahamas's film studio project with friends, "it seemed to us that the cost in general terms would be about $750,000 and I found four friends who would invest $50,000 each"[27]. For the record, theses four friend were Ian Fleming, Sir Francis Peek (an Old Etonian baronet who lived in the Bahamas), Charles Wacker III (Bryce's rich friend from Chicago), and Jean de la Bruyère (a young Canadian mining engineer)[28].

> - Ivar Bryce[29] : I was in England and talked to Ian Fleming about the proposal. He was an old school friend of mine and had been interested in my film venture from their inception. He had visited us when shooting The Boy and the Bridge and like me was most impressed with the efficient way with which McClory appeared to handle the production unit. [...] Fleming was very interested in the studio idea and we thought it would be a good plan to try to make one really successful film at the studio to show film producers what could be done there. [...] [Fleming] agreed that the first film at the new studio should be about James Bond.

After all, McClory had the talent to make it, Bryce (along friends/investors) had the money (or would had after the release of The Boy and the Bridge), and Fleming had Bond:

what could go wrong? Like John Cork once noted it, thus begins a fantastic process that would cost some people tens of thousands of dollars and make others millionaires...



COLUMBIA PICTURES PRESENT A XANADU PRODUCTION
IAN MACLAINE AND LIAM REDMOND IN KEVIN McCLORY'S

THE BOY AND THE BRIDGE

SCREENPLAY BY
GEOFFREY ORME KEVIN McCLORY
AND DESMOND O'DONOVAN
BASED ON A STORY BY LEON WARE

PRODUCED AND DIRECTED
BY KEVIN McCLORY

Curzon
CURZON STREET, MAYFAIR,
W.1 GRO 3737

ROYAL WORLD PREMIERE in the Gracious Presence of H.R.H. The PRINCESS MARGARET
President of the Invalid Children's Aid Association
TONIGHT at 8.00 p.m.

CHOSEN BY THE B.F.P.A.
TO REPRESENT BRITAIN AT THE VENICE FILM FESTIVAL

Doing a Bond film

"When we considered forming a studio company, it was thought that it could best be organized through a Bahama corporation"[30], remembers Bryce. The name Xanadu-Bahamas Limited was then envisaged for this new company[31].

To avoid confusion later, you should be aware right away that Xanadu-Bahamas Limited and Xanadu Productions are in fact two different entities; Xanadu-Bahamas Limited is linked to the Bond film and the studio, while Xanadu Productions was supposed, in theory, to be limited to just The Boy and the Bridge. By abuse of language the distinction was not always made on the documents written at the time, as Bryce would later say: "it may now seem confusing to have the same name for the partnership [The Boy] and the studio company, but in practice we always knew what [which one Xanadu] we were talking about"[32].

> - Ivar Bryce[33] : [On a meeting with me, Fleming and McClory] I told McClory that Fleming had agreed to write a treatment for the proposed studio company for a Bond film. McClory was very polite at the meeting, saying that he thought it would be very nice. After the meeting he told me that he did not think that a Bond film was really in his line at all or that any picture based on it would be successful. McClory, however, is a very thorough man and immediately went away and read all the Bond books and collected a lot of newspaper cuttings about Bond and became quite excited about the project.

By reading Fleming novels, McClory then saw the cinematic potential of James Bond, although he found them a little too sadistic and not very visual[34], predictable juvenile Boys' Own stuff[35].

> - Kevin McClory[36] : I read them and I was not really vaguely wild about them, I was kind of looking for a reason why a film company hadn't picked them up and run with them because, one, they are devoid of humor. There was no humor whatsoever in his novels. They were very sadistic. [...] But the potential is huge. [...] What man wouldn't love to kill at some stage or other and have a licence to kill? [...] And be able to have all those lovely girls and lead that kind of a life.

While much of Hollywood wasn't interested in adapting James Bond in movies, McClory was interested and enthusiastic about it. Fleming also seems enthusiastic about McClory: "After seeing your work on The Boy and the Bridge, there is no one who I would prefer to produce James Bond for the screen", he wrote in May 1959[37].

Fleming had proposed doing Live and Let Die or Diamonds Are Forever[38], but McClory quickly dismissed the idea of filming one of the existing novels, preferring to create a brand new James Bond adventure for the occasion and which would include, underwater scenes and other good things that Bahamas can offer. It's a theme that also speaks to the creator of Bond, Fleming liking to dive when he is at his villa in Jamaica and considered Jacques-Yves Cousteau as one of his heroes[39] ; Fleming's enthusiasm for the underwater world shines through chapters in Live or Let Die.

> - Kevin McClory[40] : In those days, in 1959, the Bahamas was kind of a paradise to people from Europe, and other places where they couldn't afford to get there. Palm trees, beautiful women, multimillionaires, and yachts, private clubs, white beaches and azure seas… I mean, the atmosphere was right for Bond. And underwater, I was very keen on, and no one had really utilized it, other than Disney.

In fact, Kevin McClory had already had the idea in 1957-1958 of one day making a treasure hunt film under the water of the Bahamas; he even had written a treatment for it with the screenwriter John Steinbeck which had led to nothing[41].

> - Kevin McClory[42] : So [Fleming] asked me which one [novel] I want to do. I said I don't want to do any of them. [...] I see the potential. That's huge, I said. There's no reason why it shouldn't be on screen. But we've got to introduce humor. I am doing an underwater story. This will be fabulous. It's set in the Bahamas. The Bahamas are perfect [...]. It's full of very, very rich individuals who have rather large yachts. And large yachts attract [...] attractive young ladies. [...] So also the casino down the Bahamas in those days, I'm talking about 1958. The casino, you had to wear a black tie on a Saturday night. [...] And of course from my point of view [...], oceanography is my hobby, but the clarity of the waters [...] it's coral, clear, and was ideal in every way. [...] He said: would I reread Diamonds are Forever or Live and Let Die? [...] I said, I don't think of, because I've read them: they're not going to change. And, he eventually agreed because I was not going to go any other way. And I felt we could create a story.

"So I said: why don't you collaborate with me, why don't we write together?", tells McClory, "and he said: okay, I'd like to work with you"[43].

On May 1959, McClory wrote to confirm Fleming that "our company, Xanadu Productions" want to go ahead with the James Bond project[44].

The Cuneo's treatment(s): actors, atomic bomb and underwater battle

Fleming had announced on 29th April that "the trouble about writing something specially for a film is that I haven't got a single idea in my head"[45]. But discussions between our protagonists at Moyns Park (Bryce's beautiful villa in Essex) and McClory/Xanadu Productions's place in London will resolve the situation[46]:

> - Ernest Cuneo[47] : While I was in England, I talked to Bryce, and, I am almost sure, to McClory about their idea of producing a film in Nassau. [...] The [studio] company would have something over half-a-million dollars in cash, [...] Bryce was going to invest his profits from the film The Boy and the Bridge in the company. [...] I stayed for a week-end at Bryce's house in Essex to discuss plans. We met Fleming in London. We decided to make the first film a James Bond film. [...] McClory was down one day to Essex and I remember that I roughed out a plot which was rather like Around the World in 80 Days. Bond traveled round the world and his assistant radioed information about rocket bases. It had scope for innumerable guest stars. Fleming, however, did not like it.

It "had not been met with enthusiasm by Fleming", confirm Bryce[48].

> - Ernest Cuneo[49] : I then wrote out the second script outline which became Thunderball.

So on May 27, 1959, Cuneo back to United State, wrote a treatment (his second?) for the film and sent it the next day to Ivar Bryce:

> 28 May, 1959
> Dear Ivar,
> Enclosed was written at-night, mere improvisation hence far from authors pride, possible authors mortification. Haven't even re-read it.
> ...... Ernest Cuneo.

Cuneo designed this story to meet certain limitations since they wanted to finance the film as part of the UK's Eady Levy plan subsidies[50], which partly makes Bahamas such an interesting place to create a film studio (the Bahamas were and still are, although they became independent in 1973, attached to the British Crown). According to him, the story "must be 75% British" for being able to perceive the Eady Levy money. Others places in Commonwealth like Gibraltar, Hong Kong or Kenya could be used for the film, he thinks[51].

Another thing necessary for the story according to Cuneo: the fact that Kevin McClory senses that the box office of the film would be strengthened if it contained a lot of underwater action, and if this was filmed with the camera system Todd-AO developed by Michael Todd, a former employer of McClory[52]. In fact, Cuneo seems to indicate that he wanted this Bond's story to reflect several of the ingredients of a successful Michael Todd' film, Around the World in 80 Days, which formula is according to Cuneo: "a fast moving plot, suspense, variety of scene, excellent photography and big name stars in bit parts"[53]. Stars appearances could be cheap if their cameos are short, "Kevin knows how 47 stars were bought into 80 Days for peanuts" writes Cuneo[54].

The "following is a basic plot, capable of great flexibility", precises Cuneo, "a myriad of similar plots could be generated, but the following is illustrative"[55].

Cuneo's untitled treatment is only 2 pages long and begins with Bond being summoned to M's office. The latter informs Bond that mysterious radio signals have been picked up from a plane by a British submarine in the Atlantic. This is strange since the only aircraft known to be present in the region was transporting members of the USO (United Service Organizations): a troupe of British and American artists who will put on a show to entertain allied troops in a remote Arctic base.

After a meeting with the Americans, Bond is put on the case as is Felix Leiter. Since M wants him to pose as a "performer-actor" to infiltrate the USO, Bond will first ask advices from actor/singer/writer Noel Coward (who was also a friend of Fleming, his neighbor in Jamaica and even Fleming's best man at his weeding). As Cuneo wrote it:

> Bond goes to, for example, Noel Coward, who gives him 30 seconds view of top British performers in action: Fonteyn, Gielgud, Gingold, Morley - everyone from Gracie Fields to Old Vic - in short presentation. Bond's efforts to imitate until he finds his metier can be amusing. Coward and Olivier finally work out an act for him.

Bond then joins the troupe of artists who perform at various NATO bases around the world. Cuneo requests Todd-AO camera shots of Paris, Rome, Athens, etc... With or through a BOAC plane (Cuneo writes that BOAC is British territory: this is valid for Eady plan subsidies, or at least that's what he thinks).

Noel Coward.

Bond eventually discovers that a sergeant on the plane is a top enemy agent and that one of his trunks contains a shortwave radio, broadcasting to enemy submarines. He also discovers that the sergeant intends to detonate atomic bombs on American bases. Bond reports to M, who tells him to follow the trail: this sergeant is only small fry, he wants to catch the big fish above him.

We soon discover that the sergeant (who is now under surveillance) has requested a transfer to the Bahamas. A lead that Bond follows bring him to a mysterious front company that has ordered a fleet of fishing ships from the Bahamas "for Iron Curtain country". These trawlers have hulls that Bond finds abnormal and he studies theirs plans. It turns out that there are hatches in the hulls (the precursors of the Disco Volante): they must be used to bring on board atomic bombs delivered by enemy submarines.

Frank Sinatra.

Bond scouts the Bahamas reef and finds the boats' crew: "foreign [...] enemy" frogmen, rehearsing and drilling underwater. "Here a detective story under water can be spelled out", writes Cuneo.

Bond goes to report to M who decides with Washington that the right course of action is to fight the enemy underwater.

In the end of the memo we can read its biggest contribution to the plot of Thunderball: a giant underwater battle at night that pits the bad guys against Bond and allied divers, while the USO puts on a performance on a nearby island with stars like Frank Sinatra (the camera must alternate between the two locations).

> As Frank Sinatra, Milton Berle, Dinah Shore, etc. etc., pile into [a] plane to take them to Nassau from Miami; British [and] American frogmen are dressing for battle.

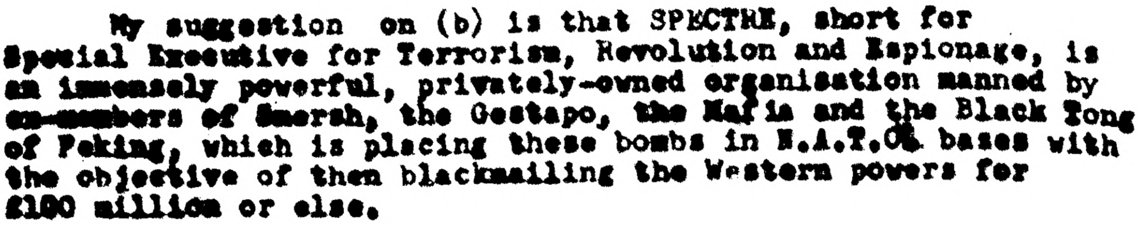
To conclude, Cuneo adds a note saying that the "details of a romance running throughout the plot are really simple", by imagining a girl in the USO choir who is actually an undercover CIA agent.

Fleming's reaction

Fleming liked Cuneo's story, qualifying it in a memo of "first class. It has right degree of fantasy, it covers the ground splendidly and suspense is admirably maintained"[56].

Fleming would like to point out some problems however. One concerns the villains of the story: "It might be very unwise to point directly at Russia as the enemy. Since the film will take about two years to produce and peace might conceivably break out in the meantime, this should be avoided"[57]! He suggests replacing the Russians with SPECTRE! This memo is the first written record of the existence of SPECTRE:

> - Ian Fleming[58] : My suggestion on (b) is that SPECTRE, short for S*pecial Executive for Terrorism, Revolution and Espionage*, is an immensely powerful, privately-owned organization manned by ex-members of Smersh, the Gestapo, the Mafia, and the Black Tong of Peking, which is placing these bombs in N.A.T.O. bases with the objective of then blackmailing the Western powers for £100 million or else.



My suggestion on (b) is that SPECTRE, short for Special Executive for Terrorism, Revolution and Espionage, is an immensely powerful, privately-owned organisation manned by ex-members of Smersh, the Gestapo, the Mafia and the Black Tong of Peking, which is placing these bombs in N.A.T.O. bases with the objective of then blackmailing the Western powers for £100 million or else.

Fleming imagines that the organization's headquarters could be located in a well-guarded castle in Normandy (France)[59].

McClory said he himself came up with the idea for SPECTRE: "[Fleming] was using the term SMERSH as the villains then, and I said: that's kind of old hat, making Russians always villains, and black people always villains, like that. We should consider another kind of organization"[60]. This may be true, but as John Cork once pointed out, Fleming had a fascination with the word. In the novel Diamonds Are Forever, the bad guys have a western town named Spectreville, and remember that in the novel From Russia, With Love, the decoder is named the Spektor (and not Lektor).

Here SPECTRE is the acronym for: Special Executive for Terrorism, Revolution and Espionage. The Counterintelligence, Revenge, and Extortion will visibly appear to be more attractive attributes later.

Another problem that Fleming would like to point out: "there is no heroine"[61]. To overcome this, he suggests that M has an undercover agent in SPECTRE: a certain... "Fatima Blush"! She would be a flight attendant on the USO flight who would assist the sergeant, Bond will obtain important informations from her[62].

Fleming imagines that Fatima would also be present in the final underwater battle: "her appearance in tight-fitting black rubber suiting will make the audiences swoon"[63]. "Bond kills the Baggage Sergeant just as he [the Sergeant] is turning off the valve in Fatima's oxygen tanks and the curtain goes down, as Bond and Fatima kiss through their snorkels. My imagination has slightly run riot over this last scene but you see the point"[64] (...and we will then have to wait years to hear about Fatima Blush again because that name was never used in the following drafts of the story).

Finally, another obvious problem Fleming would like to point out:

> - Ian Fleming[65] : One [...] small point. I am all for the light relief of the actors, etc., but this should be kept very separate from the main espionage plot which must be kept serious and entirely credible. [...] Bond's "act" should be as a trick revolver shot expert.

Fleming conclude his memo by: "In conclusion, I think the Cuneo outline is a wonderful basis to work on and, if and when you decide to go ahead, I will be prepared to start work on a rough script"[66].

Fleming's first treatment: Mafia, Largo and Domino from the Ghost Squad

The Boy and the Bridge has its premiere in July 1959, reactions were not too favorable[67]; production companies were also interested in Bond (an offer for a From Russia With Love TV film of 90 minutes is notably made by Hubbell Robinson with James Mason as Bond[68]). Fleming needs confirmation that the future Xanadu-Bahamas Limited will make the film and write about this to Bryce on July 2, 1959: "Conflicting bids for and interests in part or whole of the James Bond sausage have been coming thick and fast. [...] Xanadu [...] will of course get a most favored treatment if and when they express a firm interest"[69].

So Bryce expressed an offer and Fleming accepted it, the following agreement was drawn the July, 1959:

> - Ian Fleming[70] : In exchange for $50,000 worth of shares in the new company [Xanadu-Bahamas Limited], I give you the right to make the first film full length James Bond feature film. I will write a full suggested treatment which can be altered as you wish, and I will provide editorial and advisory services whenever they can be helpful.

Note that Fleming has written "the first" James Bond film (two words that would prove problematics later).

> - Ivar Bryce[71] : I wanted Fleming to come into the studio with me and thought a good way would be for him to receive shares in it to exchange for the rights in the Bond story. [...] I give him a personal cheque for $50,000 which was to be used by him to buy $50,000 shares in the studio company when it was organized.

(In the very end "the company never has been organized and accordingly the cheque has remained uncashed", says Bryce[72]. Fleming later repaid Bryce in 1962, although he didn't had too[73], but Bryce was a friend after all, if not his best friend). A second cheque of $50,000 for options on future films was also drawn[74].

> - Ivar Bryce[75] : After McClory became enamored of James Bond idea he suggested to me one day that it would be marvelous if we can base a book on the screenplay, which with luck, could be published at the same time as the film was released. The double publication would benefit both.

> - Ernest Cuneo[76] : So far as I can remember [...] the idea [of Fleming writing a novel as well as the film story] was a subject of general conversation between Bryce, McClory and me for some time, while I was in England. I do not recall Fleming at any of these meetings [...] but there is no doubt in my mind that McClory was enthusiastic about Fleming writing a novel also. He said so to me. [...] I do know that McClory thought a novel and a film would reciprocally aid each other.

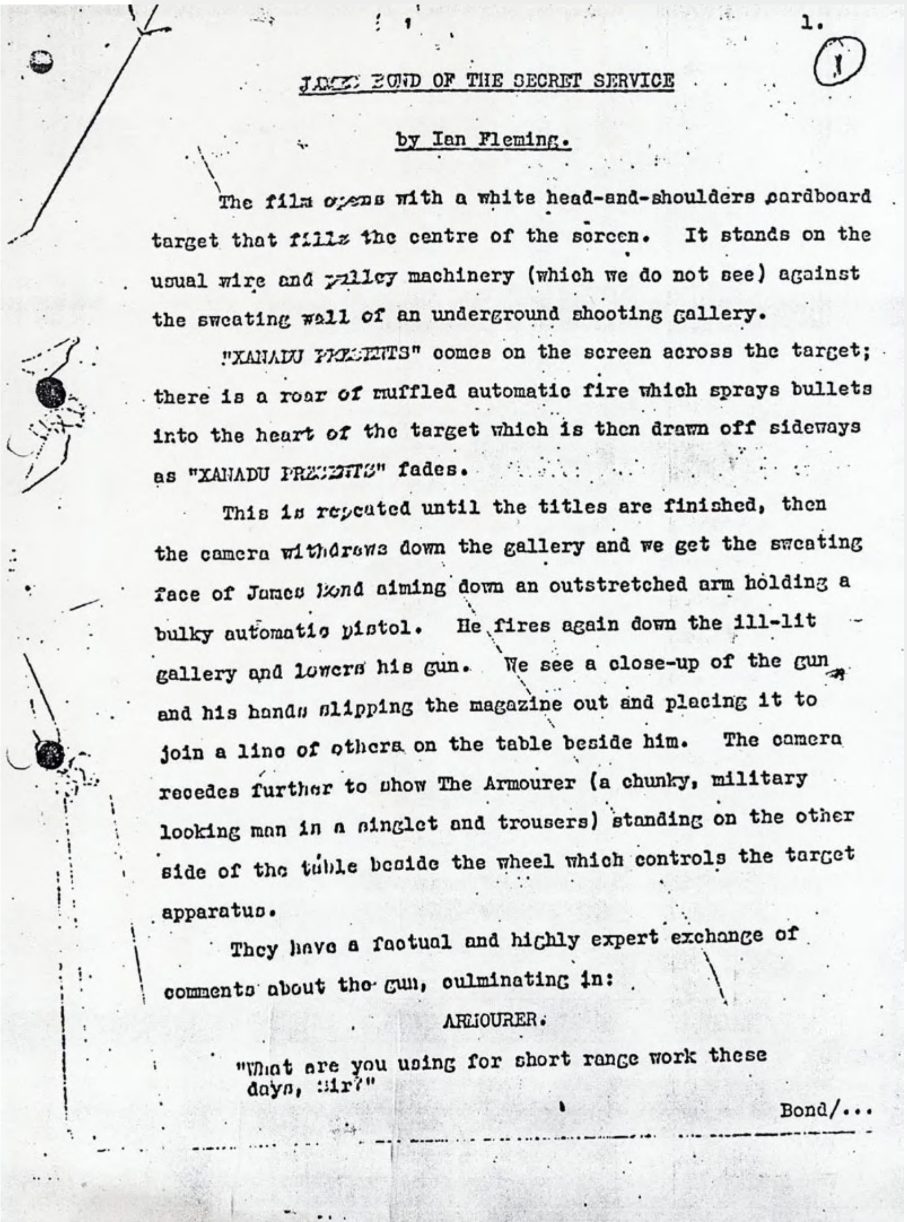
"It was just part of the creative enthusiasm of the whole thing; and definitely part of such aura was the fact that Fleming would write a novel around the plot of the picture", continue Cuneo[77].

Doing a novelization of The Boy and the Bridge (not written by Fleming) was also envisaged in 1958[78].

Fleming having now a formal agreement with Bryce, he then writes a treatment for the film shortly after writing his note on SPECTRE. But surprise! SPECTRE is not there: it has been replaced by the Mafia! In fact, the Italian-American Mafia remained the villainous organization throughout the rest of the scenarios developed for Xanadu-Bahamas Limited.

The treatment is undated, it was written around July 1959. For the opening scene of this 63-page treatment (which is in fact pretty much a script) entitled James Bond of the Secret Service, we are told that:

> The film opens with a white head-and-shoulders cardboard target that fills the centre of the screen. It stands on the usual wire and pulley machinery (which we do not see) against the sweating wall of an underground shooting gallery.
>
> "XANADU PRESENTS" comes on the screen across the target; there is a roar of muffled automatic fire which spray bullets into the heart of the target which is then drawn off sideways as "XANADU PRESENTS" fades.
>
> This is repeated until the titles are finished, then the camera withdraws down the gallery and we get the sweating face of James Bond aiming down an outstretched arm holding a bulky automatic pistol. He fires again into the ill-lit gallery and lowers his gun. We see a close-up of the gun and his hands slipping the magazine out and placing it to join a line of others on the table beside him. The camera recedes further to show The Armourer (a chunky, military looking man in a singlet and trousers) standing on the other side of the table beside the wheel which controls the targets apparatus.
>
> They have a factual and very expert exchange of comments about the gun, culminating in:



1.

1

JAMES BOND OF THE SECRET SERVICE

by Ian Fleming.

The film opens with a white head-and-shoulders cardboard target that fills the centre of the screen. It stands on the usual wire and pulley machinery (which we do not see) against the sweating wall of an underground shooting gallery.

"XANADU PRESENTS" comes on the screen across the target; there is a roar of muffled automatic fire which sprays bullets into the heart of the target which is then drawn off sideways as "XANADU PRESENTS" fades.

This is repeated until the titles are finished, then the camera withdraws down the gallery and we get the sweating face of James Bond aiming down an outstretched arm holding a bulky automatic pistol. He fires again down the ill-lit gallery and lowers his gun. We see a close-up of the gun and his hands slipping the magazine out and placing it to join a line of others on the table beside him. The camera recedes further to show The Armourer (a chunky, military looking man in a singlet and trousers) standing on the other side of the table beside the wheel which controls the target apparatus.

They have a factual and highly expert exchange of comments about the gun, culminating in:

ARMOURER.

"What are you using for short range work these days, Sir?"

Bond/...

> \- Armourer: What are you using for short range work these days, sir?

The opening thus happens to have elements of the Moonraker novel which also opens with Bond and a armourer on a shooting range. It also have elements of Dr. No novel when Bond show the armourer his gun: a Beretta .25.

> \- Armourer: Bit of a ladies' gun, isn't it, sir?
> \- Bond: Some people haven't thought no.

The armourer compare Bond performance to the one of others 00 agents and tells him that he hasn't seen 008 recently; Bond gives him an answer which seems to indicate that 008 is dead.

Bond leave the shooting range, saying "see you next month", and take an elevator. Bond moves through the building (where there are sounds of telephones, people with files, someone speaking in Russian, etc...) and enter a door marked "00". Inside we see "a middle-aged woman with iron grey hair who is secretary to the Double 0 section": Loelia Ponsonby.

"Morning, Lil", says Bond and as in Moonraker she takes his coat. During their exchange there is a dialogue probably aimed to make establish to the audience who haven't read the books what Double 0 section is:

> \- Ponsonby: Why stay in the Double 0 section anyway? [...] There's nothing to be proud of in being allowed to kill people.
> \- Bond: We've had all this out before, Lil. Somebody's got to be the fire brigade.

Bond enter his office, he is alone. "There are various personal mementos on his desk: the fuse cap from a shell, a large piece of shrapnel and [...] a rusty commando dagger which Bond uses as a paper knife". Then Fleming curiously give Bond voice-over monologue while he is looking through the window:

> \- Bond: My name is James Bond. I am agent 007 in the Secret Service. The Double 0 means that I have licence to kill in the execution of my duties. That means that I get given the dirty jobs; the jobs you never read about in the newspapers, the ones even the Government would rather know nothing about. I don't particularly like these sort of jobs but now it's months since I've been able to get out of this damned office and all this paper work, and it's Monday and Mondays are hell anyway.

The Mondays part is also from Moonraker, a novel that Fleming once envisaged to title Mondays are Hell[79]. The phone on his desk rings: it's M.

007 leaves his office and goes to M's one. He arrives at Moneypenny's office, she is described as blonde with her hairs in tight bun and wearing a "uniform of a Chief Officer W.R.N.S.". (Years later, in the novel The Man with the Golden Gun, Fleming would however describe her as a brunette).

The Chief of Staff join them and says a line to 007 that will be changed slightly for the novel Thunderball: "Fasten your seat belt". (In the novel it will be "Fasten your lap strap", which will also be used by Fleming as the title of chapter 7).

Bond finally enters M's office where there is also Ronald Vallance, a character that appears in a few Fleming's novels like Moonraker or Diamonds are Forever. The treatment describe him as the "assistant Commissioner of Police and head of the C.I.D.".

M is described as "a retired admiral, aged about fifty [...]. He has hard, lined face and very clear eyes. His hair is a little grey at the temples. [...] He frequently smoke a pipe".

007 is invited by M to sit down and Vallance ask Bond what he know about "the Mafia". 007 give them a short lecture on the subject, including a reference to the Apalachin meeting (a Mafia's summit in 1597 that got raided by the authorities, resulting to the arrest of more than 60 underworld bosses). Vallance then asks him what does he know about atomic bombs in England. 007 has almost no knowledge on that subject.

> - Vallance: You may not know it, but we've got one of the top Mafiosi here now. Moved in about a couple of years ago [...]. Ever heard of a roadhouse called The Spangled Room, outside Epping Forest on the Newmarket road? [...] Well, that's owned by a man called Largo, Henrico Largo. He's the top Mafia man here.

Vallance explain that the place is under surveillance, phones are bugged; he even have someone infiltrated in The Spangled Room: a girl from the "Ghost Squad".

Recently top Mafia members from around the world came in Largo's nightclub, then Largo started to make telephones call to some Italians (there is some flashback over Vallance's voice to illustrate). A raid is in preparation for tomorrow night, a robbery at Shoeburyness: a place where A-bombs are stocked. Vallance thinks the Mafia intent to steal atomic or hydrogen bombs and hold the country or the world in ransom.

> - Bond: Why not round up all these people then? Lock then up, shoot them, anything you like.

Vallance replies they are not in Russia or China, and they are lacking proof. Security will be reinforced at the Shoeburyness rocket base, so M thinks there is nothing to worry about, but he summoned Bond "as an additional precaution", to tell him to be ready to go abroad to search the bombs in case the Mafia succeed anyway. 007 said he better go take a look at this Largo.

So Bond get in his Bentley 4½ Litre (with, of course, an Amherst Villiers supercharger) and goes to The Spangled Room. Bond has disguised himself, including "a prominent gold tooth" for changing his appearance.

He orders "Bourbon and soda and a glass of iced water" and meet the infiltrated girl from the Ghost Squad: Dominique Smith "(known to her friends as Domino)". She works in the nightclub as a cigarette girl. She indicate him a way to go in the reserved for the personnel parts of the club, and now disguised in an alarm company repairman, Bond explore theses areas.

007 "puts his hand inside his pocket and whips out a cosh", he knock out a guard. He then see Mafia's men wearing American Air Force uniforms and a little later Henrico Largo, playing/learning organ.

He says to him he is from the alarm company, but it has been noticed that a guard had been coshed out. Largo order one of his henchman called Toni to grab Bond, there is fight in which Bond end up knock out.

> - Largo: Put him in the boiler room, that will soften him up. He'll be cither melted or stifled by the time we're gone.

They're doing that and we see Bond's sweating face in the boiler room. At last, Domino came in the room and free him. Bond drive back to London to tell his story to Vallance at Scotland Yard but to late: while there are talking a sergeant comes to announce them the bad news. An American Air Force helicopter landed in the Shoeburyness base, three men in uniform and the right accreditation got out and announced to the base commandant that some of the warheads of the base may have a leaking radioactive material problem. An inspection happened, the men found abnormal highly radioactivity in one of the base's warhead. "Tell your men to keep clear, Colonel. We're all wearing protective material under these suits", they said before loading the defective warhead in the helicopter and flight away.

By telling this scene by dialogue rather than showing it to the audience, Fleming doesn't write cinematically.

The camera now show us the helicopter above the foggy sea and landing on the water near an old freighter. The bomb is transported into the freighter and Largo machine-gun the helicopter which then sink in the water.

So its now panic while the English deploy forces to search for the bomb and its thieves, without success. "Now we've just got to sit and wait", says M.

007 is aboard a motor torpedo boat, with the research forces. They see a boat sailing with no flag called the Saturnia. They board it but it is empty. Well not entirely empty, its former occupants left a booby-trap in it but Bond notice it in time. They go back to the torpedo boat and Bond shoot with the Bofors gun at the booby-trapped door: the whole Saturnia explode and sink.

We now find Bond and Vallance at London airport, 007 is ready to take a plane for Nassau. Bond thinks the Mafia left the Saturnia aboard a seaplane. A Sunderland seaplane have landed in Nassau as Ronnie Vallance explain:

> - Vallance: Nassau immigration said that fifteen men came ashore [...]. All Italians. Booked in at Emerald Beach for a textile convention [and more men are expected]. [...] All behaving perfectly respectably. [...] No sign of the bomb and they went over the whole thing with a Geiger counter hidden in a briefcase.
> - Bond: I simply don't get the picture. [...] There's no target in Nassau except the airport and some rich hotels and a handful of aging millionaires.
> [...]
> - Vallance: Personal air mail letter handed in at Palermo, Sicily, [...] addressed to the Prime Minister. [...] Signed "Capo Mafiosi", that's the head of the Mafia. [...] Letter [says] the bomb will be used to destroy a vital defense installation of the Western Allies. The result [...] will be to vitally damage the balance of power of the Western Allies vis-a-vis their enemies. Considerable loss of life, though to be regretted [...] The alternative says the letter, is the payment of £100 million in gold [...] in a series of coordinated night drops over a broad area of Sicily.

They have 14 days to pay and the Americans assigned a man to team up with Bond, "undercover chap from Central Intelligence Agency, man called Felix Leiter". In this treatment Bond doesn't know him (even if the character shared adventures with him in four Fleming's novel). Dominique Smith will also come to Nassau with Bond, since she know well the Mafia's members, and "she's a first class agent" adds Vallance. "How much does she know?" asks Bond, "only the cover story" replies Vallance.

Meanwhile at the Emerald Beach Hotel, Largo reprimands Toni who brought a gun, "you won't be needing that damned shooting iron here". There are joined by Impellitini, the head of the New York branch of the Mafia, who complain that the best room of the hotel was given to a friend of the governor called Bond. What emerge of theses scenes is that Largo is in a relax mode, almost in vacation: he doesn't thinks the authorities are on their trail here and is confident about the fact England will pay in due time.

Emerald Beach Hotel.

Bond and Domino are on the beach, observing other Mafia men. He says to her that the Mafia going to have a party at the casino this evening and that he want to do an underwater survey of the yacht on which Impellitini is arrived on, the Virginia.

Bond goes to meet the Governor and Leiter. M on the phone inform him that the Mafia's target could be "the new Anglo-American rocket site on the Grand Bahamas". Leiter ask for a submarine.

While Leiter and Domino goes to the Mafia's party at the casino, James Bond don a diving suit and goes do his survey of the Virginia. But the Mafia is not a fool and they left a sentry underwater. Bond is spotted and they have a knife fight underwater. 007 menages to kill the sentry but the blood attract sharks which attack the dead body and "Bond is lucky enough to get away with his life". His survey however gave nothing.

Bond goes to his hotel room and, with a rope ladder, climb down from his balcony to Largo's room which bellow his. He install a microphone and go back to his room.

Largo comes back from the casino with Domino with him (a cover story explaining that her job a his nightclub was a temporary one while she was waiting an assignment in Nassau exist in the treatment). They goes to Largo's room and she start to search the place while he have his back turn. Largo notice it: "I though you were a phoney. Who're working for?". They struggle.

Bond, who is listening above, climb down his balcony again and interrupt:

> - Bond: If you must murder your wife, I wish you'd make less noise about it. I sleep just above you [...]. Couldn't you wait and kill her in the morning?
> - Domino: I'm not his wife. [...] Would you be very kind and see me to my room?
> - Bond: Would you like me to hit him, just once?

Largo produce a gun, so they gently leave, just after Bond introduced to Largo with his to be famous line "My name's Bond, James Bond".

Bond and Domino goes to the girl's room and a love scene follows.

The Virginia sails to the see and the Mafia goes underwater (through a "hatch in the ship's side" hull) for a training session. They practicing with harpoons gun against fish, etc... Suddenly a speedboat approach the yacht: Leiter is at the wheel with a girl while Bond is water-skiing behind. Trough the clear water, Bond is able to see the hatch. They goes away.

Bond and Leiter gone, Largo and his men goes to the spot where they earlier drop the bomb in water from the seaplane and retrieve it.

The U.S. submarine requested by Leiter is arrived, Bond and Leiter board inside. Bond propose to tail the Virginia and attack the Mafia's men when they will be underwater with the bomb. 007 suggest painting numbers in white on their suits, to distinguish them from the Mafia's ones.

For now the yacht is back to Nassau and Largo goes makes his apologies to Domino and invites her to a cocktail party on the Virginia this evening. She tells that to Bond. He tells her the real stakes of their presence at the Bahamas and ask her to bring a Geiger with her.

At the cocktail party, Largo, who doesn't really trust Domino, has his men watch her. She is discovering spying with the Geiger which shows radioactivity. Captured, Domino is interrogated: "Toni has a lighted cigarette and there is much threat of torture". She doesn't talk, sticking to her cover story.

Policemen inform Bond that Domino didn't stepped off the boat which has started to sail. 007 and Leiter follow the Virginia aboard the submarine.

A dinner tray is given to Domino and she steals the knife. She uses it to break away from the cabin she was locked in, take a diving suit of the Virginia, and goes back to the cabin.

The yacht arrive near the rocket base at Grand Bahamas (Fleming states they will use in fact Cape Canaveral for the shooting). Mafia's divers goes plant the bomb, submarine's divers accompanied by Bond try to stop them in an underwater battle:

> We alternatively follow the gangster team with its heavy burden swung from webbing between four of the men and the shadowy, pursuing figure of Domino Smith and, converging upon them, Bond's underwater army. A great pitched battle then ensues with CO_2: guns and knives, culminating in a life and death struggle between Bond and Largo. Bond is about to get the worse of it and Largo's knife is raised when Domino shoots Largo with her CO_2 gun.

The submarine fires a round onto the Virginia and the Navy divers retrieve the bomb while Bond and Domino surfaces, pulls their mask and kisses. The end.

As you can see, the core elements of the future novel are already established in this first Fleming's treatment: stolen atomic bomb, Largo, Domino, Leiter, the yacht, the casino, American submarine and the underwater battle.

Some of the cinematic elements are there as well: Bond's humor is obvious, but not as slick as it will become in some of the films. Even the typical Bond introduction is present: "My name's Bond, James Bond".

Below is a memo from Fleming (undated, accompanying this treatment):

This is a rough suggested treatment for a James Bond film.

It is the story of an attempt by the Mafia to blackmail the West for £100 million using as a lever an atomic warhead stolen from one of Britain's rocket sites. The target is a new "Cape Canaveral" built on Grand Bahamas.

The scenes is in England, the English Channel and Nassau.

My concern has been only to stitch together a more or less plausible narrative based on this plot and make it as fast-moving and packed with incidents as possible. To my mind, the chief weakness in the treatment is the thinness of the Mafia threat and this must be considerably strengthened, perhaps by more attention to the Mafia meeting in London.

There are other weaknesses which here would need to be tightened up here and there, but it seems to me that the main thread of the story stands up fairly well.

I'm badly in need of good Italian names for Mafia gangsters and theses could perhaps be obtained from the Venice telephone directory!

In order to keep the feet of this film firmly on the ground, the production will have to be particularly brisk so as not to allow the audience time to worry about the probabilities. Production will also to have be particularly strong in portraying the Secret Service and the Mafia. Any suspicion of cardboard should be avoided and the acting throughout should be under-played and without exaggeration.

There are no very expensive props except an American helicopter and an American submarine and these can probably be obtained without much difficulty.

More subsidiary incidents should be added where there is any sign of the pace flagging but, for the time being, my imagination has run out.

I saw George Raft the other day in a film and he is as good as ever. He might be useful. Ernest Cuneo should definitely be used as the Capo Mafiosi who comes to London to set up the spiel.

No other suggestions for the moment.

Memorandum.

This is a rough suggested treatment for a James Bond film.

It is the story of an attempt by the Mafia to blackmail the West for £100 million using as a lever an atomic warhead stolen from one of Britain's rocket sites. The target is a new "Cape Canaveral" built on the Grand Bahamas.

The scene is in England, the English Channel and Nassau.

My concern has been only to stitch together a more or less plausible narrative based on this plot and to make it as fast-moving and packed with incidents as possible. To my mind the chief weakness in the treatment is the thinness of the Mafia threat and this must be considerably strengthened, perhaps by more attention to the Mafia meeting in London.

There are other weaknesses which would need to be tightened up here and there but it seems to me that the main thread of the story stands up fairly well.

I am badly in need of good Italian names for the Mafia gangsters and these could perhaps be obtained from the Venice telephone directory!

In order to keep the feet of this film firmly on the ground, production will have to be particularly brisk so as not to allow the audience time to worry about probabilities. Production will also have to be particularly strong in portraying the Secret Service and the Mafia. Any suspicion of cardboard must be avoided and the acting throughout should be under-played and without exaggeration.

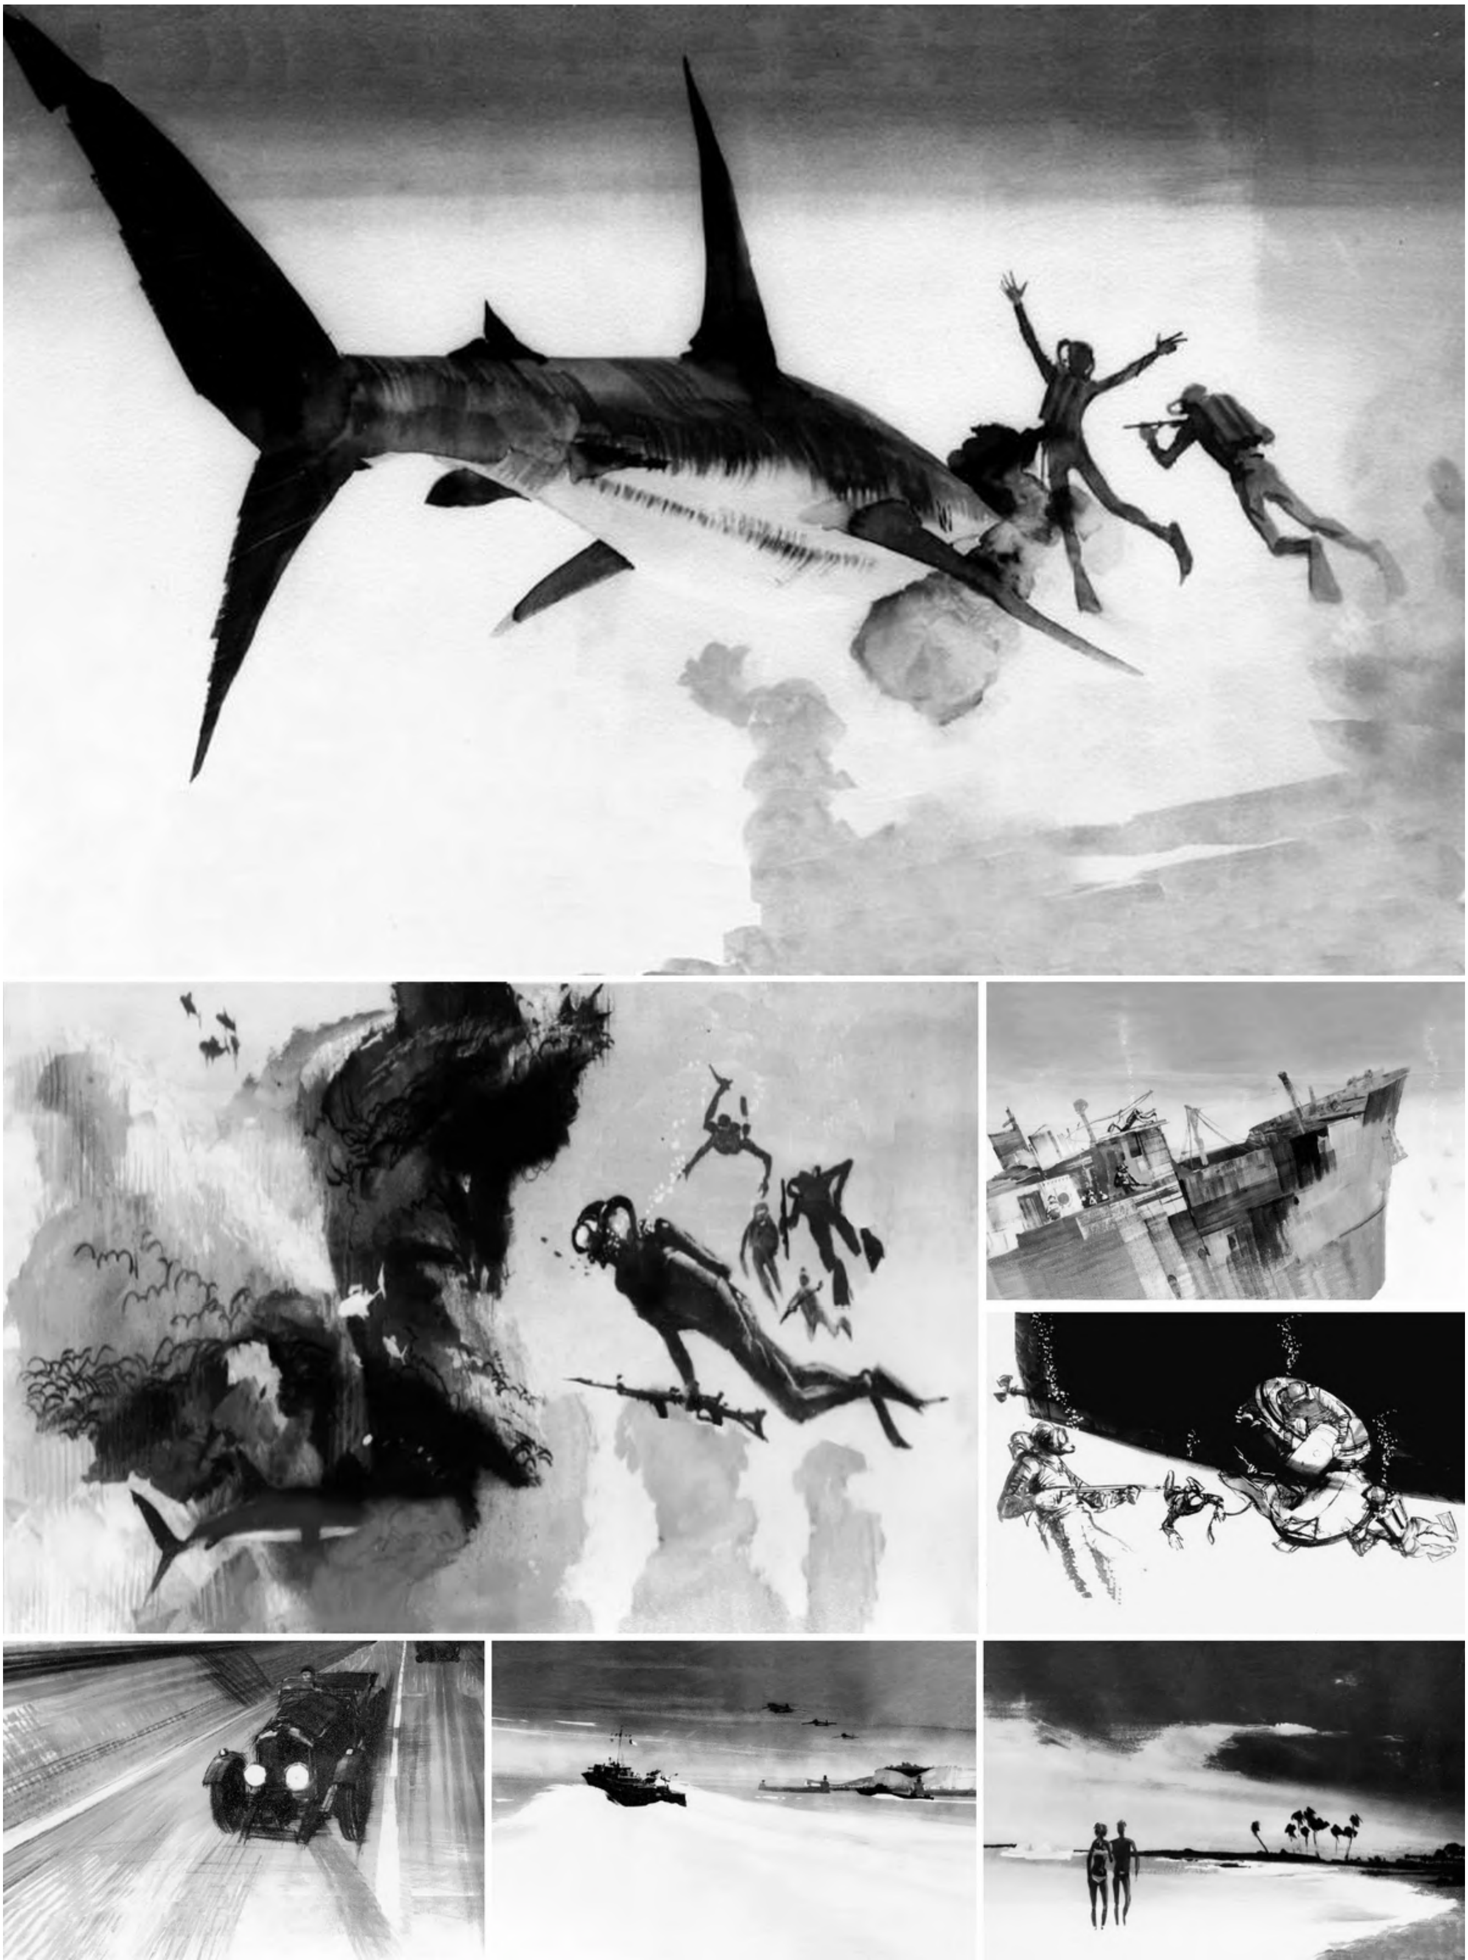
There are no very expensive props except an American helicopter and an American submarine and these could probably be obtained without much difficulty.

More subsidiary incidents should be added where there is any sign of the pace flagging but, for the time being, my invention has run out.

I saw George Raft the other day in a film and he is as good as ever. He might be useful. Ernest Cuneo should definitely be used as the Capo Mafiosi who comes to London to set up the spiel.

No other suggestions for the moment.

A new writer: Jack Whittingham



The Boy and the Bridge is the opening film of the 20th annual Venice International Film Festival (August-September 1959). On the previous page are reproductions of drawings by Stephen Grimes that were shown at the Venice Festival in an attempt to generate interest (and probably money) from possible future investors on this early James Bond film[80]. (Around 20 years later, Stephen Grimes will be production designer on Never Say Never Again).

> - Ivar Bryce[81] : Fleming sat down [...] and wrote the first treatment based on Cuneo's outline plot, without discussing the matter at all with McClory. Fleming handed the treatment to me and suggested that I should get McClory and a first class screenwriter to get it into proper film form. [...] He and I always talked at that time of McClory as the director rather than the producer.

Although Fleming is a wonderful novel writer, he isn't a screenwriter. Thus, it is envisaged to engage a professional screenwriter. McClory would then considers Paul Dehn[82] and thus Dehn met with Fleming. If at first he is interested, Dehn would eventually decline the job as Fleming wrote it in August 1959: "Alas, Dehn can't take the job on for two excellent reasons. Firstly, he wrote a film script called something like [Seven Days to Noon], in which London was held up by an atomic bomb. And, secondly, he says that he is really only interested in the development of character in murderers etc, and this bang, bang, kiss, kiss stuff is not for him"[83].

Paul Dehn would however offer some suggestion, like opening the film with a bang with the theft of the bomb or hiring the scriptwriter Janet Green[84]. She was contacted but proven unavailable[85]. Of course, like we saw in the previous chapter, Dehn participated years later to the writing of Goldfinger.

Bryce suggested William Fairchild[86] as screenwriter.

On September 18, 1959, Kevin McClory sent a letter to Ivar Bryce. In it, McClory says he had a lunch with Fairchild and that Fleming "was quite enthusiastic about the possibility of William Fairchild collaborating with him on James Bond"[87]. McClory notably saw his recent movie The Silent Enemy about wartime frogmen exploits involving underwater sequences, and find it "excellent entertainment"[88] (Fleming will not be impress by the film, "Kevin could do a much better and more imaginative job"[89]).

"I am also seeing two other writers over the weekend, but naturally I am waiting Ian's return to London before we make any decision in regard to the writer", continue McClory in his letter[90].

In the same letter, McClory express to Bryce that he still believe The Boy and the Bridge could be a financial success. About Bond, McClory states he met Ian Fleming at Le Touquet: Fleming "(although at first there was some reluctance) [is] very much interested in the idea of using the take over of an atom bomber in the air as method of obtaining the atom bomb"[91]. McClory in fact disliked the theft in the base with the helicopter in Fleming's script, qualifying it of "the hardest-to-believe part of the story"[92] and apparently had read in the press that a V-Bombers had disappeared during a training flight[93].

The villains would then scuttling the plane in the "shallow waters (30 or 40 feet)" of the Bahamas, imagines McClory. Talking about water, McClory adds that he plan to observe underwater test of a new Technicolor camera[94]. Columbia, which distribute The Boy and the Bridge, "have shown a great interest in a participation deal in regard to James Bond, and I am having talks with them early next week"[95].

McClory also became interested about manned torpedoes like the ones used by the Olterra Italian ship during the war[96].

- Ivar Bryce[97] : I returned to New York and McClory started to bombard me with cables saying that it was necessary to a script written on the Bond film by a professional screenwriter so that we could organise the production arrangements to the point where they could be submitted to a distributor.

Finally it was Jack Whittingham who was chosen at the end of September 1959 for this job.

Jack Whittingham[98] was born on August 2, 1910 in England and was educated at Charterhouse between 1924 and 1929. He then went to Lincoln College, Oxford, to study law. In the early 1930s, he was briefly engaged to Wrigley's heiress Ada Elizabeth Offield.

From 1932 to 1937 he worked for a number of newspapers and in 1937 he joined Alexander Korda as a contract scriptwriter.

During the Second World War, Whittingham was based in Iceland with an artillery regiment, married Margot Isobel and had two children. He also published the book Sabu of the Elephants, which chronicles Korda's attempt to film an adaptation of Toomai of the Elephants.

Between 1937 and 1948 Whittingham wrote fourteen screenplays for companies such as RKO, Associated British Picture Corporation, British National and Ealing Studios.

In 1948, now under contract with Ealing Studios, Whittingham went on to write seven new films until 1954, then made another film with British Lion in 1956-1957.

After the writing of what will become Thunderball and the courts affairs that followed, Whittingham, in his late fifties, decided to embark on sailing and bought a boat.

In July 1965 his daughter launched his new boat, the Domani, and later that year he crossed with his family to Malta, where he had a villa.

When he retired to Malta, Whittingham worked on screenplays about the life of Oleg Penkovsky and an adaptation of the biography The Life of Ian Fleming of Pearson (which were never filmed) before dying of a heart attack on July 3, 1972.

- Kevin McClory[99] : Fleming wasn't really a screenwriter, and he was working for The Sunday Times, and they had things for him to do. And he kind of did less and less, so I employed Jack Whittingham; that's how he came into it.

- Kevin McClory (September 25, 1959)[100] : Ian is meeting another writer called Jack Whittingham on Monday. [...] I have had talks with him and gave him Ian's first rough treatment, which he is extremely enthusiastic about, he also came back with some highly interesting and intelligent constructive story points.

After the reading of Fleming's treatment, Jack Whittingham thinks it "was terribly bad, was tripe, and completely inappropriate for film development"[101].

He wrote his thoughts on it on a document[102]. Whittingham's critique of the treatment points out several major flaws. Some are very obvious, like "far too much story told in dialogue". The protagonist's ability to predict the villains' moves is too convenient, reducing the suspense, with a Bond who is practically never in danger until the end. Many scenes are repetitive or lack meaningful content, hindering the story's progress. For example he thinks that the nightclub sequence is "phoney" and gets nowhere. Additionally, the characters are underdeveloped and come across as flat, two-dimensional stereotypes.

Whittingham's suggests that Mafia "should perhaps steal two bombs, the first to show they mean it, if no money is forthcoming", to raise the stakes (Fleming hated this idea at first[103]). He also believes the Mafia needs to be portrayed as more clever and menacing to enhance the threat level. According to Whittingham, the treatment also fails to incorporate an international dimension, placing all the responsibility on Bond. "Hard to believe it can all be left in the hands of 2 agents and a girl to solve, while everyone else stands by".

He also doesn't understand why there is an underwater sentinel near the yacht.

Whittingham, who doesn't very like the shooting range scene, propose to open the film with the Mafia shooting a paid informant and the theft of the bomb, in the air.

According to Robert Sellers's excellent book on the genesis of Thunderball, The Battle for Bond, Fleming gets back to work devising a new opening for the story. It now open with the credit displaying on the rotating blade of the helicopter who then land at the Shoeburyness base. The Mafia stole the bomb and we then meet James Bond at the shooting range.

Next Fleming dropped the whole nightclub sequence and offer now a flashback with the Mafiosis getting out of a car to join a building for a reunion. We see that Scotland Yard was there and had bugged the place. We also have a first glimpse of Domino, disguised as a prostitute, observing the men entering the building. The men who were photographed (which are the same we saw in the helicopter) are identified as members of the Mafia and it is suspected they are responsible of the theft of the bomb.

New Whittingham's opening: Sophia, Petachi and informant

While reading Fleming's Live and Let Die[104], on October 2 1959, Whittingham delivered to McClory a new "visual opening"[105] to the story. "As I have no copy of Fleming's story, only my own brief notes on it, it is difficult to go any further than", he explains[106].

The new opening start with a certain Martelli boarding a Comet 4 plane at London airport and getting off at New York airport. He then takes a seaplane to Nassau, then a boat to join Largo's yacht. It is Largo own yacht now (Impellitini character didn't get further than Fleming first script). Here Whittingham envisage actor/singer Burl Ives to play Largo's role.

Burl Ives

On board of the yacht, Largo is playing backgammon with Sophia, a "fiery, young sex-animal".

A note adds that Largo has "one weakness common to many aging men. He wants to possess, to own, a young woman in the same way as he owns real property or his yacht. Sophia will take his money, she will favour him when it suits her, but she is not his. This is her power over him".

Martelli is in the company of two men from Largo (Albertini and Ferrari) when the latter comes to join them. Martelli asks to be paid first and once that it is done, he informs Largo that a certain Jo Petachi is carrying out routine patrols for NATO with nuclear warheads. Martelli give information about members of the Petachi's family: if the proper pressure is put on Petachi, he would do whatever they want from him.

Largo thanks Martelli and asks him if he has covered his tracks, if no one knows where he is right now. Martelli assures him it is the case and Largo gives a signal to Albertini who then kills Martelli with a bullet.

Largo joins Sophia with the $10,000 retrieved from Martelli's body and play it on backgammon with her. If she loses, he can do with her as he pleases. Largo win while his men throw Martelli's body into the sea where it is devoured by sharks.

Later, at an American base in England, Petachi boards a bomber for his routine flight. The descriptions say that the scene has to be shown in a "documentary" style. In the air, Petachi shoots his four flight comrades. A note specifies that this sequence is to be developed and when once done, it should be "extremely tense and exciting with Petachi having to overpower four other men, the menace of the radio, and of course the plane at times out-of-control".

Petachi lands near Largo's yacht and as he tries to swim toward it, he is shoot to death by someone as the plane sink.

At the C.I.D. we see M and Bond and other big brass discussing the disappearance of the bomber and its last known radar position.

There is then a Mafia's meeting at Palermo, with maybe quarrel about the ransom sum to ask or the bomb target.

Back in London, there is now the blackmail letter asking for 100 million in gold.

Whittingham conclude his letter to McClory with some suggestions like underwater camera shoot of the bomb being removed from sunken bomber, possible arrest of the yacht occupant and their release by their lawyers for lack of evidence, dilemma about pay or not, or even "possible explosion of a smaller bomb to show they meant business".

One his suggestion will be prove to be an important element of Thunderball in the following treatments/scripts/novel to come: "discovery by Bond of the wreck of the bomber. Sharks nosing around. [...] Bond's discovery of something on the sea bed near the bomber (perhaps a ring or a wrist watch?) which identifies Petachi... (This is a new idea) ...Which leads to Bond being able to convince Sophia that her own cousin or brother, Petachi, has been double-crossed and murdered by Largo. Thus, Sophia moves into Bond's camp".

> - Jack Whittingham[107] : I would like to retain this new character, Sophia, who is herself of the mafia clan, because I think it is only through human weaknesses and frailties that tight situations such as we have, can credibly be resolved. But, of-course, there is no reason at the moment for dropping Domino, so long as she is an identifiable person, which she may well become.

"In any case, what is now needed is story conference", adds Whittingham[108].

The shadow of Hitchcock and other matters

Ivar Bryce who had seen North By Northwest by Alfred Hitchcock had written to Fleming (September 18, 1959) that the film was very great and that it was a "Bond-style thriller, almost plagiarism, [...] it is exactly the picture we are trying to make"[109] (and a few years later the audience will be able to see some parallels between the films North By Northwest and From Russia with Love).

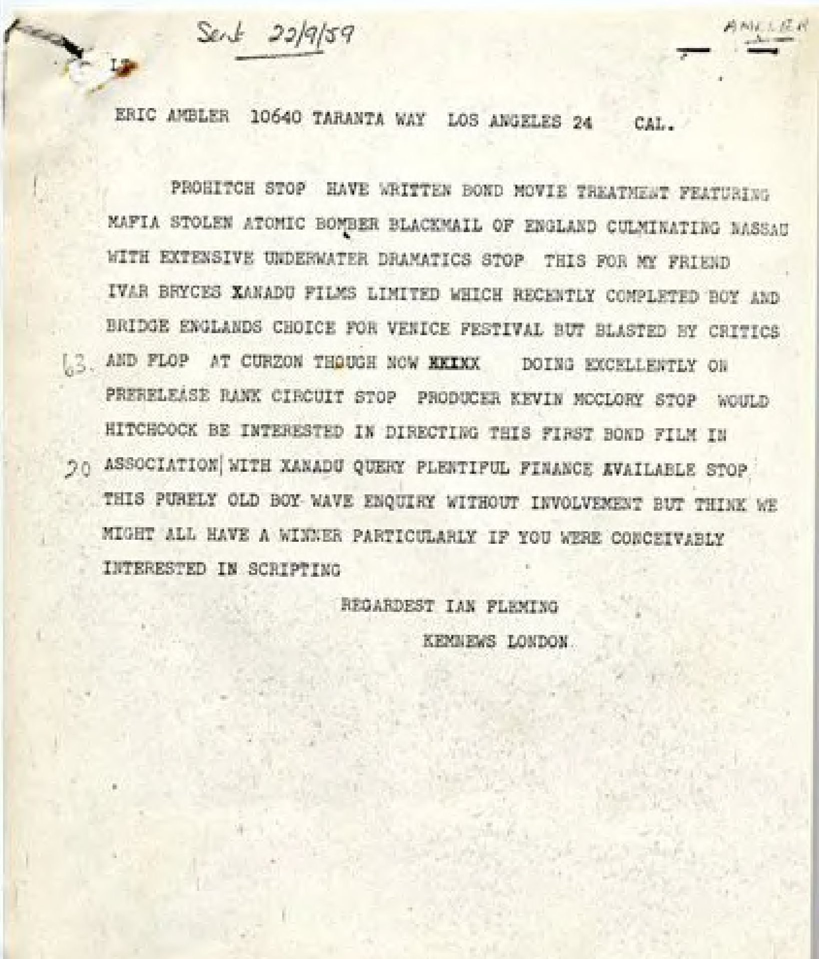
Fleming quickly thought that Bryce's suggestion to have Hitchcock to direct the Xanadu-Bahamas Limited's James Bond film was a good idea[110] (William Fairchild and McClory were also considered to direct the film, as Anthony Asquith and a certain Guy Hamilton[111]).

Later Fairchild will be discarded when it was discovered that he dived only once during the filming of The Silent Enemy, and felt unwell[112].

Earlier in August, Laurence Evans of MCA Inc. (Music Corporation of America, Fleming's agents), had advised Fleming to make McClory "number two to a bigger man; say Asquith or Hitchcock for instance"[113] since McClory had made only one film, which had not been welcomed very well. Bryce and Fleming are also under the impression that McClory spent too much on The Boy and the Bridge, so a director with a better sens of the budget than him could be nice[114]. McClory wasn't happy to see the role of the director escape him, but as long as he could remain producer, he could accepted it[115].

Fleming sent a telegram on September 22 to the "master of suspense" via Eric Ambler in which he asked if he would be interested in directing the film.



Sent 22/9/59

AMBLER

ERIC AMBLER 10640 TARANTA WAY LOS ANGELES 24 CAL.

PROHITCH STOP HAVE WRITTEN BOND MOVIE TREATMENT FEATURING MAFIA STOLEN ATOMIC BOMBER BLACKMAIL OF ENGLAND CULMINATING NASSAU WITH EXTENSIVE UNDERWATER DRAMATICS STOP THIS FOR MY FRIEND IVAR BRYCES XANADU FILMS LIMITED WHICH RECENTLY COMPLETED BOY AND BRIDGE ENGLANDS CHOICE FOR VENICE FESTIVAL BUT BLASTED BY CRITICS AND FLOP AT CURZON THOUGH NOW XXXXX DOING EXCELLENTLY ON PRERELEASE RANK CIRCUIT STOP PRODUCER KEVIN MCCLORY STOP WOULD HITCHCOCK BE INTERESTED IN DIRECTING THIS FIRST BOND FILM IN ASSOCIATION WITH XANADU QUERY PLENTIFUL FINANCE AVAILABLE STOP THIS PURELY OLD BOY WAVE ENQUIRY WITHOUT INVOLVEMENT BUT THINK WE MIGHT ALL HAVE A WINNER PARTICULARLY IF YOU WERE CONCEIVABLY INTERESTED IN SCRIPTING

REGARDEST IAN FLEMING

KEMNEWS LONDON

- Ian Fleming (October 7, 1959)[116] : No news from Hitchcock. Meanwhile, the script writer is busily writing the script, and I gather, coming up with some excellent ideas, so no time is being wasted.

Curiously the same day Fleming heard that Hitchcock would be interested in the film and that he seek a role for James Stewart[117] (the actor was then considered by Fleming: "personally I wouldn't at all mind him as Bond if he can sightly anglicise his accent").

At that time there was however concern about whether hiring a renowned director and stars would be a good investment. Certainly big names would attract the audience, big actors, distributors and give a certain prestige to the film; but in return it would cost a lot of money when paying them (money that Xanadu-Bahamas Limited wouldn't necessarily have) and there was the fear of losing creative control with a big director like Hitchcock (who, in particularly, would cost alone half the budget according to Jean de la Bruyère calculations!)[118]...

In the end Hitchcock passed his turn and went to film Psycho. Fleming sent a review of North By Northwest to Ivar Bryce saying that he really liked the film but that he found it really unfortunate that Hitchcock tended to deflate the plot by adding touches of comedy. Fleming says he hopes future James Bond films will keep an "absolutely straight face"[119].

Besides the writing and the search for a director, there was others matter linked The Boy and the Bridge to settle, like:

> - Ivar Bryce[120] : I had expected the partnership unit [of The Boy and the Bridge] to be closed down as soon as [this film] was completed. McClory appeared to be unwilling to close it down, and therefore slow in doing so.

Bryce conjectured later it was because McClory continued to perceive an allowance while production of The Boy and the Bridge was still not officially finished, and also because it helped to have his name in the newspapers and allowed him to lodge in the building hosting the production office[121].

Also Bryce now thinks the box office performance of The Boy and the Bridge would be not as bright as McClory tells him[122].

An important part of the pre-production will also be the answer to the question "who is gonna to play James Bond in the film?":

> - Ian Fleming[123] : [Paul] Dehn and I think that Richard Burton would be by far the best James Bond.

Among the actors mentioned to play James Bond, Fleming will put forward the names of Richard Burton, Peter Finch or even to hire an unknown actor; while McClory would like Trevor Howard (whom Fleming finds too old, he wants someone who is in his thirties, although Howard is only a year apart from Finch), Dirk Bogarde and Richard Harris[124]. McClory met some of the them to talk about the movie[125].

Later David Niven (who ended to playing James Bond in Casino Royale 1967) will be mentioned several times for the film[126], but it is not clear for which role.

The film was announced: there was in the Premiere brochure of The Boy and the Bridge a reference to a second Xanadu Production's film: a James Bond to be filmed in color[127] (Bryce stated he didn't saw the brochure before the end of the projection and remonstrated McClory once he saw it[128]). Surprisingly, as the existence of project become know in the industry, the London production office also received a lot of letters from unknown people, not even actors, wanting to play Bond[129] (although the character was not yet as famous as he would be a few years later).

Meanwhile there is also the studio company Xanadu-Bahamas Limited to organize.

> - Ivar Bryce[130] : My friends, who were prepared to join me in the new venture, and I decided that, although McClory ought to be the producer of the first film, and although we would want him associated with the group, we nerveless needed a man with more financial and accounting experience to run the studio business.

Also:

> - Ivar Bryce[131]: I was not prepared to finance the production of the Bond film myself, because all my available resources were committed to the studio company.

A distributor will be needed to finance to film once the script completed[132].

Fleming's second treatment: Valiant's wreck, boyfriend and Leiter death

> - Ian Fleming (October 14, 1959)[133] : For a thousand reasons I cannot be more than your shadow Chief of Staff. [My wife] Annie, rightly, is terrified by the prospect of me being constantly away on the film and imagines heaven knows what, but at any rate she imagines it all [...]. As to my help over the script, it will of course be forthcoming in full measure but simply must take second place to the rest of my rather complicated life. In any case, Whittingham will have to be number one on the script, because he is a script writer and I am not, and this is a professional job on which total concentration is necessary.

Leigh Aman, production manager on The Boy and the Bridge, was assuming the same role on the Bond project. (It was him who suggested Whittingham for the film[134]).

> - Kevin McClory (October 20, 1959)[135] : Leigh & I had a meeting this morning with Jack Whittingham's agent and we think we can get him to write the script for £5,000 This, for a writer of his experience, is less than he normally takes and I think we should make an immediate decision on this, and I do know that Walt Disney want very much to put him under contract.

On October 21, 1959, Fleming sent a new treatment to Jack Whittingham[136]. A copy was also sent to Hitchcock[137]. Still titled James Bond of the Secret Service, this 27 pages treatment is a big improvement compared to Fleming's first one, but suffer of the syndrome one step forward, two step back by not incorporating some of the good ideas from Whittingham.

Here Fleming adopt almost verbatim Whittingham's opening, including Burl Ives suggestion for Largo (Fleming even states the actor wants a part in film). The only big change here is that Fleming changed Sophia name back to "Domino", here for Dominica Pelagra.

The bomber that "Jo" Petachi stole is a Vickers Valiant, precise Fleming, who also adds the first name Guiseppe for Petachi.

After Petachi delivery and his death, Largo on his yacht radios a dozen of other Mafia members who are in a meeting room in Palermo.

The Capo Mafiosi tells the other members that it is time they go to Nassau posing as members of an Italian-American garment federation attending a convention. In a letter attached to this new treatment, Fleming suggest again that Ernest Cuneo should play the role of the Capo Mafiosi as he has the most "fabulous gangster face that has ever been seen in the films".

We cut to the Secret Service HQ in Regent's Park, where we find James Bond practicing his pistol skills at the shooting range. After his exchange with the armourer, the telephone of the shooting gallery rings: Bond's his summoned to M's office.

007 takes the elevator and goes meet Moneypenny (the scenes with Loelia Ponsonby aren't there anymore, as the ones which were talked by Bond to us through a voice-over). Ronnie Vallance also disappeared from the story: Bond is alone with M in this version.

So Bond is briefed about the Valiant disappearance (here Fleming backtrack: only one bomb aboard) and the Mafia's blackmail letter. An unidentified plane, which could be the Valiant, have been spotted by the American near the Bahamas and its makes sens to assumes the bomb's target is either Cape Canaveral or the other rocket base they have at Grand Bahamas.

M wants 007 to go investigate there; the Americans also send one their "best man" from the CIA to meet him there.

At the Emerald Beach Hotel in Nassau, Largo has a meeting with the other members of the Mafia under the Garment Workers Federation cover. Technical details for exploding the bomb are discussed by engineer group of the Mafia and they make a point about their underwater training.

At the Government House, Felix Leiter and others attend a meeting where the comings and goings of planes and ships over the past 48 hours are listed. The Largo's yacht is mentioned, as is the Italian-American textile conference (around forty members arrived on the island we are told). However nothing seems abnormal: there is conventions like that all the time. It is decided by the governor to inspect all the boats in the port with a Geiger counter (with the cover story that they are looking for a stolen "very valuable radio-active capsule").

As the meeting ends, Bond gets out of a taxi and goes to meet Leiter. They decide to accompany the police who is about to inspect the boats and thus they board Largo's yacht where there is a party ongoing. During the search 007 briefly meets Domino on board while she is putting her make-up. The Geiger counter gives nothing; Bond apologizes for the inconvenience.

Bond and Leiter then take a plane and fly over the Bahamas; from the air they spot the silhouette of the sunken Valiant, surrounded by sharks. However, they doesn't immediately explore the wreck (because "it conflict with their cover story of the lost capsule"!). Instead they return to the Government House and request an authorization to obtain an American nuclear submarine.

This one obtained, they board it and return to the Valiant wreck location. With other frogmen disposing of the sharks, Bond explores the wreckage, finds bodies like Petachi's one and discover that the bomb is no longer there. However, Fleming doesn't adopt Whittingham's suggestion (so Bond never recovers proof of Largo's betrayal that he could use to more effectively convince Domino to become an ally).

Back at the Government House, Bond tells Leiter that he suspects Largo:

> - Bond: These garment people look innocent enough but they are, after all, Italians.

Evening, the Mafia goes to the casino; Bond and Leiter too. 007 sees Domino playing at a blackjack table and sits down next to her and then invite her to take a drink. She telling him she like England; she have a boyfriend who is working there for the American Air Force. "Their families are neighbors in Italy. It's a small village, she babbles on, everyone in it is either a Pelagra or a Petachi". Fleming told us Bond "knows that this is the man whose body he found only a few hours before", even if he didn't adopted Whittingham's suggestion...

In due time, Bond leave her and join Leiter at the port. He dive to inspect Largo's yacht from underwater and, in this treatment, it is in this scene that he notice the trapdoor in the hull. The sentry is still present in the plot, as the sharks.

Bond informs Leiter of his discovery, "there was once a ship like that off Gibraltar during the war [...] through which sabotage operations were carried out" (a similar dialogue will find its way to the novel, where the Olterra is mentioned as the ship).

Bond is now convinced that Largo is involved and that the convention is serving as a cover for the Mafia. However, there is not enough evidence to lock up around forty men like that: they have to wait for the mafiosi to recover the bomb.

Until then, Bond return to Domino and pretend he was a childhood friend of Guiseppe Petachi. He spend some time with her and conclude that she knows nothing of the Mafia's scheme.

While he is busy with Domino, Leiter follow the yacht. It turns out that Largo is on a trip to recover the bomb and once done, Largo see another boat nearby dragging a person who is water skiing. We see that it is Leiter, who is observing (and showing us his heretofore undisclosed water-skiing skills). Largo decides not to take any risks and orders his men to open fire; Felix Leiter dies under machine gun bullets!

For the record, Fleming originally had Felix die in Live and Let Die novel before changing his mind during revisions[138]. (In fact, Bryce in his correspondence with Fleming didn't forget it: "Also, is it necessary to bump off poor Felix? You will need him again, you know? A problem you have already had once. I should like to do Live and Let Die one day"[139]).

Meanwhile Bond and Domino are on a beach, after a diving session together. She asks him why he is so silent and he decides to tell her the whole story, including the death of her more or less fiance. She is "aghast and coldly anxious for revenge" and asks 007 how to help him. Bond

OLTERRA
OLTERRA

During WW2, Italian ship Olterra had an hidden hatch below its waterline from which manned torpedo called Maiale could be launched. This kind of underwater chariot will be used in later draft of the story for transporting the stolen bombs.

tells her that he will give her a Geiger counter; she will have to send him a signal if she finds out that the bomb is on the yacht.

Domino returns to the yacht and uses the Geiger: it's positive, she makes a light signal with a flashlight. A henchman saw her and report to Largo who then discovers Domino with the Geiger. He has her locked up: he will deal with her later, for the moment he is busy.

Bond is also busy convincing the governor to place Largo under arrest, when he learns that the yacht has left. 007 joins the American submarine and it sets off in pursuit of the yacht. After a long time, the submarine arrives alongside the yacht which is now near the Grand Bahamas's rocket base. The Mafia's frogmen are going to plant the bomb (we see Domino in diving gear discreetly following them). They are intercepted by American submarine's frogmen, which include Bond. "A great pitched battle then ensues with CO_2 guns and knives. There are many individual fights. In one an oxygen pipe is cut, in another a glass mask is shattered". Also "a man rips a small octopus off a coral-head and slams it across the neck and mask of his opponent": something similar will appears in the novel.

At one point Largo is about to kill Bond, but he is killed by Domino's harpoon gun.

The submarine also fires on Largo's yacht. The Capo Mafiosi in Palermo, who was in radio contact with the yacht, decides to commit suicide by shooting himself in the mouth.

The treatment ends with Bond removing Domino's diving mask and then his own, they "looking into each other's eyes" and end.

Whittingham's treatment: two bombs, scientist, house and suicide

Upon reading the new Fleming's treatment, Jack Whittingham writes at some point between October 20 and 29, 1959 a new memo containing his thoughts about it and new ideas[140]. Among them, Whittingham want to expand the Mafia's reunion at Palermo to lighten the exposition scene with M. Furthermore, there should be a series of scenes with different officials rather than just one big scene with M. It would convey a greater importance of the situation to the audience, and that Bond is one of their best agent. Moreover, the US president should also receive a blackmail letter.

Whittingham want to send Bond in Bahamas because every Mafia big shoot is watched and Largo's is one of theses knows leaders. Largo killed Petachi "not only because he wants to destroy all links, but principally because he is in the way vis-a-vis himself and Domino".

Whittingham also think that the Mafia's convention should have less member and none from the Palermo meeting: only experts who have a special role to play in the plan.

"I think [Bond] should meet Domino now, for the first time, in the bar [...]. She tells him all about [...] her brother or boyfriend in England too. He should appear to be much interested in her than in anything she is telling him. And she should realise that and like it!".

The Governor should be at first less cooperative, not believing the Mafia is in the Bahamas. Whittingham also wants to postpone the scene of the yacht search by the authorities, and thinks Bond and Leiter shouldn't be in it (to not show they are agents). Instead he suggest that Bond is underwater during the search, in case that Mafia try drop anything overboard. In any case, Whittingham is still against the sentry: "I find it hard to believe that a guard would be swimming about perpetually beneath the yacht". He suggest the frogman is here cause Bond's air bubbles were spotted on the surface.

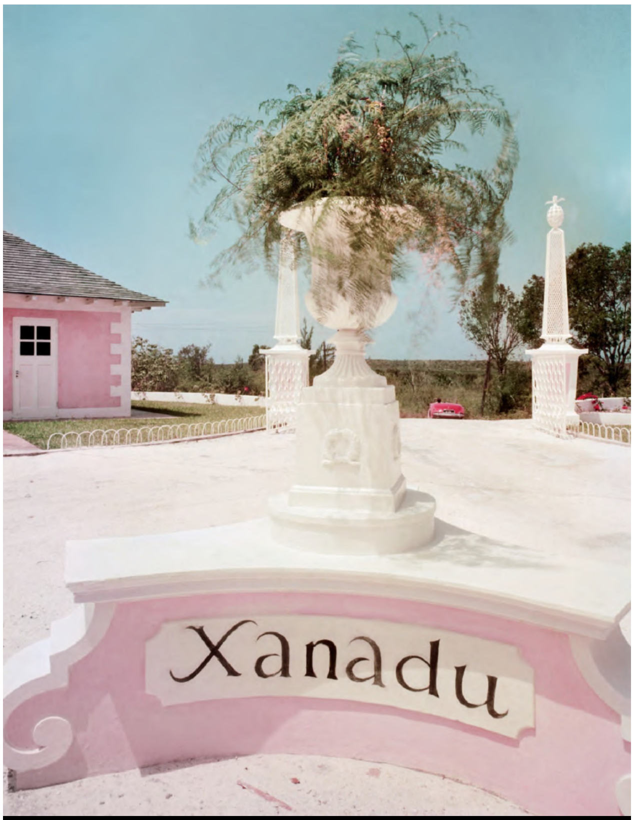
The discovery of the wreck by Bond and Leiter "is much too facile and convenient". Whittingham suggest they don't discover it at all; it's the authorities who are searching it for days who does the discovery. They give Bond's the coordinate and he goes there rather than the Navy "because of the need for secrecy".

Near the end of the story, with all the events that happened, Whittingham says the authorities wouldn't be fool enough to let the yacht left the harbor and even less approach the rocket base targeted. They may let the yacht sail, in order to avoid a detonation/battle in the harbor, but the Navy would follow it. Bond "wants to get the yacht far out to sea before joining battle. So he gets Domino to engineer this. In other words, Domino pretends to confess to Largo all she know [...] to save his and her Italian skin. She reveals that Bond is an agent [...] and they better get to hell of it at once. The yacht sails" but the Mafia is not a fool either: they sabotaged Bond's pursuit vessel. In this case, Bond and his men have to flown to the target (rather than arriving in a submarine).

On October 23, Fleming still seemed confident in the project as revealed in his epistolary exchanges with Ivar Bryce: "I'm personally of the opinion that we have a financial winner in this film, whether done in colour or monochrome"[141]. To the Whittingham's surprise who thought he would work with him, Fleming later left that month on a five-week journey around the world that resulted in a series of articles for the Sunday Times before becoming his excellent book Thrilling Cities[142].

Jack Whittingham, left to his own (or with McClory), reworked Fleming's treatment. The result was a 35-pages treatment dated November 10, 1959 that was still titled James Bond of the Secret Service, although it is now referred as a "working title". (The title The Right to Kill was also once mentioned but it didn't pleased Fleming[143]).

In the opening, Whittingham adds the adjectives "lazy and greedy" to describe Dominica "Domino" Pelagra. There is the usual scene on Largo's yacht and the hijacking of the Valiant, except that this time two bombs are stolen rather than just one. Whittingham also change Jo Petachi's death by cutting his air inlet pipe while he is underwater (instead of shooting him).



Xanadu, one of Ivar Bryce's property in Bahamas. It gave its name to the partnership Xanadu Productions and was supposed to do the same with Xanadu-Bahamas Limited. It was also used as Largo's property (until Fleming changed the name to Palmyra in his novel).

The screenwriter also introduce in this treatment Largo's home, here called Xanadu. It's from here that "Jo Largo" contacts Palermo by radio. We cut to a building in Sicily on which a sign reads "Olive Oil Export Co" and Whittingham states that the face of the Capo Mafiosi, who is called "Cuneo" in this treatment, should as much as possible not be shown to the audience in this scene (a similar thing with Blofeld will take place in EON's films).

Cuneo says that now they are on the possession of the bombs, a letter to the British Prime Minister and the American President requesting £100 million in gold can be sent (there is no longer any mention of adopting a cover of members of the textile sector).

There is then a succession of scenes: people reading newspapers reporting the disappearance of the bombs (readers are appalled that such bombs are being carried on routine patrols), a meeting between the RAF and the USAF (in which it is notably said that no one can detonate the bombs without knowing three secret steps), a Mafia man who posts the letter, then a meeting between the Prime Minister, M and ambassadors. During this, the content of the Mafia's letter is mentioned (the threat of detonating a first bomb in a place which will "vastly shatter the strength of the Western powers", then a second in a big city). There is then a briefing on what the Mafia is.

In this treatment the last known position of the bomber is less precise than before. M and the Minister agree to dispatch agents to various countries in the West Atlantic (such as Canada, Jamaica, the Bahamas, etc.).

We find Bond on the shooting range with the armourer (the scene is less detailed than before), then he goes to M's office where he receives his mission. He will be assigned to the Bahamas and joined by Felix Leiter; he is an American agent "whom he knows well" this time.

Meanwhile Largo is very disconcerted: he has no idea how to detonate the bombs if the ransom is not paid, and informs Cuneo of this "detail". Cuneo reply him that Dr. Von Grundish, a German atomic scientist who recently defected from Russia, is going to join him (this is the first time such a character appears in the story).

Bond arrives in the Bahamas on the same flight as Grundish: they head towards the Emerald Beach Hotel where Largo holds a meeting with members of the Mafia (who pose as businessmen in the garbage hauling field this time). While the Mafia is giving its conference, Bond is at the bar of the hotel where he runs into Domino (who is bored, "this island gets very small after a couple of months"). He decides to approach her and when he tells her he is from England, she tells him she has a brother there named Petachi stationed with the USAF. What Bond does with this crucial information? Well he discard it as a simple coincidence: "there must be hundreds of Petachis"!

He asks Domino to show him around the island and also ask her who owns the yacht in front of the hotel (it's Largo's). With the convention over, Largo returns to the bar and sees Domino with Bond; for a time she openly flirts with Bond in front of him.

007 must absent himself: he is asked to go to the hotel reception where Leiter is waiting for him. Together they go to the Government House where there is a sort of meeting with the chief of police and even the one of MI5. Bond asks what we know about Largo and the Italian-Americans who are with him. The new arrivals were photographed by a "lapel" camera: they seem innocent; the day of the bombs theft Largo went fishing on his yacht (and actually caught a 272 kilo tuna). Reconnaissance planes showed no trace of the bomber. In the Governor's opinion, the Bahamas is not the ideal place to hide one: Bond and Felix should be better takes their mission as a vacation.

Bond and Felix are now at a nightclub, ordering dinner "(with characteristic Bond fastidiousness)" when they see Largo and Domino enter. Leiter recognizes Jo Largo as a New York organized crime member, in reality named Spider Spinelli. In view of this new element, Bond decides to continue to get closer to Domino and a series of scenes follow where they go to the casino together, go water skiing, dance, swim, etc... In the end Bond learns nothing interesting about Largo, "except that he is her bread and butter until she moves on somewhere else"... For his part, Leiter does better: he identifies one of the new arrivals on the island as Dr. Grundish.

Bond and Leiter (and a pilot) decide to do another reconnaissance by seaplane near the Largo's fishing area and at one point they see sharks which seem to be excited for no reason. After landing, it appears to them that the bomber is hidden under a tarpaulin in the water (the tarpaulin wasn't in the previous treatments). They radio a Navy ship and its divers, accompanied by Bond, go to take a closer look.

After the bomber discovery, it is decided to put Largo's yacht under the Geiger counter: officially the police (without Bond and Leiter) will board all the boats in the port in search of stolen heroin, unofficially the hidden Geiger counter begins to emit noise in front of Largo: false alarm however, it is coming from a piece of radioactive metal used as a paperweight. The police leave and "as the door closes behind them, the smile disappears from Largo's face" who then telephones his villa Xanadu.

The search of the yacht having given nothing, it is imagined that the bombs could be hidden in Largo's property. Studying aerial photos taken at the same time as the earlier aerial reconnaissance, Bond sees tracks on the ground that support his suspicions.

However it is at a casino that we find Bond next, when Largo and Domino appear there. Bond tells Domino that he has to talk to her and they leave in a car, under the furious eyes of Largo who leaves his gaming table. They go to a cove where Bond decides to reveal everything to her, including the death of her brother Petachi by presenting her with an object recovered from his body (he thus convince her when she says she doesn't believe him). "Her Sicilian blood boils for revenge" and she agrees to help Bond.

Largo, who has become anxious and frightened by all these new events, is on his yacht when he is joined by Cuneo who comes to ask him why/how the English found the bomber. Domino returns to the yacht and Largo angrily asks her what she was doing with Bond; she replies that she was bored and asks him if he thinks he owns her. Largo slaps her twice and leaves.

The next day Bond is having breakfast in his hotel room when Domino arrives. He tells her they want to inspect Xanadu with the Geiger counter; he asks her to help Leiter with that (Bond won't come, he is waiting for a phone call from London). Meanwhile Albertini tells Largo that Domino has seen Bond again; Largo orders to kill him if the opportunity arises.

Domino and Leiter drive to Xanadu, unaware that they are being followed by Largo's men. They cross a sort of mangrove swamp on foot to go discreetly to the property but when they arrive there, they come across henchmen who were waiting for them in ambush. Largo has them thrown into the swamp where they sink, but decides to spare Domino at the last minute, they "may still need her". Leiter dies of drowning however!

Largo forces Domino to telephone Bond to tell him to come and get her, but rightly sensing a trap, 007 decides that he will go there accompanied by two police officers as reinforcements.

However, while going there by boat, 007 passes near the Mafia's yacht and heard noise. The jammed hatch's door of the yacht is the source of it. Bond decides to go diving near the yacht to investigate the noise.

Largo, seeing bubbles on the surface of the water, sends a diver to investigate. Bond is spotted by him and an underwater fight between the two men begins. When the body of the diver appears on the surface, Largo sends a grenade towards Bond. Bond meet a sharks or barracudas and eventually manages to return to shore, but he is now captured by Largo's men. Bond is thrown into the swamp, near Leiter's corpse, but manages to get out. He go back to the Government House. He request a bomber: he want to blown the yacht with the two bombs inside.

Meanwhile Largo loaded the bombs aboard the yacht and set sail for the Grand Bahamas rocket base. While the Mafia's men bring underwater the bomb (with an "underwater sleigh") to its detonation site, on the deck of the yacht Largo and Cuneo can see a bomber plane approaching them. The Mafia is to close to the target to be bombed so instead we see a dozen paratroopers, including Bond, jumping from the bomber (instead of coming in from a submarine; there is no submarine in this script). There is a battle between the frogmen of the two camps, Bond fighting Albertini; 007 and his allies retrieve the bomb and load it onto a speedboat that arrives in the area.

Largo and Cuneo flees, deciding to head the yacht towards New York. Meanwhile, Domino inside the yacht, has managed to undo her bonds and is going to activate the timer of the remaining atomic bomb aboard. She then goes to the wheelhouse and tells Largo that she knows about her brother's murder and that she hopes Largo will rots in hell. Largo pulls out a gun and Domino laughs, then they both disappear in a big mushroom cloud! The end.

After writing this treatment, all parties involved met in New York as Fleming neared the end of his round-the-world journey. At one point Fleming takes Whittingham aside and tells him that he is frightened by the whole project, which seemed simple at first[144]. The idea of having expensive stars and an underwater production scared him and he was worried that Bryce could lose a lot of money because of him[145]. Whittingham shrugged and told him he was just a screenwriter, not a producer[146]. When Fleming and Whittingham returned with the others, it was decided that the film would continue.

At New York, Bryce and McClory also open in their bank a dedicated account for the Bond film on behalf of Xanadu Productions, referring themselves as partners[147]. McClory takes the opportunity to remind Bryce that he still hasn't been paid a salary since 1958 (in absence of salary Bryce, however, pays McClory's expenses)[148].

Bahamas scouting trip

- Ernest Cuneo[149] : In November 1959 [...] at about the same time Bryce invited us all down for a week-end to [his Vermont's house] Black Hole Hollow Farm, to discuss the project. Everyone was there: Wacker, de la Bruyère and McClory and, I think, Peek. The company was discussed informally by all of us in two's and three's although there was no formal meeting. [...] The proposed capital was:

Bryce: $500,000 cash
la Bruyère: 50,000 cash
Peek: 50,000 cash
Wacker: 50,000 cash
Cuneo: 50,000 for services
Fleming: 50,000 for services
McClory: 50,000 for services

In the end Xanadu-Bahamas Limited was never created. One of the reason will be the scouting trip that happened a little after:

- Ivar Bryce[150] : McClory kept saying that it would be necessary for all the people concerned to go to Nassau on a reconnaissance to see what facilities were available there so that the script could be written to fit them.

So a trip to Bahamas to do location/accommodations scouting was made in November by McClory, Jack Whittingham, Ernest Cuneo and the investors. Bryce and Fleming weren't there.

- Ernest Cuneo[151] : Bryce was unable to attend the meeting, but the rest of us were able to be there, i.e. de la Bruyère, Wacker, Sir Francis Peek (whose home is there) and myself. The people concerned in the film were also present: McClory to be in charge of production, Leigh Aman to make production arrangements, Whittingham to write the final script round actual locations and Hans Hass, a well-known diver, to advise on under-water locations and conditions. Actually, it was grim. [...] I personally felt myself in considerable difficulty at the Nassau meetings. I had persuaded Bryce not to invest fresh money and after our failure to sell The Boy and the Bridge in New York, I was sure there would be no profits to invest. [...] I did, however, all that I could. I saw a local solicitor, McKinney, and discussed the formation of Xanadu-Bahamas Limited with him. The Governor gave us a lunch one day and McClory talked to him about the new industry [we] were bringing to the island. [...] I remonstrated with McClory afterwards saying that he ought not to speak so confidently. We were only on a reconnaissance and it might all come to nothing.

Ivar Bryce[152] : I was not able to go myself but I asked my proposed associates to attend. [...] McClory incurred enormous bills, not only throwing parties but > hiring launches and aeroplanes, regardless of expense, apparently in order to explore the area thoroughly but, I gather from conversations with the other proposed associates, to little effect.

In a letter Bryce also mention "huge bills for liquor, flowers, & God knows what simply ordered by Kevin while they were there [in Nassau] last time!"[153].

Len Deighton who worked with McClory years later, once said of him:

> - Len Deighton[154] : "Always travel first class", [Michael] Todd had advised the young Kevin, who subsequently treated it as a golden rule in his life of unbridled extravagance.

Sheraton British Colonial NASSAU, BAHAMAS

The plane hangar they once considered suitable for the film studio was also visited[155].

They discovered suitable accommodation at the British Colonial Hotel, including its bar and exterior with the beach and moving boats behind[156]. (Years later, the hotel would be featured in Never Say Never Again). Also a sunken boat wreck off Athol Island was well welcomed by Whittingham for the final underwater battle: "it would give a wonderful perspective and sens of geography and surprise, which a simple sea bed could never provide"[157].

It was hoped to use real Bryce's Xanadu house for Largo's Xanadu[158].

> - Jack Whittingham[159] : This through reconnaissance of the Bahamas from a writer point of view has been invaluable. One takes mental photographs and learns geography instead of having to try and imagine it all.

> - Ernest Cuneo[160] : In Nassau la Bruyère, Wacker and Peek all told me that they had no confidence and would like to get out, but would respect their moral commitments to Bryce and would go ahead if he still wanted to proceed. I did not arrange a second meeting with McKinney, the local solicitor [...]. I returned to New York, saw Bryce, and advised him strongly not to proceed. He agreed and we discussed how he could minimize his losses.

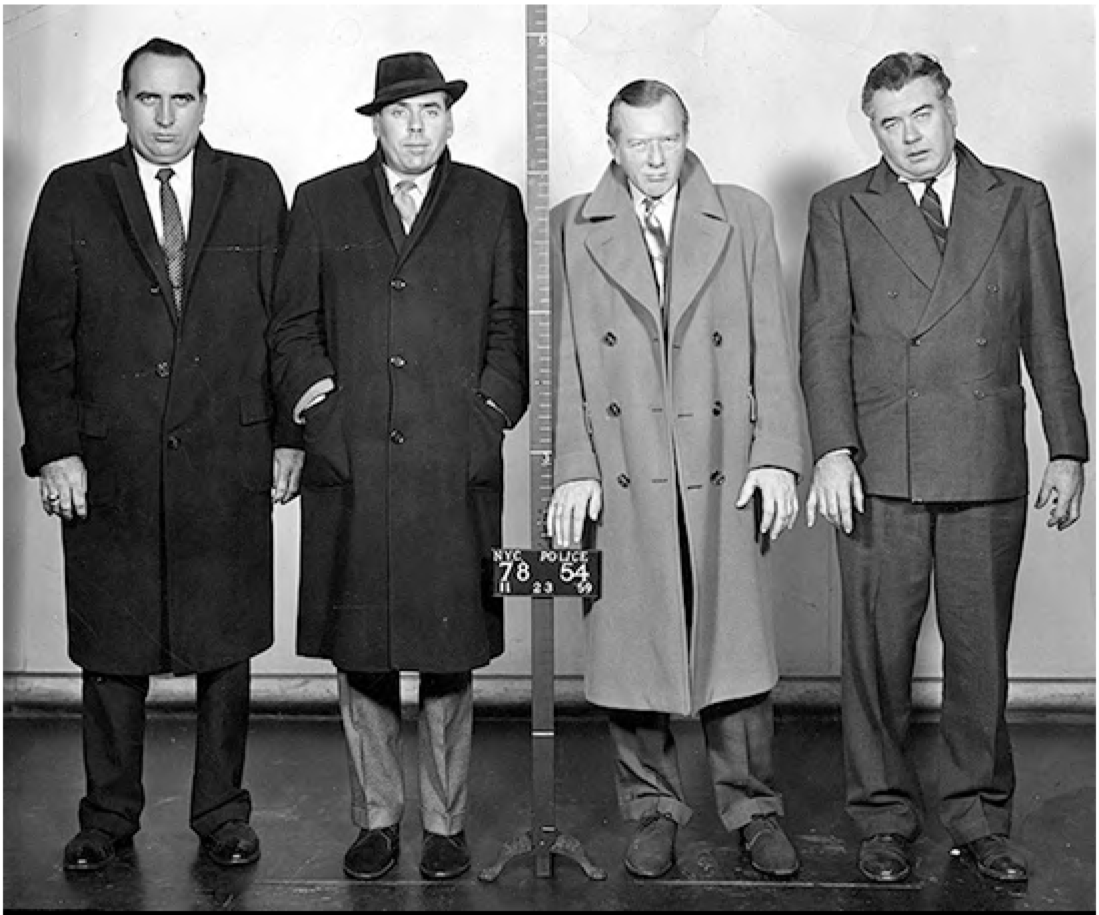
> - Francis Peek[161] : The primary reason [I wanted to withdrew] was the lack of confidence in Mr. McClory [...] to make a first-class film. I felt that even if my assessment proved incorrect there was a danger that the result of the film might be as a prestige vehicle for Mr. McClory rather than a commercial success for those financing. I also got the impression from conversation which took place at [...] Nassau [...] that were was a definite tendency to think in terms > of a semi holiday at Mr. Bryce's expense rather than a serious venture. I felt this attitude would be reflected in the cost and time element of the film.



One of joke Kevin McClory liked to do in New York is having his friends arrested for false by a friend of him, a policeman named Kelly. He notably did on November 23, 1959 as pictured in this photo with Kelly, McClory, Jack Whittingham and Leigh Aman. (Twenty years later he was still doing the same joke to Len Deighton).

At this point it also very clear that The Boy and the Bridge wasn't the success expected and no distributor was keen to screen it in United States:

> - Ivar Bryce[162] : The film was nominated for Venice Film Festival when further tremendous expense was incurred by McClory at my cost giving parties to give the film publicity. It certainly obtained that. The film was used to open the Festival and though politely received, no award was made. [...] The film went out on general release in October and tough it seemed to do very well at first, there has only, after deducing fees and expenses, been paid back to Xanadu approximately £12,000 from the whole world, including Eady money. This has paid to me as a partial recovery of my capital investment.

> - Kevin McClory[163] : It represented Britain at the Venice Film Festival, and it went to Spain, and the Cook Film Festival... I've got a lot of awards now to remind me of what [Michael Todd] said. The box office was absolutely nothing. It got interest from critics, who were divided. It was never seen anywhere outside of England.

> - Ivar Bryce[164] : The reconnaissance trip ended and McClory came to see me in New York. [...] It was apparent that I was not going to recover any appreciable part of my investment in [The Boy and the Bridge]. Most of my proposed associates in the film studio company had withdrawn and I was not prepared to invest substantial fresh sums. It was clear to McClory that the studio project had fallen through completely. He tried to persuade me [...] to proceed further with the Bond film [...], salvage something from the wreck . [...] I agreed to a script being written [...], I agreed that the only way to recover any of my losses seemed to be to make a successful film of the Bond venture.

On December 15, 1959[165]:

> Ernest Cuneo[166] : I [...] executed a formal assignment of my rights in the story idea to Bryce. I told Bryce to show it to McClory. [...] I wanted Bryce to be able to show the paper to McClory as an example to McClory of how he should behave. Bryce was the one who had lost the most, and in my view everyone had to rally round to try to help him out.

In a letter dated December 18, 1959, Ivar Bryce states to Kevin McClory:

- Heavy losses for himself are expected on The Boy and the Bridge.
- They have to reduce their expenses until they have a better picture of the situation.
- Since the studio company was never former, Fleming was never paid (since the money he was gonna to perceived would had been a part of the Xanadu-Bahamas Limited company). So they don't have the right to use the character of James Bond: "it is clear that any production of the Whittingham script would be subject to the consent, approval and re-negotiation with Ian Fleming".
- "Our objective, therefore, is a Whittingham script which would have the effect of conveying enthusiasm to both Fleming and prospective backers, because their persuasion is absolutely necessary for further progress".
- "Should events compel me to discontinue efforts to produce such film, there can be no question legally or morally that I have the right to minimize my losses as best I can".
- "In no way I regret the vast sums I appear to have lost. [...] If I have lost a fortune, I have also gained a friend".

Ivar Bryce insist again that McClory officially close the production of The Boy and the Bridge before February 15, 1960[167]. He make it clear to Kevin that he will continue to finance the both productions until February 15, 1960, but after that, Bryce would reconsider the situation and decide what to do.

McClory replied he needed $25,000 for closing The Boy and the Bridge production and for the expenses on the Bond script[168]. Bryce stated he payed the sum to him and McClory "flew off to California at my expense" to meet Burl Ives to discuss his availability for the film[169].

As Fleming reminding to Bryce on December 29, 1959:

> - Ian Fleming[170] : If you decide to skip the whole thing, don't forget that you have, or should have, a good salable property in the script, so all is not completely lost.

Whittingham's first scripts: Truman, greedy Gaby and baccarat

Earlier, a contract between McClory and Whittingham was signed on behalf of Xanadu Productions on December 7, 1959, officially hiring the British screenwriter for £5,000[171] (a lower amount than he usually took, but since it had been hinted to him that there might be other James Bond films after this one, and therefore new scripts to write, he accepted and was eventually paid[172]). The contract specifies that McClory will hold the rights to all scripts Whittingham writes[173].

The writing is in progress, however Fleming is rarely present as McClory wrote to Bryce on February 2, 1960: "and it is most important for us all that Jack and myself, or one of us, is able to spend a few days with Ian before the finalization [of the script]. As Ian has only been able to be with us on only about four short occasions since we started writing the story"[174] (Whittingham had also reported to Bryce in January to work "very closely" with Kevin, but not with Fleming, to his regret[175]).

On January 14, McClory wrote a new letter to Bryce in which subjects about The Boy are discussed are well as:

> - Kevin McClory[176] : Jack Whittingham is forging ahead with the script on James Bond. He comes up to London quite often and we have long discussions during every one of which it becomes more and more obvious to us all that the story will be very fast moving and one of the most exciting stories to appear on the screen.
> Jack will be able to complete the draft script by the 15th February. As contractually we have only twenty days after the date of delivery of the draft for alterations until he starts work on the completed script. I think it would be advisable if I come to Nassau [...] in order to go over the story with you and Ian. I spoke to Ian about this the day before he left and although he is working on his novel, he said that he would be able to meet us in Nassau round about that date. I would like very much to hear your views on this.
> [...] I would arrange to set up the James Bond picture with an independent company and/or a distribution company, in which case I should very much like you to share in profits of same. Likewise in the event of another company making this picture without my involvement, then we should discuss how this should be handled. I believe very strongly that the James Bond picture should be made [...] [and] having made The Boy and the Bridge and having received a modicum of artistic success with it, there is nothing more that I would like than for this picture to be made under the Xanadu banner.
> If you should find it impracticable to continue after February 15th, I should however, like to press on and make this picture. [...] We should make a decision as speedily as possible (after you have had an opportunity to go over the script and budget with me) as to whether you wish to continue or not.
> Regarding the title, I did not discuss this, as yet, with Ian but we have registered the titles Lattitude 25 and Longitude 78 West. Although these titles would appear to be meaningless to the average individual they are nevertheless, I think, most intriguing. You will recall perhaps [...] North by Northwest.

Upon receiving this letter, Bryce will transmit a copy to Cuneo with a note saying: "as you will see, nothing have changed in his mind. I simply don't know how to cope with him"[177]. In another letter Bryce says "I don't know what to do with Kevin coming out here, [...] I know he will turn up about Feb 18 with the script. This will be highly inconvenient & embarrassing. Neither [my wife] Jo, Ian, nor I want to see him at this point. It the busiest time of our stay here [...] What can we do to stop him?"[178]! What Bryce replied to Kevin? Well: "you can come in Feb. [...] at your own expense. I hope to have several people come here as soon as I have the script. Ian, David Niven & so on"[179].

Kevin McClory

52

JAMES BOND

~~"BOND IN THE BAHAMAS"~~

~~or~~

"LONGITUDE 78 WEST"

First Draft Shooting Script

by

Jack Whittingham

Based on a story

by

Ian Fleming

Dec 21st – FEB. 15th

XANADU. PRODUCTIONS

~~[illegible]~~ 59 SLOANE ST

LONDON

SW1

JAMARA

Whittingham and McClory eventually completed the script, I've got two copy of it (one is a slightly revised version).

It was titled Longitude 78 West or Bond in the Bahamas. On one my copies the title was changed to a handwritten Thunderball.

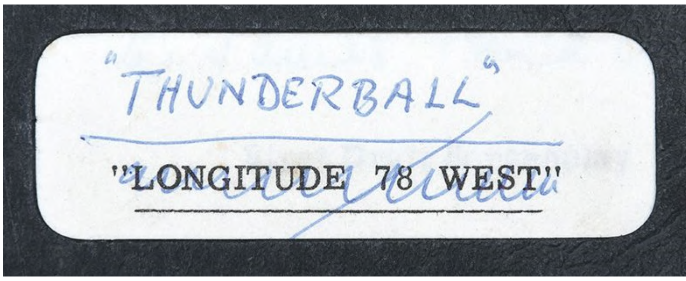
It was Fleming who imagined the title Thunderball, from a United States atomic test explosion in the pacific that a journalist once described as "a thunderball of fire". The sentence stuck in mind of the author[180].

Either called "first draft screenplay" or "first draft shooting script", "based on a story by Ian Fleming", one of theses copy was completed on February 15, 1960 (and was apparently started on December 21, 1959).

(McClory had originally promised the script would be delivered on February 1st[181], and the delay seems to have somewhat irritated Bryce and Cuneo as we can read in their correspondence[182]).



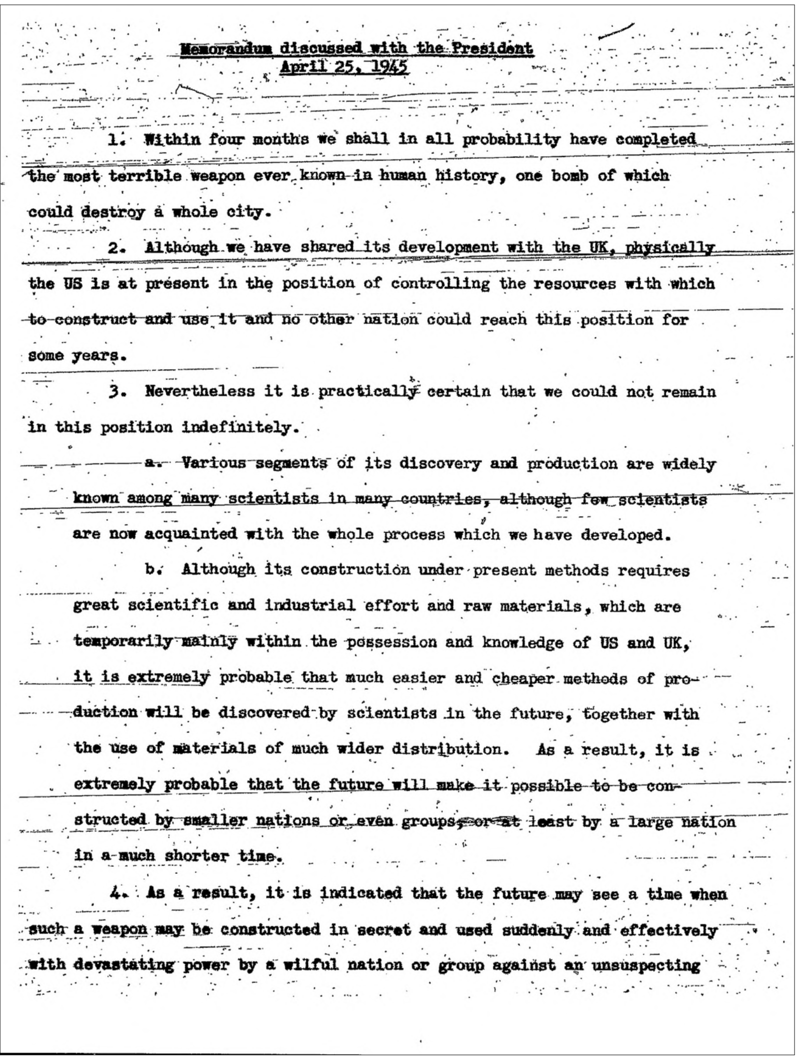
"THUNDERBALL"

~~"LONGITUDE 78 WEST"~~

The older copy is 142 pages long (!) and although undated, I would said it was completed around February 3, 1960[183]. Its open on a pre-title sequence in which former U.S. President Harry S. Truman gives a speech at the White House where he says that one day, civilization could be destroyed by atomic weapons. (Strangely the sequence is supposed to have the April 25, 1945 date superimposed, but that doesn't at all match with the dialogue):

- Truman: On April 25, 1945, as long ago as that, when I was President of the United States of America, Mr. Stimpson, the Secretary of War, accompanied by General Groves, came to see me to answer specific questions about the atom bomb. This is what the Secretary of War said: "The future may see a time, when such a weapon may be used suddenly [...] with devastating power by a willful nation or group against an unsuspecting nation. With its aid, even a very powerful unsuspecting nation might be conquered within a very few days by a much smaller one. The world [...] would eventual be at the mercy of such a weapon, [...] civilsation might be completely destroyed [...]".

The text is based on a secret April 25, 1945 memo (its paragraph 4 and 5 in particular) from Henry Stimson to Truman in anticipation of a meeting to discuss this weapon of a new power that had to be soon operational[184]:



Memorandum discussed with the President
April 25, 1945

1. Within four months we shall in all probability have completed the most terrible weapon ever known in human history, one bomb of which could destroy a whole city.

2. Although we have shared its development with the UK, physically the US is at present in the position of controlling the resources with which to construct and use it and no other nation could reach this position for some years.

3. Nevertheless it is practically certain that we could not remain in this position indefinitely.

a. Various segments of its discovery and production are widely known among many scientists in many countries, although few scientists are now acquainted with the whole process which we have developed.

b. Although its construction under present methods requires great scientific and industrial effort and raw materials, which are temporarily mainly within the possession and knowledge of US and UK, it is extremely probable that much easier and cheaper methods of production will be discovered by scientists in the future, together with the use of materials of much wider distribution. As a result, it is extremely probable that the future will make it possible to be constructed by smaller nations or even groups, or at least by a large nation in a much shorter time.

4. As a result, it is indicated that the future may see a time when such a weapon may be constructed in secret and used suddenly and effectively with devastating power by a wilful nation or group against an unsuspecting nation or group of much greater size and material power. With its aid even a very powerful unsuspecting nation might be conquered within a very few days by a very much smaller one, although probably the only nation which could enter into production within the next few years is Russia.

5. The world in its present state of moral advancement compared with its technical development would be eventually at the mercy of such a weapon. In other words, modern civilization might be completely destroyed.

6. To approach any world peace organization of any pattern now likely to be considered, without an appreciation by the leaders of our country of the power of this new weapon, would seem to be unrealistic. No system of control heretofore considered would be adequate to control this menace. Both inside any particular country and between the nations of the world, the control of this weapon will undoubtedly be a matter of the greatest difficulty and would involve such thorough-going rights of inspection and internal controls as we have never heretofore contemplated.

7. Furthermore, in the light of our present position with reference to this weapon, the question of sharing it with other nations and, if so shared, upon what terms, becomes a primary question of our foreign relations. Also our leadership in the war and in the development of this weapon has placed a certain moral responsibility upon us which we cannot shirk without very serious responsibility for any disaster to civilization which it would further.

8. On the other hand, if the problem of the proper use of this weapon can be solved, we would have the opportunity to bring the world into a pattern in which the peace of the world and our civilization can be saved. . . .

9. As stated in General Groves' report, steps are under way looking towards the establishment of a select committee of particular qualifications

When they started developing the James Bond film, this memo was then declassified, Stimson himself notably quoted it in the press in 1947[185].

McClory will claim later having the idea of SPECTRE organization upon reading the word "group" in this Stimson's memo[186]. He also attributed the idea of the theft of an atomic weapon to that same memo, and there may be some truth in that:

> - Kevin McClory[187] : [When we started the idea to create a Bond's film] I felt that we needed a credible plot. And at that time, again from memory now, I read a statement by your president, Truman [...]. The Secretary of State was a man called Stimson. And he said General Groves had come to him and said that it was possible that a small country or a group could obtain an atomic war weapon, and if they did, they could hold the world to ransom. The word "group" struck me there, the "group". [...] So did we created the organization SPECTRE and Ernst Stravo Blofeld, who was the most intelligent, criminal mind in the world.

"It is hoped that we may be able to persuade Mr. Truman to record this scene", reads the script's stage directions (sic!). "If not, it's intention and content can be expressed quite easily in some another way".

The title sequence consist of a sequence of maps of the West Indies that change according to the times, from Christopher Columbus's era maps to modern maps (with some landmarks on it according the era: pirates ships, palms trees, girls water-skiing, etc...). A calypso music is to be heard in the background.

After the credits, we still have the informant Martelli going to (a snowy) New York, then Miami, Nassau and finally joining Largo, who isn't on his yacht in this script, but at Xanadu. Largo is playing chemin de fer (rather than backgammon) with the girl "in the scantiest of bikinis", but for some unknown reasons, Whittingham decided to rename her Gaby!

Henchmen Albertini is still present but Whittingham have now renamed Ferrari into Janni. So they kill Albertini after he delivered his information about "Antonio Petachi" and his body is thrown to the ocean. Largo resume his game with Gaby, he is facing the ocean and watch behind her the shark fin with fascination while she is unaware of Martelli's death. Largo is sexually excited by that, "almost out of control", so he give Gaby the money he retrieved from Martelli's body to have sex with her!

In this script the way Petachi get rid of the crew of the Valiant have changed. Instead of shooting them, he is now releasing poisonous gas into the air supply of the crew.

There is series of stock-shots of planes searching the missing bombers (the script contain some stock-shots indications here and here, as well that "this needs research" indications).

Largo's go back to Xanadu (with a huge fish, for his fishing trip cover) and contact Palermo. Here the Capo Mafiosi have been renamed from Cuneo to Bastico, and the camera show his face. There is a disagreement about the sum to ask for ransom that someone think not very high, but someone else says they have to take in consideration the logistic (since it will be paid in gold).

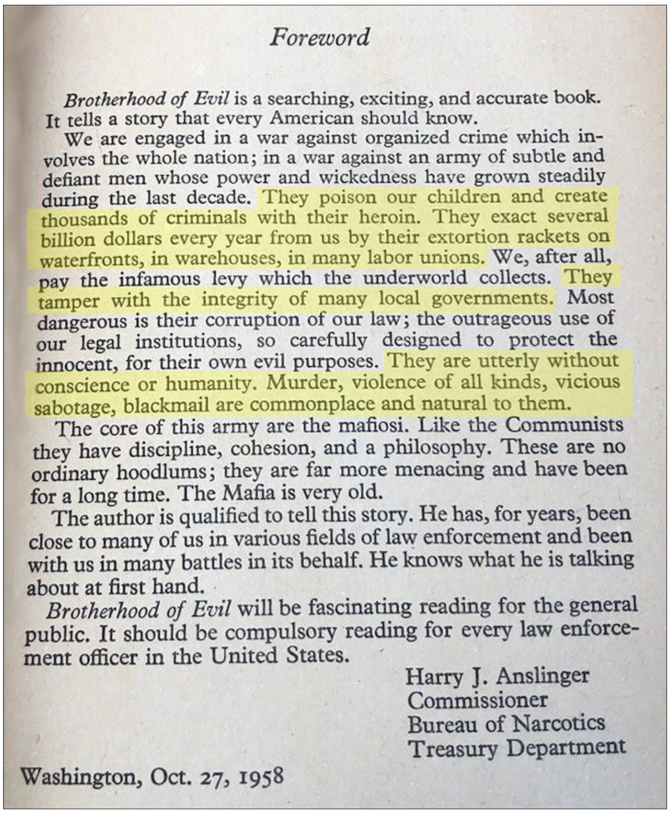
There is also meetings with big brass in England about the bomber disappearance.

> - Air Marshall: The only clue we have had so far is that the United States radar defense system briefly picked up an unidentified aircraft about a hundred miles out from the Bahamas four hours after our aircraft was first reported out of radio contact. That was in Longitude 78 West.

It is (or was) the title of our film, the Bahamas being located on the 78th meridian west and the 25th parallel north.

In another meeting a documentary about the Mafia is projected with images of Lucky Luciano, Frank Costello, Al Capone, etc... Interestingly, Whittingham credit Harry J. Anslinger for the text, since this one takes bits of Frederic Sondern's book Brotherhood of Evil: the Mafia, for which Anslinger wrote the foreword. Furthermore, the Mafia is even designated as "the Brotherhood of Evil" in this scene. Whittingham stated he had read this book for his research, as well as Feder & Joesten's The Luciano Story[188]. By the way, the documentary in the script is to be called "The Mafia Story". This documentary scene also seems to include a cameo for McClory's policeman friend since there is a character called "detective Charles Kelly of N.Y. Police Department".

Compare this extract of the script to Sondern's book on the right:



Foreword

Brotherhood of Evil is a searching, exciting, and accurate book. It tells a story that every American should know.

We are engaged in a war against organized crime which involves the whole nation; in a war against an army of subtle and defiant men whose power and wickedness have grown steadily during the last decade. They poison our children and create thousands of criminals with their heroin. They exact several billion dollars every year from us by their extortion rackets on waterfronts, in warehouses, in many labor unions. We, after all, pay the infamous levy which the underworld collects. They tamper with the integrity of many local governments. Most dangerous is their corruption of our law; the outrageous use of our legal institutions, so carefully designed to protect the innocent, for their own evil purposes. They are utterly without conscience or humanity. Murder, violence of all kinds, vicious sabotage, blackmail are commonplace and natural to them.

The core of this army are the mafiosi. Like the Communists they have discipline, cohesion, and a philosophy. These are no ordinary hoodlums; they are far more menacing and have been for a long time. The Mafia is very old.

The author is qualified to tell this story. He has, for years, been close to many of us in various fields of law enforcement and been with us in many battles in its behalf. He knows what he is talking about at first hand.

Brotherhood of Evil will be fascinating reading for the general public. It should be compulsory reading for every law enforcement officer in the United States.

Harry J. Anslinger
Commissioner Bureau of Narcotics Treasury Department

Washington, Oct. 27, 1958

> - Kelly: [...] They corrupt our children. Through their traffic in heroine, they turn thousands of good citizens into criminals, they extract millions a year from our people through extortion rackets or waterfront in warehouses and even in labour unions. They tamper with the integrity of local Governments. There are utterly without conscience or humanity... Murder, violence of all kinds, vicious sabotage are all commonplace and natural to them. [...]

(Despite Whittingham's credit for Anslinger, sentences wrote by Sondern are also in the script).

We are now introducing James Bond at the shooting range, and when the armorer disprove his use of a Beretta .25, there is a new dialogue inspired from Dr. No novel:

> - Armourer: For my money, if I were doing your work, I'd rather have a Smith and Wesson Centennial Airweight or a Walter PPK. Those are real stopping guns.

Few floors up, Moneypenny became simply "Penny" in this script! M start:

> - M: Just got back from Downing Street. Things are turning out a lot more serious than we thought. It's now been definitely established that the aircraft was high-jacked by the Mafia. You know all about them.

Such a clever way to avoid repeating to the audience (and Bond) what we already know (even if one can wonder why they suspected the Mafia in first place).

There is a scene with Gaby swimming near Xanadu and going to Nassau with Largo:

> - Largo: I've got to earn my living, so you don't have to earn yours. [...] I've got a lot of entertaining to do, and I want you around. So get yourself looking respectable.

> - Gaby: You want me respectable? Well! Well! You had too much sun?

Whittingham changed the scientist character in charge of making the bombs operable: he is now named Dr. Carlo "Galante" Volpe from the Chicago Institute of Technology. "Cost us five hundred thousand buck! [...] We gave him a new face", says Largo.

The hotel which welcome the Mafia's cover convention (garment or garbage removal one, according to the pages) is now the British Colonial. The Capo Mafiosi is not in the Bahamas scenes anymore. Something seem out of place when 007 order a Planter's Punch at the bar where he meet Gaby while she takes... A vodka martini.

> - Bond (to the barman): Where do I hire a boat on this island? I want to go deep sea fishing.
> - Gaby: Would you take advice from a stranger? [...] The sun. And don't go fishing till you've bought a hat.
> - Bond: For that most excellent advice, I'd like to buy you a drink. [...] I'm on a vacation. But I need a guide.
> - Gaby: So long as that dreary convention lasts, I'm looking for a job.
> - Bond: What's it all in aid of?
> - Gaby: A wife-free vacation on expense account; same as any other convention.
>
> [...]
>
> Gaby: And you are, Mr... ?
>
> Bond: Bond.

Doesn't seem like there's something missing in the way Bond introduce himself?

One of the most notable things in that script is that there is no Gaby/Petachi relationship at all! So compared from the previous treatment, Petachi name isn't evoked during this scene.

Nassau's "Tropic Bird" catamaran can be seen in background, as well as Largo looking Bond's seducing Gaby. He join them at the bar and Gaby introduce him to Bond as "Salvatore Largo".

Bond and Leiter meet the governor. As far the governor is concerned: Largo and the others Americans-Italians are clean, their convention happens "here every year", and Mafia have no reason to choose Bahamas for their operation.

The nightclub they go in after that is called the "Junkanoo Club". The previous treatment asked for "characteristic Bond fastidiousness", so 007 order here things like Prosciutto ham or:

> - Bond: What about the Bœuf à la mode Parisienne?
> - Leiter: Say it in English.
> - Bond: Well, it's a steak cooked with...
> - Leiter (jumping at it): Steak! That's fine. (To the waiter) And chips, please.

When he asks the waiter for a wine list, Leiter says, "Not for me, thank you. Bring me a glass of water". To which Bond replies: "Of course, I'd forgotten!". What he had forgotten will never be explained. Largo and Gaby enter the club; Largo reminds Leiter of someone.

It is decided that Leiter is gonna investigating Largo while Bond will get closer to Gaby.

So there are scenes where Gaby and Bond rent a boat and its crew, which include a colored boy aged 10 or 11 called Johnni. They fish in the ocean (catching a dolphin), do water-skiing behind the boat, go to a beach. At one point they learn that Johnni is an orphan:

- Gaby: Poor little kid! I didn't realize he's got no one.
- Bond: You're pretty fond of children, aren't you?
- Gaby (at once on the defensive): Is that so abnormal?
- Bond: If you're fond of children it's only abnormal if you haven't any of your own.
- Gaby (with a hard tone): Well, thanks for the advice, Mr. Bond. It so happens I can't.
- Bond (very sincerely): Oh... I'm sorry I said that.

[...]
- Bond: Has he [Largo] got any special reason for living here?
- Gaby: No more special than anyone else who wants to duck out of paying his taxes.

[...]
- Bond: I hear about three days ago, he got a big sail fish. [...] Where did he catch it?
- Gaby (quite uninterested): I wouldn't know.

[...]
- Bond: How d'you say [in Italian], "I go for you, Gaby. I could eat you!".
- Gaby: That you don't say in Italian.

They end up kissing, its seems.

Meanwhile theses Bond/Gaby scenes are interspersed with others showing Leiter sending photos and fingerprints of Largo to Washington, and observing him visiting Fort Charlotte, Ardastra Gardens with the others Mafiosi from the convention. Largo seems very busy to entertain the others, doing barbecue with them on the beach, party on his yacht, rather than worrying about blowing up the bombs...

Two Fort Charlotte views, the Ardastra Gardens's flamingos (their owner, Hedley Edwards, even had two lines of dialogue in the script) and the British Colonial hotel. Overall, lot of precise places in the Bahamas are given all along this script. We can notably notice there were planned to shoot lot of the underwater scenes containing animals in Bimini water (a marine laboratory there with large sharks pens was visited during the location scouting[189], probably the Lerner Marine Laboratory pictured on this page). Seems the scouting trip was useful.

Eventually Gaby goes back to Largo's yacht, which is called the Sorrento in this script.

- Largo: Where the hell you been? [...] I wanted you here with my guests. You knew that. [...] What does this limey mean to you?
- Gaby: Honey, act your age! He's just a tourist I met in a bar. He wanted to spend some money, so I helped him. I like spending money, you know that!
- Largo: But not in my time.
- Gaby: You feeling your age or what?

Largo says they gonna to have a little talk and we cut to Bond who is at his hotel. He receive a message signed Gaby, giving him a place where to meet. 007 go there and seems to see Gaby arriving in a car. But it's not her: it's Albertini and Janni. They hit Bond with the car.

- Janni: Stop and turn around. We got to make sure.

But Bond, who is injured but still alive, now drawn his Beretta and fire toward them. They flee.

At police HQ, Bond give the registration number of the car. The car was stolen. Leiter join Bond:

> - Leiter: I've just talked with Washington. They've checked on Largo. His real name is Antonio DeSuca.

And he is indeed from the Mafia; Leiter also learned that the atomic scientist Galante is apparently on the island.

Next they fly over the Bahamas in a Widgeon seaplane and find the bomber's wreck. They call a Navy boat, Bond dives: the bombs are not here.

Like in the last treatment, all boats are inspected with a Geiger counter, especially the Sorrento, where there is a party with a strip-tease act ("if we can get away with it"). Things happen like the treatment, they found nothing and phone M to tell him. We see M in "pyjamas and dressing gown", "It's five o'clock in the morning here" he says. M consider "Operation Zebra": complete evacuation of the Bahamas in 72 hours, but not yet.

Bond decide to bank on Salvatore Largo's weak spot: his jealousy. He go to the casino and in this part of the story there is now scene where Bond plays against Largo at baccarat, Gaby watching them. After a few pages, Bond wins and leave the casino with the girl in a location car.

Jealous Largo can't stand it and get in his [Ford] Thunderbird with Janni, trying to catch up with Bond and Gaby. Seeing he is followed, Bond leave the car with Gaby and go toward a cliff. Janni take a gun with a telescopic night scope and aim toward them.

> - Largo: If Gaby gets hurt, it'll be your last ride too, Janni.

A bullet misses Bond, "only because, at the moment of firing, Bond's foot had slipped in the loose stones". Another bullet almost hit Gaby and Largo's prevent Janni for shooting more. Largo and Janni decide to get closer and there is a cat and mouse game between the cliffs, with some sequences like "stones, dislodged by Largo and Janni above them, come crashing down". Ultimately police officers arrive, saying Largo and Janni that they can't park their car where they had left it. They leave.

So now they are gone, Gaby wonders why Largo tried to kill them. Here the dialogue continue to show the loathsome personality of Whittingham's Gaby:

> - Bond: Because Largo's a killer.
> - Gaby: Not a killer.
> - Bond: You've just seen it for yourself.
> - Gaby: It's jealousy... That's all.
> [...]
> - Bond: You've got to understand... Those atom bombs were taken off the plane.
> - Gaby (completely mystified): I'm just not with you...
> [...]
> - Bond: Gaby, you know about the Mafia, don't you?
> - Gaby: Yes... I know about the Mafia.
> - Bond: [...] Largo. He's Mafia, too.
> - Gaby (really disturbed): How d'you know that.
> - Bond: It's my business to know. Unless the Mafia are paid a hundred million pounds within five days, Largo's going to use one of those bombs to wipe out a city. [...]
> - Gaby (slowly, as if the word are magic): A hundred million pounds... That's money!

> - Bond: D'you remember what happened at Hiroshima?
> - Gaby: Something awful. I've forgotten.
> [...]
> - Bond: Your home town is Jacksonville, isn't it? Well, just imagine one of those bombs falling on your own family, your neighbors [...].

Bond want her to go back to Largo in hope she can learn something, but she is not up for it:

> - Gaby: But after tonight how can I go back. He tried to kill me.
> - Bond: He wasn't trying to kill you, it was me.

In this script, Bond never give a Geiger counter to the girl. She goes back to the yacht and Largo who is furious and...

> - Largo: You filthy little mawk? You'd do anything for it [money]! Any man. [...] A broad who can't love, only dough.
> [...]
> - Gaby: What d'you think I'm doing here? [...] Bond's an agent. [...] That's why I came back, to warn you. [...] He asked me a lot of questions. [...] He went on about the Mafia, [...] then he talked about that bomber that crashed. Then, he gave me all this [the money], on condition I keep my eyes skinned and my ears wide open.

Curiously, knowing her love for money, strange she didn't talk about the ransom! (And if you wondering: no, it is never said at any point she does this on Bond's order; so it's safe to assume that she indeed betray Bond!).

> - Bond (to Leiter): I think I was right to tell her. [...] I wanted to stir things up, force them into action, panic them. There's something else I told her. I told her exactly how to render an atom bomb from "safe" to "live" and back from "live" to "safe".
> - Leiter: But that's summit secret information!

(And one can surely question the wisdom of giving Largo's mistress what the Mafia needs to explode the bombs!).

> - Bond: She went back to him. She didn't have to, with all that money [I gave her]. That must prove something.

Strange way of thinking, knowing the Mafiosis to whom she returned are expecting to receive far more money than he gave her... But he may have right after all as the next scene seems to illustrate it: he receive a phone call from Gaby, she is at Xanadu:

> - Gaby: They're picking something up tonight, then sailing... No, I don't know where.

Leiter actually wanted to investigate Xanadu earlier. Bond ask her to lead Leiter through the swamp. Bond will not come with them because he must stay to talk with London.

Leiter and Gaby cross the swamp, she help Leiter when he is sinking in a sort of quicksand. They reach Xanadu and separate, unaware they have triggered an alarm. Having seen trace in the sand leading to a hut on aerial photography, Leiter goes the hut, hoping the bombs are there. He only find a pedalo and is attacked and knocked out by Albertini and another henchman. Contrary to before:

> - Largo: He might be more useful alive, aboard the yacht. Shove him in the anchor room.

Bond is worry since Leiter doesn't return, so he go to Xanadu with a Zodiac boat. On the way he hears noise near the Sorrento (anchored next to Xanadu). Bond dive to investigate the noise caused by the jammed trapdoor. Bond's bubbles are spotted on the surface, a man (called Angelo) is sent: Bond dispatch him. There is then the grenade, "Bond is lying behind some coral, motionless, apparently unconscious". Mafia's frogmen then attack with knife the inflatable Zodiac where some policemen were.

Bond reach the beach but is captured by men who hit him on the head and push him in the swamp shifting sand/mud. He sinks.

Mafia's men go retrieving the bombs from an underwater cave near Xanadu's; its supposed to be an exciting sequence with great difficulty to move forward for the divers:

> Crayfish, poking their heads out of rugged holes, hundreds of fish of all species, the beady eyes of the dreaded Moray eel, even a small octopus. We could possibly show a large Manta ray and a swordfish (shot at Bimini). [...] At the entrance they encounter the same struggle with the ebbing and flowing of the water. The chariot is nearly overturned or dashed against jagged rocks. One of the divers loses his weight belt and precipitate upwards, another is dashed against the rocks, and his aqualung torn away from him.

They charges the retrieved bombs onto the yacht and one of the Largo's frogmen put a limpet mine on the hull of a Navy gunboat in the bay. Finally, the Sorrento sail away from Xanadu. On board:

> - Gaby: You're going to blow up a city. You got the atom bomb.... D'you want to become a mass murder, a monster? Can't you think of the kids and....
> - Largo: A mass murder! You're nuts, Gaby! I'm going to be a millionaire, a multi millionaire!
> - Gaby: But what if they don't play ball?
> - Largo: But they will! What else can they do? It's only peanuts [for them]. [...] Tomorrow we lay our first egg, in the sea just off Miami.
> - Gaby (shocked): Miami! [...] But what's good's all that money going to do you? You'll be on the run.
> - Largo: Yes, with the other bomb! They won't touch me.

"She is looking at him in a new way. He has considerably impressed her"!

> - Gaby: It's a lot of money, two hundred and eighty million bucks. [...] What's your share, lover boy?
> - Largo: I did it, didn't I? I've done everything.
> - Gaby: Let me put it to you another way, honey. What's my share? On account of all the things I did to help you, remember? Finding out from Bond all the > think he knew about you, and warning you [...] I'll be with you, I won't leave you, not now, I won't.

Bond slowing emerge from the shifting sand/mud of the swamp, a hundred of migratory crabs near him, we see the rebreather was still in is mouth. Looking like a drunk, he arrest a driver and his girlfriend on the road and ask them to drive him to Government House. Reluctantly, the driver takes the filthy Bond in his car.

Meanwhile, Leiter locked in the yacht, is cutting his bonds.

The Navy gunboat tailing the Sorrento start to open fire for stop it, but the limpet mine explode and destroy the gunboat.

The yacht is now at Miami's coastline. Mafia's men go place the bomb but Bond and eight Navy's men parachutes from a plane to stop them. Big battle underwater, in this script Whittingham added the wreck of a boat to the scenery:

> The individual combats should go on through funnels, in the wheelhouse, along gangways, in the holds: anywhere the wreck can provide. An oxygen pipe is cut, a breathing tube is slashed, a mask is smashed, a weight belt cut, a harpoon in someone's back, a knife in another's. The highlight should be the individual encounter between Bond and Janni, and Janni's death.

Meanwhile at the surface, Largo is busy to put the remaining bomb in a little seaplane which was under a tarpaulin on the yacht. Gaby surprises Largo talking with Galante, he's gonna leave with him and give him twenty millions. She discretely climb and hide in the seaplane.

On the yacht, Leiter who has managed to free himself, attacks Galante and knock him out, Largo draws a gun and shoots Leiter.

Largo climbs in the seaplane, "the catapult mechanism is released, and the plane shoots into the air". Bond approach Leiter's motionless body:

> - Leiter (with great difficulty): Other bomb... In plane... With Largo... Girl's with him, too. Warn New York... That's the next place...
>
> Then, his eyes close. Still kneeling, Bond look into the sky.
>
> [The plane is no more than a speck now].
>
> Suddenly, there is a blinding flash. Bond covers his eyes with his arm. Then, he looks across at the sky again.
>
> - Bond (to himself): She's done it... She had the gut to do it.
>
> Now several seconds after the flash, there comes a tremendous sustained roar accompanied by a tornado-like burst of wind.
>
> The sky (and the screen) is completely filled with a great, boiling, surging cloud of many colours, mushrooming upwards. The roar of the deafening blast echoes and rumbles away in distance.

The end.

Whittingham's first script is in overall more cinematic/visual than everything written before, with more scene being showed than told through dialogue and a large number of geographic place in Bahamas indicated for the shooting. Gaby arc is, however, a step back.

My second copy of the script, 131 pages, is a revised version of the previous. The content is almost the same, just some minor alteration here and here, with some sequences/ dialogue slightly reduced.

One minor alteration was to alter the cameo of McClory's policeman friend Charles Kelly: the character has been renamed Casey.

And for the only two majors alteration: the first one concern Salvatore Largo, which have been renamed Giovanni "Joe" Largo in this script (although his real name is still Antonio DeSuca). The other major difference is located at the level of the final underwater battle, which have been expended with now 15 allied frogmen (instead of 8) and some news things likes the presence of sharks and barracuda.

When the plot becomes a novel: SPECTRE, Shrublands and Player's sailor

While Whittingham was writing his first script, on January 4, 1960[190], Ian Fleming traveling to Jamaica to write his annual James Bond novel. He chooses to do Thunderball which he referred to as "the book of the film" in a letter to his long-time friend Ivar Bryce[191] (note that on March 19, 1960 he wrote that "Thunderball" was a "provisionally" title[192]). Fleming (who sometimes can says he is short of inspiration) had the habit of reusing scripts from series that hadn't come to fruition for his novels: such as the script for a series called Commander Jamaica which became Dr. No[193] and more recently some of the scripts for a TV show for CBS were adapted into the short stories of the collection For Your Eyes Only[194].

Few month later he would sign a contract with Jonathan Cape (the publisher) which guaranteed that the novel was original and didn't violate any copyright[195], even though he was warned by Cuneo that there might be a dispute with McClory over the rights of the novel[196]. Fleming probably believed that Bryce alone owns the rights to the scripts and probably believed that there are enough differences between the novel and Whittingham's last script to not be worried. (When the president of Cape Editions later learned of the link between the novel and McClory, he let Fleming have his way. The reason: the publication schedules of Jonathan Cape Editions for Thunderball was so advanced that it would have been "disastrous [...] to postpone publication"[197]. Yet Cape would later tell the court, under oath, that he was unaware that the novel was based on a story developed with McClory[198]).

This novel, Fleming dedicated it (only) to Ernest Cuneo: "To Ernest Cuneo-Muse".

In his typical self-depreciation, Fleming wrote to William Plomer about his manuscript in March:

> - Ian Fleming[199] : You may say that it needs drastic re-writing. I certainly got thoroughly bored with it after a bit, and I have not even been able to re-read it, though I have just begun correcting the first chapters. They are not too bad; it is the last twenty chapters that glaze my eyes.

Unfortunately I don't have the original manuscript of the novel to be a judge of that, but after correction and editing phase, the novel in its final published form would however be another great vintage from Fleming.

In the novel, Fleming considerably changes the opening of the plot. No Truman or Martelli here: theses elements are absents. Instead the story start with James Bond being summoned to M's office on a Monday. M is worried about Bond's health: his medical report indicates excessive consumption of cigarettes (sixty per day) and alcohol. M want his agent to spend two weeks on a nature cure at a place called Shrublands in Sussex. M recently went here and it did him the greatest good. 007 is isn't excited by the perspective but orders are orders, "I can't afford to have an officer in that section who isn't one hundred per cent fit" says M.

Fleming thus add a long introduction to the story with the addition of Shrublands, based on his experience of his

IAN FLEMING
THUNDERBALL
FLEMING
THUNDERBALL

own failing health and a clinic he had visited for recovery a few years earlier (1956), Enton Hall[200]. His wife Ann even visited it before him, and Ian found her character had been greatly improved after her staying[201].

Enton Hall in Surrey, which inspired Shrublands described by Fleming as "a red brick Victorian monstrosity" in chapter 2.

Needless to say, but "Penny" character of Whittingham's scripts is referred as Moneypenny in Fleming's novel (even if Bond himself still calls her Penny, but after all he does that since Casino Royale).

At Shrublands, Bond meet Dr. Wain and Patricia "Pat" Fearing from the personnel. He also meet a patient named Count Lippe and notice he have a tattoo that he tries to hide.

007 phone the HQ and learn that it is a "Red Lightning" Tong's tattoo.

Few days later, Lippe who heard his phone call, tries to kill/harm Bond while he is strapped to a traction machine, by putting it to full power. Fortunately Patricia hears the abnormal noise of the machine and stop it.

Few day later, Bond takes his revenge on Lippe by altering the heat of his sweat-box, causing him second-degree burns and a least a week of hospitalization.

The next chapter is perhaps the more important of the novel (and of the entire creation of Thunderball) since its mark the formal inclusion of SPECTRE and its leader Ernst Stavro Blofeld into Bond's universe. Indeed Fleming gave up the Mafia and its Capo Mafiosi of the previous drafts to instead introduce this new infamous criminal organization (despite the fact that we feel Fleming passionate about everything related to the Mafia in Thrilling Cities). SPECTRE will proved to be a remarkable boon for James Bond, something that will help to define the early films and the later novels.

Here SPECTRE stand for "SPecial Executive for Counterintelligence, Terrorism, Revenge, and Extortion" and is composed by ex-SMERSH, ex-Gestapo and even Mafias members, etc. Its HQ is in boulevard Haussmann, in Paris.

So the organisation have a reunion, and here Fleming add a scene where a member of SPECTRE who misbehaved is killed by Blofeld. There future plan concerning the theft of the bombs and the following blackmail is discussed and referred as "Plan Omega". Here we learn that Lippe is a member of SPECTRE ("Sub-operator G") who was based Shrublands to be in contact with an airman working at Boscombe Down airfield. In Fleming book, the gold ransom will still have to be parachuted over Sicily (and a "Capo Mafiosi" is even evoked).

After his cure at Shrublands, Bond is a new man, feeling better, who even has reduced his cigarette consumption to 10 a day (and of a brand with smallest tar and nicotine content). He is ready to act when he receive a phone call summoning him to M's office.

The bombs theft already happened and M give SPECTRE's letter to Bond. In his novel Fleming chooses to describe the bombers as a "Villiers Vindicator": a fictional airplane. The NATO observer has been renamed Giuseppe (with the I before the U this time) Petacchi (with, also for the first time, two C). The Secret Service haven't much of a lead, only a radar contact of an unknown plane. On a hunch, M decide to send Bond in the Bahamas.

As Bond leaves the HQ in his Bentley, he is attacked on the road by Lippe who seek revenge for his injuries. However Blofeld has deemed Lippe not reliable following Shrublands's events and ordered his elimination. Lippe is killed on the same road by SPECTRE before he have time to kill Bond.

Now a flashback show us how and why Petacchi hijacked the Vindicator for money. He used poisonous gas, but released it in the cockpit (rather than in the air supply system). Also Fleming changed the way Petacchi dies by having Vargas (a character who makes his first appearance in the novel) stabbing him with a stiletto knife, while Petacchi is standing on a wing of the bomber at the surface.

We then meet "No. 1" of SPECTRE, who is Largo (Blofeld is No. 2, but we are told the numbers changes every month). Largo becomes a much more elegant character in the novel compared to Whittingham's one who was more a gangster. Largo is notably never driven by jealousy here. Fleming chooses to give him the first name Emilio in the novel and Largo is not a pseudonym in it.

Largo have a yacht which, for the first time, is named the Disco Volante. It's a hydrofoil (that's also a first).

We kind of assist to the underwater operations (the retrieval of the bomb, the deployment of the tarpaulin): even if Jack Whittingham's suggested that in a letter, it was never adopted in any treatment/script. There is even a scene where they hide the bombs in an underwater cave.

Largos's cover in the novel is a treasure-hunter (a much more solid cover than a fishing enthusiast, or from garment/garbage business).

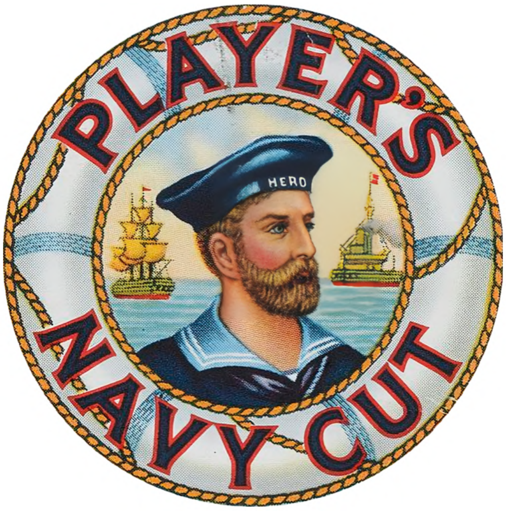
We also note that in the novel there isn't one scientist, but two: Kotze and Maslov. The scientists are in for money. Kotze description, "East German physicist who had come over to the West five years before" is very reminiscent of Von Grundish scientist who was in Whittingham's treatment.

007 arrives in the Bahamas and choose the "Royal Bahamian" hotel in the novel. During a meeting at Government House, Bond learn there is on the island a man who possess a yacht, Largo, and that his shareholders (in his treasure hunting affair) arrived recently.

Bond arranges to meet Largo's mistress, called this time Dominetta "Domino" "Vitali", from the Italian "vita" which means "life". Domino is for sure a kept woman, but never display the greed Whittingham's Gaby could. Part of Fleming's description echoes Whittingham's one:

> - In Fleming's novel: This was an independent, a girl of authority and character. [...] She might sleep with men, obviously did, but it would be on her terms and not on theirs.

> - In Whittingham's opening: [Largo] has one weakness [...]. He wants to possess, to own, a young woman in the same way as he owns real property or his yacht. Sophia will take his money, she will favour him when it suits her, but she is not his. This is her power over him.



The Domino drawn by Fleming in the novel is not far from melancholy either. This characteristic is found in particular when she imagines/explains the secret life of the sailor of Player's Navy Cut cigarette packets.

Domino also have a physical defect: one leg an inch shorter than the other, making her sligthly limp.

> - Richard Maibaum[202] : Fleming purists have criticized us for not playing Honey, as he did, with a broken nose. They profess to read some deep psychological significance in this mutilation, as with Domino's one shorter leg in Thunderball. The nature of that implication escaped us [filmmakers]. Does a single flaw in what otherwise would be perfection somehow enhance it? Or did Fleming mean to introduce a note of harsh, ugly realism to make their characters more convincing? Frankly, no one concerned thought it important. I'm delighted that we left Ursula's lovely nose as it is, and Domino's gimpy leg where we found it, in print.

So Bond meet Domino in a tobacco store and begins flirting with her around a drink. She notably tell him that Largo and his shareholders will be at the casino tonight.

Before the evening, Bond goes to the airport to meet the man sent by the CIA, who turn out to be Felix Leiter. In the novel he, of course, bears the traces of his injuries from the novel Live and Let Die (which wasn't the case in any of the drafts developed for the film).

They want to discretely inspect the yacht with a Geiger counter, so under the cover of men looking for properties, Bond and Leiter approach the Disco Volante, telling Largo:

> - Bond: I'm sorry to bother you, Mr Largo, but it's about Palmyra, the property I believe you rent from Mr Bryce.

So Xanadu has been renamed Palmyra in the novel, and Fleming included a reference to Ivar Bryce.

Largo welcomes them in his yacht, they talk about Palmyra and they are given a tour of the Disco Volante. The two agents leaves: the Geiger hadn't show any trace of abnormal radioactivity. Bond says he want to dive later bellow the yacht with the Geiger, in case the bomb are in the water under it.

But for now it's casino time. Bond play against Largo at chemin de fer and win. During the game, Bond here casually uses the word "spectre" to see how his opponent reacts; Largo tenses up. After his victory, Largo let Bond and Domino go to restaurant room. Here Fleming have the link between the girl and the pilot that Whittingham removed with Gaby. Thus, in the novel Domino tells Bond her real name is Petacchi and that she is Giuseppe's brother. However one of weakness of the novel is that it's never explained why Largo has, as a mistress, the sister of the pilot (Bond even think its a mere coincidence! Really, James?!).

Bond left the casino and does his diving around the Disco Volante. There is the enemy diver, a barracuda, and grenades are also thrown at him.

007 join Leiter who tell him he recognized Kotze casino at the casino. They decides to do an aerial search for the bomber with a Grumman seaplane, they end up to find the wreck. In the novel Bond dive straight away and alone (no Navy's reinforcement) and Fleming adopts Whittingham's idea of Bond finding objects on Petacchi's body that he could show to Domino.

On their way back, they see by flying over Palmyra traces on the sand that could have been done by transporting the bombs. Leiter go there and discover the traces were done by a simple pedalo (in the novel Leiter use the cover of visiting the house to buy it, so he is never in danger contrary to the last iterations of the story, and there is no swamp anymore).

Meanwhile Bond phone to Domino and meet her on the beach. Fleming created a scene where she walks on some sea-egg spines and Bond removes the spines in her foot with his mouth. After making love to her, 007 reveal her the truth. She accept to help him, and Fleming have the scene where he give her a Geiger counter. If the bombs are on board of the Disco Volante, she will go onto the deck: this will be a signal for the authorities monitoring the boat.

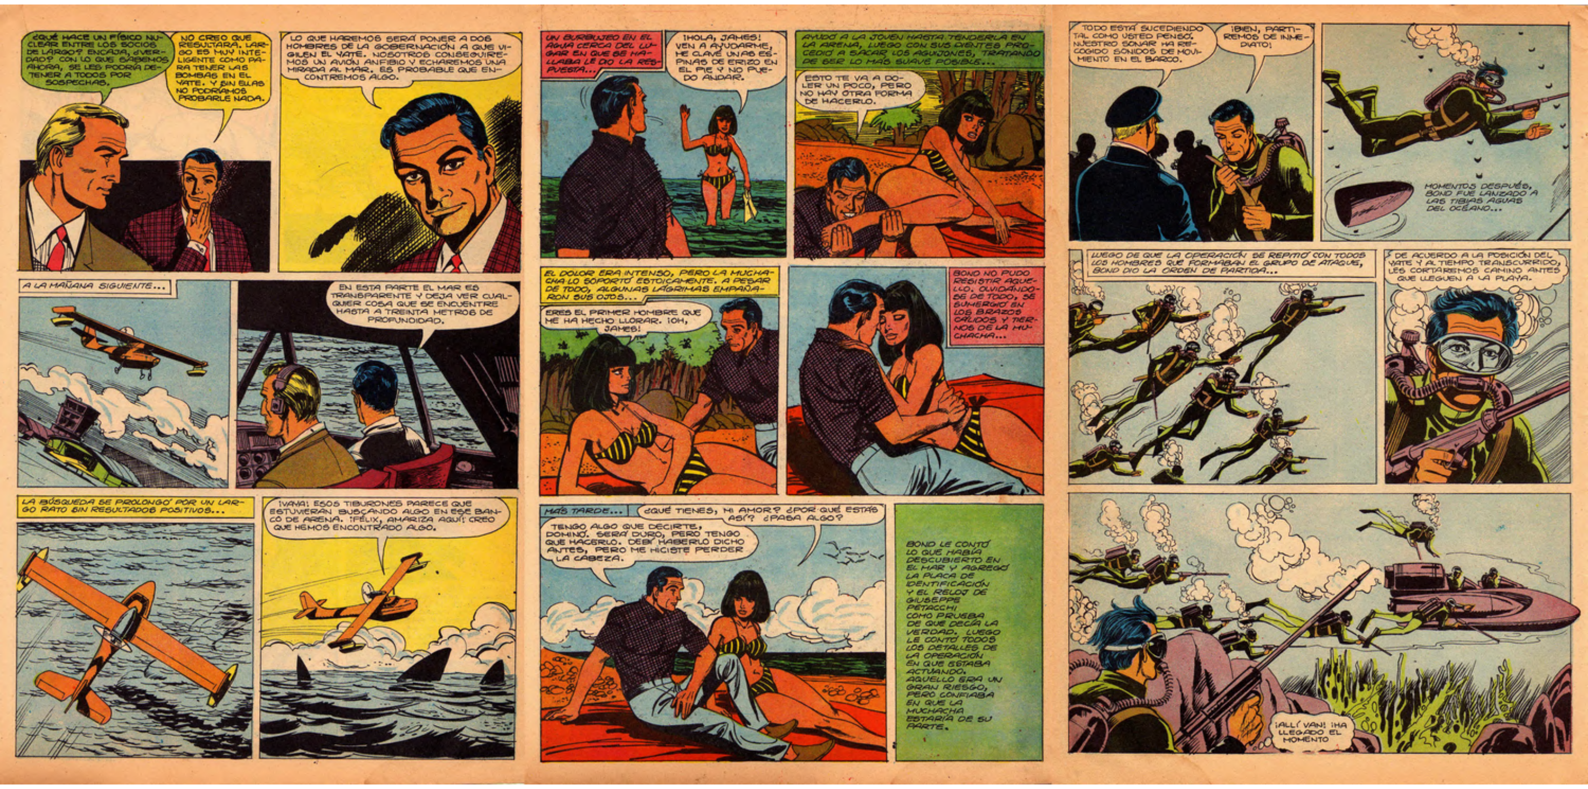
Bond and Leiter now join a U.S. nuclear submarine that Leiter requested earlier. Fleming christen it the Manta in the novel (its a first, the submarine never had a name before and was even absent since Whittingham's first treatment).

Bond receive a message saying the Disco Volante started to sail, and that Domino didn't signaled the bombs presence. Bond is unaware of it but Largo has discovered Domino's Geiger counter and he interrogates/tortures her with a cigar and ice.

Bond and Leiter guess the target for the first bomb is the Anglo-American rocket base at Grand Bahamas. They order the Commander Peter Pedersen to go here with his submarine.

They guessed right and armed by improvised spears (fabricated with broom handles and knifes), Bond, Leiter and US frogmen launch themselves in an underwater fight (at night). Bond and Largo individual fight is the climax of it (while in Whittingham's drafts it was always Bond versus Albertini or Janni, two characters absent of the novel). Consistent with Fleming's previous versions, Domino kills Largo with a spear gun.

No suicidal ending with a nuclear bomb in the novel, instead the book ends with Leiter (who is still alive) visiting Bond at the hospital where he and Domino recover from their injuries.



¿QUÉ HACE UN FÍSICO NUCLEAR ENTRE LOS SOCIOS DE LARGO? ENCAJA, ¿VERDAD? CON LO QUE SABEMOS AHORA, SE LES PODRÍA DETENER A TODOS POR SOSPECHAS.
NO CREO QUE RESULTARA. LARGO ES MUY INTELIGENTE COMO PARA TENER LAS BOMBAS EN EL YATE. Y SIN ELLAS NO PODRÍAMOS PROBARLE NADA.
LO QUE HAREMOS SERÁ PONER A DOS HOMBRES DE LA GOBERNACIÓN A QUE VIGILEN EL YATE. NOSOTROS CONSEGUIREMOS UN AVIÓN ANFIBIO Y ECHAREMOS UNA MIRADA AL MAR. ES PROBABLE QUE ENCONTREMOS ALGO.
A LA MAÑANA SIGUIENTE...
EN ESTA PARTE EL MAR ES TRANSPARENTE Y DEJA VER CUALQUIER COSA QUE SE ENCUENTRE HASTA A TREINTA METROS DE PROFUNDIDAD.
LA BÚSQUEDA SE PROLONGÓ POR UN LARGO RATO SIN RESULTADOS POSITIVOS...
¡VAYA! ESOS TIBURONES PARECE QUE ESTUVIERAN BUSCANDO ALGO EN ESE BANCO DE ARENA. ¡FÉLIX, AMARIZA AQUÍ! CREO QUE HEMOS ENCONTRADO ALGO.
UN BURBUJEO EN EL AGUA CERCA DEL LUGAR EN QUE SE HALLABA LE DIO LA RESPUESTA...
¡HOLA, JAMES! VEN A AYUDARME, HE CLAVÉ UNAS ESPINAS DE ERIZO EN EL PIE Y NO PUEDO ANDAR.
AYUDÓ A LA JOVEN HASTA TENDERLA EN LA ARENA, LUEGO CON SUS DIENTES PROCEDIÓ A SACAR LOS AGUIJONES, TRATANDO DE SER LO MÁS SUAVE POSIBLE...
ESTO TE VA A DOLER UN POCO, PERO NO HAY OTRA FORMA DE HACERLO.
EL DOLOR ERA INTENSO, PERO LA MUCHACHA LO SOPORTÓ ESTOICAMENTE. A PESAR DE TODO, ALGUNAS LÁGRIMAS EMPAÑARON SUS OJOS...
ERES EL PRIMER HOMBRE QUE ME HA HECHO LLORAR. ¡OH, JAMES!
BOND NO PUDO RESISTIR AQUELLO. OLVIDÁNDOSE DE TODO, SE SUMERGIÓ EN LOS BRAZOS CÁLIDOS Y TIERNOS DE LA MUCHACHA...
MÁS TARDE...
¿QUÉ TIENES, MI AMOR? ¿POR QUÉ ESTÁS ASÍ? ¿PASA ALGO?
TENGO ALGO QUE DECIRTE, DOMINÓ. SERÁ DURO, PERO TENGO QUE HACERLO. DEBÍ HABERLO DICHO ANTES, PERO ME HICISTE PERDER LA CABEZA.
BOND LE CONTÓ LO QUE HABÍA DESCUBIERTO EN EL MAR Y AGREGÓ LA PLACA DE IDENTIFICACIÓN Y EL RELOJ DE GIUSEPPE PETACCHI COMO PRUEBA DE QUE DECÍA LA VERDAD. LUEGO LE CONTÓ TODOS LOS DETALLES DE LA OPERACIÓN EN QUE ESTABA ACTUANDO. AQUELLO ERA UN GRAN RIESGO, PERO CONFIABA EN QUE LA MUCHACHA ESTARÍA DE SU PARTE.
TODO ESTÁ SUCEDIENDO TAL COMO USTED PENSÓ. NUESTRO SONAR HA RECOGIDO SONIDOS DE MOVIMIENTO EN EL BARCO.
¡BIEN, PARTIREMOS DE INMEDIATO!
MOMENTOS DESPUÉS, BOND FUE LANZADO A LAS TIBIAS AGUAS DEL OCÉANO...
LUEGO DE QUE LA OPERACIÓN SE REPITIÓ CON TODOS LOS HOMBRES QUE FORMABAN EL GRUPO DE ATAQUE, BOND DIO LA ORDEN DE PARTIDA...
DE ACUERDO A LA POSICIÓN DEL YATE Y AL TIEMPO TRANSCURRIDO, LES CORTAREMOS CAMINO ANTES QUE LLEGUEN A LA PLAYA.
¡ALLÍ VAN! ¡HA LLEGADO EL MOMENTO

Excerpt from the comic book adaptation of Zig Zag. (Published in South America from 1968 to 1970, the James Bond comics by Zig Zag, adaptations of the novels and original stories as well, had the particularity of drawing Bond under the traits of Sean Connery).

Ultimately, the novel Thunderball became the cornerstone for the rest of this long journey. Everything that had been written before didn't seem as good or as evolved. Fleming changed that in the novel. Cuneo take on the story was a Bond not well-defined who was even a sort of comic character, Fleming treatments was written below of his true capabilities, and Whittingham gave a more cinematographic/visual feel to the story, even if everything wasn't quite right. It it should be said that the change of format helped a lot. Writing a novel allowed Fleming infinite space and place for beautiful descriptions and inner thoughts that a screenplay of 120 pages would never had given him.

Below is a table that matches the outline of novel (its essential points), to the first ever written traces (or at least the ones to my knowledge) of these same elements.

Of course, even if these documents were written by specific authors (Fleming, Whittingham, etc.), this doesn't necessarily mean that these same authors were automatically the inventors of the ideas listed. Lots of the ideas were in fact previously raised orally at script conference discussions between the different contributors. In many of the cases, there is no way to know who invented what in the end.

Chapters	What happen	First known written trace (and eventual commentary).
1	Bond's bad health is evoked.	It's a first (concerning Thunderball).
	Bond is going to go to a nature clinic (Shrublands).	It's a first.
2	007 meet Patricia and Count Lippe. He see Lippe's tattoo.	It's a first.
3	Bond's learns it's a Tong's tattoo.	It's a first.
	Lippe tries to kill/harm Bond on a traction machine.	It's a first.
4	Bond takes his revenge on Lippe, who is in a sweat-box.	It's a first.
5	A criminal organization called SPECTRE is the enemy.	Fleming's letter (regarding Cuneo's treatment).
	Its leader is Ernst Stravo Blofeld.	It's a first.
	Its HQ is located at boulevard Haussmann in Paris.	It's a first.
	There is two scientists (Kotze and Maslov).	The name and the fact they are two are a first. Fleming briefly mentioned a "Mafia engineer group who expertly answer questions about making the bomb live and firing it" in his second treatment. Whittingham then added in his own treatment a character named Von Grundish (who had the same background as Kotze).

6	There is a villain's reunion about the future theft of the bomb.	A reunion is mentioned in Fleming's first treatment (as a flashback over the voice of Vallance). Whittingham's opening have a reunion scene (with this time dialogue, rather than a description by a voice-over). Except in Fleming first treatment, the reunion always happen after the theft of bomb(s) in the treatment/scripts developed for the film.
	A member is executed during the reunion.	It's a first.
	Plan Omega is the name of the operation.	It's a first.
	Largo's cover is as treasure hunter.	It's a first.
	An atomic bomb will be stolen.	Fleming's first treatment.
	A second atomic bombs will be stolen too.	Whittingham's memo (his thought about Fleming's first treatment).
	Ransom have to be delivered in gold over Sicily.	Fleming's first treatment.
7	Bond feels like a new man after his stay at Shrublands.	It's a first.
	Chief of Staff says "Fasten your lap-strap".	A "Fasten your seat belt" was in Fleming's first treatment.
	The missing bomber is a "Villiers Vindicator".	It's a first.
	A letter have been send to the Prime Minister.	Fleming's first treatment.
8	NATO's observer is named Giuseppe Petacchi.	Whittingham was the first to has a character called Petachi, in his October 2, 1959 opening. The first name Giuseppe was a Fleming's second treatment's idea.
	Bond is attacked by Lippe who gets killed by SPECTRE.	It's a first.
9	The theft of the bombs happened in the air.	McClory letter (September 18, 1959).
	Petacchi released poisonous gas in the cockpit to kill the crew.	The gas in the cockpit is a first. However gas (this time in the air supply) was in Whittingham's first script.
	Petacchi dies stabbed by a stiletto.	It's a first.
10	The main villain is named Largo.	Fleming's first treatment.
	Its first name is Emilio.	It's a first.
	He has a henchman called Vargas.	It's a first.
	There is a yacht.	Fleming's first treatment.
	Its a hydrofoil.	It's a first.

	There is a hatch in the bottom.	Cuneo's May 27, 1959 treatment.
	Its name is Disco Volante.	It's a first.
	The bombs are hidden in an underwater cave.	Whittingham's first script.
11	Bond's girl name is Dominetta "Vitali".	It's a first. Although close first names (Dominique and Dominica) were used in Fleming in his two treatment.
	Her nickname is Domino.	Fleming's first treatment.
	Bond meet her at a tobacco shop.	It's a first.
	Largo's property is named Palmyra.	It's a first.
12	Bond teams up with Felix Leiter.	Cuneo's May 27, 1959 treatment, and later in Fleming's first treatment.
13	Under the cover of men looking for properties, Bond and Leiter go to the Disco Volante, to inspect it with a hidden Geiger counter.	Doing it discretely was a first. There had been inspection of the yacht in treatment/script, but with the presence of the authorities with them (or just by the authorities alone).
	A mention to the Italian's Olterra boat.	Without being named, this boat was referred in Fleming's second treatment. However McClory seems to had done research about it earlier. (Due to his position at Naval Intelligence during the war, Fleming maybe had some knowledge about it to).
14	/	/
15	Bond goes to the casino.	There were casino scenes in Fleming's first treatment (but Bond didn't set foot here). Bond goes here in Fleming's second treatment.
	Bond plays chemin de fer with Largo.	Whittingham's first script had Bond playing baccarat (a game very similar to chemin de fer) with Largo.
	Bond casually uses the word "spectre" to see Largo's reaction.	It's a first.
	Domino is Largo's kept woman.	Sophia was Largo's kept woman in Whittingham's opening.
	Domino tells the secret life of the Player's cigarettes sailor.	It's a first.
	The Bond's girl is the pilot brother.	Whittingham's letter attached to his new opening.
16	007 dive near the Disco Volante.	Fleming's first treatment.
	He is attacked by an enemy diver.	Fleming's first treatment.
	There is a barracuda attacking the enemy diver.	Fleming's first treatment had a shark, the barracuda appeared in Whittingham's treatment.
	Grenades are thrown toward Bond.	Whittingham's treatment (only one grenade here however).
17	Bond and Leiter do an aerial search for the bomber.	Whittingham's letter attached to his new opening.
	They found it, as well as sharks around.	Whittingham's letter attached to his new opening.
	Bond retrieve some of the pilot's belonging when he explore the wreck.	Whittingham's letter attached to his new opening.

18	Bond and Leiter see some traces on the sand near a Palmyra's building that could have be done when the villains moved the bombs.	Whittingham's first treatment.
	Bond remove sea-egg spines from Domino's foot.	It's a first.
19	Bond's tells the truth to Domino.	Whittingham's letter attached to his new opening. (We can also note that in Fleming's first script, when Domino was assigned the mission go to Nassau, she only know the cover story. There was then a scene where Bond revealed the truth nature of their mission).
	He show her Giuseppe's belongings retrieved in the bomber.	Whittingham's letter attached to his new opening.
	He give her a Geiger counter.	Fleming's first treatment.
	The traces in the sand at Largo's house were done by a pedalo.	Whittingham's first treatment.
	Bond and Leiter boards a U.S. submarine.	Fleming's first treatment.
	Its name is the Manta.	It's a first.
20	/	/
21	Domino's Geiger is discovered by the villains.	Fleming's first treatment.
	Largo kills an alarmist member of the organization.	It's a first.
	Largo tortures Domino with a cigar and ice.	The ice is a first. A torture with a cigarette was in Fleming's first treatment.
22	SPECTRE's first target is an Anglo-American rocket base at Grand Bahamas.	Fleming's first treatment.
23	There is a big underwater battle.	Cuneo's May 27, 1959 treatment.
	Domino kills Largo underwater with a spear gun.	Fleming's first treatment.
24	Leiter visits Bond at the hospital where he and Domino recover from their injuries.	It's a first.

Like you can see, there is even some elements of the Whittingham's first script which was delivered to Fleming at the end of February 1960[203].

Whittingham's third script: double, Vulcan and scientist's motivation

In 1960, Jack Whittingham worked on a new script for the film, probably unaware that Fleming was working on a novel based on the drafts of the films (and not knowing if the film would be made or not). None of the novel additions are in this new script (and none of this new script additions ended up in the novel). It's like if Fleming and Whittingham developed their own project in parallel, without knowing what the other was working on.

Whittingham's undated new script definitely adopted the Thunderball title, with it now typed on the cover. 133 pages long, it's starting with the usual scenes with ex-president Truman, the arrival of Martelli at Xanadu. Here Giovanni Largo and Gaby plays crap rather than chemin de fer. More important:

> - Largo: Well, my friend... Tell us about Antonio. How is he now?
> - Martelli: A completely changed man.
> - Largo: So the operation has been a success.

In the plot of this script Petachi is now replaced by a Mafia's double, Antonio, who has undergone a plastic operation. (Yes Petachi was named Antonio Petachi in the previous scripts, but here he is simply named Petachi, no first name is given to the character, so no confusion).

After Largo and Gaby agreed to have sex, we cut to London at night. We see Antonio in NATO's uniform getting off a taxi and we following him to an apartment building. Here he ring at a door, Petachi open it and is dumbfounded to find himself face to face with somebody identical to him. Antonio kills him and takes some of his belongings.

On his way out, Antonio is hailed by the receptionist who is discussing with two Scotland Yard's detectives. False alarm however: the receptionist just say: "Oh, Major Petachi. There's a letter for you, sir".

Another change introduced in the script is that the bomber is no longer a Vickers Valiant, but an Avro Vulcan. In previous scripts, Whittingham wrote he needed to do research before scripting some sequence about the bomber: some are now been written in this script.

A bit later there are the usual scenes; Capo Mafiosi being renamed Trapani is worth to be noted.

James Bond doesn't appears before page 31, on the shooting range.

> - M: Just got back from Downing Street. Things are turning out a lot more serious than we thought. Operation Thunderball, that's the code name they've given it.

There is also some changes about "Joseph Galante". First he is now only referred as that (no more Carlo Volpe), but his motivations changed from money to:

> - Largo: An atomic scientist who wants to save the world. [...] From self destruction. [...] By exploding an atom bomb! [...] As a warning to mankind, a friendly lesson! The most Christian act since the crucifixion! So we told him that maybe we could provide him with the opportunity. [...] But here's the point: you've got to watch [him], Janni. We've sold him the idea that we're a bunch of maniacs, too, who think like him. [...] Who want to put an end to nuclear research. He wouldn't like it if he got the idea we might be in business for profit.

There is the usual scenes (the hotel bar, Leiter, Gaby and Bond, hit by henchmen's car, bomber search and find, authorities with Geiger on the Sorrento, baccarat, cliffs chase, Bond's revelations to Gaby, Gaby telling Largo that Bond is an agent). In this script, Bond never give Gaby the procedure to activate/desactivate the atomic bombs.

More usual scenes (Gaby help Leiter to reach Xanadu, Leiter captured, Bond diving near the yacht before being thrown in the swamp, Largo's men retrieve the bombs in an underwater cave, limpet mine, sailing to Miami). When Largo tell Gaby how he/they gonna to be rich, in this new script she isn't interested:

> - Largo: While I've got the other bomb [...] I can go anywhere I like, and they'll never dare lay a finger on me. You're going to be rich. You're going to be loaded with dough.
> - Gaby (with revulsion): That sort of dough? You want to make me vomit, Joe?
> - Largo: Watch it, Gaby. You watch what you say. I don't like your tone of voice.

Largo is busy on the phone, she goes to Galante's cabin:

> - Gaby: You don't look like a butcher. You don't even look mad. [...] You had to have a mother, I guess. [...] She's going to be proud of you unless, of course, she happens to live in Miami and doesn't get the chance. [...] Then, how does she feel about it?
> - Galante: [...] Grateful, that God should have chosen her son as the instrument of His will.
> - Gaby: The instrument of God's will! [...] Didn't they tell you, [...]? You're working for the Mafia! They're not in business to save the world. They'd gladly settle for leaving the world to its own salvation, for two hundred and eighty million bucks!
> - Galante: [...]. The method He has chosen cannot be questioned. [...]
> - Gaby: [...] The destruction of a city and hundreds of thousands of innocent people? You call that God's work?
> - Galante: The destruction of the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah was God's work. The Flood was God's work, too. [...]
> - Gaby: If you want to play at God's elect, you poor, sick maniac, why don't you play the part the way it's written, as Christ did, and have yourself destroyed? [...] You still have the chance. You could set off the bomb tonight, when we're well out at sea. Have you thought of that? You'd still make the headlines, and you'll still have made your point!

She leave him, his head falls into his hands.

Bond menage to get out the swamps and later parachute with a commando near Mafia's frogmen. There is the underwater battle and the good guys retrieve the bomb.

Meanwhile on the yacht, Largo try to flee with the other bomb in a plane:

> - Largo (to Galante): You will explode the bomb; just as soon as I can get it organised. And this time over New York. Come on, let's go.

Galante go with him but Gaby try to stop them. Largo put his hands around her throat: "Bitch! You two-timing bitch!". Leiter arrive with a steel wrench and start a fight. Gaby is knocked out during the fight, so does Leiter, as he "falls from the deck into the sea" (so I guess he dies, drown).

Largo and Galante get into the plane and catapult in the sky. Bond climb on the yacht and see Gaby on the ground, he go toward her:

> - Gaby: They've got the other bomb... In the plane.
> - Bond: I don't understand... The fuse on the first bomb was never set. It would never have gone off...

Suddenly, there is an atomic explosion in the sky where the plane was:

> - Gaby: That's what he [Galante] said... He said "I know what I'm doing"... He played the part right after all.

This script marks the end of efforts to write this Bond film, although few more month will pass during which McClory isn't abandoning the project, while Fleming working to the completion and publication of his novel...

The last months

At this stage, McClory was basically the only one who still wanted to go ahead with the film, still hoping to produces it himself, in ideal under a Xanadu banner. The others on the other hand wanted to stop the cost or leave the production in the hand of an outside big professional studio entity, worrying about their friend Bryce, since it was his money at stake and that he already lost some on The Boy and the Bridge. Whittingham position is: "I am only concerned with the writing of the screenplay, and not with the financial set-up. Although [...] I hope very, very much that eventually the film will be made"[204].

On January 28, 1960, Cuneo wrote Bryce a letter about how he viewed the situation and it's time stop the costs in his view:

> - Ernest Cuneo[205] : You have been rooked by Kevin more than plenty. You own the script, and Kevin can't move without you and Ian. He can claim part of the right, but it will not be sustained by the Courts. [...] He now wishes to resume his role as promoter of "James Bond" with you, if possible, meaning more outlay of your money in a second venture. [...] He must move now because he is out of money, [...] you need not [to] move because you are not out of money. [...] [Cuneo adds the fact that McClory is having difficulty producing the accounting for The Boy and the Bridge, which have been asked to him on several occasions, also suggests reasonable doubts of irregularity in the accounting of this film].

(The Boy and the Bridge accounting was a recurrent subject of discussion, Bryce and Cuneo wanted to consult them for tax declarations and for positioning themselves[206], "how the hell can you go anywhere, when you don't know where you are", Cuneo once wrote to Bryce[207]. They blamed McClory, accusing him of not making the necessary to produce them. McClory was for his part surprised of their inabilities to access the accountancy: for him it was always available to them, and he stated to Cuneo that one of his insinuations of malpractices was untrue and "libelous"[208]).

> - Ernest Cuneo[209] : [...] Of all the operative facts, and explicitly that there would be no more money after February 15, 1960, Kevin was duly informed by a memorandum [...] to which he appended his signature. More than a reasonable time was provided for him to find other work. [...] I have no more patience with Kevin, [...] he must face the fact the comedy is finished though with his Irish luck, the fiddler will be paid by you. But he must be gone. [...] There may be some salvage, but hardly through the (at best) incompetent who engineered the wreck. [...] In any event the atmosphere must be cleared of [his] greasy smog of inaccuracies, half-truths, blarney, optimistic euphoria and incredible self-hypnosis. [...] Operationally, with Kevin, sweet reasonableness doesn't appear to work; maybe a good punch in the nose will. [...]

Fleming and Bryce were starting to have conversations with M.C.A.[210] Fleming wanted to send the script to M.C.A. with a recommendation from Bryce saying that McClory should be the producer of the film[211]. McClory stated he learned of Fleming's (and Bryce's) intention to make something out of the script via M.C.A. sometime later, that Fleming met M.C.A. without his knowledge[212].

By February 15th, Whittingham had completed a proper script and Bryce was hoping something could be done with it[213]. The next day, Cuneo wrote another letter to Bryce, in it he is again not kind toward McClory, qualifying him of "an asphyxiating bore [...] which uses all the oxygen around him to keep his personal ego-fire blazing", his advice to Bryce is "get out"[214].

Having now a good script to present to Bryce and Fleming, McClory flew to Nassau with it on February 19, only meet some disappointment when he learned Fleming left the Bahamas the day before his arrival[215].

When Bryce announces him he has in mind to no do the movie through Xanadu, but by passing through others company like M.C.A., McClory is not enthusiast[216], anticipating that he is gonna be rule out of the film that he wanted to produce so much, and on which he has already spend at lot of time so far.

McClory still wanted to confer with Fleming, so he flew to Jamaica and saw him at Goldeneye at the beginning of March. Fleming wrote a resume to Bryce the next day:

> - Ian Fleming[217] : Kevin went through the whole story – Ivar promised that I would be producer – we are partners in Xanadu and Xanadu engaged Jack, paid all salaries etc. – it was as if you had all lined up against me – no one would answer my letters – Ian, you must realize how far the script is away from your original treatment. It's really a different property altogether (I said so is Ben Hur and the Bible).
> Anyhow, before my brains finally boiled out of my ears I managed to get this across to him and got his reluctant consent. I will take the script to Jules Stein [of MCA] on behalf of me and you with our joint recommendation that Kevin should be the producer, which in the right hands I think he would do very well… If Jules says he has the company [to make the film] but they will not accept Kevin as producer we will rediscuss and tell Kevin that unless he can sell himself to the company in some role or other he can either back out or reach for his lawyers.

Later that month, Fleming had more talks with M.C.A. in McClory's back and wrote to Bryce that they could maybe sell the script to Ranks "and the wash our hands of the whole business. Alternatively, you could perhaps give Kevin a month or some [...] to finance and go ahead as he wishes to do. [...] The important thing, I think, is that neither you or I personally should continue to get tangled up as amateurs in this professional problem, which is a time wasting for all of us"[218].

McClory return to Nassau to see Bryce:

> - Ivar Bryce[219] : When I saw McClory in Nassau in 1960, he told me that he has just been to Jamaica to try discuss the development with Fleming. [...] McClory said [Fleming] had finished the book and called it Thunderball, which he thought was an excellent title.

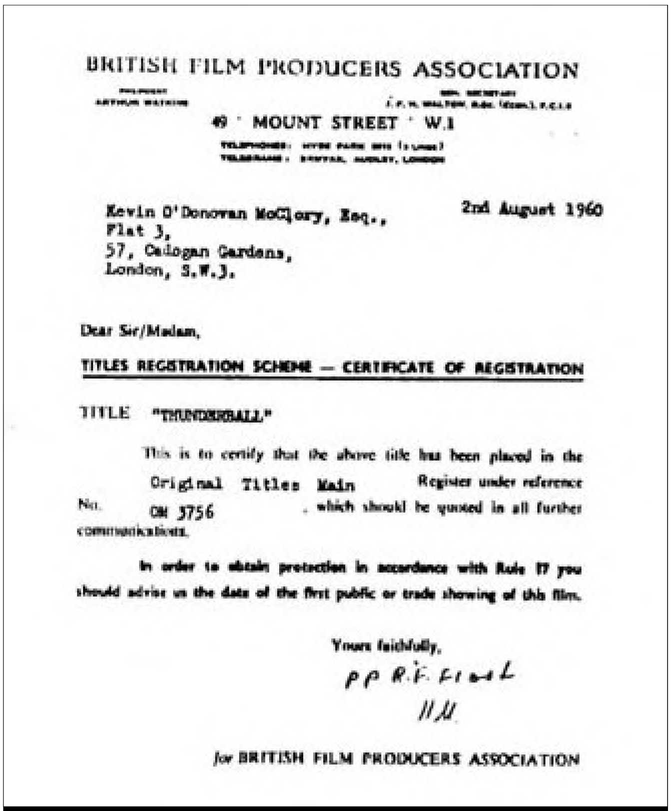
"I told him that I though enough time and money had been wasted and wanted to finish with him on a friendly basis and try to sell the script", states Bryce[220]. However, McClory's enthusiasm once again rub off on Bryce since he persuaded Bryce to give him six more months to try to do something on his own[221]. McClory has then until October 30, 1960 and if he doesn't succeed, all the right that McClory could had in the Bond project will revert to Bryce (who will probably sell the script)[222] "I added that if I made a large profit, I would certainly give him something", says Bryce[223].

Bryce and McClory signed a memorandum of intent on the subject on March 17, 1960 but this one was not well defined, stating in its midst that "full and proper agreement" had to be draw up subsequently[224]. (It was never draw up and thus caused problems later[225]).

> - Ivar Bryce[226] : At the meeting in Nassau he said for the first time that the script of course belonged to the partnership. I objected at once, saying that it was nothing to do with Xanadu Production, which by the terms of the agreement, was for The Boy and the Bridge only. [...] I never enquired into what agreement had been signed with Whittingham. [...] I just thought that one employed a writer and agreed a price, that one paid him that price and he delivered the script. I has paid for it and assumed it was mine. I have since discovered that McClory took an assignment of the rights in the Whittingham's script in his own name, despite the fact that I had paid Whittingham.

When Fleming learns of Bryce's six-month deal with McClory, he is unhappy[227]. That means they can't sell the script for six months, assuming McClory fails to make the project happen in the meantime.

M.C.A. member Robert Fenn would latter state that "in view of this, no further step could be, nor should be, taken [by M.C.A.] in connection with the proposed film. [...] [In] my opinion it would have been possible for M.C.A. to have found backing for the film if McClory had not this further 6 months. [...] McClory is not held in very high regard in the industry as although The Boy and the Bridge may have been very artistically directed, it was not a commercial success"[228].



BRITISH FILM PRODUCERS ASSOCIATION

49 · MOUNT STREET · W.1

Kevin O'Donovan McClory, Esq.,
Flat 3,
57, Cadogan Gardens,
London, S.W.3.

2nd August 1960

Dear Sir/Madam,

TITLES REGISTRATION SCHEME — CERTIFICATE OF REGISTRATION

TITLE "THUNDERBALL"

This is to certify that the above title has been placed in the Original Titles Main Register under reference No. OH 3756 , which should be quoted in all further communications.

In order to obtain protection in accordance with Rule 17 you should advise us the date of the first public or trade showing of this film.

Yours faithfully,
pp R.F. Fenn
H.M.

for BRITISH FILM PRODUCERS ASSOCIATION

McClory officially registered for the film the Fleming's title Thunderball on August 2, 1960.

In an internal memo, M.C.A. stated that the screenplay was "excellent" and that the "picture can be made in black and white for about $750,000. [...] With respect to casting, Mr. Fleming mentioned David Niven"[229].

Fleming was also asked by M.C.A. to send original letters and documents outlining his contract with Bryce on the Xanadu project[230].

Behind the back of McClory, Bryce also made changes to Xanadu Productions' accounts to better reflect that the James Bond film is not related to this partnership[231].

July-August, the final touches of the novel were still not finished[232] and Fleming wrote to Richard Chopping for the cover of the novel: he would like a skeleton hand whose fingers would rest on the Queen of Hearts and a dagger which would pierce it[233].

McClory, for his part, reaches out to Samuel Goldwyn with the third version of Jack Whittingham's script (the one where Petachi is now replaced by a Mafia double)[234]. However, on July 7, 1960, the Los Angeles Times announces that the Twentieth Century-Fox is working on a Casino Royale film with Gregory Ratoff[235]. Goldwyn then refuses to do Thunderball before the release of Casino Royale. McClory write to Bryce to says he though they had the rights to make "the first" James Bond film[236]. Anyway, "the people in New York don't want to proceed until they see what happens about Casino Royale", writes McClory to Bryce[237].

At McClory's suggestion, Bryce also meets a one point the president of Paramount to see if they would be interested in financing the Bond film[238]. Paramount is very interested, at least for a budget cost of $1 million, but not for the $3 million that McClory had in mind[239].

On September 1960, McClory writes to Bryce:

> - Kevin McClory[240] : I am really disturbed about the situation with Ian Fleming, particularly as without an Agreement with him I cannot do anything with regard to the setting up of a production of Thunderball. [...] It is essential, to the interests of both of us, that you should get Fleming tied down so that we know exactly where we are, and furthermore as I have said, the first thing I am asked when I open negotiations for production of Thunderball is: "Show us what rights Ivar Bryce has got from Fleming". I therefore beg of you to instruct Harbottle to proceed to finalise the Agreement with Fleming as soon as possible.

Few days after, Bryce wrote to Fleming:

> - Ivar Bryce[241] : I have heard nothing from Kevin for months (he hasn't signed The Boy and the Bridge accounts or authorised the London accountants to certify them, thus making enormous tax losses to Jo and me here). [...] How he could claim that I "have prevented him from performing his part of the agreement" is beyond me. I have done and given him everything he has asked for two and half years. Ernie thinks that he may claim authorship of Thunderball, when you publish it! In any case, according to all existing documents, all rights in the script revert to me (us) in October unless he has secured the financing, as I understand it.

McClory was unable to move the film forward in six months; he believes that Bryce and Fleming undermined his efforts throughout this period, notably by responding to his letters late and not providing him with the documents he needed (including one which would clearly establish that Fleming authorized the use of the character of James Bond in the Thunderball script; a piece of paper necessary to get any distributor/studio to sign onto the project[242] He ask for it since at least since April 13[243], and never obtained it).

So since the 30 October, 1960 has passed, they asked Kevin an assignation of his rights on the Bond film property.

> - Ivar Bryce[244] : At the end of 1960, I asked for McClory for assignment of copyright [on the scripts]. [...] McClory refused to give one saying that he wanted to see the Fleming book which he understood had been written, to see how far it has been based on the script. I said I could not see the relevance of it as [...] the only contact they had, had been the script conferences when > Fleming, Whittingham and McClory sat round discussing each page of the script and making suggestions. Some suggestions might have been used but in any case no-one would ever be able to remember who made what suggestion. [He said] he has not be able to get the film up because I had never show him an assignment of copyright from Fleming.

McClory stated that (derisory) offers were then made by Bryce to buy his rights[245], offers that he didn't accepted.

A smell of court battle was in the air.

See you in court: the 1961 edition

> - Kevin McClory[246] : Although I understood, some time prior to December, 1960, that [...] Fleming proposed writing a new novel, I did not know upon whose ideas he intended to base the same. It was not until a meeting I had with the Defendant Bryce on the December, 1960, that I learned that the novel Fleming proposed to write was directly connected with the film script produced by myself and [...] Jack Whittingham. At this meeting [...] Bryce asked me to assign the rights of the script [...] over to him for the sum of £1, plus a percentage of the profit of the picture when made, and he stated that [...] Fleming would pay me the sum of £3,000 cash in regard to the rights of the novel, when published. I said that I could not make any decision until I had read a copy of Fleming's novel to see how many of the ideas of myself and Whittingham had been used.

> - Kevin McClory[247] : Bryce indicated to me that [...] Fleming would in his novel acknowledge the use of the script and of the assistance rendered therein by myself and [...] Whittingham and would also pay me a suitable royalty. I understood at this time that only a small part of the script was being used in the novel.

"I was never supplied with a copy of [...] Fleming's proposed novel until shortly before the 15th March last, when I was supplied with an advance copy", stated McClory[248].

We can imagine the surprise when McClory finally reads the novel and that he discover that Fleming had the audacity to not even credit him or Whittingham for their inputs in the story. Fleming only dedicated the novel to Ernest Cuneo.

> - Ian Fleming[249] : This [Cuneo] draft, dated May 28, 1959, is an important document since it is in fact the basis plot on which my original film treatment was based and which formed the basis for all subsequent drafts and scripts, and is also the basis plot of my book Thunderball. [...] Knowing that the plot was the invention of Ernest Cuneo I did in fact dedicate the book to Cuneo and the dedication reads, "To Ernest Cuneo, Muse", meaning that in this book Cuneo had in fact been my Muse.

McClory writes to the publisher that he will sue them if they publish the novel[250], and not hearing answer, it is what he does.

So McClory sue Fleming, Bryce and the publisher, in order to obtain an injunction to prevent the publication of the novel. He convinced Whittingham to join him in his legal action and everyone went into London High Court of Justice in March 24, 1961.

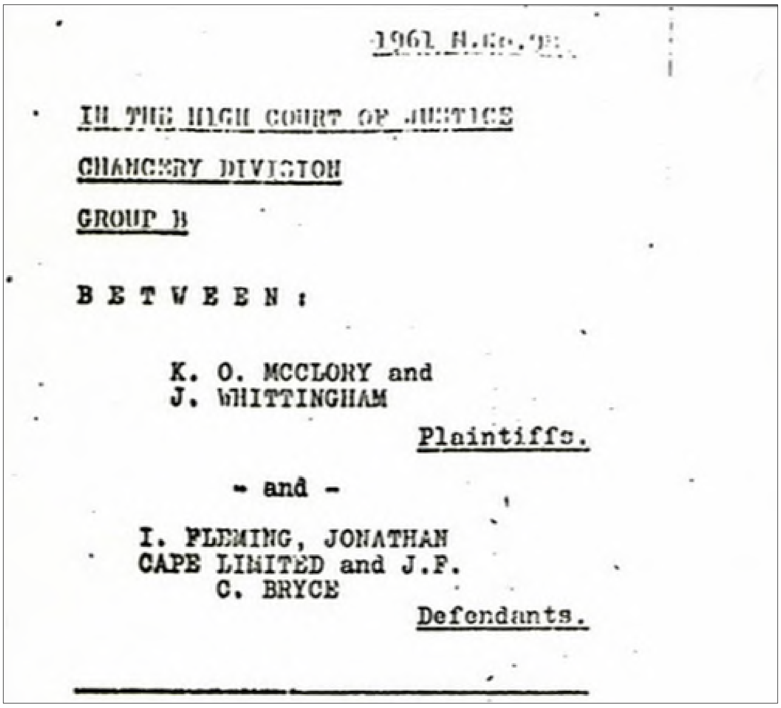
> - Jack Whittingham[251] : Having assigned my copyright to the Plaintiff McClory and been paid for this, my only interest in the matter is that I should receive proper credit for any use of my material. [...] I regard it as damaging to my reputation [...] It is known in the film trade that I have been engaged in writing > a film script for a film called Thunderball and the absence of acknowledgment may suggest that my work has not been used.

McClory used the same argument: the absence of credit damaged his reputation in the film industry for the same reason[252]. He will attack Fleming under some kind of breach of copyright accusation:

> - Kevin McClory[253] : I have carefully compared the said novel with the various scripts hereinbefore referred to. [...] I am satisfied that the plot and a very large number of the details and incident of the book are derived from one or other of the scripts, of which I and the Plaintiff Whittingham claim to be joint authors. On the other hand, very little, if any, of the novel appears to be derived from the Defendant Fleming's original script.

Furthermore McClory's camp claim the Bond film project was linked to the Xanadu Productions partnership. To them, Bryce is liable of breach of contact: "It was an express or implied term of the said agreement that each of them [Bryce and McClory] should use their best endeavors to procure that the projected film should be produced and exploited as soon as possible. [...] By failing to disclose to the Plaintiff McClory the terms of his agreement with the Defendant Fleming [...], the Defendant Bryce has further jeopardized the chances of obtaining finance for the production [before the end of six month] [...] and has thereby broken his contract to use his best endeavors to procure the projected film to be produced as soon as possible"[254].



1961 [illegible]

IN THE HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE

CHANCERY DIVISION

GROUP B

BETWEEN:

K. O. MCCLORY and
J. WHITTINGHAM

Plaintiffs.

- and -

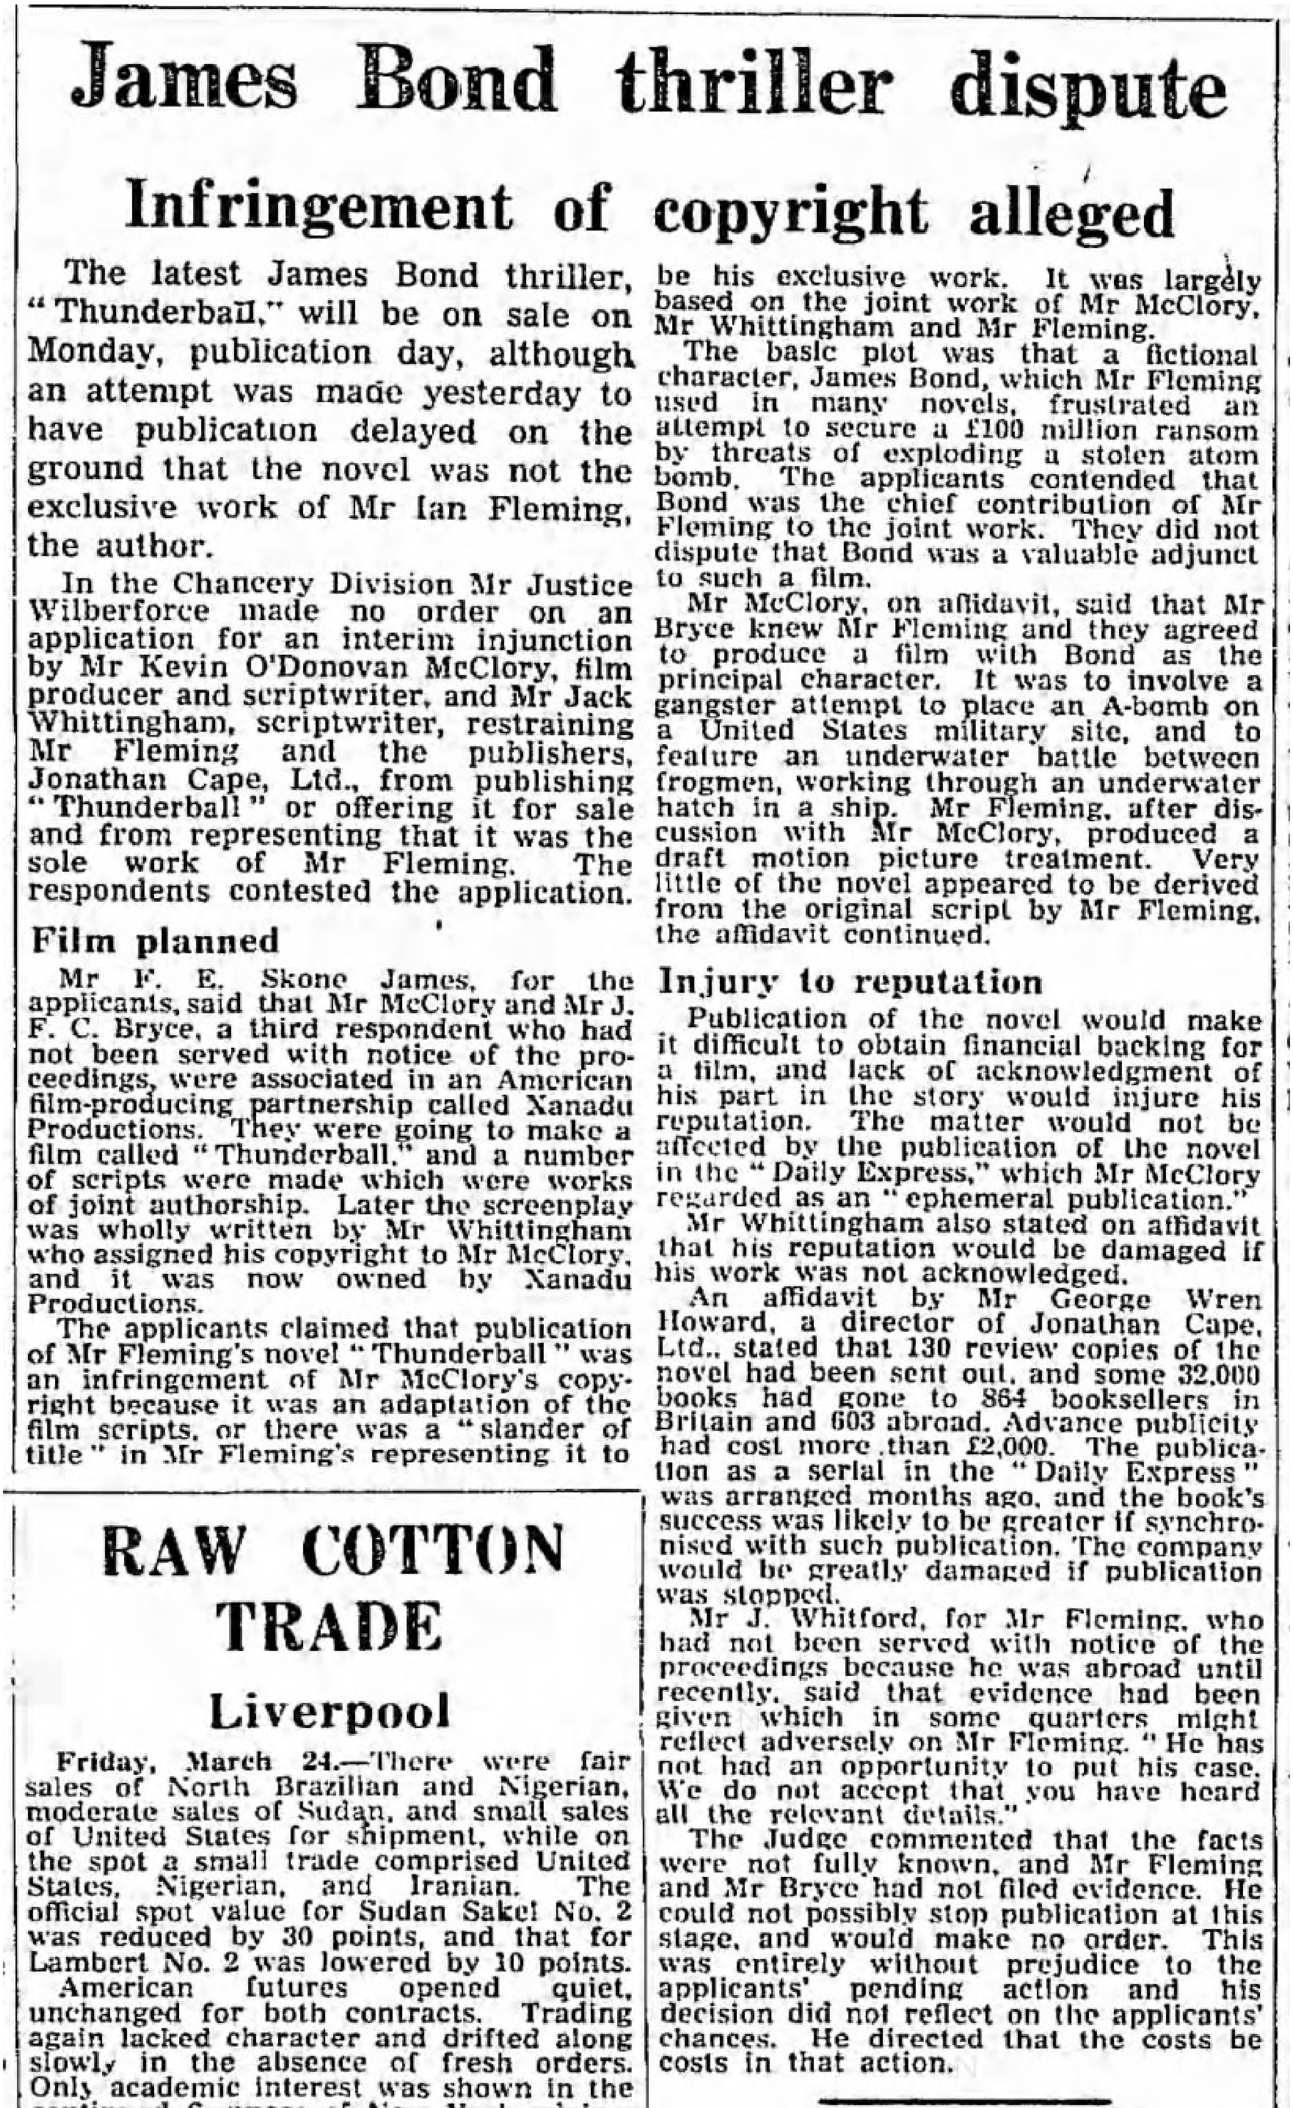
I. FLEMING, JONATHAN
CAPE LIMITED and J.F.
C. BRYCE

Defendants.

Also the use of the word "first" in the Fleming's sentence "I give you the right to make the first film full length James Bond feature film" in his is agreement with Bryce, is also regarded problematic by McClory camp following the announcement of a Casino Royale movie in the press[255].

After a 90 minutes hearing, given that the two camps hadn't really time to prepare themself for the case and that a whopping number of 32,000 copies had already been shipped to various bookstores and that £2,000 had been spent on advertising by Jonathan Cape, the judge Justice Wilberforce decided to allow the novel to be published despite the accusations from the McClory camp[256]. One door is however left open to McClory to pursue his legal action at a further date (and that happened in 1963). So Thunderball was published on March 27, 1961, and with the publicity added by the lawsuit, the novel sold well.

Thunderball was conceived as a film, but the "book of the film" was written without this film ever seeing the light of day. But this was destined to change...



James Bond thriller dispute

Infringement of copyright alleged

The latest James Bond thriller, "Thunderball," will be on sale on Monday, publication day, although an attempt was made yesterday to have publication delayed on the ground that the novel was not the exclusive work of Mr Ian Fleming, the author.

In the Chancery Division Mr Justice Wilberforce made no order on an application for an interim injunction by Mr Kevin O'Donovan McClory, film producer and scriptwriter, and Mr Jack Whittingham, scriptwriter, restraining Mr Fleming and the publishers, Jonathan Cape, Ltd., from publishing "Thunderball" or offering it for sale and from representing that it was the sole work of Mr Fleming. The respondents contested the application.

Film planned

Mr F. E. Skone James, for the applicants, said that Mr McClory and Mr J. F. C. Bryce, a third respondent who had not been served with notice of the proceedings, were associated in an American film-producing partnership called Xanadu Productions. They were going to make a film called "Thunderball," and a number of scripts were made which were works of joint authorship. Later the screenplay was wholly written by Mr Whittingham who assigned his copyright to Mr McClory, and it was now owned by Xanadu Productions.

The applicants claimed that publication of Mr Fleming's novel "Thunderball" was an infringement of Mr McClory's copyright because it was an adaptation of the film scripts, or there was a "slander of title" in Mr Fleming's representing it to be his exclusive work. It was largely based on the joint work of Mr McClory, Mr Whittingham and Mr Fleming.

The basic plot was that a fictional character, James Bond, which Mr Fleming used in many novels, frustrated an attempt to secure a £100 million ransom by threats of exploding a stolen atom bomb. The applicants contended that Bond was the chief contribution of Mr Fleming to the joint work. They did not dispute that Bond was a valuable adjunct to such a film.

Mr McClory, on affidavit, said that Mr Bryce knew Mr Fleming and they agreed to produce a film with Bond as the principal character. It was to involve a gangster attempt to place an A-bomb on a United States military site, and to feature an underwater battle between frogmen, working through an underwater hatch in a ship. Mr Fleming, after discussion with Mr McClory, produced a draft motion picture treatment. Very little of the novel appeared to be derived from the original script by Mr Fleming, the affidavit continued.

Injury to reputation

Publication of the novel would make it difficult to obtain financial backing for a film, and lack of acknowledgment of his part in the story would injure his reputation. The matter would not be affected by the publication of the novel in the "Daily Express," which Mr McClory regarded as an "ephemeral publication."

Mr Whittingham also stated on affidavit that his reputation would be damaged if his work was not acknowledged.

An affidavit by Mr George Wren Howard, a director of Jonathan Cape, Ltd., stated that 130 review copies of the novel had been sent out, and some 32,000 books had gone to 864 booksellers in Britain and 603 abroad. Advance publicity had cost more than £2,000. The publication as a serial in the "Daily Express" was arranged months ago, and the book's success was likely to be greater if synchronised with such publication. The company would be greatly damaged if publication was stopped.

Mr J. Whitford, for Mr Fleming, who had not been served with notice of the proceedings because he was abroad until recently, said that evidence had been given which in some quarters might reflect adversely on Mr Fleming. "He has not had an opportunity to put his case. We do not accept that you have heard all the relevant details."

The Judge commented that the facts were not fully known, and Mr Fleming and Mr Bryce had not filed evidence. He could not possibly stop publication at this stage, and would make no order. This was entirely without prejudice to the applicants' pending action and his decision did not reflect on the applicants' chances. He directed that the costs be costs in that action.

RAW COTTON TRADE

Liverpool

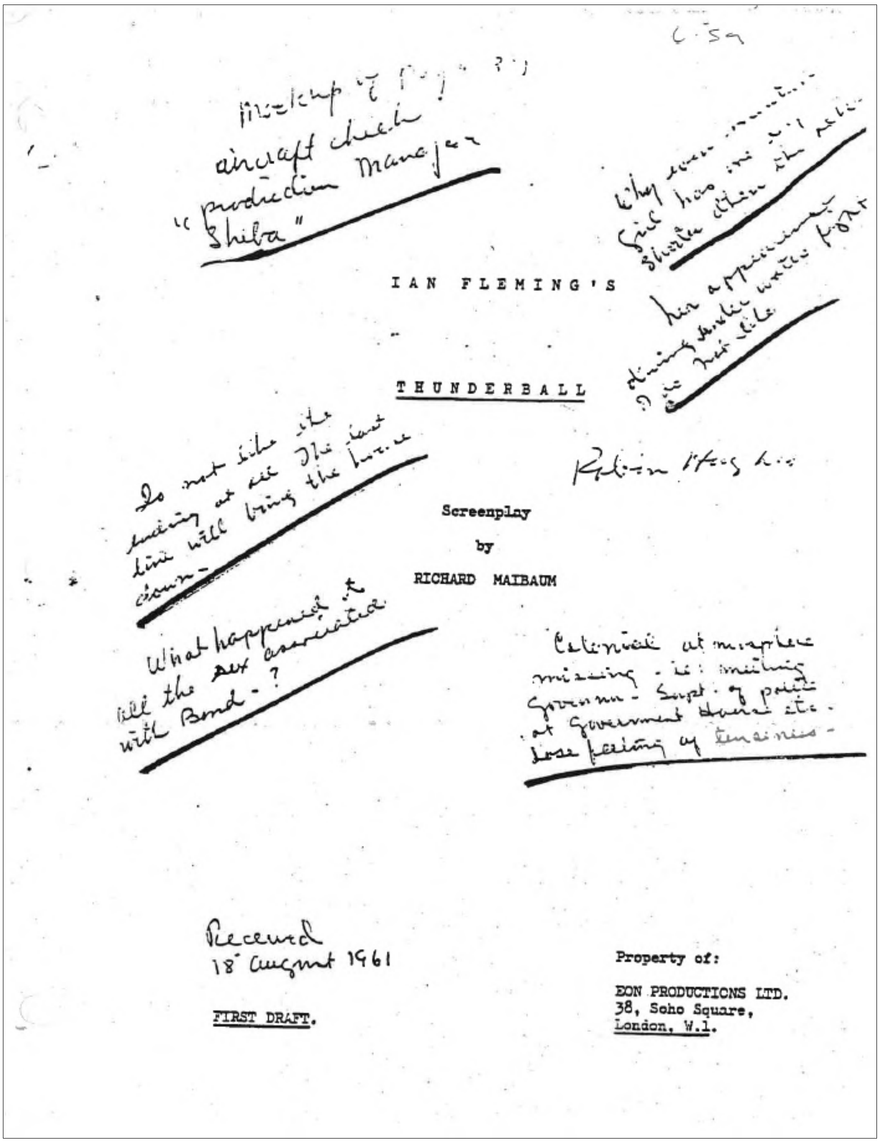
Friday, March 24.—There were fair sales of North Brazilian and Nigerian, moderate sales of Sudan, and small sales of United States for shipment, while on the spot a small trade comprised United States, Nigerian, and Iranian. The official spot value for Sudan Sakel No. 2 was reduced by 30 points, and that for Lambert No. 2 was lowered by 10 points.

American futures opened quiet, unchanged for both contracts. Trading again lacked character and drifted along slowly in the absence of fresh orders. Only academic interest was shown in the

The Guardian (March 25, 1961).

1961: EON's first script

Around that time, Ian Fleming sold an option on his Bondian novels (except Casino Royale) to producer Harry Saltzman so that he could make films of it[257]. Albert Broccoli soon joined Saltzman and on June 21, 1961, an agreement was sealed with United Artist[258]. As you remember, the producers were first thinking about filming Thunderball as the first Bond film, but for financial or/and legal reasons it will ultimately be Dr. No which will be chosen instead[259]. On July 21, they officially hired Wolf Mankowitz to write the script for Dr. No and Richard Maibaum to write the one of Thunderball (with the aiming of making it the second James Bond film)[260].



C. 5a

aircraft check

"production Manager"
"Shiba"

IAN FLEMING'S

THUNDERBALL

Do not like the ending at all. The last line will bring the house down -

What happened to all the sex associated with Bond - ?

Screenplay
by
RICHARD MAIBAUM

Received
18 August 1961

FIRST DRAFT.

Property of:

EON PRODUCTIONS LTD.
38, Soho Square,
London, W.1.

Maibaum then read the novel and sent his comments to the producers[261]. On August 18, 1961, he completed a first script for Thunderball for EON Productions.

The story weighs 128 pages and is (very faithfully) adapted from Fleming's novel. It begins with a pre-title sequence set in France.

No castle or jetpack here; we are on boulevard Haussmann in Paris and we see Ernest Stavro Blofeld which joins the SPECTRE headquarters, a building whose facade indicates Fraternité Internationale de la Résistance Contre l'Oppression.

The script (just like the novel) describes Blofeld to us in particular as a 53-year-old man, over six feet tall and weighing 280 pounds that were once just muscle. His face is visible. "Everything about Blofeld reflects decision and independence". In fact, most of the dialogue and descriptions in this 1961 script are directly paraphrased from the novel (with some shortening)!

The sequence that takes place is quite similar to the one of the 1965 film: we arrive at the start of the SPECTRE meeting, there are 20 members around the table. The detail of Blofeld's vinaigrette and cachou from the novel are here.

Blofeld causes a little scare for one of his subjects (by killing No. 12 after putting No. 7 into the spotlight). The reason? A young woman (named "Della" Blomberg) was kidnapped by SPECTRE but a member of the organization "conducted himself in a thoroughly unacceptable manner". The girl, Blofeld tells us, "is presently under intensive medical and psychiatric treatment". After the electrocution of No. 12:

> The body crumples horribly. As the chin hits the edge of the table with a sharp crack, superimpose in deep background and then zoom up, at first very small, then hugely filling the screen, the letters of the main title: THUNDERBALL

But after a credit sequence, we're still at the SPECTRE meeting, "the others turn back to Blofeld, ignoring the body of No.12, a grotesque heap at the end of the table". Blofeld asks No. 7 to sit down and then tells us that he asked the treasurer to return $300,000 (half the ransom) to the girl's family. Then we move on to the financial reports which will be similar to those in the novel but with some changes: for example we are told that SPECTRE is blackmailing a former SS officer who lives in Havana under a false name. The organization only got 240,000 pesos from him, "all the man had", whereas in the novel the SPECTRE got $100,000 from him. Another change from the novel: it was at Acapulco (and not Naples) that SPECTRE intercepted 28 kg of heroin.

We are also told that Blofeld receives 10% of the total revenue and that the other members receive 4% each. Finally the Plan Omega is mentioned (without disclosing to the audience its concerning atomic bombs). During this scene Blofeld is mentioned as "number 1" (contrary to the novel where he is designated as number 2) and it's said that the ransom will be deposited by a member of the SPECTRE in a depot in "Tetuan" (instead of the Catania of the novel: someone actually circled "Tetuan" on the script and wrote a "?" next to it).

> - Blofeld: Other preparations for Plan Omega are proceeding. Sub-operator G, who we instructed to make his headquarters at a certain health clinic in the South of England, [...] reports he has contacted the airman Petacchi at the nearby Boscombe airfield. Their negotiations are progressing favorably.

We cut to the said health clinic, Shrublands, and Patricia Fearing (with similar/paraphrased description of the novel). On page 11, Patricia is almost run over by a Bentley driven by Count Lippi (why not calling him Lippe will remain a mystery), but Bond grabs her by the waist to save her from the car:

> She gasps as the Bentley skids to a stop, and looks up in flurried astonishment into the face of James Bond, whose right hand is momentarily cupped over one beautiful breast. He is in his middle thirties, with dark, rather cruel good looks except for very clear blue-grey eyes. A scar runs down his right cheek. He wears excellent sport clothes.

This is the first scene that features Bond in this script, the physical description of him comes from the novel. Lippi approaches them and there are dialogues similar to the novel except that Maibaum takes the liberty of adding the typical Bond introduction during this sequence:

> NOVEL:
> "You really ought to be more careful, Count Lippe. You know there are always patients and staff walking down this drive. If it hadn't been for this gentleman", she smiled at Bond, "you'd have run me over. After all, there is a big sign asking drivers to take care".

> SCRIPT:
> - Patricia: You really ought to be more careful, Count Lippi. You know there are always patients and staff walking about. If it hadn't been for Mr... Mr...
> - Bond: Bond. James Bond.
> - Patricia (smiling): Mr. Bond, you'd have run me over. After all there's a big sign asking drivers to take care.

Bond makes several humorous phrases absent from the novel:

> - Lippi: Thank you for rescuing her. You have quick reactions.
> - Bond: Not bad... After six days on Potassium Broth, Nut Mince, and Unmalted Slippery Elm.
> - Lippi: I share your repugnance for the cuisine.. [...]
> [...]
> - Patricia: I get about the country quite a lot. And there are wonderful walks.
> - Bond: In my present condition I might try one in a wheel-chair. Would you care to push?

Bond's presence in Shrublands is explained through dialogue (but it is not specified in the script that Bond consumed around 60 cigarettes and half a bottle of alcohol per day before being sent to Shrublands):

> - Patricia: How long are you staying?
> - Bond: That's up to my boss. He condemned, sent me here. Medical Report said something about fibrositis nodules. Recommended a more abstemious regime. I'm a civil servant.

When Patricia leaves:

> He looks after her unhappily, becomes increasingly aware of the hollow feeling in his stomach [...] automatically reaches for a cigarette, starts to light it, stops, his attention attracted to something off-scene. The camera pans to [a] sign. It reads: "No cigarettes please". He scowls, puts the pack away.

James Bond is then treated by a masseur who is intrigued by all the scars covering his back and chest (007 explains them with: "Shotgun blast. Rabbit poaching"). Bond sees Lippi's tattoo and calls Moneypenny to inquire and complain (note that in the novel Bond had a person in charge of the Service files on the phone, not Moneypenny). The scene is longer than in the film (and include similar dialogue of the scene where Bond talk with M and Moneypenny in chapter 1 of the novel):

> - Moneypenny: Terribly sorry, James. [...] You know how strongly M feels about his Double-O Section officers being 100% fit...
> - Bond: Penny, it's driving me absolutely batty. Tell him I'll live on yogurt, uncooked vegetables and nuts. I'll give up tobacco, alcohol, late hours, the lot, including l'amour!
> - Moneypenny: Who did you say was calling?

- Bond: I'll promise anything. Penny, darling, wangle M into letting me out and I'll be your friend forever.
- Moneypenny: But we are friends, James... More's the pity. Well, a girl can dream, can't she? Oh, I forgot. That's on the list, too... Thank you, James, you're very sweet, but we can't have you making exceptions; or can we?
- Bond: Moneypenny, you're killing me. Get me back to civilization or the next time I see you I'll turn you over my knee!
- Moneypenny: On nuts and yogurt? I can hardly wait! [...]
[Bond asks Moneypenny to find out about the tattoo].

In his Bentley, Lippi joins Colonel Guiseppe (instead of Giuseppe) Petacchi who is at some place called The Honey Bee Tea Shop along with a girl named Polly Grace (names evoked by a taxi driver in the novel). Bond isn't far behind in a taxi. Lippi chats a little with Polly, then with Petacchi:

[...]
- Lippi: You are a perfect hostess, Polly.
- Polly (serving an espresso): I don't have too many complaints. The Colonel's been fascinating me about the war. Shot his pilot and navigator and brought a new secret Eye-tie plane over to our side. Gave him a medal and £10,000, we did. Think of that!
- Lippi: Marvelous.
- Polly: Real hero, he was...
- Petacchi (with an Italian accent): But you are so wrong, Polly mia. We were losing the war. To continue fighting would have been so... Utterly boring.
[...]

> [Once Polly left].
> - Petacchi: I like expensive things. At the moment I have my eye on a 3500 G.T. Maserati.
> - Lippi: You can buy a great many Maseratis for £1,000,000. [...]

When Petacchi leaves The Honey Bee Tea Shop, he comes across Bond who is looking for a taxi. Both signal for the same taxi but 007 leaves it with Petacchi; Lippi sees this through a window. "The air base", Petacchi says to the taxi driver in front of Bond.

Back at Shrublands, Bond is examined by Patricia. He kisses her without her consent like in the book:

> - Bond: I had to do it. No osteopath should have a mouth like that.
> - Patricia (sharply): The last time that happened the man was asked to leave by the next train.
> - Bond (eyes brightening): They actually kicked him out?

Bond tries to kiss her again and she places him on a traction table, "if you kill me, I'll sue you", Bond says. There is the scene where Lippi tries to kill Bond by changing the rhythm of the machine. Bond eventually loses consciousness and when he opens his eyes, he hears Patricia and Doctor Wain talking to each other about the incident. He loses consciousness again and we see him opening eyes while Patricia is massaging him. A little later, Bond takes revenge on Lippi who is in a sweat box:

> - Lippi: Let me out of this thing. I'm sweating like a pig.
> - Bond (imitating a cockney accent): You said you wanted it hot, Guv'ner.
> - Lippi: Don't argue with me, Beresford. Let me out of here.
> [...]
> - Bond: 120 degrees. Why, that's hardly a warm breeze. More like a zephyr, I'd say. We can do better than that, can't we? Let me see. 200 degrees? No, might do you to a crisp, and we can't have that. How about 180 (Resuming to his normal voice) Blimey, I think 180 degrees would be exactly right, Sir. And about a half hour of that should even things up nicely. Good roasting, Count.
> - Lippi: Give you a thousand pounds and we're quits. Ten thousand... All right then, fifty!
> Bond exits.

In the next scene we are with Blofeld at SPECTRE HQ in Paris: he orders the elimination of Lippi (who is hospitalized for second degree burns) because he is judged unreliable.

007 is in a car in which he massages Patricia's back; meanwhile a bomber takes off from the Boscombe base:

> - Bond: New Vindicator. Beautiful plane, isn't it?
> - Patricia: At the moment I couldn't care less...

They continue to kiss while the camera follows the Vindicator with Petacchi in it. Of course, SPECTRE succeeds in hijacking the atomic bombs (and killing the plane's crew), thanks to Petacchi and the gas he spread in the cockpit. At one point the script calls for Petacchi to press a button that releases fuel into midair (a handwritten note next to the script asks why he does such an action). After landing, Petacchi is killed on the wing by Vargas and his stiletto.

Emilio Largo is, like the novel, is described having hands "abnormally large and powerful". The script specifies that the first name of the scientist Kotze is "Ladislav". In the Disco Volante:

> - Kotze: Some new safety device, a secret control...
> - Largo: What could they have that the great Ladislav Kotze can't handle?
> - Kotze: You do me too much credit. My laboratory in Warsaw... Life was much simpler there...
> - Largo: Your share will amount to, how many Nobel Prizes? A hundred? Think about that.

Following the theft of the bombs, we find Bond walking past Moneypenny and the Chief of Staff to see M. In a dialogue that echoes the novel, the Chief of Staff and Moneypenny are in the process of making a sort of list of agencies and people they have to contact, in which we find a certain "Mathis... Deuxième Bureau". Bond enters M's office:

> - M: Sit down, 007. How's your health?
> - Bond: Never better.
> - M: Smoke if you like.
> - Bond: Thanks, Sir. I'm trying to give it up.

M reveals to his agent that he is going to "commit a breach of faith with the Prime Minister" by making him listen to a recording which he has sworn not to let anyone listen to. In this recording Blofeld makes his demands and Bond decides to finally light a cigarette. M explains that all allied agencies are now on the "Operation Thunderball" which aims to recover the two bombs. 007 thinks the bombs need to be dropped from a plane to be activated but M tells him no:

> - Bond: So it's happened. The anonymous little man with a heavy suitcase in the back of a big car. He just runs it into town and leaves it parked with the time fuse switched on. A couple hours start to get out of range, and that would be that. Unless we pay up. Where do I come in, Sir?

M tells him that the bomber may have flown to East Europe and asks his agent to investigate by contacting all the Service's stations in the East, starting with Budapest. The head of MI6 then made an interesting remark: "One thing more. The Double O section's discretion to liquidate has been under considerable criticism. Exercise it with extreme caution. The usual denials of responsibility from The Service will be more emphatic than in the past". Interesting, but this notion will not really be developed in the script, nor really in the other James Bond films. It looks like Mission Impossible in a way: the Secretary will disavow any knowledge of your actions. We remember that Maibaum would later attempt the same thing during the writing of Dr. No.

Bond leaves the secret service HQ with a bag (containing a "Triple X" cipher machine so he can inform M of the progress of his investigation) and gets into his Bentley. A Volkswagen driven by Lippi drives off and follows Bond, as does a 500cc Triumph motorcycle driven by SPECTRE's Number 5. Lippi catches up with Bond's Bentley and pulls out a gun to kill him; Bond notices this and speeds off. Lippi misses his shot, the biker catches up with the Volkswagen and throws a grenade inside. Lippi's car explodes; Bond stops.

Bond goes back to M and asks him to be posted to Nassau rather than Budapest: he saw someone looking like Petacchi take a taxi when he was following Lippi near Shrublands. Bond thinks Lippi is SPECTRE given the amount of money he offered him to let him out of his sweat box. 007 did some research and discovered that Petacchi had once hijacked a plane during the War and that he has a sister who is in Nassau. M is not too keen (003 is already assigned to Nassau) but receives a convenient phone call right at that moment informing him that new information shows the bomber flew towards that direction. (Oddly, the handwritten notes on the script say there are too many coincidences at this point and suggest sending Bond to Nassau simply because he recently went on a mission to Jamaica, Dr. No!).

> - Richard Maibaum[262] : [In the novel] the selection by M of the Bahamas for the hero's assignment bothers me. Why does Intelligence's top agent, Bond, get sent somewhere on a gamble, or guesswork? This is unnecessary. If Intelligence had traced the history of Petachi, they would have discovered his only living relative was a sister, an unsuccessful actress. They would discover that she was in the Bahamas with a man named Largo, that the latter owned this unusual yacht, the Disco Volante, how it was equipped, et cetera. This would be a definite reason to assign its top agent to the Bahamas.

M accepts and Bond says, "Thank you, Sir. Surf boarding's one of my favorite sports" (a handwritten note suggests replacing surfing by water skiing).

On page 58 we finally meet Dominetta Vitali, Petacchi's sister. She is at the wheel of a two-seater (blue) MG which she drives in a careless manner and which she stops in front of a tobacco shop. Bond and Dominetta meet inside and there are many lines of dialogue taken from the novel. She takes him to a restaurant in the M.G.:

> - Bond: I like the way you drive.
> - Dominetta: Do you?
> - Bond: Like a man. Eyes on the road. Women always have to look at your face when they talk. [He sees a ribbon that says Disco Volante on her hat].

During the ride and in the restaurant, the dialogues are taken from the literary work. Maibaum know how to condenses certain scenes and convert long Fleming descriptions into dialogue and of great example of this can be found here:

> NOVEL:
> The general impression, Bond decided, was of a wilful, high-tempered, sensual girl - a beautiful Arab mare who would only allow herself to be ridden by a horseman with steel thighs and velvet hands, and then only with curb and saw bit - and then only when he had broken her to bridle and saddle.
>
> SCRIPT:
> - Bond: You know what you remind me of?
> - Dominetta: Your first sweetheart.
> - Bond: A beautiful Arab mare, the kind that takes steel thighs end velvet hands.

- Dominetta: You're improving.

She tells him in particular that she will perhaps be present at the casino in the evening and that she prefers to be called "Domino". (But since Maibaum use "Dominetta" in the stage direction each time she have a line of dialogue, I will do the same).

They each go their separate ways, Bond will take a taxi, and after Domino has leaves is an amusing stage direction on a word taken from the novel:

- Bond (if the censor will permit): Bitch.

Bond returns to his hotel where someone is waiting for him:

- Voice from inside room (very American): Don't shoot 007. This is 000.

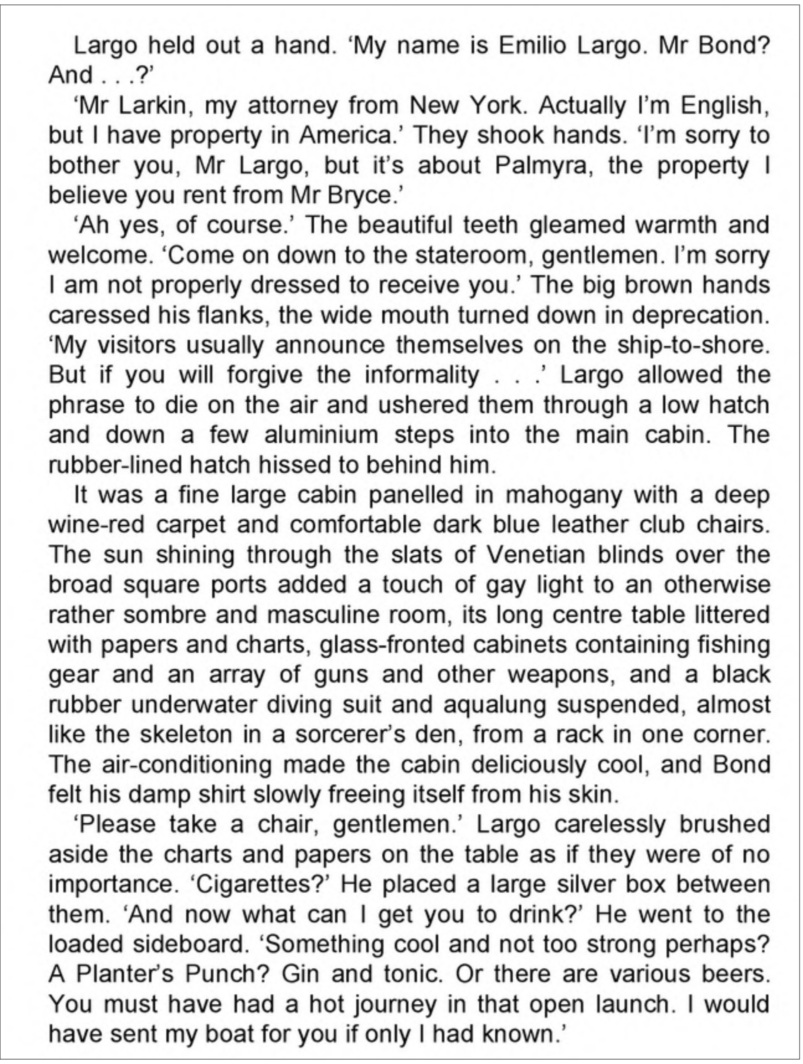
This is obviously Felix Leiter who is "an American version of Bond, except that a steel hook replaces his right hand", according to Maibaum. The two men are depicted as being old friends. Leiter brought with him a camera hidden in his coat and Geiger counters, including one disguised as a watch. They decide to investigate together and Bond insists on being careful:

- Bond: We're walking on eggs. Plutonium eggs. I'm quoted verbatim from those tapes. "Any counter-measures initiated will result in the detonation of Atomic Weapon No. l or No. 2 as the case may be".



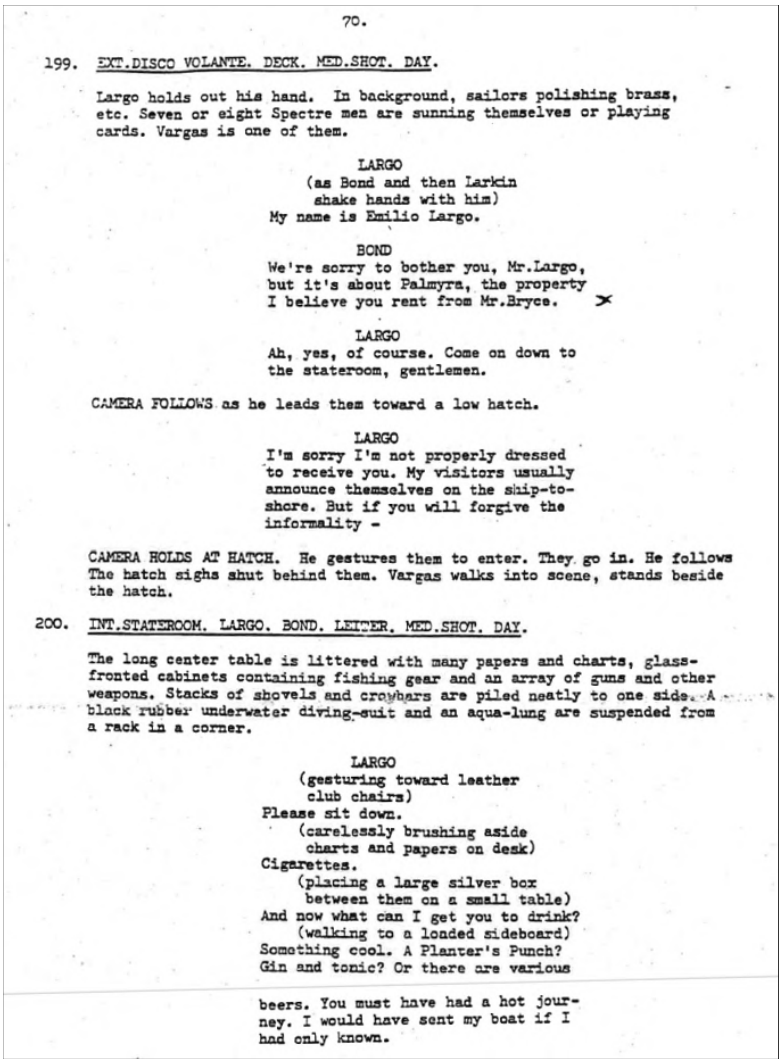
Largo held out a hand. 'My name is Emilio Largo. Mr Bond? And . . .?'

'Mr Larkin, my attorney from New York. Actually I'm English, but I have property in America.' They shook hands. 'I'm sorry to bother you, Mr Largo, but it's about Palmyra, the property I believe you rent from Mr Bryce.'

'Ah yes, of course.' The beautiful teeth gleamed warmth and welcome. 'Come on down to the stateroom, gentlemen. I'm sorry I am not properly dressed to receive you.' The big brown hands caressed his flanks, the wide mouth turned down in deprecation. 'My visitors usually announce themselves on the ship-to-shore. But if you will forgive the informality . . .' Largo allowed the phrase to die on the air and ushered them through a low hatch and down a few aluminium steps into the main cabin. The rubber-lined hatch hissed to behind him.

It was a fine large cabin panelled in mahogany with a deep wine-red carpet and comfortable dark blue leather club chairs. The sun shining through the slats of Venetian blinds over the broad square ports added a touch of gay light to an otherwise rather sombre and masculine room, its long centre table littered with papers and charts, glass-fronted cabinets containing fishing gear and an array of guns and other weapons, and a black rubber underwater diving suit and aqualung suspended, almost like the skeleton in a sorcerer's den, from a rack in one corner. The air-conditioning made the cabin deliciously cool, and Bond felt his damp shirt slowly freeing itself from his skin.

'Please take a chair, gentlemen.' Largo carelessly brushed aside the charts and papers on the table as if they were of no importance. 'Cigarettes?' He placed a large silver box between them. 'And now what can I get you to drink?' He went to the loaded sideboard. 'Something cool and not too strong perhaps? A Planter's Punch? Gin and tonic. Or there are various beers. You must have had a hot journey in that open launch. I would have sent my boat for you if only I had known.'



70.

199. EXT.DISCO VOLANTE. DECK. MED.SHOT. DAY.

Largo holds out his hand. In background, sailors polishing brass, etc. Seven or eight Spectre men are sunning themselves or playing cards. Vargas is one of them.

LARGO
(as Bond and then Larkin shake hands with him)
My name is Emilio Largo.

BOND
We're sorry to bother you, Mr.Largo, but it's about Palmyra, the property
I believe you rent from Mr.Bryce.

LARGO
Ah, yes, of course. Come on down to the stateroom, gentlemen.

CAMERA FOLLOWS as he leads them toward a low hatch.

LARGO
I'm sorry I'm not properly dressed to receive you. My visitors usually announce themselves on the ship-to-shore. But if you will forgive the informality -

CAMERA HOLDS AT HATCH. He gestures them to enter. They go in. He follows The hatch sighs shut behind them. Vargas walks into scene, stands beside the hatch.

200. INT.STATEROOM. LARGO. BOND. LEITER. MED.SHOT. DAY.

The long center table is littered with many papers and charts, glass-fronted cabinets containing fishing gear and an array of guns and other weapons. Stacks of shovels and crowbars are piled neatly to one side. A black rubber underwater diving-suit and an aqua-lung are suspended from a rack in a corner.

LARGO
(gesturing toward leather club chairs)
Please sit down.
(carelessly brushing aside charts and papers on desk)
Cigarettes.
(placing a large silver box between them on a small table)
And now what can I get you to drink?
(walking to a loaded sideboard)
Something cool. A Planter's Punch?
Gin and tonic? Or there are various beers. You must have had a hot journey. I would have sent my boat if I had only known.

A comparison which is representative of the way this script was written: on the left an extract from Fleming's novel (chapter 13), on the right its equivalent in Maibaum's 1961 script (pages 70 and a bit of 71).

Bond and Leiter goes out to Largo's yacht. Bond introduces himself to Largo as someone who is interested in Palmyra, "the property I believe you rent from Mr. Bryce". Vargas is visible in the background as Bond, Largo and Leiter chat with dialogue taken from the novel (we can note that Maibaum expend the role of Vargas in this script; in the novel his presence was limited to only one scene).

After their visit to Largo, Bond and Leiter go to police headquarters in Nassau. Bond notably says that Largo's cover as a treasure hunter is "perfect" and Leiter says they found no conclusive signs of radioactivity on the Disco Volante. They then go to the casino where Bond is playing chemin de fer. 007 wins the game:

> - Dominetta: You have met your master, Emilio. Shall I rescue you by asking Mr. Bond to dance with me?

Largo accepts and they dance (the screenwriter included Dominetta's leg little shorter than the other). Maibaum correct one big weakness of the novel by making a change: during this dance scene, Domino tells Bond that she met Largo through her brother, Guiseppe Petacchi.

> - Bond: Where did you meet him [Largo]?
> - Dominetta: In Capri, about a year ago. I was there with my brother, Guiseppe. He was on leave, he's a flyer. Largo took a liking to him, but then so does everybody. He introduced me to Emilio.
> - Bond: And Emilio asked you to come on this treasure hunt with him.
> - Dominetta: How do you know?

As in the novel, Dominetta then explains to Bond that her true love is the sailor drawn on her packet of cigarettes Player's, then Bond leaves the casino with Leiter to inspect the hull of the Disco Volante. 007 dives and ends up coming across a guard who attacks him: the two men fight each other underwater and the guard is eventually eaten by a barracuda. Grenades are thrown at Bond but he manages to escape.

A little later Bond and Leiter are in a Grumman amphibious plane with which they search for the wreckage of the bomber. While flying over Palmyra, Bond sees traces on the ground near a boathouse: Leiter replies that they are wasting their time because if they were traces made by moving the bombs, the bad guys would have erased them "pronto".

In the novel Leiter visit it (without us), but in the script Maibaum change that by writing a scene in which Bond and Leiter visit together Palmyra in the presence of Largo:

> - Bond: Magnificent place, Mr. Largo. Exactly what I want. When did you say you were vacating?
> - Largo: That will depend on the outcome of our venture, Mr. Bond. A few days, perhaps a week...
> [Dominetta, in a bikini, joins them].
> - Largo: My niece was not expecting visitors. Mr. Bond, Dominetta.
> - Dominetta (looking up at him): I owe him a pack of cigarettes.

> - Bond (to Largo): We smoke the same brand. By the way, how did you do last night?
> - Largo: Very well. When you left, my spectre [of Defeat], as you called him, went with you.
> [...]
> - Dominetta: I'll show Mr. Bond around.
> - Largo: That won't be necessary, Dominetta. Vargas.
> He gestures for Vargas to join them.
> - Largo: Take as long as you want, gentlemen. You'll find everything in tip-top condition. The boathouse, unfortunately, is locked. Prowlers. [...] Only last night there was a peculiar disturbance in the harbor. At the Disco.
> - Bond (smiling questioningly): Underwater prowlers, Mr. Largo?
> - Largo: We're not sure. But we're well protected here. Mr. Bryce had a most efficient electric burglar alarm system installed. And now I must leave you in Mr. Vargas' capable hands.
> [...]

Another example of Maibaum ability to convert description in dialogue can be find few scenes later. In the novel, Bond thinks it's strange the crew of the yacht never caused incident since their arrival months ago, no binge drinking behaviors, and assumes that the men are disciplined professionals. Maibaum incorporates this passage smoothly into the character Vargas:

> - Largo: You don't smoke, Vargas. You don't drink, You don't like women. What do you do?

Vargas shows Bond and Leiter around, they pass in particular near the boathouse where the traces in the sand have been erased. The camera cuts to the boathouse where the alarm system can be seen. We continue with a shot of the same thing, but this time at night.

Bond asks Leiter if everything has been arranged with the governor and Leiter tells him yes: then all the lights and power on the island are suddenly cut off.

Leiter then tries several instruments on the lock of the boathouse while a little further on the property, Largo and Vargas wonder what is going on.

Bond and Leiter enter the boathouse and come across some crates containing Spanish doubloons. Bond and Leiter are leaving the hangar when they come across Vargas and other men. The SPECTRE's men open fire and Bond and Leiter flee, running towards their car. In the car, safely:

> - Bond: Mr. Largo has more trouble with prowlers.
> - Leiter: Where's that coin?
> - Bond: In my pocket.
> - Leiter (getting it): Spanish doubloon. Piece of eight. Looks genuine.
> - Bond: It probably is. Or counterfeited so well you can't tell it from the real thing.
> - Leiter: Those chests were full of them. Largo's guaranteed treasure hunt. He's got what he's looking for, before he looks. Why?
> - Bond: Part of his alibi, if he ever needs one.

Bond and Leiter make another aerial reconnaissance to find the bomber and it proves successful. 007 kills a few sharks and dives to explore the wreck where he finds Petacchi's identification tag. After that, they return to the Nassau police headquarters (there is a "Sergeant Garcia"); they are told that they have orders to do hourly reports:

- Bond: Not a chance. We can't waste the time sending reports.
- Harling: Gentlemen, your orders...
- Leiter: We've disobeyed orders before, sir.
- Bond (wryly): But never a Prime Minister and a President at the same time.

As in the novel, Bond goes see Domino on a beach, except there is a flourish that will appear in the 1965 film: Vargas. Bond removes the sea urchin spines from Dominetta's foot then carries her to a hut. For the next camera shot: "Bond's clothes and the camera Geiger counter are on a chair". Bond kisses Dominetta but she stops him by revealing:

- Dominetta: Please no... Emilio asked me to call you. He wanted me to find out if you're after the treasure, too. Are you? He sent Vargas with me, in case I needed him, he said.
- Bond: Where is he?

Bond explains to Domino that her brother is dead, that Largo is responsible and that he needs her help (the dialogue is, as usual, taken from the novel). Meanwhile Vargas is crouched behind Domino's MG outside the hut.

- Dominetta: On one condition. When you get Largo, you will see he is killed!
- Bond: I'll take care of that. Personally. Now call that ape out there. Go on. Yell for help.
- Dominetta: Vargas!... Vargas!

Through a window of the hut, Vargas sees Bond mistreating Domino and approaches. "Bond is standing beside the chair with the clothes, one arm around Dominetta. As Vargas, pulling out his stiletto, appears in the doorway, Bond takes the Walther from beneath the clothes and cold-bloodedly efficiently, shoots him. Vargas staggers, drops the stiletto, clutches his belly, slumps to the ground. Bond drags him further into the hut, kneels down to satisfy himself he is dead".

- Bond: I'll bury him in the sand. If Largo asks where he is, say he told you to go back without him. (Giving her the camera-Geiger) Hurry.

Bond and Leiter board the American nuclear submarine Manta, whose commander is a certain Pederson (and not Pedersen). Aboard the Disco Volante, Largo discovers that Dominetta has a Geiger counter; this scene is different from the novel (in which she is discovered by n° 17):

- Largo (angrily): What are you doing here?
- Dominetta: Did you think I was going to miss the big night? I came out on a hired launch.
- Largo: I gave strict orders no one was allowed to board without my permission.

- Dominetta: I told them I had your permission, darling, and I'm very hurt you wanted to leave me behind.
- Largo: Did Vargas come with you?
- Dominetta: No. Isn't he here?
- Largo: I'll call a boat to take you back. Go to your cabin till it gets here.
- Dominetta: It's stuffy down there. Besides I want to take farewell pictures. You know how sentimental I am...
- Largo: I said go to your cabin!
- Dominetta: Don't be silly, darling.

She tries to past him but as he pushes her against the wall, the camera falls from Domino's hands. Largo realizes that it is actually a Geiger counter and brutally hits Domino.

Bond and Leiter learn that Domino hasn't signaled the presence of the bombs onboard and that the Disco Volante has weighed anchor. The Manta goes towards the first presumed target of the SPECTRE, a rocket base in Grand Bahama, to intercept Largo (bombers are also looking for the yacht).

Meanwhile Largo interrogates Domino using a cigar and ice cubes (but it is specified that the torture is done off camera). Finally, with the Disco Volante not in sight in Grand Bahama, the protagonists speculate that SPECTRE's target could be the rocket base at Cape Canaveral. The Manta goes there and Largo's yacht is spotted there.

Bond, Leiter and allied divers exit the submarine (with knifes strapped on broom handles) and meet the SPECTRE's divers, including Largo. There is a four-page underwater battle at dawn, at the end of which Dominetta (in a bikini) suddenly appears and saves Bond's life by killing Largo with a harpoon gun underwater. The Disco Volante is sunk by the submarine during this time.

Bond and Dominetta surface, the bomb is recovered.

The ending is different from the novel: Captain Perderson tells Leiter:

- Perderson: No time to take you aboard!
- Leiter: Twenty miles should do it!
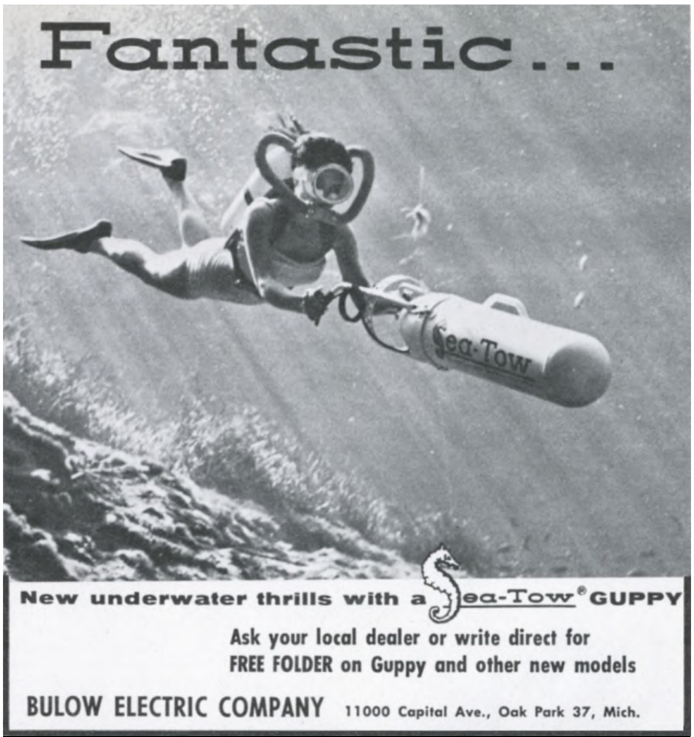
- Perderson: Half an hour to get it out there... Half an hour to get the ship away. Maybe.

Pederson leaves with his submarine, towing the bomb behind. (13 pages earlier, Kotze told Largo that once the bombs's timers are activated, it "will be almost impossible to prevent detonation"). Bond and Dominetta are also still in the water, as are other men swimming towards the shore. Bond says:



New underwater thrills with a Sea-Tow® GUPPY

Ask your local dealer or write direct for FREE FOLDER on Guppy and other new models

BULOW ELECTRIC COMPANY 11000 Capital Ave., Oak Park 37, Mich.

"Each [SPECTRE] man is pulled along by a Bulow electric Sea-Town, on which a CO_2 gun has been mounted, pointing directly ahead. The Sea-Tow looks like a blunt, three foot torpedo, with the operating mechanism and hand grips in the rear".

- Bond: You can make it to Shore. Go ahead...

- Dominetta: I want to stay with you... Always.

Bond and Domino get into an inflatable boat. Cut to the Manta detaching the sled containing the bomb. The Manta moves away and the bomb explodes underwater "as though a thousand volcanoes had erupted" and forms a mushroom cloud. Bond turns to Domino:

- Bond: It's going to be a beautiful day...

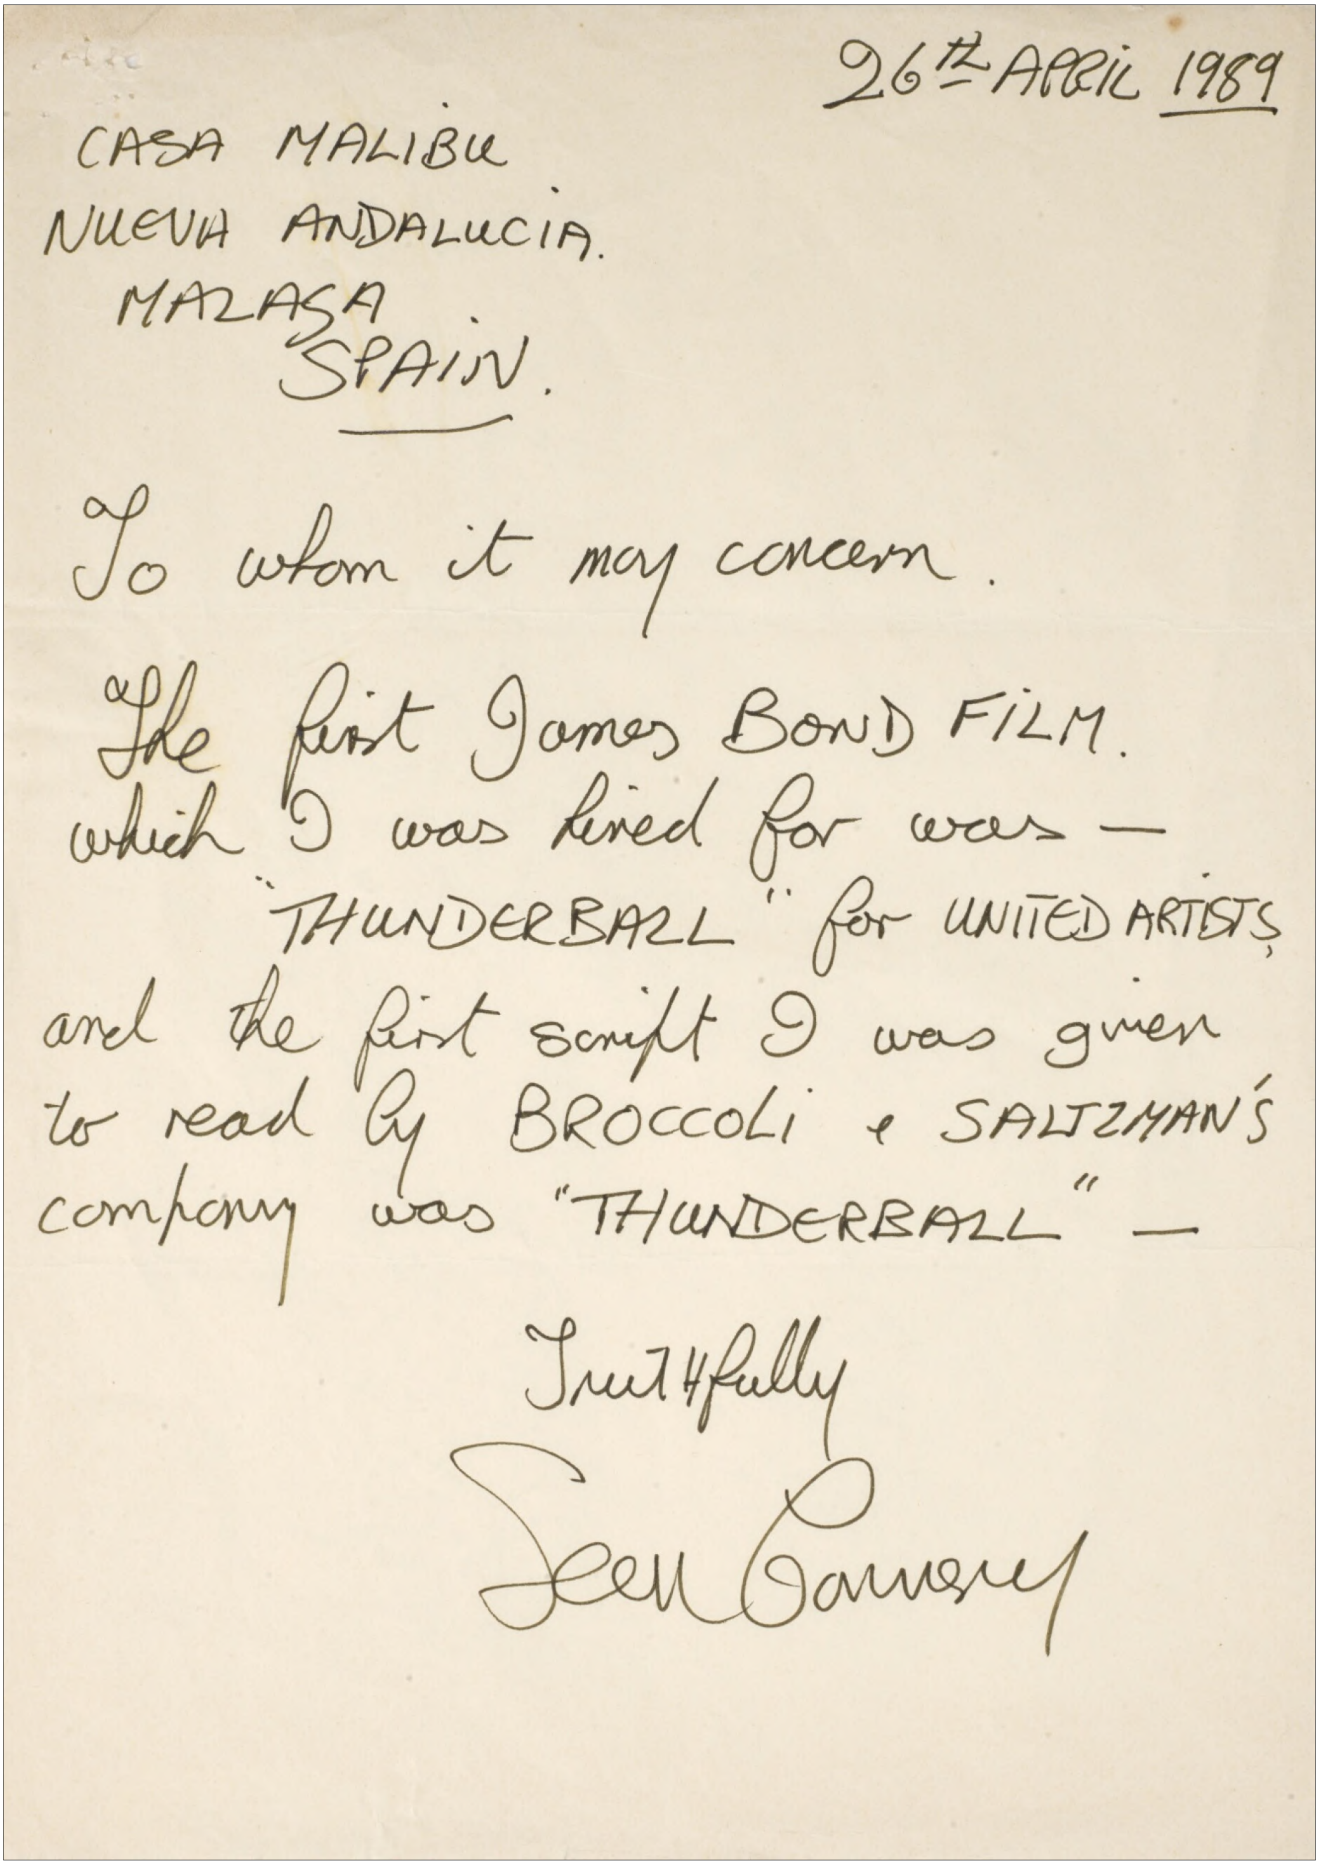
The END.

- Richard Maibaum[263] : The plot is so unique and excitingly suspenseful that it seems shameful novelist injected so much irrelevant material. Yet, by elimination and build-up, a tremendously exciting picture can be made.

Richard Maibaum therefore submitted this script to EON on August 18, 1961. For the record, this will be the first Bond script which will be presented to Sean Connery. EON, who is aware that McClory is in a legal procedure against Fleming, receives assurances of an imminent outcome[264]. But after a meeting with McClory, the producers understand that the dispute over the rights of Thunderball is not close to being resolved and that McClory is asking too much money to give up his rights to EON[265].

EON then prefers to concentrate all its efforts on the film Dr. No[266]; Richard Maibaum then joined Wolf Mankowitz in writing Bond's Jamaican adventure.

In the April 10, 1962 financing agreement between EON and United Artists, Thunderball is designed as "presently subject to litigation" and would be only part of the deal "when, as and if the producer acquires a clear legal title to the motion picture rights"[267]. The idea of making Thunderball the second movie was definitely dropped.



26th APRIL 1989

CASA MALIBU
NUEVA ANDALUCIA.
MALAGA SPAIN.

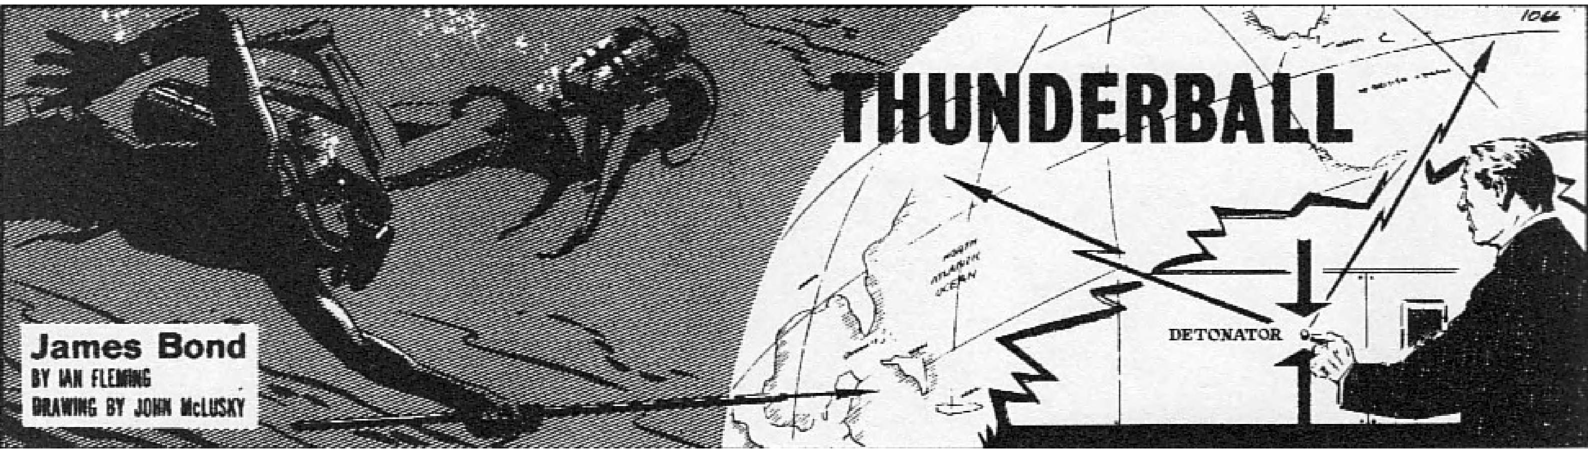
To whom it may concern.

The first James BOND FILM. which I was hired for was — "THUNDERBALL" for UNITED ARTISTS, and the first script I was given to read by BROCCOLI & SALTZMAN'S company was "THUNDERBALL" —

Truthfully

Sean Connery

A comic strip that disappoints



1066
THUNDERBALL
NORTH ATLANTIC OCEAN
DETONATOR
James Bond
BY IAN FLEMING
DRAWING BY JOHN McLUSKY

Since 1958, the newspaper Daily Express kept 007 fans in suspense with faithful adaptations of Ian Fleming's novels into comic strips, published at the rate of 3 or 4 images per day.

The Daily Express begins his adaptation of the novel Thunderball on December 11, 1961, the illustrations were as usual provided by John McLusky and it was Henry Gammidge who was in charge of adapting the text (only Fleming's name appears; there is no mention to the orhers). The publication of Thunderball continues until February 1962 when Giuseppe Petacchi is hijacking the plane containing the bombs; so far the strip has been very faithful to the novel.

But in 1962, Ian Fleming and Lord Beaverbrook (the owner of the Daily Express) argued over the rights to the short story The Living Daylights[268]. Lord Beaverbrook then abruptly canceled his agreements with the author and thus the Daily Express didn't go to the end of the publication of Thunderball[269].

James Bond
BY IAN FLEMING
DRAWING BY JOHN McLUSKY
GIUSEPPE PETACCHI RETURNED TO HIS SEAT WELL AWAY FROM THE COCKPIT AND ADJUSTED HIS OXYGEN MASK. . .
FULL PRESSURE OF OXYGEN, TO STOP ANY CYANIDE GAS LEAKING IN...
1116
THE SPECTRE PEOPLE SAID THAT FIVE MINUTES WOULD BE LONG ENOUGH TO KILL THEM ALL
GIUSEPPE FLIES THE STOLEN ATOM BOMBER TO THE BAHAMAS AND THE BOMBS ARE HIDDEN IN THE SEA. SPECTRE'S ULTIMATUM IS SENT TO THE BRITISH AND U.S. GOVERNMENTS — "£100,000,000 IN GOLD OR WE EXPLODE THE BOMBS IN YOUR COUNTRIES." EVERY AGENT, INCLUDING BOND, SEARCHES FOR THE BOMBS.
BOND FINDS THEM AND THE WORLD IS SAFE.
THE END
James Bond
DRAWING BY JOHN McLUSKY
MI6.CO.UK
1117

The original ending of the Daily Express.

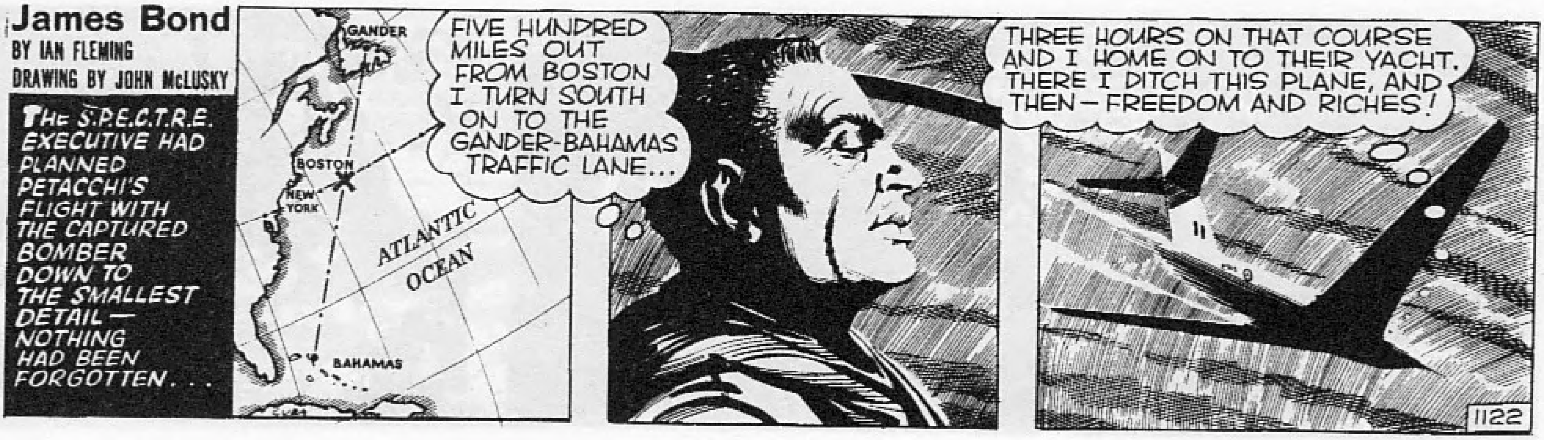
Other newspapers hastily finished the comics strip abandoned midway by the Express. However, the story has been butchered to the point that Domino doesn't appear at all in the strip and Largo is barely mentioned...



James Bond
BY IAN FLEMING
DRAWING BY JOHN McLUSKY
THE S.P.E.C.T.R.E. EXECUTIVE HAD PLANNED PETACCHI'S FLIGHT WITH THE CAPTURED BOMBER DOWN TO THE SMALLEST DETAIL — NOTHING HAD BEEN FORGOTTEN. . .
GANDER BOSTON
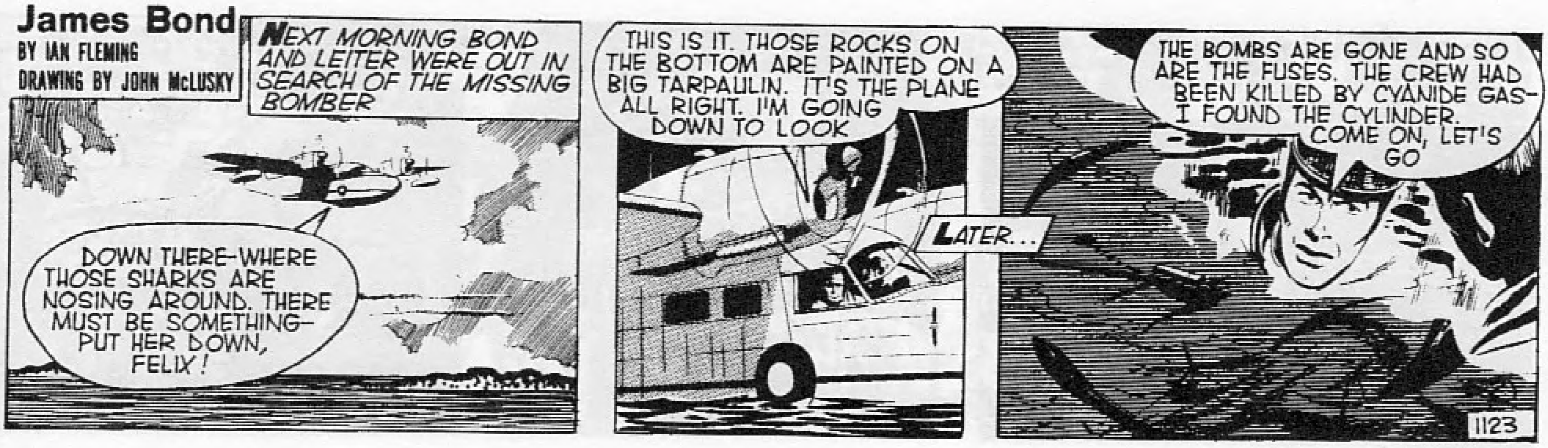
NEW YORK
ATLANTIC OCEAN
BAHAMAS
FIVE HUNDRED MILES OUT FROM BOSTON I TURN SOUTH ON TO THE GANDER-BAHAMAS TRAFFIC LANE...
THREE HOURS ON THAT COURSE AND I HOME ON TO THEIR YACHT. THERE I DITCH THIS PLANE, AND THEN — FREEDOM AND RICHES!
1122



James Bond
BY IAN FLEMING
DRAWING BY JOHN McLUSKY
NEXT MORNING BOND AND LEITER WERE OUT IN SEARCH OF THE MISSING BOMBER
DOWN THERE-WHERE THOSE SHARKS ARE NOSING AROUND. THERE MUST BE SOMETHING- PUT HER DOWN, FELIX!
THIS IS IT. THOSE ROCKS ON THE BOTTOM ARE PAINTED ON A BIG TARPAULIN. IT'S THE PLANE ALL RIGHT. I'M GOING DOWN TO LOOK LATER...
THE BOMBS ARE GONE AND SO ARE THE FUSES. THE CREW HAD BEEN KILLED BY CYANIDE GAS- I FOUND THE CYLINDER. COME ON, LET'S GO 1123

The rest in the other newspapers... Where we directly jump to Bond searching for the wreckage of the bomber with Leiter!

See you in court: the 1963 edition where Kevin McClory gains Thunderball screen rights

The first court case about Thunderball ended on March 24, 1961 with authorization for the novel to be published since a large number of copies had already been sent to various bookstores. However, a possibility was left open for McClory to continue his action at a later date.

Curiously, in May 1961, Whittingham and Fleming exchanged cordial letters about their respective failing heath, despite having been facing in court few weeks earlier[270].

In the first month after the first court case Bryce felt confident, "Ian's counsel believes there is so little cause for worry, on the ground that Kevin obviously owes me already more than he could hope to collect", he wrote in April 1961[271]. Still Bryce, Cuneo and their Counsels would spend the next years to work on the case. In December 1962, around one year before the hearing, Bryce was still confident as he wrote to Cuneo: "in short [my new counsel, Milner Holland] does not believe McClory can produce a case with real hope of victory [...] he is perplexed by the lack of any possibility of material to gain to McClory, whatever the outcome. If he loses he clearly gains nothing; if he wins Sir Milner believes that there is no court that would award him any damages whatsoever"[272].

They also prepared some statement detailing their versions of the order of events. Bryce wrote a 13 pages one in 1961, Cuneo had signed an 8 page one on May 13, 1963. You had read quoted part of them trough the last sub-chapters of this book. Bryce ended his one with the following paragraph:

> - Ivar Bryce[273] : I have therefore lent McClory $22,000 which has not been repaid. The [Boy and the Bridge] accounts are still not complete. I have always been generous and considerate, or have tried to be. I had not objected to his extravagance or the expenses I have paid to him and I am sorry that he has felt forced to turn on me and those who tried to help him.

On his side McClory, who recently married to the rich Bobo Sigrist, had hired Peter Carter-Ruck, the prominent lawyer specialized in libel, who also had spent nearly two years preparing the case (two years during which no out-of-court settlement could had been reached between the two sides[274]). The amount of documents provided by the prosecution was enormous: hundreds and hundreds of pages of treatments, scripts, letters of correspondence, legal papers, memos, statements, the novel, etc...

Having myself delved in a part of theses documents, I can very well imagine the tremendous amount of time the representatives of the two camps had to spend in gathering, reading, analyzing, comparing, contextualizing and organizing all the documents produced in the court (plus the one that didn't). A truly Herculean task in itself.

Since 1961, Jack Whittingham knowing the case was a gamble and could cost him a big amount of money, had decided to retire himself from his statute of co-plaintiff[275]. McClory however still could count on him as a witness.

On November 19, 1963 the case of McClory versus Fleming and Bryce was finally heard in the Chancery Division of the High Court. "Mr. McClory sought a multiplicity of relief: for breach of copyright, breach of confidence, conversion, breach of contract, false representation of authorship", reported the Evening Post[276]. But would the McClory's accusations stand in the court?

The hearing lasted about ten days, during which time Fleming and Whittingham were not in good health. Without Fleming's knowledge, his wife and Bryce had even arranged for a nurse to be sitting in the back of the Court at all times[277].

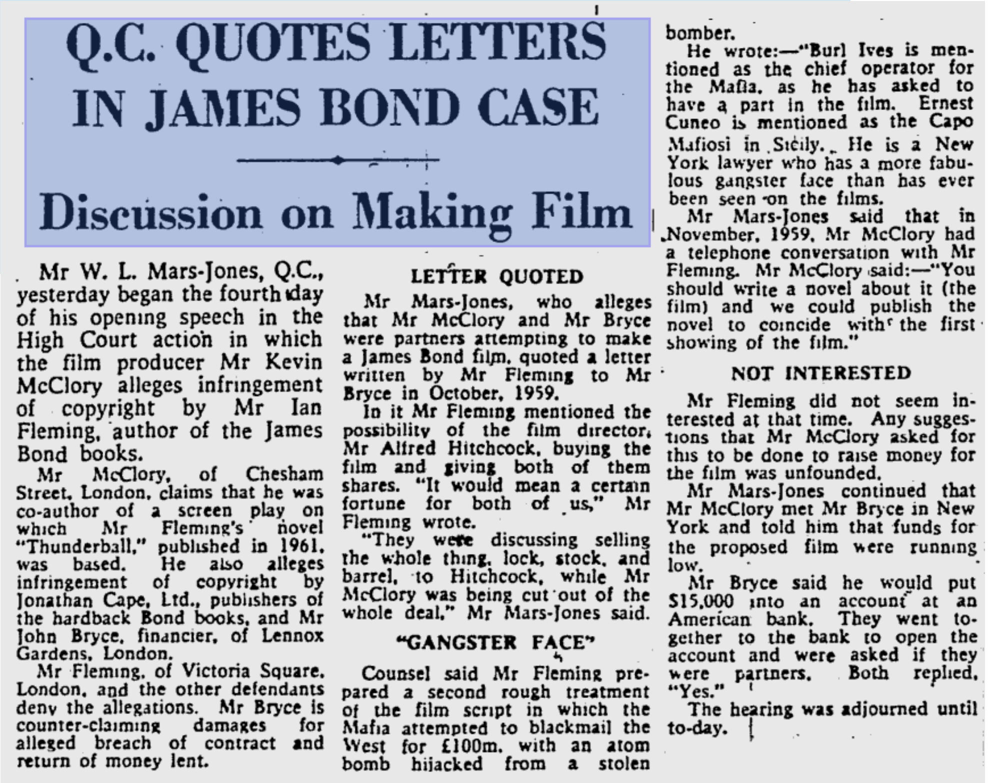
The defense claims that it was McClory who suggested that Fleming write the novel, as a tool to promote the upcoming film, so having presence of treatment/scripts elements in it made sense in this regard[278]. But how are the discrepancies (like SPECTRE/Mafia for exemple) between the novel and Whittingham's scripts was supposed to help the exploitation of the film?, retorted the prosecution[279].

McClory refers to Fleming's changes and additions in the novel, such as Shrublands or SPECTRE, as "smoke screen"s intended to create some differences between the novel and the treatments/scripts in an attempt to hide the fact that Fleming was appropriating his work and the one of Whittingham[280].

Also, the defense argue the story was originally conceived by Cuneo. The account of Fleming affidavit reads: "[Fleming] is of the opinion that apart from the 4 matters he has earlier admitted [theft in a plane, two bombs, underwater cave hide and use of an underwater sledge] were suggested by McClory and/or Whittingham, his 254 page novel represents an entirely original work based on the 2 page basic plot written by Cuneo in May 1959. [...] That Witness [Fleming] was surprised to find how dissimilar the [Whittingham's] script was from the novel"[281]!

McClory states that "there is absolutely no comparison between Cuneo's suggestions based on our thoughts [including mine], and Fleming's novel and Whittingham's script"[282].

> - Jack Whittingham[283] : [Me and Kevin] worked in very close collaboration. I discussed scenes with him which I had written and proposed to write. There were also occasions when he outlined a series of incidents or scenes which he suggested and I wrote them into script. In fact Mr. McClory contributed a great deal to the script and Fleming very little and indeed he only attended script conferences on two occasions.



Q.C. QUOTES LETTERS IN JAMES BOND CASE

Discussion on Making Film

Mr W. L. Mars-Jones, Q.C., yesterday began the fourth day of his opening speech in the High Court action in which the film producer Mr Kevin McClory alleges infringement of copyright by Mr Ian Fleming, author of the James Bond books.

Mr McClory, of Chesham Street, London, claims that he was co-author of a screen play on which Mr Fleming's novel "Thunderball," published in 1961, was based. He also alleges infringement of copyright by Jonathan Cape, Ltd., publishers of the hardback Bond books, and Mr John Bryce, financier, of Lennox Gardens, London.

Mr Fleming, of Victoria Square, London, and the other defendants deny the allegations. Mr Bryce is counter-claiming damages for alleged breach of contract and return of money lent.

LETTER QUOTED

Mr Mars-Jones, who alleges that Mr McClory and Mr Bryce were partners attempting to make a James Bond film, quoted a letter written by Mr Fleming to Mr Bryce in October, 1959.

In it Mr Fleming mentioned the possibility of the film director, Mr Alfred Hitchcock, buying the film and giving both of them shares. "It would mean a certain fortune for both of us," Mr Fleming wrote.

"They were discussing selling the whole thing, lock, stock, and barrel, to Hitchcock, while Mr McClory was being cut out of the whole deal," Mr Mars-Jones said.

"GANGSTER FACE"

Counsel said Mr Fleming prepared a second rough treatment of the film script in which the Mafia attempted to blackmail the West for £100m. with an atom bomb hijacked from a stolen bomber.

He wrote:—"Burl Ives is mentioned as the chief operator for the Mafia, as he has asked to have a part in the film. Ernest Cuneo is mentioned as the Capo Mafiosi in Sicily. He is a New York lawyer who has a more fabulous gangster face than has ever been seen on the films.

Mr Mars-Jones said that in November, 1959, Mr McClory had a telephone conversation with Mr Fleming. Mr McClory said:—"You should write a novel about it (the film) and we could publish the novel to coincide with the first showing of the film."

NOT INTERESTED

Mr Fleming did not seem interested at that time. Any suggestions that Mr McClory asked for this to be done to raise money for the film was unfounded.

Mr Mars-Jones continued that Mr McClory met Mr Bryce in New York and told him that funds for the proposed film were running low.

Mr Bryce said he would put $15,000 into an account at an American bank. They went together to the bank to open the account and were asked if they were partners. Both replied, "Yes."

The hearing was adjourned until to-day.

The Glasgow Herald - November 26, 1963

The defense also argues that Xanadu Productions never intended to make any other film than The Boy and the Bridge and that thus McClory was, strictly speaking, never a partner of Bryce in the James Bond film project. It doesn't help the defense that there are two different entities with similar names: Xanadu Productions (the partnership created for The Boy and the Bridge) and the proposed Xanadu-Bahamas Limited (the never founded company to create a film studio in the Bahamas and make a Bond film there). Indeed, by abuse of language the name of Xanadu Productions is found on a trail of documents associated with the James Bond project.

Furthermore, a "Xanadu Productions: James Bond Account" bank account, and payment made by it for the Bond films matters, was also problematic for the Defense's argument[284], as well as peoples working on the Bond project employed on the behalf of Xanadu Productions (like Whittingham or Leigh Aman)[285]. Testimonies of witnesses describe that the Bond films was refereed as part of Xanadu Productions, and that Bryce and McClory seemed like partners to them[286].

Maybe there was not a formal contract to establish that the Bond project was a part of Xanadu Productions, but the fact remained it had been treated in practice like a continuation of the partnership of The Boy and the Bridge.

The six month delay was also brought to the table, with Bryce stating McClory had no right on the script since Kevin ones automatically reverted to him after its expiration[287]. But remember: the memorandum of intent they signed was subjected to a further agreement that was never drawn up the end... So shouldn't it be considered null and void? Furthermore, McClory still call upon a breach of contract, claiming Bryce (and Fleming) hampered his efforts for finding financing for the film during this six month period.

One of the defense plan of action was to state that the agreement to use of the James Bond character was null and void since Fleming granted it at the condition to have a share in Xanadu-Bahamas Limited, company which was never formed in the end.

McClory camp also stated that publication of the novel jeopardized the chance to obtaining financing for the film[288], while the defense stated that scripts based on novels have more chance to be produced than those which are not. Fleming added to prove the argument that he received inquiries for the films right after the publication of the novel, notably by EON Productions[289].

After nine days of trial, Bryce was worried about Fleming's health and thought the case might deteriorate it further[290]. Furthermore each day of trial cost a lot of money to him, even if apparently EON Production was ready to financially support him[291] (because it was in their interest that Fleming win, if they wanted to do Thunderball one day).

So Bryce was now open to an amicable settlement[292] (even if apparently Bryce's and Fleming's lawyers remained confident of victory[293]) and convinced Fleming to settle.

> - Ivar Bryce[294] : After the first few days it became obvious that [...] it was too exhausting, and too exasperating also, for a heart patient who ought to have been resting tranquilly. Ian, upright and motionless in his sharp-edged corner seat, was looking tired, it seemed to me, and more so every day. [...] The costs amounted, we were told, to thousands of pounds a day [...]. Saltzman and Broccoli were splendidly loyal to Ian [...]. They offered to pay all the cost of continuing the case for a further fortnight [...]. I shared the confidence of our advisers in the eventual outcome. [...] What made the decision more difficult was our reputation, Ian's as well as mine. We knew that we had done nothing > wrong [...]. I took the fateful decision. Ian, to me, looked more ill every day, which I could understand only too well, feeling the stress myself. [...] I felt Ian's life might be at stake if this case dragged on long enough, and that I had come to the conclusion that we must stop it. [...] Money could not be weighed with life, nor could pride, nor the satisfaction of being shown to be blameless. I had to argue with [my friends and counsels], firmly insist. Ian did not himself agree at once, but consented to do what I decided as it was my money that was principally at stake.

Carter-Ruck reported terms for a settlement: McClory acquires film and TV rights of Thunderball (and on all versions of the scripts/treatments that had been developed), as well as a large financial compensation. As for Fleming, he retains the literary rights of the novel, even if the latter must now be recognized as being based on a script by Kevin McClory, Jack Whittingham and Fleming; this recognition is still present in the reissues novels that come out today.

To be precise, the agreement was at one point proposed in the exact following terms:

> FIRST SCHEDULE
>
> - The Defendant Fleming will assign to the Plaintiff all his rights in the screen play Thunderball and the film rights in the novel Thunderball.
> - The Plaintiff disclaims any further right whatsoever in the novel Thunderball.
> - The Plaintiff will pay or secure the payment to the Defendant Fleming of one half of the producers net profit up to a maximum of $50.000 if and when any film based on the said screen play or novel is produced by him and, in the event of the Plaintiff selling the said film rights, he will pay to the Defendant Fleming the sum of $50.000 or one half of the proceeds of sale whichever shall be less.
> - The Defendant Fleming and the Defendant Jonathan Cape Limited will procure the insertion in all future editions of the novel Thunderball published by the Defendants Jonathan Cape limited a statement in the terms "The story is based on a screen treatment by K. McClory, J. Whittingham and the author".

(Yes, Ernest Cuneo was the great forgotten of this statement).

> SECOND SCHEDULE
>
> - The Defendant Bryce will assign to the Plaintiff McClory, all his rights in the screen play Thunderball.
> - The Defendant, Bryce, will pay to the Plaintiff the total sums of $35.000 for damages and $17.500 for costs in full satisfaction of all his claims against the Defendants.
> - The Defendant Bryce and the Plaintiff McClory agree that if there was any partnership between them in relation to any matter other than the film "Boy and the Bridge", such partnership is determined and neither has any claim against the other in respect thereof.

This Tomlin order[295] settlement (or a very similar one) was accepted by both parties and thus McClory acquired the film and television rights to Thunderball.

IN THE HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE 1961 M. No. 989

CHANCERY DIVISION

GROUP "B"

BETWEEN: KEVIN O'DONOVAN McCLORY and JACK WHITTINGHAM (all proceedings by and against the latter of whom were by Order dated 19th January 1962 stayed until further Order)

Plaintiffs

- and -

IAN FLEMING, JONATHAN CAPE LIMITED and JOHN F.C. BRYCE

Defendants

The Plaintiff and the Defendants having reached agreement in settlement of the matters at issue between them in this Action AND the Plaintiff and the Defendants having agreed to the terms set forth in the First and Second Schedule hereto

IT IS ORDERED that all further proceedings in this Action be stayed except for the purpose of carrying such terms into effect

AND THAT there be liberty to apply as to carrying such terms into effect

FIRST SCHEDULE

Terms agreed as between the Plaintiff and the Defendants Fleming and Jonathan Cape Limited in full settlement of all matters in dispute between the Plaintiff and the Defendant Fleming and the Defendants Jonathan Cape Limited :-

(i) The Defendant Fleming will assign to the Plaintiff all his rights in the screen play Thunderball and the film rights in the novel Thunderball

(ii) The Plaintiff disclaims any further right whatsoever in the novel Thunderball

(iii) The Plaintiff will pay or secure the payment to the Defendant Fleming of one half of the producers net profit up to a maximum of $50,000 if and when any film based on the said screen play or novel is produced by him and in the event of the Plaintiff selling the said film rights he will pay to the Defendant Fleming the sum of $50,000 or one half of the proceeds of sale whichever shall be less.

ape Limited will novel Thunderball statement in

by K. McClory,

intiff McClory

lory, all his total sums of tisfaction of that if there

matter other is determined

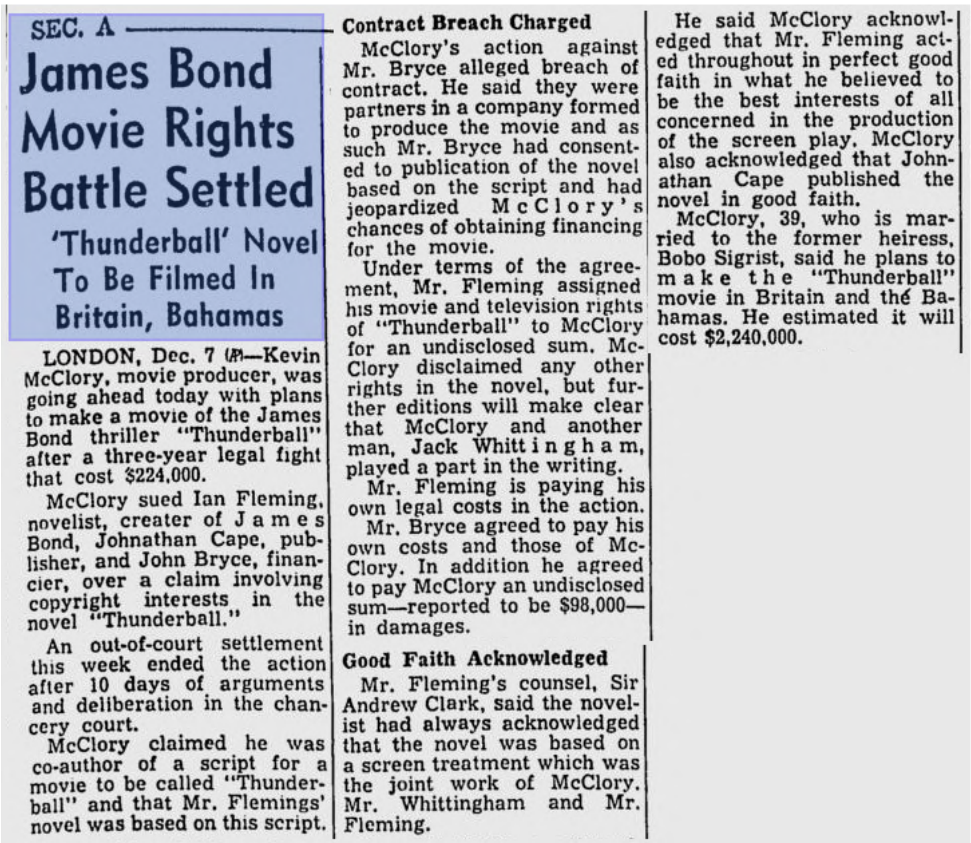
ct thereof.

Ivar Bryce and Ian Fleming (pictured left) & Jack Whittingham, Bobo Sigrist and Kevin McClory (pictured right) leaving the High Court in London.



SEC. A

James Bond Movie Rights Battle Settled

'Thunderball' Novel To Be Filmed In Britain, Bahamas

LONDON, Dec. 7 (AP)—Kevin McClory, movie producer, was going ahead today with plans to make a movie of the James Bond thriller "Thunderball" after a three-year legal fight that cost $224,000.

McClory sued Ian Fleming, novelist, creater of James Bond, Johnathan Cape, publisher, and John Bryce, financier, over a claim involving copyright interests in the novel "Thunderball."

An out-of-court settlement this week ended the action after 10 days of arguments and deliberation in the chancery court.

McClory claimed he was co-author of a script for a movie to be called "Thunderball" and that Mr. Flemings' novel was based on this script.

Contract Breach Charged

McClory's action against Mr. Bryce alleged breach of contract. He said they were partners in a company formed to produce the movie and as such Mr. Bryce had consented to publication of the novel based on the script and had jeopardized McClory's chances of obtaining financing for the movie.

Under terms of the agreement, Mr. Fleming assigned his movie and television rights of "Thunderball" to McClory for an undisclosed sum. McClory disclaimed any other rights in the novel, but further editions will make clear that McClory and another man, Jack Whittingham, played a part in the writing.

Mr. Fleming is paying his own legal costs in the action.

Mr. Bryce agreed to pay his own costs and those of McClory. In addition he agreed to pay McClory an undisclosed sum—reported to be $98,000—in damages.

Good Faith Acknowledged

Mr. Fleming's counsel, Sir Andrew Clark, said the novelist had always acknowledged that the novel was based on a screen treatment which was the joint work of McClory. Mr. Whittingham and Mr. Fleming.

He said McClory acknowledged that Mr. Fleming acted throughout in perfect good faith in what he believed to be the best interests of all concerned in the production of the screen play. McClory also acknowledged that Johnathan Cape published the novel in good faith.

McClory, 39, who is married to the former heiress, Bobo Sigrist, said he plans to make the "Thunderball" movie in Britain and the Bahamas. He estimated it will cost $2,240,000.

Toledo Blade – December 8, 1963

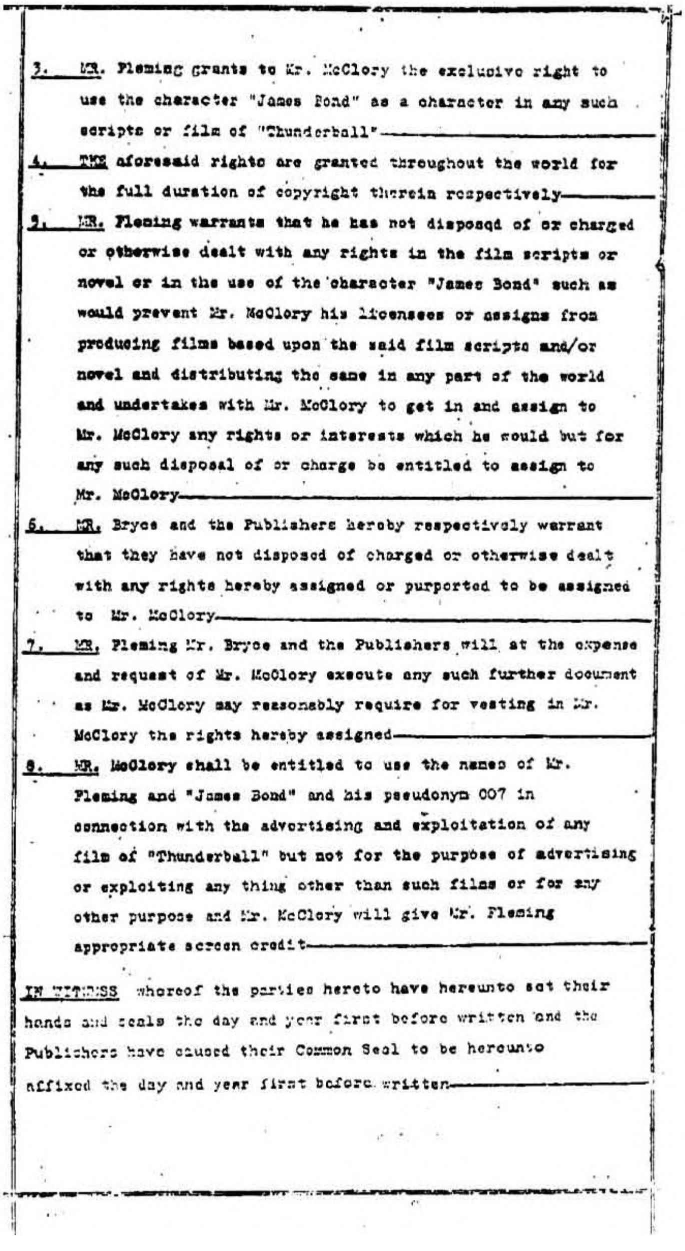
Ann Fleming, Ian's wife, was unhappy with this settlement to the point that she wrote in her husband's copy of Diamonds Are Forever, which has a dedication to Bryce: "The man who betrayed Ian in the Thunderball case"[296]. Ann wasn't the only one who was unhappy, Bryce solicitors wrote to Cuneo: "Since my last letter to you it has become quite clear that EON, Danjaq and United Artists are extremely concerned at the terms of the settlement and have issued a blanket warning to all parties, including Mr. Bryce, to the effect that they will hold everybody responsible for any loss they incur as a result of the assignment of film rights to McClory"[297]. It seems it never went further.

Fleming, disappointed, said at the end of the trial: "I feel Bond would have done something to liven it up [this trial]. Like shooting the judge"[298]!

"He must have been disappointed, as we all were, but I know what a relief the end of the ordeal was to him. It was to me as well", counterbalances Bryce[299].

Later, Fleming accordingly assigned to McClory his rights on a Deed of Assignment on December 31, 1963[300]:

> 3. Mr. Fleming grants to Mr. McClory the exclusive right to use the character "James Bond" as a character in any such scripts or film of "Thunderball".
>
> 4. The aforesaid rights are granted throughout the world for the full duration of copyright therein respectively.
>
> 5. Mr. Fleming warrants he has not disposed of or charged or otherwise dealt with any rights in the film scrips or novel or in use of the character "James Bond" such as would prevent Mr. McClory his licensees or assigns from producing films based upon the said film script and/or novel and distributing the same in any part of the world and undertakes with Mr. McClory to get in and assign to Mr. McClory any rights or interests which he would be for any such disposal of or charge be entitled to assign to Mr. McClory.
>
> 6. Mr. Bryce and the Publishers hereby respectively warrant that they have not disposed of charged or otherwise dealt with any rights hereby assigned or purported to be assigned to Mr. McClory.
>
> 7. Mr. Fleming, Mr. Bryce and the Publishers will at the expense and request of Mr. McClory execute any such further document as Mr. McClory may reasonably require for vesting in Mr. McClory the rights hereby assigned.
>
> 8. Mr. McClory shall be entitled to use the names of Mr. Fleming and "James Bond" and his pseudonym 007 in connection with the advertising and exploitation of any film of "Thunderball" but not for the purpose of advertising or exploiting any thing other than such films or any other purpose and Mr. McClory will give Mr. Fleming appropriate screen credit.



3. MR. Fleming grants to Mr. McClory the exclusive right to use the character "James Bond" as a character in any such scripts or film of "Thunderball"

4. THE aforesaid rights are granted throughout the world for the full duration of copyright therein respectively

5. MR. Fleming warrants that he has not disposed of or charged or otherwise dealt with any rights in the film scripts or novel or in the use of the character "James Bond" such as would prevent Mr. McClory his licensees or assigns from producing films based upon the said film scripts and/or novel and distributing the same in any part of the world and undertakes with Mr. McClory to get in and assign to Mr. McClory any rights or interests which he would but for any such disposal of or charge be entitled to assign to Mr. McClory

6. MR. Bryce and the Publishers hereby respectively warrant that they have not disposed of charged or otherwise dealt with any rights hereby assigned or purported to be assigned to Mr. McClory

7. MR. Fleming Mr. Bryce and the Publishers will at the expense and request of Mr. McClory execute any such further document as Mr. McClory may reasonably require for vesting in Mr. McClory the rights hereby assigned

8. MR. McClory shall be entitled to use the names of Mr. Fleming and "James Bond" and his pseudonym 007 in connection with the advertising and exploitation of any film of "Thunderball" but not for the purpose of advertising or exploiting any thing other than such films or for any other purpose and Mr. McClory will give Mr. Fleming appropriate screen credit

IN WITNESS whereof the parties hereto have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year first before written and the Publishers have caused their Common Seal to be hereunto affixed the day and year first before written

Unfortunately I miss the first three paragraph, but according to McClory, one stated "the exclusive right to reproduce any part of the [Thunderball] novel in cinematographic films and to exhibit such films in any manner whatsoever and for the purpose of making any such films to make scripts involving any part of the said novel"[301].

(Like you can see, contrary to what is popularly said, the out-of-court statement and the Deed of Assignment that followed doesn't include black on white any exclusive right to McClory on SPECTRE or Blofeld. He later claimed to have them since they first appears in Thunderball novel, but to my knowledge, no justice court (or out-of-court agreement) ever give some credit to this argument. McClory never had exclusive right on SPECTRE or Blofeld, and if I'm wrong please show me the precise justice decision stating black on white otherwise. Of course EON would avoid to use SPECTRE and Blofeld later because the fear McClory challenge them in court and force a judge to take a decision on the matter, decision that could not have been in their favor but that would anyway take time and cost money to establish. In fact, SPECTRE and Blofeld were present in some Roger Moore era scripts, as we will see).

After his victory Kevin McClory spoke to reporters saying that "now I can look forward to making the best James Bond film ever been produced"[302]. Soon the press reported the names of Rod Taylor and Laurence Harvey for the role of Bond in the Irishman's film[303]. In early 1964, McClory finally hinted the role of Bond would go to Richard Burton[304]; he is expected to play alongside actress Sylva Koscina who will play Domino[305].

When the Duke of Edinburgh meets Koscina and Honor Blackman (Pussy Galore), he is a little confused, asking Blackman when is she leaving for the Bahamas. Blackman then replied: "No, that's the other James Bond film. Mine is with Sean Connery"[306].

However, McClory apparently felt that he couldn't compete with the EON Productions saga, especially if he didn't have Sean Connery in his film, and the project was abandoned[307].

Having witnessed McClory emerging victorious of his court case against Fleming and Bryce, Jack Whittingham now thinks that he want to sue Fleming after all. So he started a legal procedure against Fleming, claiming for damage for having been left unaccredited in his novel in 1961 while it was well know in the industry he was working on the writing of the film[308].

However, on August 12, 1964, in the middle of the procedure initiated by Jack Whittingham, Fleming suffered a new heart attack at his golf's club which was fatal to him[309]. He died at the age of 56.

McClory and EON joining forces

After Goldfinger, EON plans is to make Her Majesty's Secret Service; the film has been announced and Richard Maibaum is working on the writing as we will see.

However, with McClory having now acquired the film rights to Thunderball and announcing to the press that he was working on the development of a film: EON decided to disrupt its own plans to try to make Thunderball instead of marrying Sean Connery to Tracy di Vicenzo. As Broccoli explained: "For our part, we recognized that a rogue Bond [film] might act as a spoiler upon our own productions. We didn't want to see our films confused with other, perhaps inferior, products"[310].

Broccoli and Saltzman therefore approach McClory and offer him a chance to be part of the "official" James Bond saga: the Irishman agrees as long as the film is released quickly and he has producer status. This should allow McClory to make a profit on the film (20% of profits[311]), see it finally see the light of day and benefit from having Sean Connery and all the other elements that made the EON formula a success like the Bond theme.

For EON, this is an opportunity not to be missed to produce an adventure based on one of the only two Fleming's novels on which they don't have the rights. Furthermore, it should also allow them to head off competition from a rival James Bond film for a long time (according to a contract clause which prohibited McClory from remaking another film based on Thunderball and its genesis scenarios for ten years[312]. "Also in that contact is the fact that if we [I] do make a second film that uses substantial material from the Thunderball film, Broccoli and Saltzman get 20 percent. This is written in the contract", adds McClory[313]).

Outside his rights on Thunderball, McClory also had something else to bring to EON. Remember: McClory had earlier worked on the writing of the Xanadu's Thunderball with Jack Whittingham. Many idea (not all present in the novel) were developed during this period. When he joined EON, McClory brought back theses ideas with him. It's not clear if he brings to EON Whittingham's scripts to read or if he just has submitted theses ideas during script conferences, but in any case the 1965's film ended up to feature scenes developed for Xanadu that were not in Fleming's novel.

So Thunderball they decided to do and Maibaum's old 1961' script was then dusted off. Like I indicated earlier, one my copy of this script is full of handwritten comments. The author of theses annotations is not known, as the date when he wrote it, but my theory is that these comments were written in 1964.

Some of theses notes on the cover say: "Do not like the ending at all", "why even mention girl has one leg shorter than the other" or "What happened to all the sex associated with Bond?".

In this Maibaum's script, Petacchi himself steals the bombs for money, but handwritten notes instead suggest that a SPECTRE's double take his place on the flight (like in Whittingham's third script). Scenes showing the actor playing Petacchi with his re-recorded voice are suggested, as are scenes involving the plastic surgery of the double with a possible killing of the surgeon: "the surgeon should be drug addict + disposed of by hypodermic syringe". It is also suggested that the double is only seen wrapped in bandages until his confrontation with the real Petacchi: the solution that we will find in the film.

Between the end of the SPECTRE meeting and the first camera shot of Shrublands, it is handwritten that "Paris can contact Largo by radio to establish Petacchi's payment". Apparently it was also considered to (re)name Petachi or his double as "Braun".

Other notes suggest that Petacchi (or his double) should poison the bomber's oxygen supply with cyanide (like in Whittingham's scripts), instead of just leaving a cylindrical canister of gas in the cockpit as he does in the novel.

It is asked why, if the Disco Volante has an underwater hatch, would Largo risk attracting attention by sending a boat towards the submerged plane instead of divers?

One detail is noted: "Submarines completely implausible in Nassau waters. Use of aquaparas more".

- Richard Maibaum[314] : Mr. McClory [...] soon learned to participate in his own paradoxical Irish way. Alternately stubborn and elusive, he belies my secret name for him, The Banshee, with shrewdly maintained convictions. An expert skin-diver, his suggestions on that aspect of the film [...] brooked no contradiction. Naturally he had many preconceived ideas in other areas of the story for the very good reason that he thought it up in the first place. Complicating matters was the fact that he had his script and I had mine and I had amalgamated them trying to combine the best features of both.

"First draft": Fiona, Angelo, Palazzi, Double-O-stars and Paula

I imagine treatment(s) I don't have been written (?). An undated "First draft" script was then produced.

First of all, the pre-title opens with Largo (still described as having "abnormally large and powerful hands") arriving at the Parisian SPECTRE's building. We notice that for one reason or another Maibaum changed the FIRCO (Fraternité Internationale de la Résistance Contre l'Oppression) of the novel for the "Fraternité Internationale Pour L'Assistance des Gens Sans États" (The international Brotherhood For The Assistance of Stateless Persons).

Largo passes by a couple who are being taken care of by the Fraternity (the script names them Mr. and Mrs. Karlski) and he joins the Spectre meeting room. Blofeld is there and Maibaum states that the camera won't show his face. The screenwriter also adds the white cat that the filmmakers introduced in From Russia With Love.

Similar to Maibaum's 1961 script, the credits roll after Blofeld electrocutes the member who embezzled the money. The credits will feature "underwater effects", writes Maibaum.

Once the credits end, we move on to the second part of the meeting where Blofeld tells us that No. 9, the executed member, had borrowed this money to help "his sister's husband who is in financial difficulties. A human weakness, to be sure, but clear proof of his unreliability". "Operation Omega" is then quickly mentioned, we only learn that this new project that will bring them 100 million pounds and that "sub-operator S" (instead of G) is in the south of England, near Boscombe Down Air base, at Shrublands.

We cuts to a shot of Shrublands as Blofeld mentions the name. Inside we discover Lippe in a sweat-box, then Bond being massaged by Patricia Fearing with mink glove in another room. There is what appears to be a reference to the previous film, Goldfinger:

> - Patricia: Not at all, it's the disc between the fourth and fifth vertebrae. How did you slip it?
> - Bond: Happened in Kentucky. Friendly scuffle with a chap in a derby, and I don't mean Charlie Chaplin.

There are joined by Lippe, as they shake their hands Bond notice his tattoo.

> - Patricia: Well, I mustn't be late for Count Lippe.
> - Bond: Why not? (turning over on his back) You haven't done this side yet.
> - Patricia: It's your back that needs treatment.

She leaves, 007 calls Moneypenny about the tattoo, there is similar dialogue to the 1961's script and:

> - Moneypenny: Is it important, James?
> - Bond: It's just there's a very nice young party here who might be getting mixed up with somebody not nice at all.
> - Moneypenny: And she'd be so much safer mixed up with you, wouldn't she?
> - Bond: Call me back after you've checked with Records, will you?
> - Moneypenny: Sorry, darling, but you're off-duty. File it till you come back to us your old, dear, impossible self...

He hang up and takes advantage of the fact that Lippe has left with Patricia to search his room. The idea of having a double to replace the NATO's observer has been resuscitated in this script. His name is Angelo and he is in Shrublands, covered in bandages. Bond have a glimpse of him and Angelo sees Bond leaving Lippe's room.

Several of the dialogue that follow with Patricia evoke a certain competition between Bond and Lippe for her, such as:

> \- Bond: All right [I sit on this traction table]. On one condition.
> \- Patricia: Sorry, I've already told Count Lippe I'd go out with him tonight.

Lippe try to kill Bond on the traction machine and Maibaum strangely renamed doctor Wain of the novel in Wayne. Patricia give him another mink glove massage to be forgiven.

After Bond takes revenge on Lippe at the sweat-box room, we find him at the edge of a "natural pool" at night, massaging Patricia:

> [...]
> \- Bond: We have so much in common now, thanks to Count Lippe. Why, if he hadn't become hors de combat...
> \- Patricia (glancing up at him knowingly): I wonder how?
> \- Bond: Defective control, obviously. But now that he's fit again I suppose I won't be seeing as much of you...
> \- Patricia: Count Lippe? (Turning over, putting her arms around his neck, drawing him down close to her) Who's he?

As they kiss, on the Shrublands side, Angelo pretends to swallow a pill in front of a nurse. Lippe joins Angelo and they discreetly go outside where a van awaits them. With it they join a new character: Fiona Kelly, a "red-headed, Irish, is dazzlingly beautiful in every department". She is SPECTRE's Number 3 and is presently on a divan with the NATO's observer. Another oddity: he is not named Petacchi but Guiseppe Palazzi. The door buzzer sounds.

When Palazzi opens the door, he is face to face with Angelo who looks just like him and who kills him with a poisoned needle (attached to its hand by a sort of belt).

Angelo wants more money or he will refuse to continue because "a half million is not enough". Lippe says he will inform Number 1 that a new arrangement has been made. Angelo goes to board the bomber, an Avro Vulcan, which then flies over the natural pool:

> \- Bond (breaking off embrace): Vulcan. Lovely job, isn't it?
> \- Patricia (eyes closed, murmuring): Stay on this one, darling...

Lippe and another man go to Shrublands to place Palazzi's body in Angelo's bed.

Angelo kills the crew of the bomber by poisoning the air supply and lands it near the Disco Volante, described as a magnificent yacht which notably containing tanks for large marine specimens and a two-seater, catapult-operated, folding-wing amphibian plane. Vargas kills Angelo by cutting his air intake pipe.

Janni from Whittingham's scripts also make a return. "Vargas is squat and powerful; Janni, tall, slender, with the build of a champion swimmer, Janni's features are strikingly attractive; Vargas' brutal, almost Simian".

Maibaum changed another name: Kotze in Kutze, described as "a dwarf-like scholarly-looking man with pince-nez glasses and shock of unruly white hair".

Later 007 leaves Shrublands:

> - Patricia: But it can't be all that important you were going to leave without even saying goodbye!
> - Bond: I'd have phoned from London, darling. Awful flap at the office...

He see morticians transporting a corpse, "Mr. Angelo, heart attack last night", says Patricia. Bond is able to see his face, but since he doesn't know Palazzi yet, he doesn't pay attention.

"He gives her a final appreciative pat on her bottom, sighs, reluctantly gets into" his Bentley and drives away. Lippe follows him in his Facel Vega. On a highway Lippe goes to attack by shooting Bond with a gun. Behind them, a motorcycle with a flamethrower mounted bellow the handlebars approaches; Fiona Kelly activates it and a long jet of flame comes out and hits the Facel Vega near the gas tank. Immediate explosion.

Bond goes straight to a meeting room (no Moneypenny here) where other 00 agents are. M points out that he is late (Bond replies that he ran into a bit of heavy traffic). M begins the meeting by saying that the presence of all 00 agents here in the same place represents a security risk but that it is justified by the exceptional circumstances. He introduces Sir William Ashcroft, an aide to the Prime Minister who plays them the tape sent by SPECTRE.

Maibaum requests a series of individual close-ups of each 00 agent as they listen to SPECTRE's requests and writes: "(If possible they should all be recognizable important stars. The overall scene should be shot so that these cuts can be photographed elsewhere if necessary. Consequently, care should be taken not to show the faces of the Double Os in other shots)"!

SPECTRE states on the tape that they also intends, if its demands are not met, to warn the world in order to create a panic, after the first explosion and before destroying a major city.

The agents are asked to open the envelopes given to them, 007 discovers that he has been posted to Canada and finds photos of Palazzi and his sister who M describes as: "Dominetta Vitale... Now in Nassau, reputedly an international set playgirl primarily interested in men and money".

M concludes the meeting by saying that each 00 will have a one-on-one meeting with him before their departures, they should go to set up their meeting times with Moneypenny. However, Bond decides to approach M while he is still in the meeting room:

> - Bond: Sir, I'd like to request a chance of station from Ottawa to Nassau.
> - M: I'm sure you would. Which is it, Double 0-7? Water-skiing, or Miss Dominetta Vitale?
> - Bond: The girl, sir. But for purely professional reasons.

Bond says he saw Palazzi's corpse, registered under the name Angelo, being carried away when he left Shrublands. The Air Vice Marshall next to them, however, confirms that Palazzi did board the Vulcan. Finally M decides to assign 007 to the Bahamas.

We now see Bond in Nassau... Parasailing with water-skis. A man with binoculars observes him; it is Felix Leiter, whose face is currently hidden from us. "Unless he is a new Leiter and his face can be shown", precise Maibaum in case one of the previous actor who played the character doesn't return for this new film.

Bond signals to the girl piloting the boat that he wants to get off and he lands on a beach. He then goes to a bar where he orders a gin & tonic. At the bar there is beautiful girls including a certain Paula, Bahamas native with whom he chats:

- Girl: Here he is, girls. The last of the big-time spenders.
- Bond: Just trying to catch up.
- Second girl: Where have you been all season?
- Bond: Wasting my time at Cannes. I flew in this morning.
- Paula (indicating the kite): On that?
- Bond: [...] Ever try flying with one?
- Paula: No, but I might next time I need a quick getaway.

They exchange a recognition phrase From Russia with Love style*:*

- Bond: Well, it's now ten to eleven...
- Paula: I'm five minutes fast.
- Bond (recognizing the code): Better fast than slow.
- Paula (recognition response): That depends on who your appointment's with...

The two other girls who watch them leave while saying "instant sex…".

My copy of the script ends here, I don't have any following pages (if they ever were written).

October 1964 revised script: breaking the fourth wall

In a revised (incomplete) version dated October 5 or 24, 1964, some changes can be noted. For example the reference to Goldfinger when Bond gets a massage from Patricia now reads like that:

> - Patricia: It's the disc between the fourth and fifth vertebra. How did you slip it?
> - Bond: Little oddjob I was on in Kentucky. Friendly scuffle with a man in a bowler hat [rather than a derby hat], and I don't mean Charley Chaplin.

Later, when Palazzi opens the door and discovers an Angelo identical to himself:

> - Palazzi (incredulously): We should be related? Are we?

Angelo comes to shake Palazzi's hand, and we see that Angelo's hand contains a ring with a diamond from which a poisoned needle protrudes.

A little further on, an officer comes to pick up Angelo (whom he mistakes for Palazzi), to take him to his flight and here is that:

> - Security Officer: You don't seem to be yourself tonight.
> - Angelo (tense, but covering up with banter): You don't look like ~~Mr. America~~ Sean Connery either. Maybe we should join a monastery.

ANGELO (tense, but covering up with banter)
You don't look like XXXXXXXXXXSean Connery either. Maybe we should join a monastery -

!!!!

New treatment: travesty, Aston Martin, shark pen

An (undated) treatment "script outline" of a few pages was also written at one point.

The pre-title sequence is located in a fan-tan parlor in Macao with players on balconies dropping their bets in pellets on tables below, receiving their winnings via Chinese Girl. Hanging overhead is large cage with a beautiful girl inside.

Bond is there to kill a certain Ho Yen and spots the girl in the cage. "She'll know", Bond says and start to follows the girl to her dressing room. He start to romance her and we discovers that "she" is in fact the man he was looking for, disguised as a woman. After killing Ho Yen in hand-to-hand combat, the sequence ends with 007 jumping through a window to escape Yen's henchmen and landing in the water 12 meters below.

After the title sequence there is the SPECTRE meeting at Paris. Fiona Kelly is present. She sits next to Blofeld and it is she who presses (under Blofeld's orders) a button to electrocute the member who behaved badly.

There are then the scene in Shrublands with Lippe and "Pat". Lippe's Tong tattoo turns out to be similar to Ho Yen's one, which seems to intrigue Bond and leads him to investigate about Lippe.

Later we have Fiona and Palazzi in an hotel room where she ask him when he's going to put a photo of her instead of his sister's in his locket. Angelo join them and hijack the Vulcan before delivering it to Largo, only to be kill as a reward for his service.

Bond is driving "the Aston Martin" (instead of a Bentley) when Lippe tries to get rid of him, but Fiona kills Lippe from her motorcycle which containing a flamethrower.

There is the meeting with the Double-O agents (all played by "famous stars"), and Bond convince M to assign him to Nassau.

We see Bond "water-skiing" to a bar where he is contacted by a "beautiful Bahamian girl" who remain unnamed in this treatment. She takes him to a certain Pinder's shop where he meets Felix Leiter. She then brings him to Domino (they meet underwater and he pretend a problem with his motor, like in the film). We learn that her guardian (Largo) is currently at sea, a (so-called) fish hunter who brings rare species to marine institutes.

Present here is also the fact Big Ben ring seven times at 6 o'olock.

007 flirts with Domino and eventually meets Largo; he invites Bond to Palmyra.

007 goes there, discovers radioactivity on his Geiger watch but Largo shows him that it comes from a piece of uranium: he established his fortune thanks to a mine where this piece of uranium comes from, he says.

Largo receives a message telling him that Bond is agent 007. Vargas is ready to push Bond into the Palmyra's shark pen, but Largo warns him to not do so.

With Pinder's help, Bond later goes diving under the Disco Volante (where he is attacked by the crew).

Q return from the previous movies and gives Bond some equipment. 007 tells Domino the truth about Largo; he is attacked by Vargas and other men. Vargas dies. On a road Bond is picked up by car by Fiona.

He have an affair with her, "he evidently pulls off usual Bond success with women because she comes clean about being a Spectre agent and wants to help him". Fiona takes him to Palmyra at night, supposedly to look for the bombs. There she pushes him into the shark pool but he manages to make her fall with him and have her devoured by the sharks before managing to get out.

Bond joins Largo and his men who board the yacht from the underwater hatch. When they go to retrieve the bombs from a cave, 007 is trapped inside. (I don't have the following pages, if they ever existed one day).

November 30, 1964: jetpack, Cushioncraft and Aluminaut

In November 6, 1964, Maibaum went to the Bahamas with Kevin McClory and Ken Adam for a scouting trip[315].

A "shooting script" of 138 pages written by Maibaum was completed on November 30, 1964.

> GUNBARREL-BOND-BLOOD TRADEMARK
> JAMES BOND theme.

The gunbarrel fades to a cemetery (outdoor) in France. Bond and "La Porte" (meaning "The Door" in french, sic!) observe the funeral of a certain Durand. The script tells us that his widow is "young, beautiful", dressed in a black dress and a veil, and that several dignitaries (the mayor, the judge and the commander of the local garrison) offer their condolences to her.

> - La Porte: You are too late, monsieur. Your work has been done by a higher power...
> - Bond: So it seems.
> - La Porte: Monsieur Durand passed away in his sleep, they say...
> - Bond: A much easier death than he arranged for Double 0-5. From the looks of her, madame Durand was too good for him, too...

007 observes the widow getting into a limousine, opening the door herself, accompanied by a henchman from her husband named Brinon. Bond gets into his own car, which is a Bentley, and follows her to a castle. The widow crosses part of the building before arriving at the living room, a "Louis XV decor [with] fire burning in fireplace", where she comes across Bond who is sitting.

Similar to the film, the widow turns out to be Mr. Durand and a hand-to-hand fight (relatively different from the film) start:

> Durand pulls back his knees, kicks Bond in the stomach with both feet. Bond staggers back. Durand pulls a knife from a scabbard strapped to his thigh, jumps to his feet, comes at Bond, [...] Bond knocks over a tall Grandfather's clock between them. Durand throws the knife. Bond ducks it, pulls his Walther out of shoulder-holster. Before he can level it, Durand [...] tackles Bond [...], knocks him off his feet. The gun goes spinning and the two men grapple, rolling over and over.

[...] They both dive for the gun, crashing together, momentarily stunning each other. [...] Durand slips in with a judo hold, throws Bond toward the fireplace.
With Bond on his hands and knees, crawling away from the fire, Durand picks up a poker and smashes it down across Bond's back, bending the poker and knocking him flat. [...] As Durand lifts the poker to brain him, Bond rolls [...] gets up and behind Durand.

007 ends up strangling Durand (with his fake breasts) and heads towards a jet-pack while being chased by Brinon and a butler. 007 takes off and joins his Bentley before fleeing (no water cannon or La Porte here).

- Richard Maibaum[316] : [This] episode is not in the book. It's in the film only because there is such a device in existence and it cried to be buckled onto James Bond's broad back.

After the title sequence, we not see Largo entering the Parisian SPECTRE's building, but Blofeld (his face hidden from the camera)! Someone say to him "Bonjour, monsieur le directeur" and he joins the meeting room. The place is described as Ken Adam will build it: "two rows of seven facing each other. Low lucite tables between chairs with neat stacks of agenda, glasses, carafes, pens, etc. [...] On the wall beyond the last chairs is a map of the world". However, Blofeld is sitting in an armchair at the end of the table in this script.

The members of the SPECTRE are "men" of various nationalities. (Fiona is not there).

Blofeld regretfully announces the death of Number 4, Philip Durand. We proceed to the financial report, there is a sympathetic reference to the novel when Number 12 says: "Ransom for Della Blomberg, daughter of the Argentine industrialist, 1,000,000 pesos" (the execution in the script concerns the distribution of narcotics from Red China). After the execution of Number 9 (the chair does not disappear into the ground), Blofeld explains that the dead guy had lost the money at roulette.

Blofeld mentions their new operation, "sub-operator L" is in Shrublands.

Count Lippe is described as "definitely a Eurasian, perhaps Indonesian-Dutch". We also meet Patricia Fearing, described as "an athletic-looking beauty" in a thin smock. After a few grunts from Bond as she works her spine, Patricia grabs some mink gloves and gets back to work. No reference to Goldfinger anymore here.

Bond calls Moneypenny to ask about the tattoo, watches Lippe and Patricia drive away in a Facel Vega, and breaks into Lippe's room but is seen by Angelo. 007 then joins Patricia and when he kisses her by surprise, she "deftly disengages" then puts him on the traction table. There, Lippe tries to kill Bond. The scene cuts to a shot of Bond with Patricia and Dr. Wain (Wayne was indeed dropped out in this script):

- Wain: We should have you up in a day or two. Fortunately there was no structural damage...
- Bond: Thanks to Miss Fearing.
- Patricia: It was the sound of the motor really. I was in the hall. I'd never heard it that loud.
- Wain: Mr. Bond must have accidentally moved the lever. Incidentally, I wouldn't want to alarm the other patients...
- Bond: I'll keep it strictly personal.

Just after saying theses words, 007 then goes to visit Lippe who is in a sweat box*:*

- Lippe: Get me out of here, Alfred. I'm sweating like a pig.
- Bond (imitating Attendant's Cockney accent): Fought you wanted it 'ot, Guvner.
- Lippe: Don't argue with me. Let me out.
- Bond: Blimey, 110's 'ardly more than a warm breeze. I'll put it up to 200, shall I? About a half hour of that should do you nicely. (Resuming his normal voice) And if you catch fire, you can sue...
- Lippe: Mr. Bond!

007 leaves, humming "We're having a heat wave, a tropical heat wave" while Lippe screams for help.

We find Patricia and Bond in his Bentley parked on the side of a road. They are not heavily dressed and Bond rubs her back:

- Patricia: Not bad. Not bad at all.
- Bond: I should be rather good at it by now.
- Patricia: Oh, but you are darling... Definitely.
- Bond: Now that poor Count Lippe's fit again, I suppose I won't be seeing as much of you...
- Patricia: Count Lippe? Who's he?

Fiona Kelly is in the same kind of position with Colonel "Franco" Palazzi. He is described as mustachioed in an Italian Air Force uniform, while Fiona is described as "redheaded, Irish, at the moment revealingly deshabille, is the most beautiful accomplished young witch since Morgan Le Fay".

Palazzi goes to open the door and discovers Angelo who kills him, this time with a cyanide gun as in the movie. Angelo says he wants more money (Lippe, who is present, is about to kill him) but Fiona says she will talk to Number One about it.

Angelo hijack the Vulcan (no Sean Connery reference anymore) and lands it near the Disco Volante described as a "magnificent hydrofoil, 90 tons, 104 feet [32 m] long, the foils presently up like the menacing wings of a giant albatross". Emilio Largo is on board; he is now described as having a "well-trimmed Balbo-like black beard" and "a black patch over one eye which gives him a half-piratical, half-grandee look".

In this script it is Largo who kills Angelo by cutting off his air supply (rather than Vargas).

When Bond leaves Shrublands, morticians carry the body of Mr. Angelo (actually Palazzi) in the background. Unlike in the film, a blanket covering the body falls and Bond then sees his face.

Bond leaves behind the wheel of his Bentley, Lippe follows him in his Facel Vega and is killed by Fiona. There is now a scene where she gets rid of the bike, like in the film.

Bond arrives in Moneypenny's office (his line "some people on the road really burn you up" took on its full meaning in view of Fiona's flame-thrower). The conference room is described as "nine armchairs arranged in a semi-circle in front of a table. Eight men in civilian clothes seated in the chairs, their faces not visible. Facing them, behind the table, are the Home Secretary, M, and Air Vice Marshall. Behind the table is a large map. On a wall is a board with photographs of Vulcan crew. In front of M is a tape recorder".

M speaks and the dialogue is similar to the one of the film. Bond is intrigued by Palazzi's photograph on the wall.

After the meeting, there is a scene in M's office where he announce to Bond that is affectation will be Canada. "I respectfully suggest you switch me to Nassau, sir". Bond explains that he searched Palazzi's apartment after the meeting and found the photo of his sister. He says he saw Palazzi dead in Shrublands (unlike the film there are only Bond and M in the office):

> - M: Your treatment there may have cured your back but seems to have affected your vision. The Air Force people are thoroughly convinced he was seen boarding and took off in the Vulcan.
> [...]
> - Bond: I'm an experienced Intelligence Officer, sir. I know what I saw and my instinct tells me Palazzi may be the key to this problem.

M tells him that 003, who is assigned to Nassau, will then investigate the girl, before dismissing Bond. Finally M changes his mind and tells Bond that he will assign him to Nassau instead of 003 because his "qualifications seem more suitable for Station N".

After a scene with Moneypenny similar to the film, we find Bond in Nassau... Parasailing, observed by Leiter. He lands on a beach and goes to a bar where he met Paula in bikini. Paul Roberts, its is now precised. He recommends her to do "kite" but she tells him that she has already tried. She traces a "007" in the sand with her toe, which is their recognition code in this script, and tells him that she could show him the surroundings. They leave the bar.

Bond asks Paula if she's from the Nassau police and she replies, "confidential squad". They get into a horse-drawn cart and head towards Government House (still being watched by Leiter) but since Bond doesn't want to be seen there, they don't go there in the end.

We move then on to an underwater scene with a turtle, Bond meets Dominetta "Domino" similar to the film. 007 pretends to have problem with his boat's motor and Domino take him with her. The script include dialogues on the boat:

> - Bond: Terribly nice of you [to give me a lift].
> - Dominetta: Your girl friend won't think so when she finds out you deliberately fouled up that motor.
> - Bond: You're not only too beautiful, but too clever.
> - Dominetta: Yes, I know. So many people tell me…
> - Bond: Are they who you're escaping from down there?
> - Dominetta: Perhaps. Where do you come from?
> - Bond: London.

Shot of London showing Big Ben ringing seven times at 6:00 a.m., and of a TV reporter reporting this on the news, explaining it was a mechanical malfunction.

007 ends up eating with Domino, observed by her chaperon, Quist.

> [...]
> - Bond: Will I see you again, Domino?
> - Dominetta: How did you know my friends call me that?
> - Bond: What else would they call you? Certainly not Etta. You're not the type.
> - Dominetta: I'm at the casino sometimes in the evening.

If you've listened to the audio commentaries on the DVD, you already know that the scenes at the casino and of Bond meeting Leiter were reversed during the editing of the film. It is therefore not surprising that in that script, Bond goes to his hotel room after leaving Domino.

He enter his room, notice Quist's presence, open to Leiter and hit him before he could says "Double-O Seven", and overpower Quist in a similar way of the film. Contrary to this one, Quist stay knocked out Bond explain to Leiter: "Watch-dog for a jealous boyfriend, or he could be from the opposition. Either way I'll call my contact to have the Commissioner sneak him out of here and put him on ice for a few days".

Bond and Leiter then go to Pinder's place, however big difference compared to the film: Q is not present in this scene. Bond does, however, receive a gadget (the Geiger watch), but from Leiter. He tells Leiter that he's going to meet this "Vitale girl" tonight at the casino.

Bond (in a white jacket) goes to the casino and joins Largo's table (who is also in a white jacket). The script specifies that Largo has a large "death's head with octupus-like tentacles" ring. 007 beats him at cards then goes to dinner with Domino (in the background there is a girl doing a dance with fire):

- Bond: You do a little playing with fire, too, don't you?
- Domino: Emilio is too possessive. Sometimes I remind him I belong to myself.
- Bond: He called you his niece...
- Domino: It sounds better than kept woman...
- Bond: Where did you meet him?
- Domino: In Capri. I was there with my brother, Franco. I found him attractive, at first...
- Bond: Rich man, I suppose.
- Domino: He's in uranium. Must we talk about him? I'd much rather dance.
[...]

After Largo comes to collect Domino and invite Bond to Palmyra, they get on a small boat:

- Domino: You're hurting me...
- Largo (low voice): Bitch...

The next day 007 goes to Palmyra where he looks at his Geiger watch. This is a rather different scene from the film (there is notably no ball-trap gun in this one; Fiona has no scene in Palmyra in this script). Bond comes across Domino who is swimming in the pool; Janni and Vargas look at them a little further away:

> \- Bond: Hello there. That pool looks particularly inviting. I hope you ask me to join you...
>
> [She comes out of the water].
>
> \- Domino: Later. I've had enough just now.
>
> [Bond takes a towel].
>
> \- Bond: Allow me.
>
> [Largo joins them].
>
> \- Largo: Welcome to Palmyra, Mr. Bond.
>
> \- Bond: My pleasure, Mr. Largo.
>
> [They shake hands].
>
> \- Largo: I like a man with a strong grip.
>
> \- Bond: Yours is undeniably forceful.
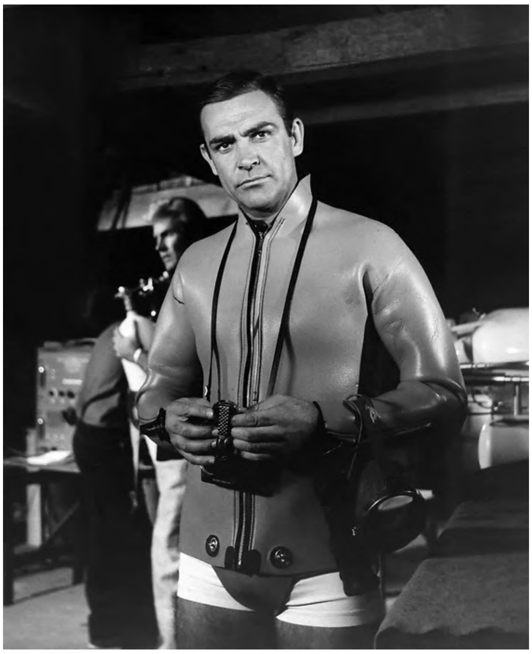
>
> \- Largo (laughing): Not like a spectre, eh? (Introducing his men) Mr. Janni, Mr. Vargas I think you met last night.

Largo offers him a drink, there is the dialogue that Vargas doesn't drink, and Largo begins to show him around the inside of the house.

Bond asks Largo if he can use his phone, calls Paula and simply says "Just checking in, Paula" before hanging up as Largo approaches, having with him a piece of uranium which he shows to 007. "A memento of my first big strike. In the Congo", explains Largo. "I sold out a few years ago. Now I spend my time enjoying myself, in my own way, sailing the seven seas".

Largo shows him his shark pool, telling him that he collects big fish for marine institutes. Largo discreetly thinks about pushing Bond into the pool but Domino comes to join them at that moment and says that dinner is ready. Largo tells them to go to the table, he will join them after feeding the sharks, "my friends are hungry too".

> \- Largo (to himself, feeding the sharks): She may have done us a favour. Obviously he's an agent, but his disappearance might only confirm any suspicion the bombs are in the Bahamas. If he gets too dangerous, however, we will have to take that risk...



Just after we find Bond with Leiter at Pinder's place. He is putting on a diving suit:

> \- Leiter: So you made a pass at his dame and he tried to throw you to the sharks. All we've got that ties him in is he knew her brother.
>
> \- Bond: What about that uranium bit? It was either an excuse for radioactivity or a lure to make me show my hand.

007 wants to dive near the Disco Volante to check for radioactivity. On site he doesn't find any radioactivity but discover a trap door under the yacht; an alarm goes off on board when he touches it. A diver then confronts 007 in an underwater fight at the end of which 007 kills the diver by strangling him after removing his mask (no animal in this scene). Largo observes this on the cameras under his yacht and has grenades and a boat sent towards Bond. 007 abandons his scuba gear to pretend he is dead and takes a deep breath to hide underwater. It works.

007 joins Pinder (no lift from Fiona). After that Bond and Leiter fly in a Widgeon seaplane (like in Whittingham's scripts, instead of the Grumman of the novel) in order to find the bomber. They find nothing but while flying over Palmyra on their return trip, they see tracks in the sand near a boathouse on the property. They decide to take an interest in it.

Largo watches the seaplane fly away, he is in the company of Kutze who is sickened watching him feed the sharks: "For a nuclear fission specialist you're surprisingly squeamish, Kutze", remarks Largo.

Back at Pinder's place, Bond says he managed to get the electrical power cut that he requested from the governor. Suddenly Q joins them; he is described as dressed in "shorts revealing hairy legs, a floppy flowered shirt, sandals, and a straw hat":

> - Bond: Oh, no! When'd you get here, Q?
> - Q: This morning, Double-07.
> - Bond: Major Boothroyd; Felix Leiter, CIA.
> - Q (as they shake hands): How do you do?
> - Bond: What have you got for me this time, Q? An Aston Martin with water wings?
> - Q: That would not have been feasible under the circumstances. I must say I find this business of equipping you in the field, on the run, as it were, most irregular. However, we've done what we could, and as submerged aquatic action does seem indicated...

Q presents him with a camera that acts as a Geiger counter. Then he shows him a kind of revolver:

> - Q: Sub-aqua repeating gun. It fires explosive magnesium tracer-darts.
> - Bond: I could have used this last night.

This is also an opportunity to see that the respirator that Q provides was in a very different form in this script. Indeed Q shows 007 an aquarium in which there is a fish swimming and a white mouse wrapped in a silicone cube:

> - Q: Please observe this rather interesting phenomena. The mouse, as you see, is actually breathing underwater. This is made possible by the silicon membrane, one thousandth of an inch thick, through which sufficient oxygen penetrates. This silicon hood, which buttons at the throat, has been designed to sustain respiration of larger mammals. For very limited periods, of course. Perhaps two minutes. Folded, and kept in this container [indicating one pillbox size] you might conceivably use it in an emergency [...].
> - Bond (unhappily): It's been tested, of course...
> - Q: Only with mice, due to the haste occasioned by this assignment. Scientifically speaking, however, it should also work successfully with humans

Finally Q presents the radioactive pill to 007 and the scene ends with "you swallow it".

That night at Palmyra, while Largo and Kutze play chess and Domino plays piano, Bond and Pinder infiltrate the boathouse and discover that the tracks were made by a pedal boat. The alarm goes off as Vargas activates the property's backup generator. Pinder is hit by gunfire, Bond goes to help him and drags him behind the boathouse. However, his effort was in vain: Pinder dies a few seconds later.

Bond returns shots but runs out of ammo. Like in the film a SPECTRE henchman drags Bond into a swimming pool and Largo activates a switch which brings sharks into it. Bond survive in a similar way to the film.

- Bond (exiting the shark tank): Sorry... You'll have to order something else...

We find Bond hitchhiking on the side of a road and getting into a car which is driven by Fiona Kelly. He notices that she has a ring similar to Largo's one but the screenwriter specifies in a note that he doesn't try anything against her because at that moment he is not armed. He asks her where she is going: to the "Jump-Jump Club", "They've got a drummer who sends you back to nature".

"I am in luck. Instead of a miserable hike I get to ride with the best-looking girl I've seen on the island", he tells her. He adds that he will perhaps join her there later:

- Fiona: You're very quick on the trigger, aren't you?
- Bond (with a smile): So I've been told...

The scene cuts and we see Bond getting out of a taxi in front of the Jump-Jump Club. Inside he spots Fiona at a table and sits across from her (back to a window). As a musician plays a drum, Vargas briefly appears at the window behind Bond and makes a gesture that appears to indicate he is drawing a gun. However, Fiona shakes her head and nothing happens: Vargas leaves. When Bond and Fiona leave the club, he gives her his room number and they go their separate ways.

When Bond goes back to his hotel, he receives a phone call from Fiona telling him that she is in the room next door. Bond goes to open the door that separates their two bedrooms and finds her in her bed in a semi-transparent green nightgown. While she tells him that she knew from the moment she met him that it was going to end like this between them, he begins to join her in bed. The camera rests on an ashtray where Bond places his cigarette. After a cut, the next shot now shows several cigarettes in the ashtray (some with lipstick on them). They are still in bed and Fiona comes out to get dressed and fix her hair.

- Fiona: You've made a mess of my hair, you brute...

He also gets up to close a window and finds himself in front of Fiona who is wearing now a surgical mask and holding the gun with which Palazzi was killed:

- Fiona: Sorry, darling, the party's over...
- Bond: It was almost worth it. Why the mask? Cyanide gun?
- Fiona: You won't suffer much. It's practically instantaneous.
- Bond: That's nice to know. I spotted that ring when you picked me up. It's like Largo's. I thought if we really got together we might...
- Fiona: So it wasn't just my lily-white body...
- Bond: Not entirely. I have a proposition for you, my dear. Immunity and a million if you tell me where the bombs are.

- Fiona: I don't know... Or I might be tempted...
- Bond: Can you find out? We've got less than thirty-six hours left...
- Fiona: No deal, lover. Does that bleed your ego? You're accustomed to girls you've romanced doing anything you want, aren't you? Well, you've finally met one who never lets pleasure interfere with business; not even for you. [She pulls up her mask] Goodbye, lover...

"Before she can fire, he simultaneously grabs her wrist with one hand and snatches off the mask with the other". He turns her gun on her and she receives cyanide. While she is having convulsions, Bond puts on the mask and goes to open the window. Then, he returns to his room, closing the door behind him.

We now find Bond and Leiter making another seaplane search for the bomber and this time they find it. Bond dives and retrieves items such as a watch from Angelo's body.

The British strategic bomber Handley Page Victor was one of the three "V-bombers" (with the Valiant and the Vulcan) used by the Royal Air Force.

Meanwhile in England the ransom jewels are transferred from an armored van to a Victor plane. We also have camera shots of two SPECTRE members in an Aluminaut submarine, waiting at the ransom site.

- M: Incredible we have to knuckle under, but I'm afraid Nassau's a wash-out...

In the next scene, Bond joins Domino underwater and takes a photo of her before they join up. On the beach, Vargas looks out to sea, "on surface, two sets of bubbles gradually merging into one".

They walk towards the beach:

- Bond: I hope we didn't frighten the fish.
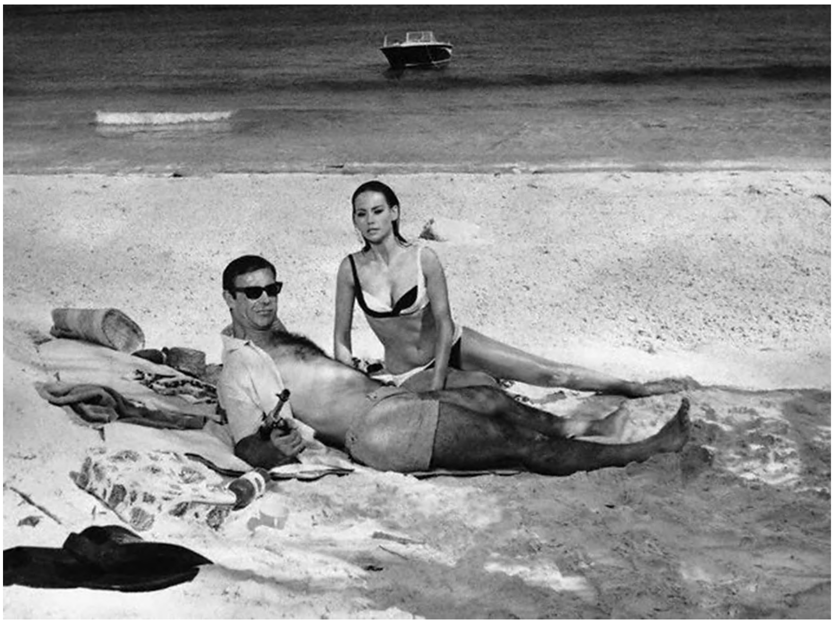
- Domino: How does a girl like me say... She loves a man...? [She walks on sea urchin eggs] Sea-egg spine. They're poisonous.

Bond removes the spine with his teeth. There is then a scene similar to the film where Bond reveals to Domino that her brother Franco is dead and that Largo is responsible. The dialogues are somewhat different, with Domino saying in particular:

- Domino: Largo! I knew he was evil... But I thought it might be narcotics... [Or] smuggling...

She adds to Bond that she will do what he wishes "on one condition": he must kill him. The most notable difference in this scene is that Vargas approaches Bond not with a gun but a stiletto. Domino tells him he's there and Bond says out loud so Vargas can hear:

- Bond: And then there's the one about the absent-minded strip-teaser... You'll die laughing, Vargas... When you get the point...



Bond fires the harpoon gun and kills Vargas. Bond and Domino separate. 007 leaves by boat and takes the opportunity to throw Vargas' body into the sea.

As he arrives near Palmyra, 007 sees a place of interest where SPECTRE's men dropping off diving equipment. With the equipment, Largo and his men dive. As the last man is about to dive, Bond overpowers him with a karate chop and don his equipment.

They thus join the Disco Volante. (Paula observes the boat from afar for Leiter, from a lighthouse, she doesn't die in this script).

At sea, Largo notices that the yacht is being followed by Navy ships and activates a smoke screen to disappear. By ordering "conversion" the yacht separates in two (the part he is on becomes a fast hydrofoil. In the film, this separation will take place during the final battle). We note that Maibaum plans to use miniatures to film this.

Largo and the SPECTRE's men (including Bond) go to an underwater cave to retrieve the bombs. 007 is spotted and Largo leaves him to fight with one of his men while he locks them in the cave. Bond kills the man by impaling him on a hook to which the bombs were attached.

Domino's treachery is discovered and Largo tortures her. Compared to the film, Kutze adopts a more rebellious tone when he intervenes:

- Kutze: No more!
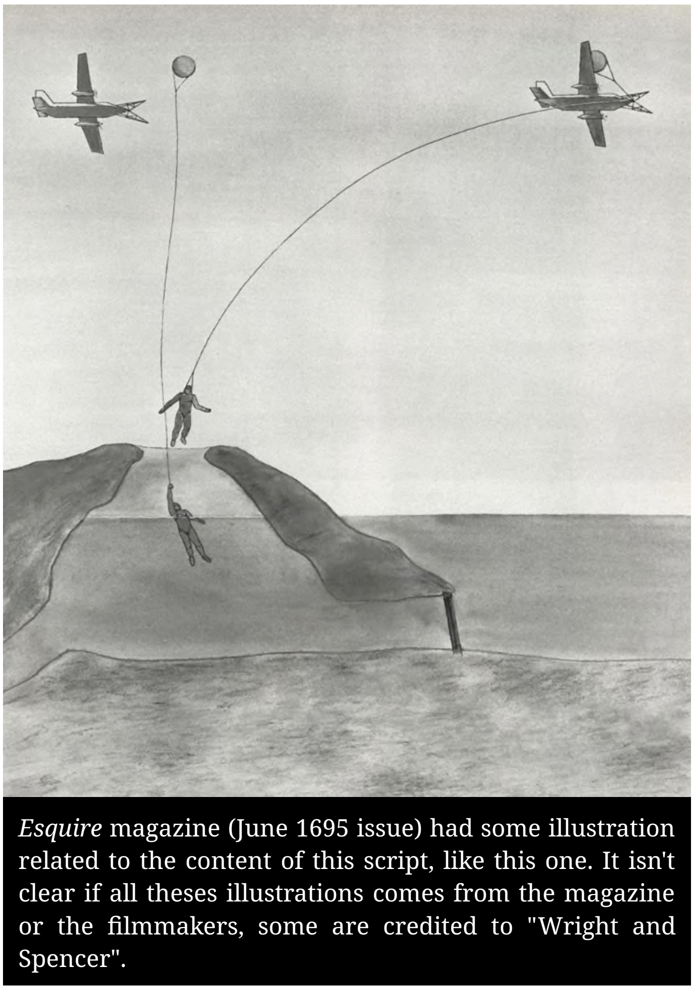
- Largo: This is no- concern of yours, my tender-hearted friend...
- Kutze: You still need me! I will refuse to co-operate!
- Domino: And you? How many people, children, are you going to kill?
- Kutze: It will not be necessary. Word will come the payment has been made. You will see, word will come.



Esquire magazine (June 1695 issue) had some illustration related to the content of this script, like this one. It isn't clear if all theses illustrations comes from the magazine or the filmmakers, some are credited to "Wright and Spencer".

Kutze and Largo leave the room. Leiter arrives near the cave by plane, Bond makes a signal in Morse code "MAYDAY" with a flashlight so that Leiter can spot him. Leiter drops a parachute package which lands in the cave. It contains a Fulton recovery system that 007 uses to join Leiter on the plane! Interestingly Maibaum writes about this: "(oh, well, we can always go back to helicopter winching him out)"; which will be done in the film, although the Fulton will also be used, in another scene: for the finale.

- Leiter: I still say it's impossible.
- Bond: Sure it is, for anybody but Double 0-7. Dr. Q's pill worked, too.

The plane with Bond and Leiter lands at Nassau airport where Q and a "Cushioncraft" (which is a kind of hovercraft) wait for them: "Gear you requested...", says Q. Leiter gets behind the wheel of the Cushioncraft and Bond gets on board, the machine lifts off the ground and goes towards the ocean...

Another concept art of the Esquire magazine on which the Cushioncraft is notably visible.

Near Miami, troops parachute into the ocean near the Disco Volante; the Cushioncraft directly joins the scene. Bond, equipped with an aqualung, joins the battle underwater. This is an opportunity for 007 to use his underwater repeating gun that Q had provided him. An old sunken boat is part of the scenery, as in Whittingham's scripts. The big battle is not yet what it will be, in fact it last on only two pages in the script and Bond fights Largo almost immediately.

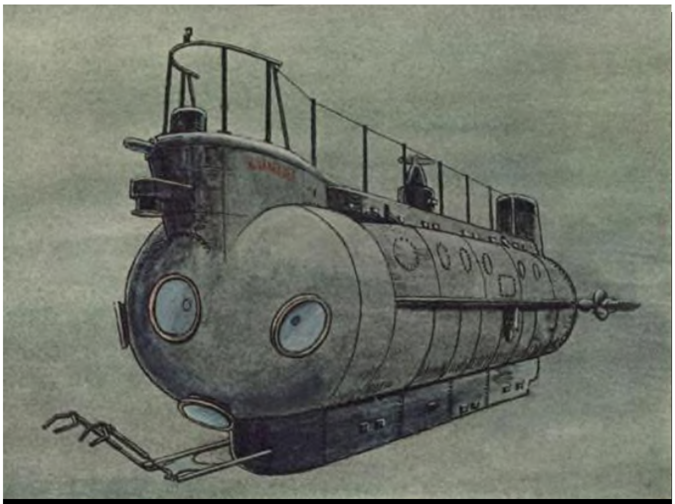
Largo retreats to the Disco Volante, closely followed by 007. Bond manages to grab on and reach the deck of the yacht; he pulls a knife from his belt and walks towards the pilot house. The Disco Volante gains speed (the yacht is not pursued by the US Navy) and Kutze frees Domino (like in the film, the reason isn't quite clear). 007 shows up in the pilot house and a hand-to-hand fight against Largo and his last men ensues while the yacht is out of control.

The fight ends when Domino saves Bond by killing Largo with a harpoon gun.

Bond and Domino jump from the out-of-control yacht, but Kutze, in a Whittingham-style suicidal twist, goes into the fuel aera of the Disco Volante and use a magnesium torch against it; killing himself, blowing up the boat.

Leiter fish out Bond and Domino with the Cushioncraft, "We should have brought our aqualungs" says Bond as he kisses Domino.

"THE END - BUT NOT QUITE", then the end credits are superimposed with an aerial shot of the Victor plane which drops a container (which should contain the ransom) that parachute into the water. The two SPECTRE men shake hands in the Aluminaut submarine which recovers this container with its claw-like extensions. Suddenly the container explodes, obliterating the recovery scene! The real END.



The Aluminaut submarine as depicted in the Esquire magazine.

Some others scrapped ideas

Below are other ideas abandoned along the way during the writing:

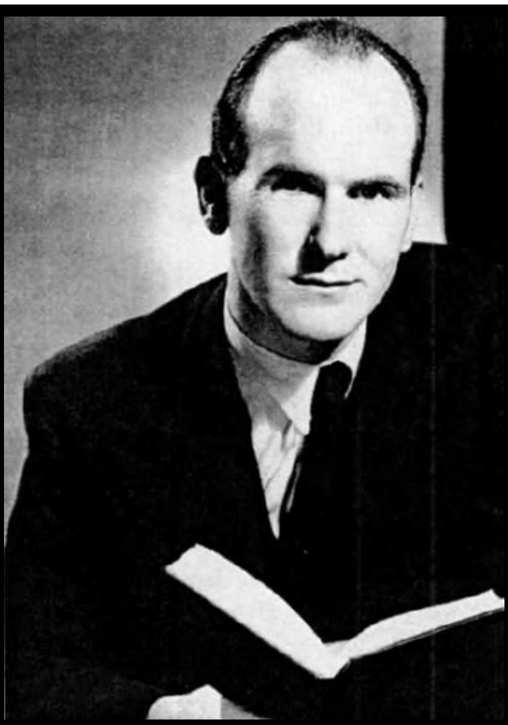
- A version where Q's pill was in suppository form (with still present the line "What am I going to do with this?" and a Q who seems a little embarrassed!).
- During a scene at Palmyra, Bond and Pinder were both in the shark pool. Pinder was dying in a shark pool and Bond was using repellent to avoid the same fate.
- Bond kills Vargas with several bullets with his Walther and not with a harpoon gun. ("Get the point" was however already there. Indeed after Bond's "and then there's the one about the absent-minded strip-teaser" sentence and Vargas death, there was "You probably wouldn't get the point anyway" or "Oh, too bad, I'm afraid you'll never will [get the point]").
- When Bond is stuck in the cave that contained the bombs, he tries to climb the wall. But when he reaches the top, he discovers that the walls are covered with crabs with razor-like claws. Exhausted, he then stops, hook his harness over a rock, swallows Q's pill and wait.
- At the end of the final underwater battle, Largo flees the fight to retreat towards the Disco Volante, pursued by Bond. When he arrives at his yacht, Largo finds Kutze and Domino together near the Disco Volante's seaplane. Largo pushes Domino aside and pushes Kutze inside the plane before starting to take off. 007 surfaces near Domino and asks her where the last bomb is: "in the plane!", she replies. Bond swims towards the plane and manages to grab onto a float before it takes off. Largo sees this and grabs a wrench with which he hits Bond through the window: 007 falls into the water and the plane flies away into the air. Leiter comes to collect Bond and Domino with the hovercraft:

  > - Bond: We're back where we started with that thing up there...

  Suddenly, as the seaplane becomes nothing more than a small dot in the sky, it explodes in a huge mushroom cloud, like in Whittingham's scripts. Domino, who understood what happened, said "Kutze..." and the blast from the explosion capsizes the hovercraft and made them fall into the water. "We should have brought our aqualungs" says Bond before kissing the girl, then final scene with the Aluminaut...
- A version where it is Kutze and not Largo who knocks Bond out of the plane, before activating the bomb and committing his suicide.

1965: enter John Hopkins: Lipson, Daleks and Derval

As usual, Maibaum's script was then revised by another writer. However, this time it was not Berkely Mather but John Hopkins.



Born in London on January 27, 1931, John Richard Hopkins[317] was educated at Raynes Park County Grammar School and completed his national service in the army from 1950 to 1951. He completed his education at St Catharine's College, Cambridge before joining BBC Television as a studio director after graduation. A first marriage took place in 1954 (he divorced and remarried someone else around 1969).

Hopkins began his writing career in radio, writing episodes of Mrs Dale's Diary for eighteen months. An attempt to become a television director failed but he managed to write a few plays for Granada Television.

Hopkins established himself as a television writer when his father-in-law, Nigel Balchin, asked him to try adapting his novels for television. Hopkins later adapted Margery Allingham's novels about private detective Albert Campion and then followed up with a series based on a novel by Rosamund Lehmann. In 1961 he wrote his own thriller series, A Chance of Thunder.

Hopkins wrote over fifty episodes of the crime drama Z-Cars from the BBC, a series on which he stayed two and a half years. The episode Choose Your Partners notably includes the following dialogue: "Scotland Yard - Special Branch - M.I.5 - James Bond on the next plane from Jamaica!". Another character from the series later inspired a new four-part series with Judi Dench, Talking to a Stranger (1966), in which the same events are shown from the points of view of four different protagonists. Acclaimed by critics, Talking to a Stranger would become one of his best-known works.

Hopkins made his film debut with the script he co-wrote with director Roy Ward Baker for Two Left Feet (1963). After Thunderball, he will participate in the writing of The Virgin Soldiers (1969), *Man of La Mancha (*1972) and Murder by Decree from 1979 (which pits Sherlock Holmes against Jack the Ripper).

Hopkins also wrote his first play in 1968, This Story of Yours, which was adapted into a film in 1973 by Sean Connery and Sidney Lumet: The Offence, with himself writing the script. Hopkins would go on to write other plays as well as other television series such as Codename: Kyril or Smiley's People, adapted from the novel by John le Carré.

His last television work was the award-winning docudrama television film Hiroshima (1995), an American and Japanese perspective account of events surrounding the dropping of the first atomic bomb.

Hopkins died at his home in California in July 1998, following an accident in which he slipped, hit his head before falling unconscious into his swimming pool where he drowned.

Hopkins had earlier been hired by Harry Saltzman to write the screenplay for Funeral in Berlin, the second Harry Palmer film[318]. "I was moved on to Thunderball because Harry wanted to use that as a means to get to know me", Hopkins recalls[319].

Jack Whittingham (and his family) felt let down by McClory that he either didn't proposed to EON to bring him back onto Thunderball or not or pushed them enough for it[320]. McClory and Whittingham must have seen each other only once after the court case of 1963[321].

Hopkins was officially hired on January 26, 1965 for three weeks, but ended up staying two months[322].

Let's now talk a 183 pages (!) script: it is a "revised" copy of the script from January 19 (revisions last until March 19). The cover page specifies that it was written by Maibaum and Hopkins and that it is "based on the original story by Kevin McClory, Jack Whittingham and Ian Fleming" (a statement which was not present on the previous scripts, Cuneo is still not mentioned and will not be in the film credits).

After the gunbarrel, we open at Jacques Boitier's funeral at the château d'Anet. (In the movie the character will be renamed Jacques Bouvar). Bond is introduced in the script like this:

> Here stand two people looking down, apart from the crowd, yet interested. One of them is an elegant frenchwoman in her late twenties, and beside her, that idol of the intelligentsia, that opiate of the oppressed and working classes: James Bond.

> - Richard Maibaum[323] : In re-writing it [Thunderball] four years later [after 1961], I had to remember the proven public delight in jokes, gadgetry and so forth. Now the two scripts are completely different, because now we know exactly what it is the public love about Bond, and how they best like to see the stories treated in cinema.

As in the film, the french woman La Porte says that the colonel died in his sleep.

> - Bond (shrugs): I'm not the only one with a license to kill.

The dialogue continues to differ from the film:

> - La Porte: You seem sorry it was not your.... Your intervention.
> - Bond: Jacques Boitier killed two of our Double-0 people, this last six month... What d'you expect me to say?
> - La Porte: Perhaps nothing. Except that madame Boitier is a singularly beautiful women.
> - Bond: As you say, a "singularly" beautiful woman.

The "widow" leaves the chapel and gets into "big car, presumably from Ford Motors" (the manufacturer who featured its Mustang and Thunderbird in Goldfinger), accompanied by Brinon. To the question of La Porte (Is there anything else the Second Office can do for you?), Bond replies "Later, without a doubt, but for the moment...", and adds "As I said... Later" as the widow's limousine drives away.

Bond gets into his car, which is not an Aston Martin DB5 or a Bentley, but a (Ford) Thunderbird (!), and heads in the same direction as the limousine.

In the castle, madame turns out to be a monsieur and following a fight, Bond kills him by strangling him with his false breasts. Chased, Bond flies away in a jetpack and joins La Porte who is waiting for him near his Thunderbird. When he removes his jetpack, the script tells us that "it takes him no longer to do this than a golfer with a collapsible trolley, or a secret agent in Istanbul would take with a folding sniper's rifle".

As armed men from the castle approach and shoot, Bond and La Porte flee in the Thunderbird (which doesn't have water cannons)... And then: CREDITS.

The credits end and we see Largo in Paris parking in front of a "no parking" sign in a car that the script describes as "not a Ford, but something of the Ferrari-Maserati breed" (Guess what? Largo will ultimately be at the wheel of a Ford Thunderbird in the film!). Largo is described as a "powerful, middle-aged man, a man of elegance but also of authority, a man with friends in high places, but a man who does not need them".

He enters the Parisian SPECTRE building, passes by the Karlskis, presses a button on a wall (not of a remote control) and reaches the meeting room. Unlike the film, Largo is not number two:

> - Blofeld: Come in Number Three. You do not need to apologize, I know why you are late. I was saying how much we all at SPECTRE regret the death in the Istanbul affair, of Number Six.... Rosa Klebb, who will be sadly missed.... But in the meantime we will proceed with the usual financial reports.... Number Ten?

(In the film, number six is Jacques Bouvar).

So we proceed to the financial report (which is like the film, except that the order of the lines is reversed) then Number 9 is electrocuted. Blofeld explains that he had gambled and lost the money.

A scene cut from the film.

Following Largo's explanation of the SPECTRE's new plan, we find "Lipson" (not Lippe) in his sweatbox (he is also never referred to as a Count in this script!). Patricia is massaging 007:

> - Bond: That's better.
> - Patricia: Mink. It reduces tension.
> - Bond: That could be more easily achieved if you wore more clothes.... Miss?... Miss?
> - Patricia (ignores him): I'm afraid your time is almost up.
> - Bond: What is your name? And when do you get off?
> - Patricia: Patricia Fearing, and a man with your back condition needs all the rest he can get.
> [She presses hard and he lets out a groan of pain].
> - Bond: You did that on purpose.
> - Patricia: Not at all, I'm afraid you're going to need the full treatment.

> - British censor examiner[324] : We have now studied the screenplay of Thunderball and I think we may have some problems with [...] both sex and sadism. [...] I am not sure about the mink gloves, which have a strong sexual connotation. I hope you will have an alternative available [...].

Lipson comes out of the sweat box and joins them:

> - Lipson: I'll see you after my shower, Pat.
> - Patricia: I'll be ready. This is Mr. Bond ; Mr. Lipson
> - Bond: You're not taking her away from me already, are you?
> [007 sees the red tattoo, described as "a zigzag crossed by two vertical strokes"].
> - Bond: The only joy in this dreary place...
> - Lipson: You've discovered that too. A half hour, Pat.

After his phone call to Moneypenny and being spotted by Angelo, 007 joins (without taking a grape) Patricia. When he tries to grope her, the script tells us that "she disengages herself. She has had a lot of practice at this" or "it is a longer kiss than she had imagined possible under these conditions, and it takes some time end all her skill to disengage herself".

Patricia puts Bond on the traction table (it's Bond who says the words "torture rack" and not her) and Lipson tries to kill Bond. When Patricia returns, there are additional and altered lines of dialogue:

> - Patricia: ...And I can tell you it's a miracle I came back when I did... I'd left my watch behind.
> - Bond: I'll buy you another one tomorrow.... Solid diamond.
> [...]
> - Bond: You think I need relax after that? Wait till I tell your Doctor Wain what I think about this place of his, and this broken-down equipment...
> - Patricia: You wouldn't tell him... Please... I'd lose my job.
> - Bond: I suppose my silence could have a price.

This script include the scene between Bond and Patricia in the steam bath (she actually says inside: "no, you're wrong.... This is not what I meant by the full treatment"). When Bond leaves the steam bath, "see you later, Irrigator". In the movie utter an "Alligator" after than, in reference to the song See You Later, Alligator?

Bond sees Lipson in a sweat box and takes revenge on him.

The script continues with Lipson at the phone booth making a call to Fiona (there is no mini scene of Bond and Patricia with the mink glove; scene cut from some English language editions).

We then find the Irish Fiona Kelly in bed with Colonel Franco Palazzi. In the movie the name of Fiona will be changed from Kelly to Volpe (apparently because Italian actress Luciana Paluzzi was cast to plays her[325]).

Curiously, in the 2015 video-game James Bond: World of Espionage, Fiona will be Irish again and named "Fiona Kelley".

A little later Angelo arrives and Fiona kills Palazzi herself with a silenced pistol. Angelo takes Franco's place, asks for a raise and goes to Boscombe Air Force Base where he boards the Vulcan.

We find Bond, Patricia and the mink glove and we are then treated with the mini-scene which is earlier in the film:

> - Patricia: Mh... Mh...
> - Bond: Release the tension, you know.
> - Patricia: Not mine...
> [Sound of the bomber taking off].
> - Patricia: Enough to drive you mad... Unless of course it's that mink glove.
> - Bond: I'll shut the window.

Bond goes to close the window, but unlike the film: he doesn't see an ambulance and he returns to Patricia. Instead the script segues into the interior of the Vulcan where Angelo gasses the rest of the crew and joins the Disco Volante (Vargas and Janni's descriptions are still reversed).

Largo cuts Angelo's air supply and the SPECTRE steals the two atomic bombs.

We find Bond in Shrublands heading to his car while Patricia tells him "And you'll write... Or phone me at the very least" at the end of page 38.

Just after there is another series of pages 38 (38A, 38B... 38E) which were probably written later. In these Bond looks at Lippe (and no longer Lipson) through his bedroom window: it is 1:00 in the morning. An ambulance carrying Palazzi's body pulls up and Bond goes to get dressed.

> - Patricia: James. Where are you? James!
> - Bond: You're supposed to be asleep.
> - Patricia: So are you. (He kisses her). Where are you going?
> - Bond: Nowhere. Just thought I'd get a bit of exercise.
> - Patricia: You must be joking!

Bond goes out into the corridors to investigate (Lippe sees his shadow) and discovers Palazzi's body. During this sequence, Bond blocked a corridor with a trolley and, as one of the paramedics was about to discreetly shoot him when he discovers the body, a noise is heard in the corridor. 007 walks out of the room (thus getting out of the paramedic's line of sight) to the source of the noise and discovered that Patricia had followed him and tripped over the trolley. He looks at her:

> - Patricia: Don't just stand there! (He helps to get her up). Is this your idea of a joke?

We now come to page 49 where we find Bond again in Shrublands walking towards his car while Patricia says to him "and you'll write, or phone me at the very least?". The rest of the dialogue follows the film.

> - Bond: Well thanks for the treatment, let's... Let's stay in touch...
> - Patricia: Anytime, James. Anywhere.

LANA TURNER · BARRY SULLIVAN · GLYNIS JOHNS
Another Time, Another Place
Lana's Newest
INTRODUCING SEAN CONNERY
VISTAVISION

(In the movie Bond then replies to her "Another time, another place". A reference of the 1958's movie of the same name starring Sean Connery. This is not in the script.).

So Bond leaves in his car (the model is not specified) and there is the scene on the highway between him, Lipson and Fiona with her flamethrower (it will be replaced with rockets in the film) motorcycle.

In revised pages from March 3, 1965, Bond arrives at Moneypenny's office. If in the film Bond of says "His wife's probably lost her dog", Bond says in this script: "The Daleks have taken over!", a reference to Doctor Who!

BOND (grunts)
The Daleks have taken over!

007 therefore goes to the conference room, M speaks and the dialogue that follow is similar to the one in the film.

Inside the file Bond finds a photo of "Derval" (and no longer Palazzi, these are revised pages from March 3. Did they changed the name of the NATO's observer into "Francois" (François) Derval because of the cast of french actress Claudine Auger?).

In the next scene we find Bond walking in a block of buildings: he goes to Derval's apartment! He knocks on the door, no one answers and he forces the door of the apartment for entering. He begins to search the place, but he doesn't know that Fiona is hidden in the place: she takes out a tube of lipstick which turns out to be a telescopic knife. As he is about to enter the room where Fiona is waiting to stab him, Bond's eyes stop on a photo. Bond puts the photo in his pocket and leaves the apartment.

An insert show the photo: Derval and his sister on a beach. Her name has been Frenchified too: from Dominetta to Dominique.

M assigns Bond to Canada, but Bond show him the photo and requests Nassau instead because that's where the girl is. When M asks his agent where he found the photo, the script tells us there is "an uncomfortable silence".

After a stint in Moneypenny's office, Bond goes to the Bahamas.

In revised pages from March 4, 1965, we find him (directly) underwater, helping "Domino" to free herself from a kelp. Together they return to the surface where two boats and a "tall dark Bahamian girl", Paula Roberts (still not Caplan), await them. As in the film, Bond fakes a breakdown in his boat and goes ashore with Dominique. The script included dialogue on the boat:

- Bond: Terribly nice of you.

> - Dominique: I hope your girl friend thinks so. You deliberately fouled up that motor.
> - Bond: I should head for the hills. Beautiful and clever!
> - Dominique: Yes, I know. So many people tell me...
> - Bond: People you're trying to escape from? Down there?
> - Dominique: You ask a lot of questions.
> - Bond: Lot of things I want to know.
> - Dominique: Where do you come from?
> - Bond: London.

Cut to London: Big Ben ringing three times at 6:00 and of Blofeld (at least the back of his chair) in Paris says, "They have accepted our terms. Inform Number Two in Nassau". (Largo is therefore no longer Number Three in these revisions).

Bond and Dominique are by a pool:

> - Bond: As I told you, an important appointment.
> - Dominique: Your girl friend will be looking for you.
> - Bond: She won't find me, will she? Too bad it isn't conch chowder.
> - Dominique: You've been reading the wrong books, Mr. Bond.

The rest of the dialogue is similar to the film, except when she leaves:

> - Bond: DOMINO!
> - Dominique: How do you knew that? How do you know my friends call me Domino?
> - Bond: What else would they call you. Nicky?
> - Dominique: Goodbye, Mr. Bond.

(In the movie Bond will rather replies "It's on the bracelet on your ankle").

Bond goes to his hotel room after leaving Domino. He inspects his room and the one of Paula, listens to the book's tape recorder. Leiter shows up, Bond hits him then takes care of the henchman (Quist) hidden in the bathroom:

> [Bond returns the weapon (without the magazine) to Quist].
> - Bond: In case you've forgotten, the name is Bond, James Bond.
> [He shuts the door in Quist's face].
> - Leiter: What's the game?
> - Bond: How's the chin?
> - Leiter: Who is he?
> - Bond: Could be a watchdog for a jealous boyfriend.
> - Leiter: I don't think!
> - Bond: Or maybe the Opposition! [...].

In the next scene Bond and Leiter are in Prince George Wharf and join Pinder and Paula then Q (their meeting takes place on revised version of March 15 and March 4 depending on the pages):

> - Q: Double-07!
> - Bond: Oh, no! When did you get here?

- Q: If you hadn't been in such an almighty hurry to get out here, Double-07, I shouldn't be here at all.

Bond makes the presentation and his remark about an Aston Martin with floats. We now proceed the gadgets presentation, with a few different lines and additional gadgets compared to the film. Q takes out the watch:

- Q: This is a geiger-counter you may find useful, and unobtrusive.
- Bond: Might come in handy.
- Q: The sweep-hand takes the radio-activity count. It's waterproof.
- Bond: Shock-proof too?
- Q: Of course!

Q picks up a camera:.

- Q: Here is something I would like you to use with special care.
- Bond: Everything you give me...
- Q: Is treated with equal contempt. Yes, I know. But this camera... Is something we just developed.
- Bond: What it do? Explode, burst into flames, or play God save the Queen?
- Q: It takes eight photos in rapid succession when you press this button.
- Bond: Ah!
- Q: Now, this camera is a Geiger counter.
- Bond: You could have fooled me.
- Q: Try to be a little less frivolous than usual frivolous self, Double-07 [Dialogue where Q explains how the device works].

[Q now shows him some kind of revolver].

- Q: Sub-aqua repeating gun. It fires explosive magnesium tracer-darts.

[Q takes out the small respirator].

- Q: In the event an aqualung or rebreather is not immediately available. You can use this device, for limited periods of course, perhaps two minutes at a time.

[Q shows him an aqualung].

- Q: On the aqualung itself. Forward-firing rockets [6 tubes].

- Bond: I'll need to keep my head down.
- Q: It would be advisable, yes. The controls are set at the waist, hand controls. This provides an ink screen to the rear to cover your retreat.

Finally Q presents the radioactive pill to 007 and the scene ends with "you swallow it".

There is in this script the scene where Quist shows up in Palmyra to report to Largo before being thrown into the shark pool. Just after that Largo moves to another location in Palmyra and runs into Dominique:

- Largo: My dear, how beautiful you look.
- Dominique: Thank you.
- Largo: I've been so busy these last days, I hardly seem to have seen you. It must be so boring for you.
- Dominique: I keep myself amused.
- Largo: So I believe.
- Dominique: Can we talk later? I'm so hot, I want to swim.
- Largo: Not just at the moment, my dear. [Largo places an arm on his shoulders].
- Dominique: I want to swim.
- Largo: I have a job for you.

Kevin McClory make a cameo in the film when Bond enter in the casino. He his the seated man in a grey suit on the bottom of the screen.

Domino looks at Largo in silence, then they move away from the terrace.

In the next scene, Bond goes to the casino and joins Largo's table. The dialogue and scenes are similar to the film (except that 007 says "Bond, James Bond" instead of just "Bond"). He wins:

- Largo: Just when I was going to take my niece for a drink
- Bond: I could give you a drink.
- Dominique: If you've nothing better to do.
- Largo: Perhaps my niece can discover your secret [at cards].

After the dance with Domino, Bond meets with Leiter and Pinder, and goes diving to inspect the Disco Volante. The sequence unfolds like the film, expect when grenade are throw. Here there is a little scene:

Domino, in robe, appears behind Largo.
- Domino: What's happening?
- Largo (sharply): Get back below!
Bewildered, she turns to obey.

Then Bond reaches the shore where he gets into Fiona's car: "I am in luck. Instead of a miserable hike, I get to ride with the best-looking girl I've seen on the island", he tells her.

Filmed but cut.

They pass Palmyra then stop at the hotel. During the trip Bond allows himself a remark: "One thing about women drivers. They always know where they're going".

Then comes the scene where M and other guys listen to Blofeld's instructions for payment (there are a few more lines, it is said that De Beers is not sure they can get the all the diamonds in time).

From there, the script unfolds again like the film (as a reminder in the film the order of scenes is as follows: Domino and Bond around the swimming pool, casino, Bond meets Leiter, death of Quist by sharks, meeting of Pinder and Q, message from Blofeld in London, diving near the Disco Volante, and the meeting between Bond and Fiona).

007, Leiter (and Pinder) look at Bond's photos of the Disco Volante, then fly a helicopter (rather than a plane) above the ocean to find the wreckage of the Vulcan. Meanwhile, Largo and Fiona go clay pigeon shooting. This scene is much longer than in the film in terms of dialogue:

- Largo: Of course they are watching us, my dear. What else have they to do? They can only hope we shall make a mistake, before their time runs out.
- Fiona: If you had succeeded in killing Bond last night...
- Largo: That was unfortunate, agreed. A misunderstanding.
- Fiona: Was it?
- Largo: Of course.
- Fiona: Are you sure...
- Largo: My dear, surely this can wait a moment?
- Fiona: You would like Bond dead.
- Largo: Yes.
- Fiona: Because he tries to make love to your woman?
- Largo: Because he is Bond, and should be killed.

- Fiona: When the time is right, he will be killed. I shall kill him.
- Largo: Sometimes, my dear... (He takes Fiona's face in one of his hand) I think you forget. I found you. I made you.
[Sound of Domino diving into the pool].
- Fiona: This woman should not be here, Largo. It is dangerous.
- Largo: To the fearful, all things seem dangerous.
- Fiona: There is no room for mistakes. No place for personal indulgence.
- Largo: When there are mistakes, my dear, then I will listen to you.
- Fiona: If Bond had died last night, as result of your "misunderstanding", his Government would know for a certainty the bombs are here.
- Largo: Fortunately, however, he did not die.
[In the helicopter].
- Leiter: You're taking an awful chance, James. Going to Palmyra?
- Bond: He's expecting me, isn't he?
- Leiter: That's what I mean!
The helicopter lands at the airport and Bond gets out.
- Fiona: What do you intend doing with the man, Quist?
- Largo: He has already been punished.
- Fiona: He was acting on your orders?
- Largo: Naturally.
- Fiona: Perhaps the wrong man was punished?
[Domino comes out of the pool and sees Fiona, she looks at her coldly].
- Largo: Fiona, my dear.
[Fiona leaves. She comes back to him a little later].
- Largo: Tell me, my dear, is the time right?
- Fiona: What are you talking about?
- Largo: Bond, he's here. (He throws his rifle to Fiona who catches it) He has accepted my invitation.

So Bond is at Palmyra's parking lot where he spots the Fiona car and is led inside. He comes across Domino who is swimming in the pool; Janni and Vargas look at him a little further away.

The scene follows the film, at the phrase "They [he sharks] know it is time for them to be fed", Bond adds: "Who's on the menu today?". Largo doesn't answer him and they talk about the Disco Volante, here there is the deleted scene where Bond visits the yacht:

> - Domino: Come along, Mr. Bond. The fish chowder smells delicious.
> - Largo: Domino, my dear, I wonder if you have nothing important to do this afternoon.... Mr. Bond would like to inspect the Disco Volante, from the inside. Perhaps you would take him?
> - Domino: Of course.
> - Largo: We can all meet at the Junkanoo later. You will be my guest tonight, Mr. Bond?
> - Bond: You're very kind.
> - Largo: It will be my pleasure. Go along, my dear, I'll join you in a few minutes. My friends are hungry too.

Bond and Domino walk away while Largo goes to open a large basket containing bloody meat. He feeds the sharks with it (they fight among themselves for the meat). A boat stops near the Disco Volante and Bond and Domino board the yacht. The captain welcomes them:

- Captain: Mr. Largo warned me to expect you.
- Bond: Please go first. You can tell me when to duck my head.
- Captain: As you wish, follow me.

M.Y. DISCO VOLANTE
M.Y. DISCO VOLANTE
DISCO VOLANTE PANAMA

They follow the captain, Bond looks at his Geiger watch: no radioactivity. They arrive at the engine room where there are two large identical Diesel engines. Domino is clearly bored while Bond seems to be listening attentively to the captain. Another look at the watch shows no radioactivity. They are now in the radio room, Domino seems upset:

DISCO VOLANTE

- Bond: What do you carry? The usual Marconi short and long waves, I suppose? Can I have a look? Radio has always fascinated me.
- Captain: I'm sorry, sir. Perhaps another time. At the moment I have to keep the operator listening in to Met reports.
- Bond: Ah. Well, then another time.

Bond glances at his watch again, which shows no radioactivity. They go to the after-deck where there is a two-seater amphibious craft:

- Captain: The ballast problem is important with these ships. When the bow come up, the fuel shifts forward.

Bond glances down at his watch.

- Domino (sharply): I'm afraid we're keeping Mr. Bond from something important.
- Bond: No. Please go on.

[007 smiles at Domino].

- Captain: Well, er, we have big lateral tanks to correct these things.

DISCO VOLANTE

[Domino turns away from the men and leans against the rail and looks at the ocean].

- Bond: Well, thank you Captain, it's been most instructive.
- Captain: Not at all, sir. It's been a pleasure.

[Bond joins Domino].

- Domino: I don't believe you heard a word he said.
- Bond: On the contrary.
- Domino: You never stopped looking at your watch.
- Bond: I'm a clock watcher.
- Domino: I think you've got a date!
- Bond: No. You could call it a previous engagement?

At Bond's hotel, Fiona Kelly meets Paula Roberts: the latter is captured by Vargas and Janni. Compared to the film there is an additional short sequence where Fiona shows the photos taken by Bond to Paula saying: "Tell me about these", then seeing that Paula remains silent: "You will tell me. Now, maybe later, but you will tell me".

The Junkanoo festival is in this script, Bond and Domino are there waiting for Largo:

Another scene cut during the editing.

- Bond: I think maybe we've been stood up.
- Domino: If you look at your watch just once again, Mr. Bond... I shall scream so loudly, the entire procession will come to a standstill!
- Bond: Largo did say he'd meet us here, didn't he?

The dialogue continues and Leiter gestures to Bond, (Domino comments: Your "previous engagement?"), and 007 learns that Paula is missing.

A little later we see Largo playing chess against Janni while Dominique plays the piano when the power goes out in Palmyra. Bond is infiltrating Largo's property, he overpowers a henchman, discovers Paula's body (the script tells us that Kutze is "crying"), then the alarm sounds.

Bond comes out and is (continuously) chased by henchmen until he falls into the pool. As in the film, the sharks are released and Bond manages to escape by joining the other pool. "Sorry, loves, you'll have to order something else, I'm off".

After a mini-scene where 007 joins Pinder outside Palmyra, Bond returns to his hotel where he runs into Fiona who is in the shower (not the bath). This scene is not what it will be in the film since Bond will not give Fiona sandals but a bathrobe. They end up in bed (there is no dialogue about "wild things") and afterwards, she wears a semi-transparent green nightgown while Bond is near the book-recorder:

- Fiona (voice): There isn't a book can teach you anything.
[007 decides not to touch the book. Seeing Fiona in her nightgown].
- Bond: Most becoming.
- Fiona: I only wear it on special occasions.
- Bond: Wonderful, the way this is happening, isn't it?
- Fiona: I knew it would from the moment I saw you. So why play games?
- Bond: I'm very fond of games.
They embrace.
- Fiona: You've made a terrible mess of my hair.
[She sits at her dressing table].
- Bond: Tell me, Fiona...
- Fiona: Anything.
- Bond: Is the girl one of you?
- Fiona: One of us?
- Bond: If it's meant to be a secret darling, you shouldn't wear the same ring as Largo. Should you?
[Fiona's hand goes to her lipstick-knife].
- Fiona: It's a ring I like to wear.
- Bond: Vanity is such a dangerous enemy, don't you think?
- Fiona: Vanity, Mr. Bond?
[He places a hand on Fiona and turns her towards him].
- Fiona: Something you know so much about.
[Fiona presses a button of her lipstick and the blade comes out, the tip touching Bond's throat].
- Fiona (calling): Vargas. (Bond starts moving) No, don't move.
[Fiona pushes a second knife against the pit of Bond's stomach].
- Fiona: I'm sure you have a proper sense of values, James.

> - Bond: Oh, yes.

Vargas and Janni arrive, wearing Junkanoo costumes. They hand another one costume to Bond.

> - Fiona: Get dressed, Mr. Bond.
> - Bond: You didn't answer my question, Fiona.
> - Fiona: Would we employ an amateur like that stupid girl?!
> - Bond: You don't expect me to wear that, surely?
> [...]
> - Fiona: Poor James! All this must be rather a shock. I mean, the girls you've made love to in the past... They've been only too glad to do anything for you. But this time... It's different. This time, lover, the great charm is wasted.

Bond is brought down the hall by the bad guys, they come across a waiter pushing a cart with food for two people.

> - Bond: Well, now is that the meal I ordered. (He stops at the cart) You haven't wasted any time, have you?
> - Vargas: Come on!
> - Bond: I'll just check you've brought everything.
> [007 examines the food as Fiona walks back impatiently, the waiter begins to protest].
> - Bond: Splendid. Yes. Now, what's this?
> - Waiter: Sorry, sir, this is an order for....
> - Bond: Did I order steak tartare? I don't remember...
> - Fiona: Come along, Mr. Bond.
> - Bond: Perhaps you ordered...
> [Fiona points her handbag at Bond, she has one hand in it].
> - Fiona: We have no time to waste playing stupid games.

Suddenly Bond throws the alcohol stove into Janni's face, throws the cart towards Vargas and jumps on Fiona. They both fall and Bond gets up before running to escape (in the film, Bond runs away while he is in the car). Fiona shoots, Bond trips and gets up then rushes towards the stairs. He stops to look at his foot which has apparently been hit by a bullet and walks into the Junkanoo parade.

(Without getting on a parade float), Bond ends up entering the "Jump Jump Club" (which will be renamed in Kiss Kiss Club in the film due to the song that John Barry had originally recorded before the one sung by Tom Jones: Mr. Kiss Kiss, Bang Bang[326]). He dances with a girl, then with Fiona whom he puts in Vargas' line of fire. Bond places Fiona's body on a chair and tells the couple next to it, "She's dead tired".

(At one point, Hopkins also imagined that Bond could kills the henchmen and Fiona one by one during the Junkanoo. He had Bond kissing Fiona, pressing his gun against her stomach, before shooting her[327]).

Right after, the script includes an additional scene where Bond returns to the hotel to see Largo and Dominique:

- Largo: I thought perhaps you weren't coming.
- Bond: I got held up, rather longer than I expected. (He kisses Domino's hand) Still, I managed to break away at last.

Scene missing from the film.

In England, an armored van and its escort go to Waddington Air Base, the dialogue that follow with M and his colleagues is essentially the same as in the film. We then find Bond and Leiter in the helicopter:

- Leiter: Even if we find the plane...
- Bond: We'll find it.
- Leiter: We're too late now.
- Bond: Never say die.
- Leiter: Why not? [...]
- Bond: Felix, take her down. I want a closer look...
- Leiter: Closer look at what?
- Bond: Don't know, old love. Sharks and some seaweed.
- Leiter: Plenty of that!
- Bond: Take her down, will you? Let's have a look. Something distinctly odd about that.
- Leiter: What?
- Bond: The rest of the bottom's all coral, just...

They land, find the Vulcan, Bond explores it and finds Angelo body. He takes "Derval's" watch as well as his identification tag and 007 reaches the surface where Leiter shoots another shark.

In the next scene, Bond joins Domino underwater. Vargas watches the jets of bubbles become one and reach the beach.

Bond removes the sea-egg spikes with his teeth and there is some additional dialogue:

> [...]
> - Bond: It's a long story, a bad one, and it involves your friend Largo.
> - Domino: When we were children I remember...
> - Bond: I need your help.
> - Domino: He frightened me, Francois, he pretended he was dead.
> - Bond: Domino! Listen to me. I am on oath to tell no one about this.
> - Domino: Of course, that's why you made love to me...
> - Bond: I have to trust you...
> - Domino: You want me to help you!
> - Bond: I thought at first you were part of the conspiracy.
> - Domino: Now, you blackmail me with the death of my brother.
> - Bond: Your brother was killed by Largo, or on his orders.
> - Domino: I hate you!
> - Bond: I came to tell you that and then, seeing you, knowing it was now or perhaps never, yes I made love to you.
> - Domino: I hate you.
> - Bond: I didn't want to tell you, Domino. I didn't want to hurt you. But something more important, something... Hundreds, perhaps thousands of people will die, and very soon, if you won't help me.
> [...]

Vargas approaches with a stiletto and Bond spears him. There are new additional dialogues that echo the previous ones:

> [...]
> - Domino: James, understand, I am doing this for Francois.
> - Bond: Yes.
> - Domino: But when I said I hated you, I didn't mean...
> - Bond: No, you were right. You didn't know...
> - Domino: I do not hate you. (He kisses her) James, do not send me back to him. Please! I am frightened.
> [He doesn't respond].
> - Domino: I'm sorry. Yes, I'll go, but promise me. You will kill Largo for me? Whatever happens.
> - Bond: Hurry. There's very little time.

In this script she tells him about a cliff location and Bond goes there. He takes the place of one of the SPECTRE's henchmen and thus joins the Disco Volante. Largo says "conversion" and the yacht splits in two. Bond, Largo and his men then reach the underwater cavern where the bombs are located and 007 finally finds himself trapped in the cave. Largo discovers Domino's treachery and Leiter arrives by helicopter to retrieve Bond (who doesn't launch a flare but still uses a flashlight).

The helicopter lands at an airport where Q and his Cushioncraft are waiting. Then there is the underwater battle which still has not changed compared to the previous scripts and whose two pages are the cover pages of this Thunderball chapter.

> - Ricou Browning (choreographer and director of the underwater sequences)[328] : We used everybody's ideas on how to shoot, kill and fight somebody.

> Everybody contributed. And we got great coverage on it and were able to create a pretty good fight. I recall that in the script there wasn't a lot of detail on the underwater battle, we pretty much had to create it ourselves.

The rest of the script is similar to what was written before: Bond and Largo fight in the cabin of the Disco Volante, Domino kills Largo, Kutze commits suicide, Leiter fishes out Bond and Domino, then there is the little scene with the SPECTRE's men in the Aluminaut submarine.

Maibaum's opinion on a rough cut of the film

The first scenes to be shoot would be part of the pre-title sequence at Château d'Anet at February 16, 1965[329]. Hopkins flew to Paris and was able to assist to Bondmania's craze at February 18, Goldfinger french premiere with Connery overwhelmed by the fans and the journalists[330].

Living in the Bahamas, McClory would prove an asset to the production when the shooting moved there, with McClory using his knowledge of the island and his influential contacts.

After seeing a rough cut of the film, Maibaum wrote a memo which he began by saying that what he had seen bodes another blockbuster, but that there is still much work to be done.

He judges the performances of basically all of the main actors, except Connery, to be weak and suggests having them dubbed. This concerns Molly Peters, Claudine Auger, Adolfo Celi, Luciana Paluzzi, the actor who plays Blofeld (Anthony Dawson) and the members of SPECTRE.

In the scene in M's office, Maibaum wants to cut a line of dialogue that he considers ridiculous, about M saying the 00 agents are well trained. "Just have M say if Bond says he saw the man he saw him".

Maibaum wants to remove the sequence where Bond enters Paula's room before his own because he found it confusing and long. He also wants to clarify that Domino is not involved in Largo's illegal activities, in part because "Domino is the only sympathetic character among the girls (except Paula, of course). Give the women in the audience a chance to identify with her".

At the casino, Bond may have had a little more than luck on his side. Indeed Leiter was present, had scenes where he was disguised as a dealer and did a trick with the cards. "It's a good idea, but it doesn't work", writes Maibaum, proposing to delete this passage. Likewise, he wants to remove a line from Largo during the casino scene that says "Oh, yes, one of my associates was talking about you".

Likewise this document suggests that there was a scene where Fiona took Bond by car to Palymra. "Then out again?", writes Maibaum, saying that it makes things confusing and that the scene where she leads him out of it is enough.

Maibaum wants to cut the scene where Bond is on the Disco Volante constantly checking his watch because "Claudine is at her worst here as an actress", and it is not well done, Largo isn't stupid enough to let him on board and the audience shouldn't know that the bombs aren't there. "You need to save footage. Here's a good place to do it".

He suggests cutting the line "The things I do for England" (that can be heard in the trailer) when Fiona remove Bond's shirt at the hotel, as well as lines between Fiona and Largo containing something like "You forget who made you".

"Largo's clutching at his [eye] patch and hamming it up at poolside, implying perhaps that a shark bit his eye out or something, is also incomprehensible, irrelevant, ludicrous, and wastes time".

ADOLFO CELI

Visible in the trailer but cut from the film.

Maibaum also believes that during the final underwater battle, when Bond enters the scene, the camera should not leave him because it would reduce the importance of his role in the battle.

Arriving at the Disco Volante, Maibaum thinks that we should avoid showing Largo punching because Adolfo Celi "looks like a chorus boy in the way he throws punches", and more generally to reduce the length of this scene.

Maibaum also asks to insert a few shots in order to clarify certain scenes (for example a shot of Lippe in his car during the chase because "we don't know who's in it").

Later, after the film's release, Maibaum would state:

> - Richard Maibaum[331] : Largo was a disappointment, partly because it was played by an actor who I thought was miscast. I had to invent other people to augment his villainy.

> - Richard Maibaum[332] : Dominetta, whose friends call her Domino, is one of Fleming's least convincing ambivalent anti-heroines. Fortunately, however, we have the talented, pinup-contoured Claudine Auger to bring her warmly to life.

> - Richard Maibaum[333] : In Thunderball, it really did become larger than life. The production became enormous, more fantastical, almost comic strip. And once we'd done that, there was just no way of bringing them down. With Thunderball, the movies became documented fantasy.

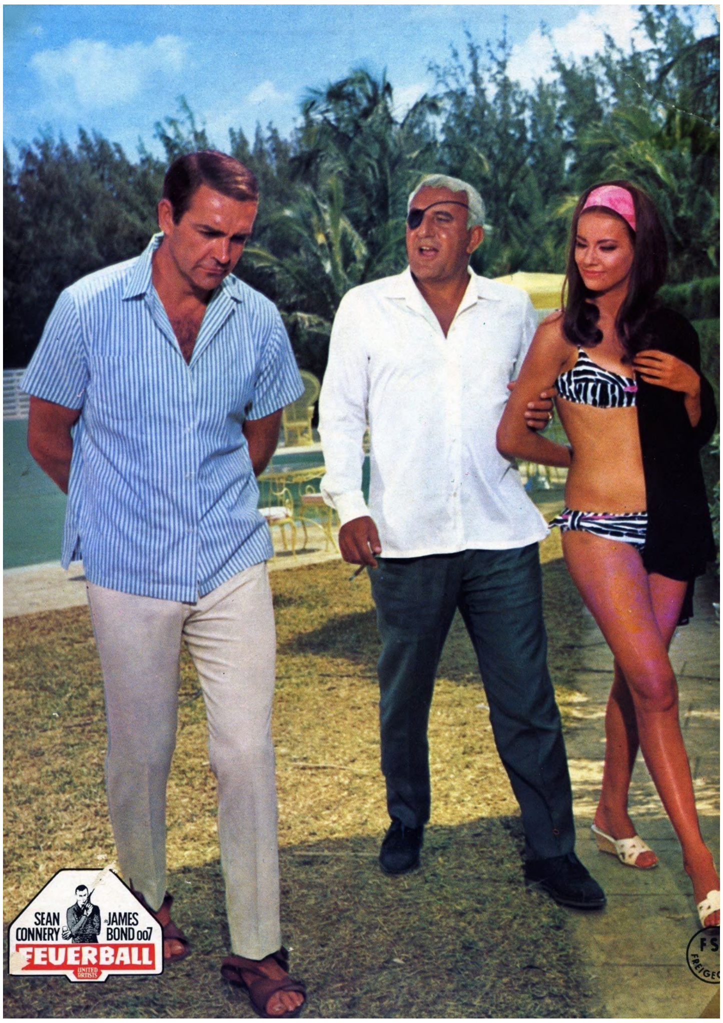
> - Sean Connery[334] : Each succeeding film has got bigger and the gimmicks trickier. But we have to be careful where we go next, because I think with Thunderball we've reached the limit as far as size and gimmicks are concerned. [...] What is needed now is a change of course, more attention to character and better dialogue.



1 For Kevin McClory biography, see for the sources:
"Kevin McClory" obituary in The Independent (2006): https://www.independent.co.uk/news/obituaries/kevin-mcclory-427368.html
"Producer who lost long legal battle for 007 movie franchise" in The Irish Times (2006): https://www.irishtimes.com/news/producer-who-lost-long-legal-battle-for-007-movie-franchise-1.1033369
"Kevin McClory" obituary in The Times (2006): http://www.timesonline.co.uk/tol/comment/obituaries/article754520.ece
"McClory, Kevin O'Donovan" by Patrick Maume in Dictionary of Irish Biography: https://www.dib.ie/biography/mcclory-kevin-odonovan-a9447
"Kevin McClory: James Bond filmmaker" by Patricia E. Keegan in washingtoninternational.com : http://www.washingtoninternational.com/cf/news.cfm?showpage=130
"Kevin McClory: the colorful story of an Irish seanachaí" by Morgan Fullam (2012): http://kevinmcclory.com/
"Q&A with Kevin McClory" by Richard Schenkman in Bondage magazine (issue #7, Summer 1979).
The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
"Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
Kevin McClory's Wikipedia page.
2 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
"Q&A with Kevin McClory" by Richard Schenkman in Bondage magazine (issue #7, Summer 1979).
3 Bryce's statement (1961)
4 Bryce's statement (1961)
5 Bryce's statement (1961)
6 Bryce's statement (1961)
7 Bryce's statement (1961)
8 Bryce's statement (1961)
9 Bryce's statement (1961)
10 Bryce's statement (1961)
11 "You Only Live Once: Memories of Ian Fleming" by Ivar Bryce (1984 edition).
12 "You Only Live Once: Memories of Ian Fleming" by Ivar Bryce (1984 edition).
13 "The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).
14 For Ernest Cuneo biography, see for the sources:
"Ernest L. Cuneo, 82; Owned News Service" obituary in The New York Times (March 5, 1988): https://www.nytimes.com/1988/03/05/obituaries/ernest-l-cuneo-82-owned-news-service.html
"Ernest Cuneo" on Spartacus Educational: https://spartacus-educational.com/JFKcuneo.htm
"The James Bond Bedside Companion" by Raymond Benson (1984).
"The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).
"Ian Fleming: The Complete Man" by Nicholas Shakespeare (2023).
Ernest Cuneo's Wikipedia page.
15 Statement by Ernest Cuneo (May 13, 1963).
16 Statement by Ernest Cuneo (May 13, 1963).
17 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
18 Statement by Ernest Cuneo (May 13, 1963).
19 Bryce's statement (1961). A statement by Ernest Cuneo (May 13, 1963) also says that.
20 Bryce's statement (1961)
21 Bryce's statement (1961)
22 "The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).
23 "The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).
24 "The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).
25 Bryce letter to Cuneo (November 6, 1958).
26 Bryce's statement (1961)
27 Bryce's statement (1961)
28 "Ian Fleming" by Andrew Lycett (1995).
Bryce's statement (1961)
29 Bryce's statement (1961)
30 Bryce's statement (1961)
31 Bryce's statement (1961)
32 Bryce's statement (1961)
33 Bryce's statement (1961)
34 "The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).
The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
35 "How he came upon the rights", McClory's audio interview by Morgan Fullam (1999): http://kevinmcclory.com/rights.mp3

36 "How he came upon the rights", McClory's audio interview by Morgan Fullam (1999):
http://kevinmcclory.com/rights.mp3
37 Fleming letter to McClory (May 12, 1959).
38 Fleming letter to McClory (April 29, 1959); via The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
39 Thrilling Cities by Ian Fleming (1963).
40 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
"Q&A with Kevin McClory" by Richard Schenkman in Bondage magazine (issue #7, Summer 1979).
41 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
42 "How he came upon the rights", McClory's audio interview by Morgan Fullam (1999):
http://kevinmcclory.com/rights.mp3
43 "Q&A with Kevin McClory" by Richard Schenkman in Bondage magazine (issue #7, Summer 1979).
44 McClory letter to Fleming (May 11, 1959); via The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
45 Fleming letter to McClory (April 29, 1959); via The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
46 "The James Bond Bedside Companion" by Raymond Benson (1984).
47 Statement by Ernest Cuneo (May 13, 1963).
48 Bryce's statement (1961)
49 Statement by Ernest Cuneo (May 13, 1963).
50 Cuneo's 28 May, 1959 letter, attached to his treatment.
51 Cuneo's 28 May, 1959 letter, attached to his treatment.
52 Cuneo's 28 May, 1959 letter, attached to his treatment.
53 Cuneo's 28 May, 1959 letter, attached to his treatment.
54 Cuneo's 28 May, 1959 letter, attached to his treatment.
55 Cuneo's 28 May, 1959 letter, attached to his treatment.
56 Ian Fleming memo (undated).
57 Ian Fleming memo (undated).
58 Ian Fleming memo (undated).
59 Ian Fleming memo (undated).
60 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
"Q&A with Kevin McClory" by Richard Schenkman in Bondage magazine (issue #7, Summer 1979).
61 Ian Fleming memo (undated).
62 Ian Fleming memo (undated).
63 Ian Fleming memo (undated).
64 Ian Fleming memo (undated).
65 Ian Fleming memo (undated).
66 Ian Fleming memo (undated).
67 "The James Bond Bedside Companion" by Raymond Benson (1984).
Fleming letter to Bryce (July 2, 1959); via The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
68 "The James Bond Bedside Companion" by Raymond Benson (1984).
Fleming letter to Bryce (July 2, 1959); via The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
69 Fleming letter to Bryce (July 2, 1959); via The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
70 Fleming letter to Bryce (July 8, 1959).
71 Bryce's statement (1961)
72 Bryce's statement (1961)
73 Bryce statement (1963 or 1962).
74 Bryce statement (1963 or 1962).
75 Bryce's statement (1961) revised
76 Cuneo letter to R. S. Aiken of Harbottle & Lewis (June 12, 1963).
77 Cuneo letter to R. S. Aiken of Harbottle & Lewis (June 21, 1963).
78 Letter from Ernest Anderson to Ernest Cuneo (October 20, 1958).
79 A Fleming's manuscript of the novel I have in my collection.
80 Thunderball Artwork website: https://thunderball-artworks.com/the-story/
The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
81 Bryce's statement (1961)
82 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
83 Fleming letter to Bryce (August 11, 1959); via The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
84 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
85 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
86 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
87 McClory letter to Bryce (September 18, 1959).
88 McClory letter to Bryce (September 18, 1959).
89 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
90 McClory letter to Bryce (September 18, 1959).

91 McClory letter to Bryce (September 18, 1959).
92 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
93 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
94 McClory letter to Bryce (September 18, 1959).
95 McClory letter to Bryce (September 18, 1959).
96 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
97 Bryce's statement (1961)
98 For Jack Whittingham biography, see for the sources:
Sylvan Mason (Whittingham's daughter) website: http://www.sylvanmason.com/thunderball/thunderball1.htm
Jack Whittingham's Wikipedia page.
99 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
"Q&A with Kevin McClory" by Richard Schenkman in Bondage magazine (issue #7, Summer 1979).
100 McClory letter to Bryce (September 25, 1959); via Sylvan Mason (Whittingham's daughter) website: http://www.sylvanmason.com/thunderball/thunderball1.htm
101 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
102 Notes/memo by Whittingham (undated).
103 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
104 October 2, 1959 letter from Whittingham, attached to his new opening.
105 October 2, 1959 letter from Whittingham, attached to his new opening.
106 October 2, 1959 letter from Whittingham, attached to his new opening.
107 October 2, 1959 letter from Whittingham, attached to his new opening.
108 October 2, 1959 letter from Whittingham, attached to his new opening.
109 Bryce letter to Fleming (September 18, 1959); via The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
110 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
111 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
112 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
113 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
114 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
115 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
116 Fleming letter to Bryce (October 7, 1959); via Sylvan Mason (Whittingham's daughter) website: http://www.sylvanmason.com/thunderball/thunderball1.htm
117 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
118 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
119 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
120 Bryce's statement (1961)
121 Bryce's statement (1961)
122 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
123 Fleming letter to Bryce (August 11, 1959); via The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
124 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
125 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
126 Cuneo letter to Bryce (February 16, 1960).
Bryce letter to McClory (undated).
Fleming letter to Bryce (March 14, 1960).
M.C.A. inter-communication memo (March 14, 1960).
127 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
128 Bryce comments on certain remarks made by Counsel for McClory.
129 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
130 Bryce's statement (1961)
131 Bryce's statement (1961)
132 Bryce's statement (1961)
133 Fleming letter to Bryce (October 14, 1959); via Sylvan Mason (Whittingham's daughter) website: http://www.sylvanmason.com/thunderball/thunderball1.htm
134 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
135 McClory letter to Bryce (October 20, 1959); via Sylvan Mason (Whittingham's daughter) website: http://www.sylvanmason.com/thunderball/thunderball1.htm
136 October 21, 1959 letter from Fleming's secretary to Leigh Aman.
137 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
138 "The James Bond Bedside Companion" by Raymond Benson (1984).
139 Bryce letter to Fleming (October 17, 1959).
140 Whittingham's memo, redacted at one point between October 20 and 29, 1959.
141 Fleming letter to Bryce (October 23, 1959); via Sylvan Mason (Whittingham's daughter) website: http://www.sylvanmason.com/thunderball/thunderball1.htm

142 "The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).
143 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
144 "The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).
145 "The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).
146 "The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).
147 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
148 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
149 Statement by Ernest Cuneo (May 13, 1963).
150 Bryce's statement (1961)
151 Statement by Ernest Cuneo (May 13, 1963).
152 Bryce's statement (1961)
153 Bryce letter to Cuneo (January 22, 1960).
154 "James Bond: My Long and Eventful Search for His Father" by Len Deighton (2012).
155 Statement by Ernest Cuneo (May 13, 1963).
156 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
157 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
158 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
159 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
160 Statement by Ernest Cuneo (May 13, 1963).
161 Francis Peek letter to Bryce's solicitors Hartbottle & Lewis (May 30, 1961).
162 Bryce's statement (1961)
163 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
"Q&A with Kevin McClory" by Richard Schenkman in Bondage magazine (issue #7, Summer 1979).
164 Bryce's statement (1961)
165 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
166 Statement by Ernest Cuneo (May 13, 1963).
167 Bryce's statement (1961)
168 Bryce's statement (1961)
169 Bryce's statement (1961)
170 Fleming letter to Bryce (December 29, 1959); via The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
171 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
172 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
173 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
174 McClory letter to Bryce (February 2, 1960).
175 Whittingham letter to Bryce (January 9, 1960).
176 McClory letter to Bryce (January 14, 1960).
177 Bryce letter to Cuneo (January 19, 1960).
178 Bryce letter to Cuneo (undated).
179 Bryce letter to McClory (undated).
180 Ian Fleming's affidavit.
181 Bryce letter to Cuneo (January 19, 1960).
Bryce letter to Cuneo (January 22, 1960).
McClory letter to Bryce (February 2, 1960).
182 Bryce letter to Cuneo (January 22, 1960).
Cuneo letter to Whittingham (January 26, 1960).
Whittingham letter to Cuneo (February 3, 1960).
183 Whittingham letter to Cuneo (February 3, 1960).
184 "The Decision to Use the Atomic Bomb" by Henry Stimson in Harper's magazine (February 1947); via: https://www.asianstudies.org/publications/eaa/archives/the-harpers-magazine-article-from-1947-the-decision-to-use-the-atomic-bomb-by-henry-stimson-to-accompany-peter-frosts-article-teaching-mr-stimson/
"Memorandum discussed with the President, April 25, 1945" on National Security Archive website: https://nsarchive.gwu.edu/document/28505-document-6b-memorandum-discussed-president-april-25-1945
185 "The Decision to Use the Atomic Bomb" by Henry Stimson in Harper's magazine (February 1947); via: https://www.asianstudies.org/publications/eaa/archives/the-harpers-magazine-article-from-1947-the-decision-to-use-the-atomic-bomb-by-henry-stimson-to-accompany-peter-frosts-article-teaching-mr-stimson/
186 Spectre Organization website: http://spectreorganisation.com/statement/chp2.html
187 "How he came upon the rights", McClory's audio interview by Morgan Fullam (1999): http://kevinmcclory.com/rights.mp3
188 October 2, 1959 letter from Whittingham, attached to his new opening.
189 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
190 "The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).
191 "The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).

192 Fleming letter to William Plomer (March 29, 1960); via "The Man with the Golden Typewriter" by Fergus Fleming (2015).
193 "The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).
"Ian Fleming by Andrew Lycett (1995).
194 "James Bond: The Man and His World" by Henry Chancellor (2005).
195 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
196 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
197 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
198 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
199 Fleming letter to William Plomer (March 29, 1960); via "The Man with the Golden Typewriter" by Fergus Fleming (2015).
200 "Ian Fleming" by Andrew Lycett (1995).
"Enton Hall - the real Shrublands" by by Edward Biddulph on James Bond Memes (2014): http://jamesbondmemes.blogspot.com/2014/01/enton-hall-real-shrublands.html
201 "Ian Fleming" by Andrew Lycett (1995).
202 "James Bond's Girls" essay by Richard Maibaum in Playboy magazine (November 1965 issue).
203 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
204 Whittingham letter to Cuneo (February 3, 1960).
205 Cuneo letter to Bryce (January 28, 1960).
206 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
207 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
208 McClory letter to Bryce (February 2, 1960).
"Ernest Cuneo called Kevin McClory" statement (February 5, 1960).
209 Cuneo letter to Bryce (January 28, 1960).
210 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
211 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
212 "Amended state of claim" (1962).
Spectre Organization website: http://spectreorganisation.com/statement/chp3.html
213 Bryce's statement (1961)
214 Cuneo letter to Bryce (February 16, 1960).
215 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
216 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
217 "The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).
218 Fleming letter to Bryce (March 14, 1960).
219 Bryce's statement (1961) revised
220 Bryce's statement (1961)
221 Bryce's statement (1961)
222 Bryce's statement (1961)
223 Bryce's statement (1961)
224 "Reply and defense to the counterclaim of the defendant Bryce by the plaintiff McClory" (1961).
225 "Reply and defense to the counterclaim of the defendant Bryce by the plaintiff McClory" (1961).
226 Bryce's statement (1961)
227 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
228 Robert Fenn undated statement (1963).
229 M.C.A. inter-communication memo (March 14, 1960).
230 Robert Fenn undated statement (1963).
231 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
232 Fleming letter to Michael Howard (August 22, 1960); via "The Man with the Golden Typewriter" by Fergus Fleming (2015).
233 Fleming letter to Richard Chopping (July 20, 1960); via "The Man with the Golden Typewriter" by Fergus Fleming (2015).
234 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
235 "Hamilton Leads in Act One Race" in the Los Angeles Times (July 7, 1960).
236 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
237 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
238 Bryce's statement (1961)
239 Bryce's statement (1961)
240 McClory letter to Bryce (September 9, 1960).
241 Bryce letter to Fleming (September 13, 1960).
242 McClory's statement under oath (24 March, 1961).
"Reply and defense to the counterclaim of the defendant Bryce by the plaintiff McClory" (1961).
243 McClory letter to Bryce (April 13, 1960); via The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).

Sources/references from chapter 4: Thunderball

244 Bryce's statement (1961)
245 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
246 McClory's statement under oath (March, 1961).
247 McClory's statement under oath (24 March, 1961).
248 McClory's statement under oath (24 March, 1961).
249 Ian Fleming's Affidavit.
250 McClory letter to Jonathan Cape (March 15, 1961); via The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
251 Whittingham's statement under oath (March, 1961).
252 McClory's statement under oath (24 March, 1961).
253 McClory's statement under oath (24 March, 1961).
254 "Statement of claim" (1961).
255 "Reply and defense to the counterclaim of the defendant Bryce by the plaintiff McClory" (1961).
256 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
257 "When Harry Met Cubby" by Robert Sellers, 2019.
258 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
259 "Musts, Maybes, and Nevers: A Book About the Movies" by David V. Picker, 2013.
"When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
260 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
261 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
262 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
263 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
264 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
265 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
266 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
267 April 10, 1962 financing agreement between Danjaq and United Artists; via "Dr. No: The First James Bond Film" by James Chapman (2022).
268 "Ian Fleming" by Andrew Lycett (1995).
Thunderball comic-strip page on MI6-HQ: https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/comics/tb
269 "Ian Fleming" by Andrew Lycett (1995).
Thunderball comic-strip page on MI6-HQ: https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/comics/tb
270 Whittingham letter to Fleming (May 6, 1961).
Fleming letter to Whittingham (May 10, 1961).
271 Bryce letter to Cuneo (April 27, 1961).
272 Bryce letter to Cuneo (December 20th, 1962).
273 Bryce's statement (1961)
274 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
275 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
276 "Ian Fleming (he created Bond) in the High Court" in the Evening Post (November 20, 1963).
277 "Ian Fleming: The Complete Man" by Nicholas Shakespeare (2023).
278 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
279 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
280 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
281 Ian Fleming's affidavit.
282 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
283 Whittingham's statement; via The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
284 "Amended state of claim" (1962).
"Further and better particulars of amended statement of claim delivered pursuant to the request on behalf of the defendant Bryce dated 15th March 1962".
285 "Further and better particulars of amended statement of claim delivered pursuant to the request on behalf of the defendant Bryce dated 15th March 16962".
286 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
287 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
288 "Amended state of claim" (1962).
289 Ian Fleming's affidavit.
290 "The James Bond Bedside Companion" by Raymond Benson (1984).
"Ian Fleming" by Andrew Lycett (1995).
291 "Ian Fleming" by Andrew Lycett (1995).
292 "The James Bond Bedside Companion" by Raymond Benson (1984).
"Ian Fleming" by Andrew Lycett (1995).
293 "You Only Live Once: Memories of Ian Fleming" by Ivar Bryce (first edition, 1975).
294 "You Only Live Once: Memories of Ian Fleming" by Ivar Bryce (first edition, 1975).
295 Spectre Organization website: http://spectreorganisation.com/statement/chp3.html

296 "Ian Fleming" by Andrew Lycett (1995).
297 R. S. Aiken of Harbottle & Lewis letter to Cuneo (December 5, 1963).
298 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
299 "You Only Live Once: Memories of Ian Fleming" by Ivar Bryce (first edition, 1975).
300 Spectre Organization website: http://spectreorganisation.com/statement/chp3.html
301 Spectre Organization website: http://spectreorganisation.com/statement/chp3.html
302 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
303 "Agent 007 faces toughest battle" article by Gerard Kemp in an unknown newspaper.
304 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
305 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
306 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
307 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
"Q&A with Kevin McClory" by Richard Schenkman in Bondage magazine (issue #7, Summer 1979).
308 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
309 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
310 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
311 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
312 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
313 "Q&A with Kevin McClory" by Richard Schenkman in Bondage magazine (issue #7, Summer 1979).
314 An untitled essay by Richard Maibaum (1965), will later become "My word is his Bond: A view from the Back" by Richard Maibaum in Esquire magazine (June 1695 issue).
315 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
316 "Deus Ex Machina, 1965 Model", essay by Richard Maibaum (1965).
317 For John Hopkins biography, see for the sources:
"Obituary: John Hopkins" by Anthony Hayward in The Independent (July 31, 1998):
https://www.independent.co.uk/arts-entertainment/obituary-john-hopkins-1168781.html
Encyclopedia of Television by the Museum Of Broadcast Communications, Vol 2 (1997).
"Hopkins, John (1931-98)" on BFI screenonline website:
http://www.screenonline.org.uk/people/id/473130/index.html
John Hopkins's Wikipedia page.
318 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
319 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
320 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
321 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
322 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
323 "Writing the Bond films" by Richard Maibaum in James Bond in Thunberball magazine published by Sackville.
324 BBFC letter to EON (April 23, 1965).
325 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
326 The Music of James Bond by Jon Burlingame (2012).
327 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
328 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
329 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
330 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
331 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).
332 "James Bond's Girls" essay by Richard Maibaum in Playboy magazine (November 1965 issue).
333 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
334 "Sean Connery: a candid conversation with James Bond's acerbic alter ego" in Playboy magazine (November 1965 issue).

Treatment/Script	Villain organization?	Head of the organisation?	Main subordinate antagonist?	Supporting antagonist?	Main Bond's girl name?	Name of the Bond's girl related carracter?	Name of the double	Name of the Count in the Shrubland part?	Name of the scientist(s)?	Type of bomber?	How the bomber's crew die?	How the hijacker who pilot it dies?	How many atomic bomb(s) were stolen?	Villain's house name?	Villain's yacht name?	Bond's car?	Vehicle for the aerial search suken bomber?	Target of the first bomb?	Means of arrival of Allied troops for the final underwater assault	Ending?	Other notable things
Ernest Cuneo's treatment May 27, 1959	Unclear, only referred to as a foreign enemy (seems to be Russia).	/	A sergeant infiltrated in the USO troop.	/	/ (No Bond girl)	/	/ (No double)	/ (No Shrubland part)	/ (No scientist)	/ (No bomber)	/ (No bomber)	/ (No bomber)	0 (the enemy use their own atomic bombs)	/ (No villain's house)	/ (No yacht, the enemy use a fleet a trawlers)	/	/ (No bomber)	Unclear : U.S. bases or one in Nassau.	Unspecified	Unspecified (The good guys wins, I guess).	Guest stars appearances like Noel Coward or Frank Sinatra. Bond posing as a performer in the USO. Trapdoor in enemy boats are present, as well as a big underwater battle finale. After reading it, Fleming wanted to change the villains for SPECTRE and add a Bond's girl called Fatima Blush.
Fleming's first treatment 1959	The Mafia	Capo Mafiosi	Enrico Largo	Toni Impellitini	Dominique "Domino" Smith	/	/ (No double)	/ (No Shrubland part)	/ (No scientist)	/ (No bomber, bomb stolen on the ground)	/ (No bomber)	/ (No bomber)	1	/ (No villain's house)	Virginia	Bentley 4½ Litre	/ (No bomber)	Rocket base at Grand Bahamas	Submarine	Domino kills Largo underwater. The bomb is retrieved. Bond and Domino kisses.	Scenes in Largo's nightclub in England. Domino is from the "Ghost Squad". Ronnie Vallance is present. Bond talking to the audience with a voice-over. Fleming wanted Ernest Cuneo to play the Capo Mafiosi.
Whittingham's opening October 2, 1959	The Mafia	Unspecified	Largo	Albertini Ferrari	Sophia	Jo Petachi (if he if related, that isn't sure)	/ (No double)	/ (No Shrubland part)	/ (No scientist)	Unspecified	Shot by a gun.	Shoot by someone	Unspecified	/	Unspecified	/	/	/	/	/	This is only a 5 pages opening. Burl Ives is suggested for Largo's role.
Fleming's second treatment October 21, 1959	The Mafia	Capo Mafiosi	Largo	Albertini Ferrari	Dominica "Domino" Pelagra	Guiseppe "Jo" Petachi	/ (No double)	/ (No Shrubland part)	"Mafia engineer group"	Vickers Valiant	Shot by a gun.	Shoot by someone	1	/ (No villain's house)	Unspecified	/	Plane	Rocket base at Grand Bahamas	Submarine	Domino kills Largo underwater. The bomb is retrieved. Capo Mafiosi's suicides. Bond and Domino looks at each other eyes.	Petachi is Domino's boyfriend. Felix Leiter dies!
Whittingham's treatment November 10, 1959	The Mafia	Cuneo (the Capo Mafiosi)	Spider Spinelli a.k.a. "Jo Largo"	Albertini Ferrari	Dominica "Domino" Pelagra	Jo Petachi	/ (No double)	/ (No Shrubland part)	Von Grundish	Vickers Valiant	Shot by a gun.	Drown after his air hose was cut by someone	2	Xanadu	Unspecified	/	Seaplane	Rocket base at Grand Bahamas	Parachuting from a plane	One bomb is retrieved. Domino commit a suicide with the other bomb, killing Largo and Cuneo with her.	Petachi is now Domino's brother. First time the sunk bomber is recovered with a tarpaulin. Felix Leiter still dies!
Whittingham's first script	The Mafia	Bastico (the Capo Mafiosi)	Antonio DeSuca a.k.a. Salvatore Largo	Albertini Janni	Gaby	Antonio Petachi (but he is not related to Gaby)	/ (No double)	/ (No Shrubland part)	Carlo "Galante" Volpe	Vickers Valiant	Release of poisonous gas into the air supply.	Drown after his air hose was cut by Janni	2	Xanadu	Sorrento	/	Seaplane	Miami	Parachuting from a plane	One bomb is retrieved. Leiter dies, its seems. Gaby commit a suicide with the other bomb, killing Largo.	The pre-title sequence include U.S. former President Harry Truman. Moneypenny became simply "Penny". Domino's replacement, Gaby, has a loathsome personality: she would do anything for money. Bond never give a Geiger counter to Gaby. First appearance of a baccarat game with Largo and of a sunk boat wreck in the final battle.
Whittingham's second script	The Mafia	Bastico (the Capo Mafiosi)	Antonio DeSuca a.k.a. Giovanni "Joe" Largo	Albertini Janni	Gaby	Antonio Petachi (but he is not related to Gaby)	/ (No double)	/ (No Shrubland part)	Carlo "Galante" Volpe	Vickers Valiant	Release of poisonous gas into the air supply.	Drown after his air hose was cut by Janni.	2	Xanadu	Sorrento	/	Seaplane	Miami	Parachuting from a plane	One bomb is retrieved. Leiter dies, its seems. Gaby commit a suicide with the other bomb, killing Largo.	No major difference with the previous script, except Largo's name and the underwater final (which is a little longer).
Whittingham's third script	The Mafia	Trapani (the Capo Mafiosi)	Antonio DeSuca a.k.a. Giovanni "Joe" Largo	Albertini Janni	Gaby	Petachi (but he is not related to Gaby)	Antonio	/ (No Shrubland part)	Joseph Galante	Avro Vulcan	Release of poisonous gas into the air supply.	Drown after his air hose was cut by Janni.	2	Xanadu	Sorrento	/	Seaplane	Miami	Parachuting from a plane	One bomb is retrieved. Leiter dies, its seems. Galante commit a suicide with the other bomb, killing Largo. Gaby seems to survive.	The title is now firmly established as Thunderball. The scientist now work for the villain in order to save the mankind as a motivation, seeing himself like as a God-sent. Gaby is less attracted by money than before. The pre-title sequence still include U.S. former President Harry Truman. Moneypenny is still simply "Penny".
Fleming's novel 27 March, 1961	SPECTRE	Ernst Stavro Blofeld	Emilio Largo	Vargas	Dominetta "Domino" Petacchi "Vitali"	Giuseppe Petacchi	/ (No double)	Lippe	Kotze Maslov	"Villiers Vindicator"	Release of poisonous gas into the cockpit.	Stabbed by a stiletto knife by Vargas while he is standing on a wing of the bomber, at the surface.	2	Palmyra	Disco Volante	Bentley "Continental Mark II" (modified with a with Mark IV's engine).	Seaplane	Rocket base at Grand Bahamas	Submarine	Domino kills Largo underwater. The bombs are retrieved. Bond and Domino are healing at the hospital.	First formal apparition of S.P.E.C.T.R.E. in James Bond world, as well as Blofeld. Vargas appearance is in fact very brief (he have only one scene). First time the U.S. submarine is named the "Manta". Dedicated only to Cuneo when originally published. Uncredited McClory and Whittingham then tried to prevent the publication of the novel in the court. A note stating "This story is based on a screen treatment by K. McClory, J. Whittingham, and the author" was later added in further edition.
Maibaum's first script August 18, 1961	SPECTRE	Ernest Stavro Blofeld	Emilio Largo	Vargas	Dominetta "Domino" Petacchi "Vitali"	Guiseppe Petacchi	/ (No double)	Lippi	Ladislav Kotze Maslov (mention only).	"Villiers Vindicator"	Release of poisonous gas into the cockpit.	Stabbed by a stiletto knife by Vargas while he is standing on a wing of the bomber, at the surface.	2	Palmyra	Disco Volante	Bentley	Seaplane	Cape Canaveral base	Submarine	Bond, Domino and Leiter survived the underwater battle. The submarine's captain tow away the bomb and let it explode in a safe area.	Was written before the release of the movie Dr. No. First Bond's script on which Maibaum worked on, and first one to be read by Sean Connery. Its read almost like a paraphrasing of the novel.
"First script" (Undated, 1964)	SPECTRE	Blofeld	Emilio Largo	Fiona Kelly Vargas Janni	Dominetta "Domino" Palazzi "Vitale"	Guiseppe Palazzi	Angelo	Lippe	Ladislav Kutze Maslov	Avro Vulcan	Release of poisonous gas into the air supply.	Drown after his air hose was cut by Janni.	2	(I don't have all the pages of this script).	Disco Volante	Bentley	(I don't have all the pages of this script).	(I don't have all the pages of this script).	(I don't have all the pages of this script).	(I don't have all the pages of this script).	Presence of Paula (as well of Blofeld's white cat). Other Double-O agents at the briefing were supposed to be played by "recognizable important stars".
Revised "First script" (Undated, October 1964)	SPECTRE	Blofeld	Emilio Largo	Fiona Kelly (I don't have all the pages of this script).	(I don't have all the pages of this script).	Guiseppe Palazzi	Angelo	Lippe	(I don't have all the pages of this script).	(I don't have all the pages of this script).	Release of poisonous gas into the air supply.	(I don't have all the pages of this script).	(I don't have all the pages of this script).	(I don't have all the pages of this script).	(I don't have all the pages of this script).	Bentley	(I don't have all the pages of this script).	(I don't have all the pages of this script).	(I don't have all the pages of this script).	(I don't have all the pages of this script).	Bond: "Little oddjob I was on in Kentucky. Friendly scuffle with a man in a bowler hat". Angelo: "You don't look like Sean Connery either".
"Script outline" treatment (Undated)	SPECTRE	Blofeld	Largo	Fiona Kelly Vargas	Dominetta "Domino" Palazzi	Palazzi	Angelo	Lippe	/	Avro Vulcan	"Angelo gases crew".	Unspecified	Unspecified	Palmyra	Disco Volante (misspelled "Valonte")	Aston Martin	/	/	/	/	Hand to hand combat with a man disguised in a woman, in a fan-tan parlor at Macao.
Maibaum's "Shooting script" November 30, 1964	SPECTRE	Blofeld	Emilio Largo	Fiona Kelly Vargas Janni	Dominetta "Domino" Palazzi "Vitale"	Franco Palazzi	Angelo	Lippe	Ladislav Kutze Maslov	Avro Vulcan	Release of poisonous gas into the air supply.	Drown after his air hose was cut by Largo.	2	Palmyra	Disco Volante	Bentley	Seaplane	Miami	Parachuting from a plane	Underwater battle, hand to hand combat on the yacht, Largo is killed by Domino. Kutze suicide by exploding himself with the Disco Volante. SPECTRE have a surprise when they tries to recover the ransom container with a submarine.	The pre-title sequence with the jetpack. Largo has now a eye-patch over one eye. Pinder dies, but Paula survives. Fiona dying in the hotel room.
1965: a Maibaum's and Hopkins's revised script (Undated)	SPECTRE	Blofeld	Emilio Largo	Fiona Kelly Vargas Janni	Dominique "Domino"	Franco Palazzi (on some pages) Francois Derval (on some other pages)	Angelo	Lipson (but he is no Count).	Ladislav Kutze Maslov	Avro Vulcan	Release of poisonous gas into the air supply.	Drown after his air hose was cut by Largo.	2	Palmyra	Disco Volante	Ford Thunderbird	Helicopter	Miami	Parachuting from a plane	Underwater battle, hand to hand combat on the yacht, Largo is killed by Domino. Kutze suicide by exploding himself with the Disco Volante. SPECTRE have a surprise when they tries to recover the ransom container with a submarine.	The Doctor Who's Daleks reference. Sequence where Bond discovers Palazzi/Derval bodies while investigating at Shrublands. Largo to Fiona: "I think you forget. I found you. I made you".
Thunderball*: the movie December 9, 1965	SPECTRE	Ernst Stavro Blofeld (even if, technically, the character is never named in the film).	Emilio Largo	Fiona Volpe Vargas Janni	Dominique "Domino" Derval	François Derval ...But credited as Palazzi in the end title.	Angelo	Lippe	Ladislav Kutze	Avro Vulcan	Release of poisonous gas into the air supply.	Drown after his air hose was cut by Largo.	2	Palmyra	Disco Volante	Aston Martin DB5	Helicopter	Miami	Parachuting from a plane	Big underwater sequence where one bomb is retrieved. Hand to hand combat on the Disco Volante, Largo is killed by Domino. Bond and Domino Fultoning away	Kevin McClory as a co-producer (and credited as the sole producer). One of the must successful Bond at the box-office. Theses aquatics scenes. The too much use of accelerate footage. Paula Caplan (instead of Paula Roberts).
Never Say Never Again* October 6, 1983	SPECTRE	Blofeld	Maximillian "Max" Largo	Fatima Blush	Domino Petachi	Jack Petachi	/ (No double)	Lippe (but he is no Count).	Kovacs	Rockwell B-1A Lancer	/ (Nobody die in the bomber).	/ (No pilot, but Petachi dies killed by Fatima following a car crash and the explosion of his vehicle)	2 (Technically not bombs but cruise missiles).	Palmyra	Flying Saucer	Bentley 4¼ Litre Drophead Coupé (but the star is a motorbike Yamaha XJ 650 Seca Turbo)	/	Washington (But the second target is the one showed on screen: "The Tears of Allah", oilfields at the Middle East).	/ (No big underwater battle, just a small one).	Battle in a grotto. Underwater battle between Bond and Largo; Domino kills Largo. Bond and Domino have good time in a Bahamian villa. Bond wink at the camera after the movie's title is uttered by the characters as he says he don't want to work for the Secret Service again.	Sean Connery return as James Bond. One of the rare James Bond film not produced by EON Production. Felix Leiter is black. The point to name Q "Algernoon"? The sometime cheesy Michel Legrand's soundtrack. Mr. Bean. The absence of a final large-scale underwater battle for a Thunderball adaptation.

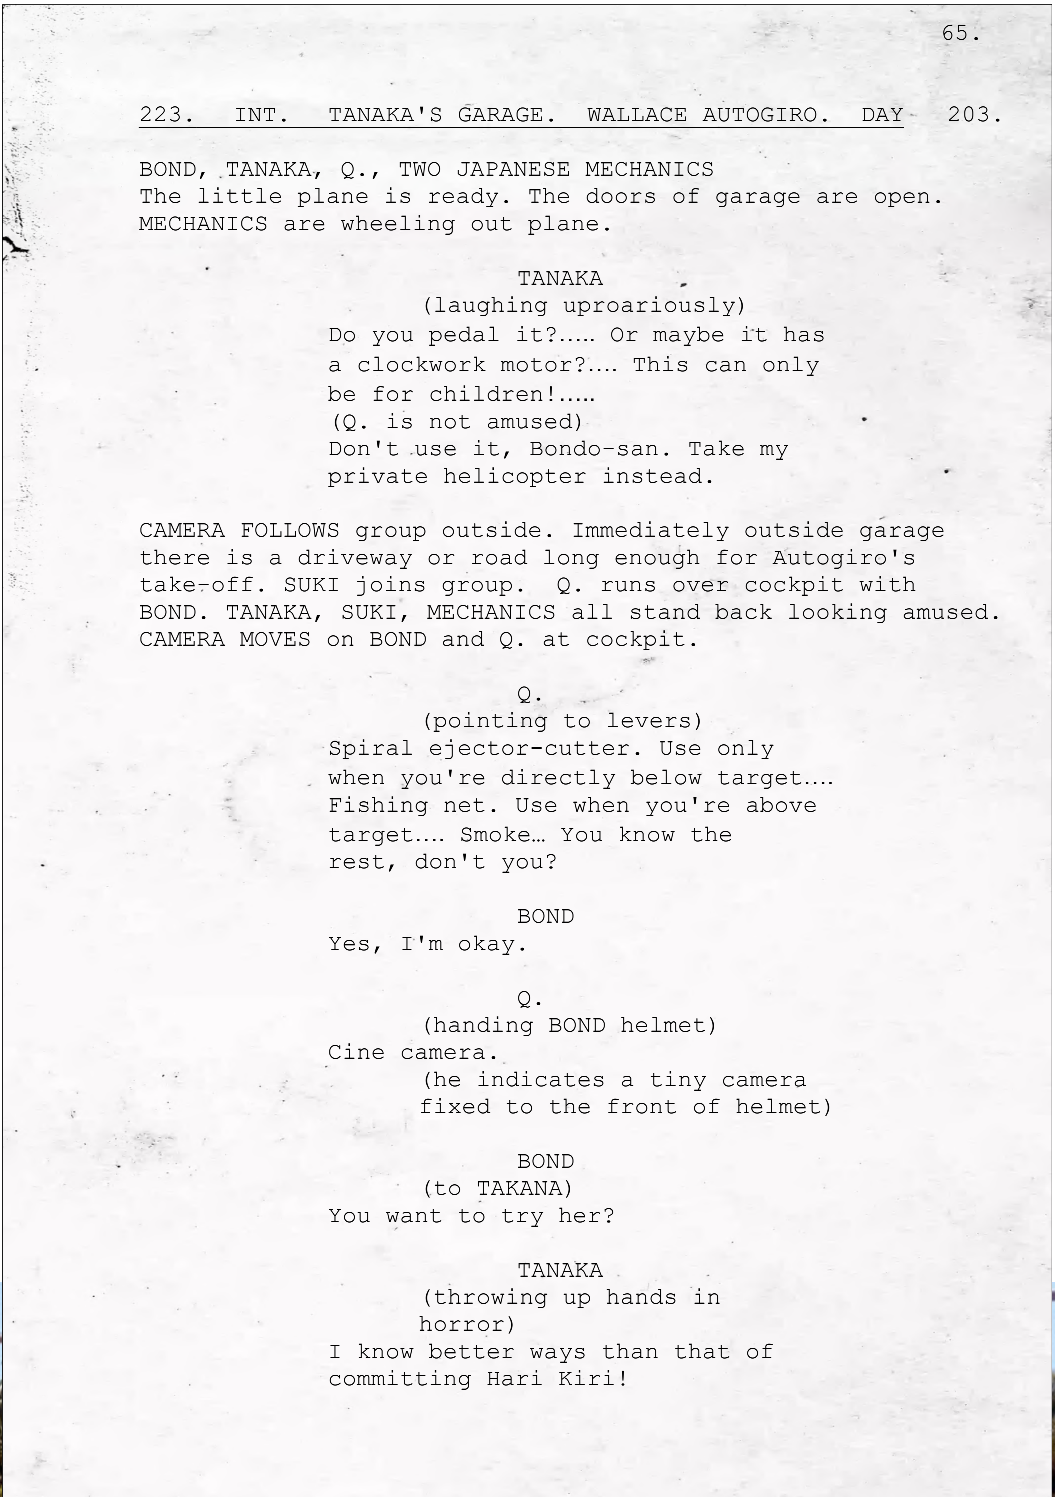
SEAN CONNERY
IS
JAMES BOND
IAN FLEMING'S
"YOU ONLY LIVE TWICE"
...and "TWICE" is the only way to live!
ALBERT R. BROCCOLI HARRY SALTZMAN LEWIS GILBERT ROALD DAHL
ALBERT R. BROCCOLI HARRY SALTZMAN JOHN BARRY KEN ADAM PANAVISION
TECHNICOLOR
UNITED ARTISTS

Release date (premiere) :
12 June 1967

Writing credit as per title sequence:
“Additional story material by Harold Jack Bloom ; screenplay by Roald Dahl”

Director :...............................Lewis Gilbert
Producers :.Albert R. Broccoli & Harry Saltzman
Director photography :....Freddie Young
Set Designer :............................Ken Adam
Composer :...............................John Barry
Editor :.....................................Peter Hunt
Title sequence :................Maurice Binder
Title song vocals :..............Nancy Sinatra



65.

223. INT. TANAKA'S GARAGE. WALLACE AUTOGIRO. DAY 203.

BOND, TANAKA, Q., TWO JAPANESE MECHANICS
The little plane is ready. The doors of garage are open. MECHANICS are wheeling out plane.

TANAKA
(laughing uproariously)
Do you pedal it?..... Or maybe it has a clockwork motor?.... This can only be for children!.....
(Q. is not amused)
Don't use it, Bondo-san. Take my private helicopter instead.

CAMERA FOLLOWS group outside. Immediately outside garage there is a driveway or road long enough for Autogiro's take-off. SUKI joins group. Q. runs over cockpit with BOND. TANAKA, SUKI, MECHANICS all stand back looking amused. CAMERA MOVES on BOND and Q. at cockpit.

Q.
(pointing to levers)
Spiral ejector-cutter. Use only when you're directly below target.... Fishing net. Use when you're above target.... Smoke... You know the rest, don't you?

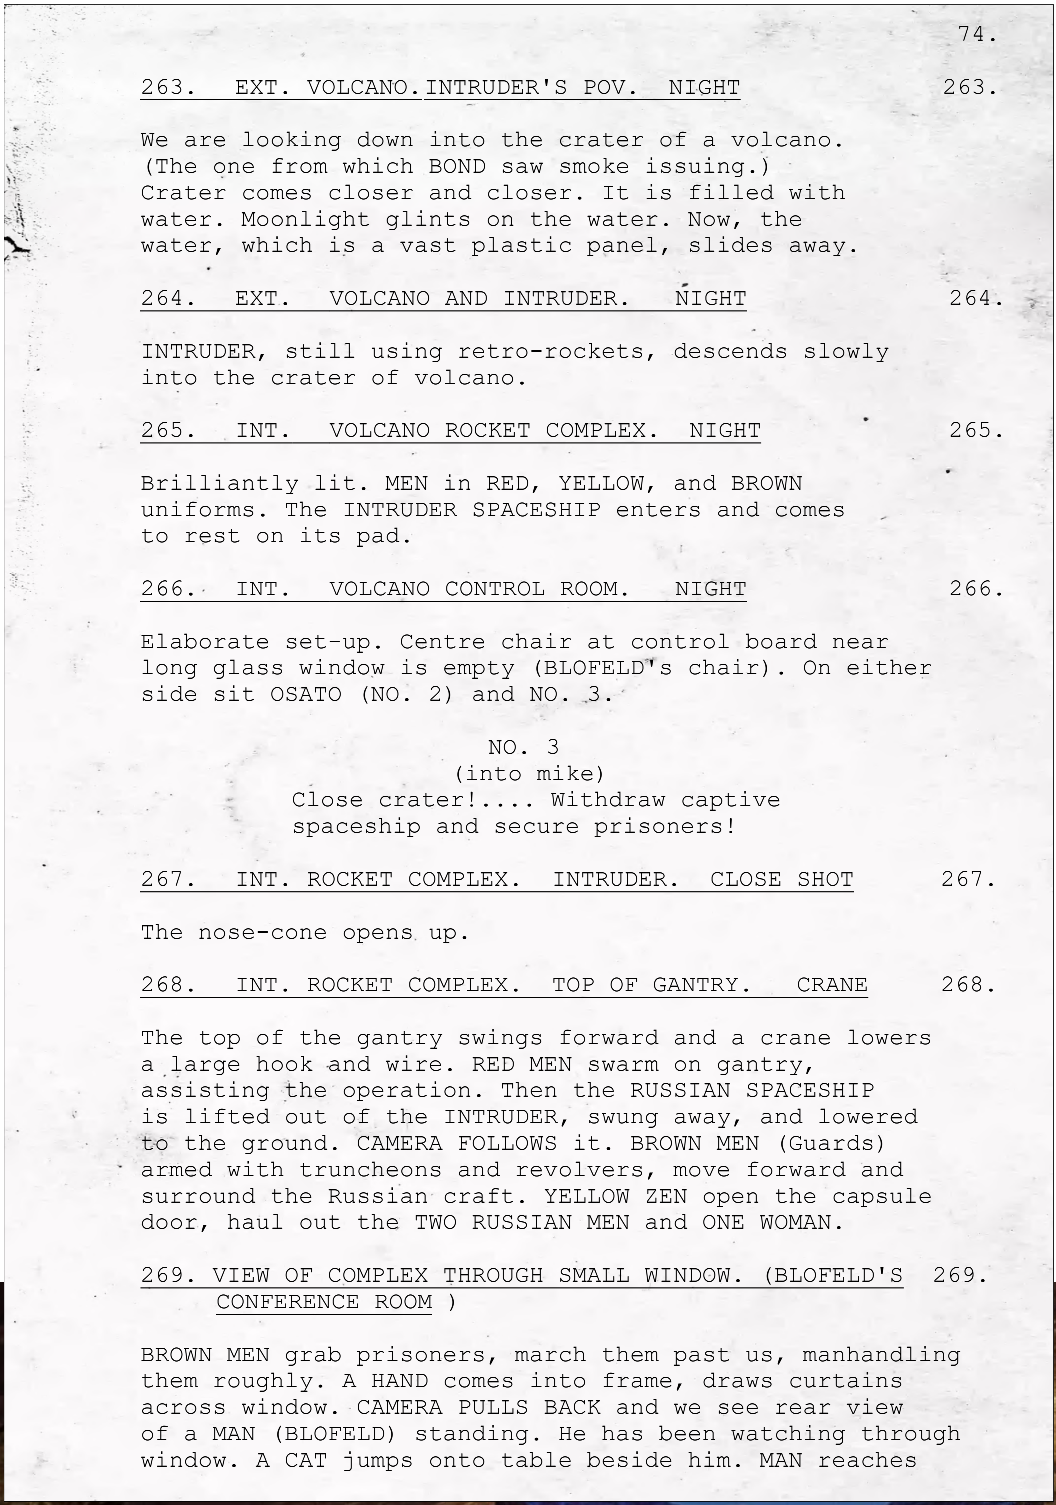
BOND
Yes, I'm okay.

Q.
(handing BOND helmet)
Cine camera.
(he indicates a tiny camera fixed to the front of helmet)

BOND
(to TAKANA)
You want to try her?

TANAKA
(throwing up hands in horror)
I know better ways than that of committing Hari Kiri!

CHAPTER 5



74.

263. EXT. VOLCANO. INTRUDER'S POV. NIGHT 263.

We are looking down into the crater of a volcano. (The one from which BOND saw smoke issuing.) Crater comes closer and closer. It is filled with water. Moonlight glints on the water. Now, the water, which is a vast plastic panel, slides away.

264. EXT. VOLCANO AND INTRUDER. NIGHT 264.

INTRUDER, still using retro-rockets, descends slowly into the crater of volcano.

265. INT. VOLCANO ROCKET COMPLEX. NIGHT 265.

Brilliantly lit. MEN in RED, YELLOW, and BROWN uniforms. The INTRUDER SPACESHIP enters and comes to rest on its pad.

266. INT. VOLCANO CONTROL ROOM. NIGHT 266.

Elaborate set-up. Centre chair at control board near long glass window is empty (BLOFELD's chair). On either side sit OSATO (NO. 2) and NO. 3.

NO. 3
(into mike)
Close crater!.... Withdraw captive spaceship and secure prisoners!

267. INT. ROCKET COMPLEX. INTRUDER. CLOSE SHOT 267.

The nose-cone opens up.

268. INT. ROCKET COMPLEX. TOP OF GANTRY. CRANE 268.

The top of the gantry swings forward and a crane lowers a large hook and wire. RED MEN swarm on gantry, assisting the operation. Then the RUSSIAN SPACESHIP is lifted out of the INTRUDER, swung away, and lowered to the ground. CAMERA FOLLOWS it. BROWN MEN (Guards) armed with truncheons and revolvers, move forward and surround the Russian craft. YELLOW ZEN open the capsule door, haul out the TWO RUSSIAN MEN and ONE WOMAN.

269. VIEW OF COMPLEX THROUGH SMALL WINDOW. (BLOFELD'S CONFERENCE ROOM) 269.

BROWN MEN grab prisoners, march them past us, manhandling them roughly. A HAND comes into frame, draws curtains across window. CAMERA PULLS BACK and we see rear view of a MAN (BLOFELD) standing. He has been watching through window. A CAT jumps onto table beside him. MAN reaches

Cast:

James Bond :........................Sean Connery
Ernst Stavro Blofeld :...Donald Pleasence
Kissy Suzuki :............................Mie Hama
Tiger Tanaka:........................Tetsurō Tanba
Aki :............................Akiko Wakabayashi
Helga Brandt :............................Karin Dor
Osato :..................................Teru Shimada
Hans :......................................Ronald Rich
Dikko Henderson :...............Charles Gray
M :..Bernard Lee
Moneypenny :......................Lois Maxwell
Q :...............................Desmond Llewelyn

Main filming locations: Japan, Spain, Hong Kong and the UK.

When people spoof the Bond films, this is the one they reference the most: the bald, scarred villain with the Nehru jacket and the white cat; the elaborate secret hideout constructed inside a dormant volcano; the army of jumpsuit-wearing soldiers ready to do the villain's bidding; disposing of ineffective subordinates by dumping them in a pool full of piranha; and so on. For Fleming purists, Dahl's screenplay is arguably the least Bondian of the Bond scripts, but in the popular imagination, Dahl's version of 007 is perhaps the most Bond of them all.

-Ray Morton, film historian

YOU ONLY LIVE TWICE

Table of contents

You Only Live Twice

Castle and garden of death....316
Development of the script....318
Script of June 17, 1966 revised....324
Welcome to Japan, M. Dahl....334

Castle and garden of death

In 1964, Ian Fleming publish the sequel to On Her Majesty's Secret Service: You Only Live Twice.

In this one, James Bond is only a shadow of himself. The sudden loss of his wife Tracy, about nine months earlier at the end of the previous novel, destroyed him internally. Since then he has been in full psychoneurosis; he arrives late for work, mess it up, makes mistakes, was almost killed during a mission, and exposed agents to a dangerous situation. M is considering removing him from Secret Service but Sir James Molony, a great neurologist attached to the Service, advises giving him one last chance. Molony believes that a "seemingly impossible" mission to accomplish could resurrect the outstanding agent that was once 007.

IAN FLEMING
YOU ONLY LIVE TWICE
FLEMING
YOU ONLY LIVE TWICE

M allows himself to be convinced and calls Bond to his office. To his surprise Bond wants to resign but M removes him from the double-0 section to "promote" him to the diplomatic section under the number 7777 (four sevens) where he entrusts him with a practically impossible mission. Bond must convince the head of the Japanese secret service, Tiger Tanaka, to deliver to England their Russian code-deciphering machine: the Magic 44.

Bond goes to Japan where he meets Dikko Henderson of Station J and then Tiger Tanaka. After appraising Bond for about a month including alcohol and geishas, Tanaka accedes to the British request. In exchange, however, Bond must infiltrate a castle near Fukuoka and eliminate the owners, Dr. Guntram Shatterhand and his companion. They created, with the complicity of former members of the Black Dragon society, a garden filled with poisonous plants in their castle. In a little less than six months, more than 500 suicidal Japanese entered there to find a certain death.

To carry out his mission, Bond is introduced to some ninja techniques. Tanaka also instills in him the subtleties of Japanese culture and provides him a false identity. They go to a bath and, skillfully made up, Bond is now Taro Todoroki: a deaf and mute Japanese miner.

In Fukuoka, Tanaka and Bond meet the police chief who shows them aerial photos of the castle as well as a photo of the botanist couple. With amazement, Bond discovers that it is actually Ernst Stavro Blofeld and his accomplice Irma Bunt: the people responsible for Tracy's death!

Bond then leaves for a fishing village located not far from the castle. He is greeted by Kissy Suzuki, an ama diver who was once a Hollywood actress. With her help, Bond approaches the castle from the sea, climbs the cliff and enters the gardens. There, Bond sees Blofeld walking around dressed in samurai armor accompanied by Irma who is wearing a beekeeper's hat.

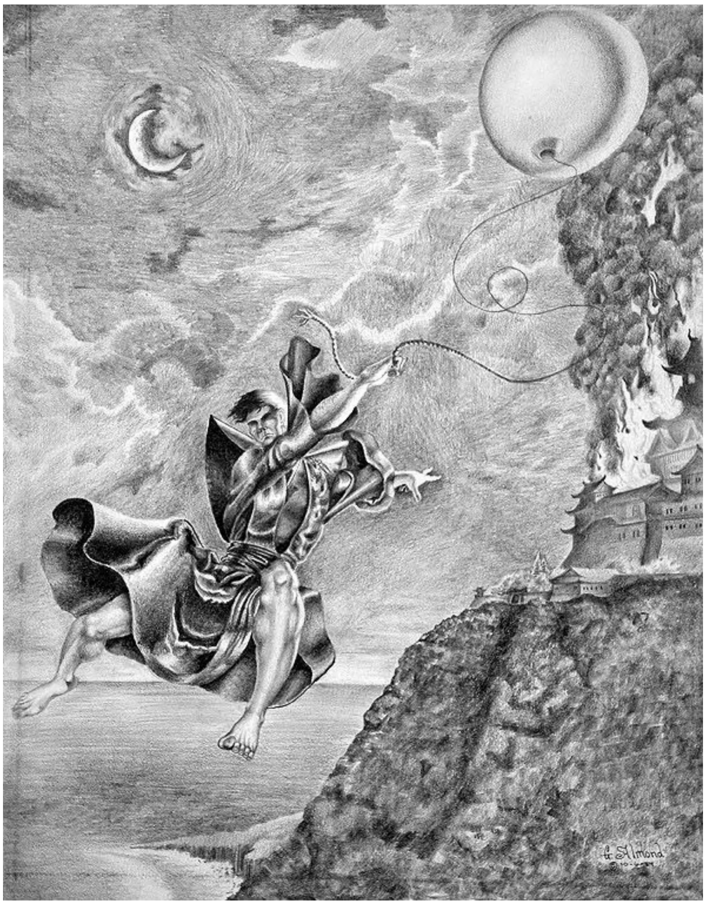
7777 falls into a castle trap and is captured. Blofeld and Irma aren't 100% sure that the man who was captured is James Bond. They place him in the "interrogation room" in which there is a chair that is over a geyser that is scheduled to erupt at 11:15 a.m.

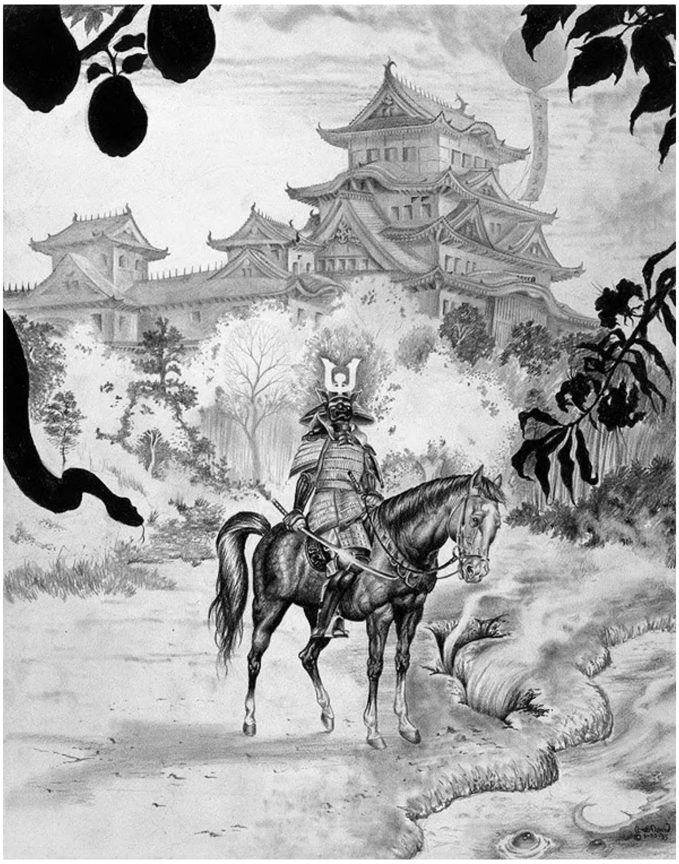
Bond decides to abandon his cover of a deaf-mute Japanese miner and reveal his true identity to them. Blofeld then attempts to kill him with a katana, but at the last minute, Bond manages to grab a stick, knocks out Irma Blunt and disarms Blofeld before killing him by strangling him.

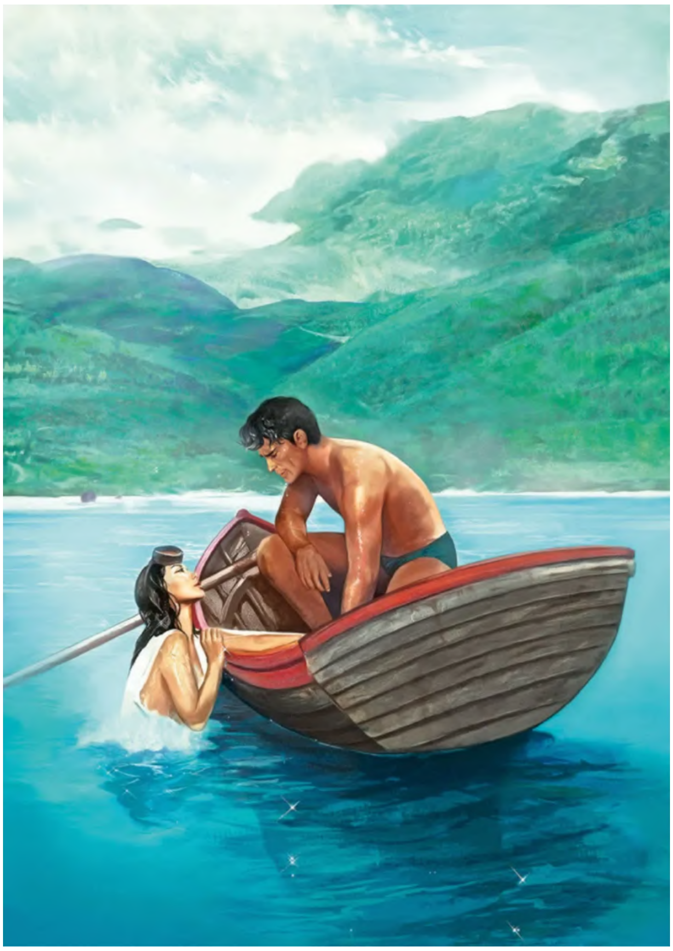
After initiating the destruction of the place, Bond flies away using a large balloon inflated with helium. Bond is then hit in the head by debris thrown by the explosion of the castle.

Having fallen into the sea, Bond is rescued by Kissy Suzuki who treats his wound. Although not fatal, it leaves him with amnesia and Suzuki, in love with him, decides not to tell him anything about his true identity so that he would stays with her. She makes him believe that his name is Taro Todoroki and that he is her lover. Meanwhile, as Bond is officially missing, presumed dead, M writes his obituary in the Times.

Bond therefore stays alongside Suzuki for several months, living in the humble fishing village. Until the day when, reading the word "Vladivostok" on a newspaper clipping, he felt profoundly disturbed. The word seems inexplicably linked to his past and he decides to find out why. Reluctantly and pregnant of Bond without him knowing it, Kissy agrees to let him go to Vladivostok in Russia.







Development of the script

You Only Live Twice will ultimately be the first James Bond film to practically make a clean sweep of the novel from which it takes its name. Yet early in the writing process, things were seemingly different.

The original plan was to do On Her Majesty's Secret Service with Maibaum at the writing. This idea was shelved to satisfy Sean Connery[1], who wanted to postpone the shooting of the next Bond film, and to capitalize on Bond's extreme popularity in Japan. You Only Live Twice was then chosen instead and announced in November 1965[2]. Maibaum was not available for the adaptation of this novel: he was busy writing On Her Majesty's Secret Service with the aim of making it as the next film.

As stated The James Bond Archives, it was Sydney Boehm[3] who first took on the role of the writer by submitting a 9-page treatment in November 1965 for You Only Live Twice. The scenario was apparently close to the novel, we find the two villains Blofeld and Irma Bunt hidden in a dangerous castle, but Boehm adds shootouts and a Japanese spy called Chiyono[4].

Sydney Boehm is an American screenwriter and producer born in Pennsylvania on April 4, 1908. After having been a journalist, Boehm turned to cinema from 1944. Among the thirty films on which he worked: High Wall (1947), Side Street (1950), Worlds Collide (1951) and The Big Heat (1953). Boehm died of pneumonia in 1990 at the age of 82.

During the premiere of Thunderball in Tokyo in 1965, Broccoli announced that You Only Live Twice will be directed by Lewis Gilbert[5]. In January 1966, Boehm turned in the first 139 pages of an unfinished first script[6].

Harold Jack Bloom, born in 1924 in the United States, devoted most of his career as a screenwriter to writing for television.
He worked on series such as Bonanza, The Man from U.N.C.L.E. or Twelve O'Clock High. He is also the co-creator of the medical show Emergency!. Bloom also wrote for cinema such as The Naked Spur (1953) and produced a few films.
He died of cancer at the age of 75, in 1999.

Somewhere for reasons that I don't know, Boehm left the project and a new screenwriter in the person of Harold Jack Bloom[7], in turn submitted on January 21 a project from which Blofeld disappeared[8]. He offers something more detailed on the 28th which opens with the death of Bond in Macau relayed by all the media, then moves on to his funeral, his resurrection aboard a submarine and his mission with Tiger Tanaka[9]. The story is inspired by Fleming's novel and Boehm's screenplay: it includes an industrial espionage plot, a shootout in the public baths, the death of Chiyono, as well as the metamorphosis of Bond into a Japanese worker so that he can accompany Kissy Suzuki without being noticed[10]. The story ends with the final confrontation with the Black Dragon society, which intends to take control of Tokyo using a gas that would sow terror among the population. Plan which is foiled by Bond, Tanaka and his ninjas[11].

In February, Broccoli announce to the press that You Only Live Twice "will be less gimmicky and more realistic, since the imitations have gotten so gimmicky. Bond will use his head much more, rather than mechanical things; although there will be some gimmicks"[12].

From mid-February 1966, the producers, the director, Ken Adam, and various members of the crew went to Japan to scout locations accompanied by screenwriter Harold Jack Bloom. They follow the route that Fleming had taken a few years earlier on his trip to Japan but simply cannot find a seaside castle for Blofeld's lair. On the other hand, they see volcanoes.

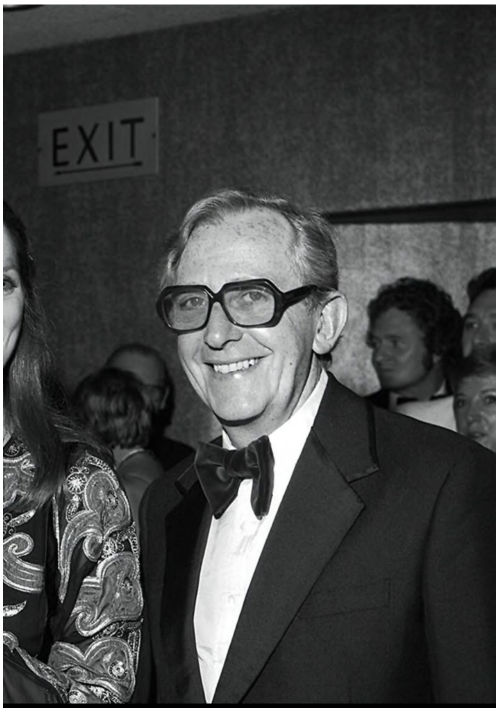
> - Cubby Broccoli[13] : I took a plane; Harry went off with his wife, Hal Bloom and Maurice Binder in search of salt mines. As far as I know, there aren't any salt mines in Japan. Harry was just as convinced there were. So while the salt-mine contingent drove away, I took to the air. What we needed was a vast enclave with a spread of water that would serve as the artificial lake featured in the story. We did a lot of island hopping in helicopters. I went to the famous castle of Himeji [...]. I wanted to find another castle somewhere on the coast which we could use as Blofeld's fortress. It wasn't to be found, and I realized the reason: the Japanese never built castles on the coast, because these would take the full force of the typhoons which rip through that area.
>
> We had been flying around for days and still hadn't found the ideal location. We made one last sweep over the island of Kyushu, which is at the southern tip of Japan. It is a great landscape of mountains and extinct volcanoes. [...] It was perfect. I decided we could place everything in this crater area: Blofeld's fortress and all the space hardware, including the launching pad for Blofeld's capsule-grabbing operation.

Ken Adam also remembers: "We didn't find anything that Fleming talked about, poisonous gardens [or] castles. [...] Everybody became excited by this [volcanic] area, like a moonscape, of extinct and some not-so-extinct volcanoes"[14].

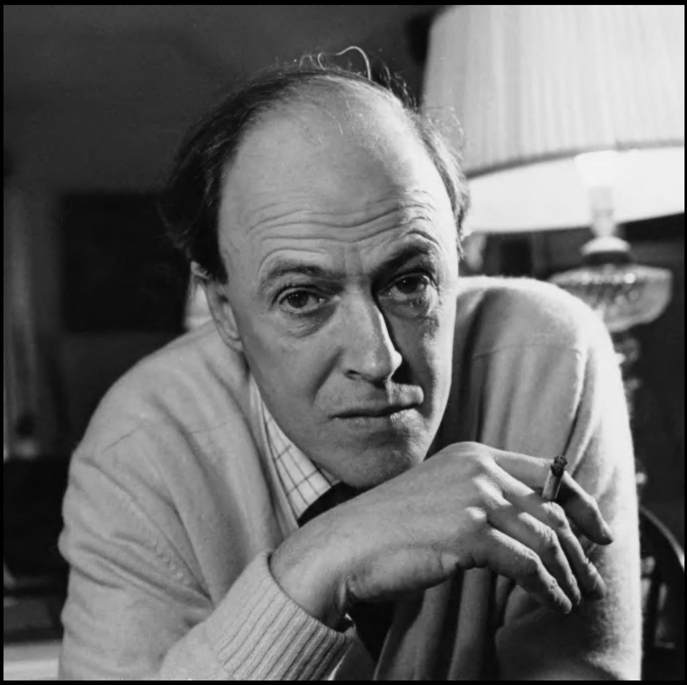
In Japan, filmmakers are also interested in ninjas[15]. (Although some of the scenes featuring ninja martial arts will be cut during editing, You Only Live Twice will be one of the first opportunities that the Western public would had to discover these various arts).

On February 23, Bloom submitted a new draft in which the villains endanger the Russian and American space programs[16]. The program Gemini and the space race were a hot topic at the time of writing, with the first spacewalks having taken place on the Russian and then American side in the first part of 1965.

However, the producers and director were unhappy with Bloom's work. For Cubby: "[Bloom] came up with the idea of having these Ninja-like Japanese characters crawling all over Tokyo, and it just didn't work"[17]. For Gilbert too "it didn't work out"[18]. Bloom would later say he felt shortchanged on the film's credits, saying that much of what we saw on screen was already in his scripts[19] (and not having them, I'm unfortunately not in a position to confirm or deny his statements).



Lewis Gilbert (1920-2018), the director of Alfie, was entrusted with the production of this Bond.



Roald Dahl[20] was born in 1916 in Wales (Great Britain) from Norwegian parents. He attended the parish school of Llandlaff in Wales and then the Public School of Repton, located near the Cadbury chocolate factory. Although he excels in athletic subjects, academic subjects are not his strong point.

Not being happy at school, he doesn't want to pursue further studies. At the age of 17 he left the old continent to go to Africa where he worked for the Shell oil company in Tanzania. At one point he witnessed the sight of a lion attacking a woman and the story he wrote about it for a newspaper became one of his first published texts.

During the Second World War, Dahl joined the army where he was given a company of native riflemen before joining the Royal Air Force as a fighter pilot in Africa. During the first years of the conflict he crashed twice, in Libya then in Greece. His first crash left him with a limp that he would keep for the rest of his life. Suffering from pain and fainting during rapid maneuvers, military doctors declared him unfit for air combat.

His new assignment is the United States. As part of his duties as embassy attaché, Dahl must help minimize the isolationist views still held by many Americans who don't wish to intervene in the conflict (the United States having only entered the war in the previous December, following the attack on Pearl Harbor). Dahl met Ian Fleming and the writer C. S. Forester. The latter will push him to write and will result in 1942 A Piece of Cake, a story for the Saturday Evening Post which describes his plane crash in Libya. He also writes a fantastic story, The Gremlins, in which little monsters cause plane crashes. Walt Disney was interested in it, initially wanting to make it into a film, but changed his mind and the story became an illustrated book.

Dahl continues to write some short stories for adults such Someone Like You or Kiss Kiss ; some were later adapted for television by Alfred Hitchcock.

He met the actress Patricia Neal with whom he married in 1953. The couple bought a small farm in Buckinghamshire (England) named Gipsy House (Dahl wrote his books in a hut in the garden) and had five children in the years that followed. However, misfortune befell his family: his son Theo was hit by a taxi, leaving him with serious after-effects, his daughter Olivia died of an illness and his wife also had health problems. Dahl will use his imagination to co-invent a medical device (the Wade-Dahl-Till) to help his son (and others)).

During this time Dahl became an increasingly recognized author. Using his imagination to invent stories for his children, he decides to finally turn them into books. It is under the mantle of writer of children's books that he will pass to posterity. In 1961 he published James and the Giant Peach and his most famous work, Charlie and the Chocolate Factory, was published in 1964. Around fifteen other children's books were published during his lifetime.

After his divorce in 1983, he married Felicity Crosland as his second wife.

Dahl also wrote some poems and television scripts. Apart from his two films made with Albert Broccoli (You Only Live Twice and Chitty Chitty Bang Bang), Dahl wrote very little for the cinema since he didn't liked doing it.

Roald Dahl died in 1990, aged 74.

Not achieving what they wanted with Bloom, the filmmakers then decided to find a new screenwriter for the film and their choice fell on Roald Dahl. A choice that may seem odd given that the writer had virtually no experience in film writing. "When we got back to England, someone suggested Roald Dahl, which I thought was a good idea because he'd got this strange offbeat style of writting", recalls Lewis Gilbert[21].

Also Thunderball was notably filmed on Paradise Island, in the Bahamas, a place owned by businessman Huntington Hartford. Huntington's sister, Josephine, was married to Ivar Bryce. When Cubby met Bryce during the filming and asked if there was anything he could do for him to make amends for teaming up with McClory, whom Bryce resented; the latter had asked Broccoli if he could help him to find work for a friend of his. The friend in question had a wife suffering from an expensive illness and was none other than Roald Dahl[22].

Perhaps the fact that Dahl had previously written a film (which ultimately never materialized) for United Artist also played a role in his hiring[23].

In an interview published by Starlog in August 1991, Dahl confided that the producers told him from the start: "you know, it will have to be completely invented. You can use the Japanese scenes and the names of the characters, but we need an entirely new plot"[24]. In any case, Dahl finds that You Only Live Twice is "Ian Fleming's worst book, with no plot in it which would ever make a movie"[25].

It must be said that the poor Dahl is not helped by the original material: it is difficult to give cinematic Bond spectators what now they expect of spectacular when the first part of the novel turns out to be a series of drinking bouts between Bond and Tanaka and that the main interest of the work is the story of revenge against Blofeld for the death of Tracy... Revenge which has no place in the cinematographic universe insofar as the film On Her Majesty's Service didn't exist yet. Doing You Only Live Twice wasn't mainly motivated by the plot of the novel itself but rather by the place where it takes place, Japan, an exotic country for the cameras and where Bond unleashes the box office.

"They asked me right off whether I could deliver a first draft in eight weeks, a second in four more, and a complete script in twenty weeks. I said I could", Dahl recalled[26].

"The main problem was the plot. I didn't know what the hell Bond was going to do", Dahl recalls[27]. In an article from Playboy from 1967 written by Dahl himself, between some "interesting" photos of Mie Hama and Akiko Wakabayashi, we can read:

> - Roald Dahl[28] : The famous co-producers (I confess I'd never heard of them) of the most famous and successful series of films in the history of motion pictures, Cubby Broccoli and Harry Saltzman, were sitting in an enormous room where the telephones never stopped ringing. Neither of them looked undernourished.
> - "You can come up with anything you like so far as the story goes", they told me, "but there are two things you mustn't mess about with. The first is the character of Bond. That's fixed. The second is the girl formula. That is also fixed".
> - "What's the girl formula?", I asked.
> - "There's nothing to it. You use three difference girls and Bond has them all".
> - "Separately or en masse?".
>
> One of them took a deep breath and let it out slowly.
> - "How many Bond films have you seen?" he asked.
> - "Just one. The one with the crazy motorcar".

> - "You'd better see the others right away. We'll send them out to your house with a projector and someone to work it".
> This was the first small hint I was to get of the swift, efficient, expansive way in which the Bond producers operated. Nobody else does things quite like them.
> - "So you put in three girls. No more and no less. Girl number one is pro-Bond. She stays around roughly through the first reel of the picture. Then she is bumped off by the enemy, preferably in Bond's arms".
> - "In bed or not in bed?" I asked.
> - "Wherever you like, so long as it's in good taste. Girl number two is anti-Bond. She works for the enemy and stays around throughout the middle third of the picture. She must capture Bond, and Bond must save himself by bowling her over with sheer sexual magnetism. This girl should also be bumped off, preferably in an original fashion".
> - There aren't many of those left", I said.
> - "We'll find one", they answered. "Girl number three is violently pro-Bond. She occupies the final third of the picture, and she must on no account be killed. Nor must she permit Bond to take any lecherous liberties with her until the very end of the story. We keep that for the fade-out".

In this regard, Broccoli states that he remembers this conversation well and that he would not say that it was exactly how he remembers it[29]... Anyway, for those who haven't noticed: Dahl specifies that in the film the girl number 1 is Aki, the second is Helga Brandt, and the third is Kissy Suzuki.

"Harry would usually nod off to sleep in the middle [our script conferences]"[30], says Dahl, who also adds, "then he'd suddenly wake up, and come up with quite a good idea"[31].

Roald Dahl surrounded by Albert Broccoli and Harry Saltzman.
TETSURO
SALTZMAN
007.com

Dahl delivered a 28-page treatment on May 20, 1966, then a first script shortly after[32]. On the 24th, Saltzman wrote to United Artist to say that he "think we have a wonderful story. [...] We are going to sit down with Roald Dahl starting next Thursday, and will be working with him every day for the next six weeks to get a final draft screenplay"[33].

After delivering a first draft, Dahl wrote to an acquaintance that the "bosses" were thrilled with what he had written, although he himself considered the thing to be "the biggest load of bullshit I've ever put my hand to"[34].

Script of June 17, 1966 revised

The only script of this film that I have is dated from June 17, 1966 (142 pages, credited to Roald Dahl) with a few pages revised in mid-July. Unsurprisingly it largely resembles the film, but there are still a number of interesting differences. The following was written with the help and contributions by Bill Koenig[35].

> 1. LONG SHOT. THE UNIVERSE.
> The camera moves past planets and stars and ends on a CLOSE SHOT of the WORLD. Suddenly into the foreground a Spacecraft fills the screen. Painted large on its body is the UNITED STATES FLAG and the words UNITED STATES.

In the pre-title sequence, the most significant change is the name of the American spacecraft: here called Gemini (as it was actually the case in real life, not Jupiter 16). The dialogues are much less talkative than in the film. Then a Russian delegation arrives by plane at the DEW Line for a meeting and the pre-title sequence ends with Bond apparently getting killed in the bed.

After the credits, Bond's "funeral" unfolds. Broccoli had told Dahl to start the film with the death of 007 and his funeral at sea[36]. Arriving in Moneypenny's office in the submarine, the dialogues are slightly different and drop some interesting information about Moneypenny's potential rank:

> - Bond: Penny, you look ravishing. It suits you [the WREN's uniform].
> - Moneypenny: You don't look so bad yourself, Commander. In you go... sir!
> - Bond: Thank you, Lieutenant.

In M's office, Bond tells his superior that the only "ill-effect" he felt during his fake death was "a slight lack of nicotine" and M offers him a cigarette. 007 will use that cigarette to burn the paper which contains the address of his contact in Tokyo. Interestingly, Bond has only ten days to act before the next American space flight (instead of the twenty in the film) and it is not said that the Russians intend to launch a spacecraft before them.

After he's done with M, Bond gives Moneypenny a kiss as he says "Don't worry, darling. I get it". She doesn't give him an Instant Japanese book, just as 007 doesn't tell her about his experience of oriental languages at Cambridge.

Bond meets Suki (who will be renamed Aki in the film after actress Akiko Wakabayashi got the role) during a sumo match. The scene is similar to what viewers would see in 1967 with a few added flourishes. For example, the stage directions in the script say: "[Bond] looks at the raw fish in front of him [sushi] [...], it doesn't quite appeal to the gourmet in Bond" or "(Bond makes a comment here which displays his knowledge of Sumo wrestling)".

He then meets his contact, Henderson, who makes him martinis. "Shaken not stirred? That was right, wasn't it?". While in the movie Henderson makes a mistake by making martinis stirred and not shaken.

Some time later, after Henderson's death, Bond arrives at Osato Chemical Corp and manages to kill the driver. He stashes the body in a place where there is alcohol, but unlike the film, he doesn't pour himself a drink. During the fight against the driver, no safe doors opened (unlike in the film). Instead there is a scene where Bond takes out a fountain pen from his pocket which turns out to be a metal detector, with which he manages to locate the safe.

Bond flees Osato's building and Suki comes to his rescue in her "sports car". During their conversation in the car there is an interesting line of dialogue that was not retained for the film:

> - Bond: We'll soon see about that. Before the night is out, you're going to start talking, and the quicker you start the less painful it's going to be...

She parks the car and flees into a building whose door closes, Bond chasing her manages to pass under the door before it closes completely. He ends up falling down a slide and landing in a comfortable chair in Tanaka's office. Tiger in this script says that if it hadn't been for Bond, the computers "would very quickly have redirected the chute, and you'd have been in a much hotter seat than that one".

On Tanaka's train they analyze a photo in which there are Ama fisherwomen "naked from the waist up" and there is the following exchange:

> - Bond: What are they?
> - Tanaka: A-M-A, Bondo-san, Ama. They are a rather primitive and underdeveloped people...
> - Bond: They look exceptionally well-developed to me.
> - Tanaka: The girls are all divers. They dive for the abalone shell and for pearls. There are several colonies of them scattered around the coast.

As we have just seen, Dahl also included an Ian Fleming-ism: Tiger Tanaka and the Japanese agent Suki sometimes use "Bondo-san" when addressing to 007. In the novel (chapter 6), Tanaka explains that Bond-san would looks too much like bon-san, "a priest, a greybeard". Additionally, Tiger says that strong consonants are not easy for Japanese to pronounce, so "when these occur in a foreign word, we add an O". This explanation is not included in Dahl's script, and "Bondo-san" will not appear in the film in which the characters prefer to say "Bond-san".

Tiger brings Bond to his house and 007 asks the head of the Japanese secret service if his wife is at home. "Me, a wife?", replies Tiger. "Never! In matters of this sort, I think I am very much the Japanese equivalent of Bondo-san".

Bond and Tiger are first undressed by four Japanese women for the bath:

> - Tanaka: My friend, you are about to undergo a new experience: the first civilised bath you have ever had in your life.
> [The girls start to undress them, Bond stops them].
> - Bond: Now just a minute! What exactly is the menu here, Tiger? Am I going to eat her or is she going to eat me?

- Tanaka: Cast your ridiculous inhibitions aside, my dear Bondo-san, and place yourself entirely in her hands. The rule here is never to do anything for yourself if you don't have to.
- Bond (with resignation): All right... Go ahead, my dear, I have nothing to conceal.
- Tanaka: I can never understand how you people can sit in a nasty little tub, wallowing in your own dirt and grime. It is disgusting to wash yourself in the bath. It fouls the water.
- Bond: What else is a bath for?
- Tanaka: A bath is for meditation and enjoyment, not for washing in.

Undressed, Bond and Tanaka go to sweat boxes (the thing where Bond locks Lippe in Thunderball). This is where the two men compare notes. Tiger is "offended" when Bond tells him that Mr. Osato is not big enough to be behind the hijacking of the American spaceship. When Tiger asks him who is big enough, Bond replies: "Nobody... Unless it could be my old friends in the Special Executive for Counter-intelligence, Terrorism, Revenge and Extortion". The film doesn't bother to reiterate what SPECTRE means.

Now it's time to be washed, but Bond is strangely quite shy:

- Bond: Like a lamb to the slaughter...
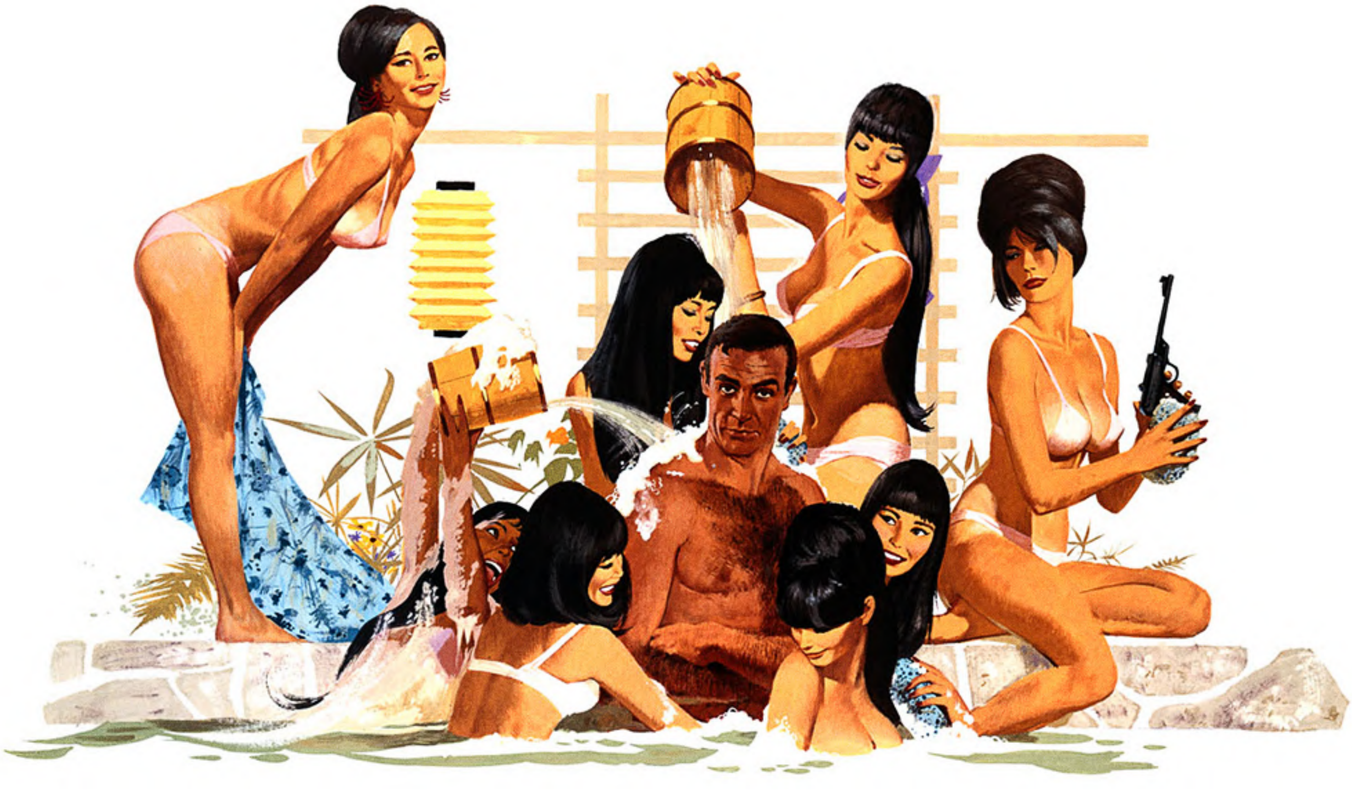
- Tanaka: I never thought I would see the great Bondo-san losing his nerve.
- Bond: The trouble is I haven't been bathed by a woman since I was five years old.
- Tanaka: Of course you haven't. Your repressed English girls would have a fit if you asked them to perform this simple service.



"It is noticeable that the two girls helping Tanaka are unable to keep their eyes off Bond", according to the stage directions. Soon after, "all four girls have quietly slid over to Bond, leaving Tanaka alone. The girls are competing to wash Bond". Tiger shouts for the women to come back, 007 says they must think he needs washing more than him, and "the four girls ignore Tanaka". "They rinse soap off Bond and help him into the bath. Tanaka roars at them in Japanese, threatening them with terrible punishments".

As for the thing that fascinates women about Bond, 007 says: "I can make a pretty good guess". But Tiger responds: "You are quite wrong. It is nothing but your ape-like appearance. [...] All Japanese men are blessed with exceptionally clean smooth skin. We consider hair on the chest to be obnoxious". Bond continues with:

> - Bond (looking at the four girls lined up on the edge of the bath): What are they waiting for now?

Bond chooses a girl for his massage whom the script names "Mariko". As Bond spoke to her during the massage, she had to say in Japanese "I am afraid I do not understand what the honourable gentleman is saying".

Bond go bed with Suki and goes the next day to meet Osato (No. 2 of SPECTRE) who uses an X-ray machine in his office to examine 007, "Bond's revolver is very prominent". However later, Blofeld says that the weapon is a Walther PPK (which is definitely not a revolver). It is also said on this occasion that Helga Brandt is an European "blonde" (while she is a redhead in the film).

Osato gives the order to kill Bond. Suki saves him and they flee, chased by thugs in a sedan. Suki asks for Tiger's the "usual reception" but in this script it takes a different form than in the film. No helicopter with a giant magnet here, instead Suki tells the head of the Japanese secret service that she is "heading for Street X as fast as possible". Tiger is in his office. He "flicks speak-box switch, and begins to shout into box with great rapidity and urgently in Japanese". We see two Japanese men receiving his orders.

Shortly after, Suki's sport car "swerves into a deserted alley" with the sedan still in pursuit. Suki "begins to sound horn. [...] Suddenly, one buildings on either side of the street dislodges itself from the other houses and slides outward. The buildings meet in street centre, forming a brick wall". The thugs' car "crashes into the wall and explodes in a sheet of flame"! The scene will be rewritten with the magnet later, during filming in Tokyo.

At the port of Kobe, it's not a forklift that rushes towards Bond and Suki, but rather wooden boxes that fall from a crane, narrowly missing them. Men (armed with silenced pistols) approach them and they flee into a warehouse. The script tells us that this action sequence is "to be worked out in detail later", but gives a few things which will not end the film: "[in the warehouse, Bond] sowing a trail of obstacles in his wake, i.e. knocking over and smashing a carboy of acid, rolling a drum toward his pursuers, toppling a huge crate". There is no passage on the roof, nor the descent by falling on the boxes, but Bond still gets knocked out and Ostato asks his men to send him to "number 12" (and not 11).

Bond wakes up in the company of Helga (who is smoking a cigar); he is tied to a chair in a hotel owned by Osato (rather that her cabin on the Ningpo). During this scene there are many more kisses than in the film: the word "kiss" appears no less than 22 times in 3 pages between the lines of dialogue of the two characters! On the other hand, no "Oh, the things I do for England" here.

Bond and Helga are then on a plane (a Tiger Moth) and much of what happens in the following scenes is very similar to the film.

When later Q put together the Little Nellie in Tanaka's garage, there is an interesting stage direction: "Note: Many of the parts [...] of Wallace [instead of Wallis] Autogiro should be faked at this stage to make them more collapsible than they really are. For example, the Rotor-Blades, normally about 5 feet long, will be hinged in the middle, so they bend in two. The Body, we could perhaps pretend is inflatable".

Before leaving, Bond asks Tiger if he wants to try Little Nellie:

> - Tanaka (throwing up hands in horror): I know better ways than that of committing Hari Kiri!

Little Nellie came to Ken Adam's attention when he heard its inventor (and pilot in the film), Ken Wallis, being interviewed about his gyroplane on the show BBC Today[37]. Saltzman was also interested in autogyros for Bond since he saw them in a magazine:

> - Peter Hunt[38] : I had the idea for a helicopter chase. Harry Saltzman said: "Great! Bond can be chased by five helicopters", which was typical of how Harry was. No idea was too fantastic. He said, "If he's Bond, he's got to be chased by more than one helicopter". I realized what a big job it was going to be. So we started to write it when Harry went back to London and picked up Aero magazine and saw the gyrocopter. He picked up the telephone and said, "I want this gyrocopter. Get it down to Pinewood. I want to look at it".

Cubby was apparently interested by the thing:

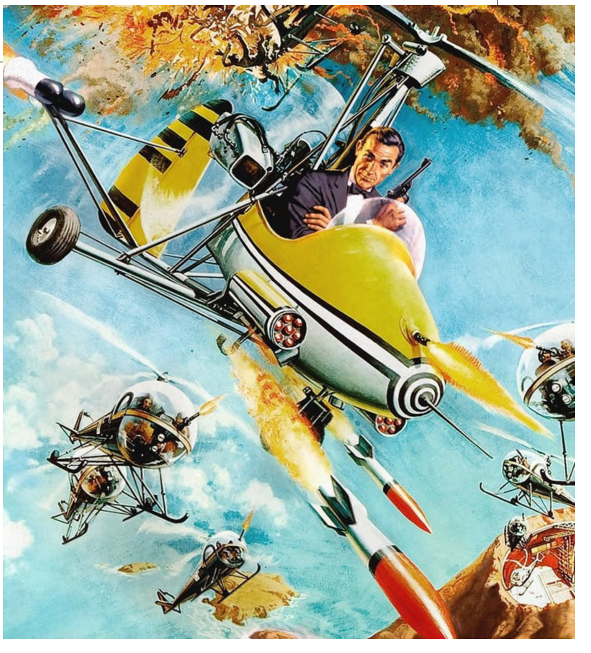
> - Roald Dahl[39] : After I had finished the screenplay, Cubby had seen this extraordinary helicopter. It had nothing to do with the Bond films at all. This thing was amazing. Cubby had happened to see it, and he said, "We've got to have this in the film. It's so good". He showed it to me and said, "Go back and put it in". [...] Of course, I knew that you couldn't take that to bits and put it together again [in a suitcase] the way they did [in the movie]. That's a bit of artist's license, so I said the only way to do this and have fun with it is to have it in a box.

Whoever discovered it first, Wallis was invited by the filmmakers to demonstrate his device at Pinewood and it was decided to include it in the film. Wallis being nicknamed "Nellie" (due to Nellie Wallace), the aircraft was christened Little Nellie by EON[40].

Peter Hunt seems to remember that the script had a car chase instead, when Little Nellie hadn't yet been included[41].

In this script the Little Nellie doesn't have all the arsenal that it will have in the film but does have other gadgets. The full list of the autogyro gadgets in the script is as follows (listed in order of use):

- Smoke screen: "It isn't just a jet of smoke coming from one pipe. It is more like a huge puff that explodes all around his machine, expanding quickly, hiding the Autogiro in what becomes a large cloud".



- "A kind of wire fishing-net" which ends up in the rotors of one of the SPECTRE helicopters.
- (It's not a gadget, but Bond manages to get rid of two helicopters by causing them to crash into each other through skillful maneuvers).
- Spiral ejector-cutter: above the rotor of the Little Nellie there is a way to deploy a second rotor with cutting blades and detach it by sending it upwards. Bond thus gets rid of the last helicopter which is above him.

After hijacking the Russian spaceship, Blofeld talks to two orientals and kills Helga. It should be noted that in the script their discussions happens in a place described like a conference room with 11 SPECTRE members around a table (and not in Blofeld's apartment). Helga's death is slightly different in this script: she walks on a pontoon that passes over a pool of lava (instead of piranhas). Blofeld pulls a lever, the bridge drops "like a trap door" and she ends up in the lava.

At Himeji Castle:

> - Bond: They didn't have four armed helicopters guarding that area for nothing. We've got to get down there fast, Tiger...
> - Tanaka: I know, but that's tough country around those volcanoes. That's why I've brought you here first. This is my Ninja Training School, top secret. You know about Ninja?
> - Bond: Show me.
> [In the garden, twenty of them are training].
> - Tanaka: For this job, I have chosen sixty Ninjas. Every one of them has passed the highest tests of courage and endurance. They'll be worth a thousand ordinary soldiers.

Ninjas use various weapons: explosive eggs, discs with spikes ("easy to conceal [...] and really quite nasty if you know how to use them"), blowguns ("if you met this man, you would not know he had a weapon. Blowpipe is ordinary bamboo walking-stick"). Tanaka presents Bond with the flare bullets weapons ("[this weapon] is better than yours, Bondo-san") and suggests that 007 try it. Bond is doubtful ("it's a new one on me") and shoots with it at an egg thrown in the air: he manages to hit it.

After the special cigarettes, Tanaka explains to Bond why he has to get married to get a cover:

> - Tanaka: [...] But you, my dear Bondo-san, are a big headache.
> - Bond: Why?
> - Tanaka: They would spot you at once. Six times already they have tried to kill you. You would blow the whole game!
> - Bond: I'll be damned if I'm going to sit here on my fanny ...
> - Tanaka: I know that. But you can't come as you are. We must do three things to make you unnoticeable in the district.

Bond is disguised as a Japanese and the script gives the answer to: "why don't you just dye the parts that show?":

> - Bond: Just do the bits that show.
> - Suki: Not safe.
> - Bond: Only you, sweetheart, would ever find me out.

When Suki dies of poisoning, Bond is more affected than in the film: he is about to carry her outside to take her to a doctor when Tanaka enters:

> - Tanaka: She is dead.
> - Bond: She can't be.
> - Tanaka: Yes, Bondo-san, I'm afraid she is.
> Bond, visibly distressed, stares at the girl he is carrying. Then he holds her close, lays his cheek against hers. He walks away with her, and sits down, still holding her in his arms.

The following shots show Bond training like a ninja, the stage directions tell us that he wants to "avenge Suki". Among these shots we were supposed to see Bond in a ninja costume climbing a wall, walking on water with "flappers", "walk on ceiling with hands", etc...

When Bond later enters with Kissy into the cave with the gas, 007 was supposed to fell into the water semi-conscious and Kissy come to his rescue by pulling him to shore. The stage directions specify that after getting to safety, "Bond is lying on his back. He has more or less recovered. Much of his Japanese make-up has come off in the water. (Note: During the next few scenes, he should revert, as inconspicuously as possible, to being non-Japanese)".

Bond asks Kissy how she did it and she replies that she is used to holding her breath as an Ama diver. 007 asks her to show him, then kisses her, and they see the helicopter land in the hollow of the volcano. Bond asks what's in this volcano and she replies, "a sort of lake, We used to climb it often when we were children". They go there.

During his infiltration into the volcano, Bond have to hang from an electrical cable before joining the monorail. Suddenly "all lamps in the volcano" connected to this cable goes out, Bond hurry down while Blofeld ask for the emergency generator to be turn on.

Bond frees the American and Russian astronauts, an interesting note says: "Russian Female Astronaut should be deleted from earlier section of this script. Russian Space Capsule is a Two-Man not a Three-man vehicle". (When this script was wrote, only one woman has ever been to space, Valentina Tereshkova; she was Russian and it was in 1963).

Things differ from the film: Bond tells the astronauts that he is an English secret agent and that he needs one of them. A Russian offers his help (an American has a broken arm and is therefore of no use to Bond) and Bond takes him with him. 007 tells the Russian that the launch of the SPECTRE spaceship must be delayed in order to gain time for the reinforcements to arrive and explains his idea: cutting the ignition cable. The Russian tells him that they don't have the right color uniform to get close enough to the cable (SPECTRE workers has different uniforms colors depending of their roles).

They go to see a SPECTRE's astronaut to whom Bond says, "You're under arrest! No. 1's orders!", and after a fight, take his suit. Disguised as an astronaut, Bond goes to the launch pad, discreetly cuts the ignition cable, before being stopped for the same reasons as in the film.

A technician says that the ignition cable has been cut and Blofeld, without panicking thus showing "his qualities as a leader", asks for it to be repaired.

And then Bond is brought to Blofeld and there's the big reveal of the SPECTRE leader's face; Dahl's script tries to make the most of it:

> Camera reaches Blofeld's face. And what a face it is! Ye see reflected therein all the evil in the world. The eyes, greatly magnified behind steel-rimmed pebble glasses are like the eyes of an intelligent octopus; all black, with no whites around them at all. The skin of the cheeks is pock-marked. The ears protrude slightly, the jaw is prognathous. Camera stay close on face.

The dialogues differ quite a bit from the film during this first meeting:

> \- Blofeld: So we meet again, Mr. Bond. How nice it is to see you... Strip him and remove all weapons. If he makes trouble give it to him through both knee-caps, But don't kill him. I want him for myself... You must forgive me for being so busy at this moment, Mr. Bond, but I am about to inaugurate a little war. I estimate some three hundred million people will be wiped away in the next few hours. It will be good sport. And you, my friend, shall have a grandstand seat and watch it all happening...
> [N° 3 and 4 talk about the launch and Blofeld sees the ninja outfit under Bond's suit].
> \- Blofeld: Fancy dress! My dear boy, what an amateur you are!
> \- Bond: I shall get you, you miserable bastard, before this night is out.
> \- Blofeld: Correction, Mr. Bond. I shall get you. In one hour's time, I shall dine sumptuously beside the pool in my private quarters. My piranha fish will dine with me.
> [No. 3 and a man talk about the launch].
> \- Blofeld: Washington reports a feeling of optimism is sweeping the country. Nobody believes that Russia will now dare to attack this American spacecraft and risk war... (Bblofeld laughs) This time, Mr. Bond, we have painted the Hammer and Sickle on our capsule to avoid any doubts. The American astronauts will be given time to report this before we swallow them...
> [No. 3 and a man talk about the launch].
> - Blofeld: Even the great James Bond is powerless to do anything now.
> [Launch].

- Blofeld: It is all so simple, isn't it, Mr. Bond? In a few minutes my mission will be accomplished. And this time, I shall not even risk detection by bringing my own astronauts back to earth. As soon as we have swallowed the American capsule, I shall depress a perfectly ordinary little button, and poof, up they will go, both of them together!

Tanaka and his ninjas arrive, Bond asks for two cigarettes ("as it's my last, I'll have a double"), and opens the crater to his allies. Bond escapes the control center, joins Tanaka and comes a battle. At one point "Osato, standing near door, raises a gun, takes aim at Bond. Kissy, running in through door behind him, bops him on the head with gun-butt just in time. Osato falls". It should be noted that the character of Hans doesn't exist in this script, instead Bond picks up Osato and says to him:

- Bond: Where's the switch that blows up the spacecraft?!
- Osato: You go to hell!
[Bond is strangling him].

> \- Bond: Where is it? You better hurry!
> [Bond continues to strangle him].
> \- Bond: It's your last chance, you bastard!
> \- Osato: Stop... stop... I show you...

He tells him and 007 blows up SPECTRE's spaceship. Blofeld activates the volcano's self-destruction and the script ends in the same way as the film, although with a little more dialogue between Bond and Kissy:

> \- Bond: Let's go away together.
> \- Kissy: Where?
> \- Bond: Somewhere quiet and peaceful.
> \- Kissy: You mean you will stay?
> \- Bond: I've decided to take a long leave.
> \- Kissy: Can you do that? Will they let you?
> \- Bond: They'll never find me.
> [The submarine containing M and Moneypenny surfaces beneath them…].

Welcome to Japan, M. Dahl

Armed with a script, the filmmakers went to Japan to shoot the film and brought Roald Dahl with them so he could rewrite some sequences on location.

"I had to follow them around because they constantly wanted new bits of dialogue [...] So, I went to Japan with them, stayed the whole time there and generally had a good time. I didn't get into the acrimony between Cubby and Harry, which was just beginning then. Cubby was marvelous with us, [...] as far as I can remember, he was in charge [of that film]. Harry put in an appearance, but he didn't get too close to Cubby"[42]. "Once, in a Japanese hotel in Kagoshima, I went into Mie Hama's suit at own her request in order to help her with some new lines of dialogue"[43].

Dahl was particularly impressed by all the money involved: "You went everywhere by helicopter.. [...] It was well-organized; they were in on a gold mine and they knew it. They quite rightly never skimped on the money [to make the film], never"[44].

Speaking of helicopters, Lewis Gilbert remembers:

- Lewis Gilbert[45] : We had this gap in the story, where we had to help Bond get away from a car chasing his car. Cubby suggested a crane picking up the SPECTRE car and dropping it into the water. I thought this was quite funny, but hit on a better idea. I suggested: "Wouldn't it be better if a helicopter came down with a great magnet on it, picked up the car from the road and dropped into the sea?". So away they went to see if it was practical and possible, and whether we could get permission to fly a car over Tokyo.

About Gilbert, Dahl is full of praise for him: "I've written quite a few films [since then] and he is the only director I ever worked with who is any kind of a decent fellow. He was absolutely splendid. He not only helped in script conferences, but had some good ideas and then left you alone, and when you produced the finished thing, he shot it [instead of trying to rewrite everything]"[46].

Roald Dahl had brought his wife, Patricia Neal, to Japan with him. There, Albert and Dana Broccoli were disconcerted to find that Dahl was harsh with Patricia while she had just recovered from a heart attack, but came to realize over time that it was apparently some sort of "treatment"[47].

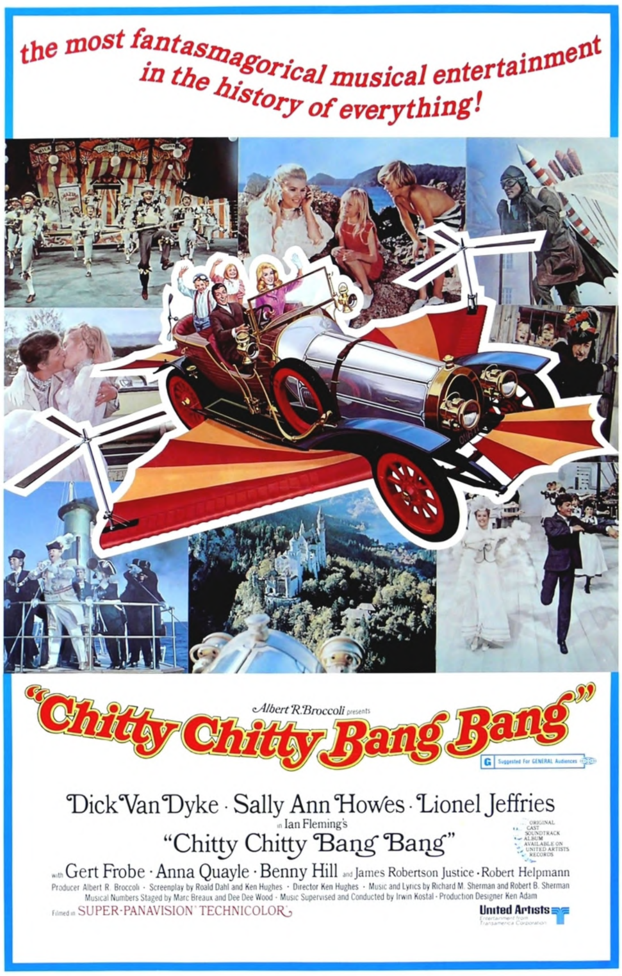
Later Dahl learns that he was not the only screenwriter to have worked on the film and that one of his predecessor would share the credit with him. "They had probably, and hadn't told me, commissioned a screenplay from him, and it hadn't been any good, but they picked out that idea and possibly one or two others which they had asked me to put in. So, Bloom had a right to some kind of credit. I never worked with him. The first time I heard of Bloom wanting a share in the credits was after the film had been cut and I was told that there would be a share"[48].

In the film Harold Bloom will be credited for "additional story material".

Roald Dahl never liked writing for the cinema: "if you've got enough money to live comfortably, there's no reason in the world to do a screenplay", he declared[49]. However "You Only Live Twice was fun to do. It was the only screenplay I've ever done which was fun"[50].

The approximately $165,500[51] payday was certainly one source of joy, with Dahl declaring to his neighbors that he would never need to work again, having "made so much money from that movie"[52].

After You Only Live Twice, Dahl will no longer write Bond films: "they never asked me [again]", explain the screenwriter[53].



the most fantasmagorical musical entertainment in the history of everything!
Albert R. Broccoli presents
"Chitty Chitty Bang Bang"
G Suggested For GENERAL Audiences
Dick Van Dyke · Sally Ann Howes · Lionel Jeffries
in Ian Fleming's
"Chitty Chitty Bang Bang"
ORIGINAL CAST SOUNDTRACK ALBUM AVAILABLE ON UNITED ARTISTS RECORDS with Gert Frobe · Anna Quayle · Benny Hill and James Robertson Justice · Robert Helpmann Producer Albert R. Broccoli · Screenplay by Roald Dahl and Ken Hughes · Director Ken Hughes · Music and Lyrics by Richard M. Sherman and Robert B. Sherman
Musical Numbers Staged by Marc Breaux and Dee Dee Wood · Music Supervised and Conducted by Irwin Kostal · Production Designer Ken Adam
Filmed in SUPER-PANAVISION TECHNICOLOR
United Artists
Entertainment from Transamerica Corporation

Dahl, unable to say no to a huge check, will however participate in the writing of the next Cubby Broccoli film (which is being made without Saltzman), based on another book by Ian Fleming: Chitty Chitty Bang Bang. A non-Bond children's novel in which a family discovers that the new car they bought is quite special since it can fly.

The screenwriter had a different experience on this musical film: "the whole thing was botched up. It was a disaster", blaming director Ken Hughes for interfering by requesting lot of rewrites, and blaming Cubby for letting him have them[54].

Richard Maibaum will also participate in rewrites of Chitty Chitty Bang Bang for Cubby Broccoli.

Sources/references from chapter 5: You Only Live Twice

1 "Just for Variety" article in Daily Variety by Army Archerd (December 14, 1965): "We have decided to accommodate him and have delayed the film until late next year", says Cubby. Via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
2 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).
3 For Sydney Boehm biography, see for the sources:
Sydney Boehm's Wikipedia page.
4 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
5 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
6 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
7 For Harold Jack Bloom biography, see for the sources:
Harold Jack Bloom's Wikipedia page.
8 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
9 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
10 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
11 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
12 "In Tokyo With Dave Jampel" article in Daily Variety, (February 24, 1966). Via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
13 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
14 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
15 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
16 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
17 A Panel discussion with Broccoli, Gilbert and Adam at Museum of Modern Art (June 29, 1979). Via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
18 007 Magazine (You Only Live Twice, 50th Anniversary Special issue, 2017).
19 "Roald Dahl" biography by Jeremy Treglown (1993)
20 For Roald Dahl biography, see for the sources:
"He Only Lived Twice" article in Starlog magazine by Tom Soter (issue #169, August 1991).
Roald Dahl Fans website: https://www.roalddahlfans.com/about-dahl/dahl-biography/
"Roald Dahl" by Rennay Craats (2015).
"Roald Dahl, Writer, 74, Is Dead; Best Sellers Enchanted Children" article in The New York Times By William H. Honan (November 24, 1990).
"Auhor Roald Dahl dies" article in The Washington Post by Richard Pearson (November 23, 1990).
Roald Dahl's Wikipedia page.
21 007 Magazine (You Only Live Twice, 50th Anniversary Special issue, 2017).
22 John Cork in the Casino Royale's DVD bonus "Ian Fleming: The Secret Road to Paradise".
23 "He Only Lived Twice" article in Starlog magazine by Tom Soter (issue #169, August 1991).
24 "He Only Lived Twice" article in Starlog magazine by Tom Soter (issue #169, August 1991).
25 "He Only Lived Twice" article in Starlog magazine by Tom Soter (issue #169, August 1991).
26 "The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).
27 "He Only Lived Twice" article in Starlog magazine by Tom Soter (issue #169, August 1991).
28 "007's Oriental Eyefuls" article in Playboy magazine (June 1967, US edition).
29 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
30 "He Only Lived Twice" article in Starlog magazine by Tom Soter (issue #169, August 1991).
31 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
32 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
33 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
34 Letter to Armitage Watkins (April 13, 1966); via "Storyteller: The Authorized Biography of Roald Dahl" by Donald Sturrock (2010).
35 "1966: Roald Dahl finds Twice is the only way to Live" article by Bill Koenig on The Spy Command website: https://hmssweblog.wordpress.com/2015/08/03/1966-roald-dahl-finds-twice-is-the-only-way-to-live/
36 "He Only Lived Twice" article in Starlog magazine by Tom Soter (issue #169, August 1991).
37 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
38 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
39 "He Only Lived Twice" article in Starlog magazine by Tom Soter (issue #169, August 1991).
40 007 Magazine (You Only Live Twice, 50th Anniversary Special issue, 2017).
41 "The Incredible World of 007" by Lee Pfeiffer and Philip Lisa (1992).
42 "He Only Lived Twice" article in Starlog magazine by Tom Soter (issue #169, August 1991).
43 "007's Oriental Eyefuls" article in Playboy magazine (June 1967, US edition).
44 "He Only Lived Twice" article in Starlog magazine by Tom Soter (issue #169, August 1991).

45 007 Magazine (You Only Live Twice, 50th Anniversary Special issue, 2017).
46 "He Only Lived Twice" article in Starlog magazine by Tom Soter (issue #169, August 1991).
47 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
48 "He Only Lived Twice" article in Starlog magazine by Tom Soter (issue #169, August 1991).
49 "He Only Lived Twice" article in Starlog magazine by Tom Soter (issue #169, August 1991).
50 "He Only Lived Twice" article in Starlog magazine by Tom Soter (issue #169, August 1991).
51 "Storyteller: The Authorized Biography of Roald Dahl" by Donald Sturrock (2010).
52 Dahl's neighbors Alan Higgin in "Storyteller: The Authorized Biography of Roald Dahl" by Donald Sturrock (2010).
53 "He Only Lived Twice" article in Starlog magazine by Tom Soter (issue #169, August 1991).
54 "He Only Lived Twice" article in Starlog magazine by Tom Soter (issue #169, August 1991).

FAR UP! FAR OUT!
FAR MORE!
James Bond
007 is back!
ALBERT R. BROCCOLI
HARRY SALTZMAN
JAMES BOND 007
IAN FLEMING'S
"ON HER MAJESTY'S SECRET SERVICE"
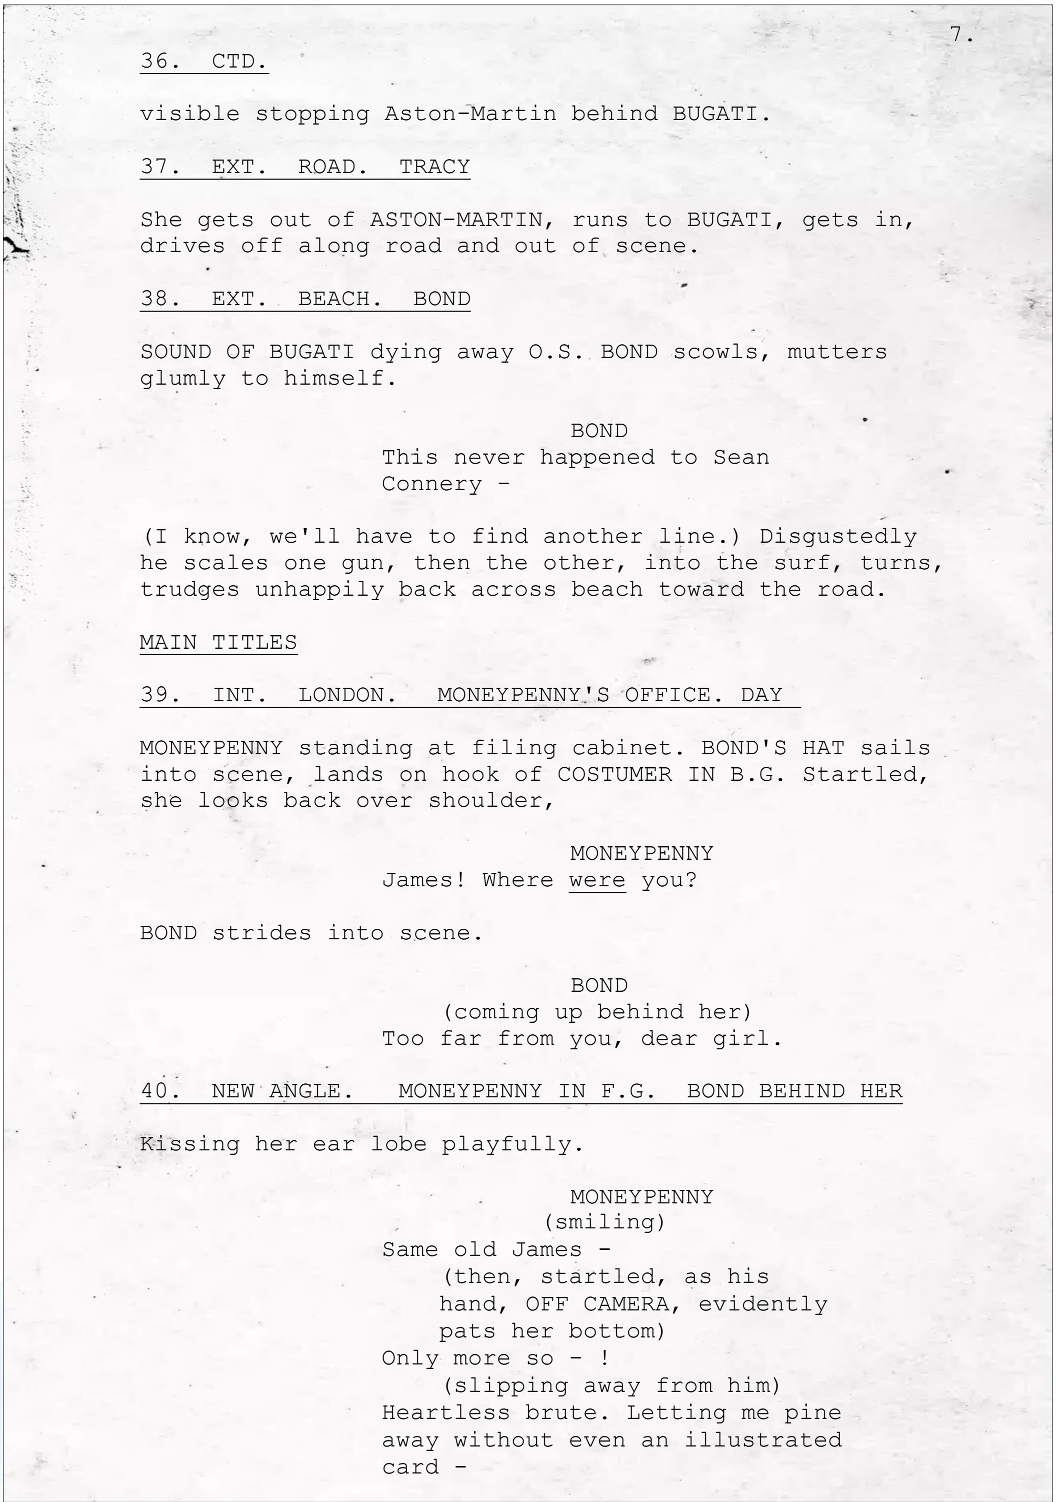
GEORGE LAZENBY · DIANA RIGG · TELLY SAVALAS
GABRIELE FERZETTI and ILSE STEPPAT
United Artists

Release date (premiere) :
18 December 1969

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Screenplay by Richard Maibaum ;
additional dialogue by Simon Raven"

Director :..................................Peter Hunt
Producers :..Albert R. Broccoli & Harry Saltzman
Director photography :......Michael Reed
Set Designer :.................................Syd Cain
Composer :..............................John Barry
Editor :.......................................John Glen
Title sequence :...............Maurice Binder
Main song vocals :.........Louis Armstrong



7.

36. CTD.

visible stopping Aston-Martin behind BUGATI.

37. EXT. ROAD. TRACY

She gets out of ASTON-MARTIN, runs to BUGATI, gets in, drives off along road and out of scene.

38. EXT. BEACH. BOND

SOUND OF BUGATI dying away O.S. BOND scowls, mutters glumly to himself.

BOND
This never happened to Sean Connery -

(I know, we'll have to find another line.) Disgustedly he scales one gun, then the other, into the surf, turns, trudges unhappily back across beach toward the road.

MAIN TITLES

39. INT. LONDON. MONEYPENNY'S OFFICE. DAY

MONEYPENNY standing at filing cabinet. BOND'S HAT sails into scene, lands on hook of COSTUMER IN B.G. Startled, she looks back over shoulder,

MONEYPENNY
James! Where were you?

BOND strides into scene.

BOND
(coming up behind her)
Too far from you, dear girl.

40. NEW ANGLE. MONEYPENNY IN F.G. BOND BEHIND HER

Kissing her ear lobe playfully.

MONEYPENNY
(smiling)
Same old James - (then, startled, as his hand, OFF CAMERA, evidently pats her bottom)
Only more so - !
(slipping away from him)
Heartless brute. Letting me pine away without even an illustrated card -

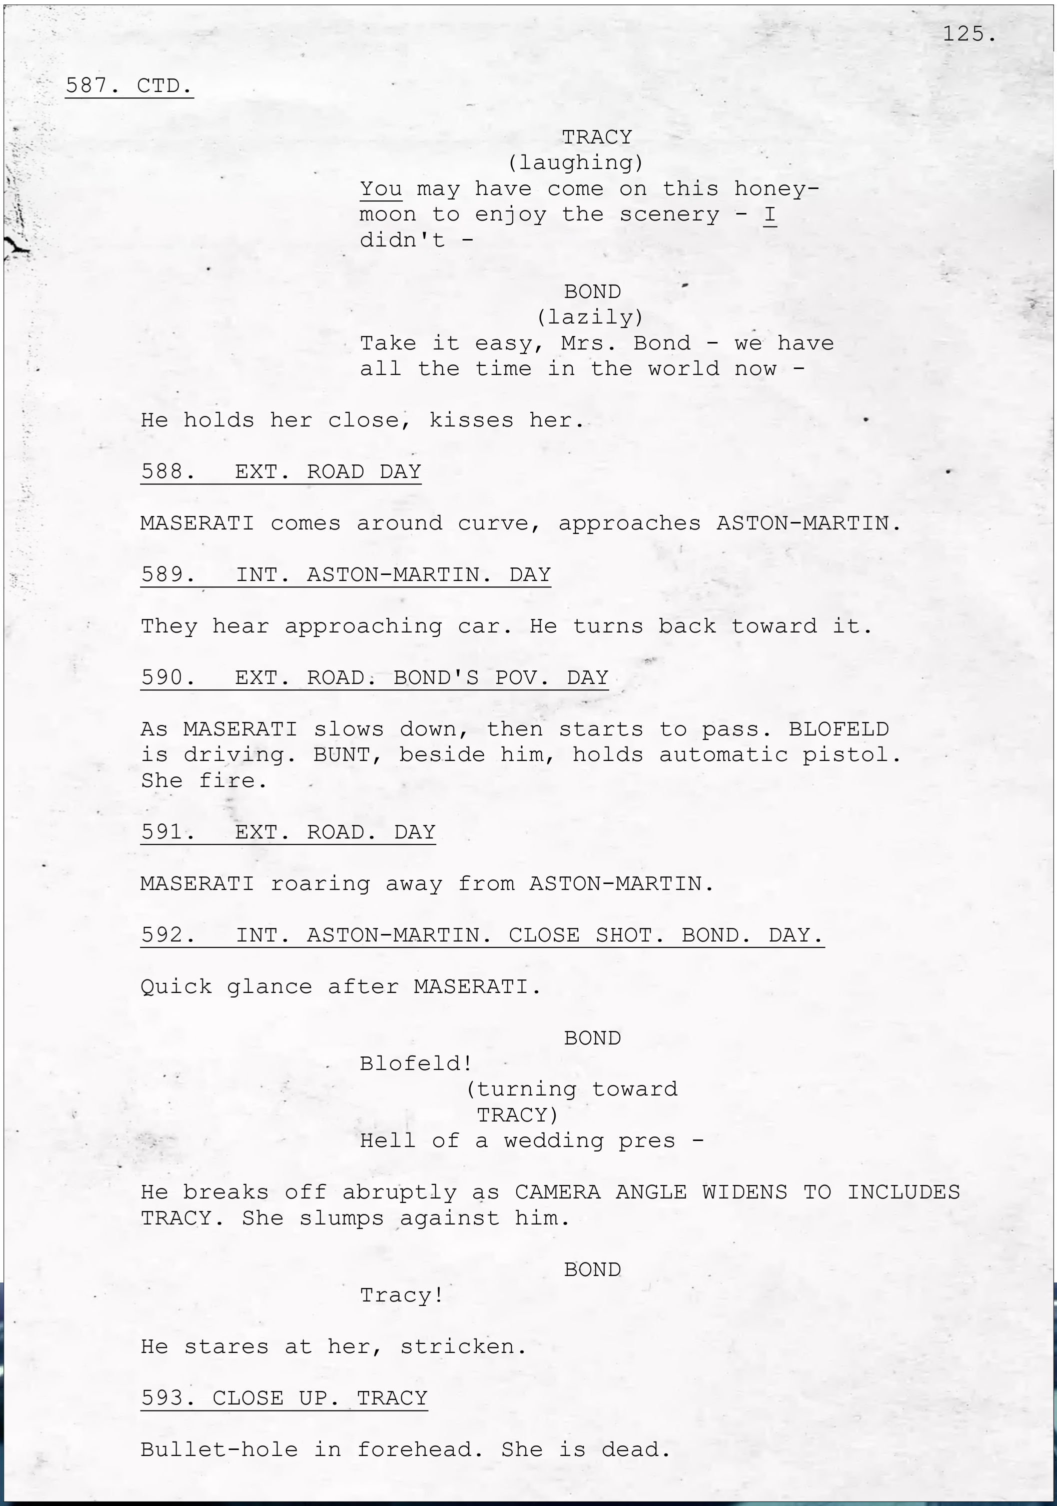
CHAPTER 6



125.

587. CTD.

TRACY
(laughing)
You may have come on this honeymoon to enjoy the scenery - I didn't -

BOND
(lazily)
Take it easy, Mrs. Bond - we have all the time in the world now -

He holds her close, kisses her.

588. EXT. ROAD DAY

MASERATI comes around curve, approaches ASTON-MARTIN.

589. INT. ASTON-MARTIN. DAY

They hear approaching car. He turns back toward it.

590. EXT. ROAD. BOND'S POV. DAY

As MASERATI slows down, then starts to pass. BLOFELD is driving. BUNT, beside him, holds automatic pistol. She fire.

591. EXT. ROAD. DAY

MASERATI roaring away from ASTON-MARTIN.

592. INT. ASTON-MARTIN. CLOSE SHOT. BOND. DAY.

Quick glance after MASERATI.

BOND
Blofeld!
(turning toward TRACY)
Hell of a wedding pres -

He breaks off abruptly as CAMERA ANGLE WIDENS TO INCLUDES TRACY. She slumps against him.

BOND
Tracy!

He stares at her, stricken.

593. CLOSE UP. TRACY

Bullet-hole in forehead. She is dead.

Cast:

James Bond :	George Lazenby
Ernst Stavro Blofeld :	Telly Savalas
"Tracy" di Vicenzo :	Diana Rigg
Irma Bunt:	Ilse Steppat
Marc-Ange Draco :	Gabriele Ferzetti
Grunther :	Yuri Borienko
Ruby Bartlett :	Angela Scoular
Nancy :	Catherina von Schell
Shaun Campbell:	Bernard Horsfall
Hilary Bray :	George Baker
M :	Bernard Lee
Moneypenny :	Lois Maxwell
Q :	Desmond Llewelyn

Main filming locations: Switzerland, Portugal and the UK.

George Lazenby has the difficult task of following Sean Connery, and this in an atypical film while having never acted in a film before. To help him to shine: gorgeous alpine settings and his co-star Diana Rigg: the Emma Peel of The Avengers.

However, writing for the film began well before Lazenby, with Connery in the lead, and spanned across five years. The bulk of the story will not change compared to the first treatment of 1964 to which the screenwriter will somehow move away before returning to it.

If You Only Live Twice didn't have much to do with the novel, this is not the case with this one which turns out to be one of the most faithful Bond's movie to the literary work of which it come from.

ON HER MAJESTY'S SECRET SERVICE

Table of contents

On Her Majesty's Secret Service

A tragic romance....342
June 14, 1964' treatment....344
The 1964' script....350
Changes of plans....357
1966' Second draft: Amphibious Aston, Goldfinger bis and Tracy at Piz Gloria....358
March 29, 1966' script....368
Some revisions....368
April 27, 1967' treatment: the other fella, Ford and the Maginot line....369
Bond makes nurses cry....374
New script attempt....375
1967' "Second Draft": Alicia, train collision, snowmobiles battle....378
1968' treatment: Von Sydow, Lola and family cottage....387
July-August 1968' script: Aston, lasers and snow shovel....394
Screen-tests....399
Late August 1968' revised script: Portugal and ice racing....401
Shooting script....403
Revised shooting script....413

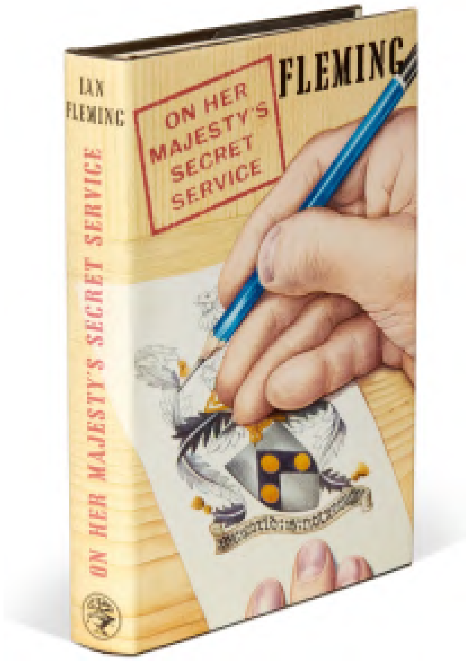
Summary table at the end of the chapter.

A tragic romance

Note: presence of a summary table at the end of the chapter.

In Fleming's 1963 novel, James Bond has, for about a year, been involved in the operation Bedlam consisting of tracking down the remains of SPECTRE and its leader, Ernst Stavro Blofeld.

Bond, convinced that SPECTRE no longer exists, is frustrated by the Secret Service's insistence that he continue the search; he draws up a resignation letter. While in the north of France (at Royale-les-Eaux), he meets a beautiful young blonde woman, Countess Teresa "Tracy" di Vicenzo, on the road and then at a gaming table; where he saves her from a coup de déshonneur by paying the gambling debt which she is unable to cover.



IAN FLEMING
FLEMING
ON HER MAJESTY'S SECRET SERVICE
ON HER MAJESTY'S SECRET SERVICE

The next day, after a night of sex, Bond follows her. When he interrupts a possible suicide attempt by Tracy on the beach, they are captured by henchmen who take them by inflatable boat to the offices of the semi-trailer of Marc-Ange Draco, leader or "Capu" of the Union Corse; one of the largest European crime syndicates.

Tracy, who lost her child six months earlier, is Draco's only daughter. The latter thinks that the only way to save her from her depressions would be for Bond to marry her. To do this he offers Bond a very high dowry. 007 refuses the offer but agrees to see Tracy again, on the condition that she undergoes treatment. Before leaving Marc-Ange, Bond asks him if he has information on Blofeld.

Draco uses his contacts to inform Bond that Blofeld is somewhere in Switzerland. In England another lead emerges: the heraldic College of Arms (which conduct genealogical research) was contacted by an individual named Blofeld who wishing to acquire the title and name of Count Balthazar de Bleuville and who would like confirmation of the title by the college. When Bond goes to College of Arms, he learns things about his own potential ancestors, such as the motto "The world is not enough".

A collaboration between the college and the Secret Service takes place and a plan is put together. It is decided, despite M's skepticism, that James will pose as Sir Hilary Bray, a friend of Sable Basilisk (from the College of Arms), who closely resembles Bond. The college informs the alleged Count, via his lawyers, that Sir Hilary Bray must personally meet with Balthazar de Bleuville before a favorable response can be given to his request. If necessary, Bond can use as a pretext for his visit that, genetically, the de Bleuville heirs have a minor physical anomaly (the lack of earlobes).

After numerous exchanges with the college, Blofeld and his entourage let themselves be taken in and Bond, arriving at Zurich airport, is greeted by Irma Bunt (who introduces herself as the Count's private secretary). He is driven by car, then by helicopter, to Blofeld's lair/clinic: the Piz Gloria, which is located in the Swiss Alps.

James discovers his room, from which he cannot leave completely freely and where he is most certainly being spied on. He takes meals with Irma Bunt and a group of young women described as suffering from allergies; they fall under his charm.

The next day, after the cruel death of one of Blofeld's henchmen suspected of having tried to abuse one of the patients, Bond meets Blofeld, physically unrecognizable. Blofeld underwent plastic surgery to remove his earlobes, but also to hide from the police and secret services pursuing him. Bond learns that the Count is conducting scientific research aimed at curing the group of young British and Irish girls of allergies or disgust towards livestock and other foodstuffs, via a form of hypnosis. 007 becomes friends with Ruby, one of the patients and manages to obtain information from her; he even witnesses a nocturnal phase of the mental suggestion process used by Blofeld.

Several incidents make Bond think he has been discovered, including the capture by Blofeld's men of a Secret Service agent, Shaun Campbell, from Station Z. James is in his second interview with the villain when Campbell is brought in and said out loud recognizing him. After overhearing a telephone message confirming his fears, Bond escapes at the last minute on skis from Piz Gloria, chased by guards. Bond kills a number of guards during his escape on skis, escapes gunfire, explosions, an avalanche, a snow-plow-train...

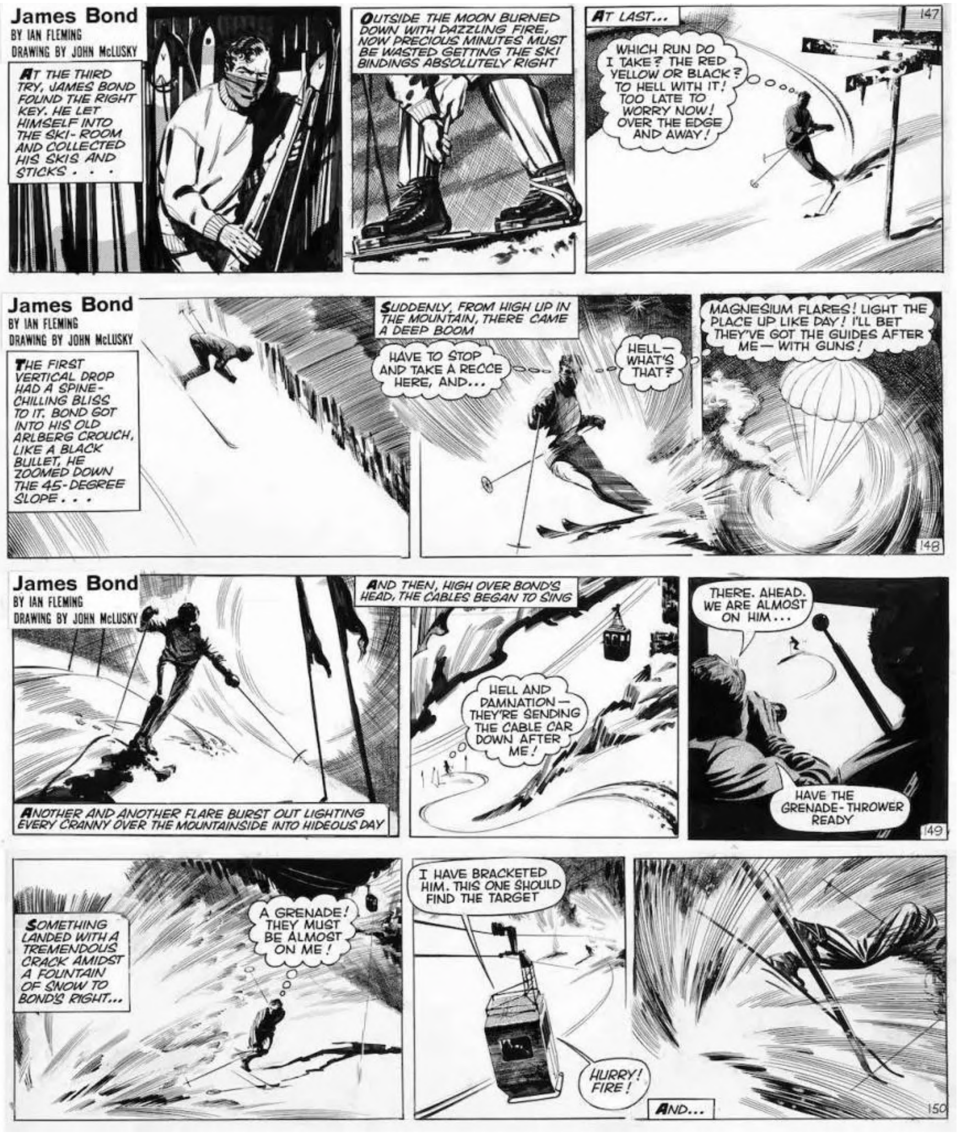
Subsequently, in a state of total exhaustion, he meets Tracy at a costume ball which takes place on a skating rink for New Year's Eve. If she is in the village of Samaden (located at the base of the mountain on which Piz Gloria is), it is because her father told her that Bond could be nearby. Bond is too weak to continue escaping Blofeld's henchmen alone and she helps him escape by car and drives him to the airport, where Bond proposes to her on a whim. Affected, Tracy accepts.

Bond then returns to England and works on a plan to capture Blofeld who, with Irma Bunt, is treating the girls of Piz Gloria in order to have them transport biological agents to Britain and Ireland without their knowledge. This, with the aim of destroying the agricultural economy on which the country has been based since the post-Second World War.

Helped by Draco of the Union Corse, Bond mounts a helicopter air attack on the clinic and Blofeld. As the clinic is about to be destroyed, Blofeld escapes to a bobsleigh track pursued by Bond. A bobsleigh chase begins where Bond is thrown off the track by a grenade which allows Blofeld to escape.

Bond go back to Tracy and marry her. The two lovers leave for their honeymoon but on the road, a few hours after their wedding, a car occupied by Blofeld and Irma Bunt overtakes the one of Bond and Tracy while machine-gunning them.

Tracy is killed in the attack.



James Bond
BY IAN FLEMING
DRAWING BY JOHN McLUSKY
AT THE THIRD TRY, JAMES BOND FOUND THE RIGHT KEY. HE LET HIMSELF INTO THE SKI-ROOM AND COLLECTED HIS SKIS AND STICKS . . .
OUTSIDE THE MOON BURNED DOWN WITH DAZZLING FIRE. NOW PRECIOUS MINUTES MUST BE WASTED GETTING THE SKI BINDINGS ABSOLUTELY RIGHT AT LAST...
WHICH RUN DO I TAKE? THE RED YELLOW OR BLACK? TO HELL WITH IT! TOO LATE TO WORRY NOW! OVER THE EDGE AND AWAY!
147
James Bond
BY IAN FLEMING
DRAWING BY JOHN McLUSKY
THE FIRST VERTICAL DROP HAD A SPINE-CHILLING BLISS TO IT. BOND GOT INTO HIS OLD ARLBERG CROUCH. LIKE A BLACK BULLET, HE ZOOMED DOWN THE 45-DEGREE SLOPE . . .
SUDDENLY, FROM HIGH UP IN THE MOUNTAIN, THERE CAME A DEEP BOOM HAVE TO STOP AND TAKE A RECCE HERE, AND...
HELL— WHAT'S THAT?
MAGNESIUM FLARES! LIGHT THE PLACE UP LIKE DAY! I'LL BET THEY'VE GOT THE GUIDES AFTER ME— WITH GUNS!
148
James Bond
BY IAN FLEMING
DRAWING BY JOHN McLUSKY
ANOTHER AND ANOTHER FLARE BURST OUT LIGHTING EVERY CRANNY OVER THE MOUNTAINSIDE INTO HIDEOUS DAY
AND THEN, HIGH OVER BOND'S HEAD, THE CABLES BEGAN TO SING
HELL AND DAMNATION— THEY'RE SENDING THE CABLE CAR DOWN AFTER ME!
THERE. AHEAD. WE ARE ALMOST ON HIM...
HAVE THE GRENADE-THROWER READY
149
SOMETHING LANDED WITH A TREMENDOUS CRACK AMIDST A FOUNTAIN OF SNOW TO BOND'S RIGHT...
A GRENADE! THEY MUST BE ALMOST ON ME!
I HAVE BRACKETED HIM. THIS ONE SHOULD FIND THE TARGET
HURRY! FIRE!
AND...
150

- Richard Maibaum[1] : [On Her Majesty's Secret Service] was the best of Ian Fleming's novels. It was more of a novel than any of them. In the second place, it had a beginning, a middle and an end, and yet it had a wonderful relationship between Bond, the girl and her father. The whole damn thing was so interesting. I'm proud of several of the scripts I've written for the films, and this is one of them.

June 14, 1964' treatment

On Her Majesty's Secret Service was first considered as the fourth film in the saga, the one which was to follow Goldfinger. During the shooting of Goldfinger, Richard Maibaum was at the task and delivered on June 15, 1964 a substantial treatment of 49 pages (!) for the film.

This opens at night in a cemetery in Genoa (Italy). After a signal with flashlights, 007 joins a certain Bruno in front of a mausoleum with an engraving of a man sitting on a chair with a cat on his lap. "Ernest Stavro Blofeld, 1907-1963", one plaque says. (Maibaum was almost right, within a year, Ian Fleming giving 1908 as the year of Blofeld's birth in the novel Thunderball and it's Ernst, not Ernest). They enter and Bruno shows him Blofeld's "saracophagus". Bond opens the tomb: it turns out to be empty.

Behind him Bruno raises the crowbar with which they opened the grave and prepares to hit him with it. Bond catches a glimpse of what's about to happen and manages to shift in time for the crowbar to only hit his shoulder. There is a brief fight between the two men which ends when Bond draws his Walther and kills Bruno. He places the body in the grave, closes it, makes "a suitably wry Bondism" and leaves.

Opening credits, "perhaps featuring heraldic beasts: griffins, dragons, winged lions, etc".

We find Bond in M's office. The latter wants 007 to resume to Operation Bedlam: objective to find Blofeld. If Bond is willing to kill him or capture him alive, he is not willing to look for him: it isn't his job to find missing people. In his opinion, this is more of a task for Interpol. M, however, refuses to change his orders and Bond goes to submit his resignation letter (which he had prepared for weeks) to Moneypenny. She tells him that he can't leave like that: she had a bet with colleagues on who would be the first to seduce his new secretary, Mary Goodnight. Bond storms out.

Goodnight helps Bond to clean his office. He assures her that although he resigns, they can continue to see each other: it could be even better now that there are no more protocols to respect... They are interrupted by M who calls him into his office. M tells him that he accept his request. Bond fumes to Moneypenny about how coldly M did it: "ten years of dirty dangerous work risking his life all over the world! He's be shot, stabbed, coshed, gassed, poisoned and garroted. And just Request granted! Not even the conventional With regrets".

Moneypenny then reveals to him that she had actually submitted a request for vacation and not for resignation. He thanks her, saying she is wonderful.

We later find Bond water skiing in Royale-les-Eaux. He sees a beautiful blonde with tanned skin also water skiing: Tracy. She asks the pilot of her boat to speed up, Bond does the same and for a moment it's like if Bond and Tracy are racing. Tracy cuts Bond off and he ends up falling into the water.

In the evening we find 007 winning at the casino's chemin de fer tables. Tracy joins him, bets and loses. Bond settles Tracy's debt with the casino in a manner similar to the film and then joins her at the bar. They introduce themselves: she asks him why he saved her. He can't resist a pretty girl in distress. Bond adds that next time he will beat her at water skiing: she doubts it because he is handicapped by wanting to stay alive. Bond asks her to stay alive, at least for tonight. She tells him that she has been named from a saint, Teresa, but that she is not one. She invites him to come to her room later, telling him she hopes it will be worth the 20,000 francs he spent on her.

When he goes there, Bond finds her naked lying face down, crying. He tells her that if she prefers, he can leave or they can just talk. "I said no conversation", she replies and says she wants him to make love to her so she can remember what it can be like. 007 complies.

Bond gets dressed and tells her that he will come back. At first she is gentle with him then she suddenly says that he is a very bad lover and that she wants to be alone and die. Bond offers to help; she refuses. He leaves, refraining from slamming the door, asking her to call him later.

For the rest of the day, Bond observes Tracy on the beach. A certain Che-Che also observes them (but is knocked out by two men named Guercelli and Ricco). 007 sees Tracy walking towards the water in a way that worries him and runs to join her. They are approached by Guercelli and Ricco who point their weapons at them. An inflatable boat approaches and they signal them to come on board: Bond and Tracy do so.

After a while they arrive near a pier. Bond then uses a knife hidden in his shoe to puncture the rubber of the boat and attack Ricco. Bond jumps into the water with Tracy as Guercelli draws. The boat sinks and 007 fights against Guercelli in the water before abandoning him, realizing that he cannot swim.

Men open fire on them from the shore and Bond and Tracy go to hide under the pier. Bond tells her he thought she wanted to die, "not anymore... Not while you're alive". 007 hears more gunshots like in a shootout, then silence. He then sees a man, Che-Che, coming towards him. He grabs a piece of wood but it's useless: Che-Che have a gun. Bond puts his hands in the air and Che-Che and his men carry Tracy (then unconscious) through the traces of a battle (dead bodies on the ground) and get 007 into a car.

The car meets a truck (supposed to transport electrical appliances) on the road and they stop to get into the trailer. 007 disarms a guard of his pistol and rushes towards a door which leads him to Marc-Ange Draco's office:

> - Draco (smiling): I surrender. Do not kill me. Not until we have had a whisky and soda and a talk. Then I will give you another chance. O.K.?

Draco explains that he is the Capu of the Union Corse and tells Bond that he helped save Tracy (his daughter) from kidnappers from a rival faction of the organization who is trying to oust him. He also says that Tracy's child died six months ago and that she had recently sent him a suicide note in which she mentioned Bond as "a man a woman could live for, but that you had come too late [in her life]".

Draco asks him to marry Tracy for money. Bond refuses, saying he wants neither marriage nor money and that he must return to London. "Then she is doomed. Only you could have saved her", said Draco. Bond replies that he will try to convince her to accept getting help. When Draco asks him if there is anything he can do for him in return, 007 tells him that he would like to find Blofeld. Draco says that he will inquire on him.

Bond goes to Tracy's compartment in the semi-trailer and tells her to get therapy at a clinic in Davos, and after which they could start from scratch together. She kisses him. Draco joins them and whispers to Bond that Blofeld is Count "Balthazar de Bleuville" and that his lawyers are Gebruder Moosbrugger in Zurich (the name is inspired by the novel where the lawyers are "Gebrüder Gumpold-Moosbrugger").

Bond returns to London to report to M: he tells him that he met Sable Basilisk of the Herald's College who informed him of the genealogy of his enemy. During the French Revolution, the de Bleuvilles fled France for Germany and changed their name to Blofeld. Herald's College sent a letter to Blofeld's lawyer stating that it is necessary for one of theirs emissaries to meet him in person to authenticate his Count title. 007 announces to M that he will take the place of the emissary, Sir Hilary Bray; he studied his manners and the genealogy.

007 also says that he will go without Q's gadgets because they are facing someone extremely smart. M has doubts about his agent's plan but lets him do as he pleases.

In his office Bond is studying genealogy, while occasionally throwing a knife at a depiction of Blofeld, when he receives a phone call from Herald's College. Bond goes there by car, brand unspecified (Maibaum states that he has already been there and that the place is very photogenic). Basilisk tells him that Blofeld has agreed to meet with the College's emissary.

This then marks the beginning of a scene absent from the novel but which we will find in all the scenarios written for On Her Majesty's Secret Service (as well as those of other Bond films) and which was even partially filmed, before being abandoned because "it was unnecessary and it would have been too long anyway" according to Hunt[2]:

There is a microphone in Basilisk's office hidden in a clipboard shaped like a winged lion. In another room, an artist from Heralds' College named Phidias listens to their conversation. Bond discovers the microphone by lifting the clipboard, then realizing what it is, runs with his Walther to Phidias' studio. The latter escapes through the window and Bond (and Basilik) chases him on foot near St Paul's Cathedral to a post office. Phidias begins to write a warning message to Blofeld but Bond intervenes and stops him from posting it by grabbing his wrist. Bond tells Basilik to change the message to say (for the receiver) that everything is fine, and post it. Phidias flees to the street and enters an underground train/ subway station, pursued by 007. They then fight on the platform until Bond sends Phidias crashing into a train on the tracks.

Bond then arrives by plane in Zurich, disguised as Bray (glasses, mustache, longer and red hair!). Irma Bunt, "an unattractive, squat woman with a brutal face", comes to meet him in the airport, observed by a certain Campbell. They get into a Mercedes, join an orange Alouette helicopter and land at Piz Gloria described as a complex of buildings near a peak, with a sort of chalet, cable car and ski and bobsleigh slope.

Irma shows him his room and invites him to dinner with the girls/patients of the clinic. Bond prepares his costume including a kilt (observed by Blofeld; but Bond knows that his room is under video surveillance). 007 joins the dinner room; Bunt makes introductions with the girls. Bond "explains [them] the difference between a gynecologist and a genealogist" (!), then he notices that they are eating what they were allergic to. Ruby whispers her room number to him.

Bond is escorted to Blofeld by Bunt and a henchman named Peter, to meet him. Blofeld wears a hood and his face is different from before (hence the importance of the statue of Blofeld in the cemetery and the photo in Bond's office: the spectators having never seen Blofeld's face in the previous films since You Only Live Twice don't exist yet). As for Blofeld, he cannot recognize Bond here because in 1964 he and Bond haven't yet met in any film.

007 tells him he needs to check his earlobes and Blofeld removes his hood to show them to him. Blofeld tells him that he must return to his scientific activities. 007 leaves, escorted by Peter, and comes across a man who limps and who seems to puzzle him.

Later Bond manages to get out of his room (using the detachable collar of his clothing) and joins Ruby's room. He kisses before she had time to say anything; he drops the kilt and makes love to her. She tells him about her chicken allergy and how she ended up in this clinic. When he asks her how they are treated, she replies that they are given injections.

Then similar to the film, Bond hears Blofeld's hypnotic words over a loudspeaker. Bond returns to his room (where there is no other girl waiting for him, contrary to the film).

Later 007 joins Campbell who has mingled with the tourists skiing near Piz Gloria. They agree on a way to contact each other in the future: Bond will slide a paper onto the bob-bobsleigh track every morning for Campbell to receive down bellow. Irma tells Bond not to mingle with people from outside the clinic and watches suspiciously Campbell as he walks away.

007 returns to the clinic, meets Ruby in a corridor with whom he chats briefly, then goes to his own room.

The next morning, Bond sneaks out of his room through a window (under which there is a precipice) and goes to the bobsleigh track from where he wants to send a glass to Campbell for fingerprint analysis. Suddenly Peter, a gun in his hand, comes to intercept 007. Bond then hits him with razor blades used as improvised brass knuckles. 007 retrieves the gun and knocks him out with it. He puts his message in Peter's pockets and slides his body down the Bobsleigh track (Maibaum exclaims with a "(Wow!)" when describing the body spinning over and over during the descent). At the bottom of the track, Campbell retrieves the message and the body.

An expert comes to brief M on the prints that were identified on the glass sent by 007. One of them belongs to Professor Gaston Lestrade, an expert in bacteriological warfare.

Campbell returns to Bond at Piz Gloria and informs him of this. That's what it seemed to Bond. Campbell offers him his Q's skis which contain "Tanamite" grenades that can be released by manipulating the bindings; Bond refuses, saying he has already collected a weapon. Campbell leaves, observed by Bunt.

007 goes to Ruby's room but discovers that the person under the sheet is in reality Irma Bunt in a nightie: "a horrible sight". Bond is captured and brought to Blofeld who is currently near a table where Campbell is tied up; Professor Lestrade with syringes containing truth serum nearby.

> - Blofeld: So you are the famous James Bond who killed my agents Dr. No and Rosa Klebb.

Blofeld explains that the weapons of the future are of the bacteriological type, "atom and hydrogen bombs, Balistic missiles? Expensive and already obsolete".

They gonna inject him the truth serum, says Blofeld. Meanwhile Bond has approached Campbell's skis which were leaning against a wall. He triggers a mechanism which causes a "flat" grenade to fall into his hand. "Thanamite", Bond explains, telling them that if they try to shoot him, he will activate the grenade with his last breath. Lestrade confirms that the said "Thanamite" will kill them all if that happens.

> - Blofeld: Including yourself, Mr. Bond.
> - Bond: One of the slight inconveniences of my trade, Mr. Blofeld.
> - Blofeld: We seem to have reached an impasse.

Not necessarily, if they hand over their weapons to him. "But you would have a weapon that is not suicidal, Mr. Bond". 007 gives them five seconds and finally Blofeld orders his henchman Fritz to hand over his gun. With it, 007 forces Lestrade to inject Blofeld with the truth serum.

Blofeld then answers Bond's questions: the girls from the clinic are on their way to England with atomizers containing bacteria. Ruby must go to some kind of chicken fair to fatally infect the country's poultry. After this the Prime Minister will receive a blackmail letter: he will have to pay 10 million pounds to prevent a similar disaster from happening in another agricultural sector.

Bond decides it's time to leave: he shoots Blofeld who collapses in his chair then leaves the room to head towards the entrance of Piz Gloria. The door is locked: he blows it up with his grenade. It's dark outside (Maibaum specifies that what follows will be filmed day for night).

Meanwhile we see that Blofeld was wearing a bulletproof vest; he sets off with his men in pursuit of Bond. 007 takes skis from a cabin and sets off on the slope. Above him, men shoot him with a grenade launcher from the cable car. A grenade that lands near him causes him to fall, Bond returns fire with a pistol and begins to descend the slope, pursued by four armed skiers.

Bond stops and hides, impales one of his pursuers with his ski pole, then sets off again. He narrowly menage to passes a snow plow (on the road); which is not the case for one of his pursuers who ends up crushed in it. They arrive in an avalanche danger zone, Bond shoots at his pursuers and finds himself having to outrun an avalanche; he is caught in it. While Blofeld's men think that Bond has perished in the avalanche and go back to Piz Gloria, we see him emerging from the snow.

007 arrives at the village of Samedan (the location of the novel) which Maibaum spell as "Samadan" where, similar to the 1969 film filmed elsewhere in Switzerland, there is an ice rink and a masked ball. There are also Blofeld's men around. Bond buys a mask, takes a few sips of schnapps, and realizes that one of the skaters is Tracy. He approaches her, tells her he's in trouble and kisses her until they arrive at her car, a white Lancia (reference to the novel). He is spotted by a Spectre's henchman.

Tracy drive away; they are chased by a car. She explains to Bond that she was planning to go to Piz Gloria the next day to see him. They arrive at an intersection with a sign indicating that a bridge is broken. As in the novel, Bond gets out of the car in order to redirect the arrows on the sign so that the Blofeld's men car rushes down the wrong road, the one that lead to the broken bridge. The stratagem works: the enemy car falls into the void and bursts into flames.

Later M is on the phone with Bond and informs him that one of the patients of the Piz Gloria was intercepted and that she gave the full list of the other girls. We discover that Bond is calling from a hotel bed in Zurich, where he is in the company of Tracy. M tells him that he will now have to take care of Blofeld; Tracy doesn't really understand what they're talking about. When he hung up, she nevertheless admit to him that she knew from her father that he is in the secret services. She says it must be exciting. Bond says yes, but it has its drawbacks: like having to cut short the wonderful moment they are currently sharing. She asks him if it will always be like this between them, "a few hours, then goodbye?". He's afraid so, she should forget him. Then suddenly:

- Bond: I love you, Tracy. Knowing how it would have to be, will you marry me?

- Richard Maibaum[3] : [In the novel, Tracy] is beautiful beyond description, but no more so than Honey or Tatiana. [...] Her personality is scarcely more appealing than several of Bond's other girls. Except for the greatest appeal of > all: she needs him. Unlike the others, she is the only one for whom Bond is the one man in the world. He alone can rescue he from despair. At long last, after gauging the depth of Tracy's love by her willingness to die for him, he capitulate.

She accepts, on one condition: he must shave his Hilary Bray mustache! They phone Draco to announce him the good news. Draco tells Bond that his check is ready but 007 say him that he can tear it up: the only wedding gift he wants is help in order that the said marriage takes place as quickly as possible.

So we find Draco and his men disguised as police officers in a (single) large helicopter heading towards Piz Gloria. Meanwhile Bond, Che Che, and another of Draco's men named "Le Pouff" (which is the nickname of Toussaint in the novel), are scaling a mountain wall with ice axes in a sequence that Maibaum doesn't yet know and which will have "to be worked out with experts". Shootout between Blofeld's men and the ones of Draco; Bond and his two fellow fight their way to the laboratory where they plant explosives.

Bond sees Blofeld running away and chases him to the bobsleigh track. (Meanwhile Irma Bunt escapes on skis). A bobsleigh chase similar to the film begins (Blofeld doesn't end up in a tree branch, however). The Piz Gloria explodes while 007 has lost his chances of catching Blofeld following the grenade' crash.

"I do", says Bond to Tracy as they get married in Royale-les-Eaux. They go on their honeymoon in the Lancia. "Take it easy, darling. We have all the time in the world", Tracy told him. They are overtaken by a Maserati driven by Bunt and from which Blofeld machine-guns them. Out of control, the Lancia hits a copse and stops. Bond turns to the dead Tracy: she received a bullet in the forehead. A police car stops near them and a police officer approaches; the ending almost paraphrases the novel:

> "It's alright", says Bond as if explaining to a child. "She's having a rest. We'll be going on soon. You see, we have all the time in the world...".

> - Richard Maibaum[4] : And of course we had the problem in this particular one of a tragic ending, which Fleming had in his book, which we've retained, and which I call the saddest happy ending of all time. Because it just wouldn't do, and Fleming found out this too, to have James Bond ride off into the sunset with his beloved wife; leaving us knowing he'll no longer be a secret agent. That he's going to be a dutiful husband and a loving father, and of course this isn't what James Bond was conceived by Ian Fleming to be. He would cease to be James Bond. So at least the audiences may dry their eyes at the shock and the tragic aspects of our ending to this picture with the happy knowledge that Mr. Bond will be back, as he always has been: the great wish fulfillment escape identification figure of our time.

The 1964' script

Maibaum transforms his treatment into a script "First Draft Screenplay" of 136 undated pages.

The gunbarrel still opens onto the monumental cemetery of Staglieno in Genoa, but this time during daytime. Families are having a picnic there as if they were in a public park and among them, sitting on the grass, is James Bond, in the company of an Italian beauty named Gina:

- Bond: I can see why people are dying to get in here.

A hearse parks and pallbearers lower a coffin into Blofeld's mausoleum; Bond watches. An "attendant" whispers to him: "tonight, signor…", then Bond goes back to Gina.

It is now evening: Bond is opening the (empty) coffin with the help of the attendant. A man armed with an axe, Bruno, approaches behind them. 007 hears a crack and narrowly dodges the ax thrown towards him. The attendant runs away while Bond and Bruno fight hand-to-hand; Bond ends up getting rid of his adversary with a crowbar. He places the body and the ax in the coffin and the "suitable wry Bondism" that the previous treatment asked translates concretely here into: "Sorry... No eulogy...".

There are the credits, then a shot of London ("not Big Ben, please, or The Houses of Parliament", writes Maibaum). Bond is in M's office where they have their disagreement over whether searching for Blofeld is a mission worthy of Bond. "I think my past record justifies my being given work more suitable for a Double O man". We also learn that it has been six months since the pre-title. 007 leaves the office and finds himself in front of Moneypenny, getting a makeover:

> - Moneypenny: That was a quick conference! You ought to give a girl more time to look alluring...

He takes out a letter that he has kept for two weeks. "James! You never wrote me a billet doux before"; he then explains to her that it's in fact a resignation letter. She tells him it's bad because she bet on him on who would first seduce a secretary. Unlike the previous treatment, it is not Mary Goodnight, but the unnamed "new secretary in Q Branch".

007 clears out his desk (alone), goes to see M and Moneypenny (to whom he adds in his tirade against M that he was also "underpaid" during his 10 years). Although there was already something similar in the treatment, there is for the first time these two lines (which will end up in the film):

> - Bond: What would I do without you?
> - Moneypenny: My problem is you never do anything with me...

Bond tells her that he will have to change that when he will return from vacation and leaves. M then thanks Moneypenny (for preventing the resignation).

We find Bond water skiing in Royale-les-Eaux "(Torquay [Touquet]? Cannes? Monte-Carlo?)", sequence during which he meets Tracy and races with her (and lose). Maibaum writes to refer to the book The Complete Book of Water Skiing by Robert Scharff for the techniques he describes during the two and a half pages of theses scenes.

Then comes the casino scenes where Bond sees Tracy again (in a white dress), saves her from the "coup de déshonneur", then joins her at the bar:

> [...]
> - Tracy: I am La Comtesse Teresa di Vicenzo. Teresa was a saint. I am not. I prefer to be called Tracy.
> - Bond: James Bond.

A "Bond" seems to be missing here, isn't it? She ends up telling him she's not interested in talking and invites him to her room at [the hotel] Splendide. A scene was added where Bond comes across Che-Che sitting in a chair outside Tracy's room, Che-che telling him to get away. Tracy opens the door and tells Che Che to get the hell out; he refuses and begins to attack Bond who responds by overpowering him with a karate blow. Che-Che leaves; Bond and Tracy are in the room:

> - Bond: Friend of yours?
> - Tracy: I have no friends.
> - Bond: You have one now.

They end up to have sex together. The next morning she yells at him to leave with a "What are you waiting for? I've paid my debt!". She add that he was a "lousy lover"; however she doesn't tell him that she clearly wants to die in this script. Bond comes out, hears her crying, hesitates to go back to her but finally decides to leave.

He observes her on the beach, runs towards her, Ricco and Guercelli show up after knocking out Che-Che, they board the boat, the knife, they are shot at from the dock, Che-Che comes to the rescue. Bond and Tracy are taken to Draco's truck; the Capu is described with words taken from the novel. Bond throws the knife at the calendar similar to the novel/film.

Things continue to happen as in the treatment. When Bond returns to London, there is no scene at M's office anymore: we find Bond directly at the Heralds' College. He meets Sable Basilisk and the artist "Phidian" (no longer "Phidias"). Basilisk shows him a painting made by Phidian of the coat of arms of Bond's family, whose motto is "The world is not enough".

Once Phidian leaves, Basilisk reads Bond a letter from Blofeld's representatives stating that he agrees to meet with a representative of the College, Hilary Bray, to authenticate his Count' title. Bond takes a penlight from his pocket which is apparently used to detect microphones. He realizes that it is making noise when it approaches Basilisk's office and thus discovers Phidian's microphone. 007 and Basilisk chase him to the post office where they prevent him from sending the message to Blofeld. Phidian takes the teller as a human shield then flees towards the underground train station. When Bond reaches there, Phidian attacks him by jumping on him from behind and they end up on the tracks. They fight and Phidian gets run over by a train.

After that Bond goes to see M and explains to him that he is going to pretend to be Hilary Bray; scene similar to the one that occurring before in the treatment.

Bond arrives in Switzerland by train (and no longer by plane) in a kilt with his mustache and long red hair then meets Bunt and Grunther (instead of Peter). He also exchanges a recognition code with "Cartwright" (for some unknown reason, Maibaum decided to rename Campbell as such):

- Cartwright: What time do you make it?
- Bond: Three forty-two [3h42].
- Cartwright: Thanks. Mine [my watch] was fast.
- Bond: Better fast than slow.
- Cartwright: That depends on the girl.

(Remember: we saw that Maibaum also tried this code in a script of Thunderball). Cartwright discreetly gives him a tracking beacon. Bond, Bunt and Grunther go by helicopter to Piz Gloria.

The place is located on Mount Pilatus and described as a three-story circular building on a semi-circular terrace "(see Pilate travel folder and postcard)". There is a cable car and, Maibaum points out, a (false) entrance to a ski and bobsleigh slope which will have to be filmed elsewhere because these facilities do not exist on site. Dug into the mountain are Blofeld facilities as well. From the descriptions, Maibaum seems to have the Hotel Bellevue in Lucerne in mind; moreover he will write this name black-on-white later.

Arrived, Bond and his luggage must be searched because certain substances are not allowed in the institute (007 hides the location beacon in a vase) and examined by a doctor. Bond undresses and his examination takes place off-camera (the script cuts directly to a scene where Bond discovers his room).

Bond meets the girls at dinner, in this script they are now from various nationalities: Denise (French), Manuela (Argentinian), Mabel (Canadian), Marian (Scottish), Nukikah (Hawaiian), Maureen (Irish), Wilhelmina (Dutch), Sue Ellen (American), Luti (Japanese) and Ruby (English).

> [...]
> - Ruby: It must be quite an ordeal, being the only chap amongst all us girls, I mean...
> - Bond: I'm sure I'll survive.
> [...]
> - Bond: Genealogist.
> - Ruby: My sister has two. She [only] swears by them.
> - Bond: Two?
> - Ruby: She's a hypochondriac.
> - Bond: I'm afraid you're confusing genealogist with gynecologist.
> - Ruby: Oh.
> - Bond: No, I am not a Lady Doctor. I'm temperamentally unsuited for that profession.
> - Ruby: You mean you don't like women, Sir Hilary?
> - Bond: I don't understand them. I suppose that's why I'm a confirmed bachelor.
> [...]

In this script, Ruby gives her room number out loud when Bond says he has brought a book on genealogy and will lend it to her: "Would you, Sir Hilary? I'm in number six". Before leaving the table to meet Blofeld, 007 looks like to accidentally pours a jug of water on Bunt, in order to create a diversion allowing him to steal a fork. However Grunther noticed this and asks Bond to give him the fork, 007 tell him he took it as a "souvenir".

007 meets Blofeld, well not exactly:

> - Blofeld: Please sit down. You are looking at a three-dimensional coloured image in a stereoscopic television viewer. You are also being televised.

Blofeld apologizes for not being there in person but he has to conduct experiments that require an extremely sterile environment. They talk, Blofeld removes his white hood to show him his earlobes. At one point he tries to bribe Bond/Bray by offering him money; Bond says he's not interested.

Later Bond goes to Ruby's room. During this scene he asks her to steal an empty syringe from her treatment. There is Blofeld's hypnotic treatment and he leave.

Later, after studying genealogy in his own room, he decides to go outside; escorted by Grunther. The two men discuss; Grunther tells us he is a champion skier and Bond steals a saw from the bobsleigh workshop they visit. They see Cartwright arriving by cable car, escorted by an armed man (Fritz). Cartwright was seen hanging around; he makes a scene in front of Bond about how he is treated by the staff at Piz Gloria. They search his bag and take him back to the cable car.

Bond goes back inside and finds Ruby who hands him the empty syringe. He leaves her, saying out loud "unhappily to himself": "cad".

Later Bond goes out through the bathroom window of his room, the bars of which he has cut. He heads to the bobsleigh track (even though no scene in the script establishes a method of communication with Cartwright), is spotted by Fritz, overpowers him with the razor blades, takes his revolver, and dispatches the body and the empty syringe down in the direction of Cartwright.

We are now in the office of M, who is in the company of Sir Thomas Blakeley (assistant to the Home Secretary), Hopkinson (biological warfare expert), Leathers (MI[6] head of scientific research, apparently/strangely it's not Q) and Franklin (Agriculture and Fisheries). Prints on the syringe were identified as the ones of Etienne Germinal, a French scientist. They also listen to a tape sent by Blofeld to the Prime Minister in which he says he wants ten million pounds in diamonds, otherwise epidemics in the food environment (like the one currently affecting turkeys in England) will follow one another.

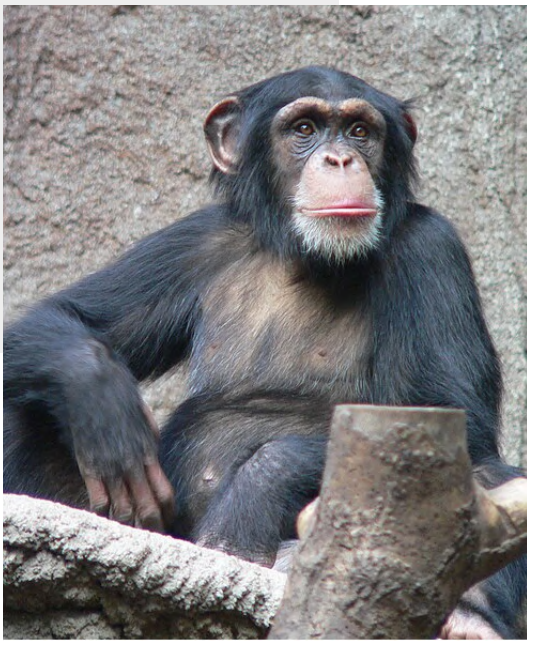
Bond joins the girls then is approached by a sentry from Piz Gloria who begins to say him the recognition code ("Thanks. Mine [my watch] was fast"). The man introduces himself as Cartwright's No. 2 (the script doesn't give him a name). He comes to tell him about the latest developments in London and offer him Q's skis, which Bond declines.

Bond goes to Ruby's room and runs into Bunt. He is captured and brought to Blofeld. They go to what Blofeld calls the "Pressure Room" where there is Cartwright tied up. His No. 2, who also had been captured, is locked in what looks like a phone booth where Blofeld tortures him by sending him a cacophony of unbearable sounds. No. 2 suffers "as much as the Lord Chamberlain [the censorship] will allow" us. Under pressure he reveals that Bray is Bond (thing that Blofeld already knew).

Blofeld threatens 007 to subject him to the same treatment if he doesn't talk.

"Why not the entireworld?", asks Bond about his enemy' plan: Blofeld says it's part of it, that he hopes to make England an example for other countries to submit as well.

> - Bond: The young ladies in your clinic are carriers of some sort, I suppose. Incidentally, why a Dutch girl?
> - Blofeld: Tulips, Mr. Bond. A small crop but of great sentimental value.
> - Bond: In view of my short life-expectancy, how will the girls cause these epidemics?
> - Blofeld: You are quite right about your imminent extermination. However, you can conceivably be of some use to me before then. A few sessions in the Audiotine might be helpful to gain insight into the workings of the British Secret Service... And we have not yet used a human being for scientific research. In either case I look forward to a great deal of personal satisfaction.



007 is then locked in a cage, next to that of a chimpanzee and those of other laboratory animals such as snakes, mice, frogs, etc. (Maibaum calls this room the "zoo"). Bond makes a makeshift pole and tries to reach with the switch that opens the cage doors: he is missing a few centimeters. He then teaches the monkey (whose arms are longer than him) to direct the pole towards the switch: it works. He manages to get out like other animals (which overwhelm a member of Blofeld's staff).

After passing through a hot-house, Bond sees Ruby in the Audiotine which was converted into a hypnosis chamber with images of chickens and Blofeld's voice; she will be sent to England with an atomizer. Bond spots Cartwright's and his number 2 alpine equipments (two characters whose fates will remain unknown) and equips himself with it.

Bond meets Germinal: during a dialogue with him we learn that he is apparently not there by choice: Blofeld threatens his family. He helps Bond to get out.

007 goes to the bobsleigh cabin to continue equipping himself and escapes in a bobsleigh. Blofeld's men chase him with a second bobsleigh. Bond disembark at the next station, takes the grenade hidden in one of the Q's skis and throws it onto the bobsleigh track: his pursuers explode on it.

007 flees on skis while men in the cable car and on skis chase him. 007 blows up the cable car with his second grenade and uses one of Q's ski poles as a blowgun to get rid of one of the skiers. There is then the passage with the snowplow and the avalanche, which Bond deliberately triggers.

Left for dead, Bond joins a "typical Alpine village" that the script calls "Truben" where he comes across Blofeld's men as well as Tracy. Unlike before (and later) there is no ice rink nor masked ball: Bond meets Tracy in the street while she is with a driver in a sleigh pulled by a horse. She tells him that her car is in the garage being repaired (that's why she's on a sled). They go to the garage, kissing on the way for not be too visible to the SPECTRE men who watch the sled pass by them. They spot 007's skis and get into a Mercedes to pursue him; Bond moves to the front of the sleigh and takes the reins of the horse and speeds off. They arrive at the garage and change means of transport for Tracy's Lancia.

She is the one who drives during the chase; they arrive at the traffic sign. In this script Bond pulls it out and asks Tracy to park near the precipice; he fires his blowgun/ski pole at the driver of the Mercedes who then rushes into a "Aare Gorge type" ravine and ends up in the water below.

> - Bond: I think they fell for you, Tracy...

We now find Tracy and Bond on the phone with M from a hotel in Zurich:

> [...]
> - M: Can't say I like her [Ruby's] perfume - Essence de Poulet.
> [...]
> - Bond: Look. I use women. I tell them I love them. I don't mean it. Do you follow me?
> - Tracy: It's part of your job, I suppose...
> - Bond: That's right. I love you, Tracy. I mean it. I want to marry you.
> - Tracy: Why?
> - Bond: I'm alone. So are you. We're a lot alike.
> [...]

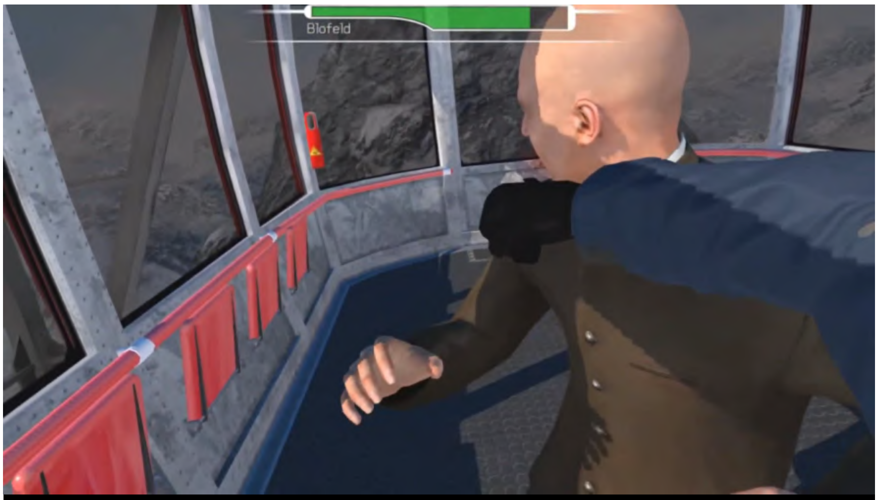
After Tracy tells him that he will have to shave his mustache, we have Marc-Ange Draco and his men arriving at the hotel at Bond's request. After a brief discussion, we have the scenes of the assault on Piz Gloria with the two teams: the one in the "Red Cross" helicopter and the one who does mountain climbing. The two teams end up joining during the assault.

They place explosives, in the laboratory there is a hand-to-hand combat (one man ends up in a cold room, one is crushed by a centrifuge, one suffocate by gas from a broken container, etc). Bond questions a guard to find out where the girls other than Ruby are: in the sort of tropical hot-house. Suddenly Blofeld's voice on a loudspeaker: he gives 007 and his men 5 minutes to leave Piz Gloria, otherwise he will execute the girls.

> - Blofeld: [...] Bond. You came here hoping to destroy me. So be it. But you will also cause the deaths of nine innocent young women... They come from many countries. Can England risk antagonizing them? [...] Perhaps this will convince you and your government that any measures taken against me must fail.

Arriving from the zoo, Bond goes to the hot-house and attacks Bunt and Grunther who are guarding the girls. He manages to free them but Bunt and Grunther flee. Draco escorts the girls (and the chimpanzee, who joined them) to the helicopter while Bond go to confront Blofeld. 007 comes across Germinal (whom Blofeld shot), he shows him before dying the trap door through which Number 1 escaped.

Bond checks this trapdoor that leads outside and sees Blofeld (still wearing his hood), Bunt and Grunther fleeing on foot. They separating; Bond decides to go after Blofeld who is heading (with his cat that he is carrying) towards the cable car. He boards one of them; Bond jumps onto the moving cable car and manages to grab onto the window bars and climb onto the roof of the cabin.



A similar hand-to-hand combat in a cable car, with the real Blofeld, is present in the video game 007 Legends (2012), rather than the bobsleigh chase of the film/novel.

When Bond enters the cable car through the window to confront Blofeld, he realizes that the hooded man he has been chasing is actually Grunther. The two men fight hand-to-hand "as long as the stunt experts can devise", including the threat/attempt to send the opponent through the cable car door. Bond finally manages to get Grunther through it; the henchman falls to his death.

Explosives placed at Piz Gloria detonate; others strategically placed create an avalanche that swallows up the remains.

Bond and Tracy get married in Royale-les-Eaux, in the company of Draco, his men and some of the girls from the Piz Gloria.

They leave in the Lancia, are machine-gunned by Blofeld (a cat on his lap), Tracy dies, "We have all the time in the world", END.

Changes of plans

While the writing is very well underway, EON decides to change its plans by putting On Her Majesty's Secret Service on hold to make Thunderball instead. There is an urgency: they must quickly make this film alongside Kevin McClory before the Irishman does it alone on his own.

Maibaum must stop developing On Her Majesty's Secret Service to write this other film and we notice that he will re-use the idea of putting Bond on water skis during the writing of Thunderball, as well as the recognition code about the watch being early/late. Likewise, the idea of pre-title in the cemetery with Blofeld's false grave will perhaps inspire him for the one of Thunderball showing the fake funeral of Colonel Jacques Bouvard?

After Thunderball, it is announced that the following film will be On Her Majesty's Secret Service. However, Sean Connery is increasingly tired of Bond. One reason is that he doesn't want to be recognized among the public and his peers only as James Bond; he wants to play other roles in other films. He would like to have time between two 007 film's shooting to bring these kinds of projects to fruition. As the actor explained to the press in November 1965:

> - Sean Connery[5] : I don't mind the Bond pictures as long as I get time in between to do other things, but it hasn't worked out that way. [...] Now they want me to go to Switzerland for On Her Majesty's Secret Service right after this picture [The Man with the Cracked Head]. They may think so, but I don't.

In order to accommodate Connery by giving him more time until the filming of the next one, and to surf on the popularity of Bond in Japan, and also apparently due to difficulty finding filming locations and snow in Switzerland[6], it was decided to put On Her Majesty's Secret Service on hold again.

In November 1965, You Only Live Twice is announced as the next film with filming in Tokyo in September 1966; On Her Majesty's Secret Service is also announced as the film that will follow it, with filming expected to take place a year later[7].

The EON spokesperson declared a little later: "We figured the audience would more readily accept James being out of his mind [his amnesia in the novel You Only Live Twice] rather than married"[8].

Maibaum also thinks that it is not the right time for 007's alpine adventure because the Bond films became too comical: "letting Bond get marry would involve getting serious... And anyway if Bond marries, he's dead", he said to the Los Angeles Times[9].

This time it is apparently decided to develop the scripts for the two films in parallel. You Only Live Twice will be written by Sydney Boehm / Harold Jack Bloom while On Her Majesty's Secret Service is entrusted to the care of Richard Maibaum who had already worked on the project in 1964.

1966' Second draft: Amphibious Aston, Goldfinger bis and Tracy at Piz Gloria

Charles Helfenstein mentions in his excellent book The Making of On Her Majesty's Secret Service a 14-pages treatment by Maibaum dated early 1966. If I don't have this one, I do have however an undated "second draft" script of 130 pages (including some marked as "revised"). In view of Helfenstein's summary, this script repeats the elements of the treatment (with the exception that Maibaum suggested the actor Jeremy Kemp for the role of Cartwright in the treatment; and the fact the wedding at the end took place inside Draco's 18 wheels semi-trailer).

Jeremy Kemp

In the script the gun-barrel opens with an Aston Martin driving along the Mediterranean in an undefined European country. At the wheel, Bond (face visible to the viewer) checks his Walther, there is a telephone in the car:

- Bond: Bedlam there.
- Voice: Station C. We are holding London. Can you talk?
- Bond: Put it through.
- M: Where are you, Bedlam?
- Bond: Approaching the villa, sir. The message should be delivered very shortly.
- M: Forget it. You're up another blind alley. The place hasn't been occupied for over a year...

Suddenly a tire of the Aston Martin accidentally bursts, Bond parks on the side. M tells him to come see him tomorrow; Bond replies that he would like to say a few words to the Q Branch regarding his tire. He begins to change the tire when he sees a white Ferrari parked nearby. Bond takes a sniper rifle from under an Aston's seat and watches with it a girl in a bikini on a beach (Tracy). Suddenly he sees two dangerous-looking men trying to kidnap her. One of the men takes an inflatable boat out of his back-pack and they board.

007 gets behind the wheel of the Aston and speeds towards them; the men "see the Aston Martin behind them going into the surf, becoming amphibian [...] they paddle desperately toward open sea"! The men decide to abandon ship as the car approaches them. Suddenly a motorboat approaches; on it two armed men open fire.

Bond presses a button: armor plates rise to protect the windows and the rear. Another button brings up a telescope. Bond swerves his vehicle to avoid being hit by the boat then launches a homing torpedo at it: boom!

Bond stops by Tracy who is swimming towards the open sea, he rolls down a window, tells her that she is swimming in the wrong direction and offers her a ride. She tells him to leave her alone. 007 cuts the engine and swims over; she struggles when he tries to drag her to the Aston but manages to get her in.

He introduces himself to her and they return to the shore; she asks him to stop to pick up her handbag that was left on the beach. As Bond step out the car to collect it, she gets behind the wheel of his Aston and drives to her Ferrari in which she leaves the scene. 007 finds a key of the Hotel Splendide in his bag.

- Bond (to himself): You're slipping, 007...

Opening credits. Then Bond in M's office:

- M: The Prime Minister was most uncomplimentary. You've had a year since the bombs were recovered...
- Bond: Sir, I'm fed to the teeth chasing the ghost of Blofeld. Spectre was smashed. Not even a man of his genius could get a machine of that calibre running again, if he still exists...
- M: I'm well aware every other Intelligence Service in the West has been equally unsuccessful, but we have a special motive, Double-O Seven. He stole the bombs from us.
- Bond: I deeply regret embarrassing the Section, sir, but I don't regard myself as an investigator of missing persons. For the fourth, or is it the fifth time, I respectfully request I be relieved from Operation Bedlam. If Blofeld is found I'll be delighted to kill him. Until then I'd welcome a more suitable assignment. Or has the Director lost confidence in me?

With M deciding to keep him on Bedlam, there are the scenes relating to the resignation request being changed to a leave request. We then find Bond in Cannes (or elsewhere, writes Maibaum), and more precisely at the Hotel Splendide. He asks a concierge the name of the owner of the Ferrari parked at the hotel. "There are three white Ferraris in the garage, monsieur", said the concierge before telling him the name of Countess Di Vicenzo.

In the evening there are the scenes at the casino, we notice a difference compared to the 1964 script:

- Tracy: Why did you rescue me [from my debt]?
- Bond: It's becoming a habit.

There is also an interesting detail, when Bond runs into Che Che on his way to Tracy's room. Maibaum suggests that this Draco's henchman be played by boxer Primo Carnera. We also notice that Bond no longer has to fight with him: Che Che leaves on his own when Tracy asks him.

Tracy orders Bond to "make love to me. Forget everything else. What are you waiting for?" and "treat me as if I was a woman you bought on the street". Bond replies that he doesn't frequent that kind of girl and leaves without having touched her. Outside the room he hears Tracy crying and while he hesitates to go back to see her, he is knock out from behind by someone.

Bond wakes up in a sedan alongside a certain Toussaint with a knife in his hand. The car stops at a level crossing where two police officers on motorcycles are waiting for a train to finish passing. 007 asks Toussaint if he can smoke and throws his cigarette out the window towards the police officers: the cigarette explodes like a firecracker. The police begin chasing the sedan but lose sight of it when it ends up boarding Draco's semi-trailer truck.

When Bond enters his office with a knife in his hand, Olympe is present in this script. Besides, Draco asks her to prepare a "stirred, not shaken" martini for Bond and a Compari for him. If Bond don't comment on his drink which he usually takes in the opposite way, he does comment on Draco's:

- Bond: You usually drink Corsican brandy.
- Draco: You know my dossier as well as I know yours, eh?
- Bond: Marc Ange Draco. Legitimate business fronts, electrical supplies distributor, Marseilles. Extensive Bordeaux vineyard holdings, actually Head of The Unione Corse, controlling most of the organized crime in Metropolitan France.

They talk about Tracy and marrying her, something Bond doesn't want to do and he says that he's not allowed to do it anyway (because of the Secret Service rules). However, he agrees to spend time with Tracy while his father inquire about Blofeld; Draco tells her that she is still at the Splendide.

Next comes a succession of scenes where Bond and Tracy spend time together while they are observed by Che Che (who doesn't hide): applying cream on a beach in Cannes, dance floor, her behind him on a motorcycle which stops at a mountain restaurant, crossing gardens on foot, at a puppet theater, a museum, a bistro, at a kind of bullfight, etc... They end up returning to Draco's truck in a Ferrari:

- Draco: You look wonderful, Terasa.
- Tracy: I am happy, papa [daddy].

Draco gives Bond a lead on Blofeld: a bank in Geneva, Gebruder Gumpold.

In Geneva, at night, Bond and Cartwright are in a church tower with an infrared telescope, watching "Frederick Gumpold" typing the code of his safe. Cartwright, who tells Bond that he spends his time mountain climbing, deploys a rope and they descend along Gumpold's building, and cut a hole in the glass while holding a suction cup. They thus infiltrate the banker's office and recover a document which mentions the title of Count of Balthazar de Bleuville.

We then find Bond at the Heralds' College, here the dialogues between Bond and Basilisk have changed a little compared to the previous script studied, as has the chase with Phidian. Here Bond pursues him alone (without Basilisk) and Maibaum specifies that the post office is the one of the King Edward Building.

The most notable difference is that they are no longer head afterward towards a public railway network, but towards an underground postal railway network. They slide down mail chutes to get there, Maibaum writes "(P[ost].O[ffice]. employee told me this has been done as a lark)". Here there are no trains but automated postal carts; it's when Bond sends Phidian to meet one of them that he dies (in addition to landing on the electrified rails).

After that we have Bond in a mail truck; he goes to meet an ambulance to which he gives a mailbag containing Phidian's dead body. At the hospital morgue, Bond and the paramedics place the body with 21 others from a recent train accident (during the previous foot chase, a newsstand reported this accident on the newspapers headlines).

Bond then goes to M to explain his intention to pass himself off as Hilary Bray and to tell him that Blofeld will not find Phidian's death/disappearance suspicious now that he is passing for one of the victims of the train crash.

007 arrives in Switzerland; there is no longer question of a red mustache and long hair in this script (the kilt, glasses and a pipe are however present). Bunt introduces Bond to a blond man with an athletic build named "Alois Grunther". She asks Bond to give his passport to Hans so that he can take care of it for him, under the pretext of "the customary so tiresome local regulations". They take a sled which takes them to a helicopter. Cartwright doesn't discuss with 007 here in this script, instead he observes him along with Q!

> - Cartwright: [I] recognized the tall chap [Grunther], ex-Nazi ski-trooper. World's Slalom champion a couple years ago. If 007 has to tangle with him he'll have his hands full...
> - Q: I'll equip 007 properly when I know where he'll be operating. Getting it to him's the sticky part... Really! The problems they expect Q. Branch to solve practically overnight...

(We can note that before this, Q never appeared in person in the 1964 documents of On Her Majesty's Secret Service we studied). When Bond, Bunt and Grunther leave by helicopter, Cartwright tells Q that their only chance (of finding where he is going) now is "Kris Kringle" (Santa Claus).

During the flight, Bond consults his watch which is equipped with a compass; something Bunt notices. He then told her he have a "poor sense of direction". They arrive at Piz Gloria, Bond is examined by the doctor, then discovers his room and the 10 female patients from around the world (and some of the names and nationalities have changed; there is notably no French girl anymore). The scene is a little shorter (with no more gynecologist/genealogist dialogue).

007 then meets Blofeld, or rather his image on a 3D TV (but Blofeld doesn't tell him that and Bond doesn't notice that he is not really facing him). (Note that there is no longer a Lestrade/Germinal type of scientist in this script).

After that Bond waits for Grunther to come look for him in an anteroom. Anteroom which disturbs Bond because inside it the compass needle of his watch tends to move then stop.

Later Bond breaks into Ruby's room, makes love to her and learns more about her and her treatment. When he returns to his own room, a girl (Maureen) appears in this script. He seduces her with the same phrase he used to seduce Ruby earlier ("You're twice as lovely by moonlight").

Later, Bond goes for a stroll outside near the ski repair shop (the repairman is named Willi) where he discreetly steals a saw and an awl.

He joins Grunther who is with Cartwright who is making a scandal about not being able to walk freely near Piz Gloria. (Maibaum writes a note in which he say that the snowmobiles for the Piz Gloria guards will have to be designed by Ken Adam).

Cartwright tells Bond that he has stashed some of Q's equipment under a bench (without saying what exactly) and tell him the means of communication via the bobsleigh track. Cartwright is escorted further down by cable car.

Then there is a scene near Marc-Ange Draco's truck ("converted into bungalow, its components forming a patio-like area" with chairs, parasol, etc...). Draco and Che-Che are boxing together:

- Draco: Patience, Teresa, you will see him again, very soon I think.
- Tracy: Where is he, papa?
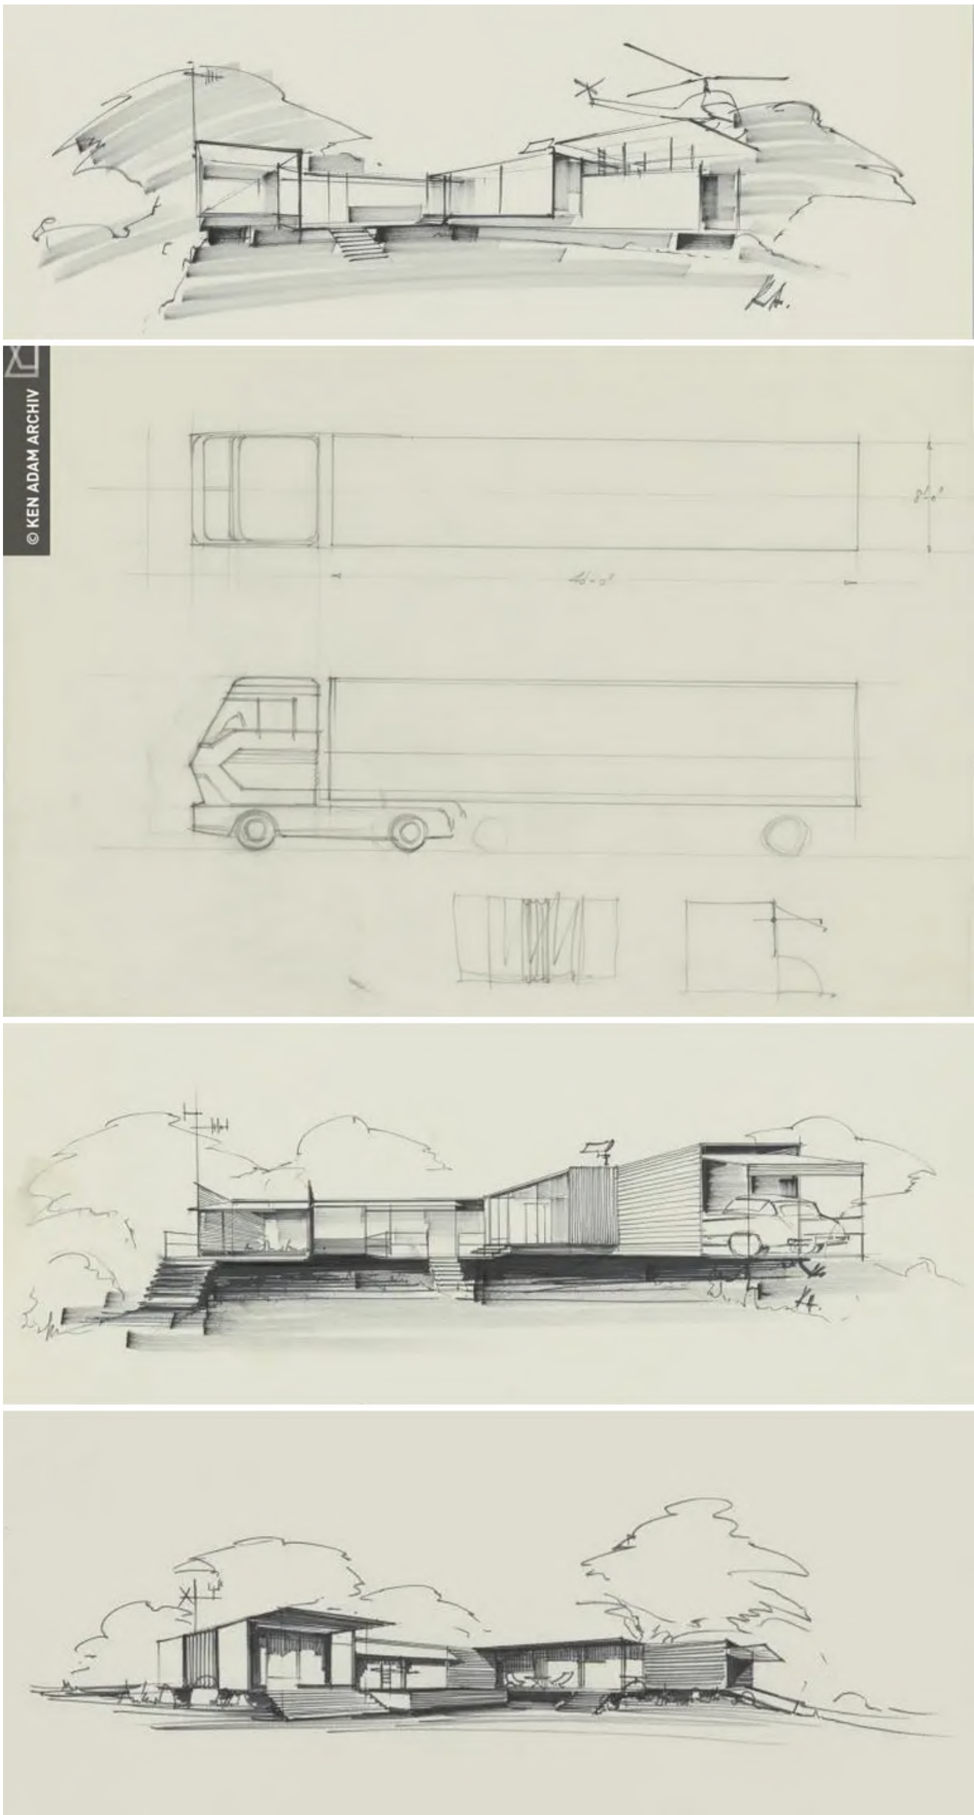
- Draco: I'm not sure, but I heard yesterday where Blofeld was. It would surprise me if the British did not also know by now... Piz Gloria, in the High Alps.

In a newspaper, Tracy circle in red an ad from Piz Gloria saying they looking for allergy patients. Tracy leaves, telling her father that she have to go to town to see her doctor.

At Piz Gloria, Bond discreetly returns to the antechamber that intrigued him and discovers that the room is moving on rails in a tunnel. While on the roof of it, Bunt goes inside. The antechamber is moving: Irma goes to see Blofeld. When she arrives there, Bond listens to their conversation which concerns the fact that the girls are bickering over himself:



© KEN ADAM ARCHIV

Ken Adam imagining Draco's HQ in his convertible semi-trailer. Ultimately Adam will not work on the film, leaving his place to Syd Cain.

> - Bunt: Of the five groups we have indoctrinated, this is the first to have personality conflicts. Yesterday there was hair-pulling between Ruby and Maureen. Nukikah and Manuela also seem disturbed...
> - Blofeld: You must discover what is upsetting them. We cannot have them distracted from the preparations for their mission...

Irma leaves the room. 007 rushes inside and throws his awl at Blofeld: he then discovers that it was a 3D screen all along. Bond continues to explore the places carved into the mountain and crosses a cavern with a bridge. He arrives at a large cavern in which Blofeld's modern facilities are located (laboratory, conference room, the "zoo", the hot-house, elevator, walkway, a three-story furnace, etc.). "(K. Adam please dream up)", writes Maibaum!

In another cave 007 sees technicians in front of a giant screen where microscopic enlargements of bacteria which look like "gigantic monstrosities" are projected. Blofeld's voice reports tests that have taken place:

> - Blofeld: We estimate 63% of the target herds were destroyed. An excellent trial run but biological warfare, as we mean to wage it, must achieve total infection.

As he speaks, there are images on the screen of a sick herd being loaded into a truck, dropped into a large pit and machine-gunned. Maibaum suggests using images from "probably available"/existing documentaries and TV news for this.

Blofeld also talks about infecting crops and Bond returns to his own room. He goes out discreetly and goes to the ski cabin, and picks the lock with the awl ("Don't tell me JAMES BOND can't do it", comments Maibaum).

He skis to the bobsleigh track; where a henchman (unnamed, it's not Fritz) approaches him on a snowmobile. 007 kills him by throwing the awl at him, sends the body (and his message) onto the bobsleigh track where they are received further down by Cartwright. He then goes to collect Q's equipment which consists of skis (Maibaum says he will have to write a scene in London with Q to demonstrate their functionality) and a Walther.

007 joins the girls, they playing ping-pong and a medicine ball. Maureen and Nukikah make an appointment with him for the evening. Bunt comes to introduce 007 to three new patients who have just joined the Institute: Phyllis, Wilhelmina and Teresa... who is none other than our Tracy!

> - Tracy: How do you do you, Sir Hilary?

Bond takes her aside. "I don't know if I like you in skirts", says Tracy to him, talking about his kilt! Her alleged allergy is to champagne; Bond tells her to be careful. Ruby also comes to make an appointment with her "Hilly" (Tracy looking thoughtfully at her in the background).

In the evening Bond goes to Ruby's room, but "horrified, Bond realizes he has just kissed not Ruby but Irma Bunt". Bond is brought to Blofeld who, for the first time in this script, removes his hood and surgical mask: he "looks amazingly like Gert Fröbe", with silver hair and thinner!

Blofeld is Goldfinger's half-brother in this script and the early 1966 treatment.

> - Blofeld: I believe you knew my half-brother as Auric Goldfinger. Our mother often cautioned him about his reckless fetishism. Actually she considered him somewhat retarded. Don't you agree [with her]?
> - Bond: Goldfinger? Never heard of him.
> [Blofeld asks him to spare them both that uneasiness and shows him Cartwright locked in a centrifuge. He spoke before he died].
> - Blofeld: Se you came here to kill me, Mr. Bond, as you did so many of my agents.
> - Bond: You bring back fond memories, they were all such delightful people.
> - Blofeld: The list is regrettably long, but there will be no further additions, I assure you.

Cartwright's body is taken to the furnace via a conveyor belt. Bond is taken to the Zoo where he is locked in a cage from which he manages to get out, thanks to the chimpanzee:

> - Bond (to the monkey): I'll see you get an O.B.E. [Order of the British Empire] for this.

Bond begins to walk through the tropical hot-house. He comes across a jaguar which he is forced to shoot when the animal rushes towards him. 007 sees on a screen Blofeld giving his final instructions to all (and not just Ruby) the girls (except the three new ones) that he is preparing to immediately send abroad.

Bond goes to Tracy's room and tells her about Blofeld's plan:

> - Bond: If Ruby ever sprays that stuff in her atomizer she'll wipe out all the poultry in England. Maureen's target is Irish potatoes, Nukikah's Hawaiian pineapples, Manuela's from the Argentine, hers is their cattle...
> - Tracy: You seem to know a lot about them...
> - Bond: Afraid I had to romance them a bit, darling. Let's just call it an occupational hazard...

They hear the girls' helicopter taking off; "Blofeld's outdone himself [this time]. Only he could dream this up", says Bond. They decide to leave Piz Gloria. Guards arrive, Tracy decides to distract them to buy time for Bond and she is captured.

007 doesn't go back for her and gets Q's equipment. He starts skiing down (at night); flares are projected in the sky. Grunther and other men on skis chase 007 while others machine-gun him and throw grenades from the cable car or a chairlift ("ski lift"). Bond uses his own grenades hidden in Q's skis to blow up the cable car and eventually gets to Cartwright's car (Maibaum doesn't identify a brand/model for this one).

He gets in and snowmobiles are added to the list of his pursuers. Bond then drives the car inside the bobsleigh track; Grunther and his men board a bobsleigh to pursue him. During the exchange of gunfire that follows, Bond hits the pilot with his Walther and the bobsled crashes into a snow embankment. Arriving at the bottom of the track, Bond abandons the car (also crashed in a snow embankment) and throws a grenade onto the track where a second bobsleigh coming towards him.

Out of bullet, Bond uses the Q-ski pole as an (explosive) blowgun to get rid of two snowmobile pilots and take one of their ride. Four snowmobiles (including Grunther) set out in pursuit; one of them end up in a snow plow on rail. Then there is the scene where Bond intentionally triggers an avalanche and survive it. "Kaput" declares Grunther, believing him dead.

In the office of "R. W. Cartwright" of "Transworld Consortium" (reference to the novel The Man with the Golden Gun, in which Universal Exports has been renamed like this) in Geneva, we find Bond in the company of M. The latter tells his agent that all the girls are under surveillance thanks to his "excellent descriptions" of them, with the exception of the new and old groups of girls. He adds that Blofeld transmitted his threat to 23 countries:

- Bond: What's his price? Perpetual tribute?
- M: In a way...
- Bond: How much?
- M: Not a penny. He's fabulously wealthy as it is...
- Bond: I'm afraid I don't...
- M: Put yourself in his place. Every police officer in the world's after you. What would you want?
- Bond: Immunity.

Blofeld offers to dismantle his installation and not spread the bacteria in order to peacefully live the life of Count de Bleuville. Bond wants to return to free Tracy, M doesn't care: he has his orders from higher up than him and "you know as well as I do the Section can't concern itself with an agent's private relationships".

There is a camera shot of Bond landing in a helicopter near Draco's bungalow/truck.

As in World War II, a glider is used in this script.

Then we move directly to the assault on Piz Gloria with a plane towing (and then releasing) a glider comprising Draco and sixteen of his men. A second team made up of Bond, Che Che and a certain Marius arrive by climbing the mountain peak. We notice that Bond wears an outfit similar to the one of Blofeld's guards in order to deceive them and take out guards outside. The glider team completes its approach by parachuting from it. Due their arrivals by silent means of transportation (and the fact that Bond uses a silenced Walther), the two teams that joined are able to free Wilhelmina and Phyllis without any alarm being raised in Piz Gloria. However, they discover that Tracy is not in her room and Bunt spots the assault in progress; in any case a third team arrives with two large (and not very discreet) helicopters.

The alarm is sounded and suddenly a steel plate falls behind Bond, "trapping him inside cavern" and separating him from the others (Bond finds himself alone in the hollowed part of the mountain; Blofeld is unaware of this). Draco and his men try to blow up this protection door: without success. Blofeld's voice tells them that they have exactly five minutes to leave his base, after which he will kill Tracy. 007 is able to see that he is not joking: Tracy, tied up, is placed on the conveyor belt which slowly takes her to the furnace.

Bond takes out his pistol, shoots a technician operating the conveyor belt and stops it. Grunther and a guard attack him but Bond manages to cut Tracy's bonds and save her (the guard ends up in the furnace). 007 presses a button to open the steel plate: Draco and his men can enter and evacuate Tracy to the helicopters (and we can notice that the chimpanzee doesn't come with them in this script). There is a series of fight scenes in the laboratory similar to the previous script between Blofeld's and Draco's men, plus Draco himself and Bond.

007 suggests putting the substances from the fridges on the conveyor belt to send them into the furnace while explosives are also planted. Outside Che Che near the helicopters unloads ammunition onto an assault wave of Blofeld's men on snowmobiles.

Bond discovers a secret exit and goes after what he thinks is Blofeld with his hood. Arrived at the moment of their fight in the cable car, he discovers that it was actually Grunther. The main difference here is that Grunther is armed with an (assault?) rifle, a thing that which adds a little more spice/danger to the scene. It also has another use: at the end of the scene, Bond opens the door of the cable car, not to throw Grunther out of it, but to escape using the rifle on the cable like a zip line before the Piz Gloria explodes and causes the fall of the cable car to the ground (with Grunther in it, and if a shot where we see him screaming would have been welcome, Maibaum however doesn't write one). The Piz Gloria has been engulfed under an avalanche and a Draco's helicopter comes to pick up Bond.

Bond and Tracy get married at Draco's villa located in a small French village. M is present and is identified by "Monsieur Emery" in the dialogues; he tells Bond that he still have his resignation letter from Moneypenny (also present):

> - Bond: realize my marriage will make it mandatory you endorse it.
> - M: James, you're sure about all this?
> - Bond: First time you ever called me that...
> - M: This girl must mean a great deal to you.
> - Bond: I know it's the end of James Bond, Double O-7, but I had no choice... Me, the cold-blooded gunman who called all the shots. Used a woman, walked away, never looked back. Not this time. I'm caught, trapped, helpless; and I don't want to escape.
> - M: You know how intensely I dislike appeals for King and Country but how else can I put it? The Service needs you...
> - Bond: Sorry, Sir. Never thought I'd hear myself say it but I've fallen in love. I simply want to marry this girl and spend the rest of our lives together. I'm afraid that's it.
> - M: Heartiest congratulations.
> - Bond: Must be quite a wrench thinking of me as a husband and father...
> - M: Quite. I daresay I'll get used to it in time.
> - Bond: Someday I hope you'll do us the honour of standing godfather for our first...
> [...]
> - Draco: A truce, Mr. Emery?
> - M: A truce, Mr. Draco.

Moneypenny gives Bond a gift from Q, "(Should be typically Q. Perhaps a slender modernistic vase which can be converted into a rolling pin)".

> \- Bond (to Tracy): Just what we need, darling. Thanks, Moneypenny, for everything.

Bond and Tracy leave the villa in the Ferrari for their honeymoon / mountain restaurant which they gone to previously in the script. On the road they are attacked/machine-gunned by Blofeld and Bunt. Bond gets out of the car (Tracy seems fine) and dislocates a nearby statue which then rolls down the hairpin road. The statue hits Blofeld/Bunt's Maserati which falls into a gorge while bursting into flames.

> \- Bond: I returned their wedding present.

Bond is horrified to discover that Tracy is dead. End (without the arrival of a police officer).

March 29, 1966' script

Another script dated March 29, 1966 of 139 pages turns out to be a kind of revision of the previous one. Its main interest is to have an estimation of when the latter was written because otherwise it is basically the same script, with two minor differences to note:

- The tire on Bond's Aston Martin doesn't burst in the pre-title.
- Maibaum deletes the scene where Bond steals a fork that Grunther instantly notice.

Some revisions

Maibaum then makes revision (by hand, and undated) of the last script. The main changes are:

- The line "You've had a year since the bombs were recovered" in M's office was changed to "You've had a year since that Japanese affair...", to refer to the fact that You Only Live Twice will be release before On Her Majesty's Secret Service.
- There is talk of introducing scenes with Q when Bond is at MI6 HQ, at the beginning of the script.
- Draco's line stating that the men who tried to kidnap Tracy in the pre-title belong to a rival faction of the Union Corse has been crossed out.
- Bond again arrives in Switzerland via an airport, instead of a train station.

April 27, 1967' treatment: the other fella, Ford and the Maginot line

In a "short outline" of approximately 17 pages written by Maibaum and dated April 27, 1967, it is now clear that something has changed in the writing of this film and more generally in the saga: Sean Connery will not return to play Bond a sixth time. The actor is fed up with Bond, fed up with only being seen as such, with his private life being constantly invaded by journalists and fans and he believes he is not paid enough compared to the producers and what profits these films makes[10].

For the first of its existence, the EON saga will have to introduce a new actor in the most coveted role in the world. Maibaum seems to have in mind that the new actor will basically be another Sean Connery and is not looking to change the character to give a different interpretation/direction (despite the societal and cultural changes marking the end of the 60s such as long hair, the peace and love philosophy, it will be decided that Bond will remain the good old Bond as played by Sean).

When he wrote this treatment, Maibaum felt that he needed to story-wise justify the change of face of Bond (and perhaps also justify why Blofeld doesn't recognize Bond although he gonna meet him in You Only Live Twice which will be released in June).

The treatment therefore opens with a gunbarrel and Maibaum specifies "(hope we can use this for a glimpse of Sean as Bond)".

The pre-title sequence follow, it begins with M asking Moneypenny where 007 is. She reads him a message sent by the latter saying that he is on a "hot lead to target through cooperative contact". A camera shot shows an Aston Martin parked near a villa and Bond kissing a woman on a darkened porch. A white cat comes out of the villa and two SPECTRE's men come up behind Bond and knock him out.

Bond is seated and gagged in the passenger seat of his own Aston Martin driven by one of SPECTRE's men (a "good way to hide most of face and keep him from talking", explains the screenwriter). The second man is in the back of the vehicle, a gun pointed at Bond. They arrive on a bridge where in front of them is a heavy vehicle (like a tanker truck). 007 touches a button on the "arm-rest" (not the gear shift), flies into the air via the ejection seat, and lands in the water at the bottom of the bridge.

The surprised henchmen don't see the truck coming in front of them, rush into it, boom! The truck's momentum forces the burning Aston Martin carcass off the bridge and the pre-title end as both vehicles fall from the bridge toward Bond in the river...

Credits then a scene where M asks Moneypenny for the Bedlam file. While she is looking for it, Bond enters and "affectionately" puts a hand on her buttocks.

- Moneypenny: James! It's you!
- Bond: The new me, in person, dear girl. [Points to his face] Like it?
- Moneypenny: Fabulous: simply irresistable!

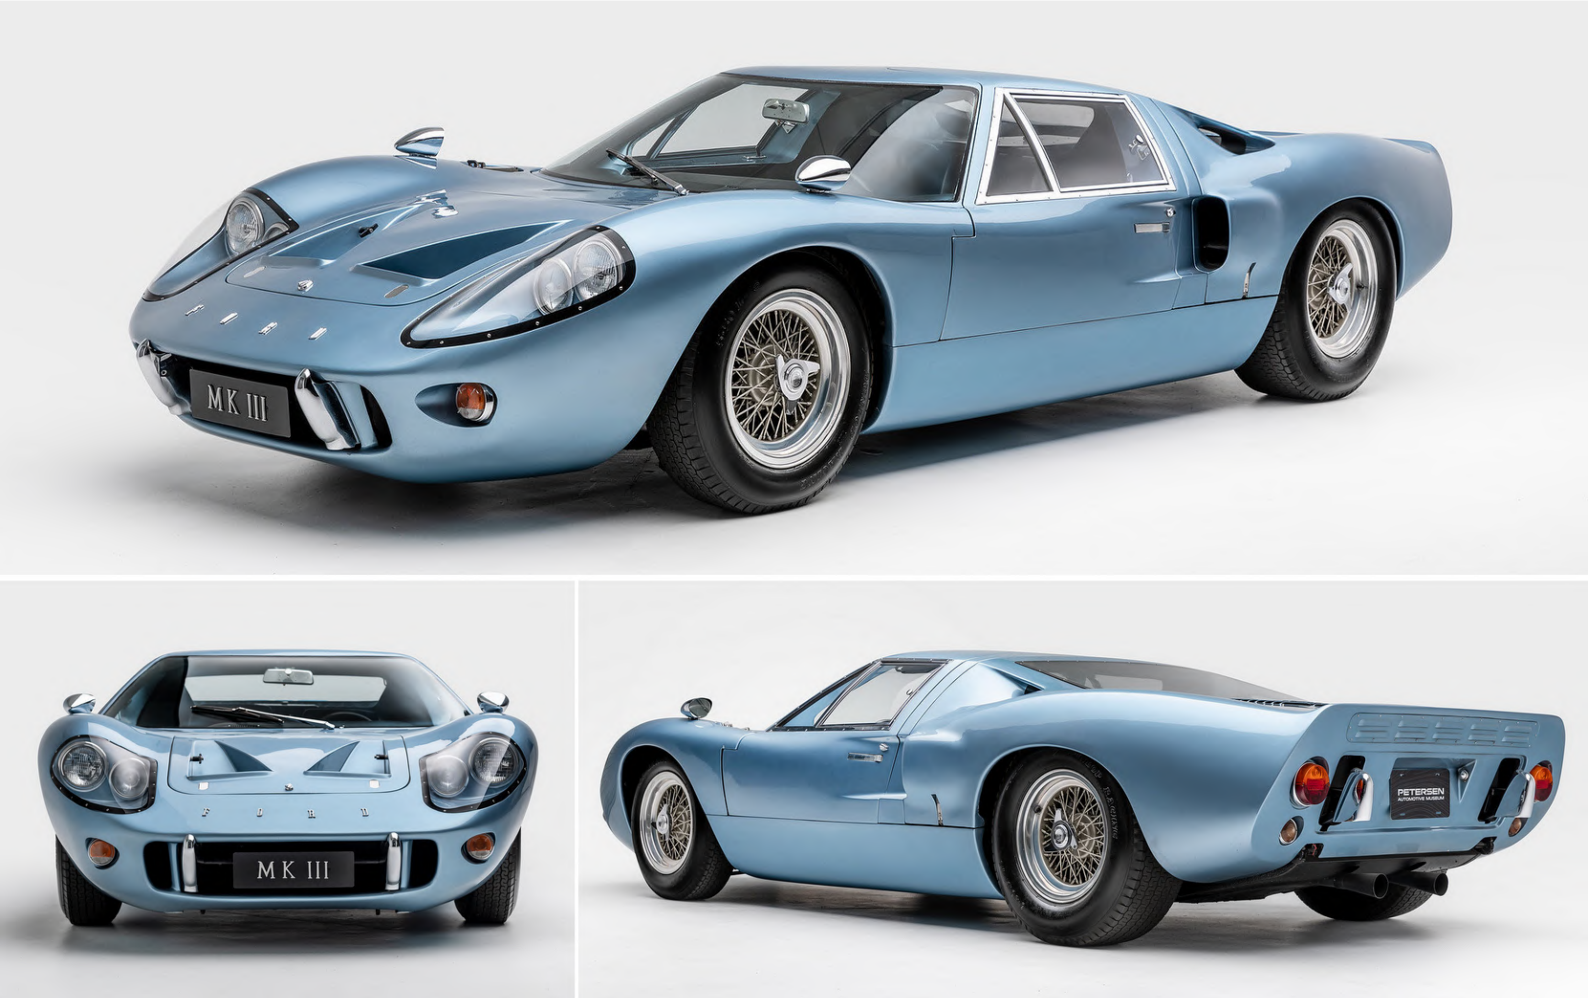
There is their usual banter then Bond goes to join M in his office. "When Bond asks why his face was changed so drastically, [M tells him] that it was thought a new face would prolong his life and be especially useful in the pursuit of Blofeld who certainly by now is familiar with his old appearance". M actually wants to put him back on Operation Bedlam: objective to find and kill Blofeld. Then come the passages where Bond says he is not up to look for Blofeld, then submits his resignation, cleans his office, "Request granted", and Moneypenny who admits to having submitted a leave request.

Before he goes on vacation, M wants Bond to go see Q to get his new vehicle which will replace his destroyed Aston Martin. Q then gives him the "new Ford Grand Turismo" (probably the Ford GT40 Mk III, since Maibaum had consulted a brochure about it). As 007 leaves, M thanks Moneypenny (for preventing Bond's resignation).



The Ford GT40 Mk III was a "road" version of the famous racing car. It was notably equipped with turn signals, an extended body at the rear to accommodate luggage, new headlights and its engine was restricted. The Mk III never found its audience who, for less money, could afford a racing version. Only seven examples of this model will leave the factories. One wonders how many other Mk III would have existed if it had been linked to James Bond...[11]

We find Bond in France driving his GT along a beach. He spots a white Ferrari and looks through a scope at Tracy. As he approaches the Ferrari he finds a suicide note on it and sees armed men jumping from a boat and trying to kidnap Tracy. 007 gets back in his GT and speeds towards the beach where he is greeted by a hail of bullets to which he responds "(perhaps using laser gun)" (Bond's car is not amphibious compared to previous scripts) and causes the boat's tank to explode. Bond gets out of his car, fights with his bare hands, and puts Tracy into the Ford GT before driving away with her. As he stops to get her dress, Tracy gets behind the wheel and drives to her Ferrari in which she leaves. 007 finds a key to the Hotel Splendide in the pockets of the dress.

There are the scenes at the casino/hotel (always with the scene of treating her "like a woman of the street"), then Bond who leaves without touching her before being overpowered by Che Che and Toussaint.

The two Corsican henchmen drive him by car (without passing through police bikers) to the Maginot line, where Marc-Ango Draco's HQ is located (he has converted part of it into warehouses and sumptuous quarters).

ATTENTION
9
8

The Maginot Line, this defense line built between the two World Wars by France at its borders with Belgium, Luxembourg, Germany, Switzerland and Italy. Set of bunkers/blockhouses, underground galleries, barbed wire, anti-tank obstacles, shelters, depots, observation posts, machine gun and artillery nests, as well of living spaces for soldiers (with dormitories, kitchens, infirmaries, etc...).

This line, supposed to give the country time to mobilize troops in the event of an attack and supposed to be impassable, was a reflection of the defensive doctrine of the French leaders, still traumatized by the trenches warfare of the First Would War. An obsolete conception of the war in face of the modern blitzkrieg techniques of Hitler's army. In any case, Hitler' army bypassed the line by passing through the Belgian border and the Ardennes, places which were only lightly fortified at the Belgian request or because deemed impassable by the French. Since then, the "Maginot Line" has become in France a symbol of defeat and a synonym of failure and inefficiency.

During the winter of 1967-1968, Harry Saltzman and set designer Syd Cain visited a section of the Maginot line near Metz, accompanied by French officials[12], but the place failed to impress them:

> - Syd Cain[13] : Harry Saltzman, who was co-producer, took me to France saying he had discovered the perfect location for Blofeld's [sic!] hideaway. He took me to the Maginot Line, which was very interesting. He had made arrangements to have a section opened for us. In case you don't know, The Maginot Line is made up of sections as opposed to just one thing. Well, they opened it for us and we were given a guided tour. We saw the dormitories and the canteens. They even had water boiling in the kitchens to show us that everything was still in working order. Then we went up in the lifts to the gun turrets, and even they still worked. There is a small train that runs through the Maginot Line and it was while we were riding on this that Harry turned to me and asked my opinion. When I said I could reproduce this on a stage back at Pinewood with help of false perspective sets etc. he immediately asked the driver to turn the train back, and within the hour we were driving back to Paris. So I suggested to Harry it might be better that if instead of going underground, we looked up.

Similar to the film, 007 enters Draco's office with a knife (which was hidden in his shoe) in his hand. Draco offers him money to marry his daughter Tracy; Bond politely refuses because marriage is not for him but nevertheless agrees to spend time with her.

And spend time together they do, at Draco's castle until Draco tells 007 that he has a lead on Blofeld in Zurich. The three of them go to Switzerland where they meet Cartwright, M's man in Zurich. Bond and Cartwright climb Gebruder Gumbold's large building. Inside they open a safe and photograph a document about the Count Balthazar de Bleuchamp (rather than "de Bleuville").

007 goes to meet Sable Basilisk at the College of Arms, however Bond discovers that Phidian is listening to them. There is the chase to the underground post office network. Then in this treatment Bond and M arrange a fake train crash (rather than using a previous real one) containing Phidian's body and others found in a morgue, so that his death will not appear suspicious to Blofeld.

007 arrives in Switzerland posing as Bray ("no kilt", writes Maibaum this time) and is greeted by Bunt, Grunther and Hans. After discovering his room at Piz Gloria, he goes to dinner in the company of pretty girls from various places around the world. Ruby traces her room number on 007's leg with her finger (instead of telling him orally).

Bond is invited to meet the Count of "Bleuechamp", or at least its representation on a "curved 3-dimensional color TV screen". Blofeld tells him that he is very busy and to see with Bunt for all the papers he needs.

By observing more closely the antechamber in which he waits for Grunther, 007 discovers that it moves on rails like a sort of elevator/funicular.

Later Bond goes to Ruby's room. "She wants from no genealogy, just L'amour. She gets it". They talk a little and Bond witnesses the hypnotic treatment she is undergoing. 007 returns to his room calling himself a "cad" for shamelessly using Ruby like that. Maureen joins him and Bond "toujours prêt" (always ready) have also sex with her.

Later, Bond, who is tired of working in his room, decides to go out and join the girls who are skiing with Grunther. Cartwright and Tracy on a snowmobile are spotted and brought into a room; Cartwright explains that it is his niece and that she is a victim of allergies, he would like to have her treated at Piz Gloria. Grunther refers it to the "Director" and Tracy is accepted as a patient; Cartwright leaves by cable car.

In the evening 007 goes to Tracy's room; she explains to him that she missed him so much that she went to Zurich to find out from Cartwright where he was and that the latter thought of using her as a messenger. Cartwright left a car nearby. Tracy is however worried that men from Blofeld, who previously worked for her father, can recognize her.

Bunt complains to Blofeld about bickering between the girls, saying that Hilary Bray might be the cause (which is the case, Bond having made them jealous of each other with his sexual affairs all around). Irma leaves, Bond sneaks into Blofeld's office, throws something at him and realizes it's actually a video screen.

007 infiltrates laboratories where Blofeld scientists are creating an infectious substance causing sterility. A screen reports absences around the world of seeds in crops or a lack of reproduction between animals. Bond understands that Blofeld can destroy the world's food supplies and human reproduction if he wants.

He therefore decides to inform Cartwright according to the procedure that Tracy had given him: slide a message onto the bobsleigh track. In doing this, Bond is spotted by a guard whom he kills and whose corpse he brings down towards Cartwright. 007 goes to the car left by Cartwright and retrieves Q's equipment (a gun and skis) from the trunk before returning to Piz Gloria.

He sees the girls in a swimming pool (Ruby and Maureen may be fighting when they see him coming). Ruby says she needs to talk to him and a man from Blofeld recognizes Tracy. 007 goes to Ruby's room but finds Bunt in the bed; he is captured and brought to Blofeld.

Blofeld tells him that Cartwright is dead and shows him the body; he adds that he wants to blackmail the world and will now put an end to Bond's interference in his plans. On the other hand, Blofeld is no longer Goldfinger's half-brother in this treatment.

There is the chimpanzee and 007 must "gets past leopard, python, etc, crawls to door, freezes as huge poisonous spider-like insect crawls toward him". Bond goes to Tracy's room to tell her they have to leave. Guards start chasing them and Tracy decides to lure them away from Bond. 007 hesitates but concludes that saving the world is more important than saving Tracy and thus puts on boots that convert to skis and begins to ski away from Piz Gloria. Skiers start chasing him and other men machine-gun him from the cable car. During this scene 007 uses the ski pole in various ways: to skewer enemies, take out a grenade hidden in the handle, and shoot with it like a blowgun.

007 eventually reaches his (or Cartwright's) Ford GT. SPECTRE men on snowmobiles, bobsleighs and cars chase him. Bond uses the rear machine gun gadget of his vehicle. In St. Moritz, Bond drives onto a frozen lake where a horse race is taking place. Eventually a henchman manages to hit a tire or the tank of the GT and Bond is forced to abandon the Ford to once again engage in a ski chase. A skier collides with a snow plow on rails ("Pink snow!") and Bond deliberately triggers an avalanche which he manages to outrun.

007 joins M at 10 Downing Street: 27 nations have received threats from Blofeld on their agriculture if they do not accede to his request, which is immunity. They decided to accept; M doesn't care about freeing Tracy.

Bond therefore mounts an assault with Marc-Ange Draco made up of three teams which attack simultaneously. A first who parachutes from gliders, a second who arrives by climbing the rock, and the third on snowmobiles equipped with machine guns and rocket launchers. Bond and Draco rescue Tracy and manage to find information about the girls of the clinic. Blofeld appears to escape to the cable car and 007 jumps on it but discovers that the hooded man he was chasing was actually Grunther. The two fight inside the cable car in a sequence that Maibaum says he wanted to be "terrific fight [...], like the one in train compartment" of From Russia with Love.

Bond kills Grunther and climbs back onto the roof of the cable car then slides down the cable, "(this was actually done in an accident lately)", until he reaches a pylon from where he watches the Piz Gloria explode. Bond descends from the pylon then is joined by Draco in a helicopter (stolen from Piz Gloria).

Later, in Draco's villa, M tries to dissuade Bond from getting married. He tells him that he should instead marry Moneypenny who is in tears.

Bond and Tracy leave the villa and are attacked on the road by Blofeld and Bunt. Bond gets out of the car and sends something, like a statue that he dislocates or a trunk, hurtling down the pinhead road. When hitting the car, Blofeld/Bunt' car end up in the void above a cliff before explode on landing. Bond returns to the Ferrari and discovers that Tracy is dead.

Bond makes nurses cry

A slightly more recent treatment adds a scene just after the credits where we see Bond leaving a hospital by taxi after nine months there (with Bollinger and caviar in his room). The "tearfully" nurses gather at the window to wave to him and are scolded by the head nurse (who also go at the window to say goodbye). As the taxi drives away, the head nurse fears that the nurses "will never be the same again"!

New script attempt

Later, Maibaum began writing a script for the film. A first (incomplete) version has the following things.

Gunbarrel: "remade with Bond walking away from the camera, only partially turning, throwing up left arm as he does (to hide his face)".

The gunbarrel opens on the 10 Downing Street with the Prime Minister (his face hidden) and a voice similar to the one of Harold Wilson, on the phone with M. The latter hangs up and asks Moneypenny where Bond is: he has just send a message from Cairo, he is on a "hot lead to target - contact most cooperative". We do, however, find Bond in France, at the villa mentioned in the treatment, with a girl whose physique ticks all the boxes of his "usual high standards". The traitress helps a certain Quinette ("incredibly" thin, around 2.10 meters; Maibaum compares him to a giraffe) and another man to knock out 007. Then come the scenes of the ejection seat, of the Aston Martin collision with the tanker truck, and the two vehicles falling from the bridge towards Bond.

After the credits we are treated with the scenes where Bond leaves the hospital with the various nurses and the head one.

In Moneypenny's office, we then see Bond's face for the first time and Maibaum writes "[smiling], voice, accent, and manner much the same as possible". Sean Connery having a strong Scottish accent, we can imagine that this is what Maibaum wants to reproduce. After his dialogues with the secretary (a mix of those in the treatment and the ones of film), he goes to meet M.

Bond doesn't want to look for Blofeld. M tries to reassure his agent by telling him that he hadn't found Blofeld previously because "obviously because he knew what you looked like", which is no longer the case with his new face. 007 therefore resign via Moneypenny.

> - Richard Maibaum[14] : Bond had to have plastic surgery because he was being recognized by all his country's enemies. But, we thought that was [an] awful [idea] and threw it out.

Bond returns home, where we find him in the company of a certain "Sylvia" (lying on the couch with her, he reads the newspaper). (Sylvia Trench we imagine! Did Maibaum thought that bringing her back would help the public to accept that Bond is still the same Bond despite the change of actor?). Suddenly someone rings her doorbell during the night: Moneypenny in a cocktail dress. In fact, Bond had said to her earlier (as in the film): "Cocktails at my place? Eightish? Just the two of us" and as this scene shows, in this beginning of the script she made him keep his words:

> - Moneypenny (in front of a surprised Bond): [You said eight o'clock, right?] Am I early?

She tells him that M has accepted his request:

> - Bond: The usual "with regret", I suppose.
> - Moneypenny: No, just "Request accepted".
> - Bond: I've risked my silly neck all over the world. I've been shot, stabbed, coshed, gassed, garroted, poisoned, and kicked in the head. Practically every > bone in my body's been broken. My own mother wouldn't recognize me. And all I get is a kiss-off "Request granted"!

She explains to him that she has actually submitted a leave request and that he must come and collect his new car from Q before leaving. As he lets out a "Moneypenny, what would I do without you!", Sylvia decides to leave the bedroom in which she was hidden until then:

> - Sylvia: You mean what are you going to do with me!?

She returns to the room, slamming the door, Bond goes to join her. A smiling Moneypenny picks up the phone and tells M that the situation is "normal"; M thanks her.

The next day Bond visits Q who presents him with a "Ford GT 4[0] Mark III", of which Maibaum is currently unaware of all the specifications/modifications "(to be discussed with technicians)". 007 tells Q that he would prefer "another Aston Martin", but Q lets him know that the Ford GT is now standard equipment of 00 Section. Bond also complains about the cramped seats. Q tells him that it isn't his job to provide suitable accommodations for his dates, to which Bond responds that he underestimates the needs of his own job.

At the wheel of his GT, "humming along with stereo tape music", Bond in France sees Tracy on a beach (but no villain) through the scope of his rifle. She is described as "nude". Seeing her heading weirdly towards the dangerous waters, he rushes towards her and saves her from drowning.

- Bond: Do you need the Kiss of Life, I hope?
- Tracy: Kiss...?
- Bond: Mouth-to-mouth resuscitation. It's recommended procedure...
- Tracy: Go away.

007 disagrees with her and returns to the Ford GT to take a flask of brandy out of a compartment and offer it to her. Bond sees a boat approaching which he mistakes for coast-guards. He tells the newly arrived men (including Guercelli) that she is fine but they pull out guns.

There is a hand-to-hand fight and Bond manages to get rid of the two men on the beach. There are, however, other men in a boat who open fire towards him and Bond joins his GT and launches missiles (whose aiming reticule is in the sun visor) at the boat.

Tracy drives off in the GT towards her Ferrari and Bond utters a line referring to the change of actor for the first time:

- Bond: This never would have happened to the old you, 007.

- Peter Hunt[15] : A great deal of discussion went into how to address the issue of a new James Bond. Everyone had different ideas about how to handle Sean's exit from the role. There were all sorts of lines and scenes being discussed when finally Dick Maibaum said, "Why are we playing around with this? Why don't we just take it as a matter of course?". We were all scratching our heads about how to start it, and I believe it was Dick who came up with the line "This never happened to the other fella".

1967' "Second Draft": Alicia, train collision, snowmobiles battle

A new 137-page "Second Draft" was completed somewhere in 1967 (my copy has some revised page from June 21, 1967).

Here for the gunbarrel, Maibaum suggests to "use Bob Simmons' version" or redoing it as he previously specified. Follows the scene with M on the phone with the Minister (there is, however, no camera shot at 10 Downing Street anymore).

After that: the rest of the pre-title containing the same stuff as before. There is the scene where Bond leaves the hospital. This time there are only two nurses: Alicia ("the most attractive young nurse in medical history") and the head nurse.

> - Head Nurse: After nine months of that young man my staff will never be the same again...

Bond arrives at Moneypenny's office, throws his hat on the coat rack and kisses the secretary from behind (instead of putting his hand on her butt as was the case previously). With M:

> - M: You're looking fit. First-rate work. While they were about it, we asked them not to attempt a resemblance.
> - Bond (dryly): I'd say that was successfully accomplished, sir.
> - M: I thought it would prolong your usefulness. We'll have a new assignment for you shortly.

But in this script Bond asks to be put back on Operation Bedlam instead; he therefore asks the opposite everything he had always asked in previous scripts/treatments! M points out that it has been two years since he managed to obtain any results and he therefore prefers to entrust this operation to someone else. To reassure him, M tells him that this is his only failure (of his career).

> - Bond: Sir, I don't wish to sound immodest, but my work in Turkey, Nassau and Japan pretty much crippled Spectre as an organization. I want to finish the job, personally, before Blofeld sets it up again. He's mine, sir. I promise you I'll get him.

Since M doesn't see it that way, Bond submits his resignation to Moneypenny.

At Bond's house, it's no longer Sylvia who is with Bond when Moneypenny arrives at his house, but the nurse Alicia. The scene is pretty much the same, although Alicia is wearing a nurse's uniform and Bond tells Moneypenny that she's here for her "post-operative therapy". Passages have also been rephrased:

> - Bond: Go risk your silly neck all over the world! Get yourself shot, stabbed, coshed, gassed, garroted, poisoned, kicked the head! Break practically every bone in your body! Your own mother can't recognize you! And they kiss you off with a chintzy "Request granted"!
> [...]
> - Bond: Moneypenny, what would I do without you!
> - Alicia: Without me, you mean!

After collecting his new car, Bond in France sees Tracy at the beach and we notice that she is no longer naked here (Maibaum dresses her in panties and a bra). But the most important difference here is that there is nobody to kidnap her: the only danger Bond saves her from is drowning. After offering him the flask of brandy, he says: "Now let's find some place to properly warm up". They get into the GT and when Bond stops to collect Tracy's things, she takes the wheel and then flees in her Ferrari.

> - Bond: This never happened before, Double 07. Perhaps they ought to try again...

And so after seeing the keys to the Splendide's hotel room in her bag, we find Bond at the said hotel (in a white evening jacket), entering Tracy's room. He doesn't find her but comes across a photo of her with a three-year-old child. Che Che arrives in the room; Bond tries to sneak out but is spotted. Che Che chases him with a knife, Bond overpowers him and flees the fight.

We then find 007 at the casino, he meets Tracy again and pays his debt. She invites him to join her in her room (we notice Che Che in the background in the casino, trying to find Bond). He joins her but begins to leave her after she basically tells him to treat her like a prostitute. However in this script he turns around when he hears her crying and doesn't get knocked out:

> - Bond: You are full of surprises, Contessa... That's better. Now, shall we start over again?
> - Tracy: Tomorrow, perhaps...
> - Bond: Goodnight, Tracy.

The next day Bond waits for Tracy in front of the hotel, she gets into his GT. Che Che sees them leaving together. Two men in an Italian "roadster" car then take the same direction as the Ford GT. On the road, listening to music on the hi-fi:

> - Bond: Di Vicenzo! Of course! One of those mad, merry, jetset girls in The Illustrated News.
> - Tracy: Are you impressed?
> - Bond: Enormously. But you're not a bit merry, at least around me..

The roadster catches up with them and its occupants wave to Bond. "Chap wants a race", Bond comments before a scene where the two cars take turns in overtaking each other occurs. During this they narrowly avoid a truck coming the wrong way, "I thought you wanted me to stay alive" comments Tracy, and Bond wins the race. They then stop for a picnic.

While they are together, they are then joined by the two men from the roadster who point their guns at Bond. They say they were ordered by Guercelli to bring Tracy in without harming her unless necessary. Bond throws a bottle of wine from the picnic at one of the two men. 007 fights the unarmed man while the other takes Tracy to the roadster. Bond ends up sticking a picnic knife in his neck, then manages to wound the other with a gun (he flees, leaving Tracy to Bond).

007 sees an ambulance approaching on the road and signals it to stop... But discovers too late that it is Che Che and Toussaint. At knifepoint, Draco's men put 007 and Tracy into the ambulance and administer sleeping gas to Bond.

They first join a semi-trailer, then with it Draco' HQ at the Maginot Line. Bond is freed from the stretcher he was strapped to and takes the opportunity to counterattack in a quick fight scene during which he steals the knife from Che Che before entering Draco's office. "(Or R. Simmons devise something better)", notes Maibaum about what he wrote (but "R."? B. for Bob rather).

> - Draco: After you kill me, how will you escape? You cannot walk through concrete.
> - Bond: Where are we?
> - Draco: In the Maginot line, a warehouse rented from the government. I am Draco of Draco Appareils Electrique[s].
> - Bond: Marc Ange Draco?

007 throws the knife at the calendar, then they end up discussing Tracy (Draco particularly wants to know if the British secret services are interested in her because of him). Bond tells him he didn't know that she was his daughter. Draco explains that the men in the roadster were from a rival faction of the Union Corse. He asks Bond to help Tracy get better (but doesn't clearly talk about marriage, just that she "needs a man worth living for"). Bond replies that since he is on holiday, he agrees to spend time with her.

Bond then joins Tracy who is in the Draco's 16th century castle in France' Dordogne, surrounded by a vineyard. Together they watch a meteor shower in the sky and kiss.

> - Tracy (looking at the stars): There will be thousands of them...
> - Bond: Who's counting?
> - Tracy: I am. The days, the nights, until I'll be alone again.

007 tells her that they will see each other again. The next day Draco and Che Che arrive at the castle in a Daimler:

> - Draco: Teresa! You look wonderful!
> - Tracy: I'm a new girl, papa... The world is new...
> - Draco (laughing): You sound you're in love...
> - Tracy: But, of course! It's in the air in the Dordogne!
> - Draco: And Mr. Bond? He's in love, too?
> - Tracy: That may come... Someday...
> - Draco: Life is too short to wait for someday.

Draco decides to go talk to Bond, who is practicing fencing in the castle. They have their discussion while practicing a match together (a note say that Draco wears a bulletproof vest at all times when Bond suggests him to put on a protective vest). Draco says he has a lead on Blofeld and that he would like him to marry his daughter for a million pounds in gold. Bond politely refuses, saying his job doesn't allow it and that he wouldn't know what to do with all the money. Draco then "attacks Bond furiously" but 007 manages to knock the sword out of his hand. Draco offers two million, Bond refuses again and Draco gives him an envelope.

In the next shot the envelope is in M's hands in his office at London with his agent. M begins to talk about "insubordination" over the fact that Bond investigated Blofeld when he had relieved him of Operation Bedlam. M asks him from where this letter comes from:

> - Bond: [From] the offices of the agent who sent it, Gebruder Gumpold, a private banking house in Zurich. I believe it was found in a safe.

Bond arrives at the Heralds' College and walks through the building (we hear in the background his voice telling M that he is going to take the place of Hilary Bray responsible for verifying the de Bleuchamp title). Bond meets Sable Basilisk (and Phidian).

They talk as in the previous scripts, however Bond says that Blofeld is a suspicious man who not only rely on correspondence and asks if the College has hired new staff recently. There is Phidian, said Basilisk: the poor man was unemployed for so long that he gave him a lion-shaped paperweight as a token of his appreciation.

By examining it Bond discovers the micro, and there is the start of the chase (in this script Maibaum adds that Phidian leaves the building by going down from rooftop to rooftop).

After Phidian's death in the postal tunnel, Bond goes to post the telegram Phidian was writing (after crossing out a word from it). We then find him at St Pancras station, in the company of M.

007 explains to the latter that they have no choice, otherwise Blofeld will sniff out the dirty trick. In the following scenes Bond boards a train which contains Phidian's corpse and others found in a morgue. After detaching the wagons containing real alive passengers; Bond, Q and the conductor derail the train (by crashing it into another) in order to simulate a train accident in which Phidian would have died.

> 232. INT. ENGINE PULLING FREIGHT CARS. DRIVER. NIGHT.
> At control, also wearing crash helmet and protective jacket, etc.
>
> 233. EXT HOVERING HELICOPTER SHOT. [THE TWO] TRAINS.
> Revealing they are on the same track and headed toward each other with elevated stretch or bridge between them.
>
> 234/241. SERIES OF SHOTS
> Intercutting two trains with flashes of Bond and other driver at controls. Process when necessary.
>
> 242 EXT. HELICOPTER SHOT. BRIDGE. NIGHT.
> Trains approaching bridge from opposite directions.
>
> 243. INT. CAB OF ENGINE PULLING FREIGHT CARS. DRIVER. NIGHT.
> He leaves control at speed, opens door, jumps.
>
> 244. EXT. BOND'S ENGINE. CAB DOOR. NIGHT.
> As Bond opens it from inside and jumps.
> [...]
>
> 247. SPECIAL EFFECTS
> Engines twisted together; coaches and freight cars telescoping; engine fuel exploding. Smoke, flame. Part of the wreck crashes off elevation (or bridge).

Bond goes to find the driver of the other train and says to him "Delighted you could lend a hand, Double 01".

007 then arrives in Switzerland (via a train). Alois Grunther is described as a winter sports professional wearing an Olympic championship jacket, while Cartwright (who is not accompanied by Q) wears a "military moustache". His car is identified as a Ford GT.

One of the most surprising things in this script is that Bond, Bunt and Grunther don't go to Piz Gloria by helicopter. Instead they travel in a Mercedes, while Cartwright, further behind in his GT, follows them thanks to a magnetic object that Bond has placed on the bodywork of the Mercedes. A pair of special glasses allows Cartwright to see the "radioactive glow" of the object and follow the car from a great distance.

Inside the Mercedes, Bond still has his compass-watch (same words from/to Irma Bunt on this subject). The Mercedes parks near a cable car station: the means of transport with which they finish their ascent to Piz Gloria of the Mount Pilatus (they take a public cable car and a private one to be precise).

After visiting the doctor and his room, Bond meets (without a kilt) the ten patients of the Institute (including back a French woman, probably because Tracy no longer goes to Piz Gloria as a patient in this script).

Bond is finally invited to see the Count, Maibaum adds a new passage in the antechamber in which Bond makes an improvised dagger using his pipe and his pen (screwing the uncapped pen in place of the pipe stem). During their meeting Blofeld is in what appears to be a laboratory, on the other side of a glass which separates them (it's really Blofeld in this script, and no longer a 3D screen).

After his meeting with Bond, there are shots of Blofeld moving through his base described as caverns, where there is "a modernistic factory complex built entirely of glass on several platform levels connected by lifts, staircases, and catwalks". The place is built around a giant "nuclear vaporizer" (not a furnace) in which objects can be destroyed via compressed air coming from ventilation ducts.

Blofeld joins a conference room in which there is a set of TV screens and inquires about the progress of his scientists located around the world such as Canada, Argentina, Australia, with dialogues like:

> - Blofeld: Experimental Station, England, report, please
> - England station manager: Virus Strain KP72 has not proven more effective inducing rooster sterility than KP71. FPertilized eggs are hatching occasionally but the overall infertility rate is still close to 96 percent...

Images of eggs, flocks of sheep without lambs, and fields almost empty are shown on the screens when the station chiefs make their reports.

Meanwhile, Bond goes to Ruby's room and watches her hypnotic treatment (we will note that she swallows an LSD-like pill and takes out a lipstick, from which the psychedelic lights then come out). 007 then finds Maureen in his own room, then the next day he is taking a walk outside with Bunt and Braun (Fritz was renamed Braun in this script). Guards bring Cartwright to them, who was caught trying to approach by climbing.

Cartwright pretends to be outraged/surprised at the way he was treated and passes a message to Bond about the location of a Q's GT:

> - Bunt: There are many signs to warn against the trespassing.

- Cartwright: Madame, whoever you are, I object to people taking pot shots at me under any circumstances!
- Bunt: You will be taken down on the téléférique [cable car]. Kindly do not make the climb on Piz Gloria again.
- Cartwright: I'll expect an apology, Madame. I'm staying at the Blauhaus, a pension down there below the bottom of the sled run. My name is Cartwright... Q.G.T. Cartwright...

The girls return from a ski session and Ruby and Maureen go to see Bond: he makes an appointment with them for the evening an hour apart. 007 goes to see Ruby but discovers that it is Bunt in the bed. There's a fight between the two of them, with Bunt performing "flying drop-kicks" and being compared by Maibaum to a "female Oddjob"! She does very well against Bond, but the arrival of Grunther and other men means that 007 has no chance at all; he is brought to Blofeld.

- Blofeld: We are both considerably changed, Mr. Bond.
- Bond: I am Sir Hilary Bray...
- Blofeld: Except for our fingerprints...

Cartwright's lifeless body is put into the nuclear vaporizer, a device intended to "destroy radioactive waste", Blofeld explains. He also explains to Bond that he informed the UN of some of his overseas stations (an inspection of these will show them that he is not joking). Blofeld tells 007 about his "K Virus" which causes infertility; "Homo sapiens included, I take it" asks Bond. "As a last resort, if my demands are not met", admits Blofeld.

Bond is taken to the zoo and escapes thanks to the chimpanzee. He arrives in the laboratory, breaks the window that separates it from Blofeld's office and discovers that the movable anteroom is not there. He therefore walks through the tunnel, then arrives at reception where he is able to hear the final instructions given to the girls who are preparing to leave Piz Gloria (by cable car).

007 overpowers the receptionist and puts on the man's clothes. The disguise doesn't last long because he is spotted by the first guard he comes across (and whom he also overpowers). He puts on ski gear as the alarm goes off. Skiing to escape, Bond is pursued by other men (including Grunther) on skis and snowmobiles (but not by cable car).

007 gets rid of several of them by shooting them and arrives at the bobsleigh track (Maibaum writes that the one in St. Moritz will be used for filming). He removes a white camouflage tarpaulin that reveal the Ford GT and gets behind the wheel. Arriving on the road, he sees three snowmobiles in his rear-view mirror and presses a button which have the effect of sending a missile towards them.

Three Jeeps appear and are greeted by the GT's machine gun gadget. 007 takes his vehicle to the bobsleigh track where he is chased by two bobsleighs. Bond sends a rocket at one of them and manages to return to the road from where he tries to contact London from the microphone of his car (but only receives interference).

007 arrives in St. Moritz where he is spotted by Spectre's men in a Mercedes. A chase begins between the two cars on a frozen lake where a horse race is taking place. They head towards a parking lot, Bond manages to pass between the narrow space of two lines of cars. This is not the case of Mercedes which is crashing into it and causing a chain reaction of cars sliding and crashing into each other.

Gruss aus St. Moritz
Luftseilbahn St. Moritz–Piz Nair
St. Moritz - Skilaufen
St. Moritz
Pferderennen
St. Moritz
Ausflugsschlitten
Der schiefe Turm
Viererbob

This postcard notably inspired Richard Maibaum for the conception these sequences.

Cleared of his pursuers, we find Bond at the hotel that Cartwright had mentioned previously (the Blauhaus). In the street we see a truck full of Spectre's henchmen and Irma when suddenly Bunt has an illumination: the Blauhaus.

007 hears sounds of someone arriving in the room that is next to his, he goes to the balcony to take a look in it and discovers that it is inhabited by... Tracy! He enters to join her; she told him that she had come to this hotel to see Cartwright in order to find him [Bond].

> - Bond: You're an impossible wench... After I talk to London I'll put you over my knee and smack that beautiful bottom...
> - Tracy: Oh, lovely, lovely...

While Bond and Tracy go to bed, Braun cuts the telephone cable outside. (No marriage proposal dialogue in this script). The bad guys enter Cartwright's room, then do the same in Tracy's room: they discover that she and Bond are no longer there. Our heros are spotted outside and they get into the GT; Blofeld's men get back in their truck to pursue them.

Bond tells Tracy that he has used up all his rockets, but that outrunning a truck shouldn't be difficult in his car. However, Bond is surprised by a horse-drawn sleigh (containing an old couple) which suddenly appears in front of him, and while trying to avoid it, crashes the car into a snowdrift. 007 then takes skis, poles, boots, a rope and a rifle from the trunk. He hands the boots to Tracy:

> - Tracy: [Is that] skis?
> - Bond: We have a man named Q who dreams up answers to questions like that.

Tracy's boots then transform into skis. They tie themselves together with the rope and ski near a crevasse "(as in short, Ski Fantasy)"; Tracy almost falls and Bond pulls her up. Grunther, Braun and other Spectre men pursue them on skis. There is the passage with the man who ends up in the snowplow. 007 uses Q's ski poles in various ways: as a blowgun, as a spear, or as a grenade.

> Bond hurls pole like spear, scores bull's-eye. Second closest pursuer topples over, pole in his gut.

007 shoots into the air to cause an avalanche; during the slide Bond is separated from Tracy. Blofeld's men think Bond is dead but find Tracy alive; they take her to Piz Gloria (similar to the film).

M is at the UN building in New York, where there is a vote between the nations to accept Blofeld's terms (or so it seems). The resolution is adopted unanimously. M takes a phone call from Bond who is now at the British embassy in Geneva. His agent wants to raid Piz Gloria to destroy the K virus stockpile. M gives him strict orders to not do so: the nations are ready to grant amnesty to Blofeld, "for the present, to gain time".

Bond therefore obviously turns to Draco as we see six teams of three men climbing the Piz Gloria mountains, and three planes towing gliders in the sky. Further down there is a "long line" of Draco semi-trailers trucks from which snowmobiles equipped with rockets, machine guns and grenade launchers emerge. All of Draco's men (including Draco and Bond) are equipped with white camouflage outfits.

Bond and Draco (and a driver) get on the same snowmobile and the assault begins, against Blofeld's men on foot and others also equipped with armed snowmobiles. "The ensuing effect should be of a great desert tank battle", Maibaum writes. The screenwriter speak of about 46 snowmobiles, just for Draco's side! There are the usual explosions, crashes, collisions, melee, etc... The men from the gliders join them by arriving by parachute (and dropping grenades during their descents). At one point Bond himself rides a snowmobile.

No snowmobile in the movie, the game adaptation 007 Legends however features somes.

The remaining enemies eventually retreat and Draco, his men and Bond storm into Piz Gloria and the HQ under the mountain. Blofeld picks up his cat and begins to flee with Grunther (who shoots some panicked scientists). There's the steel door that isolates 007 from the rest of his allies. Blofeld on loudspeaker speaks to Bond (and Draco, one of his men recognized his daughter) to ask them to leave otherwise Tracy will end up in the nuclear vaporizer.

Bond, who has disguised himself as a scientist with a surgical mask, discreetly approaches Tracy and saves her by shooting Braun (who ends up in the vaporizer). He takes her back to her father and there is the fight/melee in the laboratory. Draco, his men, Tracy, and scientists (but not the chimpanzee) evacuate the scene by snowmobiles. Bond is in pursuit of Blofeld, or at least he thinks since he discovers during the fight in the cable car that the hooded man he followed is actually Grunther.

Here Grunther doesn't have a rifle but a revolver, and Bond enters the cable car through the roof hatch ("(IT'S there)" writes Maibaum) rather than by breaking a window. Bond ends up leaving the cable car before the explosion, by sliding down the cable. "Rest in pieces", comments Bond.

Bond and Tracy marry in a French village church, with M as Bond's best man and Moneypenny as bridesmaid. They leave in an "English sports car" (unidentified) and are machine-gunned by Bunt. Bond throws his luggage on the hill which ends up causing Blofeld to lose control of the Maserati and ends up crashing into a gorge. Then the script ends with Bond discovering that his wife is dead.

1968' treatment: Von Sydow, Lola and family cottage

In 1968, Maibaum get things back on track by proposing a new 61-page treatment. Some pages on my copie are revised from June 6, 1968.

The gunbarrel (in which we don't see Bond's face) opens onto the Universal Export building. A guard greets a maintenance man by saying "Good morning, Double-O-Seven". In his office, M half-listens as Q presents his latest invention: a toothpick that can splash poison. He calls Moneypenny to see if she have any news on 007's whereabouts: he is said to be in Iceland.

Bond is actually somewhere else in Europe (location to be determined, Maibaum notes), driving his Aston Martin, when he sees Tracy's parked white Ferrari. He then observes the latter, sees her heading towards the sea and struggling against attackers. 007 gets out of his car, joins her while eliminating two attackers in close combat and then uses his Walther containing "bullet[s] evidently highly explosive[s]" to get rid of the last attackers who are in a boat.

Tracy opens her eyes and she sees (just like us) for the first time in this treatment the face of 007, who says to her "My name is Bond, James Bond". She begins to gather her things and Bond spots a bottle of champagne on a table where she was dining before going down to the beach:

> - Bond: Dom Perignon. Excellent choice. I'm sure we have many things in common.

Tracy runs to her Ferrari and leaves.

> - Bond (wryly to himself): Really, Double-O-Seven, we'll have to do better than that...

The credits roll and fade to the scene in Moneypenny's office (remarkably similar to the film, including its dialogue). In M's office, Maibaum backtracks: Bond resigns because he doesn't want to continue looking for Blofeld. The fact that Bond has a new face due to the change of actor is no longer mentioned/explained in this treatment.

007 goes down to see Q (who is "speechless") to give him back his Walther, and goes (eventually) clear out his desk, "somewhat unhappily". There are the scenes with M and Moneypenny telling him that they actually give him a leave, and 007 returns to Q to get the Ford GT (and his gun I guess, since he have it back few scene later).

Bond goes to the Splendide Hotel where he spots Tracy's Ferrari. He runs into her at the casino, pays her debt; she invites him to her room. When Bond goes there he doesn't find Tracy inside but Che Che who Maibaum still hopes to be played by Primo Carnera (probably unaware that the boxer died in June 1967). Bond comes out "battered", goes to his own room in which he discovers Tracy who have his Walther (similar to the film). He slowly approaches her and "gently" removes the weapon from her hands:

> - Tracy: You're very brave, aren't you?
> - Bond: Very, especially when the safety-catch is still on.

He joins her on the patio, the dialogues are similar to the film (there is always the "treat me like a woman you bought on the street" and the fact that he doesn't patronize them).

> - Tracy: You know your perfumes. What else do you know?
> - Bond: Only that you're the most impossible beautiful baffling girl I've ever met. What was all that on the beach? In the casino? In your room? Now here?

She ends up kissing him. The next day he wakes up alone. Bond calls reception and learns that Tracy has left the hotel, without giving a contact address. He lies down on the bed, lights a cigarette and says out loud to himself: "20,000 francs. Value received".

Similar to the film, Bond is approached at the reception by two men who take him into a Daimler in which Che Che is.

He is taken to a construction (and no longer electronics) company in Munich. In the buildings, 007 disarms Che Che and enters Draco's office. The Capu thanks him for what he did for Tracy (notably saving her from a rival faction) and offers him a substantial dowry to marry her. 007 doesn't want to get married, Draco insists that he spend at least some time with her; which he accepts. Draco is going to find out about Blofeld, but even if he discovers things he is not sure he will reveal them to 007, but to his stepson on the other hand... Draco suggests that he come and accompany him to a festival at his native village, Tracy will be present there.

The next location is "Corsica. Festival, Portugal", (two yet distinct places), Maibaum explains: "what it is and where will depend on location to be chosen". He makes a few suggestions such as a festival commemorating the exploits of a former local bandit, or something involving a Draco's bull (which will be retained for the film). Draco introduces Tracy to Bond, she behaves coldly saying that they had a "business transaction" at the Splendide. "Mr. Bond is clever at them and so is her dear papa". She tells him "gratis" the information about Gebruder Gumpold that she heard during a conversation between two of Draco's men, then leaves. Bond catches up with her and says "please stay".

Then there are two romantic scenes: Bond and Tracy walking with "perhaps a herd of bulls in B.G.", and a night scene where they ends up in each other's arms.

After that, we find Bond, Tracy and Draco in a car in Geneva. Strangely Marc-Ange "is not happy" while the other two exchange smiles (he wishes Bond would be more enterprising). Bond get out of the car alone and enters Gebruder Gumpold's building: things similar to the film happens, with Cartwright sending the safe cracker to Bond via a crane while Gumpold is away from his office (Bond photographs the documents instead of photocopying them).

007 then goes to the personal residence of M (who is currently devoting in butterfly collecting) to inform him of his lead on Blofeld and that he is working with the "College of Arms" (which is another name of the "Heralds' College"; it's the same place).

There (unlike previous scripts/treatments where he met a certain Sable Basilisk), Bond instead meet Hilary Bray himself, also known as "Rouge [Red] Dragon" (he have mustache and glasses). They discuss the fact that Bond will impersonate him, then 007 discovers Phidian's microphone. There's the chase (as usual, except Bond now also takes the rooftops like Phidian to get out of the College of Arms). Then there is the scene where Bond, Q and another man (not named 001 here) destroy a train to cover up Phidian's death (although the train still crashes into another train, the latter is now a stationary train on a siding, towing oil tanks). We also notice, during the scene at St Pancras station, that Bond offers a rare butterfly specimen to M which he thinks the latter doesn't have in his collection.

007 disguised as Bray (or perhaps not completely, since Maibaum writes "(Mustache? Let's discuss)") then arrives in Switzerland where he meets Irma Bunt and Grunther. They go to Piz Gloria by helicopter. As they take off, we can see Cartwright sticking a hypodermic syringe into the driver of the sled that brought them to the helicopter.

Max Von Sydow around 1968. If Telly Savalas would end up playing Blofeld in On Her Majesty's Secret Service, Von Sydow would still end up playing Blofeld in another film: Never Say Never Again (1983).

Bond meets the ten girls; in this treatment Ruby taps Bond on the leg six times to indicate him her room number. The mobile antechamber is now replaced by a simple elevator, Maibaum talks about caverns with a frozen waterfall to be filmed at "Schilthornbahn Murren" (this is basically where the scenes at Piz Gloria were shot in the film). Bond meets Blofeld, "let's hope he looks like Max Von Sydow" without an earlobe, we read. They are separated by a glass throughout the scene (on the other side Blofeld is in a laboratory).

Lola Falana.

Later Bond joins Ruby. After the scenes with her, he returns to his room where he runs into another girl. In this treatment she is no longer named Maureen but Lola and "who looks so much like her name-sake Lola Fatana [Falana] it might well indeed be she"!

The next day, Bond joins the girls playing curling on the Piz Gloria ice rink. Encouraged by Ruby, 007 throws a weight awkwardly, "other girls laugh". Cartwright, who was caught climbing, is brought to them by snowmobile; Blofeld comes to join them at the ice rink. Similar to the film, he makes Cartwright understand that Piz Gloria is private property. There is a passage where Bond approaches the snowmobile on which there is a Cartwright climbing spike which could prove a lethal weapon, but Blofeld retrieves it (and gives it to Grunther) before 007 could grab it.

In the evening Bond goes to find Ruby in her room but comes across Irma Bunt: "Here we have as believable a fight as the physique of the actress indicates. Personally I think she should be powerfully-built, a female Oddjob, and give Bond a hell of a battle", says Maibaum. Grunther and Braun intervene and Bond is definitely captured and taken to the laboratories.

Blofeld tells 007 that the items found in Cartwright's bag confirmed his suspicions about Bond, as did the truth serum interrogation of Cartwright (whose body still ended up in a "radiation furnace"). Blofeld tells him about his K Virus and responds enigmatically to Bond when he asks him the price of his ransom:

> - Blofeld: Let us merely say I look forward to the cultivation of orchids, Mr. Bond. [...] You are probably speculating why I have so openly discussed and divulged my plans to you. Ordinarily you would by now be in the furnace or a refrigeration chamber. But it has occurred to me you may be useful before that unhappy event. To convince [by radio] your superiors from personal knowledge that I am in a position to carry out my threats. [...] Your propensity for escaping from enclosed places is well known, Mr. Bond. This time however I think you will be fairly secure. [...] You will have what you are also noted for: female companionship.

Bond is brought to the zoo and is locked in a cage, next to another containing a large female chimpanzee (now sitting on a swing). "I believe she is called Irma", Blofeld tells him before leaving.

> - Bond (to the chimpanzee): What's a nice girl like you doing in a place like this?

Syd Cain in front of a model of Piz Gloria.

With the monkey's help, Bond manages to free himself. He then passes a series of corridors, the chimpanzee walking alongside him (there is no longer the scene in the tropical room with the jaguar). Bond ends up getting (alone) in an elevator and arrives at the room where he sees the girls receiving their final instructions. What is happening is "conforms with photograph of of S[yd] Cain's set model", we are told.

While Bond is equipping himself with skis, a technician notices the chimpanzee wandering in the laboratories and he picks up a phone: suddenly an alarm sounds at Piz Gloria. 007 flees on skis, pursued by men on skis and snowmobiles. Blofeld and Braun take off in the Piz Gloria's helicopter, equipped with a searchlight. Once Bond is spotted, Blofeld shoots him from the helicopter with a grenade launcher. 007 end up on the ground, gets up, shoots the searchlight, and resumes his descent on skis.

007 arrives at the bobsleigh track. Maibaum is not sure of the outcome here, he gives two possibilities: either Bond takes a bobsleigh and goes down the track with it, or he borrows the snowmobile of a man from Blofeld that he would kill to go down the track with it "if this is possible". He also suggests postponing the passage where Bond shoots the helicopter's searchlight so that once at the bottom, Bond picks up a grenade sent by Blofeld and sends it onto the track to get rid of pursuers in a bobsleigh.

"In any event", Bond loses his pursuers and arrives at the village of Murren. Here Maibaum reintroduces an ice rink and costume ball setting for the first time since his 1964 treatment. As Blofeld and Bunt's men search for him in the crowd; Tracy skating on ice notices Bond and approaches him.

They get into Tracy's car (she takes the wheel) and find themselves being chased by a car containing Blofeld's men. They head to St Moritz "or wherever else we shoot next sequence", where take place the scene on a frozen lake with horse racing (in the background) and its conclusion in the parking lot.

Tracy notices that her Ferrari is running out of gas; they go to get skis from the trunk. Bond kneels in front of Tracy to help her put on her skis:

> - Bond: This is the way it used to be done, isn't it? With the man kneeling?
> For the moment she doesn't understand.
> - Bond: Comtesse, will you do me the supreme honour of becoming my wife?
> She gazes at him, unable to speak for a moment. When she does her voice is husky.
> - Tracy: Say it again.
> - Bond: I love you, Tracy. Will you marry me?
> - Tracy: You mean that?
> - Bond: Yes, I mean it. With all my heart.
> She turns away for a moment as her eyes fill with tears. He stands up.
> - Bond: I'm sorry it had to happen here in this godforsaken place, but when I looked up I suddenly knew I'd never find another girl like you: beautiful, brave, exciting; and I said to myself why not make it for always.
> She takes his face in her hands.
> - Tracy: Yes, I'll marry you, James... For always.
> [They kiss and hear a truck approaching].

This is reminiscent of the novel in which you can read:

> - Chapter 19: Bond suddenly thought, Hell! I'll never find another girl like this one. She's got everything I've ever looked for in a woman. She's beautiful, in bed and out. She's adventurous, brave, resourceful. She's exciting always. She seems to love me. She'd let me go on with my life. She's a lone girl, not cluttered up with friends, relations, belongings. Above all, she needs me. It'll be someone for me to look after. I'm fed up with all these untidy, casual affairs that leave me with a bad conscience. I wouldn't mind having children. I've got no social background into which she would or wouldn't fit. We're two of a pair, really. Why not make it for always?
> Bond found his voice saying those words that he had never said in his life before, never expected to say.
> "Tracy, I love you. Will you marry me?".
> She turned very pale. She looked at him wonderingly. Her lips trembled. "You mean that?".
> "Yes, I mean it. With all my heart".

They leave on skis and the men in the truck chase them on skis. There is the scene of the man who ends up in the snowplow (again on rail) and the avalanche triggered by 007. Bond finally escapes his pursuers but Tracy is captured (Bond has time to see her climb into the truck before losing consciousness).

Bond is then at the British Embassy where he speaks on the phone to M who is at UN headquarters. Unlike before, Bond asks M for permission to act unofficially: if Blofeld is incapacitated, his entire plan will collapse. M accepts, telling him that everything he does will however be publicly disavowed.

In the next scene we see Bond arriving alone by cable car at Piz Gloria, a suitcase in his hand. Grunther, who is waiting for him with other men, searches him when he arrives. Maibaum perfectly sums up what's going on in our heads right now: the "audience will ask themselves what in hell is going on?". It's happen that Bond brings the amnesty papers to Blofeld, as well as his De Bleuchamp/Bleuville (the two spelling are used in this treatment) Count title. Blofeld is particularly happy that Bond's superiors have chosen his old enemy for this task. Less resentful than one would imagine, he is ready to forget the past: Bond can come and "visit him as he grows his orchids and perhaps discuss old times".

Bond asks that Tracy go back with him; Blofeld tells him that this is unfortunately impossible because she was killed in the avalanche.

007 presses his cufflink and the cable car explodes; Blofeld's men start pointing their guns at him. Through the window parachutists (Draco and his men) land, jumping from gliders. Maibaum justifies the reason for gliders here and it's not even because of the little noise they make (!): "(we've had helicopters, etc., but never gliders)".

The guards' attention focuses on the newcomers and Bond begins chasing Bunt who has started running towards the room where Tracy is being held. 007 disarms a guard and shoots toward Bunt, who then flee. Bond free Tracy and they find Draco. While the others go to capture the Piz Gloria helicopter, 007 goes after Blofeld, notably in crevasses, where perhaps "they might be on snowmobiles". Bond ends up discovering that the hooded man he was pursuing is in reality Grunther, there is a "terrific fight" at the end of which Bond causes his enemy to fall into the crevasse.

Later in a village church (the location of which this time is "to be determined"), Bond and Tracy get married:

- Bond: I do!

They say goodbye to Draco, Che Che, M and Moneypenny and leave in the Ferrari, followed by a Mercedes. Unfortunately I'm missing the last page(s) of this treatment.

On a set of incomplete pages being an earlier draft of this treatment, two things are to be noticed. The first is that Maibaum used to write de Bleuville instead of de Bleuchamp. The second thing to note is a different version of events after Bond meets Draco and agrees to see his daughter again.

We indeed see a thatched cottage in Scotland or England with a hay festival in the fields not far away. In one field, "Bond, stripped to the waist, working with other men, pitching hay into wagon Cattle graze peacefully in B.G.". Tracy's Ferrari stops not far from them and she approaches a sweaty Bond:

- Tracy: You have many talents.
- Bond: It doesn't take talent, just hard work. Ever done any?

> - Tracy: Any peasant can do that.
> - Bond (handing her a pitchfork): Try it, Comtesse.
> - Tracy: I'm not suitably dressed.

She takes off some clothes, takes a pitchfork, and starts working with them in her bra.

> - Tracy: When I was a little girl I used to work with the others in my father's vineyards in the Dordogne.
> - Bond: I was born in the cottage down there. I come back now and then to get in touch with myself again. What are you doing here?

She says her father told her he had information about the man Bond was looking for, but she decided to come and give him the information for free, gratis. She tells him about Gumpold, puts down the pitchfork, "and now you have no further professional interest in me, au revoir [goodbye], Mr. Bond". She gets dressed and he catches her.

There are then two romantic scenes: Bond and Tracy walking near a cottage, a sheepdog at their side (Bond's dog?!), then inside the cottage, lying near a fireplace.

July-August 1968' script: Aston, lasers and snow shovel

Peter Hunt is the director of this opus.

On July 24, Maibaum and Peter Hunt arrived in Mürren, Switzerland for location scouting[16]. A new script, similar to the film in its dialogue, was completed in July-August 1968. My 126-page copy includes revised pages from July 15, 17, 19, 26, 29 and August 2, 6, 9, 1968.

The beginning is similar to the treatment. However, the gadget that Q presents to M is the one that is in the film, Tracy has a Bugatti and no longer a Ferrari, and the script gives France for the scenes with Bond and Tracy. We also observe that the action scene is similar to the film (with the anchor and no more enemy boat; we also notice that Bond plays dead to deceive his adversary and surprise him when the latter gets closer). Here Maibaum names the two attackers Klett and Moreau. The most surprising thing is the line that James Bond says just before the credits:

> - Bond: This never happened to Sean Connery...

"(I know, we'll have to find another line)", Maibaum comments right after!

Further at SIS HQ, Maibaum backtracks again: this time Bond resigns because M no longer wants him on Bedlam. "I'm well aware of your many talents, Double O-Seven, but investigating missing persons is obviously not among them": it's crazy when you know the evolution of the writing of the film' script!

When Moneypenny asks him what he's going to do with the vacation she gave him:

> - Bond: Oh, nowhere very exciting. I just might look up a dear old maiden aunt I haven't seen in years...

Before leaving, Bond stops by Q to collect his new car which in this script is no longer a Ford GT40 but a "new model" of Aston Martin. He goes with it to the Hotel Splendide (in France, the manager is named Maurice. He will be renamed Manuel in the film which takes place in Portugal). Things happen similarly to before (and to the film): Bond meets Tracy at the casino, then Che Che in her room and 007 finds Tracy in his own room. Draco's men embark him in a Daimler to see Draco.

> [...]
> - Draco: Help me help this girl, Mr. Bond.
> - Bond: She fascinates me, Mr. Draco, but I'm not a psychiatrist...
> - Draco: Psychiatrists! No, Mr. Bond! She needs a man! Strong, experienced, to understand her, control her, beat her, perhaps! A man who will make love to her enough to make her love him! You are the first one she has met who could be that man.

007 refuses to marry her but agrees to see her again later. This is done on Saint Teresa's Day, celebrated in a festive French village (people dance, wear traditional costumes, etc.). Draco has a villa in this village (but there is no mention of bulls in this script). As in the film, Tracy forces her father to give Bond the tip about Blofeld for free, "or you will never see me again".

007 catches up with her and then there are two brief romantic scenes: they walk through Draco's vineyard; he takes her in his arms at night somewhere.

There are the scenes in Geneva, "keep my martini cool" Bond says as he leaves Draco's Daimler to head towards the offices of the Gumpold "brothers". There's an interesting change here: Cartwright's character is finally renamed to Campbell (as it was the case in the novel, something that hasn't happened since the 1964 treatment!). Likewise, Bond now photocopies documents instead of photographing them.

007 goes to M, then to the College of Arms where he meets Sir Hilary Bay a.k.a. "York Herald" (instead of "Rouge Dragon"). (Note that "Rouge Dragon" and "York Herald" are real College of Arms titles, unlike Sable Basilisk which is a pure invention of Ian Fleming).

There is the chase with Phidian and the staging of his death. Bond arrives by train in Switzerland and Maibaum identifies the station as Lauterbrunnen (and it is indeed the station who will appear in the film). Here he wears Sir Hilary's mustache and "perhaps" his hair are dyed.

He is taken to Piz Gloria where he meets the girls (Maibaum seems to have in mind the real building that will be used for filming, since he now mentions the Jungfrau). Maibaum backtracks: Ruby indicates her room number again by tracing a six by hand on 007's thigh.

Then Bond meets Blofeld and for the first time, 007 offers to accompany (as in the novel) Blofeld to Augsburg, the land ancestral to the Blofelds.

Bond then goes to find Ruby in her room and for the first time also Maibaum makes him use a ruler (instead of the detachable collar of his clothing) to open the doors. When he returns to his room, it's not a Lola who is waiting for him in this script but a Nancy, described as a "beautiful Jamaican negress".

There are the scenes outside with Campbell being spotted, then Bond goes to Ruby's room and runs into Bunt. Maibaum has decided to abandon his idea of a fight with her here: they just have a small skirmish before Bond is knocked out. Blofeld explains his plan to Bond.

Another thing that Maibaum left behind is the zoo sequence with the chimpanzee. Instead Blofeld takes Bond to a room where there is a cell with Campbell in it, with some sort of purple laser beams at the entrance. Seeing Bond arrive, Campbell "instinctively" crosses a ray and finds himself electrocuted, dead:

> - Blofeld: A foolhardy man. He was explicitly instructed breaking the beam activates the detention mechanism.

Bond is locked in his place and everyone leaves. Using a coin (like a screwdriver?), he manages to dislodge a shaving mirror or a metal plate from the wall and uses it to deflect a ray and thus escape from the cell. Bond then knocks out a lab worker, takes his clothes (then locks the man in the cell). Bond hears the girls preparing to leave Piz Gloria, grabs ski equipment and begins to flee the scene but is spotted by a searchlight.

The chase has been reworked, its resembles the movie here and not the treatment. Bond is chased by skiers, he is machine-gunned from chairlifts (there is no helicopter with Blofeld). One of his skis is hit so he only skis with one. Bond arrives and stumbles near a precipice, stops before falling and hides behind a tree. One of his pursuers doesn't see the precipice and falls into it. Bond greets a second pursuer with a ski, manages to knock him out and takes the man's skis.

007 then arrives in Murren, where Blofeld's men and Irma are looking for him. There Maibaum introduces the fight against Braun in a room containing around forty cow bells. The script specifies that this is an "actual location" (the location was found in Switzerland during a scouting trip[17]).

007 heads to the ball near the ice rink, the ticket seller tells him a disguise is mandatory so Bond buys a mask:

- Ticket seller: Now you are Lone Ranger, yes?
- Bond: Hi-Yo, Silver...

About the costumes, Maibaum notes: "(Please, no clown, pirates, devils, etc. Let's have Space People, hippies, surrealistic creatures, etc. More like an Art Students' ball than an old-fashioned masquerade)".

There's Tracy, they leave the ball kissing and they get into her Bugatti. They arrive in another town (Maibaum specifies that the filming location will in fact still be Murren) where Bond goes to a telephone booth before being shot, as in the film. There is the car chase with the horse race's parking lot.

The Lone Ranger, American TV series from the 50s with a western atmosphere. “Hi-Yo, Silver” is the phrase often said by the masked hero to his horse Silver, to encourage him to gallop.

> - Richard Maibaum[18] : In On Her Majesty's Secret Service for example, while on a recce in Switzerland we were driving through various villages when I saw a glass enclosed telephone booth outside a post office which figures in a very exciting sequence. Not only was it different from the kinds of enclosed booths that you see elsewhere and it gave you a bit of local color but if was a very important story point [...].

After losing their pursuers, there is a snowstorm. Bond and Tracy stop at an old barn like in the movie:

> [...]
> - Tracy: Did you miss me up there?
> - Bond: I'm a loner, Tracy.
> - Tracy: So am I. We're a lot alike.
> - Bond: Not really. I use peoples. Women. It's part of the job.
> - Tracy: I know all that. It doesn't matters
> - Bond: I'll never find another girl like you, Tracy. Beautiful, brave, exciting, in bed and out. I love you. I'd like to make it for always. But how can I ask anyone to marry a man who has to live the sort of life I do?
> - Tracy: Then I'll ask you. Marry me, James. For always.
> - Bond: Merry Christmas, Mrs. Bond...

The next morning Alois Grunther (and not Blofeld, unlike in the film) and his men enter the barn, but Bond and Tracy have already left on skis. They chase them and there is the snowplow on rails. Tracy is tired, Bond decides to trigger an avalanche with a grenade launcher "(New Swiss army issues)" which he took from the pursuer who died in the snowplow:

> - Bond: Ever see an avalanche?

"(Swiss Army says they can start an avalanche for us)" and they "travel at more than a hundred miles per hour [160 km/h]", writes Maibaum. He describes trees breaking apart in the snow, Bond and Tracy being thrown in different directions: "(If [special effects guy] Johnny Steers can depict this he's a genius!)".

Bond is left for dead while Tracy is taken to Piz Gloria. 007 phones M who is in New York.

> - Bond: [...] If we went back there in force...
> - M: That's been rejected. I don't like it but they feel buying him off's less risky. Officially that's our position, too. Any other possible course of action such as you suggest will be disavowed. Do you read me?
> - Bond: Yes, sir...
> - M: The old butterfly collector's crew in London might like to hear from you. Goodbye, Double O-Seven.

Bond arrives by cable car at Piz Gloria, a suitcase handcuffed to his hand. Bunt, her arm in a sling following the scene in the parking lot, welcomes him:

> - Bond: Good morning, fraulein Bunt. An accident? Not serious, I hope.
> - Bunt: Search him.

Bond joins a jubilant Blofeld that Maibaum compares to "somewhat reminiscent of Hitler at Compiègne" (the place where the 1940' armistice was signed):

> - Blofeld: Welcome once again to Piz Gloria, Mr. Bond!
> - Bond: Thank you, Count de Bleuchamp.
> [...] [Blofeld takes a cigarette and offers one to Bond].
> - Blofeld: So, Mr. Bond. Old enemies are now old friends.
> - Bond: Well put, Count de Bleuchamp. Thank you, but I prefer my own.

Blofeld allows Bond to smoke his own cigarettes. Strangely one could say, when we know that Blofeld was just fooled like this in the previous film!

Blofeld suggests bringing out the champagne, to which Bond responds "excellent idea" before asking permission to leave the premises with Tracy. Blofeld tells her that she perished in the avalanche and offers to drink in her memory. 007 throws his cigarette into the fireplace and raises his glass.

Suddenly red smoke rises from the chimney and three Draco's helicopters "(U.S. type used in North Vietnam)" painted in white launch an assault on Piz Gloria. Bond takes advantage of the confusion to run while Blofeld yells about that the documents he brought which were apparently forgeries.

Bond reaches the holding cell with the lasers, where Tracy is locked up. Before he can get her out, two guards fall on him. "Stunt men please dream up way for Bond to tackle them before they can fire". There is a fight where everyone tries to throw his opponent into the laser beams: Bond manages to send one of his opponents there who ends up electrocuted.

007 frees Tracy and they join Draco who says he hasn't had so much fun since he took the head of the Union Corse. Bond points a gun at the head of a Blofeld's operator and asks him for the list of the patients of Piz Gloria. The man leads him to a map that "(S. Cain will design, he says)"; Draco (not Bond) takes a photo of it.

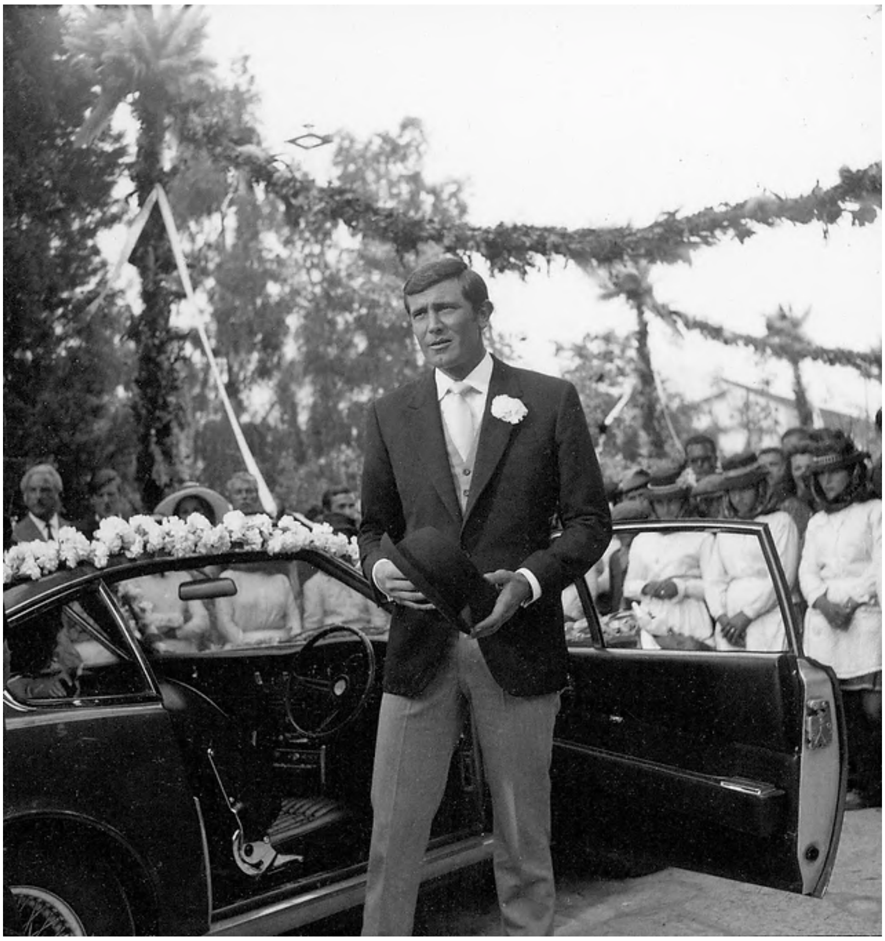
007 follows Blofeld's cat and comes across a rope ladder that descends into a cave; he sees what he takes for Blofeld wearing a hoodie. Bond pursues him and Maibaum specifies that the location of the scene is Lauterbrunnen caverns. At one point there is an explosion and Maibaum writes that the manager of said caverns is planning some blasting and that they could use videos of this for the film (while augmenting the effect with models and special effects).

Blofeld leaves the cavern and goes on a ski slope with the help of "snow-shoes (short skis)". Bond also puts on some and sets off in pursuit. Blofeld arrives at the bobsleigh track and leaves in one. Bond looks for another bobsled to follow him, but not finds one. Instead he takes what the script describes as a "snow-shovel about a yard [0.9 m^2] square". "The scoop itself has triangular sides, and two steel, three-foot [0.9 m] handles are attached to the back. [...] Holding shovel under scoop, with the handles (the back) in front of him, he runs onto [bobsleigh] run. [...] (NOTE: This can be done! Positively.) Actually he has improvised a sled".

During the descent they shoot each other respectively, then Bond sends a grenade in front of him towards Blofeld. The bobsleigh turns over, Bond jumps on Blofeld who has been thrown, they rolls together. When they stop, Bond discovers that it is Grunther and not Blofeld that he has been chasing (and killing) all this time.

That's basically the idea...



There's Bond and Tracy's wedding in the French village that we saw earlier in the film. They leave in an Aston Martin and are machine-gunned by Bunt and Blofeld in a Maserati: Tracy is dead. Maibaum reintroduces the policeman (here a biker) who arrives and to whom Bond tells that everything is alright and that they have all the time in the world... END.

(After analysis of a few other loose pages, some undated, others bearing the dates July 17 and August 6, 28, 29. Nothing interesting to note there).

Screen-tests

With a lead role (and supporting roles) to cast/find, Maibaum writes the screen test script for the actors applying for the job.

There was a screen test (number 2) dated July 1968, 3 pages, for Bond, Draco and Olympe. This is the scene of their first meeting and it is similar to the one of the previous scripts (without tossing of the knife in the calendar however).

Maibaum writes another 2-page screen test (undated) that is more interesting because the following scene was never written like this in previous scripts:

Bond enters Tracy's room, behind him, against a wall "where mirror had [been] in previous test", there is Che Che who jumps on him. 007 falls to his knees; Che Che comes back to attack and Bond flips him over him. The two men get up and exchange punches until Che Che pulls out a pistol with a silencer. Bond sends a room service cart toward him. The two man fall to the ground and fight over the gun, which Bond ends up having. He deliberately shoots his opponent in the shoulder.

> - Bond: There must be a doctor in the house. Next time you'll want a mortician.

Che Che leaves and Bond runs into Tracy:

> - Bond: Disappointed, Comtesse? Your receptionist's welcome somewhat disappointed me too.
> - Tracy: I didn't know the man was here. I was asleep.
> - Bond: Dreaming of l'amour, no doubt. [Grabs her arm] Now let's stop playing games.
> - Tracy: You're hurting me.
> - Bond: Really? That's the bit for tonight, isn't it? Who are you stooging for?
> - Tracy: What ore you talking about?
> - Bond: Is it Blofeld? Come on, Comtesse, open up.
> - Tracy: I know nothing about anyone called Blofeld.
> - Bond: Of course not. Forgive me for mentioning it.
> - Tracy: Get out!
> - Bond: Certainly not. We made a bargain. I'm holding you to it...
> He kisses her brutally, picks her up, goes into bedroom with her. [...]
> - Bond: On second thoughts, making love in cold blood's such a crashing bore. Goodnight, Comtesse. It won't be hard to forget each other.

Bond leaves, slamming the door.

George Lazenby will begin his first auditions around June 26, 1968[19] and the one of the fight against Yuri Borienko, which will prove decisive, will take place around August 26[20].

Lazenby remembers meeting Maibaum during the creating process of the film: "We never spoke about the writing because he knew I knew nothing about it. He used to study me"[21].

Late August 1968' revised script: Portugal and ice racing

Undated and 129 pages, this script contains revisions from August 20, 22, 23, 26, 28, 29 and 30, 1968. It is very similar to the one from July-August, so I will go over it a little quickly and also because we will come back to some of its elements in the section dedicated to the shooting script.

We notice that the pre-title scenes set in France have now been moved to Portugal as in the film.

> - Bond: This never happened before, Double O-Seven…

Hand-corrected in (at last):

> - Bond: This never happened to the other fellow…

> - Richard Maibaum[22] : It was the first time that we actually spoofed ourselves in the series. We decided this time that we would break the aesthetic distance for once. It was a different guy. We knew, and we knew the audience knew. So we decided: what the hell? Let's have a little fun. And the audience laughed and accepted it, and they were pleased that we didn't try some kind of phony B-picture thing to excuse the fact that we had a new James Bond.

When Bond later goes to empty his office after resigning, Maibaum introduces Bond's garrote watch of From Russia with Love among his belongings.

Bond no longer goes to the Splendide Hotel, but to the Palacio Hotel located in Estoril (the script suggests to use the rear entrance of the place as it is deemed "more photogenic").

Later, the occasion on which he sees Tracy again is now her father's birthday, which takes place near Draco's castle in the village of Estremoz. 007 and Draco arrive on horses at an enclosure where there is one of Draco's bulls.

After being joined by Tracy who forcing her father to reveal his information on Blofeld, Tracy leaves on horseback. Bond, also on horseback, gallops behind her to catch her up and grabs the bridle of Tracy's mount when he reaches her. They get off their horses and Bond asks her to come back.

There are then two romantic scenes: one where Bond and Tracy are walking in a vineyard (a curious goat is watching them) and another where Bond and Tracy are lying among the trees of "Cypress Grove".

Then there are the scenes in Geneva and at M's house. Arriving at the College of Arms, we notice that Hilary Bray's title is now "Sable Basilisk" (and technically, this is the first time that the two are the one and same character). He no longer has a mustache.

Further on, it is finally with her lipstick that Ruby indicates her room number to 007. The script describes Blofeld as "in his early fifties", bald, and small detail: who at one point tries to tugs his ears "like a man who used to have ear-lobes".

Maibaum writes that a hypnosis specialist should be consulted for advice in the hypnosis scenes in Ruby's room.

Bond is taken to the cell where Campbell (who died in front of him) was, this time the walls are made of glass (instead of metal) and the laser beams at the entrance are invisible.

> - Blofeld [Talking about Campbell]: A foolhardy man. He was expressly warned not to leave the detention chamber.

007 still escapes using a mirror to deflect the lasers. Speaking of escape, when later Bond is with Tracy, the script abandons the idea of the car stunt in the horse race parking lot. Maibaum rewrites with an ongoing car race on ice instead. However, the scene is less like a Derby demolition than in the film since it is shorter (there is only one collision).

CORGI MODELS
CORGI MODELS
AVON
AVON
BP

> - Peter Hunt[23] : On one of our recces in Switzerland we saw a group of stunt drivers doing a car race on ice. We thought it would be great to use that as a deviation in the car chase.

The avalanche that takes place later now comes from Grunther, and no longer from Bond. A little further on we find Bond, in M's office with him (M is now on the phone with the UN rather than being in New York).

After that we still have Bond arriving by cable car at Piz Gloria to deliver the documents (here Blofeld's project during his retirement is no longer the cultivation of orchids but to restore the family castle of "Augsberg"). There is the assault afterwards the red smoke coming from the chimney.

After freeing Tracy from the cell with the laser beams, they hear Grunther approaching. Bond jumps on him and they fight; Bond eventually manages to send him headfirst into a wall where he is knocked out. 007 then drags Grunther into the cell, he regains consciousness but Bond reactivates the lasers while Grunther is coming out. The latter end up electrocuted, dead.

With Tracy now safe with her father, Bond goes after Blofeld (and for once it's the real Blofeld since Grunther is already dead). Bond is still on a snow shovel while Blofeld is on a bobsled. Arriving on him, Bond jumps on the bobsleigh and they fight inside. Blofeld is ejected while Bond remains in the out-of-control bobsled which end up flying over an embankment...

The scene abruptly cuts to the village of Estremoz where the wedding of Bond and Tracy takes place, during which we learn in the dialogues that Blofeld managed to escape. We note that Q is present at the wedding this time.

Shortly after, Blofeld and Bunt kill Tracy on the road.

Shooting script

Let's now see a "shooting script" of 146 pages (the first 53 dated September 5, 1968; the last 93 being "revised 8.10.68"). There's no name on the page but I assume it was written by Richard Maibaum, with some additional dialogue from Simon Raven (there is the scene where Tracy quotes Elroy Flecker, an addition credited to Raven[24]). Raven was at one point hired for rewrites, under circumstances unknown to me.

Simon Arthur Noël Raven[25], born in London in 1927, was an author, playwright, essayist, and film and television screenwriter.

He was educated first at Cordwalles Preparatory School, then as a scholarship student at Charterhouse, from where he was expelled in 1945 for homosexual activities.

After completing his military service, he entered King's College, Cambridge in 1948. His academic career was punctuated by financial and disciplinary problems. In 1951, he married Susan Kilner who was expecting their child (the couple divorced in 1957).

Short of money, Raven left King's College and attempted to make a living as a writer, becoming a book reviewer for The Listener. He also wrote a novel which was found to be unpublishable at the time due to its defamatory nature.

Unable to earn a living this way, he joined the army, serving notably in West Germany and Kenya. He quickly prefer to resign rather than be court-martialed for "conduct unbecoming" due to his gambling debts.

Now without a professional perspective, he still has a writing style derived from his studies of classical literature that is also, in his words, "brief, neat and plain" from his military training. This allows him to earn money in journalism and meet the publisher Anthony Blond.

His first published novel was in 1959. Stating that he only wrote for people who shared his own standards, "well-educated, worldly, sceptical and snobbish", he never appealed to the mass market and had to be rescued by Blond, who paid him a regular salary on the condition that he stayed out of London and concentrated on his writings, that many of which Blond published.

The arrangement lasted over 30 years and made Raven a very prolific writer in a range of genres including fiction, essays, personal reminiscences, polemic, drama, television and magazine journalism.

Raven is remembered for his series of ten novels Alms for Oblivion and its sequels The Roses of Picardie and September Castle ; as well as The Feathers of Death, a novel dealing with homosexuality in the army. He also wrote scripts for television series The Pallisers (1974) and Edward & Mrs Simpson (1978).

After spending 34 years in Kent at the request of Blond, he finally returned to London for the end of his life which ended in 2001, at the age of 73.

Raven said of director Peter Hunt: "working with [him] was a joy. He told me what he wanted, not just in one syllable words, but in three syllable words. And when I brought back work, if it was good he said so, and if it wasn't he said so and I went back and rewrote it again"[26].

> - Simon Raven[27] : The first day I was [in Switzerland], I was asked to go to the set and I was invited to the table of the director, Peter Hunt: a great privilege. Then one of the starlets [...] sat down next to me and said, "You're the new screenwriter, aren't you?". And I said, "Well, I'm making the changes". With that she started scratching my inner thigh with her nails and said, "Will you write some nice lines for me?". I replied: "If you keep doing that, I'll write whatever lines in the world you want. But I don't think the director will allow you to say them". At this point Peter Hunt, who had been absent, reappeared. He didn't like what he saw: a starlet at his table. He thought I had invited her which, you see, would have been a serious breach of protocol.

Hunt had these words towards Raven: "He did some good dialogue for me. He made some of the dialogue much more intelligent than it really was. It wasn't quite so cardboardy. By that I don't mean to denigrate Richard Maibaum"[28].

As you can imagine from the mention "shooting script", this is very similar to the film which will be released in 1969, faithfully adapted from the novel of the same name written by Ian Fleming.

It all starts with a gunbarrel sequence where we are told that "Bond's face shadowy, not identifiable". The camera then shows us the 7 or 8 story building of "Universal Exports, Ltd". The script still has the passage where in the lobby of the building, a member of security checks the accreditation of the employees who have just entered. The camera focuses on an "elderly maintenance man, mottled face, scraggly moustache, carrying wrench and plunger", who walks toward the office.

> - Security man (cheerfully): Morning, Double O-Seven.

The maintenance man makes a grunt that shows he doesn't like what was said, and pass the office. We cut to scenes in M's office, with him asking Moneypenny if 007 has been located. The dialogues are slightly different and end with a sentence from Moneypenny which is not in the film:

> - Moneypenny: [Replies to our Cairo, Amsterdam, and Madrid enquiries all negative, sir...] But Station R, Reykjavik, seems to think Double O-Seven's in Iceland!

Its happens it is not the case since, as in the film, he is driving his "Aston Martin" (model not specified; the rest of the script still suggests that it would be the DB5) in Portugal. Tracy drives a Bugatti "(or other selected car)". She still doesn't overtake Bond (he just sees her car parked).

The reveal of the new Bond's face was going to be the moment he said "My name's Bond. James Bond" after saving Tracy from drowning (in the film the revealing happen a little earlier, when he gets out of the car and undresses).

The fight against Draco's two men, Moreau and Klett, is quite different from the film. Tracy narrowly misses running over Bond while fleeing in his Aston Martin and as he watches her drive away in a Bugatti:

> - Bond: This never happened before, Double O-Seven...

"Disgustedly he scales one gun, then the other, into the surf, turns, trudges unhappily back across beach toward the road".

After the credits, we find Bond directly in Moneypenny's office (in the film this scene happens much later, after Bond encounter Tracy at the casino and meets her father). M removes Bond from Operation Bedlam, the dialogue is very similar to the film, with a few differences. Example: 007's referring to M as "The Director" twice ("Take a memo to The Director, Moneypenny"). He ends up asking Moneypenny to present his resignation letter to M, with a few additional words compared to the film:

> - Bond: Kindly present it to The Monument in there. (Indicating M's door) With my compliments!

Then Bond goes to his office to empty it: the only souvenir is the From Russia With Love's watch. Moneypenny changed Bond's request for resignation into a request for leave and before leaving, in a scene absent from the film, Bond goes into the Q-lab where the "new model" of Aston Martin is located:

> - Q: Latest model. You can break it in during your holiday.
> [Bond boards].
> - Bond: No reclining-seat lever?
> - Q: No, Double O-Seven. We don't consider convenient love-making essential.
> - Bond: Your department always underestimate the personal requirements of my work, Q.
> - Q (prissily): We still haven't developed a substitute for that, Double O-Seven.
> [Bond smiles, starts the engine, and drives the Aston Martin out of the garage].

Bond takes his vacation in Portugal (these are scenes from earlier in the film). At the hotel reception, Bond says "Come estax" (Como está) instead of "Fine" in simple English. 007 saves Tracy again by paying off her gambling debt ("I hope it will be worth twenty thousand francs", she tells him, inviting him into her room. In the film it's a simple "I hope it'll be worth it, partner").

Bond fights Che Che in Tracy's room, the choreography of the fight is different from the film (Bond knocks him out with the champagne bottle) and goes to his own room (without serving himself a mouthful of caviar). Bond finds Tracy there, everything happens as in the film with the exception of a few lines of dialogue:

> Script:
> - Tracy: This is a business transaction.
> - Bond: Isn't Fleur de Rochaille a bit heady for that?
> - Tracy: You know your perfumes. What are you waiting for?
> - Bond: Personally I find making love in cold blood rather boring.
> - Tracy: Treat me like a woman you bought on the street.
> - Bond: I don't patronize them. Look. You don't owe me a thing.

> Movie:
> - Tracy: I'm here for a business transaction
> - Bond: Really?... Isn't Le Bleu a bit heady for that?
> - Tracy: So, you know your perfumes. What else do you know?
> - Bond: A little about women.
> - Tracy: Think about me... As a woman you've just bought.
> - Bond: Who needs to buy?... Look, you don't owe me a thing.

When he wakes up Tracy is no longer there, he speaks (in Portuguese) to room service, before joining the reception. Bond is kidnapped by Draco's men (Toussaint, Raphael and Che Che) and is taken to their boss in a Daimler (in this scene the humorous dialogues are mostly not present).

The meeting between Bond and Draco is similar to the film but there are some differences like 007 throwing the knife on the 15th of the calendar (so there is no line of dialogue about superstition). Or when Olympe leaves, Draco says: "Her end-game is irresistible" instead of "She also plays a very good game of chess" from the film.

Draco also gives fewer details about his wife, contenting himself with saying: "her mother was an English governess who left her world to share my life as a young bandit. But that is another story". When he talks about Tracy, the lines are also slightly different:

> - Draco: I gave her too much. It brought her nothing but a gigolo for a husband who killed himself in a Maserati with one of his mistresses. Since then there have been love affairs, escapades, anything to forget. I cut her off to bring her to her senses. Now she lives by selling her jewels and her life is worthless to her...

A little further on, we have a "merde" (shit, in french) and the reference to domestic violence is still present ("to beat" will be replaced by "to dominate" in the film):

> - Draco: Psychiatry! Merde! What she needs is a man, to beat her, to make love to her enough to make her love him! A man like you, Mr. Bond.

When Draco offers him the gold dowry, 007 says he is "not interested in getting married" (in the film he says he doesn't need the gold, but later adds a line which is not in the script, saying he likes being single).

After meeting Draco, we continue with Draco's birthday party which still takes place in Estremoz. There is an exchange between Bond and Draco before Tracy joins them:

> - Draco: My bulls are famous for their fighting qualities. We test the young ones here.

- Bond: I'm not an afficianado. The sight of blood doesn't amuse me.
- Draco: But the bull is not killed in this country. If it was I would not breed them.
- Bond: Remarkably compassionate... For a man in your profession.
- Draco: Or a man in yours... If all this ever belongs to you and Teresa: raise canaries.

When Tracy arrives, the dialogues are different:

- Tracy: You look in very good health...
- Draco: You too. A little thin, perhaps. But come, we have an honoured guest.

[He presents them].

- Draco: Mr. Bond; Teresa.
- Bond (bowing): Comtesse.
- Draco: Pego, Teresa! It always made you laugh when you were a little girl!
- Tracy: I'm not a little girl anymore, papa...

[She leaves].

- Bond: She didn't seem exactly overjoyed to see me...
- Draco: I know her. Give her time.

The dialogues between Olympe and Tracy are far from being as elaborate as those in the film, we are barely told:

- Olympe: Formidable, your Englishman.
- Tracy: "Mine", Olympe?

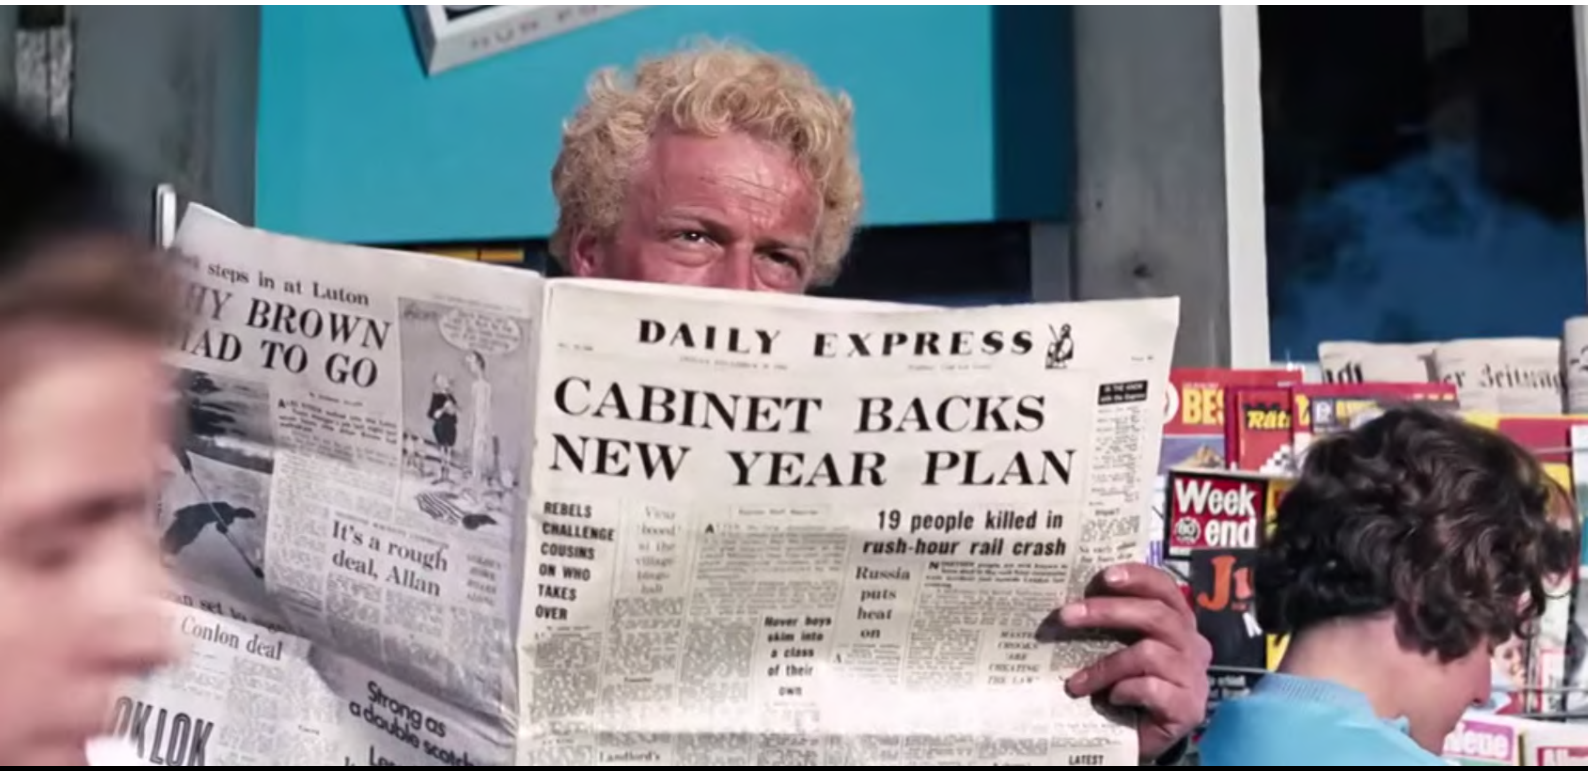
The rest of the discussion between Bond, Draco and Tracy is also different from the film (even if it remains similar). The biggest difference comes at the end of this scene since, although Bond leaves to join Tracy after obtaining his information, the scene where he catches up with her in front of her car is absent from the script. Another absence: the love montage scene which takes place under the music We Have All the Time in the World in the movie.

The absence of these two important scenes doesn't, however, prevent Bond and Tracy from exchanging glances in Draco's car as it drives through the streets of Geneva to go to the office of a certain "Gebruder Gumpold" (and not "Gumbold"). The scenes here are very similar to the film, the only notable difference being the absence of the magazine Playboy.

- Peter Hunt[29] : There is one gadget scripted by Maibaum, a marvelous writer, and that was the opening of the safe in Gumbold's office where Bond finds the documents and papers about Blofeld. And whilst wanted to make that part of the gadgetry part of the film, I didn't want it to interfere with the relationship of the film. I didn't want in fact for it to suddenly slip into what we've had before where the gadgets had become almost separate from the storyline, I wanted it to be a part of the storyline. [...] I wanted to make something out of that that was not going to interfere with Bond being a real person and that is why during the sequence when I was doing it [...] I had to make him human so he picks up a copy of Playboy. [...] So I had a piece of gadgetry with an emotional reaction.

007 reports his findings to M and goes to the College of Arms to meet Sir Hilary Bray who shows him a drawing of Thomas Bond's coat of arms. The artist who created the drawing, Phidian, takes his leave, leaving the two men alone. It turns out they're bugged and there are the usual scenes about that.

After this we enter the part of the script dated "8.10.68" and find Bond arriving at the Swiss train station. Campbell is present, holding a newspaper that reads "EIGHTEEN KILLED IN TRAIN CRASH. Points Failure in Northern Suburbs": a reference to the scene where the MI6 covers Phidian's death.



DAILY EXPRESS
CABINET BACKS NEW YEAR PLAN
19 people killed in rush-hour rail crash
BROWN HAD TO GO
It's a rough deal, Allan

Although the train "accident" scenes were never filmed, a vestige of this can be contemplated in the film where it is possible to read on Campbell's newspaper "19 people killed in rush-hour rail crash".

007 approaches Campbell, pretending to have trouble with his umbrella, and says to him:

> - Bond: Keep as close as you can end contact me in three days' time to collect the first installment.

Bond then meets Irma Bunt and Grunther: they go to a helipad in a sleigh (it is specified that its driver is called "Hans") and there is a dialogue there that I'm not sure to understand when he get in the sleigh:

> - Bond: Lucky Alphonse.
> - Irma (puzzled): Lucky Alphonse?
> - Bond: The man in the middle.

007 eventually arrive at Piz Gloria (according to the script there was to be an "impressive-looking communications mast" in the background which retract before the helicopter arrival before returning to its original position after landing).

Things play out like in the movie and the dialogues are similar. We note that Irma adds that "there will be another surprise for you" when he will joins her for dinner and Bond humming the song of The Prisoner (a TV series released a little before the film) in his room after noticing the security measures that prevent him from leaving.

Bond, wearing the kilt, meets Blofeld's angels during dinner. There is Ruby (English), Nancy (Italian), Sue Ann (American), Denise (French), Maureen (Irish), and five others (Chinese, Argentinian, Australian, Indian, Hungarian and, I quote, "a Negress from Jamaica"). 007 also drinks alcohol (while he only drank fruit juice in previous scripts).

When Irma asks Bond if he's okay after Ruby writes her room number in lipstick, the line is more ambiguous than the film: "A slight... er... cramp coming on" (will be replaced by "Just a slight stiffness coming on... In the shoulder" at the request of the censors of the BBFC[30]).

He then meets Blofeld, then sleeps with Ruby (during Blofeld's hypnotic speech, we can note that there is "but it must be our secret, yours and mine... Our secret, because nobody else loves the chickens enough to understand" after the "I will tell you what to do, I will tell you when, I will tell you how").

007 ends up getting captured (Blofeld's line about the Bleuchamp graves not being in Augsburg is not present in the script).

This script abandons the cell with laser beam to finally place Bond in the engine room of the cable car, as is the case in the film. Left alone, 007 said to himself out loud: "round and round went the ruddy great wheel...". Things unfold as in the film (except that on the cable Bond uses his belt instead of his trouser pockets, a belt with which he slides a few meters on the inclined cable as if it were a zip line).

Shortly afterwards Bond puts on skis (without the fight against the reception man being present) and escapes through an action scene until reaching Murren. There, pursued by the two men who accompany Irma (Braun and Felsen), there is a fight in a building filled with cow bells. He ends up meeting Tracy at the skating rink (who is wearing a short black skirt and a pink fur parka) and they head out to her Bugatti. Some dialogues will change a bit like:

Script:
- Bond: Thanks Tracy. You've got sharp eyes and a beautiful... Bugatti.

Film:
- Bond: Thanks Tracy. You've got sharp eyes and a beautiful... Earlobes.

Or some additions:

- Tracy: [Just one winter-sportsman. And daddy told me where to find him].
- Bond: Tracy... You mustn't follow me around.
- Tracy: Daddy's orders. He thinks you're marvelous.
- Bond: So do I, But I don't allow people... To pursue me when I'm on a job.
- Tracy: I'm not pursuing you. Just rescuing you.
- Bond: No need to be conceited.
- Tracy: Shall I stop so you can spank me?
- Bond: Step on the gas, Countess. Business before pleasure.

Tracy smiles and accelerates.

They end up escaping Blofeld's men and taking refuge in a barn. Here the dialogues are different and unlike the film and the novel, it is not Bond who is at the origin of the marriage proposal:

- Bond: Sorry about the accommodation, Contessa.
- Tracy: We should have rung ahead and booked.
- Bond: If only I'd got through to London...
- Tracy: You're lucky you'll have another chance.
- Bond: But when?
- Tracy: Calm down, James. You're a grown-up agent now.
- Bond: I know. And I thought I'd seen everything. But this..
- Tracy: How bad is it, James?
- Bond: I'm sorry. I can't talk about it. Don't be hurt.
- Tracy: I'm not hurt, James. The first thing I learnt in life was never to interfere. So I never have and I promise you I never will.
- Bond: Yet you came to Piz Gloria.
- Tracy: I wasn't interfering. I was waiting.
- Bond: Let's get some rest.
- Tracy: Did you miss me at all? Up there on the mountain?
- Bond: I had... A lot to occupy me. Body and mind.
- Tracy: I understand.
- Bond: Not quite, you don't. I was... Using people, Tracy. Using women, for my job. And I enjoyed it.
- Tracy: If you didn't, you wouldn't do it well.
- Bond: You don't mind?
- Tracy: You forget, James. I've used people too. And without even the excuse of a job. Do you mind?
- Bond: No. I can't afford to.

> - Tracy: So we understand each other at last. Very few people would. Marry me, James. That's what marriage is for... Not for interference but for understanding... For... Fellowship.
> - Bond (drawing her tenderly to him): For always?
> - Tracy: No, James. Nothing is for always. Just for fellowship.
> A silence. Then he draws her toward him and kisses her. Their lips part.
> - Bond: Where will we spend our honeymoon, Mrs. Bond...?
> She tries to reply, doesn't trust herself to speak, tears glistening in her eyes. She brushes them away with her hand. He takes it, kisses her fingers, then holds her close again.

In the next scene, Blofeld himself and his men arrive at the empty barn. They go after Bond and Tracy and there is the snow plow scene (mounted on the front of a train). A bad guy falls in (the script doesn't call for blood-colored snow to come out):

> - Bond (optional dialogue): Pity Blofeld couldn't catch the same train.

There's the avalanche caused by Blofeld's grenades (not a flare). Tracy is kidnapped and Bond returns to London. M orders him not to interfere. We can notice these differences in the dialogues:

> - M: This department cannot concern itself with the welfare of your mistresses.
> - Bond: It may have been James Bond she kissed; but it was Double O-Seven the agent whom she saved. This department owes her a debt.... Of honour.
> - M: This department cannot concern itself with honour... Operation Bedlam is dead. You understand?
> - Bond: Yes, sir. I know the voice of Judas when I hear it.

This script forgets the idea of Bond arriving by cable car to deliver the documents to his nemesis, and instead opts for something similar to the film (and the novel). So Bond and Draco approach Piz Gloria in helicopters. This script also adds dialogues/scenes between Tracy and Blofeld (and the scene where she fights Grunther) and introduces us to an additional line compared to the film:

> - Tracy: Not until you've finished the whole fascinating story. I must knew everything about you. Go on. What happened after you escaped from prison the first time?

During the assault we note that the scene where Bond slides on his stomach on the ice while shooting is absent, or the one where Bond he use a miniature camera to photograph the map (which is in fact a globe in the script): he takes notes instead.

Harry Saltzman und Albert R Broccoli zeigen
JAMES BOND 007
in Ian Flemings
Im Geheimdienst
Ihrer Majestät

> - Bond: (following Blofeld into the cave, shouting, ironically): Keep going, Blofeld. There's just thirty seconds before the balloon goes up.

Another line of dialogue from Draco to Toussaint, the man who set the explosives:

> - Draco: If that circuit fails, I shall kill you, here in this helicopter, with my own hands.

(And happen a camera shot showing a malfunction in the fuse box which should trigger explosives...).

Blofeld escapes in a bobsleigh, but Bond still chases him in a snow shovel. Another oddity, during the bobsleigh-shovel chase, a camera shot was supposed to show Blofeld's office at Piz Gloria (the building has not yet exploded at this point in the script) where a wind draught causes a book (very specifically The Decline of the West by Oswald Spengler) to fall from a library onto the fuse box of the explosives and triggers them.

After Blofeld ended up in a tree branch and Bond (gently) stopped the latter's bobsled, 007 came across a sleigh pulled by a horse (instead of a Saint Bernard dog):

> - Bond: Take me to the nearest station, please... And be careful on the bends.

The script continues with the marriage of Bond and Tracy. The dialogues are significantly different, here is the complete list:

> - M: Congratulations, and for Piz Gloria, all the girls are accounted for.
> - Bond: I'm sorry the big fish got away...
> - M: We'll land him next time...
> - Bond: Sir, I hope you'll honour us by standing godfather to our first...
>
> [Bond sees Moneypenny and Q].
>
> - Bond: You'll find your Double-O man some day, dear girl.
> - Moneypenny: Bless you, James...
>
> [Bond shakes Q's hand. Draco hands Bond an envelope saying:]
>
> - Draco: For the first and last time...
> - Bond (putting the envelope back in Draco's pocket): She's all I need, Marc Ange...
> - Tracy (at the car): Goodbye, papa.
>
> [She throws the bouquet, Moneypenny catches it, they leave].
>
> - Moneypenny (wistfully): I hope they 'll be very happy...
> - M: Double O-Seven a husband and father? Hmmm.
>
> He looks doubious.

The script ends like the film (although with much less dialogue), Bond pulls over because he finds the Aston Martin "looks like a coronation" with all the decorations. Blofeld driving a Maserati (like the novel, it will be a Mercedes in the film) passes by them while Irma Bunt shoots.

> - Bond (to the policeman): It's all right... She's having a rest... We'll be going on soon... There's no hurry... You see... We have all the time in the world...
>
> His head remains against Tracy's, his face smeared with her blood.

Revised shooting script

- Peter Hunt[31] : I had a big hand in the script, wrote quite a lot of it as we went, although Maibaum quite justifiably gets the credit because he did it all first. There's a lot of things that were added as we went.

Now let's talk about a revised script, with some pages bearing the dates October 17, 18, 26, 28; November 2, 8, 12; December 3, 1968; January 10, 21, 27, 29; February 5 and March 17, 1969. (The copy that Hunt could use during shooting was inscribed with "Peter Hunt, Richard Maibaum, Simon Raven" as the credits[32]).

This amends a certain number of differences from the previous script compared to the film, such as Tracy's Bugatti which was replaced by a Mercury Cougar, the deletion of the scene where Bond collects his new car, the dialogues during the first meeting with Draco, replacing Geneva with Bern.

We also notice that this script specifies at certain moments that this or that scene has already been shot, that it names M's butler is Hammond (a reference to the novels) and in the rewrites of the escape from the cable car engine room we can read that: "[the shots] obviously inter-cutting between hands, wheels, cable car and up to the brilliant editor: Benedict Rayner". (The personal relationship between Rayner and Peter Hunt will however deteriorate and Rayner will leave the production[33]. John Glen then took charge of the editing).

- Peter Hunt[34] : In the script it was the idea that she would propose to him, but I didn't like that idea. I thought that Bond should always be the stronger character and should be the doer.

However, certain points remain: such as the marriage proposal which still comes from Tracy, Bond using a snow shovel or even the passages with Phidian which are still present. Let's take this opportunity to review theses Phidian scenes in the most "ultimate" form that I have:

- Sir Hilary Bray (seeing Bond interested in his clipboard): Phidian presented me with that last week. Nice chap, only recently joined us. As a matter of fact he has been out of work so long he gave it to me as a token of his appreciation. He's a splendid artist, as you have seen. Quite a flair for this sort of thing.

Bond notices a microphone in the lion's eye, "yes, quite a flair!". He shows it to Bray.

- Bond: Where is he? If he passes on what he's heard, we're had it!

Sir Hilary comes to his senses and leads 007 out of his office; they quickly climb the stairs to the third floor, where Phidian's studio is located. Bond draws his gun and walks towards the door. He kicks it open, followed closely by Sir Hilary, and discovers that Phidian is not there. However, a window is open at the back of the room and 007 runs there to take a look. There he sees Phidian descending a series of building roofs. Bond aims his gun at him through the window but ultimately decides not to shoot: you'd have to be lucky to hit him. 007 moves his gun away, climbs onto the windowsill, and drops down out of camera view.

Meanwhile, Phidian has managed to reach ground level and now disappears behind a street corner. The camera shows us Bond descending one roof after another, camera angle on his back is requested as he descends the last roof: in the background we see Phidian turning a corner, towards St. Paul's Cathedral, and disappear. Bond chases him down the street with the cathedral in the background but ends up losing him in traffic.

What happens next has never been filmed. Bond looks around and steps out of camera. A camera shot shows us a four-story building (King Edward Building), the first floor is occupied by a post office. People come in and out. Phidian is inside: he is finishing writing a telegram and turns to the counter when he sees Bond in the building. He quickly tuck the telegram into his jacket pocket and turns towards the entrance furthest from Bond. In a camera shot showing Bond from behind, 007 spots Phidian running towards the entrance. Bond gives chase, collapsing with a girl carrying parcels.

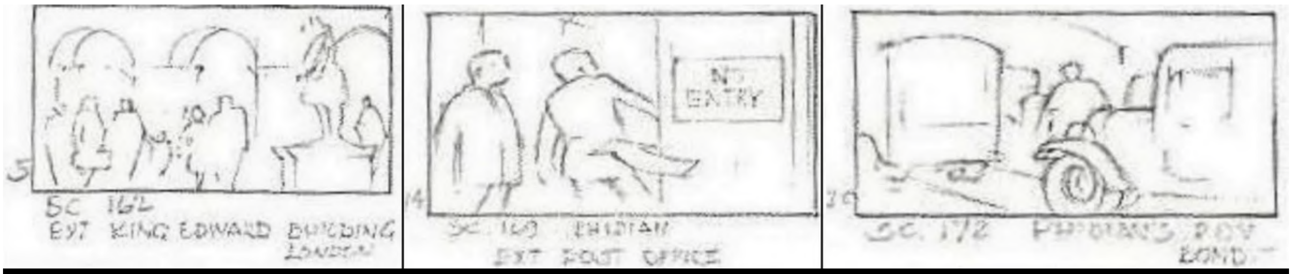
Phidian leaves the post office, turns right and looks behind him: Bond is still chasing him. Phidian enters a door with a sign reading "No Entry" and arrives at a drop-off area. He runs between trucks, some moving, others parked near a platform to load/unload the mail they are carrying. Phidian climbs onto the platform and turns to observe: Bond is coming towards him through the trucks.

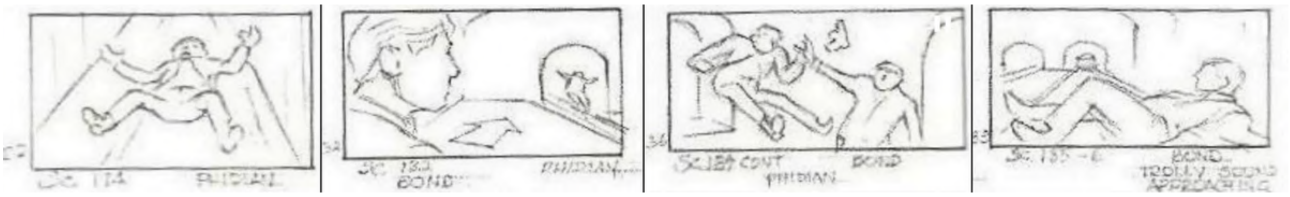


Excerpts from Syd Cain's storyboard.

Phidian decides to slide down a chute (2.5 meters), used to send bags of mail to a conveyor belt bellow. He gets off the belt, behind him Bond lands on it. Phidian slides down another 6 meter drop at 45°, with a circular section: 007 does the same. Below are workers working, loading bags of mail onto a trolley on rails (they are automated, no driver, and can reach 80 km/h according to the script). Phidian passes through the control room of other carts; Bond looks for him but no longer sees Phidian.

Bond sees the passage leading to the control room and goes there; he sees Phidian running down a platform and disappearing into a tunnel. 007 enters the tunnel and takes his weapon out of his shoulder holster as he approaches a switch. He hears footsteps towards the deviation and cautiously approaches where they are coming from. The sound of an approaching cart gradually drowns out the sounds of footsteps; Bond presses himself against the wall of the tunnel and continues to move towards the source of the footsteps. Suddenly Phidian jumps at him from a recess.

The two men fight as the sound of the cart approaching becomes louder. They fall next to the track, Bond is hit on the head and collapses against the tunnel wall. The sound of the trolley becomes very loud, it is now visible in the background, sparks on the tracks illuminating it a little. Phidian bends down to grab 007 and throw him onto the tracks, but Bond desperately kicks towards him: Phidian staggers backwards towards the electrified tracks. A blinding flash and a scream from Phidian are seen and heard. The next moment the trolley hits him, pushing his body off the tracks and throwing him against a wall of the tunnel.



Huddled against the wall, Bond gets up as the noise of the cart diminishes. He approaches Phidian's body and takes the telegram from his jacket; he had written (for Blofeld): "GEBRUDER GUMPOLD. ZURICH. CONSIGNATION NOT AS SPECIFIED. PHIDIAN".

The light is brighter: we are once again inside the post office and Bond, with a pen, crosses out the word "NOT". Handing the telegram to an employee:

- Bond: Straight cable, please.

He takes his wallet out of his pocket as the clerk counts the words.

Now 007 must ensure that Phidian's death doesn't appear too suspicious in Blofeld's eyes. After dark, at St. Pancras Station, Bond carries an over-night bag as he walks to a train with M. Station activity is normal.

- M: I'm convinced now De Bleuchamp's Blofeld. Or I'd never have gone along with this.
- Bond: We have no alternative, sir. He'd unquestionably smell a rat if Phidian simply disappeared or was found dead under mysterious circumstances.
- M: Where'd he commute from?
- Bond: St. Albans. This is his usual train home.

The camera stops as they stop next to a train car. In the background, a diesel locomotive with a single passenger car is reversing towards them. M and Bond watch a railway worker tie up the wagons. The conductor gets out and go on the platform. A passenger approaches and begins to get into the one just behind the locomotive but the conductor stops him:

- Conductor: Sorry sir, this coach is full.

The passenger climb onto the second car, other people board behind him. Voices over the loudspeakers repeat the trains that are about to depart, including the one for St. Albans.

- M: Pleasant journey.
- Bond: Thank you, sir.

Bond boards the carriage behind the locomotive, the conductor boards behind him. The train starts and passes through London and its suburbs. The camera films through the glass of a compartment door the carriage in which Bond has boarded: Phidian is very dead, swaying slightly with the movement of the train. The camera moves back slightly: he is seated between two other bodies. Then the camera moves back down the corridor, filming other compartments. Six people in each, all dead. The camera stops on the last compartment: Bond is seated between two dead people. He glances at his watch, picks up his bag, then gets up.

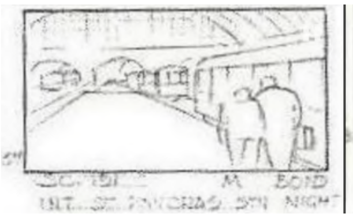
007 leaves his compartment and walks towards the rear door of the train car. He opens it and we see that the two passenger cars are not connected by the usual "accordian" passageway. Bond knocks on the door of the second carriage and someone opens it: it is Q, disguised as a railway worker.

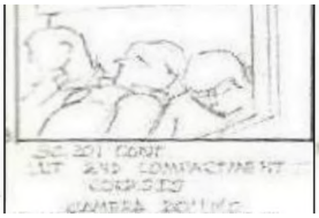
- Bond (handing him bag): You've surpassed yourself, Q.
- Q (opening bag, modestly): It's nothing really. The morgues are full of them.

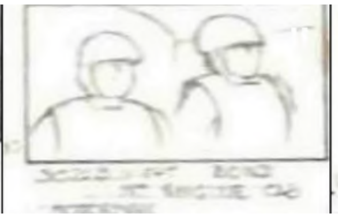
Bond returns to the first car while behind him, Q is busy unhooking the second car with a wrench taken from the bag. Bond crosses the corridor while the camera avoids showing the bodies again. This is followed by a rear view filmed by helicopter of the second wagon detaching itself from the rest of the train. 007 opens the door of the first carriage and gets into the locomotive, the motorman looks up as he joins him and they look at a clock.

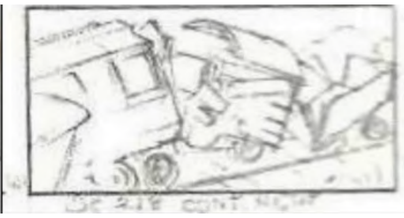
The train approaches a switch tower, a man inside looks at a clock and switch the tracks. Inside the locomotive, which is now heading towards a siding, Bond and the motorman don helmets and protective jackets. The train comes dangerously close to parked freight wagons and the motorman, then Bond, jumps from the cabin. They hit the ground with several rolls. The locomotive crashes into the freight cars on the siding.

- Bond (turning to the motorman): Ghastly wreck. At least they felt no pain...









They quickly move away from the scene.

When Peter Hunt joined the film as director, what he wanted was to tone down the excessive sides of Thunderball and You Only Live Twice to return to something more basic with less gadgets/technology, more realism and an emotional story.

Hunt wanted to stay close to the novel: "it didn't need making better, because it was all there. It is a marvelous adventure story with Bond surviving by his own physical skill and ingenuity"[35]. "During the entire shooting schedule I had a copy of the paperback of the book, where I had written various notes and things, and I was very insistent that we stay with the story of the book"[36].

It was done.

For Richard Maibaum: "My only problem with the film is that I don't think Telly Savalas was very good as Blofeld. He should have had an accent or something, but I couldn't convince Peter Hunt to get him to use one"[37]. "[This film is] the picture where Bond is more of a human being than in any of the others. And despite the fact that Lazenby was not ideal for the part, I thought it was a marvelous script"[38]. "If Sean had played [Bond], that picture would've been the greatest grosser of all time, because it was the best novel and the best script, and there are a lot of people that think it's the best of them all"[39].

Sources/references from chapter 6: On Her Majesty's Secret Service

1 "Licensed to Thrill" interview by Edward Gross in Starlog Yearbook magazine (issue #5, 1989).
2 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
3 "James Bond's Girls" essay by Richard Maibaum in Playboy magazine (November 1965 issue).
4 Maibaum's interview with Tony Wells (November 20, 1969); via "The Making of on Her Majesty's Secret Service" by Charles Helfenstein (2009).
5 A press interview of A Fine Madness; via "The Making of on Her Majesty's Secret Service" by Charles Helfenstein (2009).
6 "The Incredible World of 007" by Lee Pfeiffer and Philip Lisa (1992).
"Inside 'on Her Majesty's Secret Service" DVD bonus.
7 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).
8 Tom Caslisle words; via "The Making of on Her Majesty's Secret Service" by Charles Helfenstein (2009).
9 Los Angeles Times (27 December 1965); via "The Making of on Her Majesty's Secret Service" by Charles Helfenstein (2009).
10 "Sean Connery vs James Bond" documentary on Arte (2022).
11 "Ford GT40 MkIII, le succès n'est pas de famille…" article on News d'Anciennes website: https://newsdanciennes.com/ford-gt40-mkiii-le-succes-nest-pas-de-famille/
"Rarer Than Hen's Teeth, This 1967 Ford GT40 Mk III Is a Street-Legal Monster" article on Autoevolution website: https://www.autoevolution.com/news/rarer-than-hen-s-teeth-this-1967-ford-gt40-mk-iii-is-a-street-legal-monster-208961.html
"Guide: Ford GT40 Mk3" on Supercar Nostalgia website: https://supercarnostalgia.com/blog/ford-gt40-mk3
12 "The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).
13 "Praising Cain", interview with Cain by Terry Adlam in 007 Magazine (Issue #22, 1990).
14 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).
15 "For Your Eyes Only: Behind the scenes of the James Bond films" by David Giammarco (2002).
16 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
17 Maibaum's interview with Tony Wells (November 20, 1969); via "The Making of on Her Majesty's Secret Service" by Charles Helfenstein (2009).
18 Maibaum's interview with Tony Wells (November 20, 1969); via "The Making of on Her Majesty's Secret Service" by Charles Helfenstein (2009).
19 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
20 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
21 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
22 "The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).
23 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
24 "The Making of on Her Majesty's Secret Service" by Charles Helfenstein (2009).
25 For Simon Raven biography, see for the sources:
Simon Raven's obituary in The Telegraph: https://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/obituaries/1330265/Simon-Raven.html
Simon Raven's obituary by Michael Barber in The Guardian (2001): https://www.theguardian.com/news/2001/may/16/guardianobituaries.books
Simon Raven, Satiric Novelist, Dies at 73 article by Douglas Martin in The New York Times (2001): https://www.nytimes.com/2001/05/17/arts/simon-raven-satiric-novelist-dies-at-73.html
Simon Raven's biography on Valancourt Books website: https://www.valancourtbooks.com/simon-raven.html
Simon Raven's Wikipedia page.
26 "The Making of on Her Majesty's Secret Service" by Charles Helfenstein (2009).
27 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).
28 Movie Collector magazine (Volume 2, issue #2. March 14, 1995); via http://www.worldofbond.com/ohmss.html
29 "Peter Hunt director in conversation with Graham Rye - May 5th 1955" in 007 Magazine (Archive Files #2 On Her Majesty's Secret Service).
30 The BBFC account on Twitter (December 5th, 2019): https://x.com/BBFC/status/1202607811458453505
31 Movie Collector magazine (Volume 2, issue #2. March 14, 1995); via http://www.worldofbond.com/ohmss.html
32 "The Making of on Her Majesty's Secret Service" by Charles Helfenstein (2009).
33 "The Making of on Her Majesty's Secret Service" by Charles Helfenstein (2009).
34 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
35 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
36 Interview with Hunt in RetroVision Mag: http://www.retrovisionmag.com/jamesbond.htm
37 "Licensed to Thrill" interview by Edward Gross in Starlog Yearbook magazine (issue #5, 1989).
38 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).
39 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

Treatment/Script	Bond’s car(s)	Tracy’s car	This never happened…	Bond’s resignation request reason: he…	Draco’s HQ location	Name of the local contact in Switzerland	Count Balthazar de…	Who Bond meet at College of Arms?	Phidian’s chase evolution	Bond arrives in Switzerland at…	How Ruby indicate her room number?	Where Bond meet Blofeld in his first encounter with him?	How Tracy end up in the Piz Gloria?	How Bond escape from the room where he is detained?	What is included in the escapes scene from the Piz Gloria?	Where Bond meet Tracy in the village after escaping?	What is included in the chase now with Tracy alongside him?	On what is the snow-plow?	Who trigger the avalanche?	Marriage proposal	Draco’s attack force involved in the assault of Piz Gloria?	Climax of the Piz Gloria’s assault	Who die after the wedding?	Other notable things
The novel April 1, 1963	Bentley Continental	A white Lancia Flaminia Zagato Spyder	/	Doesn't want continue to look for Blofeld.	Semi-trailer truck	Shaun Campbell	de Bleuville	Griffon Or Sable Basilisk	/ (No chase here, not even a Phidian character).	An airport	Ruby give him her room number out loud (after she came in his own room).	They meet in person in a veranda.	/ (Tracy never set foot in the Piz Gloria).	/ (Bond is never detained. Expecting his cover to be blown away in a matter of minutes, Bond choose to flee from the Piz Gloria before being captured).	Bond on skis try to outrun Blofeld’s men using grenade-launcher from a cable car, and skiers. Avalanche scene. Snow-plow scene.	At a fancy dress ball.	Tracy drive them away in her car. Pursuing Blofeld’s men in car end up in a precipice after Bond altered a road sign.	On rail	Blofeld’s men.	At Zurich airport, while 007 is waiting a plane to London to report to M after escaping Piz Gloria.	A single helicopter.	Bond in a bobsleigh chase Blofeld who is also in a bobsleigh.	Tracy	The Alpine setting. Actress Ursula Andress is mentioned. The wedding and the tragic ending. It’s “we've got all the time in the world” (and not “we have all”).
Treatment June 14, 1964	Not specified	A white Lancia	/	Doesn't want continue to look for Blofeld.	Semi-trailer truck	Campbell	de Bleuville	Sable Basilisk	Bond and S. Basilisk chase Phidias on foot in London’s street to a post office. Then Bond chases him to an underground train/subway station where he die on the rails. (Phidian is actually named Phidias in this treatment).	An airport	Ruby whispers him her room number.	They meet in person in his office.	/ (Tracy never set foot in the Piz Gloria).	Bond grab an hidden grenade and threaten Blofeld and his men to blow the room (including himself) if they not drop their weapons.	Chase on skis against skiers. Blofeld’s men using grenade-launcher from a cable car. Snow-plow scene. Avalanche scene.	At a masked ball.	Tracy drive them away in her car. Pursuing Blofeld’s men in car end up in a precipice after Bond altered a road sign.	On road	Bond	In an hotel room at Zurich, after the chases scenes.	A first team in a single helicopter. A second team (including Bond) climbing the mountain.	Bond in a bobsleigh chases Blofeld who is also in a bobsleigh.	Tracy	Closer to the film than many of the scripts to come. Mary Goodnight appearance First encounter with Tracy on water-ski. Bond explains to the Piz Gloria’s girls “the difference between a gynecologist and a genealogist". Presence of a scientist named Gaston Lestrade. No scene with Q.
Script 1964	Not specified	A white Lancia	/	Doesn't want continue to look for Blofeld.	Semi-trailer truck	Cartwright	de Bleuville	Sable Basilisk	Bond and S. Basilisk chase Phidian on foot in London’s streets to a post office Then Bond chases him to an underground train/subway station where he die on the rails.	A train station	Ruby give him her room number out loud.	They meet through a stereoscopic 3D TV.	/ (Tracy never set foot in the Piz Gloria).	Bond is locked in cage in a room with laboratory animals. 007 teach a chimpanzee how to reach the cage opener switch with a makeshift pole in order to escape.	Bond escape in bobsleigh, pursed by Blofeld men in another bobsleigh. Then chase on skis against skiers and Blofeld’s men in a cable car. Snow-plow scene. Avalanche scene.	In the street of a village while she is with a driver in a sleigh pulled by a horse.	Tracy drive them away in her car. Pursuing Blofeld’s men in car end up in a precipice after Bond altered a road sign ans shoot the driver.	On road	Bond	In an hotel room at Zurich, after the chases scenes.	A first team in a single helicopter. A second team (including Bond) climbing the mountain.	Bond pursues an hooded Grunther (thinking it is Blofeld) and fight him in a hand-to-hand combat in a cable-car.	Tracy	First encounter with Tracy on water-ski. The Hotel Bellevue in Lucerne is in mind for the shooting location for Piz Gloria. Presence of a scientist (re)named Etienne Germinal. No scene with Q.
Thunderball* release
Treatment Early 1966	An Aston Martin (gadgetized, amphibious)	A Ferrari	/	? (I don’t have this treatment)	Semi-trailer truck	Cartwright	de Bleuville	? (I don’t have this treatment)	Bond chases Phidian on foot in London’s streets to a post office. The chase move to the underground postal railway network where 007 kill Phidian. To avoid Blofeld’s suspicion, Bond place Phidian body in a morgue, among the corps of the victims of a previous railway accident.	? (I don’t have this treatment)	? (I don’t have this treatment)	? (I don’t have this treatment)	Tracy is admitted as a patient (and later held against her will).	Bond is locked in cage in a room with laboratory animals. 007 teach a chimpanzee how to reach the cage opener switch with a makeshift pole in order to escape. Afterwards Bond is attacked by a jaguar in a hot-house.	? (I don’t have this treatment)	/ (Tracy is held at Piz Gloria)	/ (Tracy is held at Piz Gloria)	? (I don’t have this treatment)	? (I don’t have this treatment)	? (I don’t have this treatment)	? (I don’t have this treatment)	? (I don’t have this treatment)	Tracy Blofeld Bunt	Blofeld is Goldfinger’s twin brother. Blofeld goal is now to have amnesty for his previous crimes (rather than money). One scene where Bond dye is hair red in beauty salon before going to Piz Gloria, and another where he go remove his dying for the wedding (while Tracy get her hairs done). The wedding take place in Draco’s semi-trailer truck.
Script Early 1966	An Aston Martin (gadgetized, amphibious)	A white Ferrari	You're slipping, 007…	Doesn't want continue to look for Blofeld.	Semi-trailer truck (that can be converted into a bungalow)	R. W. Cartwright	de Bleuville	Sable Basilisk	Bond (alone) chases Phidian on foot in London’s streets to a post office. The chase move to the underground postal railway network where 007 kill Phidian. To avoid Blofeld’s suspicion, Bond place Phidian body in a morgue, among the corps of the victims of a previous railway accident.	A train station	Ruby give him her room number out loud.	They meet through a 3D TV. (Bond is unaware of that).	Tracy is admitted as a patient (and later held against her will).	Bond is locked in cage in a room with laboratory animals. 007 teach a chimpanzee how to reach the cage opener switch with a makeshift pole in order to escape. Afterwards Bond is attacked by a jaguar in a hot-house.	Chase on skis against skiers. Blofeld’s men using grenade-launcher from a ski-lift. 007 reach Cartwright’s car and go down a bobsleigh track in it, pursued by a bobsleigh and snowmobiles Bond take a snowmobile and is chased by other snowmobiles. Snow-plow scene. Avalanche scene.	/ (Tracy is held at Piz Gloria)	/ (Tracy is held at Piz Gloria)	On rail	Bond	/ (No marriage proposal scene)	A first team of parachutists coming out of a plane-towed glider. A second team (including Bond) climbing the mountain. (Due to disguises, silenced weapons and silent mean of arrival: the first part of the assault is stealthy). A third team in two helicopters.	Bond pursues an hooded Grunther (thinking it is Blofeld) and fight him in a close combat in a cable-car.	Tracy Blofeld Bunt	Boxer Primo Carnera suggested for playing Che Che. Blofeld is Goldfinger’s twin brother. Transworld Consortium rather than Universal Exports.
Script March 29, 1966	An Aston Martin (gadgetized, amphibious)	A white Ferrari	You're slipping, 007…	Doesn't want continue to look for Blofeld.	Semi-trailer truck (that can be converted into a bungalow)	R. W. Cartwright	de Bleuville	Sable Basilisk	Bond chases Phidian on foot in London’s streets to a post office. The chase move to the underground postal railway network where 007 kill Phidian. To avoid Blofeld’s suspicion, Bond place Phidian body in a morgue, among the corps of the victims of a previous railway accident.	A train station	She give him her room number out loud.	They meet through a 3D TV. (Bond is unaware of that).	She is admitted as a patient (and later held against her will).	Bond is locked in cage in a room with laboratory animals. 007 teach a chimpanzee how to reach the cage opener switch with a makeshift pole in order to escape. Afterwards Bond is attacked by a jaguar in a hot-house.	Chase on skis against skiers. Blofeld’s men using grenade-launcher from a ski-lift. 007 reach Cartwright’s car and go down a bobsleigh track in it, pursued by a bobsleigh and snowmobiles Bond take a snowmobile and is chased by other snowmobiles. Snow-plow scene. Avalanche scene.	/ (Tracy is held at Piz Gloria)	/ (Tracy is held at Piz Gloria)	On rail	Bond	/ (No marriage proposal scene)	A first team of parachutists coming out from a plane-towed glider. A second team (including Bond) climbing the mountain. (Due to disguises, silenced weapons and silent mean of arrival : the first part of the assault is stealthy). A third team in two helicopters.	Bond pursues an hooded Grunther (thinking it is Blofeld) and fight him in a close combat in a cable-car.	Tracy Blofeld Bunt	Apart from a few minor details, it is basically the same script as the previous one.
Script Revised March 29, 1966	An Aston Martin (gadgetized, amphibious)	A white Ferrari	You're slipping, 007…	Doesn't want continue to look for Blofeld.	Semi-trailer truck (that can be converted into a bungalow)	R. W. Cartwright	de Bleuville	Sable Basilisk	Bond chases Phidian on foot in London’s streets to a post office. The chase move to the underground postal railway network where 007 kill Phidian. To avoid Blofeld’s suspicion, Bond place Phidian body in a morgue, among the corps of the victims of a previous railway accident.	An airport	Ruby give him her room number out loud.	They meet through a 3D TV. (Bond is unaware of that).	Tracy is admitted as a patient (and later held against her will).	Bond is locked in cage in a room with laboratory animals. 007 teach a chimpanzee how to reach the cage opener switch with a makeshift pole in order to escape. Afterwards Bond is attacked by a jaguar in a hot-house.	Chase on skis against skiers. Blofeld’s men using grenade-launcher from a ski-lift. 007 reach Cartwright’s car and go down a bobsleigh track in it, pursued by a bobsleigh and snowmobiles Bond take a snowmobile and is chased by other snowmobiles.. Snow-plow scene. Avalanche scene.	/ (Tracy is held at Piz Gloria)	/ (Tracy is held at Piz Gloria)	On rail	Bond	/ (No marriage proposal scene)	A first team of parachutists coming out from a plane-towed glider. A second team (including Bond) climbing the mountain. (Due to disguises, silenced weapons and silent mean of arrival : the first part of the assault is stealthy). A third team in two helicopters.	Bond pursues an hooded Grunther (thinking it is Blofeld) and fight him in a close combat in a cable-car.	Tracy Blofeld Bunt	Apart from a few minor details, it is basically the same script as the previous two.
Treatment April 27, 1967	Aston Martin DB5 (gadgetized) Ford GT40 Mk III (gadgetized)	A white Ferrari	/	Doesn't want continue to look for Blofeld.	In the Maginot line	Cartwright	de Bleuchamp	Sable Basilisk	Bond chase Phidian on foot in London’s streets to a post office. The chase move to the underground postal railway network where 007 kill Phidian. To avoid Blofeld’s suspicion, Bond, M and an MI6’ agent crash a train containing Phidian body (and others founds in the morgue).	A train station	Ruby traces her room number on 007's leg with her finger.	They meet through a 3D TV. (Bond is unaware of that).	She is admitted as a patient (and later held against her will).	Bond is locked in cage in a room with laboratory animals. 007 teach a chimpanzee how to reach the cage opener switch with a makeshift pole in order to escape. Afterwards Bond must get pass various animals on his way.	Chase in (boots that can convert to) ski against skiers. Blofeld’s men firing at him from a cable-car. 007 reach Ford GT and go down a bobsleigh track in it, pursued by a bobsleigh, snowmobiles and car. 007 use machine-gun gadget from the Ford, part on a ice lake with an horse race nearby, Ford get out of service. Another ski chase. Snow-plow scene. Avalanche scene.	/ (Tracy is held at Piz Gloria)	/ (Tracy is held at Piz Gloria)	On rail	Bond	/ (No marriage proposal scene)	A first team of parachutists coming out from a plane-towed glider. A second team climbing the mountain. A third team on snowmobiles equipped with machine guns and rocket launchers.	Bond pursues an hooded Grunther (thinking it is Blofeld) and fight him in a close combat in a cable-car.	Tracy Blofeld Bunt	Bond has plastic surgery to explain the fact a new actor will play him.
Treatment Revised April 27, 1967	Aston Martin DB5 (gadgetized) Ford GT40 Mk III (gadgetized)	A white Ferrari	/	Doesn't want continue to look for Blofeld.	In the Maginot line.	Cartwright	de Bleuchamp	Sable Basilisk	Bond chase Phidian on foot in London’s streets to a post office. The chase move to the underground postal railway network where 007 kill Phidian. To avoid Blofeld’s suspicion, Bond, M and an MI6’ agent crash a train containing Phidian body (and others founds in the morgue).	A train station	Ruby traces her room number on 007's leg with her finger.	They meet through a 3D TV. (Bond is unaware of that).	Tracy is admitted as a patient (and later held against her will).	Bond is locked in cage in a room with laboratory animals. 007 teach a chimpanzee how to reach the cage opener switch with a makeshift pole in order to escape. Afterwards Bond must get pass various animals on his way.	Chase on (boots that can convert to) skis against skiers. Blofeld’s men firing at him from a cable-car. 007 reach Ford GT and go down a bobsleigh track in it, pursued by a bobsleigh, snowmobiles and car. 007 use machine-gun gadget from the Ford, part on a ice lake with an horse race nearby, Ford get out of service. Another skis chase. Snow-plow scene. Avalanche scene.	/ (Tracy is held at Piz Gloria)	/ (Tracy is held at Piz Gloria)	On rail	Bond	/ (No marriage proposal scene)	A first team of parachutists coming out from a plane-towed glider. A second team climbing the mountain. A third team on snowmobiles equipped with machine guns and rocket launchers.	Bond pursues an hooded Grunther (thinking it is Blofeld) and fight him in a close combat in a cable-car.	Tracy Blofeld Bunt	Apart from a few minor details, it is basically the same script as the previous one. The addition of a scene with hospital’s nurses when Bond leave the hospital where he received the plastic surgery.
You Only live Twice* release (or is 1967 first attempt was written before ?)
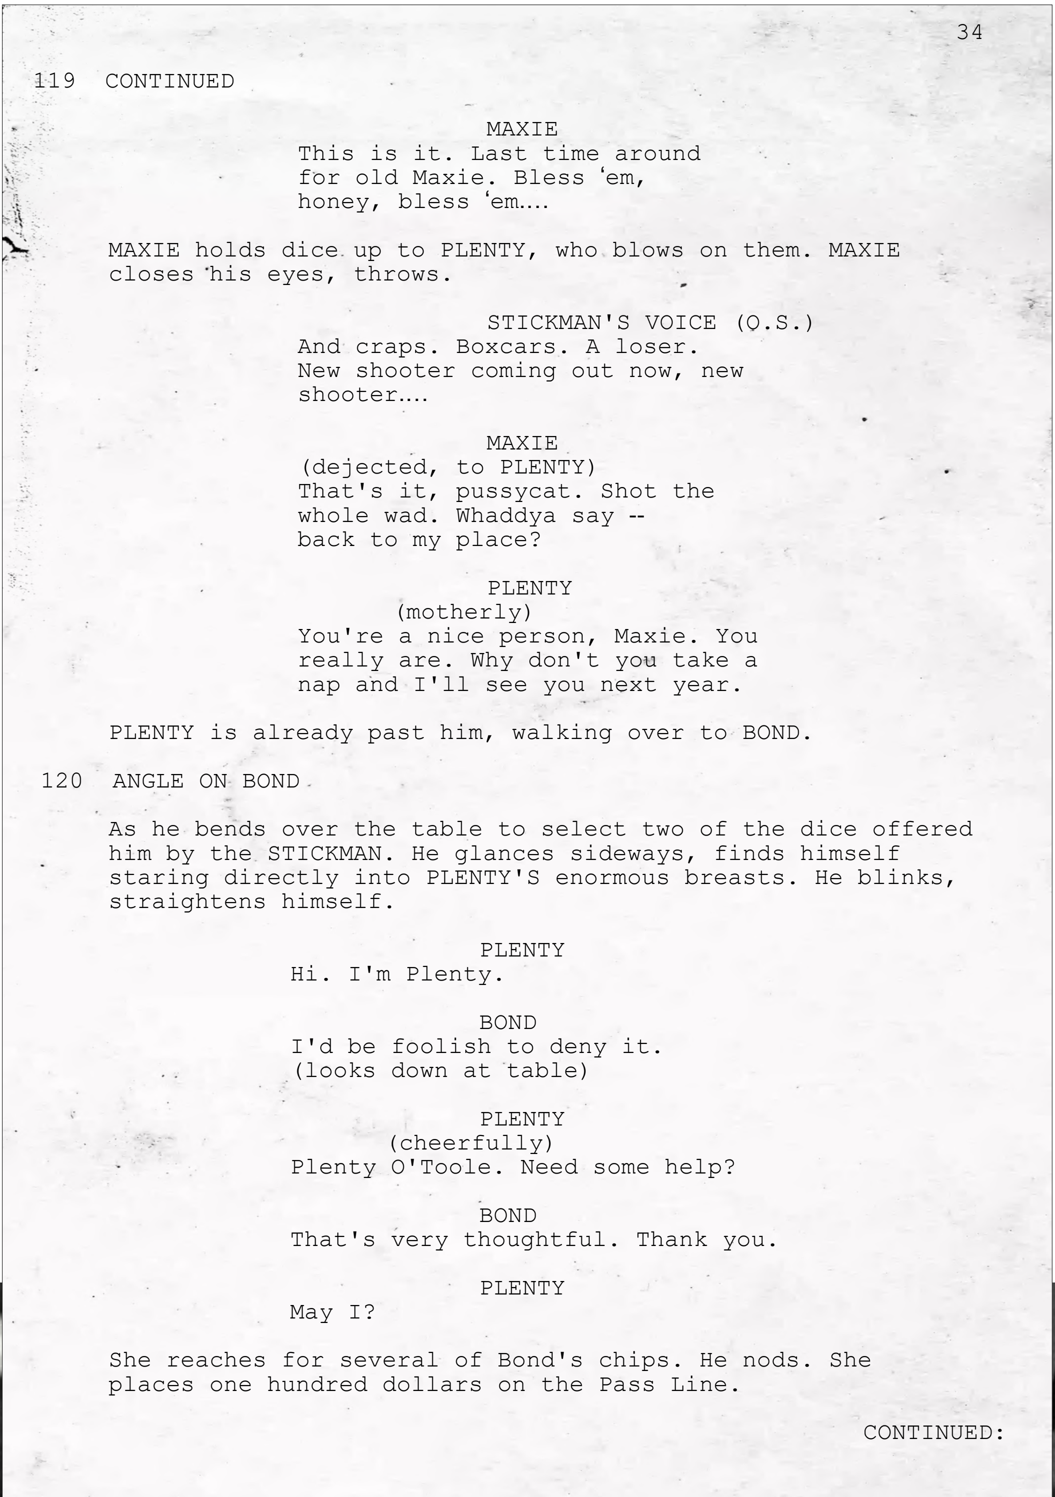
Script 1967 first attempt (incomplete)	Aston Martin DB5 (gadgetized) Ford GT40 Mk III (gadgetized)	A white Ferrari	This never would have happened to the old you, 007.	Doesn't want continue to look for Blofeld.	/ (incomplete script)	/ (incomplete script)	/ (incomplete script)	/ (incomplete script)	/ (incomplete script)	/ (incomplete script)	/ (incomplete script)	/ (incomplete script)	/ (incomplete script)	/ (incomplete script)	/ (incomplete script)	/ (incomplete script)	/ (incomplete script)	/ (incomplete script)	/ (incomplete script)	/ (incomplete script)	/ (incomplete script)	/ (incomplete script)	/ (incomplete script)	Bond has plastic surgery to explain the fact a new actor will play him. Sylvia Trench is apparently in this script.
Script 1967 second attempt	Aston Martin DB5 (gadgetized) Ford GT40 Mk III (gadgetized)	A white Ferrari	This never happened before, Double 07. Perhaps they ought to try again…	Want to continue to look for Blofeld.	In the Maginot line.	Cartwright	de Bleuchamp	Sable Basilisk	Phidan flees by the roof. Bond chases Phidian on foot in London’s streets to a post office. The chase move to the underground postal railway network where 007 kill Phidian. To avoid Blofeld’s suspicion, Bond, M, Q and an 001 crash (two) train containing Phidian body (and others founds in the morgue).	A train station	Ruby traces her room number on 007's leg with her finger.	Bond and Blofeld (who is in his laboratory) are separated by a glass.	Tracy is abducted after the avalanche scene.	Bond is locked in cage in a room with laboratory animals. 007 teach a chimpanzee how to reach the cage opener switch with a makeshift pole in order to escape. Afterwards Bond is attacked by a jaguar in a hot-house.	Chase on skis against men on skis and snowmobiles. 007 reach Ford GT, is pursued by snowmobile and Jeeps, send GT’s missiles, and go down a bobsleigh track in it, pursued by two bobsleigh. Part on a ice lake with an horse race nearby, Ford triumph of the last pursuing car.	At Cartwright’s hotel.	Bond crash his GT while fleeing a truck. Ski chase. Snow-plow scene. Avalanche scene.	On rail	Bond	/ (No marriage proposal scene)	Three teams of parachutists coming out of plane-towed gliders. Six teams of men climbing the mountain. Another team (including Bond and Draco) on about 46 snowmobiles equipped with machine guns and rocket launchers.	Bond pursues an hooded Grunther (thinking it is Blofeld) and fight him in a close combat in a cable-car.	Tracy Blofeld Bunt	Bond has plastic surgery to explain the fact a new actor will play him. Sylvia Trench had been replaced by a nurse called Alicia. Nobody try to kidnap Tracy on the beach. A race between Bond’s Ford GT and an italian roadster. A fencing match while Draco and Bond talking about marrying Tracy. No scene where Bond retrieving document at Gumpold’s office. Bond and Bunt doesn’t go to the Piz Gloria by helicopter, but by car and cable-cars. Bond and Bunt have a hand-to-hand fight scene at Piz Gloria.
Treatment 1968	Aston Martin DB5 Ford GT40 Mk III	A white Ferrari	Double-O-Seven, we'll have to do better than that…	Doesn't want continue to look for Blofeld.	In a shack in the equipment yard of a construction company in Munich.	Cartwright	de Bleuchamp de Bleuville	Hilary Bray (a.k.a Rouge Dragon)	Bond chases Phidian on foot on College of Arms’s roof, then in London’s streets to a post office. The chase move to the underground postal railway network where 007 kill Phidian. To avoid Blofeld’s suspicion, Bond, M, Q and another man crash (two) train containing Phidian body (and others founds in the morgue) inside.	A train station	Ruby taps on Bond’s leg six times to indicate him her room number.	Bond and Blofeld (who is in his laboratory) are separated by a glass.	Tracy is abducted after the avalanche scene.	Bond is locked in cage in a room with laboratory animals. 007 teach a chimpanzee how to reach the cage opener switch with a makeshift pole in order to escape.	Chase on skis against men on skis and snowmobiles. Blofeld equipped with a grenade launcher pursue Bond in an helicopter. Bond go down a bobsleigh track, either on a bobsleigh or on a snowmobile; chased by the helicopter and a bobsleigh.	At a fancy dress ball.	Tracy drive her Ferrari and loose an enemy car near a ice lake on which there is an horse race. Ferrari out of gas. Ski chase. Snow-plow scene. Avalanche scene.	On rail	Bond	Marriage proposal while they wearing skis after the Ferrari got out of gas.	Bond arrive alone in cable car to Piz Gloria, to deliver to Blofeld his amnesty/Count papers. After Bond signal: parachutists coming out from a plane-towed glider launch an assault.	Bond pursue an hooded Grunther (thinking it is Blofeld) in crevasses (maybe on snowmobiles). Grunther end up falling in a crevasses.	Tracy	M collects butterflies (and Bond even gives him one). Actor Max Von Sydow is hoped for Blofeld’s role, and Lola Falana for a Piz Gloria’s girl. Bond and Bunt have a hand-to-hand fight scene at Piz Gloria. Blofeld intent to grown orchids after his amnesty. (An earlier version included Bond and Tracy in the cottage where he was born; apparently Bond also have a dog).
Script July-august 1968	Aston Martin DB5 An Aston Martin "new model"	A Bugatti	This never happened to Sean Connery… "(I know, we'll have to find another line)"	Want to continue to look for Blofeld.	In a building in the equipment yard of a construction company in France.	Campbell	de Bleuchamp	Hilary Bray (a.k.a York Herald)	Bond chases Phidian on foot on College of Arms’s roof, then in London’s streets to a post office. The chase move to the underground postal railway network where 007 kill Phidian. To avoid Blofeld’s suspicion, Bond, M, Q and another man crash (two) train containing Phidian body (and others founds in the morgue).	A train station	Ruby traces her room number on 007's leg with her finger.	They meet in person in his office.	Tracy is abducted after the avalanche scene.	A cell with purple laser ray at the entrance that can trigger electrocution. Bond uses a mirror or a metal plate to deflect ray and escapes.	Chase on skis against men on skis and ones who shooting at him from chair-lift. A fight against in a room containing cow bells.	At a fancy dress ball.	They try to kill Bond at the phone booth. Tracy drive her Bugatti and loose an enemy car near a ice lake on which there is an horse race. Bond and Tracy spend the rest of the night in a barn. Ski chase. Snow-plow scene. Avalanche scene.	On rail	Bond	In the barn. It’s Tracy who makes the proposal.	Bond arrive alone in cable car to Piz Gloria, to deliver to Blofeld his amnesty/Count papers. After Bond signal: Draco launch an assault with three helicopters.	Bond chase Blofeld through cavern. Bond is riding a snow shovel to chases Blofeld who is on a bobsleigh.	Tracy	Bond is disguised as the Lone Ranger at the fancy dress ball.
Script Late August 1968	Aston Martin DB5 An Aston Martin "new model"	A Bugatti "(or other selected car)"	This never happened before, Double O-Seven… Hand-corrected in: This never happened to the other fellow…	Want to continue to look for Blofeld.	In a building in the equipment yard of a construction company.	Campbell	de Bleuchamp	Hilary Bray (a.k.a Sable Basilisk)	Bond chases Phidian on foot on College of Arms’s roof, then in London’s streets to a post office. The chase move to the underground postal railway network where 007 kill Phidian. To avoid Blofeld’s suspicion, Bond, M, Q and another man crash (two) train containing Phidian body (and others founds in the morgue).	A train station	Ruby use her lipstick to write it on 007's leg.	They meet in person in his office.	Tracy is abducted after the avalanche scene.	A cell with invisible laser ray at the entrance that can trigger electrocution. Bond uses a mirror or a metal plate to deflect ray and escapes.	Chase on skis against men on skis and ones who shooting at him from chair-lift. A fight against in a room containing cow bells.	A Christmas Eve Ball.	They try to kill Bond at the phone booth. Tracy drive her Bugatti, chase by an enemy car, on a car race on ice event. Bond and Tracy spend the rest of the night in a barn. Ski chase. Snow-plow scene. Avalanche scene.	On rail	Grunther	In the barn. It’s Tracy who makes the proposal.	Bond arrive alone in cable car to Piz Gloria, to deliver to Blofeld his amnesty/Count papers. After Bond signal: Draco launch an assault with three helicopters.	Bond chases Blofeld through cavern. Bond is riding a snow shovel to chases Blofeld who is on a bobsleigh.	Tracy	The scenes in France at the beginning of the story are now relocated in Portugal in this script. First time Hillary Bray and Sable Basilisk are the same character. Blofeld intent to restore family’s castle after his amnesty.
Script September 5, 1968 Shooting script (with October 8, revisions)	Aston Martin DB5 An Aston Martin "new model"	A Bugatti "(or other selected car)"	This never happened before, Double O-Seven…	Want to continue to look for Blofeld.	In a building in the equipment yard of a construction company.	Campbell	de Bleuchamp	Hilary Bray (a.k.a Sable Basilisk)	Bond chases Phidian on foot on College of Arms’s roof, then in London’s streets to a post office. The chase move to the underground postal railway network where 007 kill Phidian. To avoid Blofeld’s suspicion, Bond, M, Q and another man crash (two) train containing Phidian body (and others founds in the morgue).	A train station	Ruby use her lipstick to write it on 007's leg.	They meet in person in his office.	Tracy is abducted after the avalanche scene.	Bond is locked in the cable car engine room. He escape by climbing on the cable.	Chase on skis against men on skis and ones who shooting flare from chair-lift. A fight against in a room containing cow bells.	A Christmas Eve Ball.	They try to kill Bond at the phone booth. Tracy drive her Bugatti, chase by an enemy car, on a car race on ice event. Bond and Tracy spend the rest of the night in a barn. Ski chase. Snow-plow scene. Avalanche scene.	On rail	Blofeld	In the barn. It’s Tracy who makes the proposal.	An assault with three helicopters.	Bond chases Blofeld through cavern. Bond is riding a snow shovel to chases Blofeld who is on a bobsleigh.	Tracy	/
Script Revised shooting script (through March 17, 1969)	Aston Martin DB5 An Aston Martin "new model"	A Ford Mercury Cougar	This never happened before, Double O-Seven…	Want to continue to look for Blofeld.	In a building in the equipment yard of a construction company.	Campbell	de Bleuchamp	Hilary Bray (a.k.a Sable Basilisk)	Bond chases Phidian on foot on College of Arms’s roof, then in London’s streets to a post office. The chase move to the underground postal railway network where 007 kill Phidian. To avoid Blofeld’s suspicion, Bond, M, Q and another man crash (two) train containing Phidian body (and others founds in the morgue).	A train station	Ruby use her lipstick to write it on 007's leg.	They meet in person in his office.	Tracy is abducted after the avalanche scene.	Bond is locked in the cable car engine room. He escapes by climbing on the cable.	Chase on skis against men on skis and ones who shooting flare from chair-lift. A fight against in a room containing cow bells.	A Christmas Eve Ball.	They try to kill Bond at the phone booth. Tracy drive her Cougar, chase by an enemy car, on a car race on ice event. Bond and Tracy spend the rest of the night in a barn. Ski chase. Snow-plow scene. Avalanche scene.	On rail	Blofeld	In the barn. It’s Tracy who makes the proposal.	An assault with three helicopters.	Bond chases Blofeld through cavern. Bond is riding a snow shovel to chases Blofeld who is on a bobsleigh.	Tracy	The Gumpold’s scenes are now located in Bern (rather than Geneva).
The movie December 18, 1969	Aston Martin DBS	A red Ford Mercury Cougar XR-7	This never happened to the other fellow…	Want to continue to look for Blofeld.	In a building in the equipment yard of a construction company.	Campbell	de Bleuchamp	Hilary Bray (a.k.a Sable Basilisk)	Although Phidian is in the movie, there is no chase scene against him.	A train station	Ruby use her lipstick to write it on 007's leg.	They meet in person in his office.	Tracy is abducted after the avalanche scene.	Bond is locked in the cable car engine room. He escapes by climbing on the cable.	Chase on skis against men on skis. A fight against in a room containing cow bells.	A Christmas Eve Ball.	They try to kill Bond at the phone booth. Tracy drive her Mercury Cougar, chase by an enemy car, on a car race on ice event. Bond and Tracy spend the rest of the night in a barn. Ski chase (against Blofeld himself and some henchmen). Snow-plow scene. Avalanche scene.	On road.	Blofeld	In the barn. It’s Bond who makes the proposal.	An assault with three helicopters.	Bond chases Blofeld through cavern. Bond in a bobsleigh chases Blofeld who is also in a bobsleigh.	Tracy	The only Bond film with George Lazenby. Diana Rigg as Tracy. Phidian chase was partially filmed before being abandoned First Bond’s film on which John Glen worked. Somehow, no snowmobile ended up in the movie. That John Barry’s On Her Majesty's Secret Service theme.

ALBERT R. BROCCOLI and HARRY SALTZMAN present
Sean Connery
as James Bond 007
IAN FLEMING'S
"Diamonds Are Forever"
Forever
Forever
Forever
Forever
Forever
JILL ST. JOHN
CHARLES GRAY
United Artists

Release date (premiere) :
December 1971

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Screenplay by Richard Maibaum and Tom Mankiewicz"

Director :............................Guy Hamilton
Producers :.Albert R. Broccoli & Harry Saltzman
Director photography :...........Ted Moore
Set Designer :.............................Ken Adam
Composer :...............................John Barry
Editors :...........Bert Bates & John Holmes
Title sequence :...............Maurice Binder
Title song vocals :.............Shirley Bassey



34

119 CONTINUED

MAXIE
This is it. Last time around for old Maxie. Bless 'em, honey, bless 'em....

MAXIE holds dice up to PLENTY, who blows on them. MAXIE closes his eyes, throws.

STICKMAN'S VOICE (O.S.)
And craps. Boxcars. A loser.
New shooter coming out now, new shooter....

MAXIE
(dejected, to PLENTY)
That's it, pussycat. Shot the whole wad. Whaddya say -- back to my place?

PLENTY
(motherly)
You're a nice person, Maxie. You really are. Why don't you take a nap and I'll see you next year.

PLENTY is already past him, walking over to BOND.

120 ANGLE ON BOND

As he bends over the table to select two of the dice offered him by the STICKMAN. He glances sideways, finds himself staring directly into PLENTY'S enormous breasts. He blinks, straightens himself.

PLENTY
Hi. I'm Plenty.

BOND
I'd be foolish to deny it.
(looks down at table)

PLENTY
(cheerfully)
Plenty O'Toole. Need some help?

BOND
That's very thoughtful. Thank you.

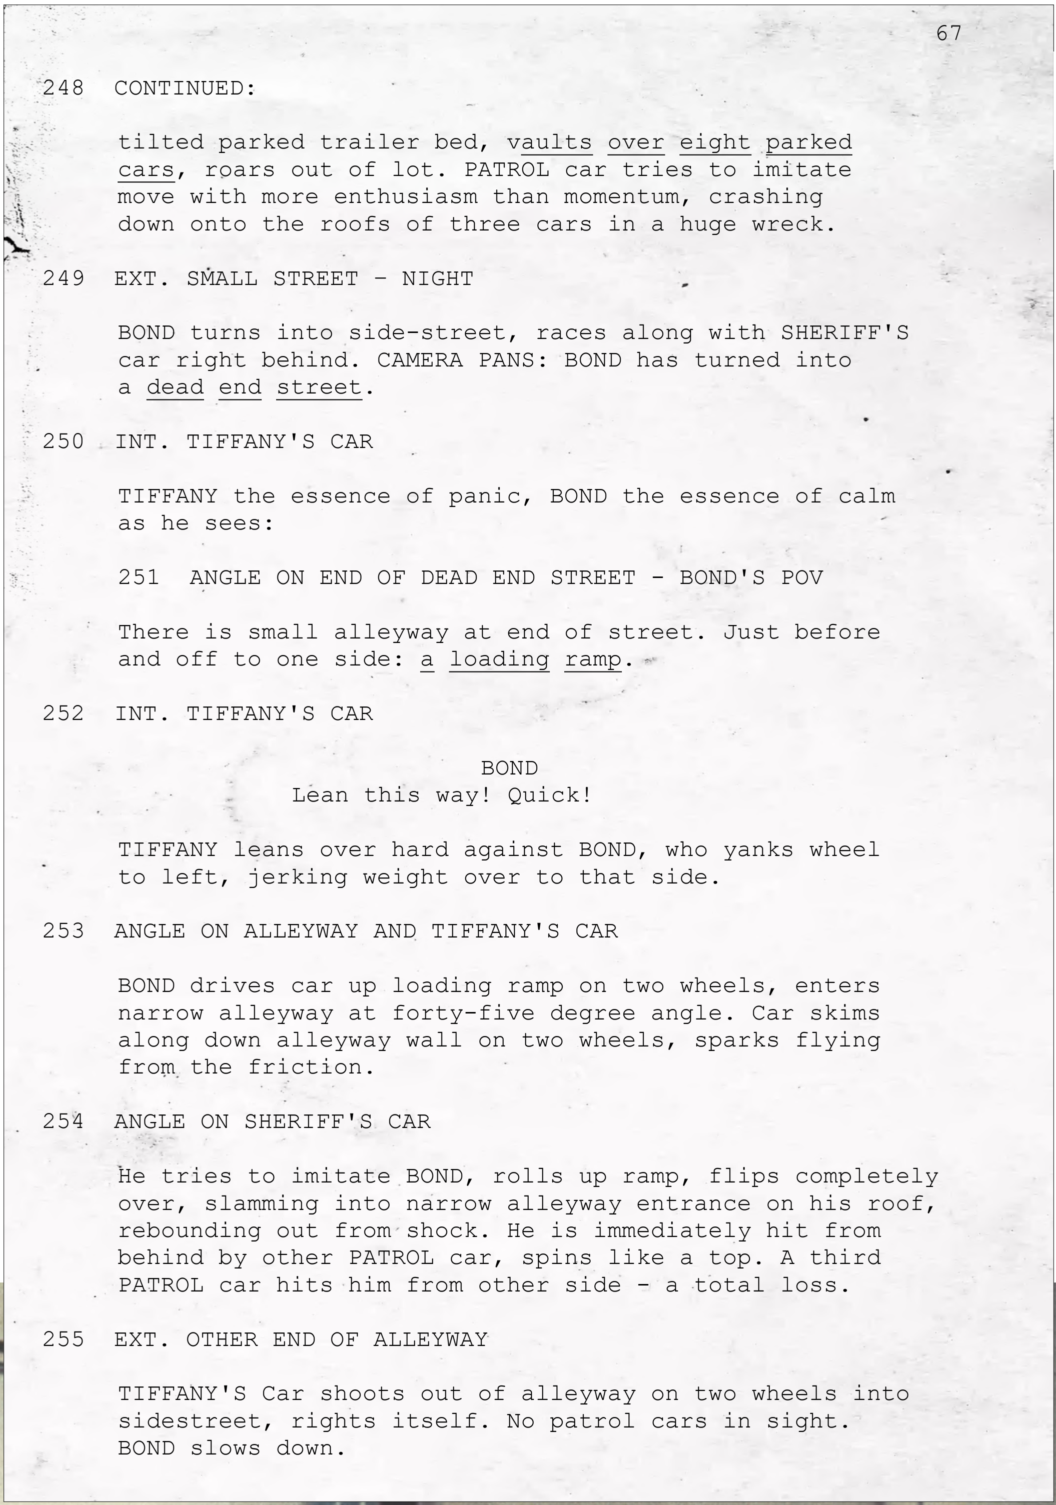
PLENTY
May I?

She reaches for several of Bond's chips. He nods. She places one hundred dollars on the Pass Line.

CONTINUED:

CHAPTER 7

DIAMONDS ARE FOREVER



67

248 CONTINUED:

tilted parked trailer bed, vaults over eight parked cars, roars out of lot. PATROL car tries to imitate move with more enthusiasm than momentum, crashing down onto the roofs of three cars in a huge wreck.

249 EXT. SMALL STREET - NIGHT

BOND turns into side-street, races along with SHERIFF'S car right behind. CAMERA PANS: BOND has turned into a dead end street.

250 INT. TIFFANY'S CAR

TIFFANY the essence of panic, BOND the essence of calm as he sees:

251 ANGLE ON END OF DEAD END STREET - BOND'S POV

There is small alleyway at end of street. Just before and off to one side: a loading ramp.

252 INT. TIFFANY'S CAR

BOND
Lean this way! Quick!

TIFFANY leans over hard against BOND, who yanks wheel to left, jerking weight over to that side.

253 ANGLE ON ALLEYWAY AND TIFFANY'S CAR

BOND drives car up loading ramp on two wheels, enters narrow alleyway at forty-five degree angle. Car skims along down alleyway wall on two wheels, sparks flying from the friction.

254 ANGLE ON SHERIFF'S CAR

He tries to imitate BOND, rolls up ramp, flips completely over, slamming into narrow alleyway entrance on his roof, rebounding out from shock. He is immediately hit from behind by other PATROL car, spins like a top. A third PATROL car hits him from other side - a total loss.

255 EXT. OTHER END OF ALLEYWAY

TIFFANY'S Car shoots out of alleyway on two wheels into sidestreet, rights itself. No patrol cars in sight. BOND slows down.

Cast:

James Bond :.........................Sean Connery
Ernst Stavro Blofeld :...........Charles Gray
Tiffany Case :............................Jill St. John
M. Wint:................................Bruce Glover
M. Kidd :.................................Putter Smith
Felix Leiter :....................Norman Burton
Plenty O'Toole :........................Lana Wood
Willard Whyte :....................Jimmy Dean
Saxby:.....................................Bruce Cabot
Shady Tree :.......................Leonard Barr
M :...Bernard Lee
Moneypenny :......................Lois Maxwell
Q :............................... Desmond Llewelyn

Main filming locations: Nevada, California, Amsterdam and the UK.

Diamonds are maybe forever, but they aren't really for me. Yes Sean Connery is back as Bond, but the humor and lightness tend to plague the film. The kitschy Las Vegas doesn't help, just as a unappealing Bond' Girl and some bad special effects that we shouldn't ever see in a Bond film. Beside the story undoubtedly lacking depth and is a missed opportunity to offer a true sequel to On Her Majesty's Secret Service with a revenge quest between Bond and Blofeld. It was something that was however to be found in Maibaum's first attempts, quite different from what we'll see on screen. This film also marks Tom Mankiewicz's arrival in the saga, although Maibaum had already set most of the story in place before his arrival.

PED WALK
PED WALK

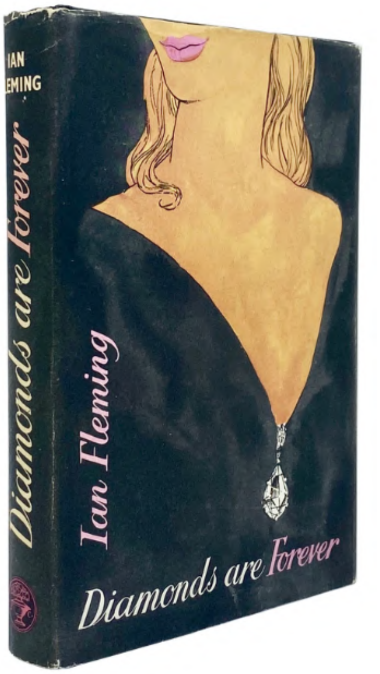
Table of contents

Diamonds Are Forever

The plot of the novel isn't eternal....424
The diamonds are synthetics....425
India, rival faction and Draco....428
Dog, motorbike and Land Rover....433
New beginning of a treatment: detour through Barcelona....434
"Second treatment": Snakes, elephants and Chinese agents....436
The Cubby's dream that shaped the story....440
Goldfinger brother?....441
February 27, 1970 treatment: Adamas Sten, oil tanker and satellite....442
"Third treatment": Gabor sisters, transgender and mud baths....446
Focusing the story more on Hughes....451
June 30, 1970 treatment: when Maibaum lays the foundations of the film....452
Darlene O'Toole, G-strings and Hoover dam....456
And a script....458
Tom Mankiewicz makes his entrance to the saga....469
Maibaum's opinion on Mankiewicz's early rewrites....472
Revised first draft....473
New reaction from Maibaum....488
Shooting scripts....488
Other writers shadows and recognition....490

The plot of the novel isn't eternal

Diamonds are forever is the fourth novel written by Ian Fleming and was published on March 26, 1956.



James Bond must investigate, in collaboration with the Special Branch of Scotland Yard, a mysterious illegal diamond trade. These stones leaves British mines in Africa and are smuggled to United States, which represents a loss of millions of pounds for England.

Taking the identity of Peter Franks, a diamond smuggler, Bond meets an American blonde named Tiffany Case in London in order to follow/infiltrate the network. Case works for the organization that manages this traffic: The Spangled Mob, led by the two brothers Jack and Seraffimo Spang. Case receives her orders from a certain ABC and she gives 007 instructions to smuggle diamonds into the United States.

While Bond flies to New York with the diamonds (hidden in golf balls) and Tiffany, the Service learns that the European vice-president of the House of Diamonds (a jeweler house which is suspected of buying smuggled diamonds), Rufus B. Saye, is none other than Jack Spang.

Bond gives the diamonds to a member of the Spang's gang, Shady Tree, who instead of paying him directly in cash, directs him to a horse to bet on in a rigged horse race in Saratoga.

There Bond comes across his friend Felix Leiter, who following his mutilation by a shark (in the novel Live and Let Die) no longer works as a CIA agent, but as a private detective for the Pinkerton agency. It turns out that Leiter is investigating the rigged races and they decide to join forces. Felix puts pressure on the jockey who will ride the horse Bond must bet on, so that he will not win the race.

Once this is done, Bond goes to the Acme mud baths to meet the jockey and pay him for his service. However, two hooded thugs in the pay of the Spang, Wint and Kidd (who Leiter thinks are homosexual), kill the jockey for having lost the race.

Bond phones Shady Tree to tell him that he hasn't received his payment because the horse didn't win the race. Tree tell him to go to the casino Tiara at Las Vegas. The Tiara happens to be own by Seraffimo Spang; Tiffany Case as dealer gives him his payment during a rigged game of blackjack.

Bond disobeys Tree's orders by continuing to play, hoping to provoke a reaction from Spang.

Seraffimo, who has received a message that the real Peter Franks has been imprisoned, has Bond captured. 007 is then brought to Spectreville, an old western ghost town owned by Seraffimo Spang.

Bond is beaten up by Wint and Kidd but manages to escape on a handcar with the help of Tiffany who has fallen in love with him. Seraffimo Spang pursues them with an old Western train on the Spectreville railway, but 007 manages to derail his opponent's vehicle at a switch.

With Seraffimo dead, Bond and Tiffany return to London via the Queen Elizabeth liner but on board, Wint and Kidd kidnap Tiffany. Bond manages to free her and kill them.

Bond then travels to Africa to stop Jack Spang, aka ABC, who is covering up the trail of his traffic by killing a smuggler dentist. Spang flees by helicopter but 007 shoots him down with a Bofors anti-aircraft gun.

- Chapter 25: So this great red full stop [where the helicopter crashed] marked the end of the Spangled Mob and the end of their fabulous traffic in diamonds. But not the end of the diamonds that were baking at the heart of the fire. They would survive and move off again across the world, discoloured, perhaps, but indestructible, as permanent as death. [...] They had been wrong. Death is forever. But so are diamonds.

La pistola di Bond esplose due colpi. Per un attimo lui e la ragazza videro un viso bianco che si alzava verso il cielo. (Dis. di Tabet)

The diamonds are synthetics

Peter Hunt has mentioned in various interviews that it was at one point considered to end On Her Majesty's Secret Service with Bond and Tracy wedding and keep the death of the bride on the road for the pre-title sequence of the next film[1]. However no evidence support his comments, neither in On Her Majesty's Secret Service or Diamonds are forever scripts/ treatments.

Indeed: On Her Majesty's Secret Service had not yet hit cinemas when Richard Maibaum signed his contract on September 8, 1969 for the following film: Diamonds are forever. At this stage, shoot this film in Southeast Asia is being considered, although Bond never sets foot there in the novel. In fact, at the beginning of the writing process, it was not envisaged to make a faithful adaptation of the novel but rather a sequel to the previous film; with a good part of the plot centered on Bond seeking revenge on Blofeld (a character to then include to the story) for Tracy's death.

Several unnumbered and undated pages which seem linked together (with some of revisions in the bunch) give us some indications of how the plot was first imagined when putting together the puzzle:

The gun-barrel opens onto Bond's bedroom, specifically a half-empty bottle of whiskey that sits next to a photo of his and Tracy's wedding. In bed Bond visibly having trouble for sleeping. A girl arrives and joins him in bed: she puts Tracy's photo in a drawer and tells him that she is dead; he should think about behaving like a living person. Bond says he feels responsible for Tracy's death and that all he cares about now is avenging her. "James, let me help you to be yourself again", when suddenly the phone rings.

Bond picks it up: it's Marc-Ange Draco. We don't hear what they say to each other on phone, but it results in Bond quickly getting out of bed and getting dressed; he also puts Tracy's photo back on the nightstand.

Bond goes to the post office on Prince Edward Street. There he spots a man collecting a package and who runs away when he sees him. Bond chases him into the post office's underground network, in a scene reminiscent of the one that was abandoned for On Her Majesty's Secret Service (Maibaum actually writes this in black-on-white to describe the scene). The man dies on the electric rails. Bond discovers that it was not a man he's was chasing but in reality a woman: Irma Bunt! He finds diamonds in the package she collected.

> MAIN TITLES superimposed over impressionistic montage of glittering, sparkling diamonds set in rings, chains, bracelets, pendants, chokers, necklaces, brooches, earrings, tiaras, coronets, etc, on the fingers, wrists, arms, ankles, throats, bosoms, heads of lovely women from all over the world...

At M's club, Bond and M go to meet a friend of the latter's, a diamond expert called Sir Edwin Orrenberger. These are valuable diamonds, tells them Orrenberger, but he is unable to tells their origins. M asks Bond if he is ready to return to work now that Bunt is dead. Not until Blofeld pays too for Tracy's death; M warns him against a vendetta.

"MI15" will investigate the recovered diamonds as there appears to have been an increase in smuggling recently. M instead wants Bond to infiltrate a hippie movement suspected of espionage [and narcotics]; Bond declines, saying that he supports the youth and that perhaps the new generation will do better than his or M's!

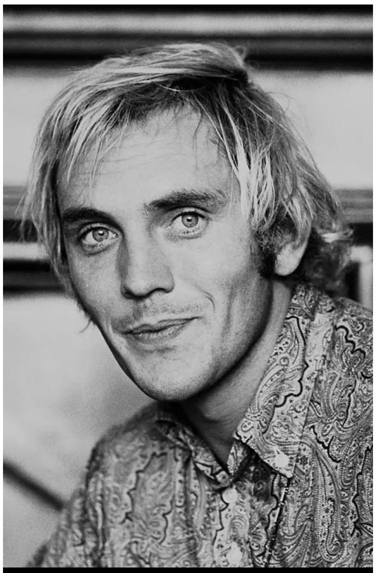
Bond returns to watch or open Bunt's post office box and finds a letter from "T. Case" inside. He discovers that she is a beautiful (but cold) American woman named Tiffany, who lives at the Dorchester. He goes to her room without being seen by her and leaves Bunt's diamonds there. Discreetly, he observes her booking a flight to Paris when she discovers the precious stones.

Departing from the airport, Bond approach Tiffany and sympathizes with her by using his charms.

A slightly different version of this treatment tells us that on the plane that takes them to Paris, Wint & Kidd are also on board. There's an interesting description: "Wint looks like Jonathan Winters, Kidd like a young blond Terence Stamp". It turns out that Wint is afraid of flying and gets airsick during the flight; Kidd reassures him and Maibaum writes "they are queers, but dangerous ones".

Arriving at Paris airport, Tiffany and Bond have to go through customs. Further at his hotel, Bond discovers that she had stashed the diamonds in the pockets of his own coat and contact Q in order to obtain from him a copy of the diamonds (but the audience mishears their telephone conversation, so they don't know that yet). Tiffany joins Bond at his hotel and wants the diamonds back; she undresses, telling him that she intends to reward him for the service he involuntarily rendered her at the airport. He makes love to her then gives her the stones.

Jonathan Winters



Terence Stamp

Tiffany go take them to a certain Rufus B. Saye at a place named House of Diamonds. Saye tells her that the diamonds she brought are fakes ones and Wint and Kidd start to manhandle her, when suddenly Bond comes in with the real diamonds and says he wants money. "His real purpose is to find out where the diamonds came from".

Another version has Tiffany being manhandled by Saye after bringing the fake diamonds. Bond enters and tells Saye he have the real diamonds and that he wants information: he beats up Saye to make him talk. Saye says he send the money to a bank in Bangkok. They leave and lose Wint and Kidd who were following them.

Bond and Tiffany decide to work "as [a] team" and go to Bangkok. There Bond meets a certain "Madame Tring" who tells him about Blofeld. Bond claims he wants to take control of SPECTRE and run the organization with her. Tring makes arrangements for them to meet other SPECTRE's members.

One page explains where the story was supposed to go: the idea is that Blofeld, after his failure in On Her Majesty's Secret Service, left the old continent to keep a low profile in the Far East. Well, not really given that he and his organization has theirs hands on diverse and varied activities such as drug trafficking, extortion, prostitution and gambling in various countries such as India, Thailand, Malaysia, etc... But all this is "more or less routine" for Blofeld and so to overcome his boredom he came up with a new plan: create a new secret factory to manufacture synthetic diamonds that could not be distinguished from real ones. The goal is to demand a ransom from the global diamond syndicates: if they do not pay him, he will flood the market with his fake stones, thus drastically dropping the value of real diamonds held by these syndicates.

Another note explains that a part of the story would be about the control of this synthetic diamond factory. There would be an internal struggle within SPECTRE for this, between Blofeld on one side and on the other side: Bond, who would be the head of another faction of SPECTRE, "pretending he want to take over SPECTRE". (Actually Bond doesn't care about any of that, all he wants is to kill Blofeld). Maibaum makes a comparison probably referring to Prohibition: "It's like an old-time gang battle over a brewery".

India, rival faction and Draco

From this starting point, Maibaum completes a 15-page treatment at an unknown date that begins at Bond's house while it is raining outside. Bond is not in tip-top shape and is unshaven, and there's still the photo (of Tracy, although strangely this treatment doesn't specify what's on it) on the bedside table. The very sexy girl who joins him and tries to make him forget his late wife is here named Sandra.

007 still receives a phone call from Draco which takes him to the post office on Prince Edward Street. Here the choreography of the action scene is somewhat different since the man (in reality Irma Bunt) who is fleeing and whom Bond is pursuing, jumps onto one of the moving automated carts. Bond does the same and hides behind a bag of mail in front of him to protect himself from Bunt's revolver' bullets. When the cart comes around a curve, Bunt loses her balance and falls onto the electrified rails. 007 searches her pockets and finds a package containing diamonds addressed to "T. Case".

There is the credits with jewelry on women of different origins; Maibaum writes on this subject: "MAURICE BINDER, have a ball, JOHN BARRY, too, with a hit tune, Diamonds Are Forever".

At M's club, the latter and Bond meet the diamond expert (and friend of M), here renamed Sir Harry (and no longer Edwin) Orrenberger. He is unable to tell where the diamonds came from; M wants Bond to get back to work, the mission concerning a hippie spy ring awaits him. Bond seems to refuse (here without commenting). We note that Maibaum now writes "M.I.16" and "M.I.6" (instead of MI15).

Maurice Binder, the designer of the credits sequence.

Things happen similarly to the previous plot: Bond drop off the diamonds at Tiffany's hotel room (without her seeing him). Like Wint and Kidd, he takes the plane with her to Paris (in flight he approaches her, they order a drink). They go through customs, Bond goes to his hotel while he is followed by the two killers. Arriving, he discovers that Tiffany had hidden the diamonds on him and a little later she comes to claim them. Friends will come to take them from him in an unpleasant way if he doesn't intend to give it to her, she says to him, but everything can go well because she intends to reward him for the service rendered.

So they have sex together; Maibaum writes that Bond intends to make her become an ally by that. But their relationship doesn't change: "it isn't because no woman in the world can screw James Bond and not fall in love with him", writes Maibaum, but because she reveals to him that "somebody once stabbed me in the heart with an icicle".

After he gives her the diamonds she joins Rufus B. Saye at House of Diamonds. Maibaum describes the latter as "a big burly John Mills type". Saye beat her because she brought fakes. Bond comes in and says that's the case: he wants money in exchange of the real ones. Saye gives him some and Bond leaves with Tiffany; Saye then sends Wint and Kidd after them to get his money back. They try to kill Bond near Montmartre but Tiffany warns him and thus saves his life.

John Mills

The Sacré-Cœur basilica which dominates Montmartre.

After losing the two killers, Bond returns to Saye and bullies him until obtaining information. So Bond learns that the diamonds come from a private mine in India (belonging to someone Saye doesn't know) and that their destination are the United States.

Bond and Tiffany go back to a hotel. She opens herself up to Bond, telling him that she was gang raped at the age of 15 by mobsters when her mother refused to paid their "protection". Since then she haven't had sex for love, only to make a profit. Bond sees that she is the same kind of person as him, "Something about Tiffany appeals to Bond, and she did save his life". They decide to team up and go to India to cut out the middlemen by taking the diamonds directly from the source and bringing them to the United States. (In reality Bond doesn't care about the diamonds and the money that revolves around them, he only wants revenge on Blofeld). He knows that involving Tiffany is a risk, but having her around is a good way to protect her from Wint and Kidd and she heals "battered libido, his need to enjoy his sex-life again". They agree to meet at the Taj Mal.

Bond pay a visits to the local British intelligence contact in Delhi, a certain Chakra. This one say that he haven't heard anything about any new discovery of a diamond vein. One of his employees, Naini, hears their conversation.

Later a "hunchback" named Sarkej approaches Bond, telling him he was sent from Chakra. Sarkej wants to take Bond to a location to investigate a supposed rumor of a new mine operating near an old abandoned one. They cross the countryside and arrive into the jungle: there is no mine, only Blofeld who awaits them, surrounded by Malaysians whose specialty is to fight with their feet.

- Richard Maibaum[2] : For instance in our next Bond picture, we've been contemplating going perhaps to the far east to Bangkok and the boxers of Thailand who use their feet when fighting. Its a form of french Savate I believe, [...] very promising to use in action sequences.

Bond fights them and flees into the jungle where a huge python ends up wrapping itself around him. 007 is suffocating and just as everything seems to indicate that it's finally over for him, some shots kill the snake. The origin of the shoot is revealed: they came from the young maharajah of the region, Sri, who was hunting with his men in the area. Maibaum compares Sri to a "brown-skinned [and long-haired] David McCallum" whose education took place at Eton and Oxford. Blofeld and his Malaysian henchmen decide to abandon the pursuit.

Sri brings Bond to his palace where there is some sort of party with belly-baring female dancers. Sri asks him how much girl he wants, 007 replies that his "kamasutra" (work of Indian origin which deals notably with sexual practices) is not really up to date these days. The maharajah tells him about his financial difficulties. A guest of Sri comes to join them, Madame Tring: a pretty Chinese widow.

David McCallum

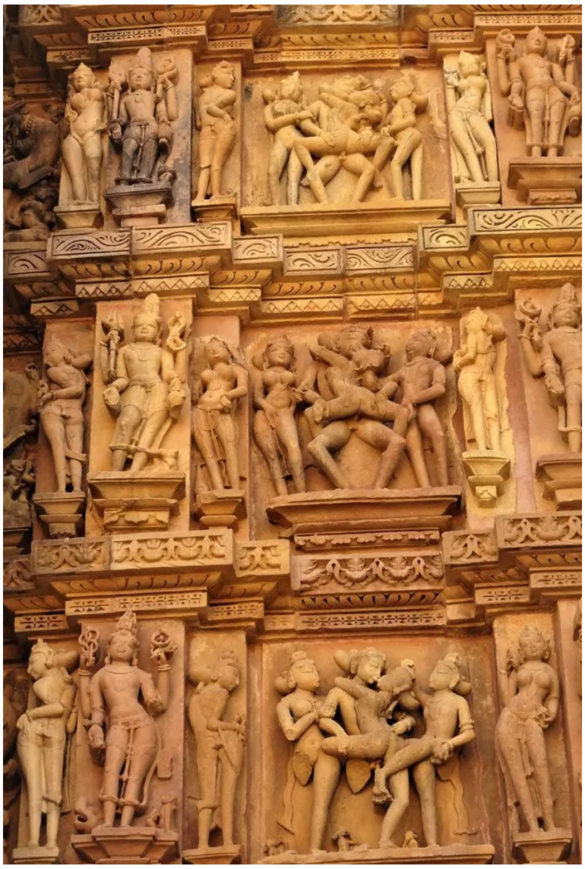
Suddenly, (like in the gypsies camp of From Russia with Love), armed men launch an assault on the palace. Bond helps Sri and his men to repel the assault. Sri doesn't know who they were: perhaps bandits or a communist guerrilla? Or maybe Blofeld's men, thinks Bond. What is certain is that Bond saw on Tring's chest a "brooch fashioned like an octopus with a human skull for a head, tiny diamonds set into the eye-sockets and for teeth, the insignia of Spectre".

The Taj Mal.

Bond and Sri go to meet Tiffany at the Taj Mal. Before they can reach her, they come across a group of tourists in which Moneypenny is. She greets Bond with an "affectionate kiss" (Tiffany sees this). Moneypenny tells him that M wants him to return to London with her and that if he does, everything will be forgiven. Bond suggests that Sri take Moneypenny to visit a temple, to get rid of her.

So Sri takes her to the Khajuraho temple as suggested by Bond. "This should be a hilarious scene", Maibaum writes, noting that the carved decorations on the walls are "sheer pornography". "Moneypenny's reactions [...] are predictably horrified. She tries not to look, can't help looking, blushes, swallows hard, perspires".

One of the Khajuraho temples.



Not having found Tiffany at the Taj Mal, Bond returns to Delhi. Naini accosts him in an alley, Bond takes the opportunity to accuse her of being a member of Spectre. She then takes out a knife from under her sari. 007 disarms her and lets her go. Bond now goes to Chakra's store, unaware that he is being followed by Wint and Kidd. The two companions try to kill him, but are unaware it was Chakra they actually shot. 007 fires his "Beretta" at them; they decamp.

Moneypenny arrives at the store and sees 007 leaning over Chakra's lifeless body, a gun in his hand. Naini joins her and tells her that Bond is the murderer. Horrified Moneypenny flees and reports to M in London. M then sends 006 and 008 to India with orders to find Bond and bring him back alive, or even kill him if he resists.

007 ensure that Sri decide to go see Madam Tring at her home (near Bangkok) and brings him with. Bond still wants to know more about Blofeld's diamond mine but she doesn't know anything about that, even though she belongs to Spectre (and is number 2).

After Bond has done his business with her and "discovers, I presume, that what they say about Chinese women isn't true" (what is being said?), he tells her that he wants to join Spectre. She laughs, as if the "famous Double O-Seven" wanted to do that. He flatters her by telling her that perhaps the evening they spent together is the reason, and the rest of the dialogue is done off-camera.

In Bangkok, Bond meets Marc-Ange Draco whom he asked to come. He tells him that the only way to get Blofeld is to create a rival faction within Spectre (consisting of Tring and himself) and threaten to take Blofeld's place. When he leaves Draco, Bond is captured by 006 and 008 who take him to their hotel room. "All three [of them] know the same tricks, dodges, twists, etc. All have the same equipment, right down to the knives in their shoes, etc. I don't at the moment know how Bond escapes from them but he does, probably with Draco's help", write the screenwriter.

Pursued through the city by his two colleagues, Bond takes refuge at Tring's place. She shows him her breeding of white cats, the ones Blofeld likes. The cats were trained to attack on demand (Tring tells him the Chinese word that order them to attack). 006 and 008 show up, Bond knocks Tring to the ground just before they open fire. Bond returns the fire. Although he purposely missing them, this is enough for Tring to be convinced that he has indeed changed sides. She tells him that Blofeld often goes to a place in Ceylon (the name of Sri Lanka before 1972).

Bond and Sri fly there, they can see a mining operation from the sky. They go there but discover that it doesn't concern diamonds but graphite. "Disappointed", they leave by plane but see the graphite being loaded onto a boat named S.S. Marin; which means Ghost in Urdu: a synonym for Spectre. The presence of the hunchback Sarkej on board confirms Bond's suspicions.

While Sri is tailing the boat, Bond goes with Draco to attend a Spectre meeting that Tring has organized in Malacca. A video is delivered and projected during it; video in which Blofeld tells members of Tring's faction that he know about this conspiracy against him and that Bond is using them. Although he patronize them by telling them that they are nothing without him, his words have an effect on the conspirators who then question the existence of the mine mentioned by Bond. 007 and Draco make a strategic retreat by leaving the meeting place.

Bond and Draco go to find Sri who tells them where the S.S. Marin delivered its cargo to the Malaysian coast. They go there by boat and finally discover the secret of Blofeld's diamonds: they are synthetic stones constructed from graphics in a factory. Bond manages to capture Blofeld who then tells them all this, and that he intends to demand 50% of their profits from the diamond syndicates, otherwise he will flood the market with his fake stones indistinguishable from real ones. All the beauty of his plan is that it is perfectly legal according to Blofeld/Maibaum: there is no law that prohibit creation of diamonds's imitations.

Too bad for Blofeld that Bond doesn't care about the price of diamonds in the world: he only came here to avenge Tracy. However, Blofeld has an ace up his sleeve: he told him that he had kidnapped M who had personally come to Malaysia to supervise the capture of 007. He shows him a photo of M in captivity to prove his words: any action against Blofeld or his factory will result in M's death.

Bond withdraws. Later, while trying to find M, he discovers that he is being held by a strange hippie colony in Kuala Lumpur led by a certain "The Great Guru", in close contact with Blofeld! After freeing M from him, Bond leads his faction of Spectre (and Draco) to the diamond factory. There is a terrible battle going on between the two branches of the organization; Blofeld flees (apparently with elephants to take his fake diamonds with him). Bond, Draco and Tring chase him and are charged by the elephants. Draco dies!

Blofeld has his loot loaded into a PBY seaplane, Bond and Tring pursue him with another plane and have no trouble catching up. Blofeld then decides to throw his fake diamonds into the sea in order to lighten his plane and outrun them: he succeeds.

Bond then goes back to looking for Blofeld and comes across Tiffany in Singapore as a cards dealer. She told him that she had moved away from him because she had fallen in love of him. Bond receives a phone call from Tring who tells him that Blofeld is at her home in Bangkok. Bond goes there, they shoot at each other and Tring is fatally hit by a ricochet. 007 manages to throw Blofeld into the cat farm and says the Chinese word for them to attack him: the white cats are tearing Blofeld to pieces!

Bond and Tiffany board a sort of liner boat in Singapore. Bond is back among the living again since he avenged his wife's death, we're told. However, similar to the film (and the novel) Wint and Kidd are on board, and they hold Tiffany in her cabin. Like the novel, Bond wards off a frontal attack option and rappelling down the hull with a rope to pass through a porthole and kills the pair with his pistol.

> - Tiffany: I want your arms around me forever.
> - Bond: Not even diamonds are forever, darling. Nothing is. [Looking at the bodies of the two killers] Except what happened to then.

Maibaum concludes this treatment with a note indicating that the story isn't quite there yet, but that the general idea is here, as well as the characters. He feels that one of the current weaknesses is that Tiffany is left out of the story for too long, and that he is lacking knowledge about Far East to properly imagine sequences there. There's also perhaps too many things in the treatment. In any case, he says he hopes to be able to remedy these problems when he will writes the first script, after discussions.

Dog, motorbike and Land Rover

Another set of pages (no idea if they're older or newer) show a different start for the story, although sharing the same roots:

The gun-barrel dissolves on an isolated cottage. In the surrounding moors, a man walks alongside a dog with the song We Have All the Time in the World in the background. It's Bond (although "If we use a new actor we won't, of course, know who he is yet"). (In another version he is on a motorcycle, a dog at his side).

(Let's remember that Maibaum had already mentioned a family cottage with a dog in pages written for On Her Majesty's Secret Service).

Bond hears a plane above him and a parachutist (Tiffany) lands near him. Bond introduces himself with his classic line, saying that he is Bond, James Bond, and helps her remove her parachute. A Land Rover approaches, "to pick me up" explains Tiffany.

However, the driver rushes towards Bond to try to kill him; 007 is hit. The driver draws a gun to finish him off but Bond manages to disarm him. The driver flees in the Land Rover and Bond jumps on the car and hangs on to it. He lets go near the cottage, gets on a motorbike and sets off in the pursuit of the Land Rover in a sequence which exists because basically "we've never before had Bond on a motorbike". A pursuit of which Maibaum doesn't know the content yet but which he hopes exciting, which "will have to be worked out by experts". In any case the driver ends up dying when he loses control of his vehicle which rolls over several times.

Bond stops near the body: it is not a man but Irma Bunt! Tiffany has disappeared. While going through Bunt's belongings, Bond finds a ticket for a piece of luggage. When he later goes to present it, he receives a bag. He opens it and finds a package containing diamonds...

OPENING CREDITS (with diamonds on the bodies of various sexy girls from all around the world).

Bond is at De Beers in London. A personal friend of his, Sir Maurice Oberg, examines the diamonds. Oberg is not able to tell him where they came from.

Bond goes to see M, tells him he's ready to go back to work and that the diamonds are linked to Blofeld. M warns him to not engage on a vendetta and asks him to hand the diamonds to Scotland Yard with Q.

007 returns to his apartment where it turns out that Tiffany is waiting for him in his bed; she says that she knows nothing about her driver's attack on him. (She also happens to be a model for Cosmopolitan Manniquins). 007 makes love to her, knowing that she is after the diamonds for herself or for someone who hired her.

Bond goes with Q to Scotland Yard but switches their two briefcases: he thus discreetly steals the diamonds from Q. He then finds Tiffany and arranges for her to find the diamonds.

007 follows Tiffany to Paris where she deliver them to Saye at the House of Diamonds. He comes in and pretends to be a customer who wants to buy diamonds, and when Saye presents him with some, Bond tells him that he is not an idiot and that they are fakes. Saye then presents him with the diamonds that Tiffany has just brought; 007 is interested in knowing their origins. Wind, Kidd and Tiffany join them: there is a big fight and Bond escapes by breaking the storefront window.

One line tells us that "he must find something to link source of the diamonds with Malaysia? Singapore? Malacca? Kuala Lumpur?".

New beginning of a treatment: detour through Barcelona

Another incomplete treatment begins in the isolated cottage, "Scotland? Suffolk?". Maibaum adds a passage where Moneypenny calls Bond but no one picks up the phone. M mutters something like "how long does 007 intend to live like a hermit?". Bond is not in the cottage but outside, walking with his dog, still with the song We Have All the Time in the World. There's still Tiffany as a parachutist and Bunt in a Land Rover, then the chase on a motorcycle.

After the credits Bond goes to De Beer to meet a friend (Sir Maurice) who tells him that the diamonds he found are of exceptional quality and that recently diamond's sales have dropped drastically. 007 goes to see M and is ordered to hand over the diamonds to Scotland Yard with Q. On the way out Moneypenny tries to cheer Bond up but he tells her that he is afraid that his internal "clock" has stopped (since the death of Tracy).

Bond returns to his home at Chelsea where he finds Tiffany in his bed. She obviously searched drawers for the diamonds but claims to have been looking for a game of solitaire. She says she knows nothing about the attack that took place earlier.

Before they make love, she opens a window: a signal for two thugs who then enter the house armed with silenced pistols and who hope to catch a defenseless Bond during the act. However when they arrive, they find the bed empty. 007 was waiting for them: his Walther in one hand, the other on Tiffany's mouth to prevent her from warning them. There is then a fight at the end of which the two adversaries retreat. Bond asks where they were before being so rudely interrupted and Bond and Tiffany then appear to have sex together.

After that he tries to get Tiffany to talk, without success, and she leaves. Bond is intrigued by the emblem that was on Tiffany's bag, representing the world surrounded by trains, planes, boats, etc. He does some research and discovers that it is the logo of a company named World Girdler Tours, Ltd. (a travel company).

The next morning Bond and Q go to Scotland Yard; 007 decides to steal the diamonds by discreetly swapping their two briefcases.

007 then goes to the headquarters of World Girdler Tours in London and notably sees that one of the men who attacked him last night works there. Bond is unaware of it, but in an office, manager Lady Torrance is on the phone with Blofeld, talking about diamonds.

Bond sees Tiffany coming out of the building, goes to approach her, pretending that it is chance that they meet again and he invites her to the restaurant. He absent himself during dinner and watches Tiffany open the briefcase containing the diamonds that he had deliberately left near her, and sees her leave with them.

We are now at Barcelona airport. Dealing with tourists, Tiffany discreetly hides the diamonds on one of them in order to get through customs. She picks them up and goes to House of Diamonds, described as a Cartier-type jewelry store and whose slogan is "Diamonds Are Forever". Bond, who discreetly followed her, observes and sees a certain Gropper, a man he had seen at De Beers earlier. She gives the diamonds to Rufus B. Saye and leaves. 007 enters House of Diamonds, Tiffany sees him and goes back.

Bond tells Saye that his name is Barrett, he wants to buy diamonds of questionable provenance from him. Saye asks Tiffany why she came back, she suddenly decides not to expose Bond. Saye presents Bond with fake diamonds; Bond, who knows nothing about diamonds, is unaware that they are fake but Tiffany discreetly warns him. Wint, one of the two American killers present in the building, saw Tiffany do this.

Bond says they are fakes and Saye then presents him with the diamonds brought by Tiffany. Wint and Kidd burst in with their guns pointed at Bond and Tiffany and tell Saye that she betrayed them. There is then a big fight inside the jewelry store with lot of destruction, Bond notably throws Saye through the window, which trigger an alarm.

007 and Tiffany leave the scene before the police arrival but are pursued "such as [through] the Guadi['s] Park Güell" (which Maibaum compares to a "sort of surrealistic stone Disneyland") by Wint and Kidd.

After losing them, Bond rents a car and go (with Tiffany) to Marc-Ange Draco. I don't have the following pages, if they ever existed.

"Second treatment": Snakes, elephants and Chinese agents

On an unknown date, Maibaum completed the writing of a 14-page document entitled "Second treatment". I don't know if it's older or newer than the previous one.

This time the pre-title sequence is not really defined. We are just told that it takes elements from before with Bond brooding in an isolated place following the death of Tracy, Tiffany used as a decoy to kill him, a chase against a man who turns out to be Bunt and which causes 007 to get the diamonds. (Ilse Steppat, the actress who playing Bunt in On Her Majesty's Secret Service, would however die on December 21, 1969).

Things happen as in the previous beginning of the treatment with a few minor differences. So Bond goes to De Beers (the person he meets is not named), then goes to see M (there is no dialogue about Bond's internal clock). There are the scenes at his home in Chelsea with Tiffany (less developed), then Bond goes to World Girdler Tours. After that, we can note a scene where M asks Moneypenny to find Bond after he has stolen the diamonds from Q.

Bond follows Tiffany to Barcelona's House of Diamonds. This time Wint and Kidd don't pursue them alone but with other henchmen. Finally Bond and Tiffany steal (instead of renting) a car and manage to lose their pursuers.

007 asks Tiffany why she helped him: she can't explain it (but she has obviously fallen in love with him). 007 stops to make a phone call then their pursuers return to the charge in a car. A new pursuit begins during which a mysterious person leaves a tractor in the middle of the road, the pursuers crash their car in the tractor.

Near the crash place there is a castle and a butler escorts Bond and Tiffany inside to... Marc-Ange Draco! Although he retired from the Union Corse, he still have his faithful companions with him: Toussaint, Che Che and Raphael. The tractor was put on the road after Bond's phone call, "Draco assumes Bond is consoling himself with Tiffany". 007 tells Draco that he have a lead on Blofeld; Draco is interested since he also wants revenge for the death of his daughter.

Tiffany explain that World Girdler Tours is a cover for smuggling diamonds by hiding them on tourists. Given the trips she has made, she thinks the origin of the stones is the Far East. Bond has a plan, use Tiffany as bait by taking her to Bangkok: if they see her there after her treachery at Saye's place, Blofeld's people will surely try to eliminate her. It's risky for her, but in any case she'll never be safe anywhere in the world until Blofeld's death.

Bond, Tiffany, Draco and his men go to Thailand, where she shows them tourist places such as the Temple of the Emerald Buddha or the snake farm at the Pasteur Institute (Queen Saovabha Memorial Institute, nowadays). She tells them that her usual contact was a woman in charge of cobra venom's extraction, Doctor Li Kung. Bond approaches the latter and invites her to the restaurant, while a man named Chuan discreetly takes a photo of them.

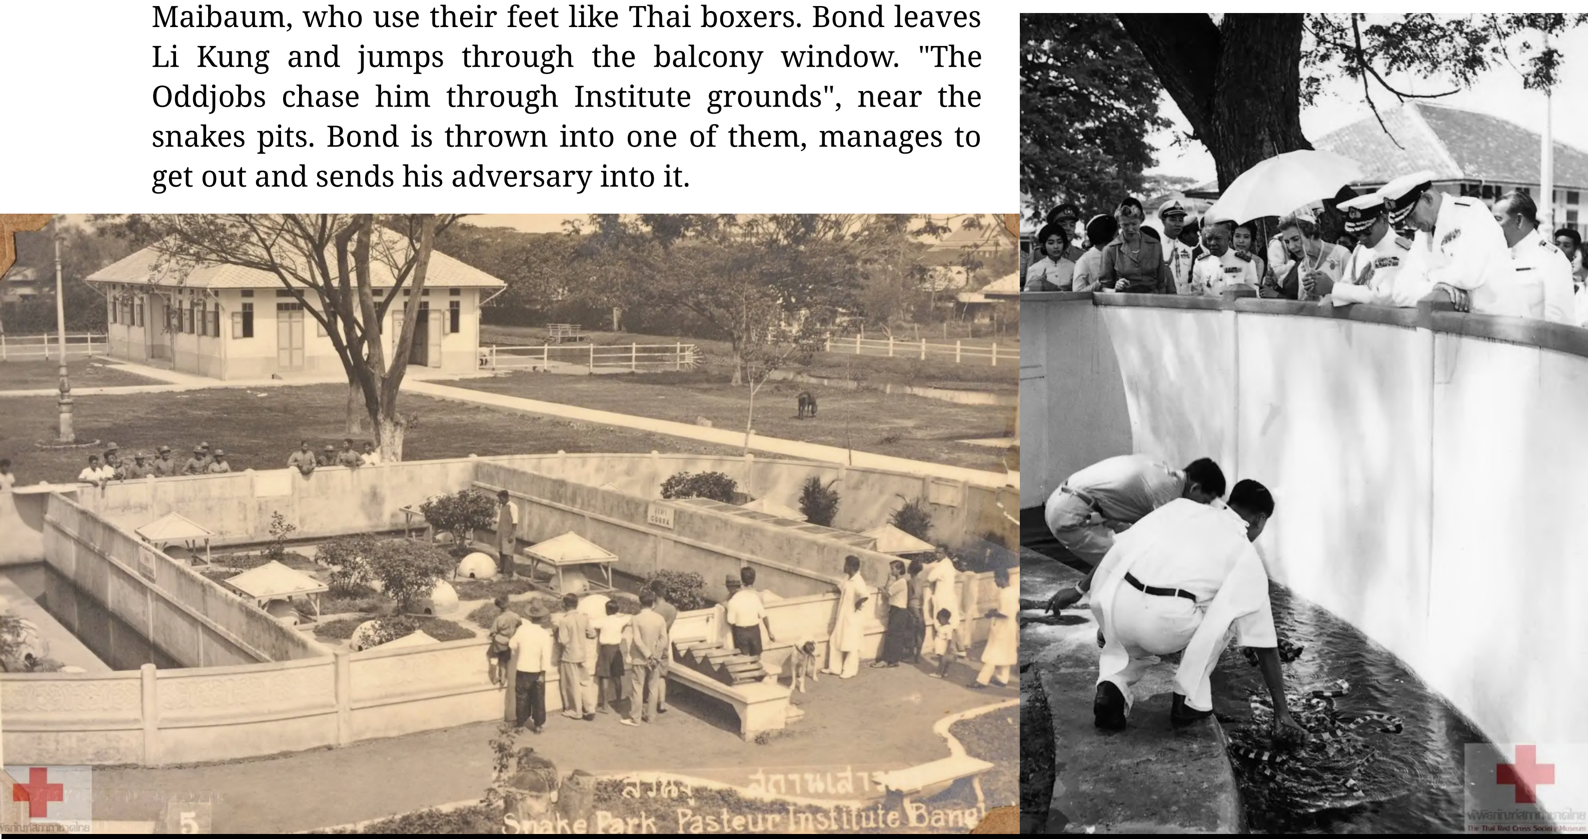
They return to their hotel, Bond tells Tiffany about Tracy. She "gets the message. She's in love with a man who's in love with a dead girl". Bond receives a message from Li Kung who tells him that she has finished work and is ready to go to the restaurant with him.

Meanwhile Chuan give Bond's photo to a club owner, a certain Narai. We now understand that Chuan and Narai are MI6 agents stationed in Thailand and that they are watching Li Kung because she is a supposed Chinese communist agent.

007 arrives at the Pasteur Institute and begins to have sex with Li Kung in her office when they are suddenly interrupted:

> - Blofeld: I see your favorite indoor sport remains unchanged, Mr. Bond.

Along with Blofeld (his neck in a neck brace) are several "Thai Oddjobs", writes Maibaum, who use their feet like Thai boxers. Bond leaves Li Kung and jumps through the balcony window. "The Oddjobs chase him through Institute grounds", near the snakes pits. Bond is thrown into one of them, manages to get out and sends his adversary into it.



The Bangkok snake farm.

007 flees in a car and the chase "possibly" continues to a point where he has to abandon the vehicle and escape by jumping from boat to boat in the floating market.

Bond returns to the hotel and talks about umbrellas he saw in Li Kung's office: Tiffany remembers that Li Kung used to hide diamonds in them. Draco says that there is an industrial zone near Chiang Mai where such umbrellas are made. Bond and Draco go there while his men and Tiffany attend an elephant festival (which actually exists, the Elephant Round-up in Surin).

Bond infiltrates the compound by crossing a fence and disguising himself in local clothing consisting of a straw hat. Bond sees workers making umbrellas and a man, Van Dree, supervising other employees working on diamonds. (Maibaum writes a note saying that historically the first African diamonds were cut by Indonesians). 007 hears that Van Dree is due to go to Kuala Lumpur soon and Bond is spotted by a guard. He flees to the jungle and joins Draco who is waiting for him in a boat.

In the next scene, which Maibaum calls "optional, although I think it's exciting and colourful", they join Tiffany and the others at the elephant festival. The scenes in this part don't seem to be intended to develop the story but just to show on screen a "fabulous tourist attraction" that Maibaum describes as "200 elephants. There are mock battles with elephants and riders costumed in medieval armour, [...] all sorts of demonstrations of elephantine skill and intelligence". Thugs who chased Bond and Draco from the Chiang Mai compound show up and panic the elephants who start stomping in all directions. Bond and his companions escape into the panicking crowd. If shooting a scene at the festival didn't prove feasible, Maibaum writes that they could do a (boat) chase instead.

Back in Bangkok, Bond is contacted by Chuan. He goes to meet Narai at his nightclub. There Wint and Kidd shoot through a window at Narai's office; they think they have killed 007 but it is Narai they had shoot down. Chuan takes a photo of Bond near the body and sends it to M, with a report stating that he thinks that 007 killed him.

On the London side, M gives 006 and 008 the mission to find Bond and bring him back; or kill him if he resists.

Bond, Tiffany, Draco and his men go to Kualu Lumpur. Raphael waits for Van Dree's plane to land and tails him to a beautiful place on the coast. (Maibaum writes that if the place is too reminiscent of Largo's house in Thunderball, they can always shoot elsewhere). Raphael goes report to Bond at his hotel.

Someone knocks on the door, Bond goes to open it, thinking it's Draco, but it turns out to be the 00 agents sent by M. They get him into their car but "somehow "Bond escapes from them, and they chase him through Kualu Lumpur until he loses them.

Bond and his companions observe the comings and goings at Van Dree's property (which is actually Blofeld's). Bond decides to go further by disguising himself as a servant to wander inside. Hidden somewhere "(somewhat as he was in Goldfinger's playroom)", Bond is able to hear Blofeld talking with Van Dree, Lady Torrance, Saye, Li Kung, and Kung's superior (a Chinese general). Blofeld said he originally organized this meeting because Bond's activities threatened their big operation, but that is not the case anymore since Wint and Kidd took care of him. The future looks bright: a stockpile of diamonds worth $2.5 billion has been collected. The general is not satisfied with the way the funds were distributed to his agents operating in the West, while China finance Blofeld. Blofeld asks Saye to make arrangements to resolve this problem.

007 comes out and goes to tell all this to Draco, who wants to go in and kill Blofeld. Bond holds him back, there is now something more important than avenging Tracy's death: cutting off funds of the Chinese spy networks. Bond returns to his hotel and goes to surrender to 006 and 008. They bring him to M who has personally traveled to Malaysia to oversee his capture.

On Borneo or an island near Sumatra (or somewhere "like Bali with beautiful bare-breasted native girls"), Bond, Draco, Tiffany, 006 and 008 launch an attack on Blofeld's diamond mine. However, they discover that it is not a mine but in fact a factory where synthetic diamonds (indistinguishable from real ones) are manufactured, which is "of course, theoretically possible". Bond and Blofeld fight in a depository containing 5 million carats of fake diamonds.

While Bond goes to chase Blofeld into the jungle, Q "expressly there for the purpose" destroys the diamonds with a small atomic device! Maibaum writes that it would be "lovely poetic justice if Blofeld, who adores cats, is killed by the biggest cat of all: a tiger" in the jungle.

Bond and Tiffany board some sort of ocean liner in Malacca or Singapore and there are the final scenes with Wint and Kidd (with Bond still rappelling down the hull of the boat).

In a half-page memo on Blofeld's motivations (written prior to this treatment) we note that the diamonds were sent abroad via a modeling agency called Cosmo Manniquins (and not a travel agency such as World Girdler Tours). Tiffany was also one of the models.

The Cubby's dream that shaped the story

At one point, producer Albert R. Broccoli had a dream during his sleep that would prove crucial to the writing of the film. In it Broccoli paid a visit to businessman Howard Hughes: the man's back was turned and Cubby discovered that it was ultimately not Hughes in front of him, but a total stranger[3].

Howard Hughes (1905-1976), American billionaire playboy born in Texas. Figure in the aeronautics industry (aviator, former major shareholder of TWA and manufacturer of military planes, helicopters, missiles and satellites) with interests in Las Vegas and the film industry. Hughes remained known for his eccentricity, notably for his female conquests and for having lived part of his life in a secluded manner for several years in his various residences, including the penthouse of the Desert Inn at Las Vegas. He was also a friend of Broccoli (although they had not spoken directly to each other for several years at that time). The two men had worked on films together such The Banished and Hughes helped Broccoli by opening some doors during the filming of Diamonds are Forever in Nevada. Cubby autobiography's When the Snow Melts contains long passages on his friendship with Hughes and the latter's personality.

Cubby mentioned his dream to Richard Maibaum. Ultimately the film would feature the idea present the dream through the character of Willard Whyte (played by Texan Jimmy Dean): a pastiche of Hughes whose identity was stolen by Blofeld. Before arriving there, however, the film's plot went through other stages as we will see...

Goldfinger brother?

On February 10, 1970 Maibaum wrote a memo to the producers.

He says in it that he thinks the villain's plan is good, but are we using Blofeld as the villain? Maibaum thinks this would be a plus, since the audience is waiting for Bond to settle the score for Tracy, and it also serves to link Bond to Tiffany in a way: they've been using sex "professionally" since their respective traumas (he Tracy's death, she her rape).

"Or, do we forget Blofeld and create a new master-mind? Let's say Goldfinger's twin brother, as nuts about diamonds as Auric was about gold. This is a very amusing concept. And it gives us Gert Fröbe again whom the audiences loved".

After all, after On Her Majesty's Secret Service and its box office in free fall compared to the previous film, the filmmakers apparently wanted to return to the tone of Goldfinger, one of the biggest successes of the saga, hence perhaps the return of director Guy Hamilton ans Shirley Bassey. We also remember that making Blofeld Goldfinger's half-brother was once considered during the writing of On Her Majesty's Secret Service.

Another decision to make: retain or not the idea of the "tycoon" (Maibaum uses this term to designate a Howard Hughes-type of character). If yes: does he help the villain on his own or against his will? Maibaum says he prefers the second option if it is retained.

Maibaum adds that problems related to "introducing the new Bond" will also have to be addressed.

February 27, 1970 treatment: Adamas Sten, oil tanker and satellite

On February 27, 1970 Maibaum completed a new 6-page treatment that introduced a secondary villain and changed Blofeld's plan.

The pre-title sequence feature Wint and Kidd committing two murders in order to shut down a diamond smuggling operation. While they are preparing to make a third victim, a dentist, the "new 007" saves a nurse (it is not specified how).

After the credits, we find Bond and M in Johannesburg with Sir Harry, the boss of a diamond syndicate. He explains to them (via a computer) that smuggled diamonds have not reappeared on the market lately. He fears that someone somewhere stockpiling it and will one day threat the diamond syndicates of flooding the market with them. Bond must quickly find out who, as the recent murders indicate that the person now has enough stones in his possession to launch imminent action. The only clue he have is a ticket for a professional fight which will take place in Bangkok, which fell from the pockets of one of the assassins.

007 therefore goes there and observes the fight. As he leaves he is attacked by men armed with Kriss daggers. However, boxers come to Bond's rescue, including a certain Chorn who turns out to be the head of the "TMI" (Thailand, Malaysia and Indonesia) station of the "MI6". While pursuing one of his attackers, Bond sees Blofeld (with a neck brace around his neck) in a car but loses track of him and (given the scene that follows, Bond mustn't have recognized who he was).

Chorn tells 007 that the only man in Thailand who would be capable of leading such an operation against the diamond syndicates is a Swedish-born businessman named Adamas Sten; one of the richest men in the world. He collects diamonds and women in particular.

Bond goes to meet Sten's Dutch-Thai mistress, Katje, "(At race-track? Fashion show? Casino?)". She falls under the charms of our agent and he say that she want her to introduce him to Sten to sell him a car (Station TMI's cover is a luxury dealership). They go to see Sten (Maibaum notes that this is a good opportunity to show on screen what Thailand has to offer) in a location ("Dam? Logging operation?") in which Sten notably employs 200 elephants.

007 therefore meets our man who turns out to be... Auric Goldfinger's twin brother! Bond shows him the car (Maibaum doesn't specify a brand/model) and also talks to him about diamonds. Sten goes to contact Blofeld; the latter reveals to Sten that there is an MI6 agent on Sten's back. Hjalmar, Sten's handyman, tells Sten that he saw Bond listening to their conversation.

A little further on, while Bond visits Sten's property, Hjalmar tries to kill 007 via the elephants. Bond survives, but not Katje who ends up crushed by the animals.

Back in Bangkok, Chorn informs Bond that two men were looking for him: Wint and Kidd. Chorn followed them to an inhabited barge. Bond goes there and runs into Tiffany; she flirts with him to hold him over while waiting for Wint and Kidd to return. Not seeing them, she decides to go out with Bond in Bangkok. So they visit Buddhist tourist spots, the snake farm and the floating market (where she hopes to bring Bond to the two killers, but they aren't there either).

Wat Phra Kaew (Temple of the Emerald Buddha) is a location that Bond visits in most of the Maibaum's storylines of Diamonds are Forever set in Thailand.

They end up separating and she returns to the barge where this time there are Wint and Kidd. It's the first time Tiffany meet them. They give her a suitcase containing 100 000 carats of diamonds: she is the smuggler who must to take them to Jakarta.

At Bangkok airport, Tiffany boards a plane; Bond follows her discreetly. Chorn doesn't have time to warn him that Wint and Kidd have also boarded. On the plane Tiffany runs into Bond; Wint and Kidd also spot him but can't do anything against him at the moment. At Jakarta airport, Bond and Tiffany go through customs (she is helped by one accomplice in the airport staff). Bond receives a warning message from Chorn about the presence of two killers and 007 is now on his guard.

He sees Tiffany getting into a taxi and climbs in, she objects. Bond asks the driver to take them to the British embassy. Wint and Kidd following them in another taxi, a chase begins through the streets of Jakarta.

After losing them, Bond makes Tiffany believe that he is not a police officer as she thinks but some kind of criminal who is after diamonds. He promises to share them with her if he gets her help: there is more money to make than just the one these diamonds. Tiffany accepts and tells him about her life as a hostess, model, card dealer in Vegas, etc... They make love coldly and she explains that she was raped by eight men when she was 14.

Their plan is to deliver the diamonds in order to see where they will be taken next. They go to a place belonging to a certain Jadaputta where there is a Balinese dance performance, and deposit the diamonds there. They then notice that the person who comes to collect them is Hjalmar. They follow him to a refinery belonging to Sten, near which there is a huge tanker, the SS Cassiopia.

There, Sten realizes that the diamonds he has just received are fakes. He decides to go to Jadaputta's theater to have a word with her but discovers that the place is closed: he has obviously been fooled by Jadaputta. He runs into Bond and Tiffany who was still following him and tells Bond that he know that he is after Blofeld. He offers to take him to Blofeld and his stock of diamonds.

Sten flies them to a jungle landing strip near Bali. Bond and Hjalmar (alone) travel in a Land Rover to a palace on a lake owned by Jadaputta, who prove to be Blofeld's mistress. They find the real diamonds as well as Blofeld sitting in a chair: Bond shoots him six times. However, once Bond leaves the place, we discover that he actually shot an effigy of Blofeld.

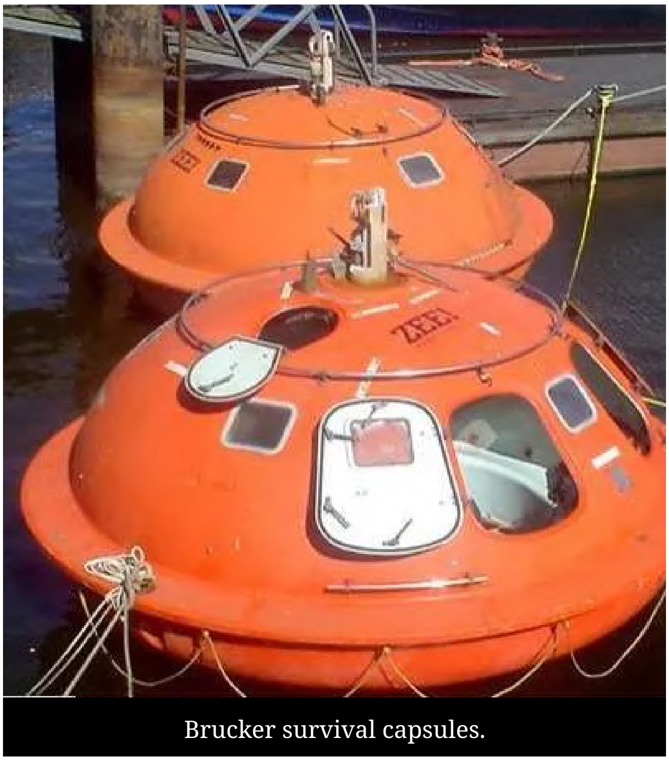
Hjalmar now pretends to bring Bond to the rest of the diamonds but tries to kill him. Chorn, who was following them, comes to 007's rescue and is killed instead of him. Bond rushes to the landing strip and arrives there before Hjalmar; he decides to hide in the plane.

The plane takes them to the SS Cassiopia which is now located near Bali. Remaining discreet on board, 007 sees workers working on diamonds and a satellite being launched from the tanker. We see in space that the satellite is made of a million carats of diamonds.

Blofeld, Wint, Kidd and Jadaputta board the tanker with the help of traitors among Sten's men and take the latter as a prisoner. 007 then discreetly approaches Sten who tells him the whole story: Blofeld helped him by getting him the diamonds he needed to build this satellite but, for one reason or another (which will never be clearly explained), tried to trick him on the last delivery. Sten intended to use this satellite for industrial espionage purposes, as it is equipped with a laser beam which allowing him to basically hack computers. Blofeld now wants to get his hands on Sten's satellite, but if he also intends to use it to steal secrets from government/company's computers, it is however with the goal of reselling them.

007 steals Sten's plane and goes to inform M somewhere ("Singapore? Jakarta? Kula-Lumpur?"). An international operation is mounted and 007 finds himself aboard an American-British submarine which torpedoes the tanker. Meanwhile in space the Russians destroy the Sten/Blofeld's satellite by using another weaponized satellite (Maibaum explains that this is real technology and that since the West doesn't have this kind of thing in his arsenal, the Russian have be involved in this part of story. Is Maibaum is talking about Istrebitel Sputnikov?). 007 boards the sinking tanker to save Tiffany while Sten goes down with the ship.

They jump into the water and swim to a Brucker escape pod and... Discover that it is occupied by Blofeld, Wint and Kidd. There is a "terrific fight in fairly enclosed space of capsule, like one in train compartment in From Russia". With Tiffany's help, Bond manages to kill the two henchmen and throw Blofeld out of the capsule, where he is devoured by sharks. While waiting to be rescued, Bond and Tiffany make love in the capsule, the END.



Brucker survival capsules.

Before writing this treatment, Maibaum wrote a two-page memo on the villains' goal. In it he notably compare Goldfinger's brother to an industrialist "like Axel [Wenner-]Gren, he is something of a mystery man", instead of Howard Hughes.

Maibaum explains that building the satellite with legal diamonds would be too expensive and would not guarantee secrecy around Sten project, since people would wonder why he is acquiring such a quantity of them (that's why Sten resorts to Blofeld to acquire smuggled diamonds). Finally Maibaum compares an ending with Wint and Kidd on a liner to "a final showdown as in From Russia with Rosa Kleb[b]".

In another memo, Maibaum named Sten as "Adamas Ogansten" ("Diamondfinger", he also wrote to refer to him) whose "goal is to become the most powerful industrialist in the world".

Let's also note an (incomplete) undated memo on the plot where Adamas Sten is presented as an industrialist but never as Goldfinger's brother. Perhaps Sten was originally envisioned as a completely original villain before Maibaum finally decided to make him related to Goldfinger?

Axel Wenner-Gren, Swedish businessman who notably made his fortune in the household appliances industry with the company Electrolux.

A drawing that illustrate the principle of computer's hacking by the satellite. Was made at the time by "Matt" (Matthew Maibaum, one of Richard's sons)?

One trip around earth every 2 hrs.
over the poles radio telescope
radio transmitter amplifier ray emitting gun diamond lens
(Matt's) drawing
TANKER
radio receiver
Dummy oil
Hold numbers decoded into English Computer language decoded into mathematical numbers
radio message decoder - recodes into computer language Storage files
Computer III
Computer II
Computer I
Spied-on place impressions of molecular arrangement on tapes tape
Computer

"Third treatment": Gabor sisters, transgender and mud baths

Maibaum refines the plot with the writing of a 23-page treatment which he calls "third treatment" (undated).

The gunbarrel opens at mines in South Africa where we see the process of diamond mining, with its huge machines and workers. We also see security measures to prevent smuggling, such as minors who must undergo an x-ray before leaving the premises. After dark, a dentist named Prinz leaves the mining complex on a moped and goes to a creek. There he attaches diamonds to a dolphin in a pen under a quay; the animal goes out to sea to join a boat where men collect the stones, then returns to see Prinz who puts it back in its enclosure.

The next day is a new day but still the same routine for Prinz. He removes a diamond from the mouth of a worker in the company of his assistant Suzie. He goes into the next room briefly and returns to examine a new patient. However, Suzie realizes that it is no longer Prinz who is with her but another man hiding under his surgical mask. She attacks him with dental tools nearby, the impostor manages to defend himself and disarm her. He end up removing his mask: it is James Bond.

After the credits we see the dolphin swimming towards a boat again. Bond and two other divers surface near the boat and a police speedboat rushes to the scene. 007 boards the smugglers' boat, recognizes Ernst Stravo Blofeld (bald) but falls into the water when the boat suddenly starts. Bond boards the speedboat to give chase, but they are left behind by Blofeld's faster boat.

007 returns to London to report to his boss. M is perplexed by what his agent has managed to accomplish: at best he has only managed to catch a small staff and in his opinion diamond smuggling is not within the remit of his department anyway. Bond wants to continue this mission, M agrees since Blofeld is obviously involved.

Bond goes out and talks with Moneypenny who wanted him to bring her a souvenir from Africa. Bond tells her he knows someone who would like to be more than friends with her. When she asks who, Bond tells her is he is talking about M: faced with this outrageous thought, Moneypenny puts her hand over her mouth. They both laugh, Bond leaves and on the intercom M tells his secretary that he fail to find the hilarity in 007's words.

We find Bond and M at De Beers where (as usual) Sir Harry Orrenberger explains to them that lately smuggled diamonds have not reappeared on the market and there is fear that someone is stocking up.

Bond and M return to Universal Export; the "Computer Analysis" section is supposed to give them a report. It's an opportunity to explain to the audience how a computer works, Maibaum said. After receiving the report, M tells his agent about a wealthy Swedish or Dutch industrialist named Adamas Sten, a "eccentric, a la Howard Hughes" character who rarely appears in public. Even though his business is purely legal, the report suggests interest in him is due to his diamond addiction. His own first name, Adamas, is the Latin word for "diamond". He is currently in Thailand.

Bond lands in Bangkok and checks his hotel room for bugs. Suddenly the handle of the door connecting to the next room opens. Bond is ready to welcome an enemy but it is an ally who enters, Luang Chorn of the TMI Station. Maibaum describes him as "a youthful Yul Brynner, but with hair". His cover in this intrigue is no longer the luxury car business but silk's one.

Yul Brynner

Chorn hands Bond a cigarette case containing diamonds supplied by De Beers, which Q sent by diplomatic pouch. He informs Bond that Sten have two Dutch mistresses, sisters, who will be present at a fashion show on the hotel patio. They go there and Bond meets Katje and Hulda, whom Maibaum compares to Eva and Zsa Zsa Gabor.

Sisters Zsa Zsa, Magda and Eva Gabor.

Bond invites them to dinner with him and Chorn and tells them he is a gem dealer. At the end of the evening, Chorn goes to sabotage the girls' car, only to discover that they've already agreed to let Bond drive them home by his own charm.

At their/Sten's house, Bond shows them the diamonds; The girls tell him they have an "uncle" who might be interested. They seem to be making love in a threesome.

The next morning, the "nude" girls are by the pool when a car arrives. It's Sten and his henchman Hjalmar. Maibaum writes that it "might be amusing if Hjalmar is a Christine Jorgensen in reverse. A girl who became a man)"!

Bond who is still there goes to meet Sten and we discover with him that he looks like Gert Fröbe, "the only difference is his hair is a brilliantly shining white instead of golden". The girls introduce Bond as "Mr. Roberts" (the name he had given them). Sten noticed the surprise on Bond's face when they met, could it be possible that he had already crossed paths with his twin brother "who called himself" Auric Goldfinger? Yes, says Bond: he played golf with him once.

George William aka Christine Jorgensen, the first world famous transgender person.

Sten mocks his brother's behavior, including wanting to rob Fort Knox; their mother always thought Auric was a bit retarded. Sten says he's dedicated his life to redeeming his brother's reprehensible behavior, and that his brother's passion for gold caused his downfall.

> - Sten: Mine is diamonds. Compared to diamonds, gold is soft, dull, heavy, lifeless. Nothing in nature compares to the hardness and brilliance of a perfect diamond. It is indestructible. Long after the earth is a dead planet, the fire in them will still burn. Long after the stars in heaven flicker out. Diamonds are forever".

Bond tells him that he shares his enthusiasm and shows him the diamonds in his possession. Sten examines them and finds them atypical; he asks 007 if he plays backgammon. He pulls out a backgammon game (made with diamonds) and there are a series of shots of Bond playing with him for money while the girls watch. Eventually Bond realizes that Sten is cheating and uses the latter's loaded dice to win £50,000; which is reminiscent of the film Octopussy.

Sten asks Bond how he would have paid him if he had lost: with the diamonds, Bond says. Sten asks him if he have legals papers for these diamonds; Bond admits no and offers to sell them to him. Sten tells 007 to get the hell out of his house: he doesn't do business with people like him. The two sisters catch up with Bond and tell him that they will try to change Sten's mind.

Once Bond left, Sten phones Blofeld who is in Jakarta (Maibaum doesn't write down what they say to each other).

007 goes to a Thai boxing gym to work out and when he returns to his hotel he catches a boxer rummaging through his room. However "Bond being Bond knows all about Thai boxing and is expert at it"; he therefore kicks the ass of the intruder who then flees. Chorn comes to join 007: the boxer was probably looking for the diamonds, perhaps informed by Sten or one of his mistresses.

007 then goes for a walk near the Emerald Buddha, where he is followed by Wint and Kidd who "trying" to look like tourists. If Maibaum still says that Wint looks like Jonathan Winters, this time he compares Kidd to Robert Vaughn. Later Bond attends a puppet show which Maibaum finds "marvelously colorful". At the exit Wint and Kidd, hooded, attack him. Bond manages to beat them and loose them enough time to be able to phone Chorn and tell him where he is going, so that Chorn can tail the two killers when they will have robbed him of the diamonds.

007 goes to a public bathhouse where he undresses and enters a mud bath. Wint and Kidd, still wearing hoods, arrive and ask Bond where the diamonds are. Bond resists a bit to make it look convincing and give Chorn time to arrive; they try to drown him in mud until he speaks. Wint and Kidd recover the diamonds, leave Bond alive but gratuitously pour boiling mud on a female employee who was screaming for help. The pair leave, followed by Chorn.

Robert Vaughn, the actor that playing the spy Napoleon Solo in the series The Man from U.N.C.L.E. alongside David McCallum (cited by Maibaum to describe the character of Sri from a previous treatment).

Chorn sees the two killers handing over the diamonds to someone in the Erawan Hotel and calls Bond. 007 joins him. Chorn says he heard at reception that the person who currently have the diamonds is waiting for a certain Peter Franks to arrive. Bond knows Franks: he is a man wanted by the authorities in Bombay for embezzlement. Bond calls the room of the person who have the diamonds, saying he is Franks; he is told to come up.

Chorn watches the hall to see if the real Franks shows up: he does. Chorn phones Bond (there are telephones on the upper floors) and 007 knocks Franks out from behind as he exits the elevator. 007 hides the body in a room in the hotel, takes his papers and while Chorn guards Franks, Bond goes to the room of the person who have the diamonds. Its turns out to be a scantily dressed woman: Tiffany Case.

Thinking he is Franks, she tells him to deliver the diamonds to Jakarta where he will be paid for smuggling them there. Tiffany gives him Q's cigarette case (stolen by Wint and Kidd) that he can use for the smuggling part. She'll be there to watch him, with maybe other people. After leaving, Bond returns to Chorn and Franks; the latter decided to be cooperative according to Chorn.

After that, things start to happen like in the previous treatment. At Bangkok Airport, Bond boards a flight to Jakarta. Tiffany, Wint and Kidd are on the same plane as him. The two killers recognize Bond as the man from whom they robbed the diamonds. Arriving in Jakarta, Bond goes through customs (Maibaum writes that he hasn't yet found how to do it in a way that audience will appreciate). Bond receives a message from Chorn that he saw the two mud bath' killers board the plane.

Bond catches Tiffany's taxi and they are chased around the city. They get out of their taxi, Wint and Kidd get out of theirs. Bond takes the controls of a rickshaw and puts Tiffany in it (with a punch to the chin, since she resists). While Wint and Kidd search for them in the crowd, Bond and Tiffany change vehicles for a cart pulled by an ox and lose them.

They are now in the countryside, still with the cart, when it starts to rain (something that doesn't happen often in Bond films). Bond joins her under the cart pagoda; she accuses Bond of having double-crossed her and he says that he is the one who should feel offended given the presence of Wint and Kidd. Bond inspects the blow she received on the chin and asks her questions about the diamond smuggling network, to which she is (surprisingly) willing to answer. No matter where she collects the diamonds, their destination is always Jakarta. She has never heard of a Blofeld or Sten (except in the media). He tells her that someone is stockpiling diamonds, that he wants to get his hands on the stock and he is ready to share it with her:

> - Tiffany: Why should I believe all this?
> - Bond: No reason, except to get rich.
> - Tiffany: I'd like that.

One of them asks how to seal their arrangement: they make love coldly in the cart. When the rain stops she says to him:

> - Tiffany: You're a pro. You know all the motions.
> - Bond: You're pretty much of an expert yourself.

Tiffany tells him the story of her rape.

Later in Jakarta, they go together deliver the diamonds to Jadaputta in her theater. They run into Sten inside and he invites them into his box. While Tiffany watches the dance performance, Sten tells Bond that he learned more about him from a "close associate". Blofeld, Bond tells him. Sten confirms and offers to tell Bond where Blofeld and his diamonds are. 007 asks him why he would do that; Sten replies that he doesn't want to tell him the reason. He is, however, willing to take him to Bali in his private jet, a place where Bond can find both of his goals.

During the flight Tiffany tells Bond that it's nice of him to take her, then understands that he is doing this to prevent her from being tempted to go find Wint and Kidd. "You're a refreshing bitch, Miss Case", said Bond, impressed by her honesty and/or intelligence.

Arriving at the airstrip, Bond goes in a Land Rover with Hjalmar to Jadaputta's Palace. Hjalmar says he will go in first to see if Blofeld is there. While waiting for him, Bond is joined by Chorn who had followed them on his bike. They watch and see Jadaputta handing over the diamonds to Hjalmar.

Hjalmar returns and tells Bond that Blofeld is there, 007 sees him through a window and shoots him. As they leave the real Blofeld (surrounded by Wint and Kidd) goes to see the effigy of him that Bond actually shot.

Hjalmar takes Bond and Chorn to a cave where the diamonds stock is supposed to be hidden, under a sculpture. As Bond tries to dislodge it with a crowbar, Chorn hears a mechanism underneath and knocks Bond to the ground just before an explosion happens. The sculpture was booby-trapped and Chorn died protecting Bond.

Bond arrives at the airport after Hjalmar and knocks the latter out from behind. He collects the diamonds from his pockets, gets on the plane and order the pilot to take him to Sten, "I have a delivery to make to him, personally". The pilot takes him to Sten's oil tanker and lands on it.

Bond disguises himself as a member of the crew, locates Tiffany and discreetly explores the ship. The following day he sees the launch of the satellite made of diamonds. Sten wastes no time and already hacks the computers of a company in competition with its own.

Suddenly Blofeld and his henchmen arrive and take control of the SS Cassiopia. Bond reaches the place where Sten is incarcerated and learns everything from him: how he used Blofeld to obtain diamonds to make his satellite which he intended to use for industrial espionage/sabotage. Then Blofeld, wanting to make more money than from diamonds, had the ambition to use the satellite for other purposes (obtaining and reselling state secrets) and proposed a partnership to Sten. Having different views, Sten tried to kill Blofeld via Bond.

Bond steals the plane to reach M and inform him. Then there is the finale where a submarine sinks the tanker (and Sten plus Jadaputta with it) and the fight in the escape pod. Bond still throws Blofeld to the sharks but we don't see him get devoured because "this way we can always bring Blofeld back [in a future film] if we wish". The whole thing ends with Bond and Tiffany making love in the capsule.

This treatment being quite annotated by hand, Maibaum (or a secretary) retypes it to a more finale/presentable version. The new copy is then 37 pages long (but contains no difference with what we have just seen).

Focusing the story more on Hughes

Richard Maibaum begins the writing of a new three-page memo. It features Bond on a routine mission, investigating a diamond smuggling ring that appears to be linked to Blofeld. During the mission, Bond discovers that Howard Hughes has been kidnapped by Blofeld and that the latter is using his vast empire for the benefit of Spectre or China.

"Problem: what locales? What milieu comparable to underwater, or skiing, etc?". How much of a role does the revenge for Tracy have to play in the story? Do we want to include synthetic diamonds again?

"How to use few incidents in book people remember? Mud bath. Private railroad in/to ghost town. Bond climbing down side of ocean liner in storm to save Tiffany".

"Do we want to use Ferzetti [Draco] instead of Leiter?". What is Blofeld trying to accomplish with Hughes' empire? Give its experimental planes to China? Use them to bomb Western cities? Create an anti-satellite's satellites to attack Russia's ones and start a war? Get his hands on a new kind of missile developed by Hughes' companies?

Among Maibaum's other suggestions: Blofeld takes control of a secret Hughes's compound where Hughes is developing a weather-altering technology with the U.S. government! Blofeld would be then able to cause typhoons or melt the ice floes to drown North America underwater.

Another idea and not the least: use diamonds to create a laser which would be mounted on a satellite and used as a weapon to destroy targets on Earth.

Must we show the kidnapping of Hughes "much as we saw theft of atom bombs in Thunderball"? How does Bond discover that Hughes is not the real Hughes "like in Cubby's dream"? For Wint and Kidd, Maibaum describes them as "comparable to Red Grant".

Names for Hughes?: Wendell Wayne. Chester Cox. Gordon Greer. Martin Mayes.

June 30, 1970 treatment: when Maibaum lays the foundations of the film

On June 30, 1970, Richard Maibaum completed a new 9-page treatment. This time it was decided to abandon Southeast Asia and instead shoot the film in the United States and Europe.

The pre-title open with Bond defeating/interrogating Blofeld's henchmen in a colorful location in Europe, "Albania?" Barcelona?". Once Blofeld found, 007 riddles his body with bullets and flees in a (unexplained) Bondian fashion as the remaining henchmen pursue him.

Maibaum explains that this pre-title sequence have two uses. If one might think that one of them is to establish some sort of continuity with the ending of the previous film, that's not what Maibaum write. He say that it is primarily to "satisfy those fans who want to see Bond settle the score with Blofeld no matter who plays them". And second: make the audience believe that he is dead so that his appearance later in the film would not be anticipated.

After the credits, we find Bond and M at a diamond syndicate in London. One of its representatives tells them he's afraid that someone doing a stockpile, for one day threatens the diamond syndicates with flooding the market with it. Similar to the film, as they speak there are superimposed images of a dentist in Africa smuggling diamonds. Wint and Kidd murder him and take the diamonds to an old lady. 007's mission is to find out who is stockpiling the diamonds and where. To do this he will replace a smuggler named Peter Franks who must meet a certain Tiffany Case in Amsterdam.

We see Franks going to customs and Bond coming out in his place, getting into Franks' car and boarding a hovercraft. A camera shot shows Franks in custody inside the customs office. Arriving in Amsterdam, the police recover in water the body of the old lady near Wint and Kidd.

007 meets Tiffany, she discreetly checks the prints on the glass to confirm his identity. Tiffany tells him that he will soon receive 100,000 carats of diamonds and that he must find a way to smuggle them into Los Angeles.

Bond contacts Q to thank him for the false prints he provided, and learns that Franks has escaped. Q, disguised as a tourist, comes to visit Bond at his hotel to present him with various useful items for contraband.

Tiffany calls Bond back and when he goes to see her, he comes across the real Peter Franks who attacks him "brutally" (it's not specified how). 007 manages to defend himself and brings the diamonds to the United States using Franks' body: either hidden inside the coffin's icicles or directly inside the dead body.

Bond and Tiffany (and Wint and Kidd) arrive by plane in Los Angeles. Bond said he contacted a funeral service and a hearse driven by Felix Leiter came to them. 007 boards with Leiter and Franks' body, while Tiffany follows them in another car. Wint and Kidd also follow all these people, "on motorcycles?".

They arrive at a funeral home in Las Vegas where Franks' body is scheduled for cremation after the recovering of the diamonds. 007 gives the diamonds to Tiffany, she gives him the money for his contribution and leaves.

We find Bond at his hotel, while "we wonder why he lets her leave with diamonds when his job is to discover their destination". While paying a room attendant, 007 realizes that the banknotes Tiffany had given him are fake. He then tries to find her in town: without success.

However, he finds Tiffany in his own bed when he returns to his hotel. She admits to him that she was a naughty girl, but he was also not a good boy when he gave her fake diamonds. Maibaum explains to us that Bond did this because he knew that he wouldn't have discovered anything more by delivering real diamonds. But by giving fake ones he knew an action would be taken against him and that he would be able to know from where and from whom.

She tells him that he can have real money if he delivers the real stones to a "monstrous dwarf" named Shady Tree at Acme Baths. They seal this deal by making love.

Bond arrives there, hands over the diamonds to Shady but Wint and Kidd arrive and try to drown Bond in mud. However, "somehow", 007 arranges matters so that they kill Shady Tree instead.

Bond discreetly follows the two killers to the Flamingo Hotel where he sees them handing over the diamonds to a certain Stauffer. 007 runs into Tiffany who swears to him that she didn't know that a trap awaited him at the baths. She tells him that Stauffer is the right-hand man of "HH": a billionaire who lives reclusively and have interests in Vegas as well as in aviation, electronics and cinema. (The treatment never gives a name for this Howard Hughes-like character, he is only referred to by his initials "HH").

007 sees Wint and Kidd looking for someone. Thinking that they are there to kill Tiffany, he takes her away from them by taking her to a motel (where they make love). 007 phones Leiter to tell him that although it seems crazy to him, HH is connected to diamond smuggling. 007 wants to see the latter but it's impossible: the guy hasn't left his penthouse for years.

CAESARS PALACE
Flamingo
JULIET PROWSE
CORBETT MONICA
Flamingo
JULIET PROWSE SHOW
TONY MARTIN

The Flamingo in 1969. Although this treatment mentions a penthouse, the building wasn't very high at that time...

After several attempts, Bond manages to enter the Flamingo's kitchen. He prepares to climb into the dumbwaiter through which the dishes are sent to HH, when Leiter stops him. HH complained about Bond, Leiter has received order: 007 must leave the United States. Bond decides to knock out Leiter and take the dumbwaiter.

007 is surprised to find Blofeld up there instead of HH, and kills him again by emptying his Walther on him.

- (The real) Blofeld: Good evening, Mr. Bond.

Blofeld explains to 007 that he had shot a robot mannequin that looked just like him, twice. People like Bond having the annoying tendency to shoot him, Blofeld always takes one with him when he travels.

Frank Gorshin (1933-2005), famous American impersonator, actor, comedian.

They are discussing about the fact that Blofeld is posing as HH and has taking over his empire, when the phone rings. Suddenly Frank Gorshin, described by Maibaum as "the world's greatest impersonator", joins them! Gorshin picks up the phone for Blofeld and imitate HH's voice to perfection: he talks about a cargo for a satellite. Maibaum writes that they will have to invent a brilliant way for Bond to escape from the penthouse in the next scenes.

Bond with Tiffany goes to the HH Electronics factory in the Nevada desert in which he sees diamonds being placed on a satellite. 007 leaves the place (without being detected).

Sensing that something terrible is in the air, Bond thinks the best way to find out what it is would be to find out where the real HH is being held. Tiffany thinks he might be at a ranch where she used to visit him when she was one of his mistresses and/or actresses.

This is indeed the case: and release him, they do. According to HH, the satellite that Bond saw will be able to emit a laser beam, which could allow Blofeld to do several things such as hack computers or destroy atomic missiles (including in mid-flight).

Bond, Tiffany and HH go to the Vandenberg military base from which the satellite is to be launched, but arrive too late. HH says Blofeld needs to use a tape to control his satellite, so it's imperative they get their hands on it. They board a military plane to return to Las Vegas but discover that Blofeld is no longer at the Flamingo's penthouse: all they find are the bodies of Stauffer and Gorshin.

Blofeld is at the United Nations building in New York, where he is trying to sell the tape to the highest bidder! If the United States and Russia decide not to bid, China has fewer qualms. Bond shows up and "maybe" throws Blofeld off the roof of the building. In any case, the cassette is destroyed during the fight so that no nation can benefit from it.

UN headquarters in 1968.

The treatment ends with Bond and Tiffany on a cruise ship. 007 kills Wint and Kidd after rappelling down to Tiffany's cabin. They look up in the sky at Blofeld's satellite, still in orbit, "beautiful but useless forever and ever".

The screenwriter concludes with a note saying that this is the bulk of the story, that there is still little work to be done: "need more dames, more sex" and more gambling in Vegas, but that it's not something insurmountable to add.

Darlene O'Toole, G-strings and Hoover dam

Another document of a few pages (I'm missing the beginning) has Bond drinking champagne in his bath with Leiter. It is said that Bond replaced the diamonds with fake ones before they tried to incinerate him (with the counterfeit banknotes at the same time). Now his plan is to step into the spotlight to see who will make a move to get the real diamonds back. He asks Leiter who is the girl that all men want: Darlene O'Toole, answers Leiter.

She's a girl who have a sort of striptease act, Bond in a white tuxedo goes to meet her in her dressing room (where she has a collection of ornately decorated G-strings). She is immediately interested by him when he shows her his (fake) money. They go to the casino together, Bond wins money and there is a photo of him published in the newspaper with a caption that Peter Franks won the jackpot on his first visit to Vegas.

Bond is making love to Darlene when he receives a phone call from Shady who wants to speak with him. 007 will meet him in the ghost town of Rhyolite. They appear to be playing stud poker when Shady notices Bond using counterfeit bills. Some thugs then beat up Bond.

Ghost town of Rhyolite, Nevada.

007 returns to his hotel where he finds Tiffany in his bed. They make love and she suggests leaving with the diamonds to go live in Rio. Bond tells her where the diamonds are: in Darlene's strings collection. Tiffany goes to collect them and gives them to Shady. As Leiter follows Shady; Wint and Kidd kill Darlene, mistaking her for Tiffany.

Bond shows Tiffany that it could have been her dead and she is now more cooperative. She tells Bond that Shady is delivering the diamonds to someone at the Tiara Hotel (fictional casino from the novel). They go there and see Shady handing over the diamonds to Korper, the right-hand man of a character that Maibaum temporarily names "Tycoon".

Bond tries to arrange a meeting with Tycoon but is unable to see him in person. On the other hand, he is able to get him on the telephone. If Tiffany confirms that it is indeed Tycoon's voice, Bond needs more confirmation and tries to force his way past the guards at the entrance of Tycoon's private elevator. Leiter informs 007 that he received orders to make him leave the country. Bond knocks Leiter out and, using some sort of magnetic suction cups, climbs the ventilation duct to reach the penthouse.

Arriving up there he finds Blofeld instead of Tycoon. Bond shoots a robot/mannequin that looks like him before the real Blofeld makes his entrance. Blofeld now uses some sort of gadget that imitates Tycoon's voice (instead of Frank Gorshin).

007 eventually escapes, using his magnetic suction cups to climb down a few floors from the face of the building (during the process he enters through a window into a "room where orgy or something is going on"!).

Bond then goes to Blofeld's secret factory in the desert but is captured by Leiter once he emerges. 007 convinces him to trust him and they call Blofeld with a gadget that imitate Korper's voice. They go to the ranch where Tycoon is being held but Blofeld has increased security since he spoke to the real Korper and realized he had been fooled. Maibaum says this may be an opportunity to firmly tie Wint and Kidd to Blofeld.

Once Tycoon has been freed, he informs Bond that it is a satellite that Blofeld is building. They go to Vandenberg to prevent its launch but arrive too late. One hope remains: Russia have an interceptor satellite that could destroy it. They go after Blofeld, "by Boulder Dam?" Into Grand Canyon? Down rapids?" (Boulder Dam was an alternative name for Hoover Dam). Blofeld is "apparently" killed and there is the finale on the cruise ship with Wint and Kidd. Once rid of them, Bond and Tiffany look skyward as Russia destroys Blofeld's satellite.

On another document Maibaum writes loose ideas, including these: "Must go to dam because power being used to operate" and "Blofeld flees across Lake Mead. Navy pursues [him]. He escapes somehow although his boat crashes into [the] dam". A drawing was even made (by Matthew Maibaum, it's seems) showing an "Acme" truck containing on its roof a sort of dish (for the satellite) connected by electrical cables to the Hoover Dam.

And a script

On September 11, 1970, Richard Maibaum completed the writing of a 137-page script for the film. The copy we are going to talk about is punctuated by revisions from September 17, 21, 25, 28 and October 1.

The gunbarrel opens in a North African town in which a Moroccan named Brahim and James Bond (in a white tuxedo) are staring at each other. As they follow each other through the streets, Brahim draws a dagger, Bond jumps on him and disarms him. After subduing him, Bond takes out a photo of Blofeld and shows it to Brahim, asking him where Blofeld is:

- Brahim: Why should I tell you? Who are you?
- Bond: Bond. James Bond. Licensed to kill.

Hearing the name and seeing him taking out his Walther, Brahim turns pale: he "obviously having seen the films" (of Bond), surprisingly writes Maibaum to say that he knows the reputation of 007!

While Bond asks again for Blofeld's location, we see Blofeld at the wheel of his car, heading towards a villa (Moorish style) by the sea. Bond also approaches the villa and climbs a wall. While Blofeld goes to join a certain Doctor Moreau, 007 arrives at the reception where he comes across a Leila who understands that he is certainly not there for surgery (we then understand that the villa is a sort of clinic). Bond shows her Blofeld's photo, she tells him he's not there.

Bond then discreetly goes to explore the villa and sees four men wearing bandages on their faces leaving the villa, each in a different car. 007 doesn't know which one is Blofeld. Frustrated, Bond go back to the receptionist girl and we find him later in her bedroom, after having made love to her. After this, Leila is a little more talkative, proof of which is the tip she gives him about Blofeld.

We see Bond leave and go to a hammam where he settles into a mud bath. Once the employees leave, the person in the mud bath next him approaches 007 with a gun in his hand. Bond throws mud in his opponent's eyes before that one fires, and throws on him a knife he had hidden near his towel. Bond approaches the dead man who received the knife in his throat, 007 washes the man's face: it is Blofeld.

After the credits (with lots of types of jewelry on women from all around the world), we find Bond and M at the building of Diamond Syndicate, together with a Sir Donald Munger. While Bond is served a Dom Perignon, Munger tells them that diamond smuggling has increased over the past two years but that the stones are not resurfacing on the market. If the price of real diamonds fell, it would obviously be a disaster for the Syndicate, but also for the government which would lose millions in taxes. "I assume that's why the P.M. pulled in my Section", M comments. When Munger asks 007 what he knows about diamonds:

- Bond: Hardest substance found in nature, and I can't afford any. That's about it.
- M: Refreshing to hear there's a subject you're not an expert on...

There are camera shots showing the mining process as Munger describes it and says the industry is pride of the loyalty of its workers, "largely due, I'm sure, to extensive social services. Medical facilities are excellent...".

As in the film we see workers and a dentist, who are not really loyal to the industry.

Mr. Wint and Mr. Kidd are watching a fight between a beetle and a scorpion. The two men are described as two Americans who are not muscular. Wint is older and bigger than Kidd. (Kidd sometimes calls Wint "Winnie"). Hearing the dentist approaching on a moped, they hide in a bush. They jump on him from behind and knock him to the ground. Seeing that the dentist is still alive, Wint and Kidd place the scorpion on his chest, with a hat on top to hold him there. Hidden from the camera by the hat, the scorpion obviously kills the dentist.

Wint then prepares to kill the scorpion by hitting it with a stone but Kidd stops him: they let the scorpion escape. A helicopter approaches, they give the pilot a package containing a bomb, then go to join Mrs. Whistler to deliver the diamonds.

M tells Bond and Munger that they will begin their investigation with Perter Franks, a smuggler scheduled to meet a certain T. Case in Amsterdam. When boarding the hovercraft, Bond takes Franks' place (and car). (Moneypenny doesn't appear there; in fact she doesn't appear in the entire script). 007 arrives in Amsterdam just as Mrs. Whistler's body is found nearby in the canal.

Bond goes to Tiffany Case's apartment where a scene similar to the film takes place, despite slightly different dialogue. Maibaum notably describes the thing as "a sort of strip-tease in reverse" since Tiffany wears more clothes each time she appears in front of 007. At the end of the scene, Tiffany says to him:

> - Tiffany: I never socialize with business associates.
> - Bond: Discrimination. It's everywhere.

Bond leave and thanks Q for the fake prints, he asks him to come. Q therefore joins 007 at the Amstel Hotel and presents him with a variety of items to help him to smuggle the diamonds to the United States. This includes a cigar box and hollow golf balls:

> - Bond: Frankly, Q, I expected something more amusing from you...
> - Q: Then how about enlisting the aid of a confederate with a hollow wooden leg?

This refers to the following words of Tiffany in the novel: "Got a wooden leg? False teeth? [...] I'm always telling them to find me a man with a wooden leg". In the novel, Bond also smuggles the diamonds to the United States in hollow golf balls.

Q informs Bond that Franks has escaped. 007 says he will ask the Dutch authorities to cut Tiffany's phone so that Franks doesn't contact her, and goes to her building to wait for him. When Franks arrives in the building, Bond gets in the elevator with him. Inside 007 attacks Franks who then defends himself; the scene ends with the fire extinguisher and Franks death while he falling down the stairs.

- Tiffany: Do you know him?
- Bond: I've tangled with him before: James Bond, British agent.
- Tiffany: James Bond? The famous Double-O-Seven? Licensed to kill?
- Bond: Oh, you've heard of him?
- Tiffany: In our business who hasn't?

She finds on the body the wallet that Bond had switched on. They then take a plane to Los Angeles, a plane in which Wint becomes airsick. When they arrive, Bond is awaited by Mr. Slumber and a man named Barry; Bond meets Leiter who is disguised as a customs agent who is inspecting Franks' coffin. 007 joins Slumber and Barry's hearse, they tell him that there is a car for him and Tiffany, but Bond insists on boarding with them.

As they leave the airport, Tiffany is still in customs where there is a lady who tells her that they are not finished yet and asks her to lie down. "Tiffany glares at her, gets on table, lies back. Matron puts on rubber glove".

As it's clear that she's going to get a rectal search, the camera cuts to the hearse heading to Las Vegas, to "Slumber Bros". The coffin is cremated and Bond receives the diamonds in an urn. It isn't long before Wint and Kidd knock out Bond similarly to the film and place him in a coffin en route to his cremation. Bond, however, is saved by Shady Tree who has noticed that the diamonds delivered by Bond are fakes and who wants to know where the real ones are.

- Bond: You'll only shove me back if I tell you.
- Shady: I will if you don't!
- Bond: Really?

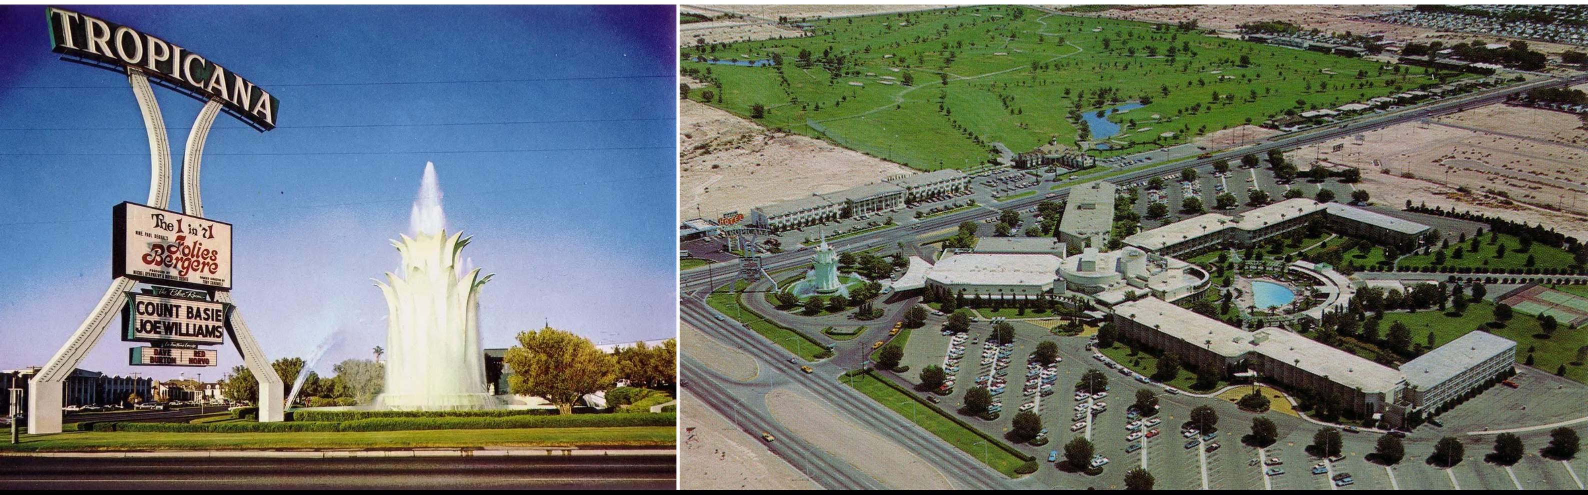
And that's really what Shady does: the coffin with Bond gets close to the fire again before Slumber tells Shady to stop because they'll never get the diamonds if Bond die. 007 comes out of the coffin and says that he will only give the diamonds to the big boss, "he's there because he can be trusted". Shady tells him that he doesn't know who the big boss is. It's his problem, Bond tells him; he will wait at the Tropicana while waiting for news from them.



The Tropicana at that time... Maibaum will have Bond go to Folies Bergères announced on the establishment's entrance sign.

There is a scene where 007 arrives at the Tropicana Hotel in a hearse he got from Slumber and hands it over to a valet, telling him to park it wherever he wants and that his luggage is in the back. Inside the casino, Bond (in a white tuxedo) approaches a slot machine and plays it while Leiter disguised as a maintenance technician approaches him. Meanwhile a man (not so discreetly) watches over Bond.

- Leiter: You're a little over-dressed yourself. This isn't Monte Carlo.

Bond tells him that he may need the real diamonds soon and that the opposition has had a "lovely barbecue" in his honor. After that Bond goes to play at a card table near which there is a pretty girl:

- Plenty: I'm Plenty O'Tool.
- Bond: You certainly are. Oh, it's your name...

Bond wins at the game, which certainly pleases Plenty. He gives him some bills, realizes that he inadvertently gave her the fake ones and then exchanges them for real ones. They go together to a restaurant where there is a Folies Bergères musical number with naked girls. Plenty, who doesn't really like him looking at what she calls skin-and-bone girls, tells him that he must strike while the iron is still hot. So she takes him to bet in various casinos of the city: the Sands, the Landmark, the Flamingo, etc...

Finally they go to bet at Caesar Palace where they can see a certain Saxby. They then return Tropicana to Bond's room. He is busy making love to Plenty when two gangsters accompanied by Tiffany burst in. Tiffany signals the gangsters to throw Plenty out the window where she falls into the pool:

- Bond: I hope she can swim.
- Tiffany: Never mind her, you double-crossing fink!

She sends the goons away to talk in private and starts kissing him:

- Tiffany: I've been waiting for this, ever since Amsterdam
- Bond: I must say you kept that rather confidential...

She says she wants to run away with him and the diamonds, then takes him to bed where they have sex together, before taking a shower together.

> - Bond: I'm curious. What would you have done with my ashes? Scatter them from a high windy hill at sunset?
> [...]
> - Tiffany: We're the greatest, aren't we?
> - Bond: Nothing like it since Victoria and Albert.

Bond make an appointment with Tiffany at the Circus Circus casino like in the film. Before going there, Tiffany goes to her house, the phone rings: it's Plenty. O'Tool says she doesn't hold a grudge and that although she marked her territory on Bond first, there may be enough room for both of them. Tiffany hangs up and goes to Circus Circus where she is observed by Bond and agents.

A salesman (Leiter) attracts her and shows her his peanuts which encase diamonds. She collects them then notices that she is being followed; she goes to the ladies' room where she tries to open a window overlooking a fire escape. Someone walks in and she stops. Tiffany comes out of the bathroom and goes to an act where a woman (named Goona) is supposed to transform into a gorilla; she manages to escape surveillance similar to the film.

Tiffany returns home where Bond is waiting for her; there is also the body of Plenty (lying on the bed with a plastic bag over her head). He makes her understand that the men who did this had undoubtedly come to kill her (Tiffany). Bond tells her to come with him; since she refuses he slaps her a few times. Tiffany hesitates then begins to obey him.

Shady Tree is performing at a place called the "Plush Pussy", watched by Wint and Kidd. After Tree's number there is a striptease one: "Isn't he beautiful?", Kidd comments about a muscular man that swaying his hips.

Bond and Tiffany go to see Tree at the Plush Pussy and comes across three naked beauties playing Scrabble in the dressing rooms.

> - First girl: Somebody stole our G-strings.
> [...]
> - Second girl: How do you spell "viable"?

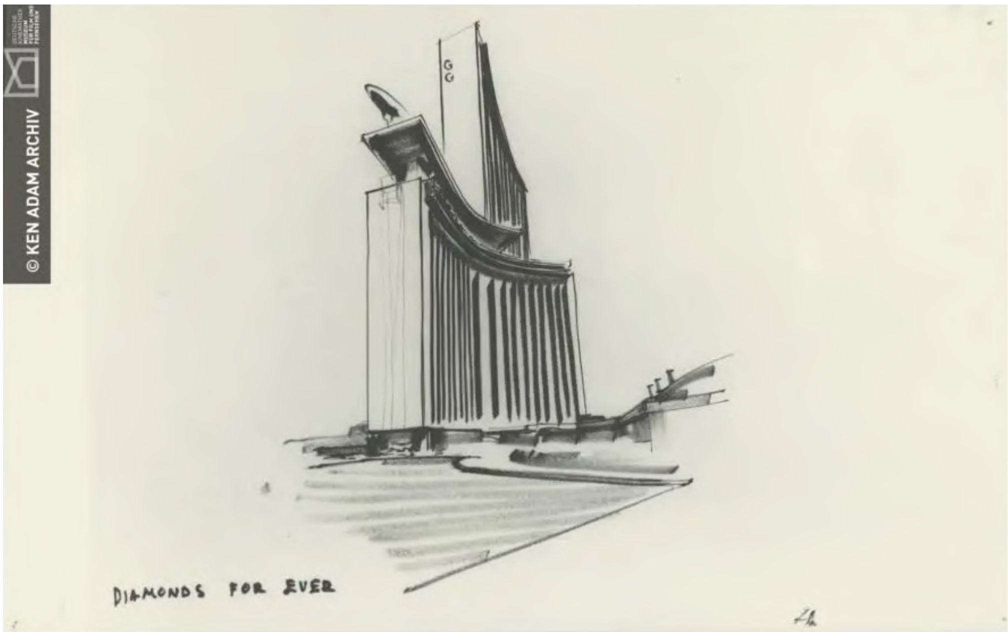
They enter Tree's friend's dressing room and come across the lifeless bodies of Shady, Slumber and Barry; strangled with G-strings. They go to the airport with Tiffany's car (brand and model not specified) to collect the diamonds she had left in a locker. On the way they are escorted by Leiter in a police car. They arrive in time to see a porter bringing the diamonds to a man in a (Ford) Thunderbird.

They follow the Thunderbird to an evacuation canal where it enters a concrete blockhouse which raises and lowers by using a remote control as the car passes. Bond, Tiffany (and Leiter) who didn't see this are mystified to have lost track of the Thunderbird. Leiter tells Bond that he recognized the man who was behind the wheel: Burt Saxby. He is the right-hand man of Gordon Grant, the billionaire who is living in seclusion at his Tiara's suit since five years. 007 wonders why someone with Grant's financial means would acquire contraband diamonds rather than buying legal ones.

Bond, Leiter and Tiffany therefore go to the Tiara which is described as a 14-story building, "something like the Landmark".



"GG" for Gordon Grant in this Ken Adam's early concept art for the Howard Hughes-based character's hotel-casino.

007 notices a private elevator leading to Grant's penthouse, but a guard is posted in front of it. Bond books a room in the hotel-casino under the name "John Smith" and goes there with Tiffany. Bond sees her running out of the room and catches her, brings her back and tells her to forget her former partners who want to kill her anyway.

Tiffany tells him that she thinks she is in love with him, a feeling she hasn't had since her gang rape when she was thirteen. She tells him she also understood that he is not Peter Franks but James Bond, which "explains a lot" of things. They end up in bed together after Bond told her not to be afraid of her feelings for him and "Why waste a hundred-dollars-a-day bridal suite?".

Leiter comes to join them. This is the first time Tiffany really meets him (aside from the time he was disguised as a peanut seller).

- Leiter: How's that mole on your left cheek? The matron gave me a full report.

Leiter tells Bond that Washington wants him to wait before going after Gordon Grant, he has been ordered to expel him of the country if he doesn't see it that way. "Sorry, Felix", Bond says before throwing a punch that knocks Leiter out. Well not really, Leiter pretend to be knocked out in order to be able to officially deny what 007 is about to do: climb the ventilation duct of his hotel room to reach the penthouse above. Bond uses magnetic suction cups for this purpose.

Inside the duct there are moving blades of the ventilation system: Bond cuts an electrical cable to stop them. Arriving at the penthouse, Bond finds Blofeld and a certain Metz around diamonds on a table. Bond is surprised to discover Blofeld alive and takes out his Walther to kill him but Blofeld presses a remote control and a panel of bulletproof glass separates the room in two to protect him. Blofeld watches Bond emptying his gun then try to hit the window with it in vain.

- Blofeld: [...] Translucent fiberglass, semi-rigid but many times stronger than steel. One of the devices installed by Mr. Grant to ensure his privacy.

Bond realizes that he had killed a double of his enemy in the pre-title. Blofeld says that while he's enjoyed fighting 007 in the past, he's "somewhat occupied tonight". He tells Bond that he can leave the premises using the elevator and warns him that any future action taken against him will result in the death of the real Grant.

- Bond: Our personal account still isn't settled. You owe me a life.

- Blofeld: But, my dear chap, I'm just giving you yours.

Bond enters the elevator which, like in the film, fills with a sleeping gas. Wint and Kidd put him in the trunk of a car and go through the casino's secret exit. They stop to pick up Metz in a parking lot and drop him off at Grant's desert factory where satellites are being manufactured. Wint and Kidd then continue their journey and stop at another location in the desert.

At daybreak, we see a dog approach Bond: "there is an adhesive tape gag ever his mouth. He has been left up to his neck in a pit filled with concrete, now hardened. Only his head remain sticking out of it". To top it off, a rattlesnake is approaching his head. And the icing on the cake: he is in the path of construction vehicles (bearing the Grant logo) which are building a pipeline, "he realizes pipe-layer will run over him"".

So how will Bond escape this time? Well, the driver of one of the vehicles notices Bond and stops a few inches from his head. They pull him out of the concrete with sledgehammers, asking him who did this to him: a "couple of good mixers", replies Bond.

We later see 007 arriving in a construction jeep at the Boulder/Hoover Dam and stopping at a phone booth from which he informs Leiter that Blofeld has taken Grant's place. He asks him to get a voice modifier like Blofeld have.

Q arrives at the Las Vegas airport, "dressed in a style he considers appropriate for a visit to Las Vegas, including boots and a western hat". He tests a gadget of his own on the airport slot machines: he pockets the jackpot every time. Bond arrives and tells him that it's very mischievous of him, Q replies that his objective is noble: a pure scientific experiment.

At Tiara, Q briefly goes to speak with Saxby about the Vegas girls, to get a sample of his voice. 007 calls Blofeld pretending to be Saxby (with "perhaps" split-screen shots to show them both on the phone simultaneously). Bond thus learns that Gordon Grant is being held at "Bar G" ranch.

It's a ranch with herds, cowboys in jeeps and ponies, a swimming pool and an airstrip with a private jet. There's also a small western town in it, restored to its 1880 glory. Tiffany also specifies that "Grant bought the place from some eastern nut whose thing was the old west". A barbed wire fence surrounds the compound.

- Cubby Broccoli[4] : We needed a ranch to shoot certain sequences. I knew Howard [Hughes] had bought one some time before from a German industrialist, but, as we might have expected, no one could get in to see it. I wanted to see if it was suitable for our purposes. I talked to Howard's friend and associate Walter Kane and told him what I wanted. He came back to me saying he had "word from the penthouse" that it was OK for me to go into the ranch. We went there with art directors and the crew, identified ourselves to the guards on the gate and were waved in. "Word from the penthouse" had filtered through to them, too. The ranch was lovely, though too small for the scenes we had in mind.

Bond and Tiffany arrive at the entrance of the ranch by car; there is an old man who tells them that they cannot go any further. As Bond tries to enter, the old man takes out a shotgun and shoots them, Bond accelerates and moves away from the ranch.

Later on a road, Bond and Tiffany ambush a truck that is coming to deliver straw to the ranch. It consists of Tiffany on the side of the road pretending that her car broke down.

Bond threatens the driver who got out of the truck with a wrench, "don't make me use this". The driver asks who they are: "Bonnie and Clyde", replies 007.

Bond at the wheel of the truck approaches the entrance of the ranch and overpowers the old man when the latter comes up to him; Tiffany takes his shotgun. They are unaware that they are being observed through binoculars by the "Baroness", whom Maibaum describes like an "ugly Rosa Klebb-Irma Bunt type" of girl, who is wearing western outfit "usually associated with Dale [Evans] Rogers". Blofeld having spoken to Saxby and discovered that he had not called him, he warned the "baroness" of Bond's arrival.

Bond and Tiffany are driving the truck through the property when they are shot at. 007 stops the vehicle, hides under it, then runs to a forklift used to transport bales of straw with which he drives through his attackers; sending a few flying. Meanwhile, the Baroness receives orders from Blofeld to liquidate Grant.

Bond arrives at a stable where there is a horse named Bronco. He tries to put it between him and his pursuers but the horse kicks him (or tries to kick him) with its hind legs. 007 gets on Bronco which takes him to the western town's part of the property while he have difficulty staying on it (the horse eventually ejects him).

Bond enters the saloon, a guard approaches with a revolver, "gun ready for shoot-out in classic western style". Bond grabs a water hose near a faucet and uses it on the guard.

007 walks towards a building that was a forge, attacks a guard with a branding iron and knocks him out of action by throwing an anvil at his foot. In the western town part there is also a train station with a train whose steam locomotive is named "Cannonball" (and whose description paraphrases the words from the novel). The Baroness gets on board and the train begins to move away; Bond manages to get on board. Behind them, Tiffany boards a handcar to follow them.

Inside the train, two beautiful, well-built women dressed like the Baroness stand in Bond's way. They attack him in hand-to-hand combat and Bond finds himself in "the toughest, dirtiest, no-holds-barred struggle in his life. The girls are as rough as Oddjob but much quicker". They use various acrobatics and techniques against Bond, including karate and jiu-jitsu. Maibaum doesn't give names to these two characters and specifies that the fight, of which he currently doesn't know all the details, will have to be designed by expert stuntmen.

While Bond fights the two girls, the train stops. The Baroness gets off and heads, revolver in hand, to the carriage where Grant is being held. 007 manages to overpower the girls and arrives just in time to interrupt the Baroness before she shoots. The Baroness picks up the revolver that fell on the ground and is about to kill 007 when Tiffany shows up and kills her with the old man's shotgun.

Bond and Tiffany then explain to Grant that they are there to free him.

Leiter and his agents launch an assault on the Tiara penthouse but don't find Blofeld, who has escaped through a trap door to the suite below. Wint and Kidd escort Blofeld disguised as a widow through Leiter's agents.

Meanwhile, Bond, Tiffany and Grant are on the latter's jet. Grant thinks that Metz and Blofeld are developing a laser with the diamonds in order to equip a satellite with it. They learn (too late) that the satellite must be launched from Vandenberg base. They go to the factory in the desert where the satellite was made and Grant's theory is confirmed (here Grant has an assistant named Van Norden, probably not the best name Maibaum could came up with since it is close to "Vandenberg").

There is then a series of shots where Blofeld destroys things with his laser satellite (the beam of which is invisible); and not the least given that we are talking here about the torch of the Statue of Liberty and a star of the Kremlin! There are also more strategic targets like a Polaris submarine and Russian missile silos. In any case, Maibaum plans to use miniatures to film this destruction.

- Grant: All I can tell you is the ground control unit would require an enormous source of power.

007 thinks back to the time he was stuck in concrete while Grant workers were building a pipeline near Hoover Dam. He deduces that Blofeld must pump the current from the dam.

Blofeld and Metz are in fact near an old mine equipped with a stamp mill, where the electricity is achemined. Suddenly his power goes out, Blofeld sends his men to investigate and sees an American military plane approaching towards his direction and launching a missile/rocket at him. Blofeld takes refuge in the mine as the stamp mill explodes and it is revealed that the plane's pilot is Grant (Tiffany is also on board).

Troops arrive in ground vehicles, including Bond and Leiter in a buggy. They approach an injured Metz who says a few words to them before die:

- Metz: I helped him... To destroy... Nuclear weapons... Of Russia... The United States... For mankind...
- Leiter: For mankind? Blofeld?
- Bond: Rubbish! That's what he told the scientists! Who'd benefit, Felix?
- Leiter: Red China!
- Bond: I don't know what Blofeld's getting from them, asylum, money, a medal as a hero Of the Chinese People's Republic, but if they can knock out all nuclear capacity except their own...

(What Blofeld gains from this will never be explained and this theory that Blofeld is doing this for China will never even be confirmed in the entire script). Bond knows that "Blofeld always has an escape route"; he interrogate one of his men about it: it's at Lake Mead.

Arriving there, Bond boards with Leiter in a boat belonging to the Tiara. Other boats leave the marina: each belonging to various Las Vegas casinos such as the Tropicana, the Desert Inn, the Dunes etc... There is plenty of variety in their designs (for example the Ceasar Palace boat will possibly go be in the shape of a Roman galley). The owners of these establishments are visibly upset to have been fooled by Blofeld who was posing as Grant (or at least we can imagine, since the reason for their presence is never explained).

- Bond: Las Vegas expects every man to do his duty.

They help Bond and Leiter to search every nook/cove/boat of the lake for Blofeld while Grant and Tiffany also search from the air. Suddenly a boat speeds near Bond, seeming to flee, and Bond and Leiter give chase. The driver is not clearly visible (he is wearing some sort of hood). There are aerial shots of all the casinos boats starting to pursue what appears to be Blofeld. The suspicious boat heads straight towards the Hoover Dam and crashes into it. Bond and Leiter fish out the body and discover that it was Saxby, and not Blofeld, they had chased all along and who killed himself. They find a fuel receipt from an airfield in his pockets.

- Tom Mankiewicz[5] : On Diamonds Are Forever we got a call telling us that our boats were ready for the boat chase, on Lake Mead. Except there wasn't any boat chase on Lake Mead. Harry had gotten two dozen boats and they were sitting there: the boat chase had been in an earlier version of the script.

There is then a scene where Bond is water skiing with some sort of kite behind the Tiara's boat. He rises into the air as Grant approaches with his plane to collect him in the air! Tiffany opens the plane door and Bond climbs inside.

Blofeld (who have with him a microfilm with all the plans of his satellite) climbs into a plane near Temple Bar Marina and takes off. Bond, Grant and Tiffany start chasing him near some sort of mountain. For one reason or another not defined in the script, Blofeld's plane seems to have a technical problem and he ejects from it by parachute. Bond dons a parachute and jumps after him as Blofeld's plane crashes to the ground. But surprise, Blofeld's parachute is not ordinary:

"The chute suddenly inflates and becomes a balloon [...]: a para-balloon. The canopy itself is double and can be inflated like a bag by gas from a canister strapped to chutist's waist. [...] The altitude desired can be achieved by controlling the amount of gas in the bag, and it can be re-converted into a parachute by completely emptying it". The principle of the hot air balloon.

Bond continues to fall while Blofeld rises while drawing a gun. 007 tries to avoid his opponent's shots by directing his parachute and manages to land on the ground. Blofeld is still trying to shoot him when suddenly Grant smash with his plane into his balloon. Blofeld falls about ten meters to the vegetation.

Blofeld is however still alive, and Bond begins chasing him on foot; they respectively shoot each other. They enter a cave located in the mountain (Maibaum imagines the Lehman Caves as a filming location) where they fight hand-to-hand because they no longer have ammunition. Each time one projects the other onto natural columns it produces a different "deep musical tone" which produces a symphonic effect.

Blofeld tries to escape, runs, and suddenly disappears. Bond discovers that his adversary has fallen into a deep hole (at the bottom of which there is water). Maibaum uses a line that he had already tried to place in On Her Majesty's Secret Service:

> - Bond: May he rests in pieces…

Outside there is a camera shot of a mountain goat swallowing the microfilm that Blofeld had accidentally dropped during the chase.

Later in San Francisco, Bond and Tiffany prepare to board a cruise ship heading to Tahiti, compliments of Gordon Grant. Before leaving, Leiter informs Bond that Blofeld's body (and the microfilm) have still not been found. Bond is on the phone with Tiffany's cabin when she gets kidnapped by Wint and Kidd. They tie her in the bathtub and cut her veins.

Bond enters the room through the porthole after lowering the hull with a rope. He rolls in front of Kidd who tries to attack him with a blowgun and Wint who tries to kill him with bolas. Since Bond dodged their attack, Wint and Kidd inadvertently kill each other: Wint takes the poisoned dart from the blowgun in neck and Bond eject a knocked out by bolas Kidd out of the liner's porthole.

A little later we see that Tiffany is still tied up: "Just keep holding me… Forever". Bond tells her that nothing is forever, except what happened to Wint and Kidd... As well as "that useless hunk of jewellery up there", pointing to the satellite in the sky. END.

Richard Maibaum talked about this script during an interview with Starlog in 1983, but his memory seems to have gotten a little confused since he mentioned Goldfinger:

> - Richard Maibaum[6] : What I had was this fleet of boats in pursuit of Goldfinger because he gave the city such a bad name. They wanted to do something patriotic to catch this terrible villain. I thought I had one of the best lines in the entire series when Bond, in the lead boat, broadcasts to the fleet, "Las Vegas expects every man to do his duty", a take-off on what Admiral Horatio Nelson said at Trafalgar. Just for the sake of the line, I was heartbroken when they rejected it. [My] smash ending [became] an interminable thing on an oil rig.

Tom Mankiewicz makes his entrance to the saga

Promotional photo from Skin Tight in the 90s (an aborted film that Tom Mankiewicz was supposed to direct).

Thomas Frank Mankiewicz[7] was born in the United States on June 1, 1942, into a family that made a name for itself in the film industry. His father Joseph Mankiewicz was a screenwriter/producer (and later also a director, like in 1963 with Cleopatra), his mother Rose Stradner was an actress and his uncle Herman Mankiewicz was a screenwriter (whose credits include Citizen Kane).

During his youth, Tom Mankiewicz studied drama at Yale University. Before receiving his diploma (1963), Mankiewicz, then aged 18, worked as a production assistant on The Comancheros (1961), a western with John Wayne. He continued to work as an assistant on two more films before trying to break out as a screenwriter. "So I wrote an original screenplay… about the last 90 minutes of a young actress's life, in between the time she took the pills and the time she died. It was optioned about five times by four different studios for five different actresses, and never made. But I worked off it because it had gone to Universal and some people had read it there", said Mankiewicz.

Someone indeed recommended him for rewriting an episode of Bob Hope Presents the Chrysler Theatre in 1966 and it became it first writing credit. In 1968 he wrote the film The Sweet Ride.

Now in 1970, Mankiewicz was working on the writing of Georgy Girl, a Broadway musical based on the 1966' film of the same name and featuring English characters. The play did not last long, but United Artists president David Picker was in the audience of one of the four performances.

After George Lazenby, United Artists was keen to bring Sean Connery back into the role that had made him known to the world for Diamonds Are Forever, despite American actor John Gavin having signed on in late January 1971 to play James Bond in the film[8]. To do this, United Artists thought that, in addition to a big check, they needed a good script in order to convince the Scotsman to accept. And a big check Connery definitely had: a Guinness World Record one at the time (plus few more advantage like financial compensation if shooting went over schedule and a possibility of financial backing by UA of two movie of his choice)[9].

According to Mankiewicz: at a dinner, Cubby Broccoli explained to David Picker something like: "Here's the deal: I need a total rewrite on Diamonds Are Forever. I need an American writer and I want him to be young. Most of the picture takes place in Vegas. The Brits don't write people in Vegas well, but I need someone who can write in the British idiom and it's impossible to find someone"[10]. Picker then suggested Mankiewicz to Broccoli (or at least it was how Mankiewicz understood it)[11].

At the age of 27 or 28, Mankiewicz was originally hired on Diamonds Are Forever for only two weeks at a salary of $1,500 per week[12] (for comparison, Maibaum's salary for the film was around $5,000 per week). "Cubby said: I want you to rewrite the first thirty pages and hand them in, and let's see what we do", remembers the screenwriter[13]. "The phone rang one day and [...] [Broccoli] said two words: Keep going, and hung up"[14]. (Mankiewicz will end up staying until the end of the film).

"They sent the 60 pages to Sean and he said he liked it", Mankiewicz said[15]. Connery asked the screenwriter's age and when he got his answer, he said "tell the boyo to keep working"[16]. "He always called me boyo [and still calls me to this day] because I was so much younger, and I guess that's a Scottish expression", explains the Mankiewicz[17].

Mankiewicz notably went to Las Vegas with the production during filming and remembers that Cubby offered to put him up in a nice suite. "But, Cubby, if we get him a suite, that's more money than we're paying him a week", exclaimed the production manager. "I didn't ask you what it costs, Milton [Feldman]. He's writing the fuckin' movie. Get him a suite", Broccoli retorted[18].

- Tom Mankiewicz[19] : [When] Sean [arrived in Vegas he] asked for a meeting with me [and Guy Hamilton] right away, and went through the script. Most of his suggestions or questions were about other people's parts. I've never met such an unselfish actor. Most of the time, when you go through a script with an actor, 100 percent of it is about him or her.

Johanna Harwood also once said something very similar of the actor: "what struck me most about him: he was interested in the story, not just his role. [...] I seen awful lot of actors who are only interested in their own part"[20].

"Sean said to me: You know, [Plenty O'Toole's name] really sort of refers to a male organ. Would you mind if I said, Named after your father?"[21]. "I said: It's a great line. But the very fact that he asked me, I was [only] 27 years old, shows you the kind of way he goes about his work"[22].

The screenwriter also remembers being at a Tom Jones performance with Sean Connery and Jill St. John or that Broccoli used to bet every evening on baccarat at the casino. Mankiewicz would sit with him and play too (although for lower stakes than Cubby)[23].

- Tom Mankiewicz[24] : One night [Sean] said to me, "I couldn't understand the fucking script. Could you? You wrote it". And I said: Sean, all I know is at the beginning Harry Saltzman said to me: What's Blofeld's ultimate threat? I said: Harry, he's going to destroy the world. I swear to God, Harry said: It's not big enough.

Maibaum's opinion on Mankiewicz's early rewrites

Although I unfortunately don't have the first written traces of Mankiewicz's rewriting, I do have a two-page memo (date unknown) in which Maibaum gives his opinion on them.

For him it "can be another great Bond" with some rewritten dialogue, notably to add more clarification. Although, however, "you'll never top Thunderball and Majesty's Service ". Maibaum finds Tiffany's character "refreshingly amoral".

Among the changes he considers to be made: Bond should kill a fake Blofeld in the pre-title, "in a plastic surgery clinic, perhaps". He thinks Wint and Kidd killing the dentist by putting a scorpion in his mouth is going too far.

If Maibaum finds the stunts of the police chase that Mankiewicz invented "exciting", he does not however understand the existence of such a scene: Bond could simply go to the police and clarify the situation with them via Leiter.

Maibaum is not too keen about the new finale on the oil rig, especially its assault. He proposes to destroy the place via a ray from the sky and, in any case, he doesn't want an assault with helicopters because there was already one in the finale of the previous film. (We also remember that at the time of On Her Majesty's Secret Service, Maibaum already found that helicopter's assault were something already seen and reviewed).

Finally Maibaum finds it odd that Bond never crosses paths with Wint and Kidd throughout the adventure.

Revised first draft

The script we are going to talk about is a "revised first draft" completed by Tom Mankiewicz, dated February 24, 1971 and weighing 124 pages. It's very close to the final version of the film, but it nevertheless contains some references to Fleming's work that we will not find on screen. Strangely only Mankiewicz's name appears on the cover (and Maibaum was not pleased when he discovered his name was omitted).

To begin with, the script plan that the film will have a pre-title sequence but specifies almost nothing about it; it simply says: "Pre-title sequence in which Bond kills Blofeld".

After that we find M talking to 007 about some diamonds while waiting for the briefing with Sir Donald Munger. The scenes that follow are really very similar to those in the film with a few minor changes. For example, we are told that Bond's "holiday" took place in "Mexico" (suggesting that the pre-title must have taken place there) and Bond's comment on the Sherry: "an unusually fine Solera. '51 I believe", is not "corrected" by M. For the anecdote, it was Cubby Broccoli's lawyer, who was a wine expert, who clarified to him: "Would you tell that kid [Mankiewicz] that there is no year on a Sherry bottle, it can't be '61", before detailing the manufacturing process which includes mixing young wine with older wine[25].

To return to the script, the scene where we see a minor who enters the dentist with a big smile had to be a little longer: "dentist removes grin by taking teeth out, tips them over sterilizer. A dozen diamonds drop".

When we meet Mr. Wint and Mr. Kidd, they are still watching a fight between a beetle and a scorpion. Both men are described as "though not particularly muscular or athletic, [they] look highly sinister". Of course the scorpion wins.

- Kidd: The survival of the fittest, Mr. Wint. A classic theme.
- Wint: Darwin was no fool, Mr. Kidd.

Wint & Kidd kill the dentist with the scorpion (by putting it in his mouth). When they look at the body the film's monologue "curious, how everyone who touches those diamonds seems to die" is not in the script. Instead we have:

- Kidd: Mother Nature found a way.
- Wint: As a parent she's stern but fair.

A scene where Wint and Kidd put the scorpion into the dentist's mouth was filmed but not kept in the final cut (where the scorpion is slipped into the dentist's back).

After handing a bomb to the helicopter pilot (asking him in the process: "Isn't it dangerous flying that machine?"), Wint & Kidd visit Mrs. Whistler. In the following scene Donald Munger continues to explain to M and Bond that someone has stocked up on illegal diamonds (in a single scene whereas in the film it's cut in two by the one with Mrs Whistler).

Moneypenny still not appear in this script. Next comes the scene where Bond meets Tiffany Case and which is essentially the same as in the film. 007 enters in her apartment and "a shapely, totally nude, dark-haired girl is just disappearing from living room". She tells Bond to make himself at home and he asks her:

- Bond: Mind if I smoke?
- Tiffany: Not if it's tobacco... Help yourself to a drink.

Bond pours himself a drink, lights a cigarette and the scene continues to unfold as in the film. At one point there is an interesting difference in the dialogue:

- Bond: Provided the collars and cuffs match...
- Tiffany: In my case you'll have to be satisfied with a good guess.

It turns out that Tiffany's real hair color is platinum, which is closer to Fleming's description in the novel (in which she is blonde, not redhead). The scene's dialogue provides another wink for Fleming's readers. Indeed, there is a line where Tiffany says:

- Tiffany: That's why you're being paid fifty grand. What did you think it was going to be, a pair of earrings? And Franks, for God's sake, don't come up with any lousy ideas like hollow golf balls or wooden legs.

References to the novel which will be replaced in the film by "and, Franks, for God's sakes, come up with something original".

Subsequently Bond calls Q to thank him for the fake plastic prints he provided him; Mankiewicz adds technicians in the back of the workshop installing a flamethrower on an Aston Martin (which will be replaced by missiles in the film). Then comes the fight against Peter Franks in the elevator, etc. They take a plane.

- Kidd: They're both aboard. And I must say, Miss Case seems a very pretty lady.
- Wint (shocked): Mr. Kidd! Really...

The story continues, again faithful to the film, including Bond's joke about the diamonds hidden in Franks' body. The phrase is, however, somewhat different in the script: "Alimentary, my dear Leiter" instead of "Alimentary, Doctor Leiter", presumably in reference to Sherlock Holmes.

Interesting anecdote, this line almost get cut from the film. When Cubby read the script, he exclaimed "What the fuck is this?", Mankiewicz then replied that "it's the alimentary canal, Cubby. It means it's stuck up his ass". Cubby's reaction was: "take it out, no one will know that", but Guy Hamilton replied "oh no, I like that", and the line stayed. Later at Grauman's Chinese Theater, when Sean said the line, only two people out of 1,500 laughed in the theater, Cubby turned to Mankiewicz and said to him: "Big deal: two doctors"[26].

After Bond nearly ends up cremated in the coffin, there is still the scene where 007 arrives at the Tropicana hotel in Las Vegas, on the wheel of a hearse. Here Bond throws the hearse keys to a doorman: "Name's Franks. Have whatever's inside sent up to my room, would you? There's a good fellow". 007 slips the doorman a $5 tip. A photo showing the hearse and Connery in front of the Tropicana's entrance reveal that a scene like this was shot before beeing cut in the editing room.

In the next scene, Bond tells Leiter on the phone that he needs the real diamonds. Compared to the film, there is a scene where Q is seen bringing them to the United States:

> \- Bond: [...] One problem: I need the real merchandise. And fast > \- Leiter: I'm with the diamonds right now. Q brought them through.
> \- Bond: I thought they were coming in the diplomatic bag.
> \- Leiter: So did I.
> [Behind Leiter we see a sheepish Q surrounded by customs officers. On the table in front of them are golf balls, clubs, bags, etc... All opened].
> - Leiter: Golf balls.
> [Bond, still in his bathtub, spots a photo of Shady Tree in his magazine].

At the casino Whyte House, Shady Tree makes his one man show (the jokes are different from the film but just as unfunny). The script contains a scene in which a well-known celebrity speaks to Bert Saxby to help to establish to the audience the mysterious nature of the wealthy industrialist Willard Whyte. It is not specified who the celebrity is, but he is compared to "Sammy Davis or Dean Martin".

> \- Saxby: Hello, sweetheart...
> \- Celebrity: Bert. How are you?
> \- Saxby: Hey, I just got a call from Mr. Whyte. Understand you haven't signed your contract yet. What's the problem?
> \- Celebrity: The money, if you can believe it. Considering your boss is a billionaire, for God's sake. Do me a favor, Bert: trundle on up to that penthouse of his and talk to him for me.
> \- Saxby: You kidding? I run this place for him, and even I haven't seen Willard Whyte for three years. I... Will you take a look at that...
> Bond enters, takes in the room. He is impeccably dressed: white dinner jacket, red carnation, every hair in place; four cuts better looking than anything in the casino. Camera follows as he walks through, drawing appreciative glances from many, especially the women.
> \- Celebrity: You could eat off him...

The scene will ultimately be filmed with Sammy Davis Jr. with approximately the same dialogues, but end up to be cut during editing.

This brings us to the scene where Bond meets Plenty O'Toole. She is described as "a Hugh Hefner's [Playboy magazine founder] dream-come-true with a sweet face, towering over the other ladies like a colossus". Obviously, Plenty's breasts are supposed to be so big that even Bond is taken aback. Here's how it's described:

> As he bends over the table to select two of the dice offered him by the stickman. He glances sideways, finds himself staring directly into Plenty's enormous breasts. He blinks, straightens himself.
> - Plenty: Hi. I'm Plenty.
> - Bond: I'd be foolish to deny it.
> [He looks down at the table].
> - Plenty: Plenty O'Toole. Need some help?
> - Bond: That's very thoughtful. Thank you.

The script also includes the deleted scene of Wint and Kidd killing Shady Tree with the "BANG" gun. You may have noticed in the DVD bonus features that Kidd places a plastic flower on his own costume without ever using it. Now in the script, this flower has a use:

> [He fires, a flag with the inscription "BANG BANG -- YOU'RE DEAD" comes out of the barrel].
> - Tree: C'mon fellas. The popgun and the squirting flower routine? You gotta be kidding.

BANG you're dead

[Kidd presses the flower nozzle: acid lands on Tree's face. He screams and writhes in pain. Wint fires the gun again: it really fires this time. Tree falls to the ground, dead].
- Kidd: Two was company, Mr. Wint.
- Wint: Tree was a crowd, Mr. Kidd.

We continue with another cut scene where Bond is having dinner at the Tropicana with Plenty while a Folies Bergères show taking place before their eyes. We see Bond tastes a wine expertly, shakes his head sadly to a waiter, and sends the wine back.

- Plenty: Hey! I didn't think you could really do that. I bet they charge you for it.
- Bond: I thought you were paying.
- Plenty: Well it was still a very classy thing to do. Say listen, you aren't a knight or anything like that, are you? I mean...
- Bond: A mere commoner, I'm afraid.
- Plenty: Don't feel bad. Doesn't make any difference to me. I'm a Democrat.
[Myrna, a beautiful girl, is lowered on a swing directly over Bond's head].
- Plenty: Hi, Myrna.
- Myrna: Hi, Plenty.
[Myrna seems to be interested in Bond].
- Plenty (a bit irritated): Hey, Peter. You had enough of this?
- Bond: Not enjoying yourself?
- Plenty: Well sure, but... I mean you've been so great and everything I just wanted to... Thank you... Properly, you know?
- Bond: It really isn't necessary...
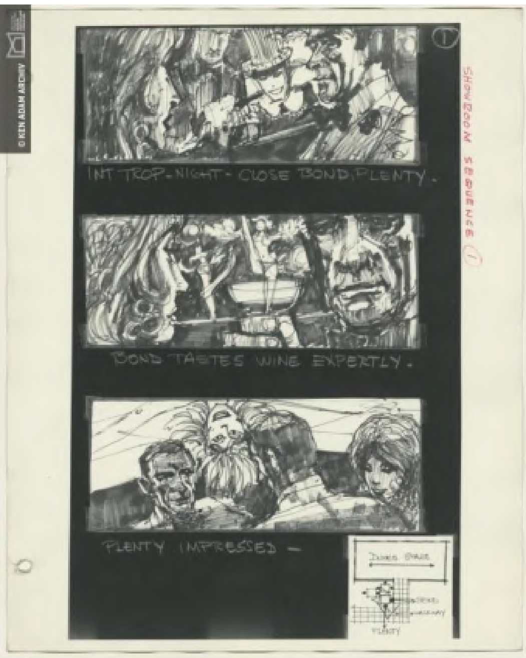
- Plenty: Maybe I could see you to your door at least?



© KEN ADAM ARCHIV
①
SHOWROOM SEQUENCE ①
INT TROP - NIGHT - CLOSE BOND, PLENTY.
BOND TASTES WINE EXPERTLY.
PLENTY IMPRESSED - DANCE STAGE
BOND WALKWAY
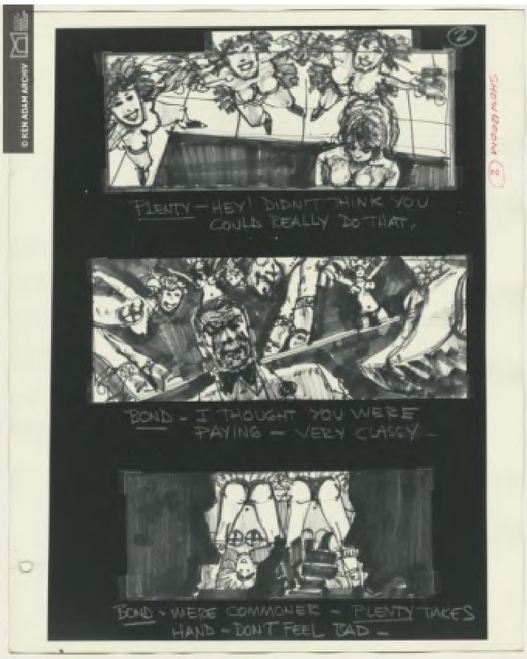
PLENTY



© KEN ADAM ARCHIV
②
SHOWROOM ②
PLENTY - HEY! DIDN'T THINK YOU COULD REALLY DO THAT, BOND - I THOUGHT YOU WERE PAYING - VERY CLASSY - BOND - WERE COMMONER - PLENTY TAKES HAND - DON'T FEEL BAD -

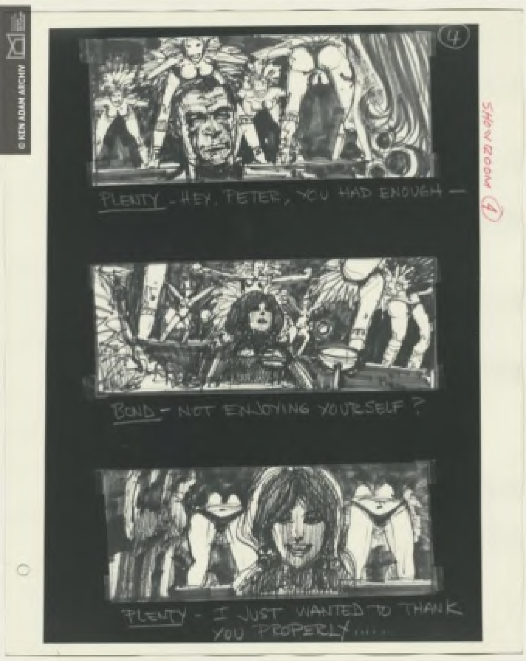
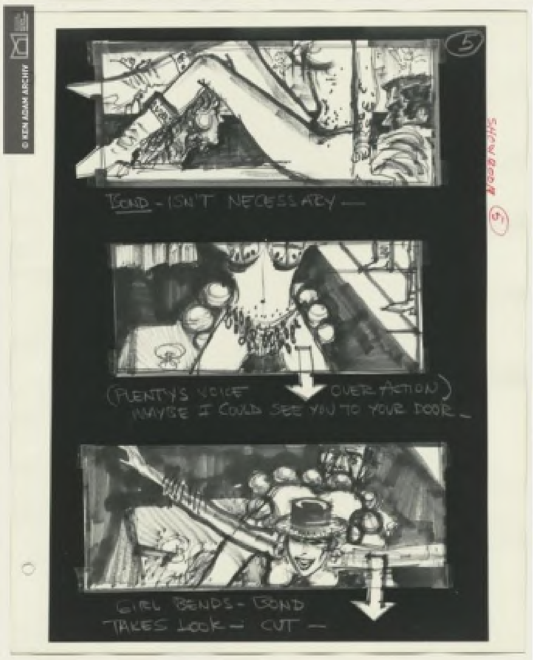
© KEN ADAM ARCHIV
③
SHOWROOM ③
GIRL LOWERED BETWEEN BOND & PLENTY -
HI MYRNA - HI PLENTY
MYRNA GIVES PLENTY IMPESSED LOOK AS SHE RISES -



© KEN ADAM ARCHIV
④
SHOWROOM ④
PLENTY - HEY, PETER, YOU HAD ENOUGH -
BOND - NOT ENJOYING YOURSELF?
PLENTY - I JUST WANTED TO THANK YOU PROPERLY.....



© KEN ADAM ARCHIV
⑤
SHOWROOM ⑤
BOND - ISN'T NECESSARY -
(PLENTY'S VOICE OVER ACTION) MAYBE I COULD SEE YOU TO YOUR DOOR -
GIRL BENDS - BOND TAKES LOOK - CUT -

In the hotel room, villains welcome Bond and Plenty and (unknowingly) throw her into a swimming pool. (Bond isn't hitting anyone here). 007 discovers Tiffany Case in his room and prepares to do things in bed with her. Another trace of a deleted scene can be found here:

> Handle to front door of Bond's suite turns slowly. Door opens a crack, then wider, revealing Plenty, still soaking wet, dressed in beggy coveralls, galoshes and a hat marked "TROPICANA POOL MAINTENANCE". She looks around nervously, is about to leave, hears noises from the bedroom, investigates carefully.
> Plenty stops at alcove door. The noises are unmistakable: moans of pleasure and the rustle of sheets. Her face falls, then sets in anger. She peeks into alcove:

> The red wig and ladies' handbag. Plenty's hand comes into shot, removes the handbag.
> Plenty opens the bag, rummages around, takes out a wallet. She pulls out the driver's license bearing the name: "TIFFANY CASE - 120 Willowbrook Lane, Las Vegas, Nevada".
> Plenty takes note of the information, replaces the drivers' license and wallet, then the handbag. She moves slowly backwards out of frame.

This scene explained why Plenty ends up murdered in Tiffany Case's residence later.

After Bond and Tiffany finished making love, their conversation was to begin with:

> \- Tiffany: Peter? I want to tell you something.
> \- Bond: You forgot to take your pill.
> \- Tiffany: Nothing as trivial as that.

The following scenes take place at Circus Circus where Felix and his agents are watching Tiffany. "Thirty men to tail one girl?" says Bond to his American colleague who retorts "This madhouse was your idea". Tiffany recovers the diamonds and escapes the agents before returning home. An additional line of dialogue from 007 is present when Tiffany discovers Plenty O'Toole drowned in the swimming pool:

> \- Tiffany: And what the hell is my red wig doing in the pool?
> \- Bond: Vainly trying to cover up what's under it.

Another difference from the film, Bond tells Tiffany who he really is instead of her finding out:

> \- Bond: I could always start by explaining that Peter Franks died in your lift in Amsterdam.
> \- Tiffany: Then you're...
> \- Bond: Precisely. And you're suddenly living on borrowed time.

The dialogues in the rest of the scene are almost the same as in the film with a few slight differences, notably this passage:

> \- Bond: [...] Shady died last night in his dressing room, they've missed me once, and Plenty's playing submarine in there. Don't you see, Tiffany? Everyone connected with those diamonds has to be eliminated. No loose ends. Including you.

Bond and Tiffany watch Saxby deliver the diamonds to Metz and there is a bit more dialogue:

- Tiffany: Why would Willard Whyte want to steal diamonds? He could buy the stupid mines if he wanted.
- Bond: My hunch is he doesn't. My hunch is Mr. Saxby's playing a closed hand.

Subsequently, Bond breaks into the complex where Dr. Metz is working on Blofeld's satellite. The audience and 007 had to see briefly what happens in this complex when the van goes down the elevator:

- Floor 1: Offices with secretaries.
- Floor 2: Computer banks.
- Floor 3: Endless rows of white cubicles that appear sterile.
- Floor 4: "World's longest and largest machine shop", everything imaginable is assembled or operated.
- Floor 5: Underground parking.

After his discoveries, Bond enter in a room that's look like the moon.

- Tom Mankiewicz[27]: At the time, the rumors had just started circulating that we hadn't really landed on the moon. So we were just trying to do a kind of wry nod to that without hitting it too hard.

007 flees in a "Moon machine" and is chased by three cars (Bond doesn't ride one of the three-wheeled motorcycles in the screenplay).

As this script is written, the US space program's lunar landings are still fresh in the public mind and in the news, while other Apollo missions are planned. Mankiewicz and Guy Hamilton also understand that the lunar rover, which would be used for the first time during the Apollo 15 mission later that year (late July 1971), was tested in the desert[28].

After getting rid of the Moon machine, Bond joins the "Tiffany's car" (brand, model, or color not specified). A pursuit against the police takes place in Las Vegas at night:

- Bond (to Tiffany): This is your captain speaking. Fasten seat belts, please.

Mankiewicz seems enthusiastic about this sequence (and Mankiewicz once said "I love writing dumb sheriffs"[29]) which turns out to be really very similar to the one of the film. We can read in particular in his descriptions: "A dazzling glare of lights from casinos and a cacophony of sound from honking cars and police sirens. A surrealistic ballet of cars, lights and colors".

- Guy Hamilton[30] : On the BBC, I saw ~~Rémy Julienne~~ [Hell Drivers] pop a car up on two wheels and drive around an airfield. I though: "that's sensational. That's got to be for Bond".

- Tom Mankiewicz[31] : A big mistake that was impossible to predict was that the car chase in Las Vegas was the high point of the picture. It taught me a great > deal, which was just because you have an oil rig and 47,000 helicopters, and you can blow the whole thing up, it will not bring an audience to its feet like a simple stunt: putting a car into an alleyway on two wheels.

In the next scene Bond and Tiffany find themselves in an aquarium bed, the dialogues are different. For example there is this exchange:

> - Tiffany: Outside of that. You did talk to Felix...
> - Bond: Mmm. He didn't believe me...
> - Tiffany: Why... Oh, my goodness... When you told him about Metz and Whyte and... Oh, James... How many fingers do you have?... Oh, don't stop... Please don't...
> - Bond: But I thought you wanted to hear all about my conversation with Felix.
> - Tiffany: Felix who?... James? What did Felix tell you to do?
> - Bond: Exactly what I'm about to do to you, darling.
> - Tiffany: Good old Felix...

Before meeting Whyte (who turn out to be Blofeld), Bond stands on the roof of an elevator (in the script he takes advantage of this moment to light a cigarette) then uses the pit-thrower gun while muttering to himself: "So help me, Q, if I fall I'll kill you". At one point he also throws two balls connected to a rope which cling to a railing to climb to the roof.

Bond enters Blofeld's house through "the world's most elegant toilet" but is spotted by a camera:

> - Voice: Please feel free to conclude personal business you might find necessary in there. Then kindly relieve yourself of your weapon or weapons as the case may be. That skylight won't open any longer.

Bond then discovers "Blofeld #1" and "Blofeld #2" and the dialogues are similar to the film. An interesting little difference can be found here:

> - Blofeld #1: A voice box, Mr. Bond. Great fun, don't you think? We... Ah, Whyte Enterprises makes them.

007 says he thinks he killed doubles, "the only other two doubles" replies a Blofeld, showing that it was already planned to feature two Blofeld death's in the pre-title.

Bond ends up kicking the cat from Blofeld #2 and kills its owner by throwing a spear at him from a statue (in the film he uses his piton gun and there is no statue in the set, a replica of a missile replaces it). It's obviously the wrong Blofeld and later 007 loses consciousness in the elevator. Wint & Kidd take him in a Thunderbird to the desert and wonder what to do with him:

> - Wint: What to do, what to do... Something fresh, something different. Let's make it really fun for a change.
> [Kidd points to a spot].
> - Wint: What a lovely idea, Mr. Kidd. Sometimes I'm so proud of you.

They abandon Bond on a construction site, in a piece of pipe who is going to be buried: "we've really closed down the pipeline this time, Mr. Wint". Bond gets away with it the same way as in the film, there's even the horrible line of dialogue "I was just taking my rat for a walk"...

When Bond goes to find the real Willard Whyte; the billionaire is at his ranch: the "Lazy W Barn". There is an interesting line:

> - Bond: Well at least the ranch crew shouldn't be expecting anything.
> - Leiter: That's right. And remember, these people probably think they're just guarding their own boss. So be a good boy and try not to kill anyone, okay?
> - Bond: Relax, Felix. I'll use my rubber bullets.

Unlike the film, 007 must first defeat a guard described as a "laconic, young cowboy", before entering and encountering Thumper and Bambi:

> Laconic, young cowboy guard stretched out in chair by front gate of ranch. Behind him is a booth with telephone. He holds a long lariat, flicks the noose out at a saddle lying some fifteen yards [14 meters] away. The small noose drops neatly over horn of saddle, flies back to cowboy as he jerks it loose, slowly looks up and off. Bond, impeccably dressed, makes his way down the dusty road to the gate. Guard seems undisturbed, performs his rope trick again. Bond comes up to his, clears his throat.
> - Bond: Good morning. Bond is the name.
> - Guard: Bond?
> - Bond: James Bond. To see Mr. Whyte.
> - Guard: Whyte?
> - Bond: Willard Whyte.
> - Guard: Never heard of him.
> [He does his trick with the rope again].
> - Bond: I see... Ah... Bert Saxby sent me?
> - Guard: He did, huh?
> - Bond: That's correct.
> - Guard: Never heard of him neither.
> [He does his trick with the rope again].
> - Bond: That looks easy enough.
> [The guard smiles and hands him his lasso].
> - Guard: Mister, you got about as much chance ropin't that there saddle horn as you do gettin' on this here ranch.
> [A little further, Leiter paces back and forth, checks his watch].
> - Leiter: Five minutes to go. Maxwell set?
> - Agent: And I'll lay ten to one Bond isn't even through the front gate yet.
> Guard in entrance booth, now sitting on saddle, gag in his mouth, completely trussed in his own rope.

This obstacle passed, Bond enters and meets Bambi and Thumper. The fight isn't super detailed but the script gives the general idea of it. Eventually Bond and Leiter free Whyte (there is no scene where Saxby tries to kill Whyte before being shot by Leiter's agents).

Later we arrive at the oil platform where Ernst Stavro Blofeld has hidden the control center of a satellite which is capable of shooting a laser beam towards Earth... Bond is parachuted there in a strange pyramidal object and meets Blofeld.

In the film and script, there is a line from Blofeld on the oil rig: "As La Rochefoucauld observed: humility is the worst form of conceit". This line has a story. Upon reading it in the script, Cubby exclaimed, "La what?" and Mankiewicz replied: "It's La Rochefoucauld. He's a French writer, sixteenth, seventeenth century", and Cubby retorted: "get it out". Then the line staying over and over in the script, Cubby started nicknamed it Nicklaus and it became a sort of running joke with Cubby asking "Is that Nicklaus line still in there?". Guy Hamilton loved this line of dialogue and made sure to film it without a backup shot so that it couldn't be cut in editing room; Cubby became furious: "I told you guys that I did not want that Goddamn Nicklaus line in there". The line ultimately stayed, and as Mankiewicz preparing Live and Let Die, he went to Broccoli and said: "Cubby, I want you to know I saw Diamonds Are Forever in Paris, and the La Rochefoucauld got a big laugh". Cubby replied: "France is the only place we didn't make any fuckin' money"[32].

From there, Mankiewicz's script has significant differences with the film. To begin with, Tiffany appears more concerned when Bond is beaten up by Blofeld's guards: she is described as "grief-stricken" upon seeing a semi-conscious 007 and she "leans over him protectively".

When later the assault is launched and Blofeld realizes that his plan has failed: a barrage of bullets rips through the computer banks. Blofeld fires a gun twice at Metz who dives to dodge. Sparks fly out of the computers and turn into flames. Blofeld exits through a door.

Bond swing off the hook of the oil drill to land on the building that contains the computer tape. He lies down to avoid bullets and sees Blofeld running towards the center of the oil rig, the cassette in one hand, a firing gun in the other. Blofeld reaches one of the corner pillars, opens a door and enters.

Bond jumps from the roof of the building and makes his way towards Blofeld, using his feet and fists on the SPECTRE's men. The battle is total on the platform, men in firing positions shooting the helicopters. Frogmen jump into the water from helicopters under heavy fire.

Bond has reached the hollow pillar and is descending the stairs inside. He reaches a closed hatchway door, struggles to open it, can't, peers through small glass window: he sees Blofeld entering in a one-man oyster-shaped submarine. The water begins to rise around the craft and Bond turns around and goes back up the stairs.

Meanwhile Metz lowers a small ladder under the platform, starts a boat and flee through the frogmen. In their helicopter, Whyte and Leiter see this.

- Whyte: It's Metz! Tell them we need him alive!
- Leiter: Attention all planes [sic!]! Attention all...

Metz leaves by boat but a helicopter behind him opens fire. The bullets find their way to the tank and the boat explodes.

Higher up on the platform Bond passes a huge weather balloon. 007 looks down and sees that Blofeld's submarine is starting up. Bond unhooks the rope holding the weather balloon, wraps it around one of his hands, and jumps off the platform and lands in the water.

Bond, underwater and with the rope in his hand, reaches the rear of the submarine as it starts and hooks the rope on a hook of the sub. Bond pulls up the rope using the strength of his hands and reaches the surface.

Meanwhile the Marines win the battle on the oil rig. The frogmen climb the structure from all sides, the music The Stars and Stripes Forever is played on the tape in Blofeld's control center.

Tiffany comes out of the computer room which is now on fire. She is still dazed and trips over a dead body. She looks up: two SPECTRE's men approach her. She takes a machine gun from the corpse, closes her eyes and fires: the force of the recoil pulls her back, the weapon rises and she inadvertently kills three SPECTRE's men on a higher floor. They fall from an interminable distance on the two men who were threatening her.

Whyte and Leiter's helicopter lands, the cockpit riddled with bullets. They come out, shooting at the last defenders.

Blofeld drives the small submarine while looking forward: the coast is taking shape. The water level receding through his front window to reveal dazzling salt mountains in the foreground.

Leiter and Whyte approach Tiffany who is still stunned:

- Whyte: Are you all right?
- Leiter: Where's James?

Tiffany shrugs, she has no idea.

The oyster-shaped submarine is on the shore, Blofeld dressed in a white suit gets off and watches the mining operations. There are huge, complicated machines in and around the big salt valleys and hills.

Blofeld turns to push the submarine back into the water when he spots the rope attached to the back. The camera follows the rope to the top and we see Bond hanging on it, several meters above the water. The camera returns to Blofeld who smiles and pulls out a gun:

- Blofeld: Mary Poppins, I presume.

He raises his gun and shoots. At the same time Bond unscrews the metal cap of the balloon, the air escapes and Bond falls into the water. Blofeld waits for a moment but Bond doesn't surface. He looks at his gun: there is only one bullet left in the magazine.

Blofeld hesitates and finally decides to run towards the salt mines. Bond surfaces and gives him chase.

Blofeld disappears through the machinery, between a huge steam shovel and some sort of crusher. Bond follows him but Blofeld is nowhere to be seen. 007 looks down and sees footprints which he follows to a pile of salt.

> - Blofeld: Over here, Mr. Bond.

Blofeld, almost invisible among the salt, stands behind Bond, near the machinery. He raises his gun and Bond leap as he fires; 007 disappears from his field of vision. It turns out that Bond jumped headfirst into a salt pit. Bond looks up and realizes he is trapped; he tries to climb the walls but it's useless: he falls back after only a few meters. Suddenly the sound of a large machine is heard and Bond looks up.

A menacing steam shovel at the end of a long mast appears above the hole and sinks into it, the teeth of the bucket opening like a huge jaw. The jaw hits the ground inches from Bond. 007 tries to climb the wall again and Blofeld, who handles the steam shovel like a medieval mace and chain, propels it violently against the walls of the pit. Bond falls back into the salt and Blofeld hits the wall again a few centimeters from Bond.

Blofeld pulls the bucket up to the end of the pit and stops, dismayed. Bond has climbed on top of the bucket, grabbed a cable to climb higher, and is now glaring down at Blofeld.

Blofeld tries to shake the steam shovel but Bond holds on and comes back down toward him determinedly. Blofeld gets out of the cabin and runs. The camera follows him as he moves through the salt. Suddenly the bucket appears in the camera's frame as it comes towards him. Jaws open as the bucket swoops down on him, closing on his neck, and lifting him into the air. Bond, who is in command of the shovel, drops Blofeld onto some sort of crusher.

A helicopter lands on the beach and Whyte and Leiter get out before running towards the salt mine. Bond reached for the granulator/crusher's controls and pulled down a lever. The machine activates. A stream of finely ground salt is expelled, some of it suddenly rather oddly colored. It creates a good-size mound of its own.

Bond turns off the machine and Whyte and Leiter arrive near him:

> - Whyte: Where's that bastard Blofeld?
> - Bond: Bastard? Blofeld? He's the salt of the earth [English expression meaning being a good person, someone worthy, honest].

The camera give a final shoot of the pile of strangely colored salt.

Unfortunately, this climax sequence was apparently abandoned as the owners of the salt mine reportedly refused to allow the filmmakers to install their cameras there[33]. It would also have made the film too long. According to Mankiewicz:

> - Tom Mankiewicz[34] : First of all, Blofeld was going to die in the salt mine... At that particular point, nobody knew what was going to happen in the next film. Blofeld might have been in the next film, especially if somebody had a good idea. The picture was quite long at the time and... Something had to go. So we said, "Let's deal with Blofeld on the rig". Because, as you remember, we still had to get to our tag with Mr. Wint and Mr. Kidd on the ocean liner.

And indeed we still have this major sequence with the cruise ship (here named the The Whyte Water) to study. Like the film, Bond and Tiffany are in their cabin when Wint and Kidd appear, disguised as waiters. But instead of trying to kill them here, the phone rings, Kidd answers it and tells Bond that he's needed in the radio booth to take a call from Willard Whyte. Bond gives Kidd some money, telling him to keep the dinner warm, and walks out, leaving Tiffany alone with the duo. "But monsieur does not have to pay us for what we are about to do", Kidd retorts.

> [She starts to taste the food].
> - Tiffany: Boy, that's hot!
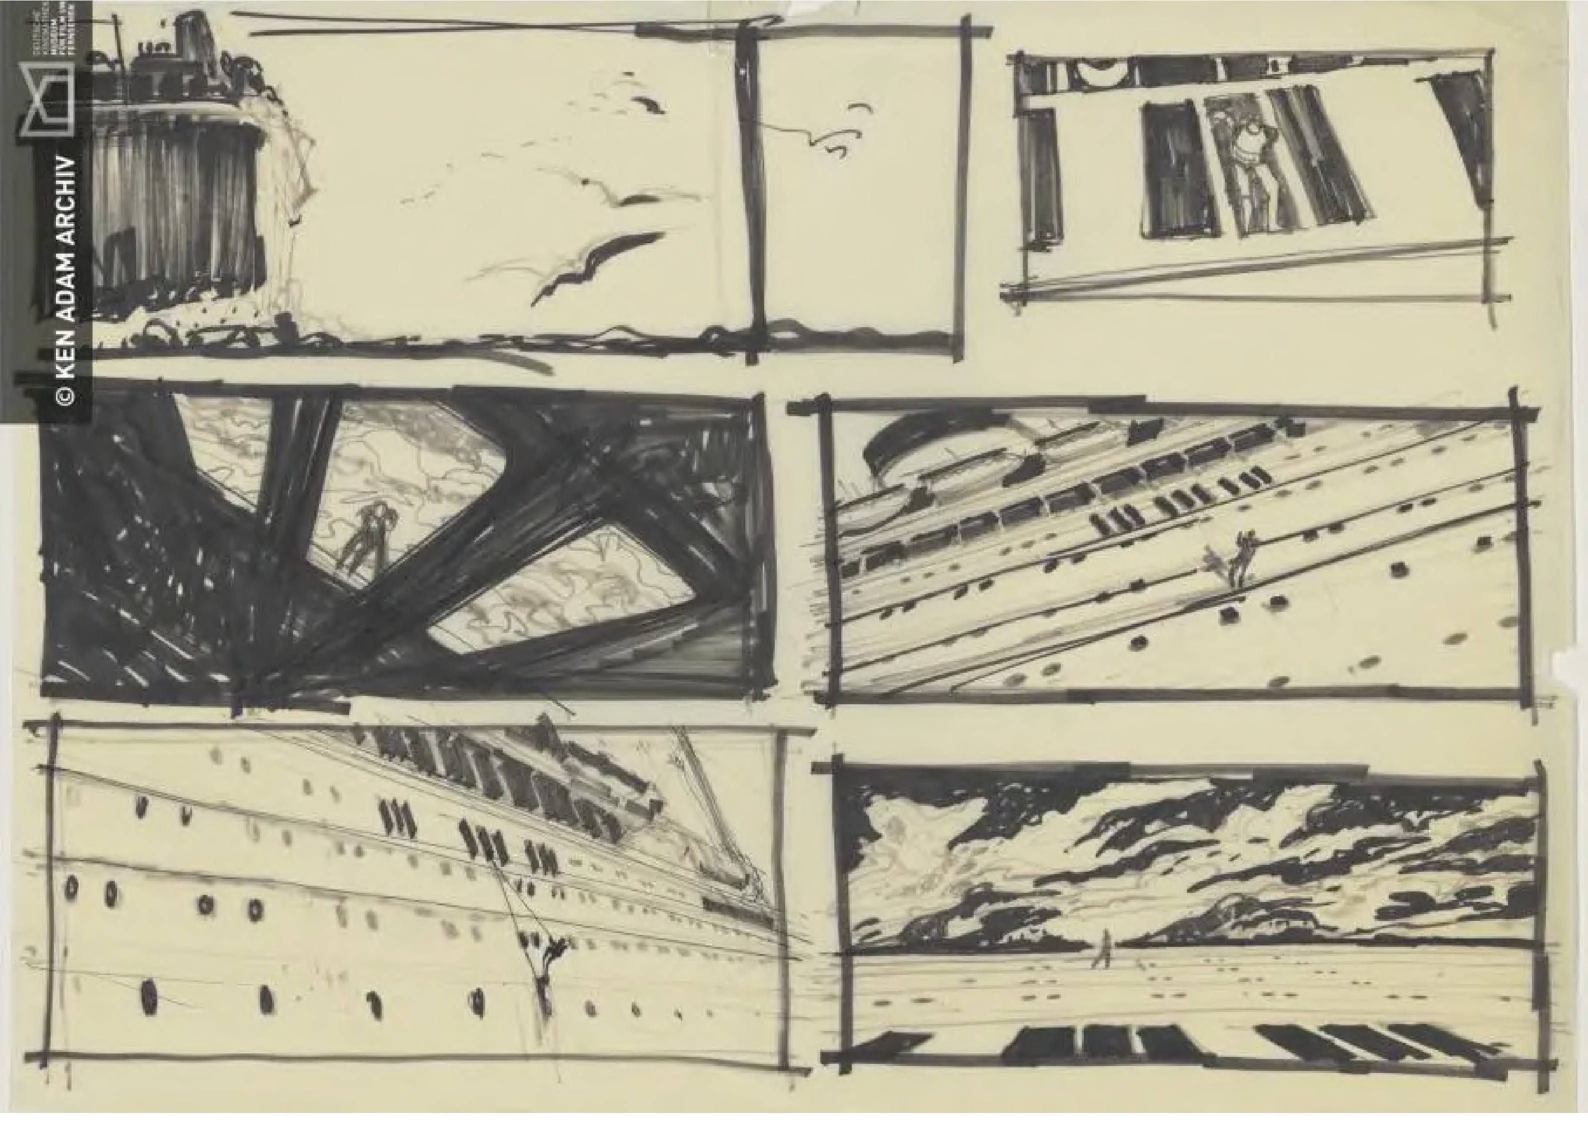
> - Wint: Things are only just starting to warm up for you, Miss Case.

When Bond reaches the radio booth, there is obviously no call from Mr. Whyte, the operator tells him that someone must have played a joke on him: "I could live five times over before Willard Whyte called this tub". Back to Bond's cabin: Tiffany is tied to the bed and gagged. A pot of boiling oil hangs above her, attached by a rope that is connected to the handle of the cabin door. A drop falls on the pillow next to Tiffany and creates a steaming hole. If Bond comes back and opens the door, Tiffany is screwed (and there also happens to be a housekeeper going door to door on the ship).

007, however, has another idea in mind. He attaches a life buoy which has a long rope to the ship's rail and now goes rapelling down the hull. Similar to the novel, he reaches his cabin window and sees Tiffany, with Wint and Kidd waiting.

Storyboard showing Bond rappelling down the hull.



Just before the maid enters, Bond shifts to the side of the ship with his feet, and when he has gained enough momentum, he launches through the porthole, feet first. In the melee that follows, Bond kills the two assassins (including throwing boiling oil on Wint's face). Kidd dies after threatening Bond with flaming skewers (Bond throws alcohol at him like in the film).

Bond seeing Tiffany, still tied to the bed with her legs spread, can't help comment: "A fine lot of help you turned out to be".

This ending with Tiffany tied up was changed in the film, there was fear that it would not pass the censors, who would have deemed it a little "too sado-masochistic"[35].

The script ends like in the film, Bond and Tiffany are on the boat's bridge and she wonders how to get the diamonds from Blofeld's satellite...

New reaction from Maibaum

Maibaum write a memo in which he said he think there is too much "awful" toilet humor around Whyte, that Blofeld threat should not be the destruction of a city (because it has already been done in Thunderball) and an exclaim: "HELICOPTERS AGAIN?!". Maibaum notably offers gliders instead, "something we haven't had [in previous films]. Or parachustists with balloon capability". Finally he says that Willard Whyte must be an idiot if a "strong-arm broads?" managed to hold him captive single-handedly.

Shooting scripts

A 125-page shooting script was completed on March 26, 1971. The copy that we are going to study includes revisions dated in particular April 13, 14 and 15.

We notice that the pre-title is still not written, that Moneypenny is now present and that Tiffany is now a natural redhead. There is an extra line:

> - Tiffany: And Franks, for God's sake, come up with something original.
> - Bond: How about a wooden leg?

Later when Bond phones Leiter from his bathtub and asks for the real diamonds, there is still Q in the background behind Leiter, surrounded by customs officers. Q brought the diamonds via a wooden leg:

> - Leiter: Ask him to do his Lone John Silver imitation for you someday. It's a riot.

The flower throwing acid during the Shady Tree assassination was removed from the script. Later Bond have dinner with Plenty at Dunes's restaurant, behind them it is now a number with a girl playing a harp (like Dunes's Dome of the Sea restaurant really had); rather than a Folies Bergère show from the Tropicana.

The scene will be filmed with very similar dialogue from the previous script, but will end up in the cutting floor.

There is no longer the cowboy in front of Whyte's ranch but Saxby's death has been added.

The most significant change to this script is the removal of the entire sequence involving the salt mine. Instead the action scene on the oil rig is a bit longer than before and similar to the movie; with Bond climbing his way out of the room he's been locked in and taking control of the crane lifting Blofeld's mini-submarine. He throws it against the computer room and there are two explosions, making Blofeld's fate (a little bit) less obscure than in the film.

Another (incomplete copy) of a script I had the chance to read have revised pages dated from 9, 13, 14 April 1971.

In it the pre-title sequence was finally written and it is quite similar the film. So Bond beat up a guy called Chan in a Japanese setting who lead him to another man in a Cairo casino. The thing to be noted here is that the man from Cairo lead Bond to another man in Ankara.

We see a Turk about to light a joint in Ankara when a hand of Bond, holding a Walther PPK, stop him.

If in the film the oil rig assault is partially done with Hughes OH-6A Cayuse helicopters (manufactured by Howard Hughes company), unfortunately Willard Whyte is seen in a Bell 206 JetRanger (not manufactured by Hughes company)...

- Bond's voice: Tell me where he is. You can get stoned or shot. Make your choice.
- Turk: Eden Roc. Ask for Marie.

Bond set fire to a large stock of hashish before leaving. He meet Marie in France who finally lead him to Blofeld. Thing happen like the movie, except this dialogue which is a little longer:

- Blofeld: I was dying to see how the operation turned out.
- Bond: Dying's not something you do easily.
- Blofeld: Nor you, Mr. Bond. Oh, well, I suppose one of us had to go sooner or later. (To guards) Get his gun.

While filming in London, United Artist believe that Mankiewicz had finished writing and that it is time for him to return to the United States (and for them to save money). Jill St. John offers him to move in with her at her house, so Mankiewicz became St. John's roommate for a time[36].

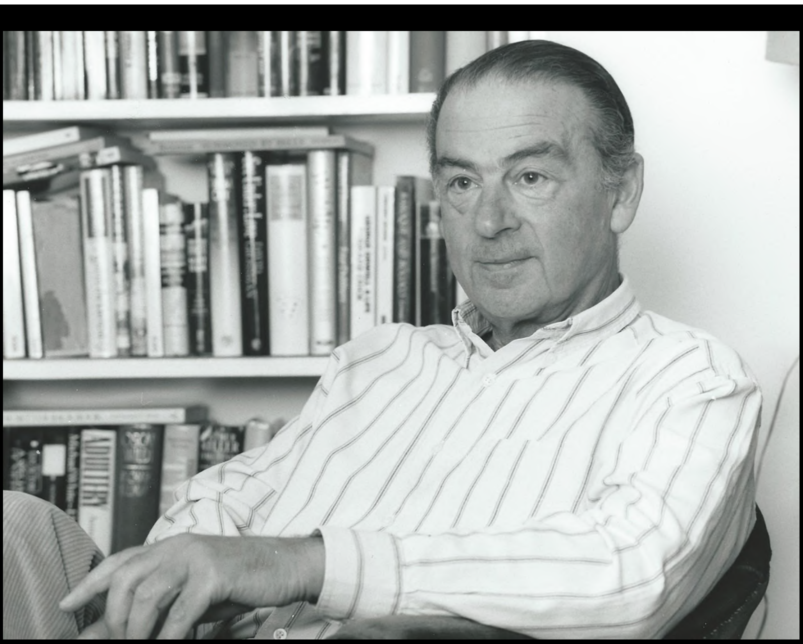
Mankiewicz have also a one-month "passionate affair" with Diane Cilento. "She's the ex-Mrs. Sean Connery. His first wife", says the screenwriter[37]. "Sean has already married Micheline (Roquebrune) during Diamonds Are Forever, [...] although he has had every leading lady and some supporting ladies, too. [...] Ken Adam said to me: Oh, I wouldn't go out with Sean's ex-wife. One day you're gonna get killed. Diane and Sean didn't get along at all. I never knew if he knew about it"[38].

Other writers shadows and recognition

At the end of May 1971, EON proposed to include in the film's credits that the script was signed "Tom Mankiewicz and Richard W. Maibaum". Maibaum opposed this order (and the presence of the W.): he believed that his contribution to the script in its final version was more important than the one of Mankiewicz. Maibaum therefore thinks that his name should appear first. "Actually there is hardly anything in the shooting script that does not stem from [my previous treatments and script]".

However there are some concerns because apparently the other writers don't agree (et least according to Maibaum). "Mr. Mankiewicz has personally informed me he wants his name to appear first on the screenplay credit", wrote Maibaum. The screenwriter also talks about a "Mr. Price" who has rewritten some dialogue and who hopes to see his name appear in the credits.

The tentative writing credit document sent by EON to the Writers Guild of America revel that this mysterious "Mr. Price" is none other than Stanley Price.



Born in London in 1931, Stanley Price[39] was educated in Dublin before going to Wesley College and the Perse School. After his National Service, he decided to went to Gonville and Caius College to read History.

He started his career as a journalist, working as a reporter on Life magazine in New York from 1957 to 1960, writing stories about Marilyn Monroe or Graham Greene. In 1960 he returned to London where he contributed to numerous papers and magazines.

His first novel, Crusading for Kronk, was published in 1960 and was followed by four other satirical novel until 1966, when he found out that he was enjoying writing the dialogue in his novels more than the descriptions that linked them. He thus decided to turn to plays writing.

In 1967 his first play, H*orizontal Hold*, had a short, but happy life in the West End at the Comedy Theatre. He would write four other plays, principally comedies, until 1986.

Price also wrote and edited some film and TV screenplays. These include co-writer credits on Arabesque (1967), Gold (1974) starring Roger Moore, Shout at the Devil (1976) also starring Moore, Golden Rendezvous (1977), Close Relations (1990) or Genghis Cohn (1995).

He stopped writing film and TV at the end of the century. After 2000, Price would write his memoirs, Somewhere to Hang My Hat: An Irish Jewish Journey, and biographies about Lewis Way (written jointly with his son, the historian Munro Price), James Joyce and Italo Svevo.

Price died aged 87,in 2019.

- Richard Maibaum: I'm not aware of what credit Mr. Price expects. His work seems confined to some dialogue revisions. It certainly doesn't seem to add up > to the required 25% of the overall screenplay components, story, continuity, action, characterizations, gags, gimmicks, style, dialogue, etc.

The same tentative writing credit document also contain the name of Ronald Hardy who will later work on some version of The Spy Who Loved Me and For Your Eyes Only (and who knows if there wasn't another?) for EON.

Ronald Harold Hardy[40] (1919-1991), English novelist and screenwriter. He began his professional life as an accountant specialized in taxation. His first novel The Place of Jackals, inspired by his experiences as a liaison officer in Indochina during World War II, was published in 1954. In addition to his eight other fiction novels, he would write a book about the construction of the Ugandan railway titled The Iron Snake. As a screenwriter we owe him episodes of Armchair Theater (1956) and Suspense (1962).

Maibaum then wrote a letter to the arbitration committee of the Writers Guild of America in which he lists around thirty key points (not derived from Ian Fleming's novel) from the final screenplay that were already present in his own September 11, 1970 script (which he had written before Mankiewicz joined the production).

Maibaum indicates, that he however give full credits to Mankiewicz for the authorship of the finale on the oil platform (with the kidnapping of Tiffany), the moon-buggy chase, the car chase with the police, a good portion of the dialogues, the name of Willard Whyte and Bond using an elevator to reach his penthouse.

Also Maibaum reads in an article from LA Times that the character of Plenty O'Toole is an invention of Guy Hamilton. He then wrote to Cubby Broccoli to reestablish the truth: namely that the origin of the character goes back to his Darlene O'Toole. This letter from Maibaum reveals to us that it was Broccoli who suggested the first name Plenty. We "fought like hell together to build it [the screenplay] around your idea of H.H. [...] against Harry's [Saltzman] resistance", write Maibaum to Cubby.

Although this has nothing to do with the writing of the film, it is also interesting to note in this letter that Maibaum tells Broccoli that he hopes he has an editor as good as Peter Hunt for the film because the pace of Hamilton is not very fast according the screenwriter. "Peter may have become a monster as a director (and I think he did a hell of a good job with an idiot like Lazenby) but as an editor, his contribution to the success of the films can't be over-emphasized".

Hunt will not return and regarding the screenplay credit, Maibaum will be proven right since as we know, the credit are listed as "Richard Maibaum and Tom Mankiewicz".

> - Maibaum[41] : There were some good things in the film. It isn't one of the ones I dislike.

To conclude, let's give the final word to Tom Mankiewicz who wrote this about Maibaum in his memoirs:

> - Tom Mankiewicz[42] : A sweet man to me. Just wonderful. Always very complimentary about me. [...] We shared credit, and he gets first credit because it's alphabetical; M-A-I and M-A-N. We shared credit without ever having met, but later on I met him at Cubby's, and he was a wonderful guy. And a good writer. I felt so lucky to have my name on a James Bond picture at that point in my life.

Sources/references from chapter 7: Diamonds Are Forever

1 Like in his interview in "The Incredible World of 007" by Lee Pfeiffer and Philip Lisa (1992).

2 Maibaum's interview with Tony Wells (November 20, 1969); via "The Making of on Her Majesty's Secret Service" by Charles Helfenstein (2009).

3 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

4 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

5 Bondage magazine, Mankiewicz's interview by Richard Schenkman (issue #8, 1980).

6 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).

7 For Tom Mankiewicz biography, see for the sources:
"Tom Mankiewicz obituary" article by Ronald Bergan in The Guardian (2010): https://www.theguardian.com/film/2010/aug/04/tom-mankiewicz-obituary
"Tom Mankiewicz dies at 68; screenwriter for James Bond, Superman films" article by Valerie J. Nelson in The Los Angeles Times (2010): https://www.latimes.com/local/obituaries/la-me-tom-mankiewicz-20100803-story.html
"Tom Mankiewicz" article in For Your Eyes Only fan website (2010): https://www.for-your-eyes-only.com/Site/TomMank_obit.html
"Tom Mankiewicz: Screenwriter and director whose witty scripts revitalised the James Bond franchise" article by Tom Vallance in The Independent (2010): https://www.independent.co.uk/news/obituaries/tom-mankiewicz-screenwriter-and-director-whose-witty-scripts-revitalised-the-james-bond-franchise-2043389.html
"Tom Mankiewicz" article in The Telegraph (2010): https://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/obituaries/culture-obituaries/film-obituaries/7925042/Tom-Mankiewicz.html
"Tom Mankiewicz (1942-2010)" on MI6-HQ website: https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/biography_tom_mankiewicz
"Masters of Screenwriting Interview: Tom Mankiewicz" by Ray Morton on Scriptmag (April 29, 2010): https://scriptmag.com/interviews-features/masters-of-screenwriting-interview-tom-mankiewicz-part-1-of-2
"My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).
Tom Mankiewicz's Wikipedia page.

8 "The James Bond Archives" by Jamie Russel and Paul Duncan (2012).

9 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

10 Mankiewicz's interview by Chauhan Dharmesh for Superman Cinema, via CapedWonder (2006): https://www.capedwonder.com/the-2006-tom-mankiewicz-interview

11 Mankiewicz's interview by Chauhan Dharmesh for Superman Cinema, via CapedWonder (2006): https://www.capedwonder.com/the-2006-tom-mankiewicz-interview

12 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).

13 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).

14 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).

15 Mankiewicz's interview by Chauhan Dharmesh for Superman Cinema, via CapedWonder (2006): https://www.capedwonder.com/the-2006-tom-mankiewicz-interview

16 Mankiewicz's interview by Chauhan Dharmesh for Superman Cinema, via CapedWonder (2006): https://www.capedwonder.com/the-2006-tom-mankiewicz-interview

17 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).

18 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).

19 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).
"For Your Eyes Only: Behind the scenes of the James Bond films" by David Giammarco (2002).

20 Cinema Retro magazine, special Dr. No issue ("Issue No.4", 2012), Harwood's interview by Matthew Field.

21 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

22 "Tom Mankiewicz Talks James Bond", Mankiewicz's interview by Mark Edlitz on Empire website: http://www.empireonline.com/interviews/interview.asp?IID=1101

23 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).

24 "Tom Mankiewicz Talks James Bond", Mankiewicz's interview by Mark Edlitz on Empire website: http://www.empireonline.com/interviews/interview.asp?IID=1101

25 Mankiewicz's interview by Chauhan Dharmesh for Superman Cinema, via CapedWonder (2006): https://www.capedwonder.com/the-2006-tom-mankiewicz-interview

26 Mankiewicz's interview by Chauhan Dharmesh for Superman Cinema, via CapedWonder (2006): https://www.capedwonder.com/thme-2006-tom-mankiewicz-interview

27 "For Your Eyes Only: Behind the scenes of the James Bond films" by David Giammarco (2002).

28 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

29 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

30 "The James Bond Archives" by Jamie Russel and Paul Duncan (2012).
Spy Octane #1 by Matthew Field and Ajay Chowdhury (2024).

31 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

32 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).
Mankiewicz's interview by Chauhan Dharmesh for Superman Cinema, via CapedWonder (2006):
https://www.capedwonder.com/the-2006-tom-mankiewicz-interview
33 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).
34 "The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).
35 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).
36 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).
37 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).
38 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).
39 For Stanley Price biography, see for the sources:
"Stanley Price obituary" by Philip Graham in The Guardian (2019).
"Stanley Price obituary: successful writer of Irish-Jewish extraction" in The Irish Times (2019).
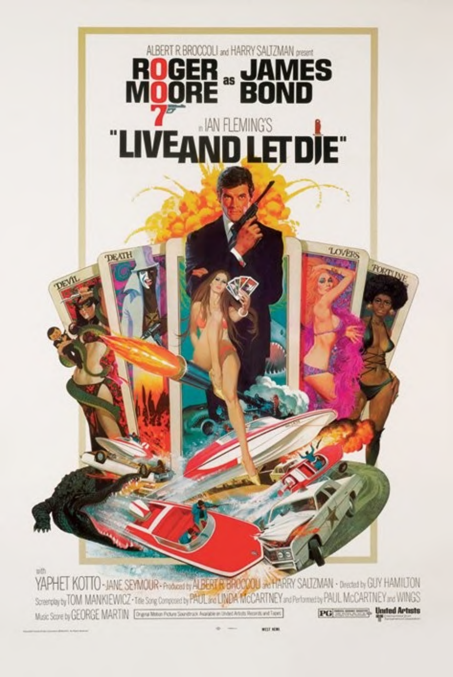
Stanley Price's Wikipedia page.
40 For Ronald Hardy biography, see for the sources:
"The Face of Jalanath" novel preface (Sphere Books 1974 edition)
"The wings of the wind" novel back cover (Putnam 1987 edition).
Ronald Hardy 's Wikipedia page.
41 "James Bond: 27 years and still licensed to kill" by Mark A. Altman (?) in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).
42 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).



ALBERT R. BROCCOLI and HARRY SALTZMAN present
ROGER MOORE as JAMES BOND 007
IAN FLEMING'S
"LIVE AND LET DIE"
DEATH LOVERS FORTUNE DEVIL
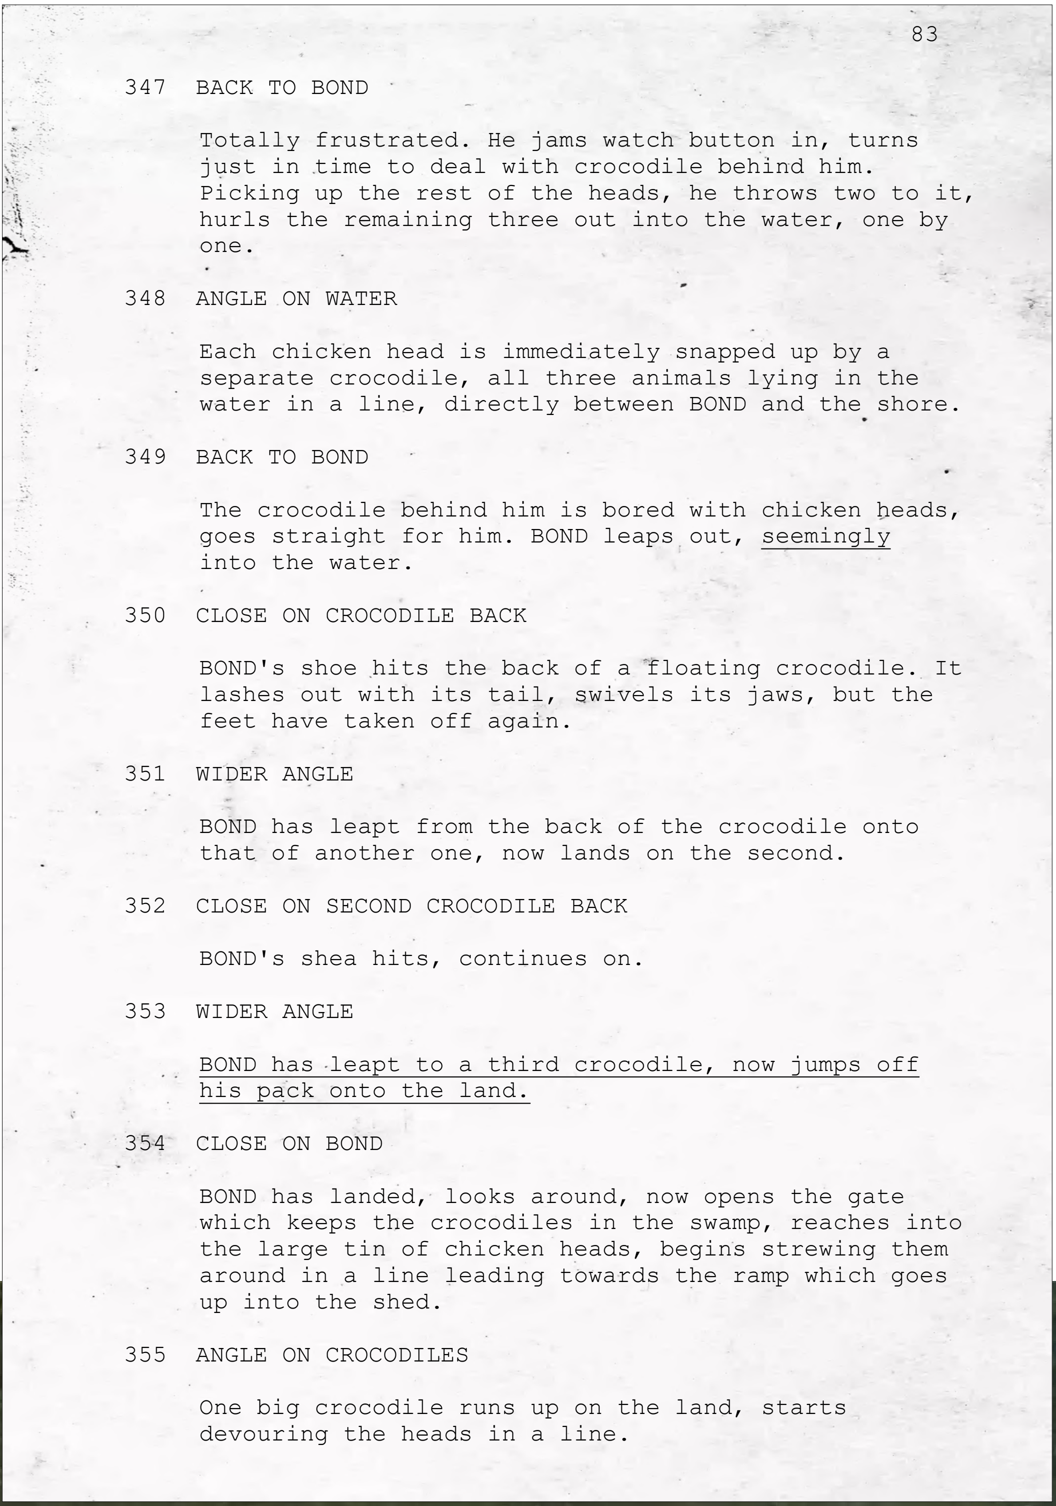
YAPHET KOTTO · JANE SEYMOUR
United Artists

Release date (premiere) :
5 July 1973

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Screenplay by Tom Mankiewicz"

Director :..............................Guy Hamilton
Producers :.Harry Saltzman & Albert R. Broccoli
Director photography :...........Ted Moore
Set Designer :.................................Syd Cain
Composer :..........................George Martin
Editors :..B. Bates, R. Poulton & J. Shirley
Title sequence :................Maurice Binder
Title song vocals :.Paul McCartney & the Wings



347 BACK TO BOND

Totally frustrated. He jams watch button in, turns just in time to deal with crocodile behind him. Picking up the rest of the heads, he throws two to it, hurls the remaining three out into the water, one by one.

348 ANGLE ON WATER

Each chicken head is immediately snapped up by a separate crocodile, all three animals lying in the water in a line, directly between BOND and the shore.

349 BACK TO BOND

The crocodile behind him is bored with chicken heads, goes straight for him. BOND leaps out, seemingly into the water.

350 CLOSE ON CROCODILE BACK

BOND's shoe hits the back of a floating crocodile. It lashes out with its tail, swivels its jaws, but the feet have taken off again.

351 WIDER ANGLE

BOND has leapt from the back of the crocodile onto that of another one, now lands on the second.

352 CLOSE ON SECOND CROCODILE BACK

BOND's shea hits, continues on.

353 WIDER ANGLE

BOND has leapt to a third crocodile, now jumps off his pack onto the land.

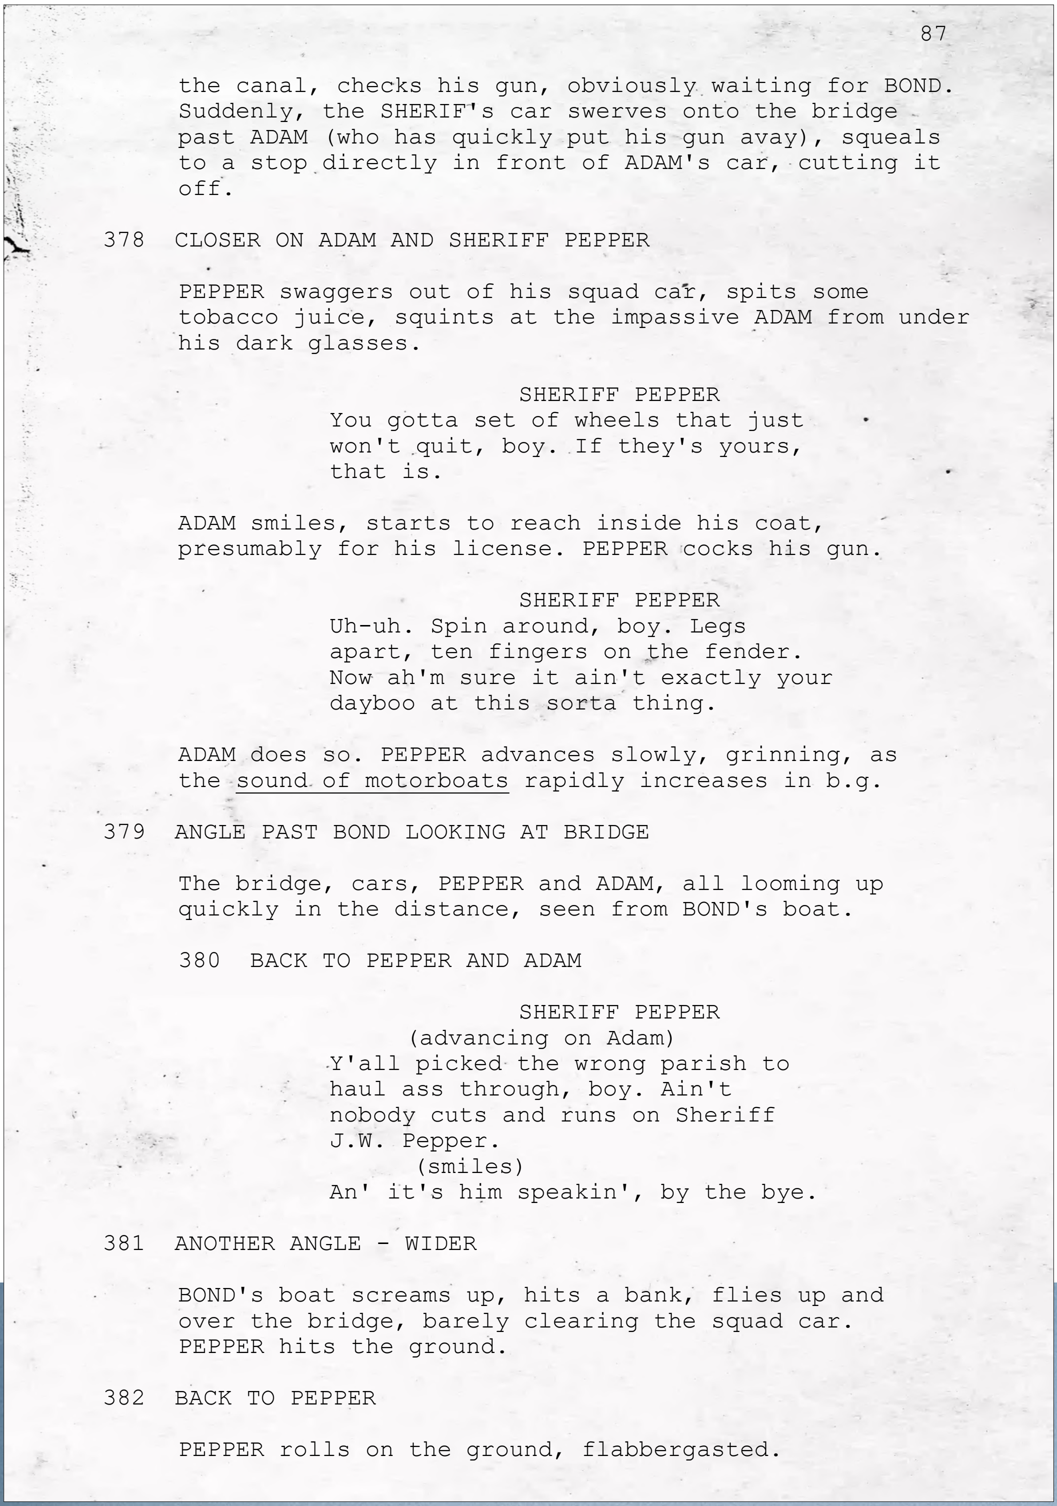
354 CLOSE ON BOND

BOND has landed, looks around, now opens the gate which keeps the crocodiles in the swamp, reaches into the large tin of chicken heads, begins strewing them around in a line leading towards the ramp which goes up into the shed.

355 ANGLE ON CROCODILES

One big crocodile runs up on the land, starts devouring the heads in a line.

CHAPTER 8



87

the canal, checks his gun, obviously waiting for BOND. Suddenly, the SHERIF's car swerves onto the bridge past ADAM (who has quickly put his gun avay), squeals to a stop directly in front of ADAM's car, cutting it off.

378 CLOSER ON ADAM AND SHERIFF PEPPER

PEPPER swaggers out of his squad car, spits some tobacco juice, squints at the impassive ADAM from under his dark glasses.

SHERIFF PEPPER
You gotta set of wheels that just won't quit, boy. If they's yours, that is.

ADAM smiles, starts to reach inside his coat, presumably for his license. PEPPER cocks his gun.

SHERIFF PEPPER
Uh-uh. Spin around, boy. Legs apart, ten fingers on the fender. Now ah'm sure it ain't exactly your dayboo at this sorta thing.

ADAM does so. PEPPER advances slowly, grinning, as the sound of motorboats rapidly increases in b.g.

379 ANGLE PAST BOND LOOKING AT BRIDGE

The bridge, cars, PEPPER and ADAM, all looming up quickly in the distance, seen from BOND's boat.

380 BACK TO PEPPER AND ADAM

SHERIFF PEPPER
(advancing on Adam)
Y'all picked the wrong parish to haul ass through, boy. Ain't nobody cuts and runs on Sheriff J.W. Pepper.
(smiles)
An' it's him speakin', by the bye.

381 ANOTHER ANGLE - WIDER

BOND's boat screams up, hits a bank, flies up and over the bridge, barely clearing the squad car. PEPPER hits the ground.

382 BACK TO PEPPER

PEPPER rolls on the ground, flabbergasted.

Cast:

James Bond :..........................Roger Moore
Kananga :.................................Yaphet Kotto
Solitaire :..............................Jane Seymour
Tee-Hee:.................................Julius Harris
Baron Samedi :................Geoffrey Holder
Felix Leiter :........................David Hedison
Rosie Carver :......................Gloria Hendry
Quarrel Jr. :..............................Roy Stewart
J.W. Pepper:..........................Clifton James
Harold Strutter:.......................Lon Satton
Whisper:..........................Earl Jolly Brown
M :...Bernard Lee
Moneypenny :.......................Lois Maxwell

Main filming locations: New York, Louisiana, Jamaica and UK

James Bond is this time played by Roger Moore who infuses him with his charisma in a fairly average entry, with settings and a villain a little below what the saga has accustomed us.
The real stars here are the McCartney's song, the crocodiles and this long boat chase which brings some memorable action in a film where action seems to lacking right from the pre-title and in its finale. The voodoo theme and the idea of a cast of color are rather refreshing and Jane Seymour has a pleasant presence.
However, we can wonder if the whole thing isn't a little drawn out and if it tend to go too much to the supernatural and heavy humor territories...

LIVE AND LET DIE

SHERIFF'S DEPARTMENT

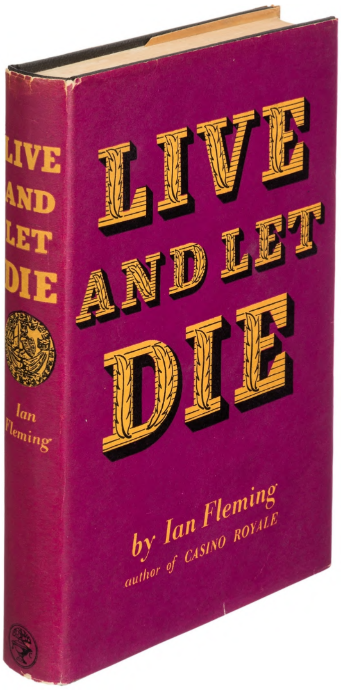
Table of contents

Live and Let Die

Live and let the novel aside....498
Mankiewicz at the helm....499
October 2, 1972' shooting script....503
Revised shooting script....511

Live and let the novel aside

In Fleming's second novel, Live and Let Die from 1954, James Bond flies to New York where he must meet his CIA' friend Felix Leiter and FBI' agents. This new mission in collaboration with the American' services aims to investigate a certain Buonaparte Ignace Gallia, known as "Mister Big". He is a powerful black criminal who is the leader of a voodoo sect and also an agent of SMERSH in the United States. It seems that this man discovered Henry Morgan's pirate treasure in Jamaica and is selling it to finance Soviet operations. Following the events of Casino Royale, 007 sees this as an opportunity to counter SMERSH and take his revenge.



However, Mr. Big is aware of the FBI operation and upon his arrival in New York, Bond receive an explosive package in his hotel room. This doesn't stop him from going to Harlem with Leiter to visit a Mr. Big nightclub where they are captured and separated after their table goes down on some sort of elevator. Big explains to 007 that he doesn't want them dead and that he will let them live if they promise to drop the case. On this occasion, Bond meets the beautiful Solitaire: a clairvoyant in the pay of Mister Big who must indicate him whether Bond is telling the truth or not.

She tells Big that Bond is telling the truth and Big lets Bond go, after however give the order to break his little finger. Escorted towards the exit, an injured Bond escapes by killing several of Big's henchmen (including a certain Tee-Hee Johnson). For his part, Leiter manages to get out of it by sympathizing with his guard, thanks to their shared taste for jazz.

Later Solitaire who wishes to escape Mr. Big's grip, contacts Bond. They take a train to St. Petersburg (Florida). 007 is warned by the sleeping car attendant that Mr. Big's men are on board. Bond and Solitaire discreetly get off the train in Jacksonville and take another train to reach St. Petersburg. There they find Leiter who tells them that they narrowly escaped death: the compartment of their previous train having been machine-gunned and exploded after Jacksonville.

So Bond and Leiter go to investigate the origin of the treasure by inspecting a Mr. Big warehouse officially dedicated to the sale of fish and bait like worms. While they doing that, Solitaire is kidnapped. Leiter decides to return to the warehouse alone during the night. Bond discovers him the next day, still alive but seriously injured: he has lost an arm and part of a leg, probably devoured by a large animal. A note placed on his body reads "He Disagreed with Something that Ate Him".

Bond goes then to the warehouse and discovers that the gold coins from the treasure are being transported clandestinely, hidden at the bottom of the poisonous fish aquariums. He is then attacked by one of Mr. Big's men nicknamed "The Robber", but manages to gain the upper hand and causes him to fall into a pool containing a shark.

007 then goes to Jamaica where the island serving as Mr. Big's lair is located. He receives help from the local Secret Service station chief, John Strangeways, and a local fisherman named Quarrel. The latter trains him in scuba diving while waiting for the arrival of Mr. Big's yacht, the Secatur, who must come to collect a cargo of fishs and probably gold.

When the time comes, Bond swims in the middle of the night to the ship through waters infested with sharks and barracudas excited by the blood that Big's men spill into the water in order to ward off curious people. 007 manages to plant a mine on the hull of the yacht before being captured again.

Bond and Solitaire are reunited. Mr. Big explains to them that he is going to drag them tied behind his yacht, over the coral reefs, and that the blood from their wounds will attract sharks and barracudas who will devour them. Big puts his plan into action but Bond's mine explodes just before they reach the reef. 007 watches Mr. Big, who survived the explosion, being eaten alive by sharks and barracudas.

Quarrel arrives to rescue the couple and once his wounds are treated and his report is made, Bond can finally rest in Solitaire's company...

Mankiewicz at the helm

For Live and Let Die, director Guy Hamilton strongly wanted Tom Mankiewicz to write the script: "I said, Maibaum is a very nice man, I had a lot of respect for him, but at this period he'd run out of, to me, freshness. He was basically an old man [in his sixties] compared to Tom"[1].

Mankiewicz negotiates with his agent (apparently) $100,000 for his work on the film[2]. Live and Let Die is, it seems, the only Bond film who had only one screenwriter during its development. Mankiewicz stayed from the start to finish.

In the early 1970s, a new cultural movement emerged in the United States: the blaxploitation. These are films featuring a cast of actors of color and whose target audience is also black. These films often include violence, crime, sex and drugs in an urban setting.

> - Tom Mankiewicz[3] : Drugs were just huge in the world at the time. It was the late sixties/early seventies, and everybody was on drugs. It was probably more au courant [current?] than almost anything else.

In 1970 and 1971 came out notably Cotton Comes to Harlem, Sweet Sweetback's Baadasssss Song and Shaft: three cult films from the blaxploitation which were big commercial successes, bringing in several times more than they cost to produce. (Some others classics of the genre that will be release around Live and Let Die release includes Foxy Brown and Coffy).

> - Tom Mankiewicz[4] : Cubby said to me, "here are several books [Moonraker was one of them[5]]; which one would you like to do?". I wanted to do Live and Let Die because I thought it it had more of an edge to it. Because all the villains were black and I knew it was very chancy thing because we were making it in the time of the Black Panthers, were making it in the time of, really, a black revolution. I thought it would be wonderful to have Bond with black villains and in a black culture of some kind. Everybody agreed that that edginess might, in fact, help us.

Hamilton being a fan of jazz, Mankiewicz notably suggested New Orleans for this new 007 adventure, with the bayous nearby[6]. Guy Hamilton remembers:

> - Guy Hamilton[7] : I said: "oh, come on Tom, you now, we're not going to do the Mardi Gras because Terence Young had done that with the Junkanoo [in Thunderball]. What else is in New Orleans?". "There's a jazz funerals". In about five minutes flat we conned up that sequence. But I knew that Mr. Broccoli and Mr. Saltzman were not going to send a large unit to New Orleans just to shoot four minute screen time. "What else is in New Orleans, Tom?". "The canals, the > levees...". Immediately my mind went back to the Esther Williams pictures that I adored. There was one where they had girls on top of the skiers, a pyramid, and motorboats went up a ramp and jumped. I thought, "Yeah we can make a motorboat chase out of this".

> - Guy Hamilton[8] : [The idea for a boat chase in Live and Let Die] actually start of in Diamonds Are Forever. We were in Vegas, Hoover Dam, lakes, lots of boats, boat chases. I wasn't happy because, I just you know, just boats on the water. That to me was incredibly dull, because you expect to see boats on the water. And thinking about it, I realized that [however] boats crossing roads, jumping over roads, and all the cars that are chasing: they should end up in the water. That's the start of a chase that would be fun.

Tom Mankiewicz looking back on the film: "[Harry] called me one day and said: "Here's the scene. Sean's asleep. He thinks he's in bed with Solitaire. He feels something, wakes up, and there's a crocodile in bed with him. Isn't that great?"[9]. The screenwriter, however, finds the idea completely stupid[10]. At this time they were still trying to bring Sean Connery back:

> - Tom Mankiewicz[11]: [So I went to lunch with Sean] and said, "You know, Sean, this next Bond film is going to be so much fun: there's crocodiles, and wild boat chases, and...". And he said to me: "And I have an obligation to my public to play James Bond? [...] Well, when does that obligation stop? Seven films? Ten films? Twenty films? [...]". Then he took a pause and said to me, "Let me tell you something, boyo. There's only two things in the world I've ever wanted to own and now have them both: a golf course and a bank.

Since Sean doesn't want to come back, finding a new actor is definitely needed. Mankiewicz completed a first script of 116 pages on May 5, 1972[12]. According to The James Bond Archives, Baron Samedi kills someone with a machete in the pre-title and there is a chase in "a fabulous locale" which introduces Bond. The ending of the script is similar to the novel with the villain dragging Bond and Solitaire behind his yacht, the Secatur.

In the version of June 9, Secatur is still present but Big is no longer killed by the sharks: he dies of swelling, thanks to an anti-shark device that Bond sticks in his mouth[13]. Scouting trips take place in Jamaica, Martinique, Antigua, Puerto Rico, Haiti and Belize, notably to find coral for the scene with the Secatur[14].

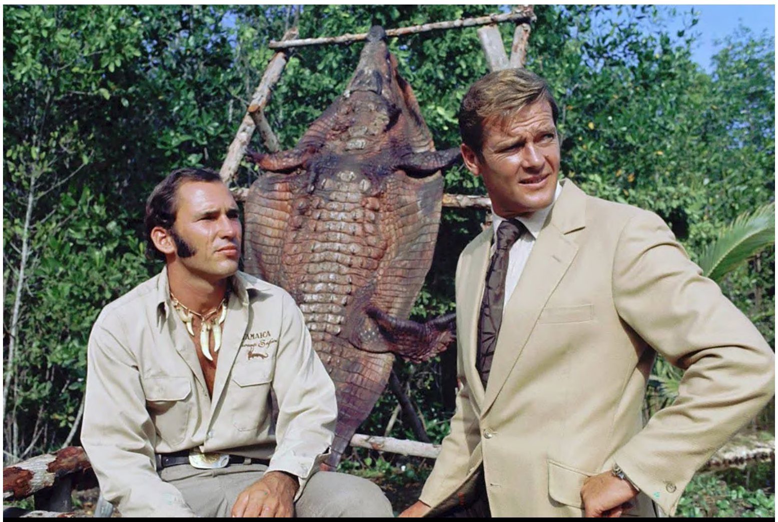
"Cubby and Guy and I went to New Orleans and Jamaica to find locations", Mankiewicz recalls[15]. In Jamaica, intrigued by a sign that saying "trespassers will be eaten", the production discovered a crocodile farm which would subsequently be included in the script[16]. This notably allows Mankiewicz to replace a scene where 007 had to fall into a coffee plantation granulator[17] (or was it a sugar factory machine filled with snakes?[18]) where he had no idea how to get Bond out of. Nor that he has presently any idea on how to get Bond to escape from the island surrounded by crocodiles...

> - Tom Mankiewicz[19] : Harry Saltzman was saying, "How about a helicopter comes over...?". I said, "No Harry, that's too easy".

Harry Saltzman also had another idea, of the obsessive kind, as Mankiewicz recalls: "For some reason he saw Bond in a giant dryer. I didn't know why or where [he got the idea], but someone was going to put him in a dryer and he would be spinning around in this giant machine"[20].

> - Tom Mankiewicz[21] : I said, "Harry: where is that dryer? Does the bad guy have a big dryer at home...? Does he have a dryer that can hold a 1.90m human being?". "The bad guys throw him it in", he insisted. "But why, Harry? Are they going to kill him by making him spin?". It never ended up in the movie, but he loved the idea.

The owner of the crocodile farm, a white man named Ross Kananga, also has a name that inspires production. The villain of the film, named Jakata, is renamed Kananga[22].



Ross Kananga with Roger Moore. According to Mankiewicz (Bondage magazine #8), Kananga was the one who come up with the idea of escaping by jumping on the backs of the crocodiles. He later performed the stunt himself on the screen.

Concerning the fairer sex, Mankiewicz changes the skin color of Solitaire from the novel by making her a black woman whom he imagines played by Diana Ross (who, while at it, could sing the title song)[23]. United Artist takes a dim view of this change: on the one hand Ross could steal the show on screen opposite Roger Moore, still brand new to the role of Bond[24]. But above all civilization being more racist in the 70s than it is today: having a black main Bond girl with whom Bond end up in bed, with a little more feelings than just sex, would mean that certain countries and regions will not want to broadcast the film (especially Japan): meaning a loss of income[25]. United Artist's David Picker told the screenwriter that he would have given a chance to the idea with Sean Connery, but certainly not with a new actor[26]. For Mankiewicz: "he [Picker] always felt that Bond was a port in this storm, a port where people could go to escape and be entertained. He didn't want to contribute to everything that was going on politically and socially at the time"[27].

> - Tom Mankiewicz[28] : This was at a time when Shaft had come out and there was a whole new wave of black exploitation films that were making a lot of money. So I thought that this time out, if we do Live and Let Die, Bond could get into bed with a black girl; in our case, Solitaire, who was of Haitian origin. Everybody said "great", and David Picker of United Artists went along with us. So, in my early script, Solitaire became this beautiful black girl. [...] At the last minute, however, United Artists changed their mind. [....] Picker [...] felt it would work in progressive cities like New York and London, he felt that when the film was distributed in the places where the Bond movies had done very well [...] there would be a lot of people who didn't want Bond championing the > cause of civil rights. Picker said that the decision was simply a matter of economic fact [...] "And frankly", Picker told me, "with Roger, we're scared". "Of course, nobody bothered to tell me about the decision. I found out when suddenly I heard the studio execs mentioning Catherine Deneuve to play Solitaire, which I thought was pretty funny considering I had written her as being black.

When Jane Seymour gets the role, the producers will ask her not to read the Fleming novel, only the script: "They said forget it. Don't bother reading the book, because this has nothing to do with the script"[29]. When Saltzman surprised her one day on set with a copy of the novel, he snatched it out of her hands and said, "I'll take that"[30].

Mankiewicz thus changes the skin color of Solitaire back to white and the one of Rosie Carver (whom he had originally written as white) to black[31]. "The story was about black people and we could not pretend that Bond would not be attracted to a black woman. We compromised a bit; they kissed and they obviously made love but you don't see them in bed together", comments Mankiewicz[32].

At one point, it was also considered to bring back Honey Ryder in this film[33].

For Yaphet Kotto, who plays the villain: "the script was good, but a lot of the black roles were stereotypical. Look, if you don't have a black guy helping you write the dialogue, don't try to write the dialogue. [...] To get black dialogue, you need a black screenwriter"[34]. "There were too many [lines like] Hey baby!: we don't talk like that man, we really don't. I don't know where [Mankiewicz] got that shit from. He overloaded it"[35].

> - Tom Mankiewicz[36] : Solitaire in the book had a deck of cards; I changed it to Tarot cards because I thought they'd add more mystery. I started doing everyone's Tarot cards in London because I got into it, and pretty soon, every party I went to I took my Tarot cards. [...] Michael Caine lived out on the river by the Thames and he had a big party. He said, "Don't forget to bring your tarot cards because everybody wants their Tarot read".

> - Tom Mankiewicz[37] : [Geoffrey Holder, the actor who plays Baron Samedi] took me to a couple of voodoo ceremonies. I read books here about Baron Samedi, the man who cannot die, and all the different gods.

Tom Mankiewicz and Roger Moore.

October 2, 1972' shooting script

One of the only scripts of this film that I have and which we will discuss below, is the "shooting script" dated October 2, 1972 (121 pages).

In this one the pre-title sequence resemble of the one of film, except that there is no Kananga, nor Solitaire in the United Nations building. The script also specifies that the voodoo priest who holds the snake is named Dambala and unlike the film, he has a machete in his hand and kills Baines with it:

> A machete blade flashes into frame: a sickening laugh is heard as the blade sweeps down at Baines. Camera freezes frame on glinting machete blade.
>
> Into main titles:
> Perhaps animated or live tarot cards, voodoo and occult symbols, etc.
>
> Note:
> A short action scene to be inserted here involving Bond and the girl in the following sequence.

This note is followed by a scene where we find Bond in his apartment with the girl who was supposed to be present in the previous sequence, Miss Caruso. They are woken up by a noise and Bond tries to turn off his clock radio but it turns out that the noise is actually coming from M that ringing his doorbell. Instead of the line "Not married by any chance, are you?" that can be heard in the film, Bond says something else in the script: "Whoever's out there's going straight from there to the dentist, I promise you that...".

The scene and dialogues continue as in the film (except that Bond says that it was Hamilton who shared his same bootmaker and not Baines) and there is another small difference:

> Script: Baines was working on a small Caribbean island called San Monique, specifically watching its Prime Minister, one Dr. Kananga. He sent messages to Dawes and Hamilton, asking them to check into certain American contacts of Kananga's. The messages were lost or stolen, the three men killed. That's all we've got.

> Film: Baines was working on a small island in the Caribbean called San Monique. Dawes was in New York, keeping an eye on its prime minister, one Dr. Kananga. Hamilton was on loan to the Americans in New Orleans.

Bond flies to New York while Solitaire predicts the future in her cards, the illustrations of these are faithfully described in the script and there are a few extra sentences: "He has arrived. He expects victory. He brings [it] with him...".

Bond leaves the airport and compares the plate of a black sedan (III367) to his plane ticket and approaches the driver:

> - Charlie: My name's Charlie, Mr. Bond. I... [Bond points his Walther PPK at Charlie] Oh! You want to go to Shea Stadium? The Yankees are playing a doubleheader.
> - Bond (smiles, lowers gun): The Mets play at Shea. The baseball season doesn't begin until April.
> - Charlie: My mistake. Sorry, I forgot. We don't do too much of that over here anymore. Oh, mister Leiter wants to talk to you..
> [Bond takes the phone from the sedan].

On the way, Whisper shoots a dart at Charlie from the rearview mirror of his car, a pink Cadillac. Bond tries to take control of the sedan which ends up crashing into a lamp post. (In the film Charlie drives a yellow Chevrolet Bel Air and Whisper a white Chevrolet 'Corvorado').

After a trip to the store Oh Cult Voodoo Shop, Bond hails a taxi to tail Kananga and his companions who are in a purple Cadillac. Arrived at the restaurant Fillet Of Soul, 007 ordered a Jack Daniel's Black Label (not a bourbon and water) before being captured. He then meets Solitaire, Tee-Hee and Mr. Big

> - Mr. Big: Names are for tombstones, baby, and I ain't about to give you one of those.

007 is being taken outside; he kills his escort (after having knocked down the fire escape, Bond retrieves a weapon and then places himself behind one of the two thugs while the second fires. This shot kills the first thug. Bond shoots the second). Harry Strutter of the CIA appears.

Unlike in the film, Bond and Strutter don't get into the latter's car but into a taxi which is not in service:

> - Driver: Soon as you guys learn how to read, you'll find out I'm off duty. [They get into the taxi anyway] Now look, melon-head. I said... [Strutter points a gun at the driver]. Exactly where is it you two gentlemen would like to go?

As a result, Bond doesn't speak with Felix via the cigarette lighter. Instead we are treated with a scene where Leiter, who wiretapped Kananga, hears Solitaire tell Kananga that his pilot said his plane is ready. Bond and Strutter then enter Leiter's office who says to them: "You want my information? Don't buy Bolivian tin, put your money in San Monique sugar".

In another scene that doesn't appear in the film, we see Bond on a plane that is about to land in San Monique. 007 stops at airport immigration (where Kananga propaganda posters can be seen on the walls):

> - Official: Are you here on business, Mr. Bond?
> - Bond: Just doing a little fishing.
> [Bond's passport is discreetly photographed by the official].
> - Official: Good luck, Mr. Bond.

Bond arrives at his hotel and discovers the snake in his bathroom. In the script, 007 sees the animal while it is near his head... He gets rid of it by headbutting it before decapitating it with his mirror.

Bond then meets Rosie Carver, who is a white woman. They sleep together (or at least it's suggested that they do) and the script calls for a scene in Solitaire's house where the latter draws two tarot cards, one with lovers drinking together and the other with two lovers chained up together in front of a smiling Devil.

A little later we meet Quarrel Jr. ("His father and I locked horns with a Doctor named Ho several years ago"). Arriving near Solitaire's house, there is a scene the script that is not present in the film: a large shark catch the hook of Bond's fishing rod. Quarrel then go to get a gun to kill the animal before changing his mind and take instead an anti-shark weapon (the one that 007 uses later at the end of the movie to kill Kananga). Bond then uses it on the shark which inflates and explodes like a balloon:

- Quarrel Jr.: No blood. Nothing to attract the others.
- Bond: Wait till Q hears about this. He'll...

Live and Let Die is one of the rare James Bond films where Q doesn't make an appearance (about it, Desmond Llewelyn once said: "I think Saltzman was getting fed up with the gadgets"[38]).

There is the death of Rosie Carver and in this script she suddenly jumps off from the side of the road and have a long fall down a precipice. Harry Saltzman will change this to save money when he learns that Guy Hamilton was planning to go to Spain to find a ravine for the scene[39] (in the film she will be killed by a gun hidden in a scarecrow).

After that, Bond goes see Solitaire with a hang glider while Kananga and Tee-Hee have a discussion about her:

- Tee-Hee: Maybe some persuasion of a different kind would help to keep her in her place.
- Kananga: If you ever so much as graze the skin of that woman, Tee-Hee, I will have your other arm cut off and let you watch it being eaten, here.
[Kananga and Tee-Hee look at a crocodile pit].

Solitaire goes bed with Bond and therefore loses her "power". Together they discover the drugs that Kananga is growing on San Monique. Chased, they steal a bus.

Later in New Orleans they are kidnapped and taken to the airport. There Bond gets on a plane from an aviation school. The scene is similar to the film, but Ms. Bell makes more remarks to Bond like: "But you didn't check your flaps... You're supposed to call the tower... Honestly, young man...".

- Tom Mankiewicz[40] : That was Guy Hamilton's idea. He said, "How about if we had an airplane chase where nobody ever took off?".

At one point Bond tries to take off but two planes land on the runway as he tries to take flight, Mrs. Bell then says: "Well, don't look at me, young man. You're the one who's supposed to be giving the lesson"! Bond then turns into the grass to avoid the landing planes (but bad guys in cars wallow in them). Also, the end of the sequence was supposed to be slightly different: Bond's plane controls no longer respond and then hit a barrier and turn over completely. And it was in the flipped aircraft that Bond say: "Same time tomorrow, Mrs. Bell?". After that Felix was supposed to make this remark in the next scene:

> - Leiter: No too bad. Extensive damage to the hangar, five planes, four cars, and a forty foot section of fence. Not to mention giving a seventy-year-old granny the worst jolt she's had since her wedding night. Christ, James, what a way to sneak into town.

We find Bond and Leiter in a restaurant Fillet Of Soul where 007 begins to order a Martini before being interrupted by Leiter who orders two juleps instead. Bond finds himself facing Mr. Big who turns out to be Kananga, the dialogues are quite different: Bond doesn't say that he doesn't speak to lackeys and it's five tonnes of heroin about to be distributed for free (instead of two).

> Film:
> - Kananga: Did you touch her?
> - Bond: Why, it's not the sort of question... A gentleman answers.

> Script:
> - Kananga: Did you touch her, Mr. Bond?

- Bond: Touch her? Le me see... On the boat... Small cabin... Rough seas... We both got knocked around a bit...
- Kananga: Did you touch her?!
- Bond: The proposition was phrased in a hundred ways, the lady's answer was distressingly monotonous: no.
- Solitaire: He... Tells the truth.

When Tee-Hee removes Bond's watch so Solitaire can guess its serial number, Bond has a line that doesn't appear in the film:

- Bond: Some day someone's going to wipe that smile off your face, and I have this funny feeling it's going to be me.

007 is taken to the crocodile farm where he sees a laboratory from which drugs are shipped to Fillet Of Soul restaurants. Bond is placed on a small islet in the middle of waters teeming with crocodiles and escapes by jumping on the animals' backs. Next comes the big action scene of the film which was only described in early scripts as "and then comes the most terrific boat chase you've ever seen" until Harry and United Artist asked it to be written[41]. The shooting script describes the sequence in detail.

Among the differences that we can note with the film, there is a small additional scene between the moment where Bond jumps over a bank and the moment where we discover Sheriff J. W. Pepper. In this one Adam, driving a car on a road parallel to Bond, take out his gun to shoot Bond before put it away because he lost sight of Bond's boat as it passing behind a row of trees.

Another scene that is not in the movie can be found, it was located right after the one where Adam steals Billy Bob's boat:

The narrow bayou channel leads past a swivel-bridge to a wide point into a wide spot in the river. A large crowd of PEOPLE sit on the bank, sipping sodas and munching hot dogs, watching a water skiing show. A tow boat passes by, pulling an elaborate pyramid of WATER SKIERS in its wake, standing on each other's shoulders. The swivel bridge has been opened, leaving a thin gap between it and the shore on one side. The crowd applauds enthusiastically as the SKIERS go by, the PRETTY GIRLS waving on the top of the pyramid. The two boat turns slowly, prepares to make another pass.

408 - ANOTHER ANGLE

BOND screams into view, coming around the bend - he sees the SKIERS's pyramid and tow boat starting back towards him on the wide-river side of the swivel bridge. Turn[ing] the wheel, almost setting his boat on its side in a forty-five degree angle, [he] slides through the narrow space between the swivel-bridge and the bank. The crowd rises appreciatively, giving BOND a bigger hand than they did the SKIERS. CAMERA PANS BACK: HEAVY BOATS FIVE and SIX come around the bend, but they both have made far too wide turns to make it through the gap.

409 - ANGLE FROM OTHER SIDE OF THE BRIDGE

The two HEAVY BOATS, the tow boat and the SKIERS's pyramid are now all converging on the same side of the swivel bridge.

410 - ANGLE ON BOND

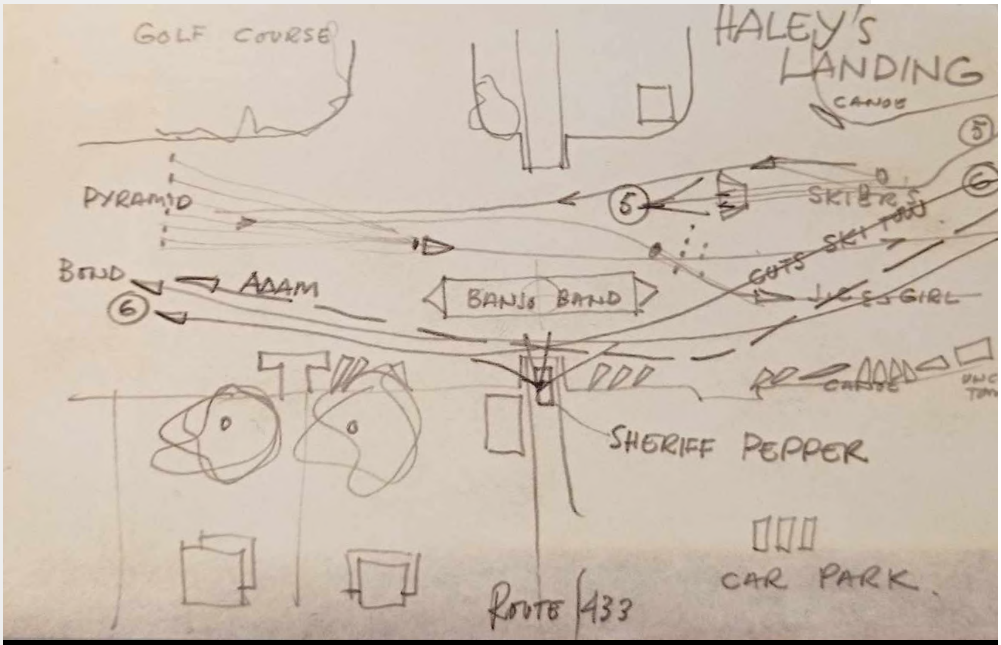
BOND start to head around a bend, hugging the shoreline at top speed.

411 - BACK TO HEAVIES AND TOW BOAT

The two boat and the HEAVY BOATS are now directly on a collision course. The HEAVY BOATS split to go on either side, but the tow boat has already made its move, veering towards the shore, cutting HEAVY BOAT FIVE off, bumping into it, sending it flying into a row of trees on the canal bank.

412 - GOLF PUTTING GREEN - DAY

A GOLFER attempts a thirty-foot [nine meter] putt from the edge of a green, watched in reverential silence by the rest of his FOURSOME. Just as the putter is about to hit the ball, the whine of an engine is heard. GOLFER jerks his head up, involuntarily hits the ball as HEAVY BOAT FIVE flies INTO FRAME, lands in a bunker not ten feet [three meter] away. All turn to gape at the boat as the thirty-foot sinks.



Peter Lamont's sketch for the sequence.

413 - BACK TO HALEY'S LANDING

The tow boat's swerving has caused the SKIER's pyramid to swing out behind on one side. HEAVY BOAT SIX darts between in pursuit of BOND, cutting the tow line on his way through.

414 - ANGLE ON PYRAMID

The SKIERS's pyramid tremble for a moment, begins to sink, then collapses completely as everyone tumbles over each other in the water.

Guy Hamilton said he intended to end the boat chase with the scene including a human pyramid but that Cubby thought the boating sequence was becoming too long (Hamilton was disappointed that Saltzman did not sufficiently defend the stunt)[42].

There are other small additions like a moment where Bond and Adam's boats are side by side before Bond cuts his engine to let Adam go ahead and rush into another canal. Also, when Bond rush at Adam with his gasoline, he is lowered behind his boat's dashboard (Adam then fire a shot from his shotgun into Bond's windshield which shattered).

At the end of the chase, when Bond joins Leiter on dry land, he informs him that Kananga is leaving the country. A shot of Kananga's yacht is asked (which would have been a nice touch to the novel) followed by a helicopter (the pilot then inform Leiter that the yacht is arriving in international waters and Leiter then order the pilot to abandon the pursuit/surveillance).

In San Monique, Bond frees Solitaire and is again captured by Kananga (who doesn't test the anti-shark weapon on a sofa). Bond ends up blowing up Kananga like a balloon and is finally on a train with Solitaire. As the train passes near a station, someone picks up a bag of mail which is suspended from the station by a hook (Saltzman will ask to make it simpler and above all less expensive to film[43]).

They are attacked by Tee-Hee who was hidden in the bag. The fight is not fully described, "THE FIGHT: brutal and fast-moving (exact details to be worked out)" we can read, but the way Bond gets rid of his opponent by neutralizing his metal arm before throwing him out the window is already here.

Finally, Baron Samedi is not present in the final scene of the script, which is as follows:

> 547 - EXT. TRAIN TRACK JUNCTION - CLOSE ON RED SIGNAL - NIGHT
>
> Camera close on a large, circular sign hanging over one track at a central train junction: a red light blinks on and off over the words: NO ENTRY. With a loud "ding" the sign flips down, is replaced by a bright, blinking green light as BOND's train whistles through, and off into the distance...

Revised shooting script

Another shooting script dated October 2, 1972 on its title page, but actually redacted later (with revised pages from December 27, 1972 and January 2, 3, 8, 11, 16, 23, 29, 30, 1973) offers a different introduction to Roger Moore's James Bond.

After the opening three deaths (Baines', now with a snake instead of a machete) and the credits, the said "short action scene to be inserted here" was written. It opens on a plant-rich garden surrounded by walls. It's nighttime and two men are standing there.

> - Man: It's midnight. You said he'd be here. I'm not in the habit of coming to strange places...

Suddenly, a hand holding a pistol quickly emerges from a bush near them and it's owner knocks one of the two men unconscious.

> - (Voice of) Bond: They did day you'd be alone.
> - Man: And they said you'd be unarmed, Mr...?
> Extreme close-up: James Bond. Bond's face fills the screen (Theme music pick up under).
> - Bond: Bond. James Bond.

007 "casually" throws his gun over the wall and pulls out a bag of money to exchange with the man for documents. These documents turn out to be contained in a contact lens. Bond inspects the latter with a kind of pen that emits a blue light: everything seems to be in order.

Suddenly, an alarm sounds and voices are heard: "Open up! We know you're in there!".

> - Bond: Quickly! Over into the next garden...

Seemingly panicked, Bond and the man try to escape. Bond gives give a leg-up to the man in order to help him to cross one of the walls that surround the garden.

The man climbs as Bond propels him a little fast and... Falls into the void as it is revealed that the garden is actually on the roof of a 15-storey building in Rome!

It's no blunder on Bond's part, however, since we see 007 immediately afterwards head toward the door from which the enemy's voices are coming from and unlock it. Behind the door he opened is a beautiful Italian woman, Miss Caruso, holding an audio recording of the enemy voices and the alarm. Bond takes her in his arms and kisses her.

> - Caruso: It was on time?
> - Bond: Dead on.
> - Caruso: Has it all come off?
> - Bond: Not quite.

The sequence was never filmed, but actor Michael Sheard was auditioned to play the man whose Bond was leading to his downfall, as he recounts: "They made a dummy of me to do the fall. They even had a standby dummy in case the leading dummy got it wrong! They were both immaculately dressed in exact duplicates of the clothes I was going to wear"[44].

Apart from that, there's not much else to note in this 120 pages of this script, except that now the finale with Baron Samedi on the train has been written.

Sources/references from chapter 8: Live and Let Die

1 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
2 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).
3 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
4 "Inside Live and Let Die" DVD's bonus.
"The James Bond Archives" by Howard Hughes and Paul Duncan (2012).
5 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
6 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
7 "Inside Live and Let Die" DVD's bonus.
"Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
8 Guy Hamilton's TV interview on Afternoon plus (13/01/1975).
9 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).
10 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).
11 "For Your Eyes Only: Behind the scenes of the James Bond films" by David Giammarco (2002).
"My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).
12 "The James Bond Archives" by Howard Hughes and Paul Duncan (2012).
13 "The James Bond Archives" by Howard Hughes and Paul Duncan (2012).
14 "The James Bond Archives" by Howard Hughes and Paul Duncan (2012).
15 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).
16 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).
17 Bondage magazine, Mankiewicz's interview by Richard Schenkman (issue #8, 1980).
18 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).
19 Bondage magazine, Mankiewicz's interview by Richard Schenkman (issue #8, 1980).
20 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).
21 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).
22 "The James Bond Archives" by Howard Hughes and Paul Duncan (2012).
23 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).
24 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).
25 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).
"Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
26 Tom Mankiewicz interviewed by Lee Pfeiffer at "Licence to Learn About Bond: Bond, James Bond: The World of 007" symposium at Hofstra University Symposium (2007); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
27 "For Your Eyes Only" by David Gimmarco (2002); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
28 "The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).
29 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
30 Observer, 4 July 1973; via "When Harry Met Cubby" by Robert Sellers, 2019.
31 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).
32 "The Art of Bond" by Laurent Bouzerau (2006).
33 Bondage magazine, Mankiewicz's interview by Richard Schenkman (issue #8, 1980).
34 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
35 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
36 Mankiewicz's interview by Chauhan Dharmesh for Superman Cinema, via CapedWonder (2006): https://www.capedwonder.com/the-2006-tom-mankiewicz-interview
37 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
38 "Pay attention 007", Llewelyn interview with Matthew Field (1999), from 007 Magazine: http://www.007magazine.co.uk/archive/desmond_llewelyn_interview.htm
39 "The James Bond Archives" by Howard Hughes and Paul Duncan (2012).
40 "The James Bond Archives" by Howard Hughes and Paul Duncan (2012).
41 Tom Mankiewicz in "Inside Live and Let Die" DVD's bonus.
42 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
43 "The James Bond Archives" by Howard Hughes and Paul Duncan (2012).
44 "Yes, Mr Bronson: Memoirs of a Bum Actor" by Michael Sheard (1997).

ALBERT R BROCCOLI and HARRY SALTZMAN present
ROGER MOORE
AS
JAMES BOND 007
IAN FLEMING'S "THE MAN WITH THE GOLDEN GUN" with CHRISTOPHER LEE · BRITT EKLAND · Produced by ALBERT R BROCCOLI and HARRY SALTZMAN Directed by GUY HAMILTON · Screenplay by RICHARD MAIBAUM and TOM MANKIEWICZ · Music by JOHN BARRY
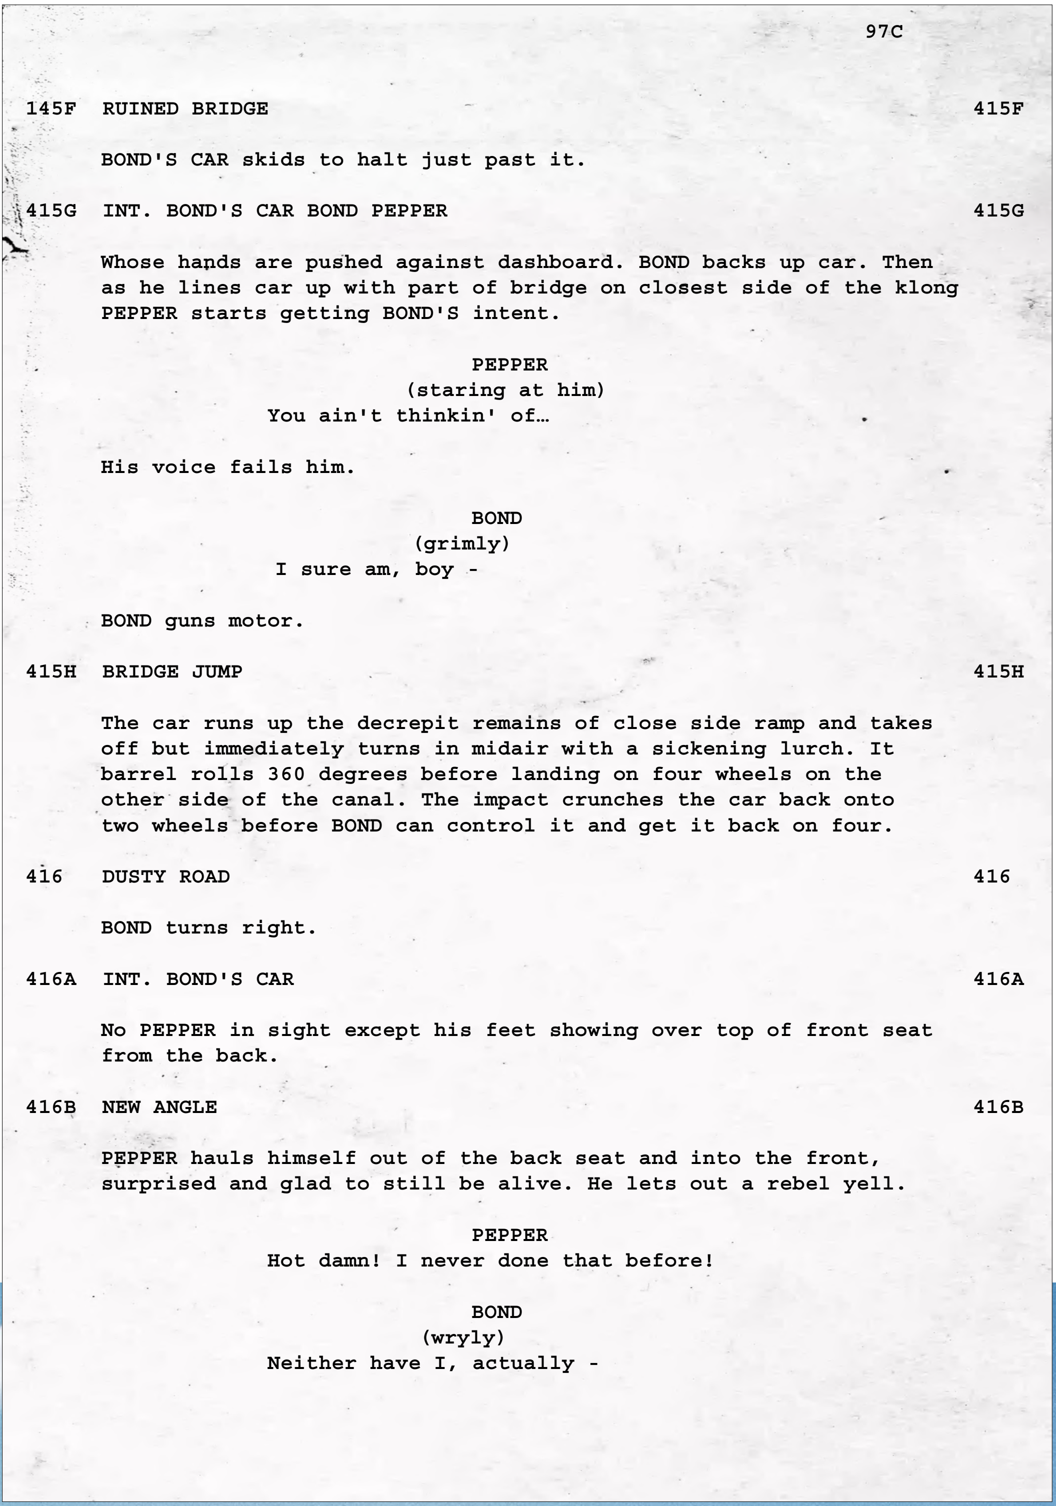
United Artists

Release date (premiere) :
19 December 1974

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Screenplay by Richard Maibaum and Tom Mankiewicz"

Director :...........................Guy Hamilton
Producers :.Albert R. Broccoli & Harry Saltzman
Director photography :..........Ted Moore
Set Designer :.......................Peter Murton
Composer :..............................John Barry
Editors :..................R. Poulton & J. Shirley
Title sequence :...............Maurice Binder
Title song vocals :.............................Lulu



97C

145F RUINED BRIDGE 415F

BOND'S CAR skids to halt just past it.

415G INT. BOND'S CAR BOND PEPPER 415G

Whose hands are pushed against dashboard. BOND backs up car. Then as he lines car up with part of bridge on closest side of the klong PEPPER starts getting BOND'S intent.

PEPPER
(staring at him)
You ain't thinkin' of…

His voice fails him.

BOND
(grimly)
I sure am, boy -

BOND guns motor.

415H BRIDGE JUMP 415H

The car runs up the decrepit remains of close side ramp and takes off but immediately turns in midair with a sickening lurch. It barrel rolls 360 degrees before landing on four wheels on the other side of the canal. The impact crunches the car back onto two wheels before BOND can control it and get it back on four.

416 DUSTY ROAD 416

BOND turns right.

416A INT. BOND'S CAR 416A

No PEPPER in sight except his feet showing over top of front seat from the back.

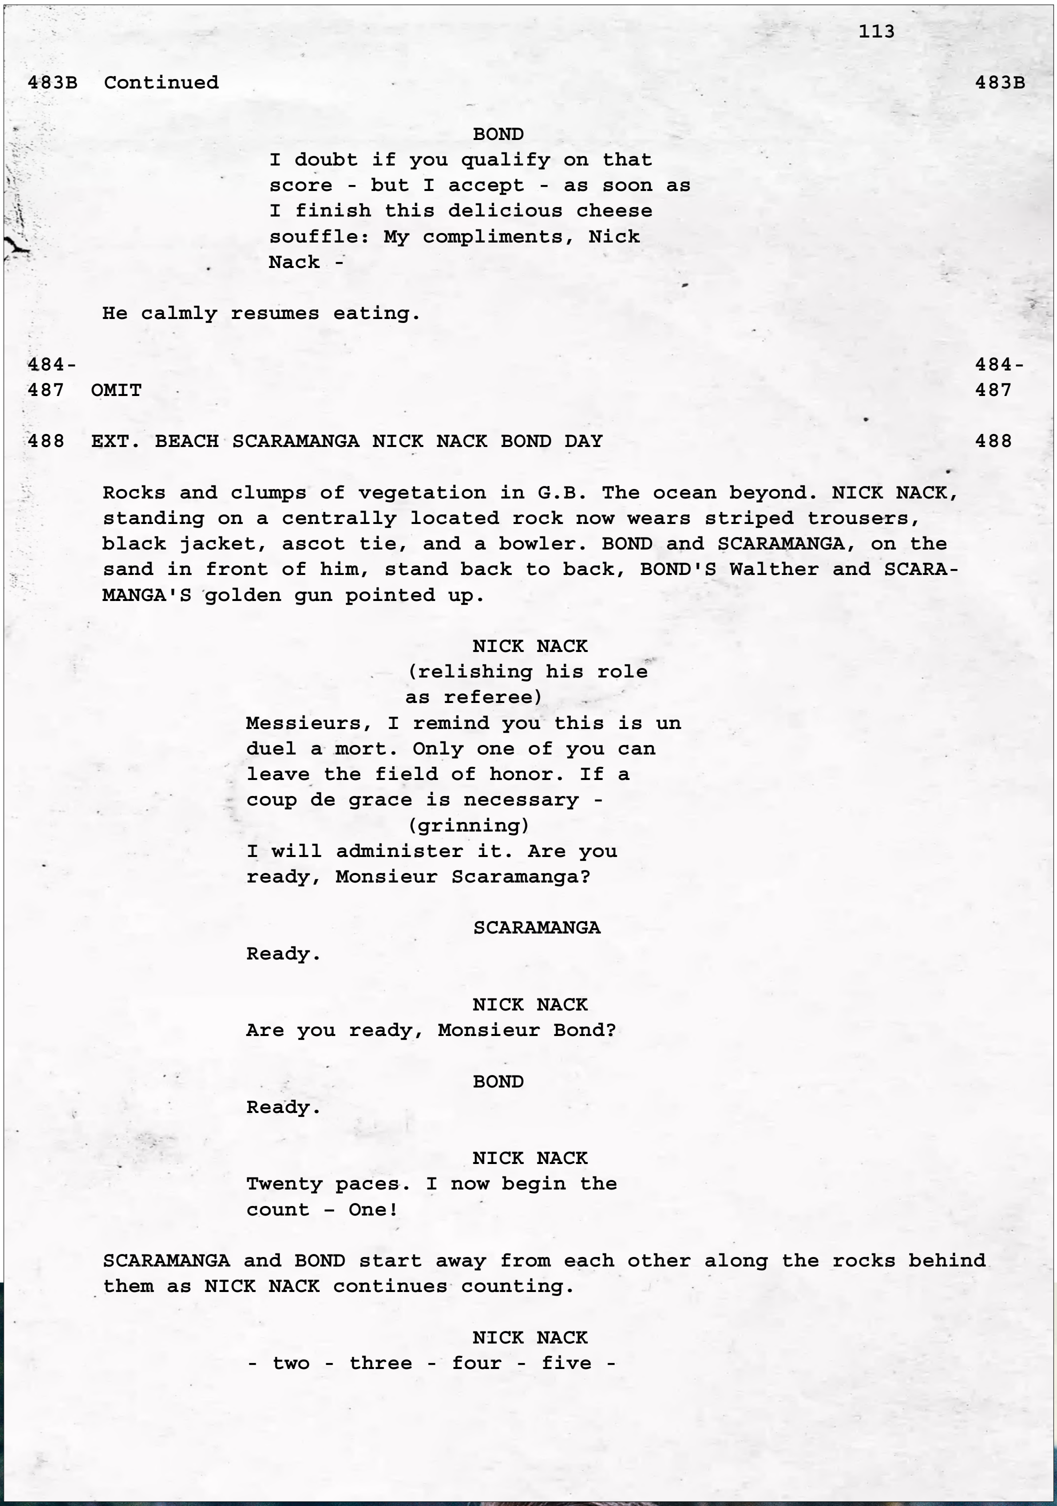
416B NEW ANGLE 416B

PEPPER hauls himself out of the back seat and into the front, surprised and glad to still be alive. He lets out a rebel yell.

PEPPER
Hot damn! I never done that before!

BOND
(wryly)
Neither have I, actually -

CHAPTER 9



113

483B Continued 483B

BOND
I doubt if you qualify on that score - but I accept - as soon as I finish this delicious cheese souffle: My compliments, Nick Nack -

He calmly resumes eating.

484- 484-
487 OMIT 487

488 EXT. BEACH SCARAMANGA NICK NACK BOND DAY 488

Rocks and clumps of vegetation in G.B. The ocean beyond. NICK NACK, standing on a centrally located rock now wears striped trousers, black jacket, ascot tie, and a bowler. BOND and SCARAMANGA, on the sand in front of him, stand back to back, BOND'S Walther and SCARAMANGA'S golden gun pointed up.

NICK NACK
(relishing his role as referee)
Messieurs, I remind you this is un duel a mort. Only one of you can leave the field of honor. If a coup de grace is necessary - (grinning)
I will administer it. Are you ready, Monsieur Scaramanga?

SCARAMANGA Ready.

NICK NACK
Are you ready, Monsieur Bond?

BOND Ready.

NICK NACK
Twenty paces. I now begin the count - One!

SCARAMANGA and BOND start away from each other along the rocks behind them as NICK NACK continues counting.

NICK NACK
- two - three - four - five -

Cast:

James Bond :.........................Roger Moore
Francisco Scaramanga :.Christopher Lee
Mary Goodnight :...................Britt Ekland
Andrea Anders:...................Maud Adams
Nick Nack :...................Hervé Villechaize
Hip :.......................................Soon-Tek Oh
Hai Fat :.................................Richard Loo
Lazar :..............................Marne Maitland
J.W. Pepper :.........................Clifton James
M :..Bernard Lee
Moneypenny :.....................Lois Maxwell
Q :................................Desmond Llewelyn

Main filming locations: Thailand, Hong Kong, Thailand, Macau and UK

The beginning of the 70s is definitely a difficult Bond's period for me. Here is another adventure which certainly shines by its Thai destinations, but which beyond that is weighed down by a tone oscillating between the serious and the comic. (The French version doesn't help with the comedy, on the contrary, especially by giving Nick Nack the French dubber of Bugs Bunny). The action scenes, with the exception of the incredible 360°, lacking of spectacular. Mankiewicz defined the major structure of the film's storyline; Maibaum's biggest addition when he arrives will be the Solex subplot which isn't the most interesting. As a result, two missions come together without really blending well in a plot that is already so simplistic and complex at the same time.

THE MAN WITH THE GOLDEN GUN

Table of contents

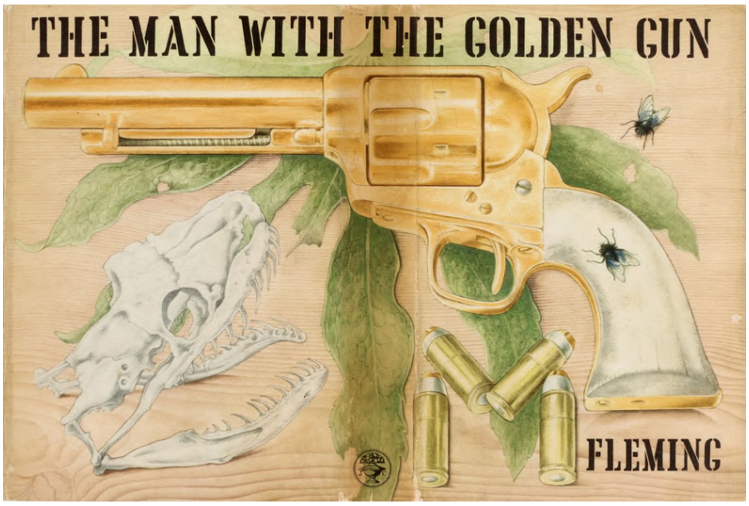
The Man with the Golden Gun

The man from the novel....518
Mankiewicz returns....519
October 18, 1973' script....521
The Man without Mankiewicz....539
Black clouds on Maibaum return....540
November 12' 1973 treatment....542
Maibaum's first script: Saida, Malazar and fireworks....547
Additional pages: camera, funhouse and academy....549
January 1974' "rewritten first draft": brothel, nieces and 360°....556
April 15' script: duplication, AMC and thermos....571

The man from the novel

The Man with the Golden Gun is Fleming's last novel, published posthumously in 1965 (the author having died before completing the revision phase). Here's what it is talking about:

It's been almost a year since the press announced that James Bond was missing, presumed dead during his mission in Japan, when London HQ receives a call from a man who claiming to be Bond ask to see M. After examination and an interrogatory, the man's identity is confirmed: it is indeed James Bond. What the Secret Service doesn't know however is that since his amnesia, the KGB has found Bond in Vladivostok and brainwashed him by "re-educating" him to kill M.



THE MAN WITH THE GOLDEN GUN
FLEMING

During a conversation in M's office, Bond tries to kill his superior with a gun which firing cyanide. The assassination attempt fails when M presses a button which causes a large plate of armored glass to fall between them. James Bond is then captured by Bill Tanner and the head of security.

After a treatment intended to make him become himself again, Bond re-enters the Secret Service and is offered a chance to redeem himself: he must find and kill Francisco "Paco" "Pistol" Scaramanga in Jamaica. Being a hitman working for the KGB and Cuba, Scaramanga is known for his long-barreled, gold-plated Colt .45 revolver, and the fact that he never misses his target. His file also describes him as a man with some sexual appetite almost invariably having an intercourse before killing, believing it improve his eyesight.

M knows that, whatever the outcome of this mission, the Service wins: either Bond succeeds, proof of his loyalty and that he is indeed back; or the man with the golden gun kills him in first, which will definitively resolve the James Bond case.

In Jamaica, Bond finds Mary Goodnight, his former secretary who now works in that country for the Service. Bond ends up meeting Scaramanga in a brothel and is hired by him under the false name of Mark Hazard: Scaramanga needs a sort of bodyguard for a meeting he is organizing at the Thunderbird Hotel. Bond learns from Scaramanga that he is leading a group made up of American gangsters and the KGB, who is exploiting a sugar plantation to increase the value of Cuban sugar. The gang also operates Jamaican casinos and is the basis of drug trafficking distributed in the United States.

Bond discovers that he has a CIA ally undercover in the Thunderbird Hotel: Felix Leiter. Bond is tasked by Scaramanga to guard the entrance of a meeting room where the gangsters are meeting, but he hears through the door that Scaramanga plans to get rid of him once his work is done. Bond's true identity is later confirmed by a KGB agent.

The assassination attempt on Bond takes place on a small train going to Green Island Harbor while on the rails lies a plastic mannequin representing Mary Goodnight. A shootout breaks out and Leiter, Bond and Scaramanga (both injured), jump out of the little train which ends up exploding (along with the gangsters transported by it), thanks to a bomb planted on a bridge by the CIA.

Bond chases Scaramanga into a swamp and corners him shortly after, while the latter eats a raw snake he has just killed. Like a good Catholic, Scaramanga asks for one last prayer: granted. But before being shot by Bond, Scaramanga using a golden derringer fires a bullet poisoned with the snake's venom at him. As Bond collapses, he manages to shoot (and kill) Scaramanga.

Fortunately Bond is spotted by a police officer and is quickly administered antivenom. He regains consciousness in hospital a week later where Mary Goodnight visits him. Later, Bond learns that the Prime Minister is offering to recommend him to Queen Elizabeth for knighthood. However Bond, who values his privacy, his anonymous character, and who refuses to be called "Sir James Bond", declines the offer, saying that he is a "Scottish peasant" and that he feels good this way.

Mankiewicz returns

It was once envisaged to film this novel in Cambodia after You Only Live Twice, however with the Cambodian civil war breaking out in early 1967, the idea was abandoned[1].

After Live and Let Die, it was decided to entrust the writing of the following film to Tom Mankiewicz.

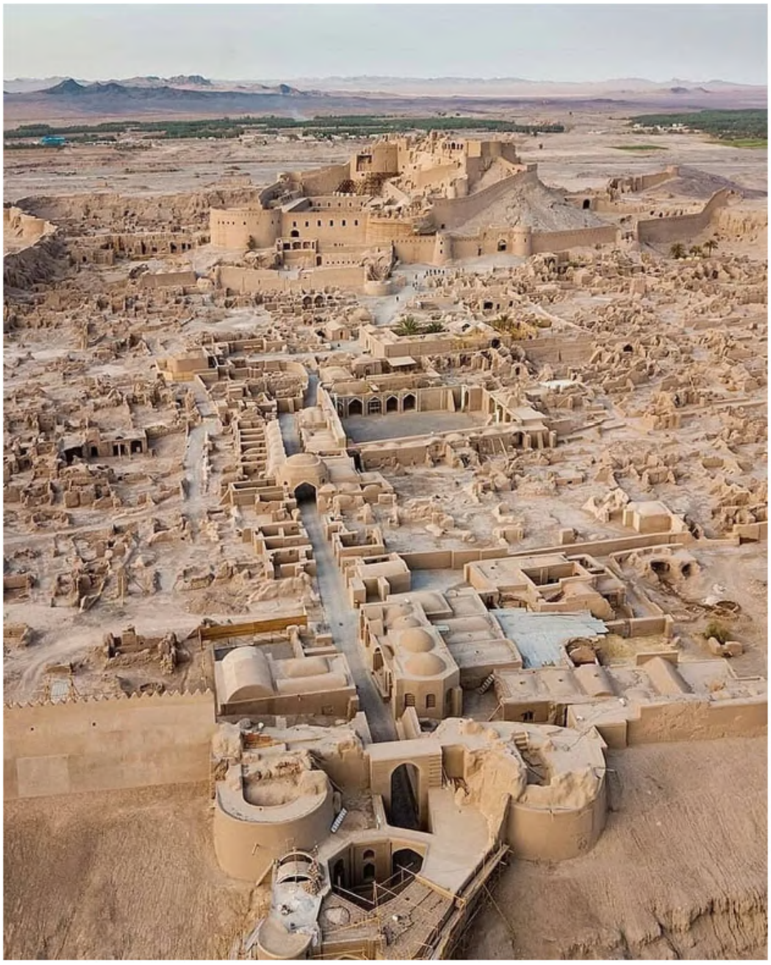
According to director Guy Hamilton, the novel offered little that could be exploited: "we were very much scraping the bottom of the barrel to find Bondian situations"[2]. It also doesn't help that the novel takes place in Jamaica while the filmmakers have already (re)visited this country in the previous film.

Mankiewicz receives a phone call to participate in location scouting with Cubby and Guy Hamilton in Asia[3]. Hamilton knew of a fantastic place called Ha Long Bay, located in Vietnam. The country was still considered too dangerous to film there following the recent war that had taken place, but he had discovered in National Geographic a similar place existing in Thailand[4].

Mankiewicz recalls: "We stayed at the beautiful Peninsula [hotel] in Hong Kong. Cubby had a suite [...] and its own staff of three people that were there twenty-four hours a day. [...] We also went to the Bottoms Up Club, where you could get a blowjob while you were sitting there. [...] We went from [Hong Kong] to Bangkok"[5].

In Thailand, seeing elephants being used for work in the forests, Harry Saltzman have the idea of including a cavalcade of elephants in the film[6]. A stopover in Calcutta in India is also made but the city appears too poverty-stricken to be a filming location for a Bond film[7].

Filmmakers are also attracted by the Middle East. Having seen a piece of the unfinished documentary The Lovers' Wind (Le Vent des amoureux) by Albert Lamorisse on Iran, Broccoli was very interested in where the scene with the fox was filmed[8]. After some research, it was discovered that it was the citadel of Arg-e Bam.



According to Mankiewicz: "We flew to Iran, and it was miserable. We got to Tehran, and we took of for the city of Shiraz". The group then leaves for Arg-e Bam but they never arrives at their destination. "We landed in the middle of the desert, people came out to meet us... And it was the wrong city. It wasn't the one in the [Lamorisse's] movie. The mayor had laid on this big lunch for us, and Cubby said: forget it, we're getting back in the plane. It's 140 degrees, I'm not sitting here for hours"[9]. On the way back Mankiewicz said to Broccoli that they should ask Lamorisse the exact location; Cubby replies that they can't: Lamorisse is dead, which is why his documentary was never finished[10].

The filmmakers ended up to find the real place, as a photo of Mankiewicz posing in front of the citadel proves it (to the right)[11].

Hamilton also shares his memories: "There is basically bugger all in Tehran. You couldn't move left or right; everything was army. The Shah was like that"[12]. At one point Cubby was strip-searched when authorities believed the camera he had was a gun[13]. "We were there for about ten days and quickly realised Iran is not a place to bring a Bond unit", continue Hamilton[14].

Mankiewicz adds that on the way back "all sudden these Phantom jets go by, we're in this small plane and I said: what's going on? The pilot said: Israel has just declared war on Egypt"[15]. With the Yom Kippur War beginning on October 6, 1973, "we decided not to go back to Iran to shoot"[16].

A Mankiewicz treatment that I do not own, completed earlier on August 20, 1973, included a relationship between Bond and MI6' agent Mary Goodnight, characters named Ursula (Scaramanga's mistress), Demitasse (the dwarf butler), Good-Fat (a Chinese businessman), and his brother Bad-Fat (boss of a Hong Kong cinema studio specialized in martial arts films)[17]. The screenwriter would like to have Jack Palance for the role of his Scaramanga: "I had always envisaged it as a classic shootout, as Shane, if you will. [...] It was going to be Roger versus Jack Palance"[18].

The actor was approached according to Hamilton: "Cubby and I had lunch with Palance in LA, but he turned us down"[19].

October 18, 1973' script

On October 18, 1973 (about two week after the beginning of the Yom Kippur War), Mankiewicz completed a script ("Rough Draft Screenplay") of 145 pages.

The script opens with an Asian worker who seems to be in a rice field. However, golf balls land near him and we discover that we are actually on a golf course in Bangkok, described as a "curious mixture of traditional and modern architectures". Two Chinese golfers are playing: Loh Fat and Chang; accompanied by their (female) caddies. The two men discuss, Chang has failed in a task entrusted to him:

> \- Chang: He's not as easy to kill as we thought. I beg for your patience in this matter.
> \- Fat: It was my lack of patience with others which caused me to build this private course. If I find a slow foursome in front of me so intolerable, how must I look upon your incompetence in handling a simple killing?

Chang assures him that he is making new arrangements to resolve the problem. They approach their golf balls and we notice that Chang's one is no longer on where we saw it land, but in a bunker (sand pit). As Chang approaches it to make another shot, he begins to slowly sink into the ground: he finds himself in quicksand. Chang desperately begs for help from Fat (and the caddies) who imperturbably concentrates on shooting his own ball, without even looking at him. As Chang disappears into the ground, Loh Fat tells him that he has already made arrangements of his own and a caddy takes a rake to even out the sand.

We continue with a camera shot of a series of islands. On one of them is Scaramanga's property where he is lying down, being massaged by a certain Delia in a bikini:

> \- Delia: Zurich advises Fat's bank draft cleared this morning. I've drawn up the standard contract. Like to look it over?
> \- Scaramanga: Breakfast is late again. Call Demitasse.
>
> Delia finishes quickly, rises, crosses to the steel door, yanks on a hanging cord. Camera follows cord up the rugged cliff side to a window cut into the house. An oddly-shaped male face (Demitasse) appears, looks down into camera, nods.
>
> Angle on cliff door. A whine is heard from inside the cliff, the unmistakable sound of a lift descending, The noise stops, the steel cliff door slides open, Demitasse (a dwarf) appears, carrying a large tray with several dishes on it. He is immaculately dressed in miniature butler's regalia. His chest and arms are proportionately massive, his expression blank.
>
> Angle on Scaramanga. [He] rolls over slowly towards the approaching Demitasse, exposing his chest. Two inches above and to the right of his left breast [is] a staggeringly unforgettable sight: a third nipple. He slips on his robe as Demitasse sets the tray down on the table next to the golden gun and box.

Closer[-up] on the tray. Scaramanga's breakfast consists of two dozen oysters on the half-shell. Another dozen soak in a pot of briny water next to a plate of peeled whole lemons.

- Scaramanga (to Demitasse): Fresh?

Demitasse reaches into the briny pot, pulls out a large, closed oyster, squeezes it.

Insert shot [of] Demitasse's hands. The powerful hands grip the large oyster expertly, crack it open. Demitasse hands the cracked oyster back to Scaramanga. He sucks it down in one gulp, nods. He bites into a peeled, raw lemon, rips a piece off, chews end swallows it, spits out a pit, takes a seat. He looks off: Delia lies back in another deck chair near the sand. She reaches into a tote bag, pulls out a cigarette, lights a match,

Close[-up] on Delia. The lit match approaches the tip of her cigarette; two booming gunshots ring out. The match is extinguished as the cigarette is almost simultaneously blow out of her mouth.

Wider angle: Scaramanga holds the smoking golden gun in one hand, an oyster in the other.

- Scaramanga: Don't you know that smoking can be dangerous to your health?

Delia's hand trembles. She slowly wipes away the loose tobacco which has been splattered over her lips. Demitasse has not reacted, now finishes serving, walks back toward the cliff side doorway. Scaramanga returns to his breakfast,

- Scaramanga: Lately you seem determined to irritate me, Delia. For instance, you know I prefer you with...

The golden gun snaps up: he fires again.

Close[-up] on Delia's head. The bullet knocks the jeweled pin off the towel two inches above her head. The towel flies. Her long hair spills down over her shoulders.

- Scaramanga: Your hair down.

Delia sits tensely, staring straight ahead.

- Scaramanga: You have a beautiful body and yet you insist on covering it up, Eventually Scaramanga tells her to go back inside where we see Demitasse (whose name sound like "Halfcup" in french) move behind a control panel and activate a "cliff top" button.

Suddenly from the top of the cliff a man with a machine gun appears; Scaramanga dives to the ground and grabs his golden pistol before firing it twice. We discover that the man he shot was actually an effigy of the American gangster John Dillinger who died in 1934. Scaramanga reloads his gun while Demitasse presses a second button, revealing an effigy of James Bond who then takes a bullet between the eyes by the man with the golden gun.

After a title sequence, we are in M's office with Moneypenny and Boothroyd. The latter concludes his examination of a golden bullet by saying that it's .45 caliber and probably authentic (belonging to Scaramanga). M asks Moneypenny what she found on Francisco Scaramanga: not much. Former KGB killer before becoming free-lance, reputed to have a third nipple, no photos of him, maybe of Brazilian origin, 23 confirmed assassinations and his price is 1 million dollars per target.

Boothroyd asks who would want to kill 007 and there is a line here that partially ended up in the film:

> - M: I'm afraid the list is endless, Double-O-Six. Avenging husbands, insulted chefs, rejected tailors, outraged sommeliers. An American feminist took a potshot at him in Miami last year,
> - Moneypenny: But if you recall, sir, she later tried to sue him for breach of promise.

Boothroyd (006?!) says not to worry: Bond has never missed his target. Scaramanga too, adds M, before asking Moneypenny to bring Bond.

007 is currently in a casino in Malta where there is a Greek named Socrates who has a string of victories at baccarat (with the complicity of the dealer). Bond in a white tuxedo sits at his table, "banco", and introduces himself to the man as "Bond, James Bond". Socrates introduces him to the woman who accompanies him: Beatrice Kupp, his fiancée.

The dealer deals the cards fraudulently; we see that Bond plays different cards than the one he was dealt (he also cheats) and wins against Socrates who finds himself as surprised as the dealer. Socrates decides to up the ante for the next round: Bond wins again. 007 leaves to go to the casino's bathroom and we see under his jacket, when he takes it off, the mechanism that allowed him to cheat.

While 007 is in the bathroom, Socrates whispers to his henchman/bodyguard to get his money back. The man goes into the bathroom with a silenced pistol and shoots into the stall where Bond is. However when the door opens we discover that only 007's clothes were in the cabin and we see Bond come out of another cabin and shoot the henchman with his "Beretta".

> - Bond: Well, when you've got to go, you've got to go, I suppose.

The next morning we find Bond in his hotel room, in the company of Beatrice with whom he has obviously bed; there is notably a wedding dress on the ground:

> - Bond: Tell me more about this man you're marrying today.
> - Beatrice: Socrates is very powerful, very rich... And very angry at you for winning that money from him last night.

Bond tells her that they were counterfeit notes and advises her to bring forward her wedding by an hour: Socrates will be arrested in the morning. If she manages to get married before then, she will be able to collect the divorce money while he is in prison.

The phone rings: it's M. He recommends 007 to stay in Malta for a few more weeks, "take that holiday you're always clamoring for". M explains that there is a contract on Bond head, Scaramanga sent a golden bullet to announce it; so he better not go back to HQ. M tells him that he is sending Q to him to take care of the final details. Beatrice leaves the room, passing Q:

> - Bond: Oh, and do try to remember, darling, When you get to the altar: it's "I do", not "I did".

Q is surprised to see a woman in a wedding dress coming out of 007's room, "you're not...". Bond tells him that she just stopped by to borrow a bowl of rice.

If we are used to Q bringing gadgets to Bond, here it's the opposite: Bond must gives him his possessions (Beretta, watch and a pen). "I trust for once these items are being returned in proper condition", says Q as Bond clicks the pen from which a steel dart sticks into the watch face!

> - Q: Really, Double-O-Seven, I'm only doing my job, you know.

Q retrieve other gadgets from Bond: a comb containing a transmitter, a box of pills with some cyanide ones and others of sodium penthotal, and a location beacon hidden in a shoe heel. Q then shows/hands him the bullet that was sent to them, which have its manufacturer's letter "A" engraved on it. "Achmed Fazi. From Baghdad", recognize Bond. Q tells him that he didn't liked confiscating his gadgets and apologizes if he seemed brusque; Bond tells him he found him "quite disarming"!

Q adds that Fazi is living in Macau at the moment, then leave. 007 goes the hotel reception to book a plane ticket to Hong Kong; in the background of the room there are two flight attendants looking at him appreciatively. Bond tells the receptionist that he will finally take not one but three tickets.

There are then scenes in a Boeing 747 where Bond is pampered by the stewardesses who notably serve him a drink that is "shaken, not stirred". There is a certain Fred who is in a way the boss of the hostesses and who has the right impression that there is one more passenger on the plane than counted during boarding. During turbulence, Bond deliberately falls in front of Fred in order to divert his gaze from the stewardess responsible for recounting the boarding passes.

Also on the plane is Delia, reading a book (very precisely The Day of the Jackal by Frederick Forsyth). Bond sees her but doesn't know who she is at this stage of the adventure.

The plane lands in Bangkok for a stopover, Bond sees Delia there again. Since she's a pretty girl, he decides to approach her to ask her out for a drink since they're both "strangers on foreign shores with an hour or so to kill" before the rest of the flight. She is obviously not interested since she leaves without speaking to him.

In the next scene Bond arrives in the back of a rickshaw outside a Macau casino at night. He plays an "odd-looking three-dimensional roulette game" where (similar to the film) buckets are used to get money down to dealers located lower. Below the roulette floor, there is Fazi's office. Bond writes his name on a piece of paper, takes it to a dealer who throws it on the ground; Fazi is able to see Bond's name on the paper through the almost transparent roof of his office.

Fazi, described as a "bearded Arab", welcomes Bond into his office, telling him it is an honor; he's almost tempted to ask him an autograph! 007 presents him with Scaramanga's bullet and they go down one floor to Fazi's workshop. Unlike the film, they are not alone: there are Fazi workers. The manufacturer examines the bullet and confirms that it is indeed his work. Near the shooting range there is a weapon (a revolver) without a trigger: tailor-made for a customer who lost two fingers, explains Fazi. Bond tries it (and misses for the same reason that in the film) while Fazi consults his sales register:

- Fazi: Sabato... Saltzman... Ah, Scaramanga. Two bullets in '69, none in '70, four in '71... As you can see, hardly a satisfactory patron. This year, however, he must plan more activity. Just yesterday I completed and sent an order for six.

Bond asks Fazi where the order was delivered and since Fazi is reluctant to tell him, 007 threatens him with the revolver. The order was delivered to a certain Dubbel at the "Hungry Dragon" hotel in Hong Kong.

Bond boards a hydrofoil heading to Hong Kong in which a tourist guide notably shows the wreck of the Queen Elizabeth (which sank in 1972). Arriving at the terminal, he is greeted by a "buxom" girl who shouts his name when she sees him: Mary Goodnight, in a convertible.

Bond is surprised; Goodnight said she received a message from M saying that Bond could come to Hong Kong and not go near him. Why is she there then?

- Goodnight: I just had to find out wheat you did. Gladys in the Cypher Department thinks you've defected. I say it's because you bedded Lady M.

Bond gets in the car; this is an opportunity for us to learn more about this new character: she worked in the liaison service with the governor-general, but "I'm a full-fledged agent now". Without them noticing, they are followed by a white man named Crakers. She drop Bond it in front of the Hungry Dragon, which turns out to be a sleazy type of hotel:

- Bond: It... Has atmosphere.
- Goodnight: Not to mention lice.

Bond goes to reception and learns that Dubbel won't be there until tomorrow; 007 reserves a room. When night falls, Bond leaves his room (putting a little talcum powder on the handle) to go to a bar in which he had agreed to see Goodnight again for a drink. She is not there; while waiting for her, he lights a cigar and orders a Planter's Punch, while detailing the recipe to the bartender.

Meanwhile there is an "old Chinaman" at the hotel reception who collects the package containing the golden bullets that Fazi had delivered to Dubbel; the old man places it in a trash can. A beggar takes the package and hands it to a man in a white Rolls-Royce bearing the license plate "FAT 1". We see that Bond observed all this.

007 returns to the bar where Goodnight has finally arrived. He asks her who drives such a Rolls-Royce, "perhaps the most influential businessman in town" she replies: Hai Fat. She adds that in the evening she have to bring a certain Archibald Coyte to meet Fat.

007 tells her that he hasn't been sacked, that he is in fact is on some sort of secret mission: "that was just M's way to make sure there would be no connection when... If... I don't succeed. [...] They don't expect me to come out alive". Bond thus tries to convince her to postpone the meeting between Hai Fat and Coyte because it may be his last night in this world and he would like to spend it with her. She ends up accepting and goes to make a phone call; when she returns Bond is no longer there.

007 gets out of a taxi in front of Hai Fat's modern villa and introduces himself to the butler as Archibald Coyte. Bond sees two Chinese children in the villa accompanied by their governess who turns out to be Delia. Fat comes to meet Bond, telling him that he thought their meeting was canceled but that he is glad it's not the case. Fat takes him further in his property where there is a party with a dozen guests. Hai Fat introduces him to governor-general Hamilton and we learn (as does Bond) who the man he is impersonating is:

> - Hai Fat: [...] Archibald Coyte. The famous ornithologist. He is compiling a new book here.

When Hamilton asks him the title of the future book, Bond replies: "Ah... Birds of The Far East, sir".

> - Tom Mankiewicz[20] : When Sean Connery walked into a bar, your immediate feeling was "Uh oh, there's going to be trouble". Sean can look like a bastard, especially when he's angry. Roger, on the other hand, looks like your typical nice-guy secret agent. There is no way that he can look evil. [...] In the Moore Bond films, we had to play to those strengths. While Sean could just look at somebody and they would back away, Roger has to come on with a line like "Excuse me, haven't we met?".
> Sean, of course, could just be nasty and the audience loved him for it. He could sit at a table with a girl, and he could lean over the table and kiss her and then stick a knife into her under the table, saying to a nearby waiter: "Excuse me, but I have nothing with which to cut my meat", and the audience would go along with it. They would take that from Sean because he had that glint in his eye, that touch of the lorry driver in him, even though he was always the quintessential good guy inside. Audiences wouldn't take that kind of stunt from Roger.
> Roger, however, can have much more fun in a sophisticated setting. For instance, in the original script for The Man with the Golden Gun, Roger was pretending to be an ornithologist, which is really a conceit, because James > Bond is named after an ornithologist. So Bond is at this party in Bangkok, and an ambassador comments to him, "I understand you're doing a book on ornithology", to which Roger replies, "Yes, sir", and the man asks, "What is it called?" and Roger looks at the ambassador's beautiful wife, a Thai girl, and replies, "Birds of the Far East".

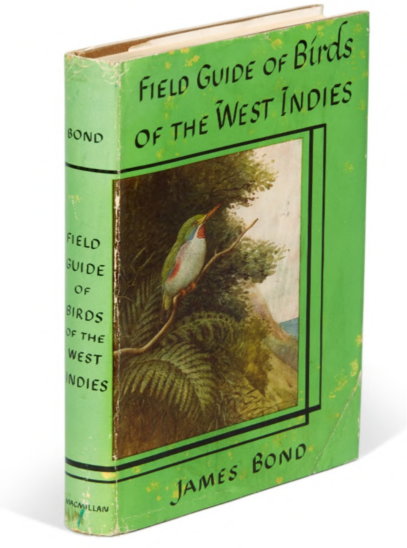
> Now, Roger can say "Birds of the Far East" in a much more refined way than Sean ever could. Roger is a good comedian, and he can play direct comedy much better than Sean. Sean's strong point was not playing comedy at all. If he had played the comedy in the Bond films, it would have looked phony.



FIELD GUIDE OF Birds OF THE WEST INDIES
BOND
FIELD GUIDE OF BIRDS OF THE WEST INDIES
JAMES BOND
MACMILLAN

Field Guide to Birds of the West Indies by ornithologist James Bond, the book that inspired Ian Fleming the name of his character.

While Bond and Hai Fat leave the governor to go visit Fat's aviary: Hai's brother, Loh Fat, joins them. This one looks agitated: he tells Hai that he "changed" his plans and asks him if he has seen Miss Dubbel. Hai tells his brother that she is in the planetarium, Loh leaves to go there. 007 takes advantage of the fact that the governor joins them and monopolizes Hai to leave and head towards the planetarium.

Bond climbs a tree and sees the interior of the building consisting of a swimming pool, a UV tanning area and a domed roof on which are representations of starry constellations. Delia Dubbel is lying in a bikini by the pool; Loh Fat joins her and asks her for news about Scaramanga. He will arrive in Bangkok within two days as planned, Delia replies. Listening to their conversation, Bond learns that Loh has never met/seen Scaramanga and that Delia is his intermediary. "For all I know, you could be Scaramanga", said Loh before leaving.

Bond watches Delia make a phone call saying that they will have to move forward with their plan when suddenly Hai appears near Bond with armed guards:

> - Hai Fat: The Tawny Frogmouth is neither nocturnal nor aboriginal, Mr. Coyte. Perched up there you stand a chance of becoming an endangered species yourself.

Bond claims to have gone up to the roof because he had spotted an interesting species of bird; Hai then tests his knowledge of ornithology and Bond fails.

> - Hai Fat: I'll give you the benefit of the doubt and assume you to be either a fifth-rate ornithologist or simply a foolish gate-crasher. But return to this house again, and you'll be shot on sight.

Then there is a scene where Delia transmits a message to Scaramanga (using a kind of sewing machine which emits a noise which is decoded/recorded on a tape on the hitman's island).

Bond returns to his hotel and discovers that the talcum powder is not as he left it. He therefore decides to do a little climbing in order to get in through the window. Not being armed, Bond grabs a hairdryer from the bathroom before heading towards the bed which appears to be occupied:

> - Bond (with the hairdryer): Don't move or you're dead.
> [The room light turns on].
> - Goodnight: I'd say "drop that dryer" but it's too ridiculous. Fooled by the old pillows under the sheets trick. No wonder M thinks you're on your final mission.

She asks him where he was, "seeing some other bird, I'll bet". Suddenly someone is about to enter the room: Goodnight hides under the sheets and Bond overpower the intruder: it's Delia. She tells him she came to warn him that he is in danger; Bond tells her that's the reason he uses this old cushion trick (pointing to Goodnight's silhouette hidden under the sheets, like in the film).

Suddenly a camera shot shows Bond's room seen through a rifle scope; Bond and Delia in the crosshairs. There are shots: Bond throws Delia to the ground. She flees and as the tension eases, Bond sees that the bullets that were fired into his room were made of gold. However:

> - Bond (to Goodnight): Scaramanga would have fired only once. And he wouldn't have missed.

In the street, Delia joins Crakers who is carrying a briefcase; she congratulates him on his shot and pays him.

007 tells Goodnight that he is going to Bangkok; the latter is against the idea but Bond threatens to call the police if she does not let him go there. He asks her to gather a list of objects for him:

> - Goodnight: Silicone desolvent, epoxy, sponge, iodine... James... A pacifier?

We find Scaramanga in the gymnasium on his island; he listens to the tape transmitted by Delia. She says she has established contact with the "quarry", who will soon be in Bangkok. While he listens to Delia's voice, Scaramanga dismantles his golden pistol (which is a Colt .45 revolver) whose "cylinder" split in two and transforms into a briefcase latchs, the trigger guard becomes a ring and the trigger of the weapon turns into a tie clip.

In 1973 the film Enter the Dragon with Bruce Lee was released: a wildly profitable commercial success which launched a real cultural boom for martial arts, inspiring numerous works of fiction such as films or comics. With The Man with the Golden Gun, the production clearly wants to ride this new wave.

So Bond arrives by plane in Thailand and goes to Fat Brothers Productions, a local film studio. He introduces himself to the receptionist as Mr. Scaramanga and asks to see Loh Fat. The latter's private female secretary, Mai Tai, drives him in a golf cart to the set of a kung fu movie called The Bamboo Fist. 007 confides to her that he "rarely go to the cinema [...], an escapist adventure film now and then". There is an action scene being filmed with ropes, trampolines, fake blood, etc. Bond is "amused", he says he "always wondered how those fights were done".

Mai Tai takes him to the set of another combat film made "in honor of your western Women's Lib": The Steel Virgin Against the Amazons, then into the set of an another martial arts film called Chop Chop featuring a star actor named Tommy Tong.

Suddenly the actors/stuntmen of Chop Chop head towards Bond and begin to attack him. 007 defends himself and tries to escape by jumping on a trampoline, he lands on some boxes before trying to open a door; it turns out to be locked. Tong also uses the trampoline and Bond moves just in time to avoid Tong's foot which ends up in the door and creates a hole in it. Bond unlocks the door from the other side through the hole and run towards a golf cart. However, this one which turns out to be remotely controlled by Mai Tai, moves away from him. Bond runs after the cart and manages to get in the vehicle, but still radio-controlled, the golf cart crashes into a building described as an infirmary.

On foot again and still being chased, Bond meets an acupuncture doctor and his patient who try to stop him. 007 gets rid of them by sticking needles into their bodies. The exit of the infirmary leads him to the film set of The Bamboo Fist where Bond fights opponent "in a comedy Kung Fu choreography to be worked out". Then the fight moves to the set of The Steel Virgin Against the Amazons where 007 tries to fight with a sword which, to his disappointment, turns out to be a film prop designed to break.

The Steel Virgin overpowers Bond and "stands proudly over [him] like a triumphant African white hunter". Loh Fat intervenes, prevents the Virgin from finishing off 007 and unbuttons the latter's shirt: he sees that Bond have three nipples.

- Tom Mankiewicz[21] : There was [in Hong Kong] a famous man named Run Run Shaw who ran the Shaw Studios, where the chop-socky movies were made. He started Bruce Lee. [...] Run Run could get you heroin, bazookas, tanks, or the best suit in Hong Kong. He had three Rolls-Royces, all with the same license plate: "Run Run". Nobody knew which one he was in because he never wanted people to know where he was. A member of his family had been kidnapped before we arrived. The police couldn't find him, but they found the kidnappers' bodies hacked to death in the back of Run Run's car. [...] He had a brother in Singapore named Runme, and Runme could also help you in Southeast Asia in the same way. I turned them into characters called Hai Fat and Lo Fat.

Run Run Shaw and his brother Runme Shaw. Below the "Shaw Brothers" studios which were located in Hong Kong.

There is then a scene where Scaramanga and Demitasse board a plane at an airport; this is an opportunity to see that security doesn't detect his golden gun when it is in his jewelry/briefcase state.

We find 007 in a room of a palace belonging to Loh Fat. Mai Tai is naked in bed with him but he doesn't seem to remember having sex with her. Delia comes into the room and orders Mai Tai to leave, "you couldn't come back in say... Twenty minutes", says Bond. Delia tells him that he could has spoil everything and that she tries to protect him, when suddenly Fat joins them and says that he wished the cameras were rolling during the fight in the cinema studio.

Fat asks Delia to drive his daughters to a birthday party while he goes to talk to Bond on the patio overlooking his golf course. Before leaving, Delia gives Fat a note which says that the person he takes for Scaramanga is actually an imposter.

Loh Fat brings Bond to show him his replica of the Tathagata Pagoda on his property. Near this one there are elephants which are playing with a ball:

- Bond: Preparing a surprise for Rugby League?

Fat says the elephants are trained to charge the ball. They (accompanied by the two female caddies from the pre-title) approach the pagoda which contains frescoes representing various tortures. Fat explains that they basically depict a sort of equivalent of the Peculiar Judgment and christian's Hell in Chinese Buddhist culture (the Diyu and its Ten Courts of Hell).

In Chinese mythology, the dead temporarily go to the "Diyu", a place where they are judged for their actions committed during their lives, before return to the world of the living, in the form of reincarnation. We stay more or less long at the Diyu because it is also the place where we atone for our past sins. Thus the Diyu is made up of 10 floors (the number is controversial, there are notably variants with 18 or 4 floors) where the penitents are punished/tortured for a longer or shorter period depending of their sins. Each floor/court is managed by a "judge". The human who has not sinned in his life goes directly to the reincarnation case without undergoing torture to atone his faults. One of the punishments for some sinners (liars, gossips) is tongue tearing out; others (like thieves) are condemned to be burned.

In Singapore is the Haw Par Villa (also known as Tiger Balm Garden), an amusement park which was particularly popular in the 1970s. Its theme is Chinese mythology and it contains more than 1,000 statues that depict it. It is here that the Tathagata pagoda is located, of which Loh Fat has a replica at his property in this script (pictured right). The park still exists nowadays and one of its most popular attractions is Ten Courts of Hell: statues representing scenes of torture/judgments of the diyu.

HAW PAR VILLA

Hong Kong also had its own Haw Par Villa / Tiger Balm Garden (the first built, picture below); with its statues, a pagoda and its Courts of Hell. The place was redeveloped in the 1980s as an amusement park; it no longer exists today.

The construction of a third Tiger Balm Garden located in Fujian (China) was also started in 1946, but abandoned in an unfinished state in 1949. (The villa itself was completed between 1989 and 1994 and used as a museum since, but the planned garden was never built)[22].

Fat shows Bond objects such as a cup having a mechanism which cuts the tongue when tilted (in order to teach some people to hold their tongues) or even a flammable fresco.

> - Bond: You said there were ten Infernal Courts. I only see nine.

As he says that, one of the caddie cuts a cable from a candlestick made of sharp metal discs above him. Bond barely dodge to avoid it. He briefly fights with Fat, starts a fire using the fresco and flees. Coming out of the pagoda, he sees the elephants. He takes their ball and throws it towards the front door of the pagoda: the elephants rush after the ball and smash the burning building.

> - Tom Mankiewicz[23]: When Golden Gun was starting, producer Harry Saltzman went to Thailand. He wanted to have an elephant stampede in the picture. He told us that up in the Thai provinces, they use elephants for transport and work. He wondered whether Scaramanga could be working in the jungle, and when Bond arrives, they could chase each other on the back of elephants.
> Director Guy Hamilton didn't like the idea. He'd seen it before in ten thousand Tarzan films. But Harry disregarded us. [Cubby didn't like it either, thinking that "an elephant chase would be very slow, and at that particular point we didn't need to stop the action"[24]]. [Harry] went down and found a guy who worked with elephants, and he learned that the elephants had to wear shoes when they worked. Actually, they wore coverings for their feet that protected them in rough areas such as stone quarries. "This is fabulous", Harry told me. "I've never seen an elephant shoe before". So Cubby is down in Southeast Asia watching over the filming when some guy calls up and tells him that Eon's elephant shoes are ready. And Cubby says, "What elephant shoes?".
> As it turned out, Harry had ordered something like two thousand pairs of elephant shoes, even though there were no elephants in the script, which some guy had been working on for months. This guy still wanted his money.

The rest of the escape is not yet precisely defined, Mankiewicz writes that it will be designed later in two phases. The first on Fat's property where Bond may encounter a giant beehive or some dogs; the golf course could also be used with its quicksand and golf carts, "ending with a means of escape (hovercraft?) over the adjacent water hazard".

The second part would then be a boat chase on the Bangkok floating market with 007 at the controls of a long-tail boat. The scene would contain collisions through vendor stalls, homes, etc. and Mankiewicz writes that the long masts on which the propellers are mounted are "ideal for dueling" and cutting things such as tourist boat canopies or stalls. Bond emerges victorious although his boat sinks; he is forced to swim back to shore.

Bond approaches the land where there is a black sedan on the road, he signals to the car to stop. The driver stops the car: it's Demitasse and Scaramanga. Bond, who doesn't know what Scaramanga looks like, gets into the car. They ask him which hotel to drop him off at. 007 replies that he lodge at the Oriental but tells them to drop him off a little further away; he will take a taxi for the rest.

Once Bond gets out of the car, Scaramanga tells Demitasse that he has a job for Demitasse's friends.

Bond arrives by a water taxi at his hotel. At the reception (where he is observed by a dwarf disguised as a bellboy) he is given a message: it's from Delia and she suggests him a place to visit if he wishes to stay alive.

Meanwhile Scaramanga and Demitasse meet Delia at a stadium in Bangkok where there are women's Thai boxing fights. Delia says the target will be at a mausoleum during a ceremony and provides Scaramanga with the best shooting angles. Scaramanga asks Demitasse to arrange a meeting with the champion of the boxing match and says to Demitasse, watching Delia walk away:

> - Scaramanga: And then, I regret, there will be somewhat more unpleasant work for both of us to do.

Bond arrives at the location indicated by Delia, which turns out to be some sort of massage parlor. The manager asks him to choose a girl; she ends up choosing one named Ota Ota against his will, described as really overweight and with a missing tooth. "You will thank me later", the manager told him.

Ota Ota takes Bond to the steam baths and begins to massage him. Suddenly the massage is gentler: Delia has taken Ota Ota's place. He tells her that she's not being very effective in her supposed goal of saving his life: "luring me into a potshot at that window in Hong Kong, blowing the whistle to Loh Fat this morning...". While she massages him, Delia reveals to him that she has been Scaramanga's lover for five years, "the last three against my will":

> - Delia: There's no escaping from him, no place to hide where he wouldn't find and kill me. I'd given up all hope of getting out until... I heard of the contract on you.
> - Bond: By the way, darling. Exactly who is paying for my funeral?
> - Delia: Until this morning, I had thought Loh Fat.
> - Bond: He's merely some sort of go-between. Doesn't even know who I am.
> - Delia: I... Haven't seen the contract itself. He tells me very little. I only know I'm to arrange a meeting with you for tomorrow morning, at the pleasure stalls in front of the Ancient City (Ancient Siam).
> - Bond: Why there?
> - Delia: Loh Fat and his brother will come to their mausoleum inside the City for the yearly rite of ancestral worship. I'm to bring you to the ceremony. Scaramanga will be positioned behind the coils of the White Snake Spirit on top of the golden temple nearby. He mean to kill you then. But you will arrive first.

She adds that Scaramanga will kill her if he doesn't show up and that she is ready to give him part of Scaramanga's fortune if she helps him. 007 undresses Delia; they kiss and maybe have sex together.

They exit separately from the massage parlor, where the black sedan is parked out front. Footsteps approach Delia and she end up face to face with the female champion of the boxing match.

The camera cuts to the black sedan arriving at the Ancient City. Bond is already there, he hears someone approaching but doesn't notice that it is Demitasse (hidden by a low wall). Another dwarf gets off a scooter and approaches 007. Suddenly a gong sounds and a good dozen of dwarves including Demitasse surround 007 who doesn't know "whether he feels more threatened or amused".

Demitasse approaches to shake hand with Bond who discovers in doing so that Demitasse have quite a grip; 007 falls to his knees because Demitasse crushes his hand so much. Then there's a fight scene that Mankiewicz wants "far from comic, this fight should be a vicious, no-holds-barred contest. [...] [Bond] is in very real danger of losing his life". Every time 007 manages to get rid of a dwarf, another one takes his place. They are real acrobats, Mankiewicz doesn't detail the scene but gives some ideas: projections of clouds of incense, duels with torches hung on the walls and Bond rolling dwarves in carpets.

007 gets on the scooter and flees but crashes in a street near a black sedan. The driver of the sedan turns out to be Mary Goodnight; he climb with her and they go away from the Ancient City. She reveals to him that she put back in his shoe the location beacon that Q had confiscated in Malta. She tells him she kept an eye on him informally (with the help of the mother of a certain Becky from a bar called "Bottoms Up", she adds). It wasn't difficult to tail anyway given the trail of destruction he leaved behind him like at the floating market or the fire at the Loh Fat pagoda (Loh is hospitalized in critical condition from burns, says Goodnight).

Bond asks her where is Hai Fat: he is preparing to board a barge to go to the Ancient City. "I've suddenly figured it out [...] the whole silly mess. [...] There may be time to stop him", says 007.

They arrive at the pier but Hai Fat's boat has already left. They make a U-turn while the barge and a whole escort of other boats that accompany it arrive at the Ancient City; we see Demitasse on one of these boats. Scaramanga is underwater with diving equipment; he fires his golden gun (placed in waterproof packaging) through a tube that goes from under the barge to a sort of throne on which Hai Fat is seated. The latter dies.

Why Loh Fat wanted to have his brother killed by Scaramanga will never be explained in the whole script.

Bond and Goodnight therefore arrive too late and are caught in the panicked crowd. However, she spots Demitasse heading towards a black sedan and suddenly:

> - Scaramanga: Over here, Mr. Bond...

Scaramanga is in front of a sort of fairground shooting gallery, where he takes precision shots. Bond joins him, takes one of the rifles and misses the targets before managing to hit them:

> - Bond: You didn't warn me about the bent sights.
> - Scaramanga: I find it fascinating to watch someone adjust.
> - Bond: I... Don't see Dragon lady.
> - Scaramanga: Delia? She had a rather bad accident last night, I'm afraid. Shortly after she let you... Pollute her. [...] Don't tell me you're shocked. A professional assassin like you?
> - Bond: I've been called nicer things.
> - Scaramanga: Perhaps. But you've never been anything else. The only difference between us is that I profit financially from it and remain my own man. You kill where and when you're told for the sake of a hearty "well done" and a pauper's pension.

The two men shoot together at the gallery's targets while Goodnight approaches the hitman's car in order to install a tracking beacon (but she is spotted by Demitasse). Scaramanga tells Bond that they are men apart in this world and asks him "where and when" they should meet to face each other.

> - Bond: More importantly: why?

Scaramanga says he has a reputation to uphold: many believe Delia's fake contract on Bond was a real one. Delia, wanting Scaramanga dead to be free, had in fact spread a rumor that the latter had a contract on Bond, with the idea that 007 would kill Scaramanga.

"I've never known a true professional who killed for vanity", comments Bond. Scaramanga says he will kill him one day with a bullet he will sees coming. 007 likes the idea of an equal chance duel, but Scaramanga says they would both be long dead by now if they gave their opponents equal chances. Here it's too populated to have this kind of duel anyway. Scaramanga joins Demitasse and begins to drive away with him in the sedan. Bond hears banging on the trunk of the car and realizes that Goodnight is locked inside.

007 gets behind the wheel of Goodnight's car and chases Scaramanga and Demitasse (no stunt indicated in the script). The villains arrive at a sort of garage located in the Thai countryside and their car comes out of it equipped with a sort of harness made up of wings and engine, like in the film. Bond and Scaramanga in their respective cars face off on the takeoff runway, charging into each other until the villains' car flies off at the last moment. There is the passage where Goodnight manages to open the boot and finds out she is in the air.

Bond searches the purse that Goodnight had left in the car and finds a golden lighter which turns out to be some kind of radio; he warns M that Goodnight has been kidnapped.

We find Bond in Hong Kong, at the Bottoms Up club; he seeks to contact Becky whom Goodnight had mentioned to him previously. Becky is the topless Chinese girl who serves drinks crouching at the bar. She takes him to her mother at the port.

The mother takes Bond by junk to the wreck of the Queen Elizabeth. As in the film, it houses a sort of MI6 HQ where Bond meets M in a tilted room (Q is not present). "It's good to have you back", M begins before telling him that this place is very convenient given the real estate prices in Hong Kong. M takes him to a room in the wreckage (the ballroom) where MI6 staff are working on computers and telephones, a "near-Disneyland set" sums up Mankiewicz. Bond is told that Goodnight's beacon locates her near Chinese territory and 007 says they need to get there to save her.

> - M: Just whet would you suggest? Launching a public protest to the Red Chinese for holding one of our agents? [...] As far as we're concerned, she simply doesn't exist anymore... I'm sure I don't have to remind you of normal procedure, Double-O-Seven,
> - Bond: I'm surprised you even recall my number, sir,
> - M: You look tired, Commander. I believe a cabin has been allocated to you...

They are suddenly joined by good old Felix Leiter, a cigarette in his mouth. He is there because he was assisting the MI6's staff on board on a drugs case (we notice that Leiter calls M by his first name, Miles!). They go to the wreck's bar, Leiter asks 007 what he's doing these days; Bond replies that he's supposed to be on vacation. Leiter invites him to come with him to Japan.

Bond and Leiter then board a seaplane. Leiter is worried because Bond is not heading in the right direction but towards China. Suddenly Bond exclaims "Sitting Bull!" and presses a button which ejects Felix from the plane onto an ejection seat!

> - Bond (to himself): I'm sorry, Felix. Geronimo.

Bond lands in front of the Scaramanga's island where the latter welcomes him via a loudspeaker. Bond walks to the indoor living room where he meets Scaramanga in person. The hitman explains that he rendered a service to the Chinese a few years ago and received this island as payment. He also tells Bond that they have little time because he has to leave soon to fulfill a new contract. He shows him a display with four revolvers:

> - Scaramanga: The only real handgun in the world, Mr, Bond. The Colt .45. I know you'd prefer your little Beretta, but after all it is my house and as I told you, I give no one a fifty-fifty chance.

Bond chooses one Colt and Scaramanga congratulates him on his choice: it was said that this particular Colt belonged to Wyatt Earp. Scaramanga then shows him his own revolver, the golden gun, telling Bond that no woman has ever thrilling him as much as this weapon. Scaramanga lets Bond choose the bullets: they will have two each (we see Bond slipping a third up his sleeve, however). Before the duel begins, Scaramanga suggests that Bond go for a walk on his island in order to familiarize himself with the place.

Bond goes out and sees the effigy of John Dillinger suddenly appear on a cliff, then those of Billy the Kidd and Al Capone. By reflex Bond tries to shoot them but his revolver doesn't fire. He then tries to insert the third bullet but it's too big.

> - Scaramanga: Surely one doesn't need real bullets to fight cutouts, Mr. Bond. By the way: your time is up.

Having no means of defending himself, Bond retreats inside; there he hears an elevator approaching. When the doors open he finds himself in front of his own effigy. "Not too bad. A bit too much cuff showing, I think", he said to himself.

We then see the elevator moving and its door opening in Scaramanga's field of view. The motionless effigy is still inside.

> - Scaramanga: You can come out from behind that cutout now, Mr. Bond. I knew you wouldn't be able to resist the temptation.

007 comes out from behind it and Scaramanga asks if he have any last words, "perhaps I could send it to Bartlett's for their revised edition". Bond tells him yes:

> - Bond: I went to see a man in Hong Kong last night, a man with a hyphen in his name... Who filled a golden bullet I had with high explosive. That bullet is one of the two in the cylinder of your gun.

It will never be revealed who the hyphenated man is (someone working at MI6 according to what Leiter said earlier). Anyway Scaramanga thinks Bond is bluffing and when he pulls the trigger: his gun explodes. 007 approaches the bloodied Scaramanga:

> - Scaramanga: No... Fifty-fifty chance... You knew... Didn't you?
> - Bond ("with a curious compassion"): I knew.

Scaramanga tries to laugh and takes his last breath.

007 reaches the island quay where the Scaramanga junk is moored and unties Mary Goodnight. He take the helm and drop anchor once he arrive in Hong Kong territorial waters. He goes to the cabin where Goodnight is now in a bikini. They get into bed and are about to make love when suddenly Demitasse appears, jumps on Bond and tries to strangle him. There is an undetailed fight ("with any one of dozens of ship props available") that ends with Demitasse near a capstan when Bond asks Goodnight to raise/lower the anchor; Demitasse is then tied to the capstan. In the following shot we see that they have abandoned him in the middle of the sea, tied to a buoy demarcating the border between China and Hong Kong.

> - Bond: Bye bye, Demitasse. Be a good buoy now...

We find Goodnight in the boat wearing a miniature Demitasse's bathrobe which clearly highlights her chest and stops just before of her crotch. She joins Bond in bed where they are disturbed again; by a telephone ringing with M on the line. M informs Bond that Goodnight has been located in his vicinity, and while "something marvellous seems to be happening underneath the covers":

> - Bond: As a matter of fact, I've just got her on the inside now, sir. [...] Hold on, sir? She'll be comings in a moment.

There is the play on words "Goodnight" and "good night" like in the film before Bond hangs up and a last camera shot that shows us the junk approaching the port of Hong Kong…

The Man without Mankiewicz

Shortly after writing his first script, Tom Mankiewicz decided to leave the film in development, as he himself explains:

> - Tom Mankiewicz[25] : I was not that happy with [The Man with the Golden Gun], and some people really like it, I don't like it so much. I left that picture halfway through. To be frank, I and Guy [Hamilton] started snapping at each other [mostly for personal reasons[26]]; we became great friends again later. Guy was responsible for bringing me back on Live and Let Die. We went on location scouts to Thailand, Hong Kong and Iran and all over the place. I finished the first draft and I went to Cubby, "Cubby, I really think my usefulness is done on this picture [...] I'm not giving you my best. I feel like I've written this movie, maybe before, and maybe it's because I'm doing this three times in a row". And he said, "Okay, if you feel that way".

Director Guy Hamilton and Britt Ekland.

Black clouds on Maibaum return

> - Richard Maibaum[27] : After I did the first script on Diamonds Are Forever, I left and Tom Mankiewicz came on. They liked his work, so Tom stayed on to do Live and Let Die. Then they used Tom again on [The] Man with the Golden Gun. He had a disagreement with [director] Guy Hamilton, and I was asked to come back and rewrite that.

Albert Broccoli, who needed a new screenwriter for this film, therefore turned to the man with golden scripts: Richard Maibaum. The screenwriter who wasn't involved in launching of the Roger Moore era, didn't really liked Live and Let Die, and the performance of Moore.

> - Richard Maibaum[28] : I would have liked a crack at Live and Let Die. I didn't particularly like what they did to it. It was about nothing, a lousy cooking-some-dope-some-where-in-the-jungle movie. That's not Bond at all. To process drugs in the middle of a jungle is not a Bond caper.

According to Cubby, Maibaum was not enthusiastic about working with Harry Saltzman again:

> - Cubby Broccoli[29] : I asked Dick Maibaum to come in and work on Tom Mankiewicz's script. He did this with some reluctance. His own relationship with my partner was a knife edge situation. But once he started hitting the typewriter, Dick was as professional as ever.

One of Maibaum's first idea for the second Roger Moore is weather control.

Remember: Maibaum already had this idea in a memo of Diamonds Are Forever which contained "let's says [Howard] Hughes has a secret plant working on it for US government [...] and apparatus Blofeld could alter weather, etc, to create typhoons, draughts, hail, even melt ice cape".

Also "Matt M." (Richard Maibaum's son, Matthew Maibaum?) had notably explored this idea on March 23, 1972 or 1973 in a 2-page memo entitled "Weather Control". This one starts with the phrase "there are two fundamental ways in which weather can be controlled scientifically".

The first one consist to "sprinkle [cloud masses] with dry ice pellets (CO_2) from an airplane [...]. The dry ice causes a chemical reaction in the clouds, causing the clouds to form condensed water masses in them from water vapor, and thus it rains. Where it is cold enough in the surrounding air, the rain turns to sleet, snow or ice pellets (hail)".

(Some cloud seeding by planes happened in the USA in the 60's like Project Stormfury, an attempts from the military to modify hurricanes. Stormfury was a successor of 1947' Project Cirrus, which used 82 kilograms of crushed dry[30].

And as congressional inquirers and public have subsequently learned in the beginning of the 70's, the Pentagon secretly spent at least $3.6 million a year between 1967 and 1972, seeding clouds with silver iodide, which crystalline structure is similar to the one of ice, over North and South Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia during Vietnam War' Operation Popeye. The goal was to create too much mud for the enemy supply trucks to operate. Of course, US Department of Defense denied that its cloud seeding over North Vietnam in 1971 caused that country's heaviest rains and worst flooding since 1945, which mades more than 100 000 victims[31]).

The second method described in M. Maibaum's memo is more complex but "is the more wide ranging in its possibilities and thus deserves more attention". It consist of "changing electrical charges in different portions of the sky corresponding to different air masses in motion".

When two air masses, one positively charged and the other negatively charged, meet: it creates a difference in electrical potential between the two masses. This difference in electrical charge can result in an electrical discharge in the form of lightning. When electrical charges neutralize during this discharge, it releases heat, which can contribute to the development and intensification of weather phenomena such as storms, precipitation, or the formation of tornadoes or hurricanes.

"Someone wishing to manipulate air masses and to cause rain storms, tornadoes, typhoons, and the like, could invest a strong electrical current into an air mass already formed ([...] a cumulus cloud, another moving cloud) and wait for this air mass to come into contact with another, oppositely-charged air mass and thus cause a storm; or he could change the electrical current of some air mass next to another. [...] The problem is, how to generate powerful electrical currents in the atmosphere, and how to direct them to an appropriate air mass or section of the sky, and how to reverse the electrical charge where necessary, of some cloud mass or air mass you are interested in", conclude the memo.

(Not so far-fetched, when you know since 2021 The United Arab Emirates is testing drones for deliver an electric charge to air molecules to cause rain[32]).

Also to be noted: in 1973 weather control was in the news, when the US Senate introduced a resolution for a treaty in order to prohibit environmental warfare (the treaty will be signed in 1977; in 1976 Richard Maibaum put aside a new article on subject).

> - Richard Maibaum[33] : As usual, we were looking for a world threat, and in the end it came down to either solar power or weather control. Harry Saltzman felt that weather control was not a good idea. He felt that it would just be a lot of special effects and stock footage showing hurricanes and tropical storms. He was right at the time.

So solar power it was, in a context where the world is experiencing its first "oil/energy crisis" since the previous month of October 1973, one of the consequences of the brief Yom Kippur War. A period where the oil price quadrupled from $3 to nearly $12 per barrel, other products inflation, fuel shortages, queues at gas stations and rationing measures.

> - Richard Maibaum[34] : I admit that the Solex Agitator was my idea, because I felt there wasn't enough to keep it going. After a showdown, what was there to go to? We had to flesh it out and came up with that device. It just flatly didn't work as we thought it would.

November 12' 1973 treatment

An 18-page treatment was completed on November 12, 1973. It pick up a lot of elements that we found in Mankiewicz's script (even if the name of Mankiewicz strangely doesn't appear on the header page) and notably adds the subplot of the Solex

This time the pre-title sequence only includes the scenes on Scaramanga's island, where the killer train by practicing shooting of "holograms" of famous killers that appear all around the beach. We see that Maibaum renamed some characters; thus Delia Dubbel becomes Andrea Mead in this treatment and Demitasse becomes Nick Nack. The screenwriter also adds a passage where Scaramanga drags his weapon against Andrea's body, similar to the film.

After the credits we have M relieving Bond of the operation Sunstroke: objective to find a solar energy' expert named Gibbons (who, we will learn later, develops the Solex: a key component for converting solar energy into electricity for commercial use). M shows Bond a golden bullet with a "007" engraved on it and which was sent with a note saying that Scaramanga have a contract on Bond. Some interesting details about the hitman that didn't exist in Mankiewicz version are revealed: he was notably trained in the Spectre's assassination school before working for the KGB and becoming later free-lance. The man uses a golden gun "of his own design" (rather than a Colt .45).

M gives 007 a choice: either he retire and hide, or he find Scaramanga and kill him first. 007 opts for the second possibility and asks Moneypenny where 002 (Fairbanks) was at the moment of his death: "Tehran, 1967" (which replaces a Beirut hand-scratched by Maibaum). Moneypenny is better than a computer, as Bond tells her.

In Tehran (Iran), an old friend of Bond's from the police force, Cassadagh, brings him to The House of a Thousand Pleasures. Bond would like to see Ayesha, the star artist who was there when 002 was killed. She's not there but Bond finds her in her dressing room. Bond tells Ayesha that he was a friend of Fairbanks: he is particularly interested in seeing the bullet that killed him (because the one received by M is a fake one, a piece of jewelry of no use) which was never found. She shows him that the bullet is on a necklace around her neck: it's her lucky charm.

Bond tries to get it, Ayesha refuses, and they end up in bed where Bond takes advantage of her closing her eyes to remove the necklace. The next morning Bond gets out of bed: the necklace is around his own neck.

In the next scene Bond is in Macau where he visits an underground gunsmith who is no longer named Fazi but Achmed. The bullet that killed 002 contains an alloy used by Achmed. Bond asks him for who did he make the bullet for: Achmed signals his henchmen to get rid of Bond. 007 "battles them throughout the establishment which is full of guns and gun production". Once the henchmen defeated, Bond turns towards Achmed and threatens him with an "antique gun"; he speaks. The bullet was made for Scaramanga, who recently ordered six more and Achmed must deliver them to him soon.

After a hydrofoil crossing, our agent arrives in Hong Kong where he notices that he is being followed. He goes to a telephone booth and pulls his tail in: he discovers that it is Mary Goodnight. Here is what Maibaum writes about her:

> Mary is with MI6 in Hong Kong and as crazy about Bond as Moneypenny but determined to play it differently. For all Moneypenny's banter with Bond she was really The Iron Dutchess. Mary doesn't intend to make that mistake so when Bond suggests she drive him to the Hungry Dragon Hotel, she jumps at the chance. She's like nothing better than to help him settle comfily in. Even if the Hungry Dragon is a bit tacky and not Bond's style at all.

007 asks Goodnight to deliver a package for "A. Smith" to the concierge (she "gets a pat on the posterior from him, and is sent on her way"). Andrea picks up the package, Bond approaches her and takes it from her hands: "Delicious, aren't they?", he says as he removes gold foil from around a chocolate bullet. "Thank God you're here, James!", exclaims Andrea. She asks him to come to her room but he suggests going for a drink at the Bottoms Up Club instead. Bond stops near Goodnight and tells her to have his luggage sent to the Hilton; she glares at him as he leaves with Andrea.

At Bottoms Up, Andrea reveals to him that she was the one who sent the bullet to M because she wants to escape Scaramanga of whom she is the mistress. She thinks Bond is the only man capable of killing him. Scaramanga will be at a casino this evening. She will inherit the killer's money if he dies: maybe they could enjoy it together as lovers? Bond "pretends interest", then slaps her because he thinks she's setting a trap for him, before deciding to trust her. 007 asks her how he will recognize Scaramanga: Andrea shows him her breasts and says that Scaramanga has not two of theses but three, while "the camera [is] behind her, of course"! Bond asks her for more useful information: Scaramanga will wear a golden turtleneck, she adds.

There is then a scene where Andrea joins Scaramanga on her boat, in order to convince the audience that she is setting a trap for 007.

Bond goes to the casino where he tries to spot Scaramanga. He doesn't find him but sees a bearded man whom he seems to recognize; suddenly a shot fired by Scaramanga from an advantageous position behind Bond kills the bearded man. The police arrive at the casino while Scaramanga dismantles his golden pistol into several parts ("cigarette case, lighter, pen, pencil, rings, cufflinks, etc."). Bond spots Scaramanga in the crowd; they come face to face:

> \- Bond: Good evening, Mr. Scaramanga.
> \- Scaramanga: Good evening, Bond.

The police approach them to search them. They don't find a weapon on Scaramanga but Bond, who has his Walther on him, is arrested. As Scaramanga leaves the scene, other people arrive including a Chinese man named Hip who is supposed to take Bond to a police station by boat. Bond becomes suspicious and decides, as in the film, to leave Hip behind near the Queen Elisabeth.

The interior of the wreck contains an MI6 HQ in which Bond finds M, Moneypenny (whose name has been is scratched to be replaced by Goodnight), Q and a certain Forbes. We learn that Hip is also from MI6 and that the bearded man at the casino was Gibbons. Forbes gives a presentation to Bond on what the Solex is.

007 takes out a photo from Gibbons' wallet that he retrieved at the casino: on it is a photo of a woman. Oh Wow, comments Hip: a Chinese starlet under contract with Hai Fat, an industrialist who also have interests in the cinema industry. Bond make drawing for Q of something he would like.

At his property in Thailand, Fat approaches his swimming pool around which are several guests including Oh Wow, who is accompanied by Bond. Fat says he doesn't think he knows him and Wow replies that he is a representative of a magazine English who is writing an article about her. Fat notices that Bond has three nipples and then mistakes him for Scaramanga. He takes him aside and asks him why he is there while he has already been paid not a half hour ago. 007 says he saw Bond at the casino and that he should be eliminated before he causes any problems. Fat isn't willing to spend another million on this, although if he changes his mind, he will leave him a sign at the Tiger Balm Garden (Maibaum writes that they will pretend the Garden is in Thailand).

Bond walks away throwing his fake nipple into a bush and we see a hand belonging to Nick Nack pick it up (he is holding a briefcase in the other hand).

Bond and Oh Wow go to watch a women's kickboxing match at Bangkok Stadium; observed by an obviously jealous Goodnight.

Then we find 007 at the Tiger Balm Garden (Maibaum specifies in a draft of this treatment that it is the one located in Singapore he is talking about), where Live and Let Die's Sheriff Pepper is one of the tourists with his wife. Bond finds the signal agreed with Hai Fat (a coin placed on a sumo statue).

The sumo statues at the Tiger Balm Garden of Singapore.

007 then goes to meet Fat at his film studio. While waiting for Fat to arrive, he is given the opportunity to visit a movie set. Escorted by the head of security, Merdan (a former member of the French OAS), he visits the set of a kung-fu film featuring Oh Wow. As with Mankiewicz, the stuntmen/actors rush at him and there is an action scene (not described). 007 ends up entering Oh Wow's mobile dressing room and discovers that she has been murdered. He then finds himself locked in the dressing room and Merdan and his men transport the sort of caravan to a canal to throw it the water. Meanwhile Bond uses Q's lighter which turns into a blowtorch to cut the locked door to escape; he barely succeeds, just when he was about to drown.

Bond surfaces and is picked up by boat by a passerby. Merdan and his men notice that Bond isn't dead and they board a boat to finish the job. There's a chase on the floating market in which Bond abandons the boat to get on another. They "joust" with their propellers on masts; Bond cuts a man with his, there is "an offscene splash, and klong water turning pink". (Maibaum hesitates between "it's enough to make one see red" and "what a bore" for Bond's comment). 007 runs across a tourist boat (knocking Sheriff Pepper into the water in the process) and Merdan and his men lose track of him.

Merdan report to Hai Fat; Fat asks him to hire Scaramanga to resolve the problem. Merdan leaves the property and gets into his car; Bond happen to be in the back with a gun pointed now at Merdan's head. Merdan doesn't want to tell him where the Solex is; he instead offers to bring it to him in exchange of five million. 007 accepts and they agree on a meeting place: the Tiger Balm Garden in two days.

Despite knowing that it's probably a trap, Bond goes to the designated location on the designated date (accompanied by Hip to cover for him). Bond and Merdan meet up near the sumo statues and exchange briefcases. Suddenly we see that the sumos are not statues but real ones; while Hip tries to intervene to protect Bond he is killed by Scaramanga who was hidden behind a statue. The man with the golden gun tries to get a clear line of fire on Bond who is fighting against the sumos, but a dozen female kickboxers led by Oh Wow's aunt intervene, save Bond from the sumos and bring him with them. Scaramanga leaves, he "is livid. For the first time in his career he's failed". We see Andrea, who has observed all these people, following the kickboxers and Bond.

In the kickboxer training camp, Bond is monopolized by the women. Goodnight, who is present with them, "sidelined by the competition as usual". And she is even more so when Andrea joins them. The latter tells Bond that she heard from Scaramanga that the Solex is at an experimental energy station in the Golden Triangle. Since Bond doesn't fully trust her, he decides to bring her with him.

Arrived here, they observe the place with binoculars. Maibaum wrote a memo for the art department that the station consisted of "a dish or a series of upright reflectors [...] concentrate the rays on a transducer" ("the "Solexes"). Maibaum says the secret is to use gold oxide in the components. "The current is then stored in coils immersed in tanks of liquid helium at absolute zero temp, minus 436 degrees fahrenheit". 007 knows all this because of a briefing with Forbes/M, "and anyway Bond [always] knows everything, doesn't he?", comments Maibaum.

"Perhaps he goes over [the electrified] barrier with [a] jet pack", we can reads! He then avoids guards and waits until nightfall to steal the Solex; but is captured by Merdan who brings him to Fat. The industrialist explains that he intends to make enormous financial profits from solar energy. He feels like a benefactor for bringing this technology to humanity and says he wants a fair return on the astronomical sums he has invested in research and development. He has a suitable death for Bond in mind: incineration by solar rays.

Bond is tied up on the dish but manages to free himself "somehow" before the sun fully rises. Bond returns to Fat and force him to follow him with the Solex; Fat takes him to the helium tank room. 007 ends up throwing Fat into a helium pool, which raises the temperature and causes the complex to explode right after Bond emerges with a Solex in his possession. During his escape, Bond notably used a hose to spray Merdan and his men with liquid helium; "to freeze them like ice statues".

Bond walks away with Andrea; they stop at a place that contains a swimming pool and make love, unaware that Scaramanga is observing them with binoculars. After that Maibaum quickly moves on to the rest: Bond and Andrea are pursued by Scaramanga and Nick Nack; they end up separated and Andrea is captured by Scaramanga.

Bond goes deliver the Solex to M at the Queen Elizabeth then borrows a seaplane to go to the hitman's island that Andrea had described to him earlier (Bond does not know that she is there, he is just going there to settle scores with the man with the golden gun).

Then it is only written that "Bond and Scaramanga have a shootout in which Bond should kill him with his own golden gun" (no details are given). Andrea is now free (and still alive, contrary to the movie).

There is a final scene at the Hilton Hotel where Bond have a girl in his arms, who turns out to be Goodnight. She finally had what she was looking for. The dwarf, however, comes to spoil the atmosphere and "Bond foils whatever it is that Nick Nack has cooked up for him, captures him, puts him in a suitcase, perhaps, and ships him by computerized luggage handling to, but of course, Death Valley Inn" (don't ask me what Maibaum means by that, I don't know).

Maibaum's first script: Saida, Malazar and fireworks

Maibaum began writing a first script and on November 26, 1973 he had an incomplete one.

The script still opens on the island of Scaramanga and its "phallic-shaped rock formation". Maibaum writes that Andrea is 26 years old and that Scaramanga's age is difficult to place. Scaramanga shooting's hand is massaged by Andrea while Nick Nack gives the golden gun to Scaramanga in a briefcase. The hitman then shoots 3D holograms of Wyatt Earp, John Dillinger and James Bond, that Nick Nack makes appear all around the beach. The interesting thing that we notice is that Nick Nack is able to see on his screen a sort of replay of the shots on which an indicator that moves and freezes on the exact place where Scaramanga shot.

Further into M's office, we notice that Maibaum has renamed Gibbons to Gibson. We also note that it is M (consulting his notes) who gives the presentation on Scaramanga to Bond and not the opposite (for Bond the existence of Scaramanga was only a rumor). In the same genre, the following line is spoken by Bond himself:

> - Bond: ‘I'm afraid the list is endless, sir. Jealous husbands, outraged chefs, humiliated tailors, women libbers. But why would Scaramanga alert me?
> [...]
> - Moneypenny: Where to this time, James?
> - Bond: I haven't a clue, Moneypenny. Fairbanks!
> [...]

Bond leaves London for Beirut in Lebanon (no longer Tehran) where he joins (alone) a brothel where there is a certain Saida (rather than a Ayesha), described as "a luscious Lebanese beauty". 007 takes off his jacket and tells her that he and Fairbanks "worked for the same firm".

> - Bond: Where were you when he was killed?
> - Saida (indicating bed): Here.
> - Bond: And Fairbanks?
> - Saida: In my arms.
> - Bond: I'm glad he died happy.

She didn't see the shooter but have the bullet who killed him, on a necklace that hangs over her breasts and that she doesn't want to sell him. Bond then begins to go bed with her when he notices a man (named Hammud) in the room, who is taking photos of them. Bond kicks him out of the place with some violence. After a night of love, Bond gets out of bed and gets dressed without waking her; the necklace is now around his own neck.

Bond brings the bullet back to MI6 where he learns from "Major Boothroyd" and Moneypenny that it was made by a Portuguese gunsmith from Macau: Ramon Malazar (rather than Achmed). Bond arrives by rickshaw at the latter's workshop whose cover is a fireworks/firecrackers shop.

> - Girl (from the rickshaw): You like make big bang-bang?
> - Bond: How did you guess?
> - Girl: I wait.

007 meets Malazar described as "a bald fatman with a Van Dyke beard and strong, beautiful hands":

> - Malazar: We must celebrate your visit. The first of many, I trust. Make war, not love... You are responsible for my losing several good customers. Why not compensate me by becoming one yourself? It would be the proudest moment of my career.

Bond tells him he might be interested in buying some bullets. Malazar presents him with a "gun from [a] work table" which does not have a trigger and which he makes Bond try. 007 spots bullets which he thinks are an order from Scaramanga and by threatening Malazar with the weapon, he obtains confirmation. Bond tells him he is interested in buying the same bullets, pays Malazar and has a drink with him to seal the start of their new partnership.

Bond is now on his way out of Malazar's workshop when he hears a door open behind him and sees Malazar shooting him. 007 responds with his Walther and tries to flee but his path is blocked by one of Malazar's armed employees. Bond takes shelter behind a pile of fireworks; he shoots a barrel of powder and runs towards the exit. 007 gets into the rickshaw as a chain explosion of fireworks occurs inside the store.

> - Bond: Happy New Year!

We then see Malazar enter a casino, he is discreetly followed by Bond who sees him handing a packet to a dealer. Bond bumps into the dealer to steal the packet and replace it with another. He then sees the dealer give the packet to Andrea and follows her to a ferry which lead them to Hong Kong. There Bond notices that he is being followed by Mary Goodnight, also described as being around 25 years old. They get into Goodnight's car to follow the taxi Andrea got into:

> - Goodnight: James, did I rush down here, my heart beating wildly, to bus you around chasing another bit of fluff?
> - Bond: Would I do that to you, Goodnight? After not seeing you for two years?
> [...]
> - Bond: Slow down. Didn't you learn in basic training not to get too close [to the taxi]?
> - Goodnight: I'm a bit nervous in the master spy's presence, that's all.
> - Bond: It's Sub-Operator Four-Two-Six now, right?
> - Goodnight: Posted to the Governor's Communications Staff as cover. How's everyone in London? I suppose Moneypenny still has the hots for you.
> - Bond: I never noticed.
> - Goodnight: warn you, James. I don't intend to make the mistake she did. All advertising, actually the Iron Dutchess. No way.
> - Bond: Could we postpone this fascinating sex study, Goodnight?

The script ends as they observe Andrea's taxi park in front of the Peninsula Hotel.

Additional pages: camera, funhouse and academy

Other pages show the continuation that would have been planned and other ideas. These pages not being dated and not always following each other, it is not said that they would have been linked exactly as below, but in the idea:

Bond heads to reception where he asks the identity of the girl who has just entered to a man of the hotel's staff who recognizes him. Her name is "Smith", he tell Bond. 007 heads to her room where he manages to get a staff member to open it for him. Similar to the film Bond discovers that she is taking a shower with a weapon:

- Bond: A water gun?
- Andrea: It's a Beretta 32. Turn around, Mr. Bond.

007 is surprised that she knows his name, "I saw you in 3D" she replies. Bond distracts her by showing the golden bullets she brought back from the casino are actually chocolate bullets and then disarms her. He pins her on the bed and questions her. 007 learns that Scaramanga will not come to the Peninsula hotel but will later go to the Bottoms Up, wearing a golden choker.

007 gives Andrea the real bullets and she joins Scaramanga on his junk.

Goodnight drives Bond to Bottoms Up but he tells him to stay in the car because it's a men's club. Bond enters the club from behind and sits at the bar where he orders a vodka martini from a Becky.

- Bond: Shaken, not stirred.
- Becky: Ever try it pasteurized?

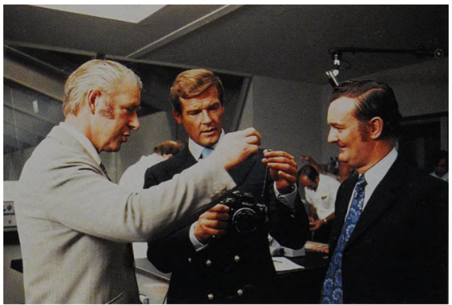
The camera is sometimes behind Becky "for the parental guidance rating" (the famous "PG"), specifies Maibaum. 007 sees Nick Nack leaving the club and asks Becky if she has seen a man with a golden choker: no. A golden gun appears between curtains with Bond in its sight but shoots instead a gray-haired man (Gibson) located alongside Hip. The police arrive and Scaramanga passes it without problem while Bond, on whom a weapon is found, is arrested (Bond and Scaramanga don't speak to each other in this scene, Bond cannot even see his face). The man with the golden gun joins Nick Nack (who uses extensions on his feet to reach the car pedals).

007 tries to part company with Hip at the Queen Elizabeth but discovers that it is an MI6 HQ. On board, M notably reveals Hip's first name: Buddy. However Maibaum crosses out "Buddy" and replaces it by hand with "Jimmy". Before Bond leaves for Thailand, there is a scene in Q's laboratory (which is on the Queen Elizabeth) where Bond make a drawing of the fake nipple he wants while Q gives him a gadget camera that can disperse various liquids and self-destruct.



On other pages, Bond arrives by taxi in front of the film studio Fat Productions and introduces himself at the gatehouse as "Mr. Ess" having a meeting with Fat. Mai Tai takes him in a golf cart to visit the film set of The Bamboo Fist where an action scene is being shot in which the hero have to save a girl who is played by a practically naked Oh Wow.

> - Bond: I don't see many films. Too much sex and violence.

Mai Tai then brings him to the set of Chop Chop (there is no more The Steel Virgin Against the Amazon in this script), shot in a movie set representing a martial arts academy. She invites him to sit in the director's chair and suddenly Bond finds himself attacked by the actors/stuntmen, including Tommy Tong. 007 takes a trampoline to reach a door and uses Q's camera to spray tear gas at attackers.

The door is locked but he is able to open it when Tong jumps on the trampoline and smashes it. Then Bond gets into a golf cart which turns out to be remotely controlled by Mai Tai; however she lets go of the remote control when the cart speeds towards her and Bond now has complete control. Here is probably one of the most bizarre lines ever written for this film: "Setting Q's camera, [...] Bond sprays instant banana peel foam" and the men chasing him on foot slip on it and fall!

A man waits in ambush behind a corner, his hand ready to draw a samurai sword. Bond approaches and sprays an instant hardener liquid from the camera: the attacker's katana then remains stuck in its sheath and Bond lands an uppercut to the man.

007 sees the mobile dressing rooms and Oh Wow who signals him to get into it. When he gets in, Merdan ("Fat's tough bodyguard") who was hidden in a cupboard jumps on him. As he fights with him, Oh Wow knocks Bond out with a kung fu blow. Oh Wow takes off her wig: it wasn't her but a Kung Fu expert named Bop.

We note that Richard Maibaum also imagined other versions of this scene, notably with Bond having to leave the camera with the guard at the entrance to the studio. When he later took the cart remote-controlled by Mai Tai, he knocked over some guards and went down to the gatehouse where he retrieved the device and threw tear gas at the guard in the gatehouse.

Merdan leads the mobile dressing room to a logging operation where elephants are used for work. Elephants also play with a big ball. 007 is brought before Hai Fat who knows he is James Bond:

> - Fat: I regret the necessity for an impersonation [of Oh Wow]. Yours, I admit, was more imaginative.
> - Bond: I'll make a clean breast of it. I'm not Scaramanga.

Fat would like to know what exactly MI6 knows; Bond exaggerates and Fat says he doesn't believe they know as much about the Solex. "I have a way to make doubly sure you're bluffing. A rather painful one, I'm afraid": he gives her thirty seconds to reconsider his words.

007 is brought to the elephants and is shown that the inside of the ball they are playing with is filled with spikes. Bond is trapped inside the ball and as men mount the elephants to throw him around, Bop joins them with Q's camera; getting ready to photograph this. 007 tells him that he wants his last photo to be good one and offers him to adjust the camera; Bop agrees.

When Bop takes the photo he activates the self-destruct function and explodes. Bond takes advantage of the confusion to escape from the ball while the elephants are panicked. 007 runs towards the woods and arrives at a river where several boats are moored. Bond gets into a boat which have a propeller located at the end of a long mast, his pursuers (including Merdan) get into two other similar boats.

Merdan catches up with 007 who finds himself with an enemy boat in front of him and one behind. They approach a floating market and Bond briefly boards a tourist boat (in which is Sheriff Pepper and his wife). Bond sees Merdan further away and he decide to returns to his boat. 007 then sees the second boat moving backward towards him: the propeller out of the water to kill him. Bond avoids the propeller and uses his own to kill his assailant (the macabre spectacle will however have to be done out of camera view).

Bond gets on another boat and jumps from boat to boat and succeed to lose his pursuers. Pepper finally recognizes 007 and falls into the water while backing up. Maibaum writes that this action scene could be expanded if desired.

As in the film, we find Scaramanga assembling a golden gun in front of Fat and killing him. Then Bond joins Goodnight; they are joined by Andrea. Bond makes love to the latter and convinces her to bring him a Solex (at the stadium) while Goodnight waits hidden in the cupboard.

Bond discovers Andrea dead in the stadium and is approached by Scaramanga. He asks Bond to give him Andrea's handbag and not finding the Solex inside, Scaramanga says: "so the bitch crossed us both". Scaramanga adds that he personally has nothing against him: "We're tops, you and me. I respect and admire you".

Scaramanga and Nick Nack leave, Bond picks up the Solex which was on the ground and heads towards the exit. Meanwhile Goodnight (who doesn't have the Solex) is seen inspecting the trunk of Scaramanga's car and is locked inside.

There's no car chase here. Instead Bond and Hip return to the hotel and wonder where Goodnight is. The phone rings: it's Scaramanga calling them from his junk. He reveals to 007 that he have Goodnight and gives him 24 hours to find the Solex in order to make a trade. Scaramanga arranges to meet him near the sumo statues at Hai Fat's place: no weapons, no reinforcements. After hanging up, Scaramanga says to himself that it is a shame: he could have used Goodnight to replace Andrea.

Bond goes to the statues and Scaramanga joins him:

- Scaramanga: Who frisks who first?
- Bond: Same time.

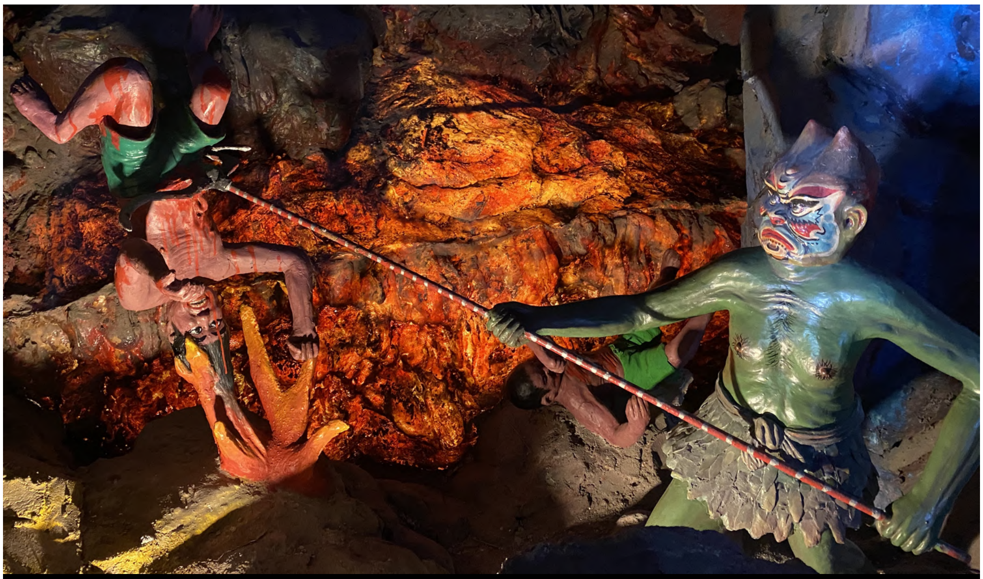
No one is armed, Scaramanga asks to see the Solex agitator. Bond shows him it and is suddenly attacked by the sumo wrestlers who weren't statues, as Scaramanga assembles his golden gun in front of him. Scaramanga is almost done when a shot from Hip rings out and hits one sumo and make the other flee. A statue of a little demon comes to life: it's Nick Nack who steals the Solex from Bond's jacket before joining his boss. They flee (Scaramanga carrying Nick Nack who has too small legs to run/climb the stairs); Bond and Hip give chase.



Nick Nack appearance in this scene of the film is very reminiscent of this statue of the Haw Par Villa (Singapore).

Scaramanga and Nick Nack climb into a car while Merdan covers them. Hip shoots and hits Merdan. 007 and Hip get into Hip's car as police cars arrive (as reinforcements). Bond, Hip and the police chase Scaramanga's car. While trying to avoid kids crossing the road to get into a bus, Bond crashes Hip's car into a ditch. 007 gets off and gets into the bus, ejects the driver and sets off again in pursuit of Scaramanga at the wheel of the bus full of passengers. (A strange choice, considering the previous film already depicted Bond at the wheel of a bus). Scaramanga, however, is far enough ahead to reach a building in which he equips his car with wings. Bond rushes towards the car but Scaramanga flies away just before the point of collision. We then discover that Goodnight was still in the trunk of the car and she notices when she manages to open it that the car is flying.

007 go meet M on the Queen Elizabeth wreckage:

- M: You actually had the Solex agitator in your possession and then [lost it] because Miss Goodnight? I'm at a loss for words, Double-O Seven.
- Bond: Allow me sir, it might be better for your blood pressure. Insubordinate... Total disregard for official policy... Would have been sacked years ago except for muddling through somehow. [Is] that it, sir?
- M: Just about. But this time you've gone too far. Solar energy could mean our survival and you blow it, for a woman.

Bond says he should be able to locate Goodnight and M leads him to the liner's ballroom where there are electronics equipment, their operators and Q. An officer gives M a "For your eyes only"'s classified message from Hip which indicates that Fat has been found dead. Bond adds that Scaramanga must also have worked with Fat's former associates.

> - M: Where did you get your information?
> - Bond: A woman, sir.
> - M: Women. They seem to be both your strength and your weakness.
> - Bond: You can't have one without the other, sir.

Goodnight is located in Chinese territory, which worries M. His agent tells him that he will however take full responsibility and we find Q at an RAF airport boarding a seaplane with a pilot to test the capabilities of the aircraft. The training plane take off and a pilot rush into a ground command post, shouting that his plane has been hijacked. We discover that the pilot who boarded with Q is actually Bond; which surprises Q:

> - Q: Double-O Seven! What are you doing here?
> - Bond: Same orders as yours, Q. [...] And that isn't all, old man...

Bond activates Q's ejection seat and Q flies away before landing in the water.

Maibaum imagines an alternate version at an airfield where Q hands 007 a Cessna seaplane, which (of course) he hopes to get back one day [in perfect condition].

Bond follows Goodnight's signal, lands in front of the Scaramanga's island and meet the latter. An interesting detail to note is that Scaramanga doesn't drink alcohol here, "poison isn't my thing" (he also says he doesn't smoke). Scaramanga shows Bond and Goodnight the island's solar power plant; he will sell the blueprints at auction to the highest bidder.

Scaramanga takes a walkie-talkie and asks Nick Nack to destroy the Cessna with a laser. Then they have dinner together and agree to face each other in a duel in the gymnasium.

Bond and Goodnight go into the gymnasium alone, Scaramanga is supposed to join them but they discover that they are locked inside and that the only way out is through a door that leads to a funhouse. Scaramanga enters inside the funhouse from it's exit: it's going to be a fight to the death inside.

Bond and Goodnight arrive near an effigy of Earp:

> - Goodnight: Were these, real bullets?
> - Bond: They're real. Blanks don't whizz by your head.

007 asks Goodnight to stay hidden in the saloon setting while he hunts down the man with the golden gun. Bond dodges the bullets from an Al Capone effigy and shoots what he thinks is his enemy but which turns out to be another effigy, representing Scaramanga.

Then Scaramanga passes in front of the effigy of Bond (but it is in fact the real Bond) who then shoots him. Bond throws away his Walther which have no longer any bullets inside and retrieves the golden gun from Scaramanga's body before returning to get Goodnight at the saloon.

> - Bond: First time I ever had fun in a funhouse.

Heading towards the exit they pass to the place where Bond had shot Scaramanga: the body is no longer there, only a pool of blood is present. "I should have made sure [he was dead]", blames himself 007. Bond and Goodnight follow the blood trail of Scaramanga, who in a superhuman effort, managed to reach the laser and shoot them with it. Bond and the girl take cover behind some rocks, then run as Scaramanga shoots them and destroys the area around them.

Bond and Goodnight arrive in the room with the helium pools, Scaramanga get off of the laser and appears on a platform above them. Bond takes aim with the golden gun and kills Scaramanga, whose body then falls into one of the pools. 007 and Mary then try (and succeed) to recover a Solex before the island explodes due to the rising temperature of the pool.

In the finale on the junk, Bond abandons Nick Nack on a buoy like in Mankiewicz writting, "be a good buoy now".

Maibaum also made several attempts in 1973 to rewrite the pre-title, introducing the character of Rodney. So he imagines a version where Scaramanga is not surprised by Rodney (Scaramanga goes to his funhouse with gun in hand, knowing that there is a killer inside). Moreover, to say that he was prepared to kill, we read earlier in the pre-title: "instead of reaching for another oyster Scaramanga reaches for Andrea, grasps her arm, and pulls her roughly onto the chaise with him. INSERT [onto] Andrea's bikini falling onto the sand".

In another attempt Maibaum has Nick Nack doing more commentary as Rodney walks through the funhouse. "Like Lincoln in Disneyland", writes the screenwriter to describe the funhouse's robot effigies. We also note that an effigy of Eliot Ness was present instead of John Dillinger or Al Capone in this version. In another version it is an effigy of Melvin Purvis. In one version Andrea also nicknames Francisco Scaramanga as "Paco".

It is also planned to change the action scene at the film studio (which included a martial arts academy' movie set) into just a real martial arts academy on its own. In his first attempts to write this, Maibaum had Bond locked in a cell before being brought before the students. He goes through three fights in a row using objects hidden on him (previously retrieved in his cell) to defeat his adversaries: a shoelace as a garrote, thumbtacks that he throws on the ground or a lid from a jar of tea. The screenwriter asks for slow motion during these fights. The headmaster of the academy disapproves Bond's methods/cheating which are not worthy of kung fu and warns him after each fight. Losing patience, the headmaster sends his best fighters to face Bond, one of whom is named Chula.

In another version, before the fight the headmaster asks Bond if he has any other request: "Yes, tea. Indian, please, not Chinese" (strange when you know that Bond hates tea in the novels).

It is also considered that Mary would be little more scared on the Scaramanga's island, "James, can't we... Run", she said to him before his duel with Scaramanga.

January 1974' "rewritten first draft": brothel, nieces and 360°

Maibaum had to deliver a new script to United Artist before Christmas 1973[35]. It was however with a little delay that he submitted this new 127-page script called "rewritten first draft". A copy (137 pages) dated January 7, 1974 takes the name "First draft screenplay by Richard Maibaum" (which still omits the participation of Tom Mankiewicz). A (partial) copy named version "B" and another (complete) "C" also strangely have the same title. The whole thing is now very close to the film, whether in the unfolding of the story or its dialogues.

> BOND - GUNBARREL - BLOOD LOGO
>
> A sandy stretch between steep, shrub-faced cliffs. Camera moves in past an offshore, mushroom-shaped rock formation, then zooms to Scaramanga's powerful, dripping back as he wades in from the surf. He wears golden trunks.
>
> Back still turned, he walks to Andrea, who holds a large unfolded bath towel monogrammed with an ornate "S". She is about twenty-six, dazzlingly beautiful, in a bikini.

Thus begins these scripts. The pre-title are more similar to the film than it ever was with Rodney tracking down Scaramanga in his funhouse because of a Nick Nack who is more traitorous (against his boss) than before. We note that Scaramanga finds his golden gun hidden by Nick Nack on a hanged man (which turning out to be an effigy of Scaramanga himself). Also Scaramanga shoots the Bond effigy in the heart (and not in it's fingers).

There is also an interesting passage about how Maibaum imagined Bond's posture in the gunbarrel:

> [Rodney] pitches forward. Strobe lights out. James Bond theme music. James Bond effigy lights up, evidently activated by Rodney falling against tripwire. Bond drops to one knee, gun drawn, as in logo.

If the Christmas' 1974 movie leads us to believe that Major Boothroyd and Q are the same and only person, it is different in this script. After the credits there is a scene in M's office. The Chief of Staff (Bill Tanner) is present as are M and the "ballistics expert" Boothroyd. That's on page 7. But on page 18, Bond meets Boothroyd AND Q! Based on the stage directions, it is clear that Q is the character who would normally be played by Desmond Llewelyn. In the film, ballistics expert Boothroyd will be renamed Colthorpe and Q will remain himself.

When M asks Bond what he knows about Scaramanga, Bond's response is quite different from the film:

> - Bond: Scaramanga? Scaramanga. Oh, yes. Nationality and whereabouts unknown. Trained by Smersh. Reputation began as an overworked, underpaid assassin for the KGB after the war. Became an independent operator in the late 50's. Credited with hundreds of killings he probably didn't commit. But there are at least 46 confirmed. Never misses and never been photographed. Distinguishing feature: a third nipple. His current price per killing is one > million dollars. [...] Last known assassination two years ago. I think that's about all, sir. Why?

After M explains, Bond goes to Beirut. The trail leads him to the brothel where Saida is and we notice that Maibaum has extended the scene and changed the tone a little by giving the girl a less attractive physique than before:

> Bulbs from the ceiling make pools of light between dark areas. Fat, oily customer, indicative of the establishment's clientele, emerges from the door of one of the rooms, passing Bond and the Madam as she leads him towards Saida's room in b. g.
>
> - Madam: ...All my girls, monsieur... Famous beauties... But you are fortunate Saida was recommended to you...
> - Bond: The spécialitée of the house, I hear.
>
> A silhouetted figure, back to camera, appears in f.g. Whoever it is looks after them. [...]
>
> - Madam: A dove, a little bird of paradise, and so talented.
>
> Madam opens [Saida's] door.
>
> - Madam: Saida, here is a handsome Englishman for you.
>
> Bond goes in as Madam closes door behind him.
>
> Reclining on king-size bed, she wears thin Turkish trousers, a short velvet bedjacket, is excessively plump and over made up, but definitely not an old bag. Her eyes light up. Bond [is] unable to restrain a wince.
>
> Saida's room [is] the showplace of the house, the decor partly Middle Eastern, partly Empire. Crystal chandelier et al vie with Persian rugs, silk wall hangings, etc. A carved, three-panel, latticed screen is positioned about fifteen feet [4,5 meters] away at a forty-five degree angle from the foot of the bed. It stands in front of an arched doorway opening on to a balcony running along the back of the house and masks a courtyard below.
>
> - Saida (flirtatiously): Oui, you are very handsome. (Getting off bed) And Saida?
>
> She undulates towards him, models herself provocatively, featuring a curvaceous but out-sized haunch.
>
> - Saida: Do you like her?
> - Bond: A dove, a little bird of paradise.
> - Saida: Come. Saida can take you there.
> - Bond (stalling): Yes, of course, indubitably, but couldn't we just chat?
> - Saida (staring at him): With Saida? That is an insult!
> - Bond (craftily): I mean first.

- Saida (mollified, returning to the bed): You are so English, you English.

Like in the movie, they discuss Bill Fairbanks. Finally, she wraps her arms around Bond. The camera moves slowly towards the lattice screen through which we see a figure holding something. Scaramanga's gun?

Bond simultaneously he pulls gun out of the holster and rolls off the bed. [He] comes up in a half-crouch, still holding gun, and launches a flying dropkick at the screen. It crashes over, pinning Hammud, a husky, swarthy Lebanese, under it. Bond pulls him out from under screen to his knees and covers him with his gun. Hammud still hangs on to a camera.

- Hammud (gasping): Don't shoot! I give you film! No charge!

He moves as though to hand Bond the camera, instead knocks the gun out of Bond's hand with it. Bond brings his knee up under Hammud's chin. Hammud falls back, drops camera. Bond picks it up. Hammud tries to get up. Bond bashes him over the head with camera. Then he wraps the strap around Hammud's neck and twists it until his eyes bulge. Bond releases him, gasping, yanks Hammud to his feet, screws off lens, shoves it into his mouth. Saida watching wide-eyedly. Bond turns him around, hustles him out through the arched doorway [and] propels him over balcony railing. Hammud drops a short flight into a large refuse bin, groggily tries to climb out. [bond] turns, goes back into room. Return[ing] with Hammud's camera, [Bond] aims, chucks it down over railing. Camera conks [Hammud] on the head and shoulders and knocks him back into refuse bin, out cold. Bond comes in from balcony.

- Bond: I never liked home movies.

He picks up gun, puts it back into holster on chair, turns to [Saida].

- Bond: Where were we? Oh yes.

She scurries back to the bed. He walks past her, kneels down to inspect wall on the other side. Turkish trousers [and] bed jacket falling to the rug. [Bond] see bullet hole. [...] He stands up.

- Bond: The bullet was never found. (Turning towards her) What hap...

He stops abruptly. Saida [is] in the bed, sheet pulled up to her waist. Bond comes slowly towards her. We now see Saida has a black ribbon around her throat. Bond sits down on edge of bed, examining mashed golden bullet hanging on ribbon in her cleavage.

- Saida: My lucky charm. I never take it off.

She holds out her arms. Camera in on Bond's reaction. Big "Things I do for England" sigh. [He] reluctantly starting to take off his jacket.

> [Later that night, the] red light district, a narrow street is deserted. Saida sleeping contentedly, a thoroughly satisfied female [sic!]. She stirs, turns in the bed to find Bond. He is gone. Saida sits up abruptly. The bullet is also gone.

Hardcore Moore so, one of the criticisms that Maibaum made of the actor in Live and Let Die was precisely that he didn't seem physical enough, especially compared to Connery[36]. Perhaps this is what pushed Maibaum to write such a violent scene?

Anyway 007 brings the bullet back to MI6 similar to the film with the exception of the distinction between Q and Boothroyd and this line of dialogue referring to Saida:

> - Bond (to Boothroyd): Oh, no! You mean to say there's no way to trace this bullet? If you knew what I went through to get it...

After that for a while things play out like in the movie with very similar dialogues. This includes the fact that Malazar has been renamed to Lazar, fireworks have been abandoned, the triggerless weapon is now a rifle on a tripod, and the green Rolls-Royces.

The script specifies that the Chinese man Bond meets at the hotel when he brings champagne to Andrea Anders is called Wang; it is also written that the topless girl of the Bottoms Up Club is Becky (although she no longer have a line of dialogue; Bond no longer enters the club). Scaramanga end up to kill Gibson in front of the Bottoms Up, then we meet Hip who brings 007 to M.

The trail leads to the industrialist Hai Fat. There is a scene from the script after the Queen Elizabeth that isn't present in the film in which Q meets Bond, Hip and Mary Goodnight before they fly to Bangkok. Q gives Bond a gadget looking like a camera (although 007 never uses it afterward in this script!):

> Hong Kong Kai Tak International Airport, day. Bond, carrying hand luggage, pays off taxi and hurries into the airport. Hip is standing by check-in desks, as Bond joins him.
>
> - Bond: Where's Q?
> - Hip: Not here yet.
> - Voice: Boarding passes.
>
> Goodnight, looking very trim, joins them, holding passes.
>
> - Bond: Three?
> - Goodnight: You stood me up last night, James, so buy me dinner in Bangkok.
> - Bond: Would M approve?
> - Goodnight: He suggested it. (Enjoyed herself) After last night's debacle, I suppose he thought a keen, efficient operative might not be amiss.
> - Bond: Quite right, too. Someone will have to keep an eye on me while I'm asleep.

Voice over P.A. announces departure of plane to Bangkok. Hip and Goodnight go past check-in desks. Bond looks o.s.: hurrying towards him, Q carrying a tiny package. Puffing hard, Q reaches him.

- Bond: Have you got the item I requested?
- Q (panting): Stayed up all night making it. (Handing him a tiny opaque plastic box) I say, Double-O-Seven, you're getting awfully kinky [the box contains a third fake nipple so he can pretend to be Scaramanga].
- Bond (taking box): Thank you, Q.

He turns to follow Hip and Goodnight.

- Q: Just a moment, Double-O-Seven. (Unslinging camera case) I believe you'll find this unusually handy...
- Bond: Not my hobby.
- Q (taking camera out of case): It is now.
- Bond: If you'll excuse me, Q, my flight...

He walks past check-in desk. With Bond walking rapidly towards boarding gate and Q trotting alongside him.

- Q: Really, Double-O-Seven, you're being unusually obtuse today. I've designed this for prompt emergency action by merely selecting and setting appropriate shutter speeds...

Passengers going through. Hip and Goodnight reach it. Hip goes through. Goodnight turns back and gestures for Bond to hurry up. Bond and Q approaching boarding gate.

- Q: Gas ejection... Instant solidification... Liquid non-adhesion... Fortunately there's a complete manual in the case which I strongly advise you to study carefully, but whatever you do (indicating on camera) never, never press this without first turning that.
- Bond: Why not?
- Q: Self-destruct mechanism. Whtt!

He pantomimes explosion. They stop at gate, beside Goodnight.

- Bond: Most ingenious. But I'm sure there's one thing it can't do.
- Q: What?
- Bond: Take a photograph.
- Q (putting camera back in case): There's no need to be facetious. Actually you're right, but I'm working on it. (Thrusting camera case into Bond's hand) Happy landing.

He bustles off. Stuck with camera, Bond slings it over his shoulder and accompanies Goodnight through boarding gate.

We finally arrive in Bangkok to meet Hai Fat, "an impressive Chinaman in his late forties" (the character will ultimately be played by Richard Loo, 71). To describe his villa, Maibaum evokes a shot where we see patrolling guards in a cave with paintings on the wall representing what he calls "the Court of Eternal Justice" (a vestige of the Ten Courts of Hell of previous versions of the film script). The Frenchman Merdan is present as one of Fat's henchmen (Bond will tell him "must make you homesick" upon seeing a miniature guillotine in the property). Bond meets Chew Mee then Fat who ends up inviting him to come back after dark. Hip drive him there, accompanied by his nieces: Cha and Nara (there is no dialogue with Goodnight).

Things don't go as planned, Bond gets captured like in the movie and is taken to a martial arts academy. There are some interesting differences here with the film. To begin, Bond has an exchange with the headmaster of the academy:

- Headmaster: Good morning, Mr. Bond. On behalf of my Academy, I accept your challenge.
- Bond: My what?
- Headmaster: It is a source of great pride to us that we are prepared to oblige all comers. Have you any requests?
- Bond (looking around): Is there a doctor in the house?
- Headmaster: Excellent, Mr Bond. Always strive to strike fear into an adversary. I will be most interested to see your individual style of self-defence.
- Bond (dead pan): So will I.

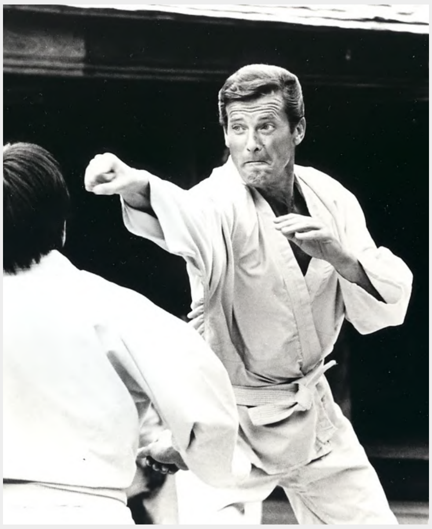
The headmaster gestures to the two black belters flanking Bond. The black belters escort Bond into center of encircling students. The four others black belters stand just inside them, two others join them. Spectators murmur expectantly. The students seat themselves, cross-legged.

Bond looks around for exits and see more black belters at all of them, arms folded. The headmaster raises hand for matches to start.

The first black belters steps forward. He shadow fights for a bit, throwing punches and kicking with amazing speed and dexterity. Spectators react approvingly, Merdan is standing unobtrusively among them.

The first black belter signals to a student who rises. Student holds five slabs of wood, each about seven inches [18 cm] square and an inch [2.5 cm] thick. Angles widens as we go into slow motion of student throwing slabs at the first black belter who chops at them with the side of his hand and splits them in mid air one after the other. We resume normal camera speed as students and spectators applaud.



The first black belter bows to Bond. 007 imitates ritual ironically, begins shadow boxing, throwing punches in conventional boxing style. He moves around, working his way toward circle of seated students, then through it, toward only exit which looks unguarded. Black belter appears in it. Bond shadow boxes back, stops beside pallet, low table etc. where we first saw him. He stoops, picks up fleecy towel, mops his brow, puts towel down, surreptitiously slips circular iron rest of incense burner into his tunic.

As Bond shadow-boxes back into the center of encircling students, black belter, spectators, etc. ; we see Hip, Nara and Cha standing among spectators.

Bond stops shadow-boxing. He bows to the first black belter he is ready. The first black belter scowls, starts circling Bond. Bond reaches into his tunic, takes out iron incense burner rest, and tosses it toward opponent. We go into slow motion again as the first black belter instinctively chops at it. Stop action freeze on his agonized reaction. Normal camera speed resumes as the first black belter clutches his hand, grimacing, and retires. Spectators murmur disapprovingly while the headmaster remained impassive.

A second black belter, bigger, tougher, uglier than the first one steps forward. He circles Bond with the usual sneers, growls, hisses. Bond sticks his thumbs in his ears, wiggles his fingers, crosses his eyes. The second black belter, disconcerted, stops. As he does Bond stamps hard on the arch of his foot. The second black belter grimaces, limps away disdainfully, squats, rubs his foot. Chula, the biggest black belter, approaches Bond. Spectators murmur: evidently he is a great champion.

No warm-up for him. He means to dismantle Bond who senses he is facing a battle of survival. Chula takes his stance. So does Bond, a conventional boxing one. Chula shouts, kicks Bond in the chest, Bond is flung backwards. He gets up. Chula rushes him with a blood-curdling shriek. They mix it, with Bond using judo, karate, and straight punches. Good as he is, he is no match for Chula who knocks him down several times with chops, punches, kicks. Hip, Nara and Cha are wincing.

Chula continues his murderous attack on Bond who gets up each time he is knocked down, but is increasingly dazed and shaky. Chula knocks him down again, then grasps Bond's neck in a both-hand squeeze, a possibly fatal hold. Camera angles suddenly widens as Cha and Nara come to Bond's aid. Actually, they are professional Thai girl kick-fighters. Gasp of amazement from crowd as they go to work on Chula with their fists, elbows, knees, feet, even butting with their heads. Chula goes down. Students and the black belters rush to help Chula. The girls and Bond fight their way through them toward an exit. Hip joins them. The four of them battle their way past students and black belters, into courtyard.

During the melee in courtyard, Hip and Cha become separated from Bond and Nara. Hip and Cha get out gate first and run to Hip's car as students pursue them. Bond and Nara fight their way out through gate, however students block way to Hip's car. Bond and Nara turn, run in opposite direction, as Chula and three other black belters emerge from gate, see them, and start toward them.

Hip is driving the car, Cha beside him. He swerves to avoid hitting spectators emerging from courtyard through gate. He see no sign of Bond or Nara beyond milling crowd. Bond and Nara are running along wall in front of courtyard, away from Hip and Cha in car. Bond looks back. Chula and the black belters spot them. Bond and Nara turn corner of a wall and run towards the back of houses built on stilts. All kinds of boats are moored and tied up along bank. There are market boats in stream filled with melons, kitchen utensils, flowers, etc. Bond and Nara reach the bank. They look back: Chula and three of his men are coming after them alongside house on stilts.

Bond and Nara jump from boat to boat, working their way to the opposite bank. Nara misses her footing and falls into the water. Bond looks back for her. Although she is a great kick-boxer, she is obviously no swimmer as she thrashes around in the water. In background Chula and the black belters see Bond come back for Nara and dives in after her.

Chula and his men commandeer a market boat. Two men pole it past other boats toward Bond and Nara. 007 boosts her out of water onto a market boat with help of a market man. She is spluttering and winded. Bond sees Chula's boat approaching, climbs back on deck, picks Nara up.

007 resumes crossing stream by leaping from boat to boat while carrying the girl. In background Chula's boat gains on him. Tied up to a dock are three long-screwed Thai motor boats. Bond carries Nara into scene, sets her down. He pulls her with him into one of the motor boats, casts off, starts motor, operates long rudder pole with spinning screw at the back, backs boat into stream, swings boat around, capsizing melon market boat as he does, then drives out of stream.

Bond and Nara maneuver in and out of other boats of all types as he drives downstream. Chula and the black belters reach the dock. Chula and one of is men commandeer one boat, the other two get in another. Backing out away from dock, swinging around, then set in pursuit of Bond's boat downstream. They gain on it as Bond's boat encounters growing river traffic. Bond drives behind a large passenger launch. Chula's boat roars past on the opposite side so that it is now ahead of Bond's. 007 now has one hostile boat downstream of him, the other upstream.

Chula is turning to come upstream. Bond sees him in front of him, looks back, sees second boat gaining on him. Bond heads through water traffic toward bank and floating market. Enemies boats are closing in on Bond's. Chula's boats back off, turn around, then back toward Bond's, the props on the end of the rudder poles whirling.

Bond and Chula maneuver as they attempt to cut each other down with the props. Action takes them close to bank. Prop shears off strut holding up canopy of boatload of tourists. It collapses on them. A marketeer on a boat frantically tries to avoid veering tourist's boat. He crashes into poles holding up house on bank. House collapses.

Other boats trying to avoid maneuvering long-screwed boats. They collide, tip over, dumping produce and merchandise into water along with market people. The second boat of Chula's men just missing Bond with whirling prop. 007 manoeuvres to strike back at driver of this second boat. An off-screen scream is heard as his prop evidently hits the driver. Sound of splash. Blood on water at center of outgoing concentric ripples.

- Bond: He screwed himself up.

Bond maneuvers his boat to put other water traffic between him and Chula's boat. Bond and Nara get out of motor boat, scramble onto a barge shop of the floating market. Camera travels with them as they cross barge which is crowded with shoppers, including tourists, identifiable by their holiday attire. Chula and black belters climb out of their motor boat onto the barge. They start after Bond and Nara. Market boats are now densely positioned so that shoppers and tourists can move about around the floating market by using gang-planks, bamboo spans, rope ladders, or just by stepping from one boat to the other. Bond and Nara approach a group of tourists on boat selling all kinds of large straw hats.

J.W. Pepper's wife, an American-Gothic Grant Wood type, is there trying on hats while Pepper waits impatiently. Bond and Nara pass them. Pepper looks puzzled, then shakes his head. Chula and his men have apparently lost their quarries, look about in frustration. Black belter from other prop boat joins them. Bond and Nara see Chula and black belters with their backs turned toward them. They turn, retrace steps to get away from them, passing Pepper and Mrs. Pepper at the hat shop boat. Close-up of Pepper: delayed take, then he remembers.

- Pepper: That spy fella!

Bond and Nara disappear behind the cabin of large market boat. Chula and the black belters disgustedly giving up pursuit.

- Pepper: I tell you it was him, Emma! Let's get out of here!

He turns, bumps into a market man carrying pile of hats, backs up, loses footing, falls over the side. He comes up at the surface, sputtering. Excitement among tourists, etc, on hat's boat.

- Mrs Pepper (shrilly): J.W., get your ass out of that filthy water!

Tourist and market man pull him back aboard.

A little further on, after Fat's death, Bond have dinner with Goodnight and the script then call for Bond to wear a white jacket.

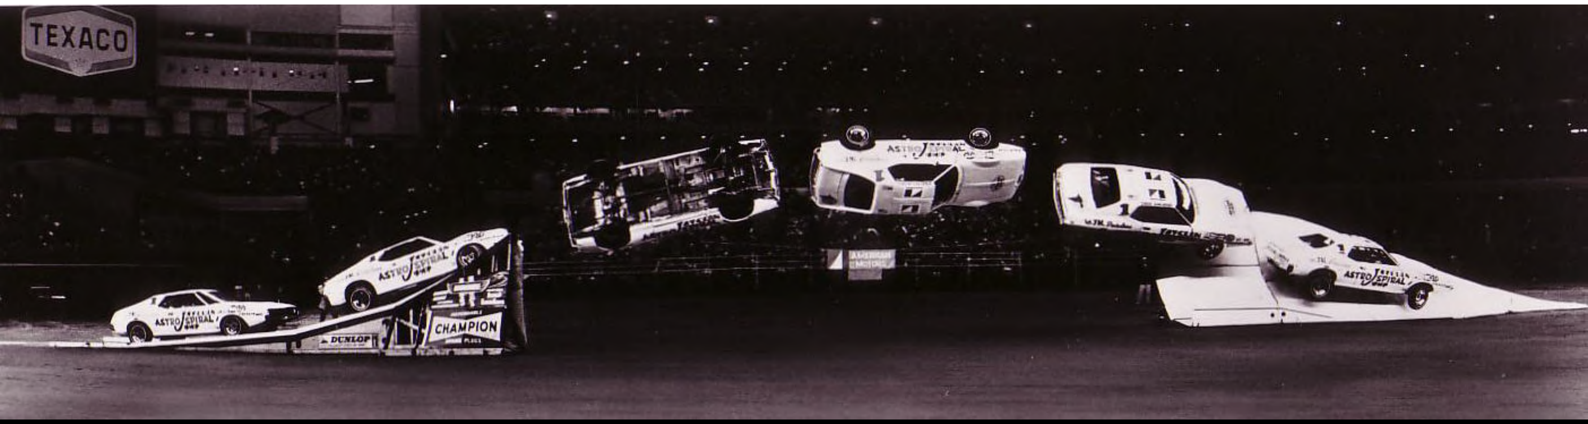
Then, as in the film, we learn that it was Andrea who sent the golden bullet, wanting to bring Bond in to kill Scaramanga. When Bond is supposed to meet her again, the meeting takes place at stadium during a Thai boxing tournament (still a female one, "Women's Lib should love this" comments 007!). Scaramanga and Nick Nack (next to the dead Andrea) gain the advantage over Bond (who then lights a cigarette):

> - Scaramanga: You know why those [boxing] girls aren't phoney? They're fighting for husbands. Come from the mountain villages up north. Chiang Mai. You need a dowry up there. Win a few fights and you can pick your husband.
> - Bond: Lose a few and you end up a pug-ugly old maid.

On the other hand, contrary to the movie, Scaramanga have still no dialogue about the elephant when he was young. A little further on Goodnight is locked in the trunk of Scaramanga's (green) car. 007 needs a car to chase him and goes to a Ford dealership (this will be an AMC one in the film).

J.W. Pepper is not present at all in this car chase scene. A potential buyer, a little Thai man with glasses, kicks one of the tires. He gets into the passenger seat of the car. Bond also gets into the car which is a "new model" from Ford. The potential buyer says, "Give me a demonstration, please". Bond drives the car through the dealership window. Hip freezes as the Ford, with Bond behind the wheel sitting next to the prospective buyer, comes towards him. Bond shift away just in time to avoid hitting Hip. The potential buyer displays "true Oriental unflappability, his face is expressionless". Bond said apologetically, "You wanted a demonstration".

The potential buyer raises an eyebrow when Bond rushes across the broken bridge to perform the famous 360° stunt (taken from the American Thrill Show by J.M. Productions) which is finally here.



The impressive "astro spiral" jump from the motorized show American Thrill Show, here performed by stunt driver Chick Galiano for the first time in Houston (Texas) in January 1972.

The origin of the stunt goes back to Raymond McHenry who was working around 1968 in developing a 3D computer program for the U.S. government, in order to design and build safer roads, by simulate vehicle maneuvers, collisions etc...[37] Services of professional stunt drivers were employed to perform real maneuvers and stunts to corroborate the computer predictions[38]. It was then discovered that they had unintentionally developed a computer program able to design and staging stunts for auto thrill shows[39].

McHenry contacted J.M. Productions, a company owned by Jay Milligan that was running stunt shows at fairgrounds[40]. McHenry and Milligan developed the idea of the 360-degree jump to be perform in a Milligan's thrill show[41]. Milligan had a promotional agreement with American Motors, so the stunt was conceived for (and performed by) a modified AMC Javelin[42].

While working on Live and Let Die, stunt driver Joie Chitwood showed Guy Hamilton a photograph of the stunt done in Houston[43]. Impress, EON Productions contacted Milligan and purchased from him a two year option, in order to prohib Milligan to perform the stunt in public[44]. While it was kept as secret as possible, the stunt was included in the script and EON hired Milligan as stunt coordinator on The Man with the Golden Gun. After computer calculations and under Milligan direction, the spiral jump was performed in Thailand for the film by stunt-driver Loren "Bumps" Willert in Bond's (modified) AMC Hornet X Hatchback, on June 1st, 1974[45]. "The guy who did the roll had never driven the car before or ever done it", declared Guy Hamilton[46].

After the 360° stunt, the potential buyer appears to "merely gives the suggestion of a blink"! Bond says "Nice family car" after the jump. And as Scaramanga fly away in his car, the potential buyer points up and says, "No care for that model. (He gestures back towards the Ford) I take that one [in blue]".

(During the writing process Maibaum also considered Bond's passenger being Hip, or Bond being alone in the car).

Finally, Bond goes to Scaramanga's island (there isn't the part where Scaramanga opens the champagne bottle with a gun). They discuss the solar energy system made possible by the Solex agitator (note that Merdan is present here, he will be replaced by Kra in the film). The stage directions for one of Bond's lines say "usual expertise when needed)". When Scaramanga destroys Bond's plane, 007 responds: "Thanks. A very convincing demonstration".

The script also delivers an interesting line when Bond and Scaramanga are having lunch. Agent 007 says "You'd kill a blind cripple for tuppence. When I have to kill it's a kind of justice".

- Richard Maibaum[47] : I didn't think Christopher Lee was properly cast as Scaramanga. For some reason, they got it into their heads he would be just like James Bond. Lee played him as if he were a god's officer who had veered off into crime, unlike the book where he was a South American assassin with a circus background. There was no conflict between them from the standpoint of personality, and consequently their scenes seemed to flatten out a bit.

- Scaramanga: The world isn't big enough for both of us.
- Bond: I have no intention of leaving it.
- Scaramanga: Let's put the whole ball of wax on the line: the plant, the girl, and your life or mine...
- Bond: You have an advantage. You could kill me with clichés.
- Scaramanga: I'll use what I always do. That's a Walther in your holster, right?
- Bond: Six bullets.
- Scaramanga: I'll have one.
- Bond: One?
- Scaramanga: Do you need more? So we start even.
- Bond: Where?
- Scaramanga: Why not on the beach?
- Bond: You mean stand back to back, take twenty paces, turn, and fire?
- Scaramanga: Whatever you want.
- Bond: Sounds a little old-fashioned to me.
- Scaramanga: Gentlemen used to duel that way. Eyeball to eyeball and the steady hand won. You're a gentleman. I'm not. But I'll go for it.
- Bond: I accept. Just as soon as I finish this delicious cheese soufflé, my compliments, Nick Nack.

The highlight of the film, the pistol duel between Bond and Scaramanga, is quite different from the screen. The following is the complete sequence (in prose but uncut, except for the scenes between Goodnight and Merdan):

Both Bond and Scaramanga dive and roll behind rocks as Nick Nack yells "Twenty!". He turns and scrambles away from what he now knows will be a no-holds-barred shoot-out.

Behind a rock, Bond shouts, "Chicken!". Scaramanga, who is also behind another rock, replies, "How about you?".

- Bond: Just a tactical surprise.
- Scaramanga: That's a laugh. I know every rock and bush on this island. You are dead, Bond.

Scaramanga darts from behind rock towards another. Bond just sees a flash of Scaramanga.

Merdan pushes Goodnight ahead of him across grotto when the sound of a gun is heard. Goodnight stiffens, stops. Merdan takes her arm, roughly goes with her into door to solar plant in opposite grotto wall.

Bond crawls behind a clump of brush to take cover behind different rock.

- Scaramanga (behind the rock): You're slipping. Bond. You had a clean Shot at me and blew it. That leaves you five.
- Bond (voice): Four more than you.

Their deadly game continuing. Each man tries to outmanoeuvre the other in an effort to get behind him or make him expose himself. Scaramanga takes advantage of his locale knowledge, Bond of props he finds in the sand. A crab, for instance, which he wedges into the Y of a piece of driftwood and propels over a rock Scaramanga is hiding behind. When Scaramanga, surprised, becomes momentarily visible, Bond gets off another shot at him. Scaramanga almost traps Bond by throwing part of an abandoned fishing net over the clump of brush he is using for cover. Bond retaliates by tossing a dead seagull at him. Throughout Scaramanga tries to draw Bond closer to the grotto.

Through the glass at the solar plant, we see Goodnight watching Merdan as he reads magazine, ignoring her.

Bond fire again.

- Scaramanga (taunting him): Three wasted and three left, that doubles the odds on you. You're a long shot now, Bond
- Bond (behind a rock, shouting back): That just pumps my adrenaline faster. You're playing it close. Is that what they taught you when you were a KGB punk?
- Scaramanga: You're a limey punk yourself, and so far it looks like they didn't teach you much.

Scaramanga sprints a few yards towards the cover of a rock nearer grotto entrance. Bond fires but Scaramanga reach cover of rock.

- Scaramanga: Two left, Double-O-Seven.

He takes off his yachting jacket, stuffs it with seaweed. Then he reaches for rotting plank and puts his yachting cap on it. By holding the plank behind the stuffed jacket he has made a passable-simulation of himself. He holds it up over top of rock.

Bond fires and Scaramanga fires his golden gun back. Bond drops back behind rock, not hit. He realises that Scaramanga must now be without ammo. Or is he?

Scaramanga grinning behind the rock as he loads another golden bullet into golden gun. He rises, sprints towards grotto entrance. Bond gets up warily from behind rock and pursue Scaramanga; he has one bullet left. Scaramanga lets himself into door to foyer of his pad. Bond runs into grotto in hot pursuit. He reaches door. It opens; Nick Nack looks up at him.

- Bond: I've never killed a midget, but there has to be a first time for everything. Where is he?

Nick Nack gestures Bond to come in and leads him across foyer into corridor. Bond follows Nick Nack into all-purpose room before Nick Nack takes him to door of gymnasium. He opens it, points in. Bond looks into gymnasium: he see a door in opposite wall of gymnasium which leads into the funhouse. Bond comes in, Nick Nack remains in door to all-purpose room.

- Nick Nack: Good luck, sir.
- Bond: I get it. You're playing both ends against the middle.

Bond starts to move towards the door to the funhouse. He opens it, looks in warily, and goes in. Peering through semi-darkness, light goes up over mirror and caliope music starts. Bond moves past mirror, proceeding cautiously.

[Meanwhile Goodnight gets rid of Merdan by sending him to a cooling pool].

007 looks for Scaramanga who is waiting for him, the golden gun poised. We hear the James Bond Theme music. Lights go up on James Bond effigy in background. It drops to one knee as in logo, levels gun at Scaramanga who laughs. He starts past effigy, it fires. Scaramanga is it by bullet from effigy. He staggers, raises golden gun to fire back. As he does, wildly, his knees sag, and he sinks to the floor, the golden gun still clutched in his hand.

Close-up on the effigy. But it isn't. It's Bond himself who put on effigy's coat and hat, etc, and impersonated himself, He rises, comes forward slowly. Bond stops beside Scaramanga's body, takes the golden gun out of his hand, turns away, looks for the way out.

[Outside the funhouse, Goodnight sees Bond and runs towards him].

- Goodnight: James!
- Bond (as she clings to him): Steady, Goodnight. Here's a souvenir for you.

He gives her the golden gun. She stares at it.

- Goodnight: Where is he?
- Bond: In a funhouse. He died laughing.

In the rest of the script, Mary Goodnight doesn't accidentally touch the control console with her delicious butt during the Solex scene, and Bond and Goodnight have to descend into the opening of the Solex dome, desperately clinging to rocks and bushes as they slide down to the base of the cliff.

On the junk, Nick Nack tries to attack 007 with a golden derringer (not a knife) but ends up locked in a basket.

And for those wondering how M got the number of Scaramanga's boat, Goodnight had tried to call him earlier.

Harry Saltzman was not satisfied with this script which he finds filled with "vulgarity, and bad taste", his criticisms relating in particular to the nudity at the Bottoms Up, the scene at Saida's brothel, and even the inclusion of Japanese Sumo in a Chinese setting[48].

April 15' script: duplication, AMC and thermos

Maibaum revises the script, he notably envisages a version where Q doesn't give Bond a camera at the airport but a belt which is a "polyaxoid visual plasma flow diffractor". Just like us when reading these words, Bond doesn't understand what it is about and, tired of explaining to a 007 in a hurry, Q uses his gadget on Bond's eyes: 007 now sees two Qs! Q then hands him the gadget and his manual "which I assume you will memorize".

- Bond: Be seeing you [later], Q... Both of you.

Later Bond was to use this gadget during the martial arts academy scene. After defeating two opponents (by throwing the incense burner and crushing a foot), a tougher fighter named Mong was to face 007 and knock him down. 007 used the belt and Mong then saw two Bonds, then four, then eight, and not knowing which one was the real one he tried to fight the fakes Bond until that, too exhausted, he passed out. Bond subsequently has his belt confiscated by the headmaster of the academy before having to fight Chula.

On April 15, 1974 Maibaum completed a new 128-page script ("Final draft", it was written on the cover of a version dated two days later). We notice in the pre-title that Scaramanga is now described as "dark skinned" and with a "pencil moustache". Nick Nack have French origins. The rest of the pre-title is similar to before and to the film (we notice that the stairs that convert into ramps are now there).

In M's office, Bond's biography of Scaramanga is close to the film, with the circus origins mentioned, although the movie omits a "father possibly Cuban" present here.

Arriving in Beirut, Bond no longer goes to a brothel but to a cabaret where a certain Saida (described as "a young Lebanese beauty") entertains the customers with belly dancing; the bullet having killed 002 in her navel. Bond watches while enjoying a martini and smoking a cigarette. She invites him to her dressing room and the dialogues are similar to the film; then Bond is attacked by Rahman (the cabaret owner) and there is a fight in the dressing room. Once Rahman out of service, Bond comes out of the dressing room with the bullet and runs into Hammud (a bouncer), a waiter and a bartender; they chase Bond into the main room among the customers. There is a fight between the tables and the musical instruments of the cabaret. 007 splashes liquid from a glass onto the electric guitar which Hammud grabbed to tries to hit 007: Hammud is electrocuted.

Rahman, who has regained consciousness, joins the fight with throwing knives but Bond draws his PPK and shoots the knives in his hand before heading towards the exit and managing to escape by getting into a taxi.

Bond returns to MI6 HQ (where Boothroyd and Q are still different characters) then there are the scenes with Lazar, Andrea's tailing, Goodnight, the Peninsula Hotel, Gibson's death, Hip, the Queen Elizabeth and the airport scene where Q hands the fake nipple to Bond (but no more gadgetized camera or belt).

Arriving at Hai Fat property, the character of Merdan was renamed Ling Po (and is now Chinese), as in the film. Bond meets Fat, later gets knocked out by the sumos and Nick Nack, and is sent to martial arts school.

What happens next has been rewritten and is closer to the film. So 007 doesn't have his conversation with the headmaster, he witnesses a fight to the death where two men settle their differences with a sword in each hand, and he hits a fighter during the bowing phase. Before Bond faces Chula, he first has another opponent to face in the script: "BOND VERSUS GREEN BELTER. Routine to be staged with stunt arrangers. Once again Bond disposes of his opponent by using his wits".

Bond is no match for Chula even if he kicks him and makes his nose bleed in this fight, which also has to be designed by the stuntmen. We notice that Bond doesn't flee in the script, instead it is Chula who throws him through the wooden window. 007 is joined by Hip and his nieces:

> - Hip: Are you all right?
> - Bond: Wait till I count my arms and legs... How'd you find me?

(Because it is a place belonging to Fat. To answer this question Maibaum had also at one point imagined that Hip and his nieces arrive to save Bond at the martial arts academy in the company of Chew Mee or by saying she helped. An alternative idea to this was that Hip had followed Merdan).

Bond's reinforcements deal with the opposition while Bond watches quietly: "all he has to do is step out of the way of falling bodies". They go to leave the scene by car but Hip, a little too excited, leaves without Bond. 007 therefore joins (alone, without Nara) a boat for the rest of the action scene which is similar to the film, with the kid who selling a wooden elephant, Pepper and his wife Maybelle, Bond who cuts the bad guys' boat in two.

After seeing Goodnight and Andrea, Bond goes to the stadium where this time it is a male fight and where Scaramanga tells him about his story with the elephant at the circus. (Note that in an earlier iteration, Scaramanga told this story later, when Bond saw on his island a painting of a young man on an elephant in a circus setting. Scaramanga then explained that the painting was a special commission from him and told the story he had with this elephant in a similar way to the film). In any case the Scaramanga's backstory with the circus and the elephant is a reference to the novel, in which M reads something similar in a report on Scaramanga.

Maibaum changes the car chase by no longer putting Bond behind the wheel of a Ford but of the new AMC Matador model (which will become Scaramanga's car in the film, movie where Bond would drive the Hornet model of AMC instead). Next to him is no longer the impassive Thai but J.W. Pepper.

> - Tom Mankiewicz[49] : Yeah, nobody should ever have brought him [J. W. Pepper] back. It's just that the audience loved him so much in Live and Let Die > they decided to bring him back. He was never in my script. I do think it was, in essence, overproduced. He felt just totally unnecessary and terrible in Man with the Golden Gun.

One of the rare things in this sequence that we don't find in the film is the presence of a Dunlop truck that Scaramanga sends into a ditch by overtaking it; its cargo of tires then rolls towards Bond's car but 007 manages to avoid the tires, unlike the police cars behind.

The reference to Evel Knievel, one of the most famous stuntman (on motorbike) in the world, is absent.

007 subsequently goes to the island of Scaramanga where the character of Merdan has been replaced in this section by an Oriental named Kra (in an earlier version Maibaum specified the character's name / first name by naming him "Kra Boom"). After a dinner, Bond and Scaramanga face off in a duel. At the end of the countdown they are both hiding behind rocks, Nick Nack call them "Chicken! Chicken!".

> \- Bond: So you're the best!
> \- Scaramanga: Now you know my secret! I never take chances! What is your excuse?

A similar phrase can be hear in a trailer, but not in the film.

> \- Bond: Nick Nack's right. I'm chicken.
> \- Scaramanga: A dead chicken. I know every rock and bush on this island. You will never see where the golden bullet comes from!

Bond takes a thermos from the wreckage of the Cessna seaplane (it will be a Republic plane in the film) and fills it with gasoline from an auxiliary tank.

> \- Bond: What are you waiting for? Make your move, you KGB creep.
> \- Scaramanga: An old trick, not worthy of you. So you know where I am. I give you that. Nothing will save you. Nothing.

Bond throws the thermos towards the source of Scaramanga's voice; the hitman rolls away and Bond shoots when he sees Scaramanga moving but misses. The "thermos molotov bomb" falls to the ground and explodes, throwing sand.

> \- Scaramanga: You guessed wrong! That leaves you with only five!
> \- Bond: Four more than you!

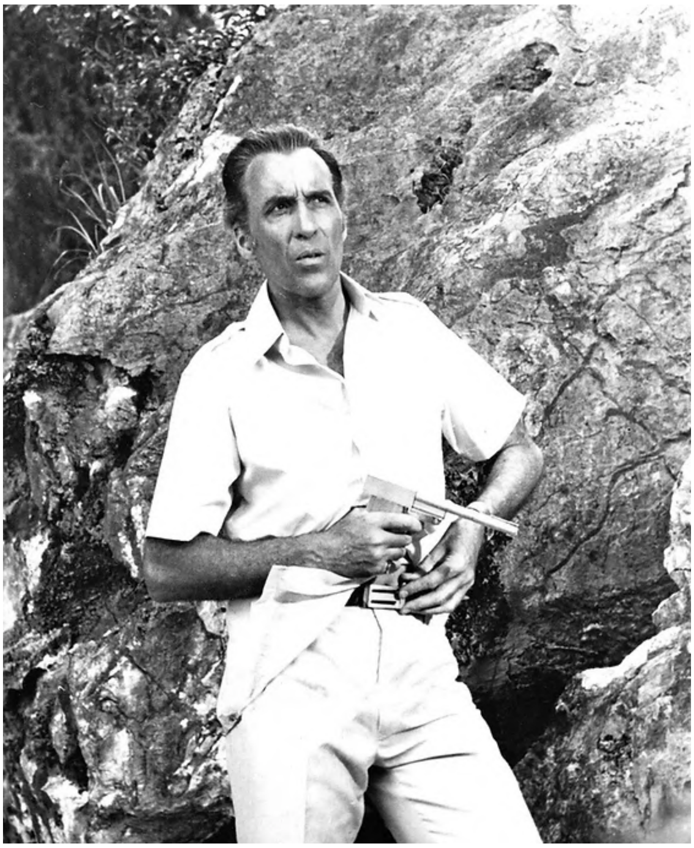
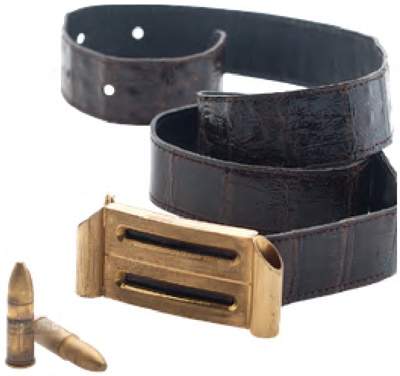
A little further on, Scaramanga thinks he sees Bond and shoots. However, it is revealed that it was an effigy created by 007 from his jacket and the remains of the airplane seat, all held in place using the straps of his holster. Scaramanga (who had missed on purpose) takes out a second bullet hidden in his belt and reloads his weapon. Bond sees Scaramanga again and fires two bullets which miss. 007 approaches and comes across Nick Nack who, like in the film, tells him that he will inherit everything if he kills his boss.

The thermos and its explosion will be cut during editing.



Scaramanga cheating by pulling another bullet from his belt was also filmed but cut during editing.



The rest of the scene moves indoors to the funhouse where Bond meets the effigies of the cowboy and Al Capone and dodges their bullets. 007 fired a bullet at the cowboy and fired another at a reflection of Scaramanga in a mirror: he has only one bullet left. Bond then climbs the scaffolding and takes the place of his own effigy before killing the man with the golden gun.

Bond joins Goodnight and they recover a Solex (her butt this time touches the control console) then board the junk where they are later attacked by Nick Nack with a knife. He throws bottles at Bond who ends up capturing him in a suitcase.

Richard Maibaum (far left) with the actors and filmmakers.

- Tom Mankiewicz[50] : I saw it [the film] at a screening that United Artists gave and I was very disappointed. I think in many ways Golden Gun and Moonraker are the two worst Bonds.

Sources/references from chapter 9: The Man with the Golden Gun

1 "Inside The Man With The Golden Gun" DVD bonus.

2 "Roger Moore: His Films and Career" by Gareth Owen and Oliver Bayan (2002); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

3 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).

4 "Visual History with Guy Hamilton", interview by Michael Apted for the Director Guild of America, chapter 3.

5 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).

6 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).

7 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).

8 "James Bond: The Legacy" by John Cork and Bruce Scivally (2002).

9 "James Bond: The Legacy" by John Cork and Bruce Scivally (2002).

10 "James Bond: The Legacy" by John Cork and Bruce Scivally (2002).

11 "For Your Eyes Only: Behind the scenes of the James Bond films" by David Giammarco (2002).

12 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

13 "James Bond: The Legacy" by John Cork and Bruce Scivally (2002).

14 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

15 "James Bond: The Legacy" by John Cork and Bruce Scivally (2002).

16 "James Bond: The Legacy" by John Cork and Bruce Scivally (2002).

17 "The James Bond Archives" by Howard Hughes and Paul Duncan (2012).

18 Bondage magazine, Mankiewicz's interview by Richard Schenkman (issue #8, 1980).

19 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

20 "The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).

21 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).

22 For the Diyu and Haw Par villas information, see:
"Diyu", "Haw Par Villa", "Tiger Balm Garden (Hong Kong)" and "Tiger Balm Garden" Wikipedia's pages.
"The Chinese Ten Courts of Hell: A Visual Introduction" by Ced Yong on Owlcation website (2023): https://owlcation.com/humanities/The-Horrific-Chinese-Ten-Courts-of-Hell
"Hidden Hong Kong: A history of Haw Par Mansion and Tiger Balm Garden" by Alison Fung on Localiiz website (2021): https://www.localiiz.com/post/culture-history-haw-par-mansion-tiger-balm-garden-hong-kong
"Why Tiger Balm is the secret behind this Singapore theme park" by Peter Ford on The Idependent (2018): https://www.independent.co.uk/traveller/haw-par-villa-singapore-tiger-balm-garden-history-photos-a8526096.html
"The Aw Boon Haw and Aw Boon Par the King of Tiger Balm History collections" by Iwan suwandy in Driwancybermuseum's blog (2012): https://driwancybermuseum.wordpress.com/2012/05/01/the-tiger-balm-garden-singapore-history-collections/
An article about Fujian villa: http://www.tigerbalmgardens.org/HOMESfujianHouse.html

23 "The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).

24 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

25 Mankiewicz's interview by Chauhan Dharmesh for Superman Cinema, via CapedWonder (2006): https://www.capedwonder.com/the-2006-tom-mankiewicz-interview
"The James Bond Archives" by Howard Hughes and Paul Duncan (2012).

26 Bondage magazine, Mankiewicz's interview by Richard Schenkman (issue #8, 1980).

27 "Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age" by Pat McGilligan (1986).

28 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).

29 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

30 "Project Stormfury" Wikipedia's page.

31 "Weather Warfare Forecast: Partly Cloudy" article in The Los Angeles Times by Lowell Ponte (01.29.76).
"Operation Popeye" Wikipedia's page.

32 "Dubai Creates Fake Rain Using Drones to Battle 122 Degree Heat" article in Newsweek by Anabelle Doliner (2021): https://www.newsweek.com/dubai-creates-fake-rain-using-drones-battle-122-degree-heat-1611887
"UAE to test cloud-busting drones to boost rainfall" on BBC (March 13, 2021): https://www.bbc.com/news/technology-56428984

33 "The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).

34 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

35 "The James Bond Archives" by Howard Hughes and Paul Duncan (2012).

36 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).

37 "Astro Spiral: Revisiting the greatest car stunt of all time" by John Pearley Huffman on Hagerty website (2018): https://www.hagerty.com/media/automotive-history/the-greatest-car-stunt-of-all-time-the-astro-spiral/
"The Astro Spiral Jump - An Automobile Stunt Designed via Computer Simulation" booklet by Raymond R. McHenry.

38 "The Astro Spiral Jump - An Automobile Stunt Designed via Computer Simulation" booklet by Raymond R. McHenry.
39 "The Astro Spiral Jump - An Automobile Stunt Designed via Computer Simulation" booklet by Raymond R. McHenry.
40 "Astro Spiral: Revisiting the greatest car stunt of all time" by John Pearley Huffman on Hagerty website (2018): https://www.hagerty.com/media/automotive-history/the-greatest-car-stunt-of-all-time-the-astro-spiral/
"The Astro Spiral Jump - An Automobile Stunt Designed via Computer Simulation" booklet by Raymond R. McHenry.
41 "Astro Spiral: Revisiting the greatest car stunt of all time" by John Pearley Huffman on Hagerty website (2018): https://www.hagerty.com/media/automotive-history/the-greatest-car-stunt-of-all-time-the-astro-spiral/
"The Astro Spiral Jump - An Automobile Stunt Designed via Computer Simulation" booklet by Raymond R. McHenry.
42 "Astro Spiral: Revisiting the greatest car stunt of all time" by John Pearley Huffman on Hagerty website (2018): https://www.hagerty.com/media/automotive-history/the-greatest-car-stunt-of-all-time-the-astro-spiral/
43 "Focus Of The Week: The Man With The Golden Gun's Corkscrew Jump" on 007.com: https://www.007.com/focus-of-the-week-the-man-with-the-golden-guns-corkscrew-jump/
44 "The James Bond Films: a behind the scenes history" by Steven Jay Rubin (1983 edition).
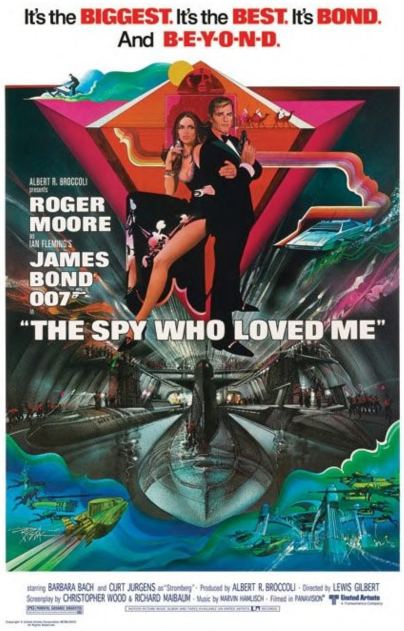
45 "Focus Of The Week: The Man With The Golden Gun's Corkscrew Jump" on 007.com: https://www.007.com/focus-of-the-week-the-man-with-the-golden-guns-corkscrew-jump/
46 "Focus Of The Week: The Man With The Golden Gun's Corkscrew Jump" on 007.com: https://www.007.com/focus-of-the-week-the-man-with-the-golden-guns-corkscrew-jump
47 "James Bond: 27 years and still licensed to kill" by Mark A. Altman (?) in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).
48 "The James Bond Archives" by Howard Hughes and Paul Duncan (2012).
49 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
50 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

CHAPTER 10

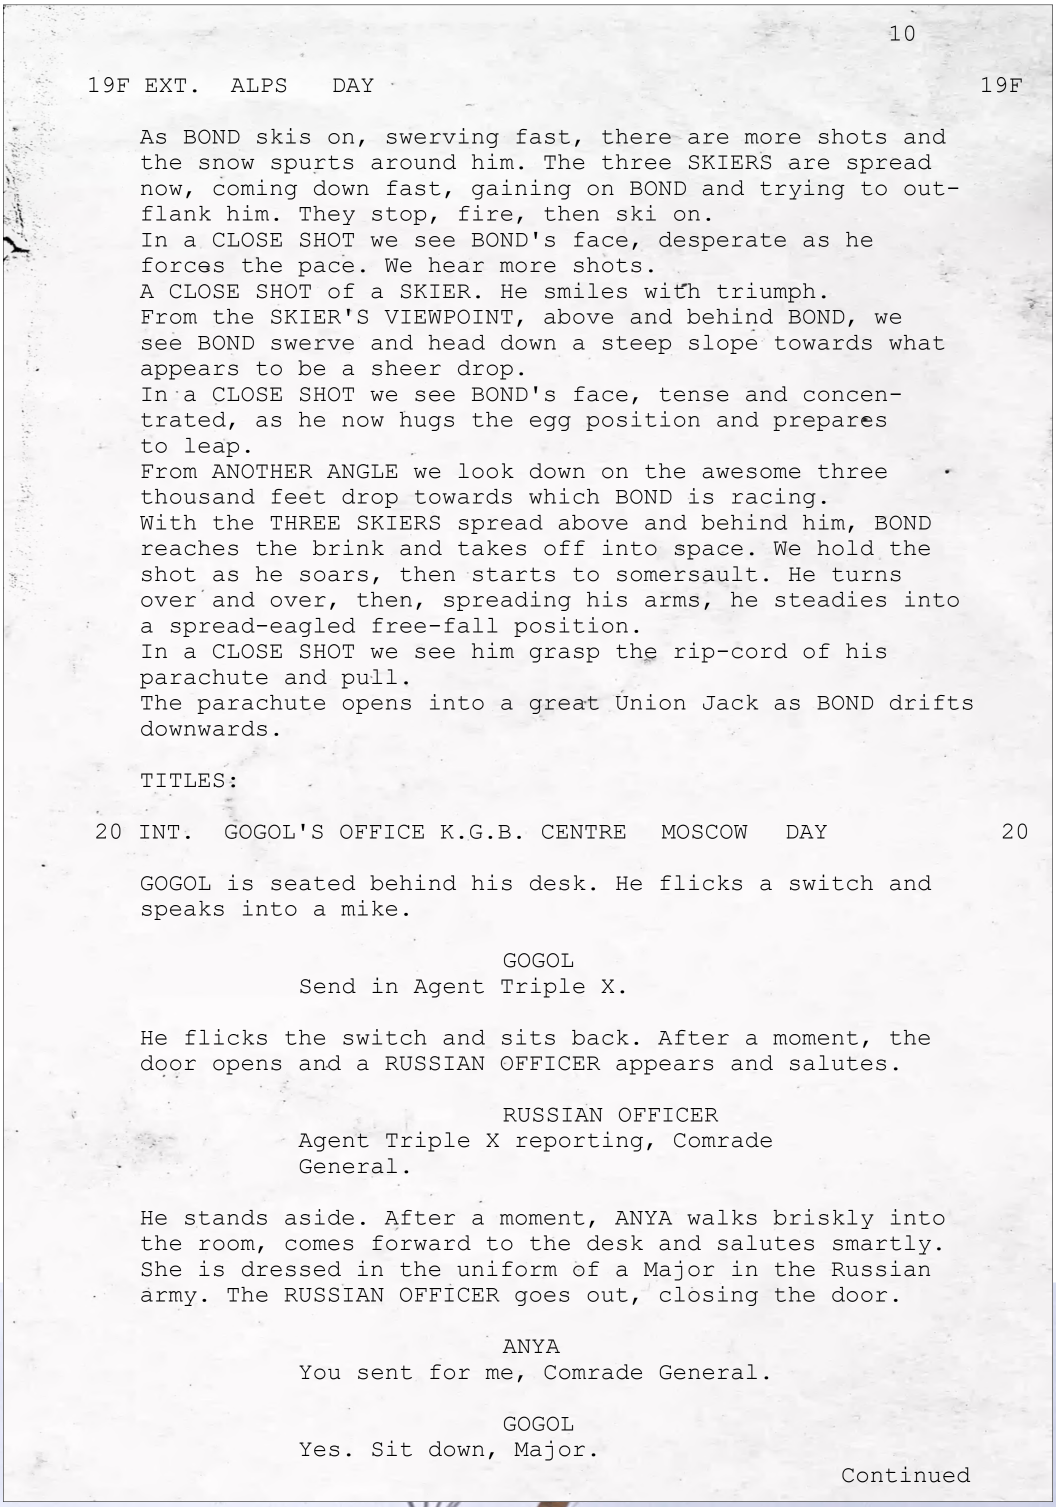


It's the BIGGEST. It's the BEST. It's BOND.
And B-E-Y-O-N-D.
ALBERT R. BROCCOLI presents
ROGER MOORE
as
IAN FLEMING'S
JAMES BOND 007
"THE SPY WHO LOVED ME"
starring BARBARA BACH and CURT JURGENS as "Stromberg" · Produced by ALBERT R. BROCCOLI · Directed by LEWIS GILBERT
Screenplay by CHRISTOPHER WOOD & RICHARD MAIBAUM · Music by MARVIN HAMLISCH · Filmed in PANAVISION®
United Artists

Release date (premiere) :
7 July 1977

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Screenplay by Christopher Wood and Richard Maibaum"

Director :...............................Lewis Gilbert
Producer :.....................Albert R. Broccoli
Associate producer :...William Cartlidge
Director photography :....Claude Renoir
Set Designer :...........................Ken Adam
Composer :...................Marvin Hamlisch
Editor :.......................................John Glen
Title sequence :..............Maurice Binder
Title song vocals :.................Carly Simon



10

19F EXT. ALPS DAY 19F

As BOND skis on, swerving fast, there are more shots and the snow spurts around him. The three SKIERS are spread now, coming down fast, gaining on BOND and trying to out-flank him. They stop, fire, then ski on.
In a CLOSE SHOT we see BOND's face, desperate as he forces the pace. We hear more shots.
A CLOSE SHOT of a SKIER. He smiles with triumph.
From the SKIER'S VIEWPOINT, above and behind BOND, we see BOND swerve and head down a steep slope towards what appears to be a sheer drop.
In a CLOSE SHOT we see BOND's face, tense and concentrated, as he now hugs the egg position and prepares to leap.
From ANOTHER ANGLE we look down on the awesome three thousand feet drop towards which BOND is racing.
With the THREE SKIERS spread above and behind him, BOND reaches the brink and takes off into space. We hold the shot as he soars, then starts to somersault. He turns over and over, then, spreading his arms, he steadies into a spread-eagled free-fall position.
In a CLOSE SHOT we see him grasp the rip-cord of his parachute and pull.
The parachute opens into a great Union Jack as BOND drifts downwards.

TITLES:

20 INT. GOGOL'S OFFICE K.G.B. CENTRE MOSCOW DAY 20

GOGOL is seated behind his desk. He flicks a switch and speaks into a mike.

GOGOL
Send in Agent Triple X.

He flicks the switch and sits back. After a moment, the door opens and a RUSSIAN OFFICER appears and salutes.

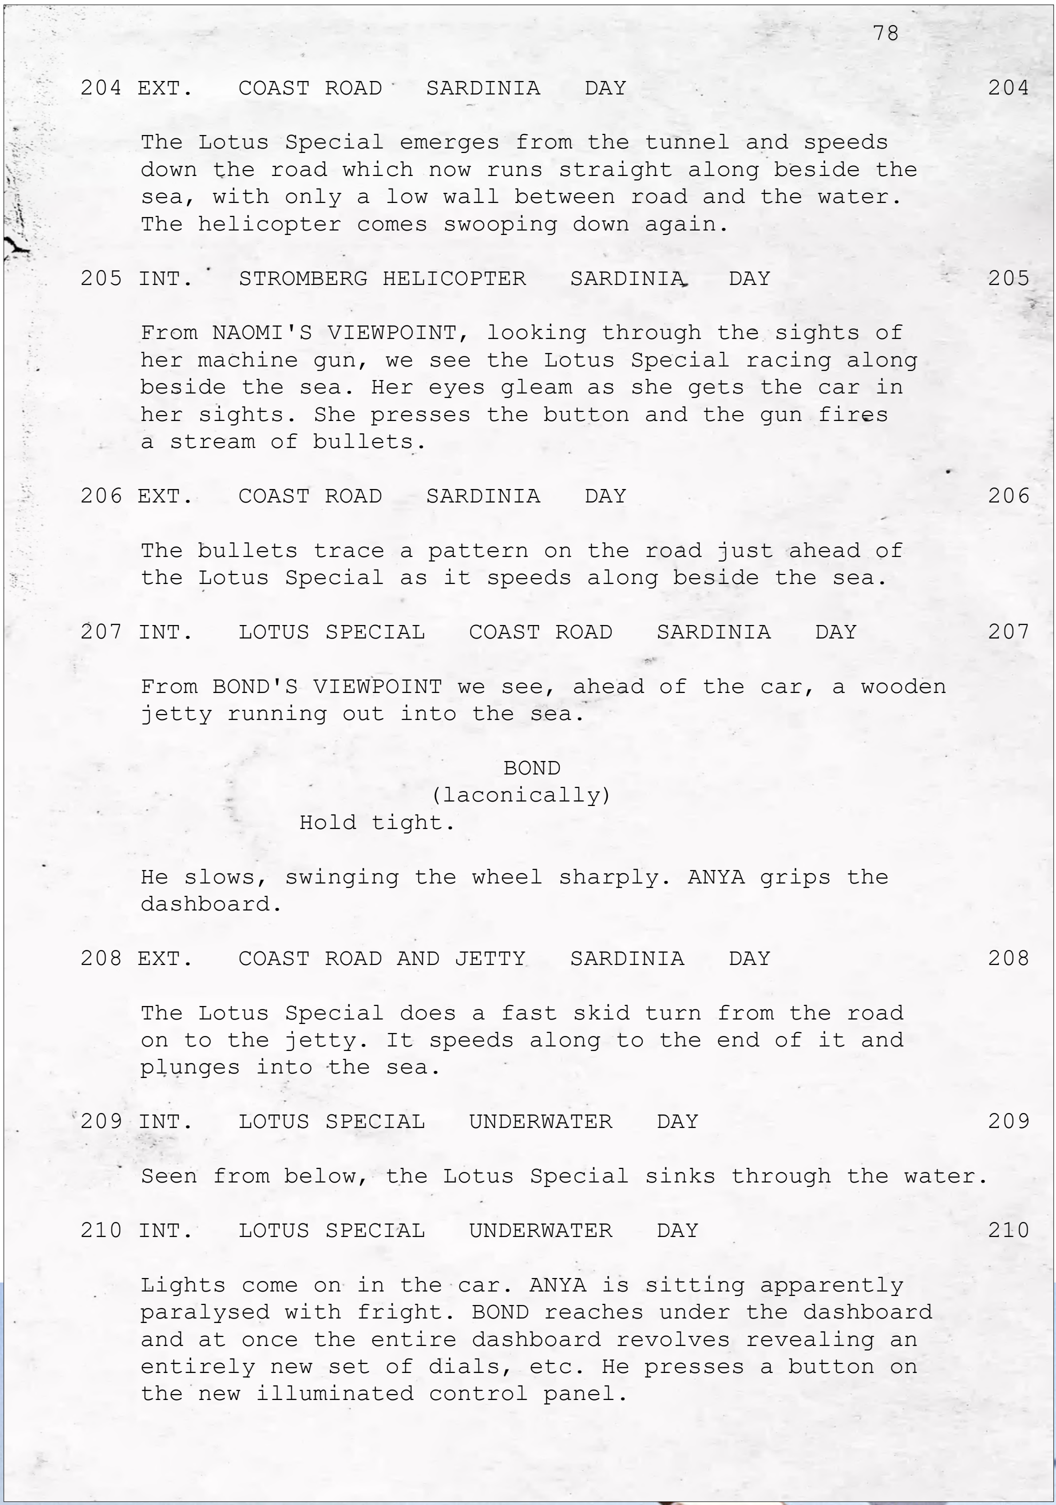
RUSSIAN OFFICER
Agent Triple X reporting, Comrade General.

He stands aside. After a moment, ANYA walks briskly into the room, comes forward to the desk and salutes smartly. She is dressed in the uniform of a Major in the Russian army. The RUSSIAN OFFICER goes out, closing the door.

ANYA
You sent for me, Comrade General.

GOGOL
Yes. Sit down, Major.

Continued



78

204 EXT. COAST ROAD SARDINIA DAY 204

The Lotus Special emerges from the tunnel and speeds down the road which now runs straight along beside the sea, with only a low wall between road and the water. The helicopter comes swooping down again.

205 INT. STROMBERG HELICOPTER SARDINIA DAY 205

From NAOMI'S VIEWPOINT, looking through the sights of her machine gun, we see the Lotus Special racing along beside the sea. Her eyes gleam as she gets the car in her sights. She presses the button and the gun fires a stream of bullets.

206 EXT. COAST ROAD SARDINIA DAY 206

The bullets trace a pattern on the road just ahead of the Lotus Special as it speeds along beside the sea.

207 INT. LOTUS SPECIAL COAST ROAD SARDINIA DAY 207

From BOND'S VIEWPOINT we see, ahead of the car, a wooden jetty running out into the sea.

BOND
(laconically)
Hold tight.

He slows, swinging the wheel sharply. ANYA grips the dashboard.

208 EXT. COAST ROAD AND JETTY SARDINIA DAY 208

The Lotus Special does a fast skid turn from the road on to the jetty. It speeds along to the end of it and plunges into the sea.

209 INT. LOTUS SPECIAL UNDERWATER DAY 209

Seen from below, the Lotus Special sinks through the water.

210 INT. LOTUS SPECIAL UNDERWATER DAY 210

Lights come on in the car. ANYA is sitting apparently paralysed with fright. BOND reaches under the dashboard and at once the entire dashboard revolves revealing an entirely new set of dials, etc. He presses a button on the new illuminated control panel.

Cast:

James Bond :..........................Roger Moore
Karl Stromberg :..................Curd Jürgens
Anya Amasova :..................Barbara Bach
Jaws :......................................Richard Kiel
General Gogol :....................Walter Gotell
Naomi :.............................Caroline Munro
Sandor :.................................Milton Reid
Max Kalba :..................Vernon Dobtcheff
Aziz Fekkesh :.................Nadim Sawalha
Sheikh Hosein :.............Edward de Souza
Frederick Gray :...............Geoffrey Keen
M :...Bernard Lee
Moneypenny :.......................Lois Maxwell
Q :.............................. Desmond Llewelyn

Main filming locations: Egypt, Sardinia, Switzerland, Canada, Bahamas and UK.

Roger Moore definitely takes his ease as James Bond with this third film. The screenplay is basically a You Only Live Twice bis, but nonetheless effective, and the film shines with its stunts, its Bond's girl, its sets, the underwater Lotus and one of the henchmen so emblematic that he will return in the following film and various video games.
Many screenwriters were involved, including Richard Maibaum, who established various elements and the bulk of the structure, while Christopher Wood refocused things by reworking many things, including the villains.

THE SPY WHO LOVED ME

Table of contents

The Spy Who Loved Me

The spy who came in from the novel....582
The spy who was written by Burgess....584
The spy who saw a lot of screenwriters....595
The spy who hired John Landis....597
The spy who also gave a try to Stirling Silliphant....603
Maibaum is back with the beginnings of a treatment....616
August 4, 1975' treatment: Amasova, Kronk, oil fields and Harrier....619
August 20' revised treatment: Deneuve, rifle-easel and garrote....625
Sardinia, Egypt, Norway, monastery and Jaws....628
Saltzman and Hamilton leave the Bond ship....635
Detour through Czechoslovakia and submersible car....638
January 8, 1976' script: ZYX, Ford and underwater bulldozer....640
February 12, 1976' summary....647
February 27, 1976' script from: villainess, Omar and jetpack....647
Enter Christopher Wood....650
April 22, 1976' script: Stavros, Aquapolis, P and Lotus....652
June 15, 1976' script....662
The shadow of Mankiewicz....666
Bond 77....667
Novelization....670

The spy who came in from the novel

IAN FLEMING
FLEMING
THE SPY WHO LOVED ME
The Spy Who loved me

In many ways The Spy Who Loved Me (which became Motel 007 in French) is an atypical James Bond novel. First of all it is written in the first person, with the "I" designating a young woman named Vivienne Michel and not James Bond. In addition, it is this same Vivienne who is the main character of the story; 007 is just a secondary character who only appears late in the story, at chapter 10 (out of 15). In another scale: his arrival is on page 135 of 221 of the first edition of the novel (Jonathan Cape).

The story tells the life of Vivienne and more particularly an evening during which she found herself guarding the Dreamy Pines motel, in the Adirondacks (United States); waiting for the owner to come and collect the keys.

Very quickly two menacing men, Sluggsy Morant and Sol "Horror" Horowitz, burst into the motel with bad intentions...

> When he [Horror] spoke there was a glint of grey silvery metal from his front teeth and I supposed they had been cheaply capped with steel, as I had heard was done in Russia and Japan.
> -Chapter 8

Their behavior quickly becomes threatening. Fearful of being killed, Vivienne escapes into the woods at the first opportunity, but is caught and severely beaten. Later, after she refused to dance for them, the two individuals pin her on the counter and are about to rape her, when there is a knock at the door.

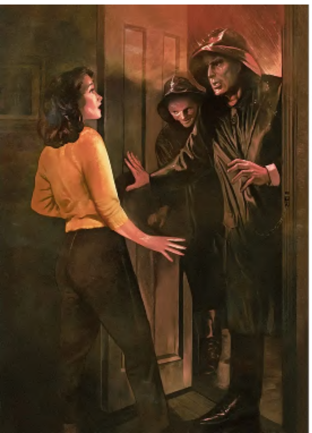
It's James Bond, whose car has a flat tire while he was on his way to Washington. Bond was on a mission in Canada in which he was trying to capture Uhlmann: a member of SPECTRE who was attempting to kill a Russian defector with information on Soviet nuclear submarine designs. With his tire flat, Bond is now looking for a room for the night.

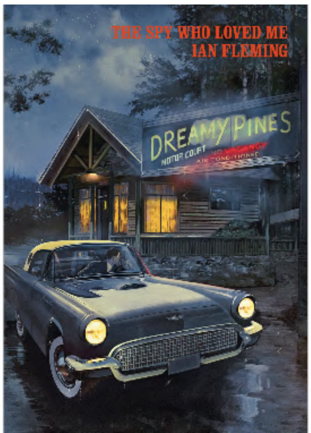
007 quickly understands that the two men are gangsters and that Vivienne is in danger. He explains to Vivienne who he is and a long night unfolds during which Bond tries to protect Vivienne from Sluggsy and Horror who are trying to kill them.

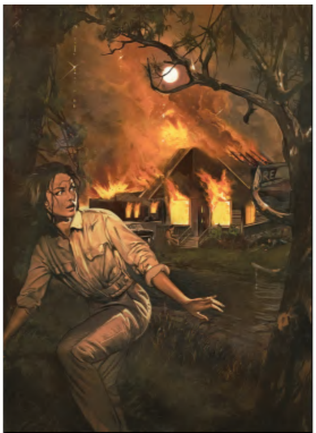
In fact, the two men are there to set the motel on fire so that Mr. Sanguinetti, the owner, can collect the insurance money. After setting the place on fire, when they try to escape by car, Bond shoots Horror who is behind the wheel. The car ends up in a lake where it sinks with the two gangsters trapped inside. Bond and Vivienne retire to one of the last remaining cabins and make love. But Sluggsy is still alive and tries once again to kill 007, who shoots him first.

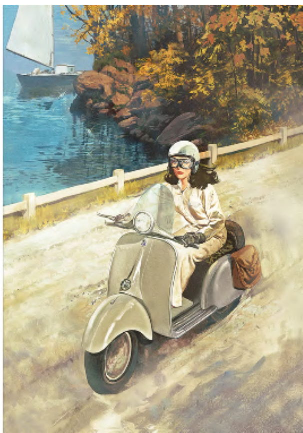
In the early morning, Vivienne discovers that Bond has already left for Washington, leaving her only a farewell letter. In it, he say that he will notify the police of the night's events and will play on his relationships in order to avoid her troubles. He will even make sure that she receives a reward from the insurance company.

The police arrive in force at the remainings of the motel and Vivienne gives her statement. Vivienne leaves on her Vespa scooter, cherishing the memory of the spy who had loved her for the time of the night (or at least had sex with her).









With its unusual structure, the novel's reception proved so poor that Ian Fleming wrote to Jonathan Cape's Michael Howard to explain why he had written it like this: "I had become increasingly surprised to find my thrillers, which were designed for an adult audience, being read in schools, and that young people were making a hero out of James Bond. [...] I do not regard James Bond as a heroic figure but only as an efficient professional in his job. So it crossed my mind to write a cautionary tale about Bond, to put the record straight in the minds particularly of younger readers. [...] It was impossible to do this in my usual narrative style and I therefore invented the fiction of a heroine through whom I could examine Bond from the other end of the gun barrel so to speak. [...] The experiment has obviously gone very much awry"[1].

Not satisfied with the reception of this novel, Fleming requested that there be no reprints or paperback edition of the book[2]. Likewise, Fleming forbids any film adaptation of the novel, as Cubby Broccoli explains:

> - Cubby Broccoli[3] : When we negotiated to buy the Fleming properties, we obtained the right to create new [original] Bond stories, in addition to filming those written by the author. But Ian had stipulated that we could not use the title or the story of The Spy Who Loved Me because it was so different from his other Bond books.

And even if Fleming had given them the rights, there was not much to take from this insurance fraud story which doesn't fit into the larger than life side of the Bond movies.

However "the title always intrigued me, The Spy Who Loved Me. That's a really good Fleming's title", thinks Broccoli[4], who wants to make it the title of his tenth James Bond movie. In view of Fleming's ban, the first step for production is to clarify and negotiate things with Glidrose Publications (the literary rights holders of Bond, nowadays renamed as Ian Fleming Publications).

Michael G. Wilson[5] takes charge of talks with Glidrose[6].

At time of The Spy Who Loved Me, Wilson has worked for EON's legal department for several years, notably helping with tax issues and clarifying matters at the level of Danjaq and the partnership between the two producers; the relationship between Cubby and Harry continuing to deteriorate. Michael Wilson's role will grow more and more with this film, in which he will be credited as "special assistant to the producer". At the end of negotiations with Glidrose, EON was able to produce a film with an original story which would be titled The Spy Who Loved Me[7].

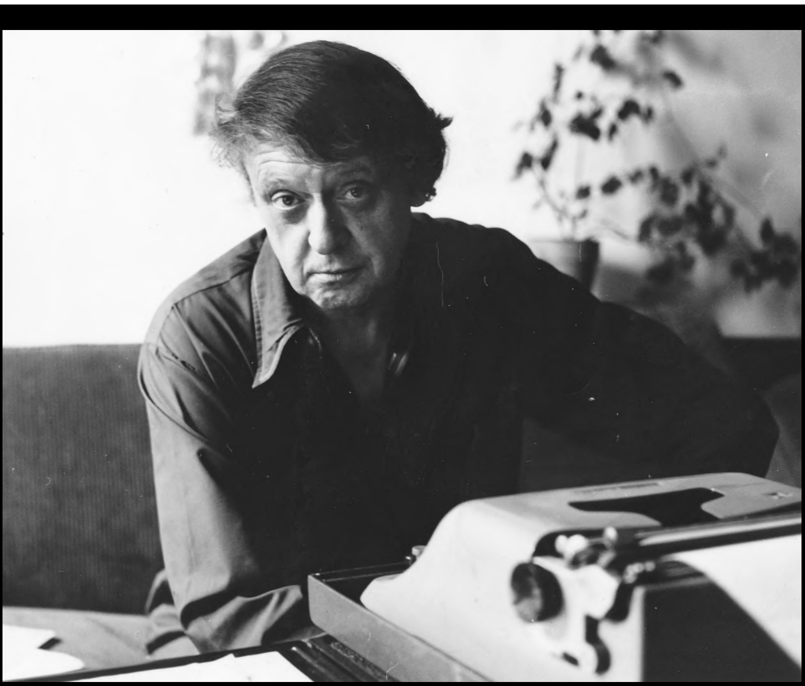
Promotional photo of Michael Wilson on Moonraker.

Michael Gregg Wilson, born in 1943 in New York, is the stepson of Cubby Broccoli (a child Dana Broccoli had from a previous marriage with Lewis Wilson). During his youth, Wilson spent two years at a military school, then studied at Harvey Mudd University in California, graduating with a degree in engineering. He traveled to the U.S. with Cubby to work on Goldfinger. After that, he decided to study law at Stanford, then worked in a firm specializing in international law in Washington D.C. He then joined EON in 1972. His hobbies include photography and collecting rare books and photos.

The spy who was written by Burgess



John Anthony Burgess Wilson[8] was born in England in 1917. He had initially hoped to study music at Victoria University in Manchester, but his application was refused due to poor grades in physics. Instead he studied English language and literature there, between 1937 and 1940, obtaining a diploma Bachelor of Arts.

Come World War II, during which Burgess served in the medical corps because, as he said, "I was more interested in curing than killing". It was also during this period that he married in 1942.

Burgess left the army in 1946 with the rank of sergeant major. He became a lecturer in drama, taught extracurricularly at the University of Birmingham (1946-50), worked for the Department of Education (1948-50) and was an English master at Banbury Grammar School (1950–54). He joined the British Colonial Service and became a professor and education specialist in Malaysia and Brunei (1954-1959), where he wrote three novels with a Malay setting, including his first: Time for a Tiger (1956).

Burgess collapsed in a classroom and was diagnosed with an inoperable brain tumor. He returned to England where he underwent brain tests: no illness was ultimately found. He decides to become a full-time professional writer. Under the name Anthony Burgess, he wrote the novels The Wanting Seed (1962), an anti-utopian vision of an overpopulated world, and Honey for the Bears (1963). Under the pseudonym Joseph Kell, he wrote One Hand Clapping (1961) and *Inside Mr. Enderby (*1963).

With A Clockwork Orange (1962) Burgess has a reputation as a novelist of comic and biting power. The novel is written in adolescent slang of the author's own invention, combining elements of British and American slang, Russian and other sources. It examines society's failed attempt to psychologically "rehabilitate" an incurably violent juvenile delinquent. The novel was adapted by Stanley Kubrick in 1971 into a controversial film, which helped Burgess gain popularity. In 1966 he published Tremor of Intent in which an MI6 agent must bring back from the USSR a former friend of his who has defected.

His wife died in 1968 and he remarried six months later. Wishing to escape abusive taxation, Burgess left England for Italy, the United States and Monaco.

Burgess continued to write novels until the 1990s; in all he will have written around thirty. In addition to novels and short stories, he was known for his essays and works of literary criticism, including Joyce: Here Comes Everybody (1965). He also wrote poetry, screenplays for cinema and television, such as Jesus of Nazareth (1977).

Anthony has made adaptations for the stage and written biographies of William Shakespeare, D.H. Lawrence and Ernest Hemingway. He is also the author of a two-volume autobiography: Little Wilson and Big God (1987) and You've Had Your Time (1990).

Burgess also composed over 250 musical works; he said "I wish people would think of me as a musician who writes novels, instead of as a novelist who writes music on the side".

Anthony Burgess died in 1993 from lung cancer.

Anthony Burgess, novelist, critic, translator, composer and big fan of Ian Fleming, was approached to write the screenplay for The Spy Who Loved Me, as he recounts in the second volume of his autobiography:

He explains that he met Albert Broccoli and Guy Hamilton (who was originally set to direct the film) outside a New York hotel. They handed him a sheaf of papers and a portable typewriter[9]. The two men then told him that they want him to write a script for the next James Bond, entitled The Spy Who Loved Me. They add that the script had to be a completely original story and in no way be inspired by the Fleming's novel[10]. Burgess agrees, although he have a feeling from the start that it won't work[11].

After writing a treatment (which I don't have), Burgess completed a 44-page (which is not much) "First Draft" script at an unknown date.

The script opens with a meeting room, described as having "the qualities of a ballroom and a baronial hall". The members take drinks from a tray, one of them, Schnitzler, removes a glass of milk before welcoming the others (in several languages) to this "eighth annual plenary conference of Chaos". Schnitzler begins by lamenting: this inflation means they can no longer ask as much for ransoms, before dropping dead: there was poison in his milk.

Another member, Feratu, takes his place, saying he doesn't share his defeatism. A few seconds later the door opens and a certain Theodorescu enters, pushed in a wheelchair by his daughter Elaine and accompanied by a doctor (a Scotsman named Fleming... A reference to Ian Fleming?). It's a shock for Feratu: he thought Theodorescu was dead. Feratu draws a gun but Elaine is faster and he takes a bullet.

Feratu dead, Theodorescu addresses the other members: he is back and business (extortion, brothel chains, gambling) is going well. "But, gentlemen, what is money?" he asks as his daughter takes out a large bag containing five million dollars in bills before burning them in a fireplace. Theodorescu then reminds everyone what CHAOS means: Consortium for the Haste of Annihilation of the Organization of Organized Society. "Mankind must be brought to its knees to lick the feet of its masters".

On the London side, government officials listen to a voice on the telephone. It's a ransom demand: the crown jewels or a British Airways airliner will be destroyed. This flight will notably transport the Archbishop of Canterbury. Scotland Yard goes to the telephone box from where the call was made but it explodes (once a man from the Yard enters it). Arriving on D-day of the ultimatum, airport security carries out an inspection but finds no trace of explosive: it is concluded that it was some kind of hoax, and the archbishop and the other passengers are allowed to board. Burgess breaks the fourth wall when the Archbishop puts on his earphones to watch the in-flight movie which happens to be... our The Spy Who Loved Me! The plane takes off and explodes shortly after.

Then there is the opening credits sequence. Burgess gives a description here, strangely not of the images but of the song!

> (For suggested song see "treatment" already submitted. This should be sung by a genuine operatic soprano).

(The book The James Bond Archives specifies that the lyrics of this song contained: "The spy who loved me, ceased to be a spy, he shut his spying eye, to all but me").

The credits cut to a warehouse in Singapore where James Bond is fighting four members of the Tong as part of an anti-opium mission. There is a shootout and at one point 007 hides behind a crate and takes out the components of a bow and arrow from his pocket which he assembles before using it to get rid of the last enemy. But no luck: on leaving the warehouse, Bond slips on a puddle and twists his leg!

Bond goes to a clinic where a doctor treats him via acupuncture (the implantation of fine needles into various points on the body). A "Chinese" (or rather Malaysian) police officer, Chang, joins him while he is being processed and shows him a newspaper which mention the plane's explosion. They turn on the TV and apparently see (but not us) Henry Kissinger: we don't really know what they see but they say they find it "obscene".

Henry Kissinger, at the time Secretary of State (of the United States) and National Security Advisor of the same country.

> - Chang: An aircraft blown to pieces. A statesman made into a laughingstock. This is the beginning of something very new. Threats of destruction, and not for money. [...] Nobody could ever sell them [the crown jewels].

Chang explains that the Malaysian Prime Minister is the next target: he must leave his post to someone else chosen by CHAOS or his family will be murdered. Chang gives Bond an object from which M's voice comes out: we can't really hear what they say but Bond has obviously received a new mission. The acupuncture doctor gives his needles to 007: "a little souvenir [...] you never know when they may come in useful".

Bond gets in a taxi to go to the airport and sees a building explode on the way:

> - Bond: Who lives there?
> - Driver: Prime Minister's first mistress.
> - Bond: So he decided not to resign.

007 boards a plane; during the flight he sees through the window another airliner explode in the sky!

Bond also notices two men on his flight (Tagliaferro and Bevilacqua) who seem to smile at each announcement of a new disaster.

007's plane lands in Rome where he will meet the British ambassador Sir Geoffrey and a cardinal named Carruthers. They received a threat: if the Pope himself doesn't destroy the frescoes of the Sistine Chapel, the ambassador's daughter will die. The ambassador wants to save his daughter: "It's only a work of art", while Cardinal has a different opinion: no one will be able to reproduce the glory of the frescoes painted by Michelangelo while Sir Geoffrey can still make another daughter to replace her!

007 inquire after the police to find out which hotel Tagliaferro and Bevilacqua are staying at. He goes there and in the elevator comes across a pretty girl: an opera singer named Jean Northumberland. Judging from their reactions, they recognize each other; they already had an affair together in the past:

- Jean: Still spying?
- Bond: Still singing?
- Jean: Yes. Rome Opera House. Salome.

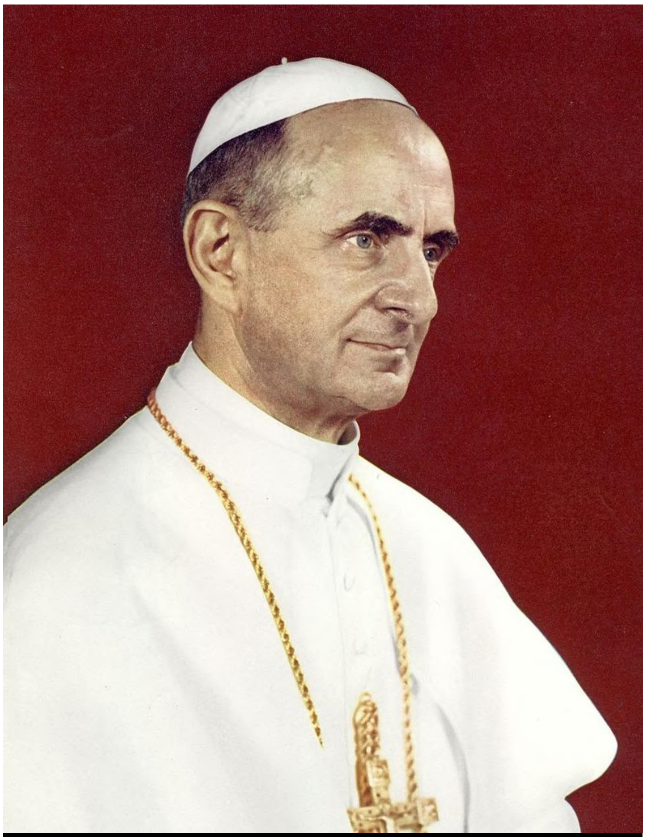
She wastes no time to throw him in her arm and being kissed. Bond doesn't really have time for that: he's there to search Tagliaferro's room. After picking the lock with the acupuncture needles, Jean goes in with him and they search the place. However, Tagliaferro arrives in his room, a pistol in his hand. Jean uses her voice to produce a note that explodes the chandelier above him!

Bevilacqua joins them and holds Bond and Jean at gunpoint before shooting Tagliaferro, saying he was too used to attracting attention. He knows who Bond and Jean are:

- Bevilacqua: A wonderful voice. I well remember your Traviata at the Scala, Milan. Pity we shan't hear it again, except on record.

Before he shoots, Jean produces a new note which breaks the light bulb and plunges the room into darkness. Precisely what happens then is not said, but Bond and the girl end up leaving the hotel through the front. 007 rejoins the police to say that he didn't track the blackmailer in time. There is then a scene where before Bond's eyes: "His Holiness, with black spray-paint, is inaugurating, while prayers are chanted, the disfigurement of the chapel ceiling"!



Paul VI, the pope when the script was written.

The Sistine Chapel, which the Pope must outrageously repaint in Burgess's script.

We find Bond at MI6 HQ in London where he is performing acupuncture on Moneypenny:

> - Bond: Undo your blouse, Miss Moneypenny.
> - Moneypenny: Oh James, at last.
> - M: This is no time for fornication. Come in, 007.

M is with Q and the Chief of Staff, who offer him a gift for ridding Singapore of the Red Monkey Tong: a cigarette case. Suddenly Burgess drops a bomb like this:

> - Bond: I smoke cigars now, gentlemen. You're confusing me with my predecessor who carried the same number.

!!!! M informs 007 that CHAOS threatens a new head of state: the Queen of England. She must abdicate in favor of someone from the Stuart dynasty or she will be assassinated with others at a gala (following a conference between Commonwealth leaders) to be held at the Sydney Opera House. It turns out that the Queen has the greatest confidence in her secret services and thus doesn't want to cancel her presence.

Bond and the Chief of Staff reflect: they notice that the Archbishop of Canterbury and the daughter of the ambassador Geoffrey had both recently been hospitalized in a clinic in "Dreiburg" (Freiburg?).

Meanwhile Bevilacqua go report to Theodorescu his meeting with Bond in Rome. "And now this Bond knows you. It's not good to be known to British agents. Elaine, do your work". She draws and kills Bevilacqua. "Assuming that British intelligence is, in fact, intelligent", Bond will probably go to Dreiburg, says Theodorescu.

> - Elaine: I can guess at his type. Ruthless. Probably ruthless with women. Detestable. May I make it a slow death?
> - Theodorescu: As slow as you wish, my love. Within reason, that is. Will three days be enough?
> - Elaine: Make it four.

007 land in Dreiburg which is in the middle of the Oktoberfest. He goes to his hotel; the receptionist turns out to be Elaine. From his room he observes the clinic with binoculars when suddenly an iron shutter falls on his bedroom window.

> - Elaine's voice: Dinner is served, Mr. Bond. There is no need to bring your gun.

A shot from a painting on the wall hits Bond's gun and knocks it from his hands. 007 follows the corridors until he comes across Elaine in a beautiful outfit and a sumptuous dining room with lot of good food. Suddenly she pushes and locks 007 into a sort of cell where there is only bread and water.

> - Elaine: You're going to suffer, Mr Bond, really suffer. You can sit here and meditate on what the suffering may be. Think of the word "hell", that will do for a beginning.

Bond asks her why and thinks that Elaine hates men because of the red mark/spot she have on the left of her face, which must be a reason why men reject her (despite Burgess describing her as "beautiful" and "a superbly made woman", apart from this physical particularity). "And I have to suffer because a man was cruel to you?"; he tells her that he finds her stain has the effect of enhancing her beauty rather than diminishing it.

She leaves him alone. Bond then looks for a way to escape his cell by dislodging the bricks then crawls into a passage. Elaine appears near him: he is in front of a kind of oven and she tells him that he must hold two handles of the ceiling if he wants to leave the oven door closed and not burn.

> - Elaine: I said something about hell, didn't I, Mr. Bond? [...]. So. You find me attractive, Mr. Bond.
> - Bond: I would. In other circumstances.
> - Elaine: He found me attractive too. And then he went. I got him. Father got him. But there's a whole race of men like him; they have to go. They have to suffer what I've suffered.

She leaves Bond alone again, who then extricates himself from the trap by using the straps of his clothes to hold the handles in place. He explores the hotel and sees Elaine in the dining room with two men (Hermann and Schlitz) dressed in a "Nazi-type uniform, a broken world and the legend CHAOS on their armbands". Bond fights them hand-to-hand and calmly sits down at Elaine's table.

She reveals to him that the man who broke her heart was none other than Tony Graham, aka 005. Elaine tries to run away but Bond catches her: "the tussle on the floor turns to a bout of erotic hate. Bond holds firm, kisses, caresses. She scratches. She will not yield".

007 ends up tying her to a chair and tells her that he is no longer a spy by presenting her with a letter which saying he is no longer part of the secret service and that he is there to treat at the clinic an illness he contracted. Bond decides to untie her and kiss her: at the very beginning she struggles but they end up in bed together. Bond then suggests that they go to the Oktoberfest festivities where, in a montage, they dance, sing, drink, ride the carousel, kiss, etc...

The next morning she suggests to Bond that she take her to see her father: "You have to ask father something. He's rather old-fashioned, darling. I am too". "Yes of course; ask father", replies Bond...

Hermann and Schlitz take them by plane then by helicopter to an oil tanker at sea. Elaine invites him to take a chute:

> Bond, like Alice, slides down a long chute decorated with signs of the zodiac. He ends up at a huge bearded face whose mouth opens. He falls inside and finds him staggering on a flat surface. Archangels face him with drawn swords. Artificial fire surrounds him. He sees the Devil and devils. He falls into deep water with weird beasts in it, swims through to the shore. He stands dripping. A door opens and he is beckoned in by the most most gorgeous houris. They strip him, blow hot air on to him, then a great gust of talcum. Despite their apparent lack of knowledge of his measurements, they dress him in a perfectly fitting evening suit with silk shirt.

Eventually 007 meets Theodorescu in a dining room. While they dine an rijsttafel followed by a bouillabaisse and other dishes in astronomical quantities:

> - Theodorescu: Marriage, James [...]. I do not wish money, only power. The ultimate power, of course. [...] I rule the whole civilised world, though not, of course, directly. Puppets, James, puppets on the thrones and in the presidential seats of the world. My puppets. [...] I have hopes that my dear girl will recover from this terrible blight that mars her beauty. It is, I think, and my clinical colleagues agree with me, psychosomatic. Thwarted love caused it. Fulfilled love will remove it. [...] If you leave her, you will die and cause others to die. Tomorrow, God help you, you must abstain from food and drink. A surgical operation awaits you. Don't fear it. It will transform you into a potential guided missile. Harmless when unactivated. But the activator's finger will always be ready to press the button. [...] Power, James, the pleasure of power. There is nothing like it. The joys of the table are considerable, but nothing to the ecstasy of total control of human lives.

After dinner, Bond joins Elaine in a cabin of the tanker but feels unwell because of something he ate.

Meanwhile Theodorescu has a meeting with his daughter, Fleming and a certain Baum. Fleming is against the idea of having Bond around and urges Theodorescu to kill him. The latter reminds him that he is the boss: Bond will be added to his "arsenal" of human bombs.

Bond is brought to a surgical operating room, but not completely unconscious, he manages before the operation to grab a scalpel and attack Fleming and Baum. He beckons Elaine to come with him but her father holds her back. Bond, as "naked as the day he was born", then wanders around the tanker until he reaches the helicopter and flees with it. As he fly away, he tells Elaine on the radio that he really loves her and will come back for her.

Bond sees land and lands the helicopter near a man (Bluey) who is teaching a kangaroo to box. Bluey lends clothes to what he calls a "nudist" and drives him to Sydney in a sort of Land Rover. During the journey Bond learns that the singer who will perform in front of the Queen at the opera will be none other than Jean Northumberland and that she recently visited a clinic according to the press.

007 then goes to Jean's hotel and goes to meet her:

> - Bond: Quick, Jean, take your clothes off.
> - Jean: Really... Such impetuosity. You used to have more finesse.

007 doesn't really explain the situation to her, he tells her that he has to operate her now. And it's exactly what he does: with the acupuncture needles and a knife! Bond removes the "nuclear minibomb" from her body as Fleming and Elaine arrive at the hotel. On hidden cameras they now see Bond and Jean apparently making love; Elaine is furious to the point that she tries to activate the bomb that was in Jean, but realizes that it has been neutralized by 007.

Elaine then storms furiously into the room, a gun in her hand. 007 tells her that it's not what she thinks: he explains that he operated Jean and that he couldn't do it without removing her clothes. Elaine leaves and he catches her:

> - Bond: When I said I loved you, I meant it. I still mean it. What I don't love is your father's programme of world domination.

Elaine heads to the roof with the apparent intention of jumping off to kill herself. However, when he approaches her to stop her, she takes the mini-bomb from him and asks Fleming by walkie-talkie to activate it: she wants them to die together.

She and Bond fight together for the mini-bomb and 007 manages to send it into the air where it explodes without causing any casualties. 007 tells her again that he wants her to live, by his side, when two men from CHAOS arrive on the roof and capture him.

We now find Bond tied to a chair in front of a television set. Dr. Fleming tells him he has a backup plan for the Queen's assassination and that CHAOS's human "arsenal" includes "Frank Sinatra, Mrs. Onassis, the Duke of Edinburgh"! The doctor's motivations seem to be more religious: like the world needs to be cleansed of sin (he also mentioned the Bible earlier).

Once left alone, Bond tries to free himself while on the television in front of him, Jean sings to the leaders of the Commonwealth. He ends up breaking the television and uses the broken glass to free himself from his bonds.

Sydney Opera House.

Meanwhile Fleming, Theodorescu and Elaine are in a TV van near the opera house. Theodorescu would like to know who the emergency human bomb is: "you", Fleming replies.

> - Fleming: Yes. You were trusting. You allowed me to perform that gall-bladder operation on you. [...] Soon you will blow this van to atoms and, along with it, everything living within a radius of half a mile. [...] We can't have men like you running the world, Theodorescu. You're gross, over-indulged, sensual, corrupt. But at least you have this opportunity of redemption. You will be the instrument that opens the way to my rule.

Elaine objects: "James was right [...] I'll die with him. Father, I'm staying". "No, Elaine. Live", Theodorescu responds, and she reluctantly leaves with Fleming.

Bond crosses paths with armed men: there is a brief fight in the hotel kitchen and Bond reaches the street. He sees Elaine being pushed into a van and grabs "somebody's motorcycle" to chase the van. 007 arrives at the driver's level and grabs the steering wheel of the van through the window: the van swerves and flips over. Meanwhile, Theodorescu has managed to move in his wheelchair (which turns into a "hovercraft") and is heading now towards Sydney Harbor at full speed.

Bond and Fleming fight over the detonator near the crashed van. Fleming manages to obtain it and activate it: Theodorescu explodes in the port (and not near the opera). The police join them.

Later Elaine wakes up in a motel alongside Bond. Looking in the mirror she sees something incredible: her deformity has disappeared. Love healed her. No time for celebration however: Fleming enters their room, gun in hand.

> - Fleming: I see a change in Elaine. [...] When you leave her, as you will, it will all come back again. But I'm being stupid, Mr Bond. You're both going to die. [...] Then [CHAOS] meets, under my chairmanship, to implement a new programme and, indeed, to take on a new name. [...] New Association of Saints, The Inauguration of an Era of Sexlessness and Sinlessness
> - Bond: N.A.S.T.I.N.E.S.S. [Nastiness] [...] A dull world by the sound of it. No love, no drink, no pleasure. Not what I'd call the Bond world.

Suddenly Jean and the boxing kangaroo come crashing through the window and Fleming gets punched in the face before the scene ends! We cut to another scene in an opera, where Bond and Elaine are watching/listening to Jean. Then we find the three of them at the Dreiburg's Oktoberfest. We notice that Elaine really appreciates the presence of Jean Northumberland...

They are notably in town to arrest the remaining members of CHAOS; Elaine having arranged a meeting with them at the clinic. In front of the building, Jean produces a high note in a megaphone which activates the detonators of the human bombs of the members of CHAOS: the clinic explodes.

Elaine tells 007 that she loves him, "in a way". "You have your job. You don't want to be encumbered by a woman", she tell him. And as Bond flies back to London, alone, a song written by Burgess is supposed to be heard:

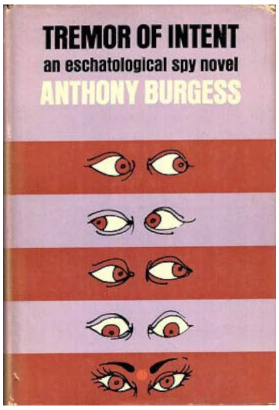
> In he flew,
> Off he has flown,
> The spy who loved me,
> Me, me alone.

And actually we see that Bond was dumped by Elaine for Jean! The two girls hand in hand returning "lovingly [...] into the hotel together. THE END".

The summary of the plot that Burgess himself will give in his autobiography You've Had Your Time is somewhat different from the script we just saw (confused memories? Based on other versions of the script/treatment?).

He writes that he started things off with a pre-title sequence in Singapore: Bond fights a gang of gong-playing Chinese musicians and drowns one of the thugs in a vat of shark fin soup. He seasons everything with soy sauce (while the guy sinks into the tank) when he suddenly gets hit by a bullet. Left for dead, 007 comes to his senses and finds a Chinese surgeon who is willing to extract the bullet that has lodged in his shoulder, using acupuncture as an anesthesia technique. So Bond learns about acupuncture and the surgeon gives him two needles (one for yin, the other for yang), as a parting gift. 007 drives to the airport where he sees a Boeing 747 explode as it takes off.

Then there is the global meeting of CHAOS, Burgess describes Theodorescu as "an Orson Welles monster" (based on one of his own other characters: Theodorescu from the novel Tremor of Intent, which notably has the same gluttonous side). The consortium has already made enough money and now must learn what the pleasure of power is. The great figures of this world (kings, presidents, the Pope) must perform absurd or obscene acts in public if they don't want CHAOS to destroy a school, a sanatorium or even an orphanage. The explosion of the Boeing 747 in Singapore is the price the Pope had to pay for refusing to personally whitewash the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel.



Orson Welles as Le Chiffre in the 1967 version of Casino Royale. Welles will also be considered for a role in various treatments of the The Spy Who Loved Me, as we shall see.

Theodorescu's daughter is in love with 008 and wants revenge on the world because she thinks he dumped her (she is unaware that this 00 agent was in fact killed by SMERSH). Her grief always manifests itself in a hideous rash that she hides with her raven hair.

By infiltrating the clinic, Bond realizes that it is 008's former mistress who runs it. She designs delicious tortures for him, but he manages to escape unscathed. Moreover, he convinces her that 008 has not abandoned her, and she sees something in Bond; inevitably I want to say, because 007 turns out here to be in fact 008's twin brother! Anyway, the two make love and the hideous rash miraculously disappears from her face, "as in [Graham] Greene's The End of the Affair".

Bond learns from her that her father is planning to blow up the Sydney Opera House during a gala where all the leaders of the Commonwealth will be present. Here Burgess says that the explosion can be avoided if the President of the United States decides to perform obscene acts in front of international television.

In Sydney, Bond performs an emergency operation on the opera singer he is in love with, using his acupuncture needles to anesthetize her.

Anthony Burgess also spoke on the subject in the April 1987 issue of the magazine Life. Here too what he says is a little different.

This time he says that the leader's daughter didn't have an affair with 005 or 008, but with 009. The Pope's punishment would have been the explosion of a convent and not a plane or the death of the daughter of an ambassador. Also the Sydney Opera House would be destroyed if the Queen and Commonwealth leaders did not roam, completely naked, in front of the world's cameras.

- Anthony Burguess[12] : My plot called on unbelievable technology. It asked for more nudity and frank sex than the Bond films [...] could conceivably carry. As I foresaw, the script was rejected, though my oil tanker that served as a camouflaged floating palace for the chief villain was retained. When it was released in 1977, The Spy Who Loved Me turned out to be a kind of synoptic gospel, in which the contributions of numerous writers had been blindly pulled out of a hat and given to an electric mixer.

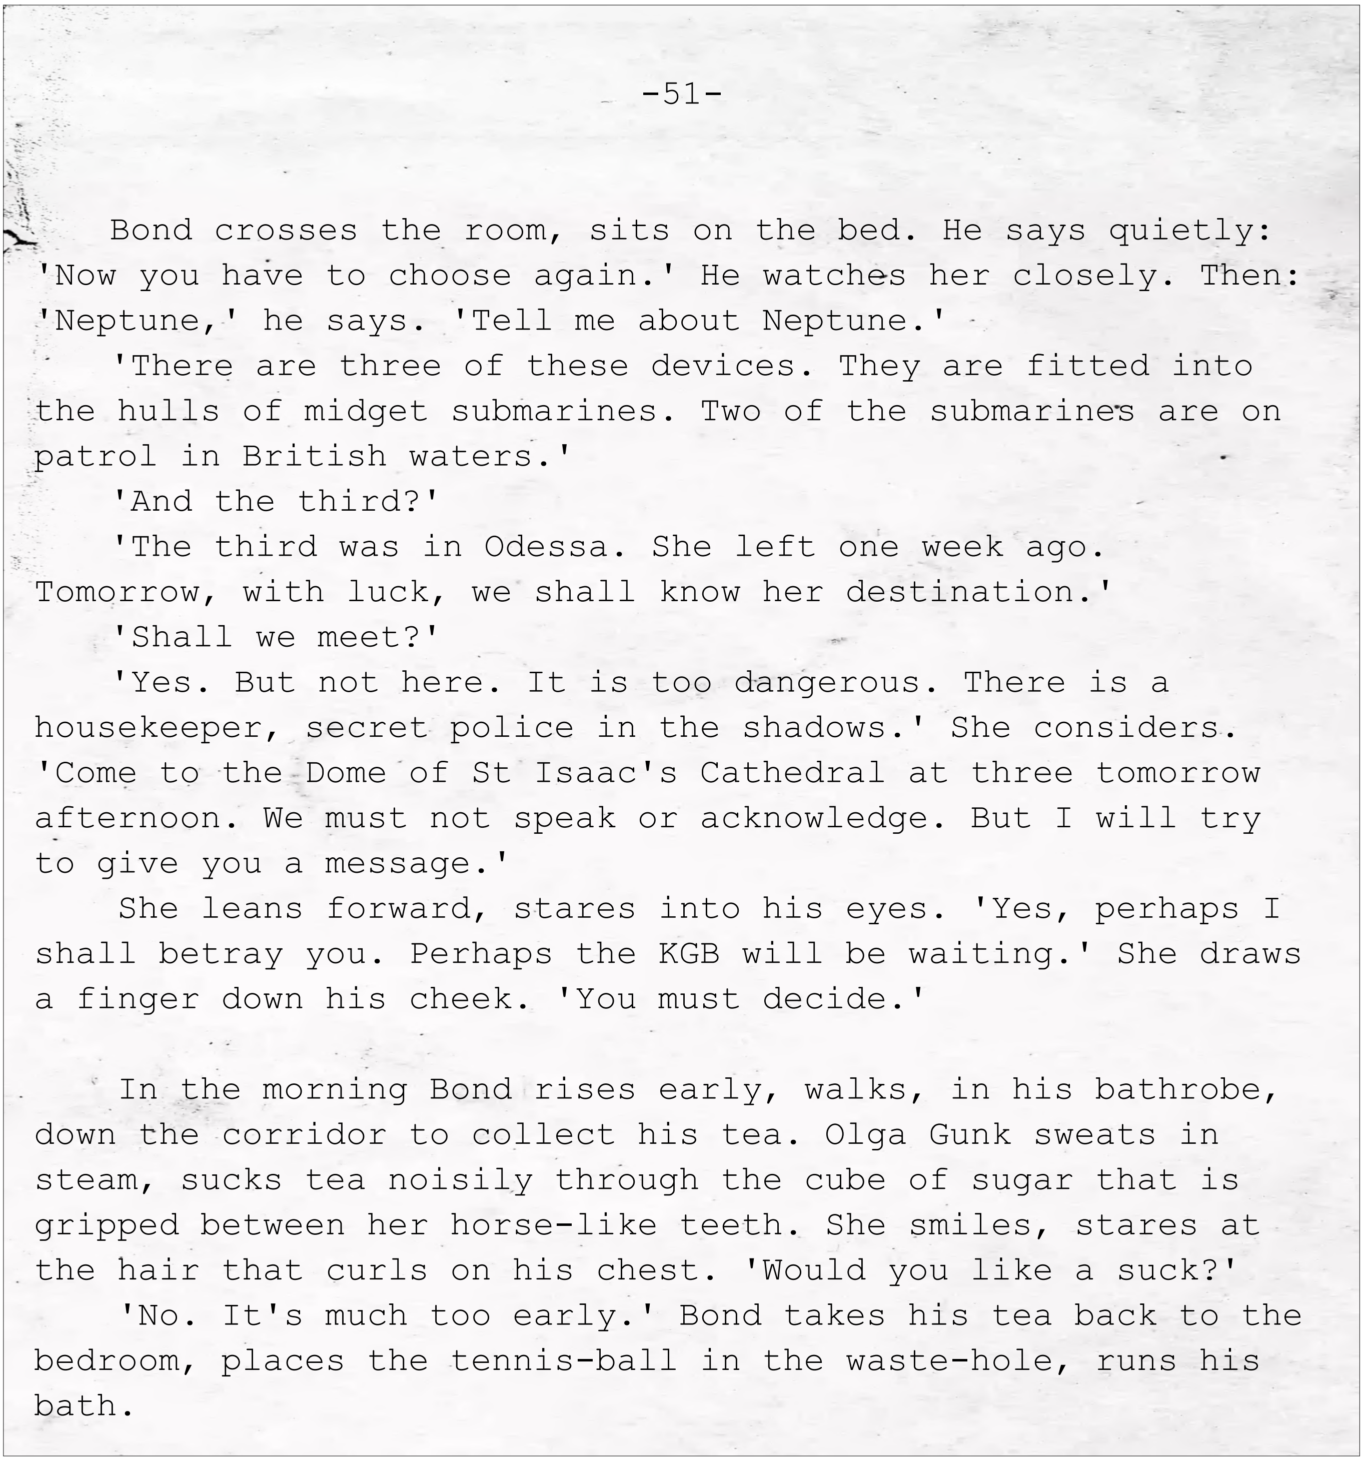
The spy who saw a lot of screenwriters

Derek William Mario Marlowe (1938-1996), English playwright, novelist, screenwriter and painter. Among his credits as a screenwriter: A Dandy in Aspic (1968), *Universal Soldie*r (1971) and episodes of the Sherlock Holmes series from 1984 and Jack the Ripper from 1988.

Broccoli and Saltzman asked several other writers to write a screenplay for The Spy Who Loved Me. Among them we count Derek Marlowe[13], Anthony Barwick[14] and Ronald Hardy. Unfortunately I don't have any copies of their treatments/scripts.

I don't know what Marlowe wrote, but when Ronald Hardy was commissioned to write the script, Hardy invented a story involving twin henchmen for the main villain[15] and a Soviet threat of unprecedented danger. According to the description of a 126-page treatment that was put up for auction[16], the threat in question took the form of a device called Neptune installed on three small submarines and linked to a reconnaissance satellite which could then detect and lock on all enemy nuclear submarines at any distance. M sent 007 and two other 00 agents; 006 and 008 (the latter seeing himself as a rival to Bond) to find and neutralize Neptune in the USSR without being spotted[17].

The West had been warned of the existence of Neptune by a Russian double agent, the beautiful ballerina Helen Andreyevna who danced for the Kirov Ballet in Leningrad. Helen and Bond's stories intertwine with dramatic sequences involving skis and sleds in Kitzbühel, troikas in Leningrad, chases and amusing interludes with Olga Gunk, a KGB discus thrower. Moments of infiltration on the island of Kotlin in the Gulf of Finland, and numerous fights, notably one in an airship over the sea with the main enemy of the KGB, Colonel Sukov, during which the microfilm of plans of Neptune obtained by the two spy lovers (and hidden by Helen in a famous Fabergé egg made for the Tsar) falls into the water. The finale was to be a wild fight in a sauna at the Finlandia-Royal Hotel in Helsinki, when 008, who was sent by M to kill 007's lover Helen, also tries to kill Bond, telling him: "You said I had to kill you first". 007 wins over 008; the mission is complete. The story concludes with Bond and Helen parting: "I love you my James... But I have to dance… So we must go our separate paths... One night I'll look up from the stage and you'll be there. You can throw me a rose. A red rose". She leaves alone on a ferry from Stockholm[18].



-51-

Bond crosses the room, sits on the bed. He says quietly: 'Now you have to choose again.' He watches her closely. Then: 'Neptune,' he says. 'Tell me about Neptune.'

'There are three of these devices. They are fitted into the hulls of midget submarines. Two of the submarines are on patrol in British waters.'

'And the third?'

'The third was in Odessa. She left one week ago. Tomorrow, with luck, we shall know her destination.'

'Shall we meet?'

'Yes. But not here. It is too dangerous. There is a housekeeper, secret police in the shadows.' She considers. 'Come to the Dome of St Isaac's Cathedral at three tomorrow afternoon. We must not speak or acknowledge. But I will try to give you a message.'

She leans forward, stares into his eyes. 'Yes, perhaps I shall betray you. Perhaps the KGB will be waiting.' She draws a finger down his cheek. 'You must decide.'

In the morning Bond rises early, walks, in his bathrobe, down the corridor to collect his tea. Olga Gunk sweats in steam, sucks tea noisily through the cube of sugar that is gripped between her horse-like teeth. She smiles, stares at the hair that curls on his chest. 'Would you like a suck?'

'No. It's much too early.' Bond takes his tea back to the bedroom, places the tennis-ball in the waste-hole, runs his bath.

Anthony Barwick also has the idea of the tracking system in his writings[19]. His numbers-obsessed villain, Zodiac, wants to destroy nuclear submarines with long-range torpedoes, unless the Western countries he wants to blackmail give him their most valuable works of art[20]. And what's better than a pair of twin henchmen? Triplet henchmen: Tic, Tac, and Toe, who being albinos from a KGB circus troupe, eliminated their enemies using human pyramids (or sometimes a lion)[21].

Anthony Clive "Tony" Barwick (1934-1993), British television screenwriter who mainly worked on series created and produced by Gerry Anderson. He notably worked on the writing of episodes of Thunderbirds (1965-1966), Captain Scarlet and the Mysterons (1967-1968), The Secret Service (1969), UFO (1970-1971) or The Persuaders! serie (1971-1972) starring Roger Moore & Tony Curtis. He also collaborated with Anderson on a plot for Moonraker as we will have the opportunity to discuss.

The spy who hired John Landis

John Landis was approached by Cubby Broccoli, in 1975 if his memories are correct[22]. At the time, he was not yet as well-known as he would later become. In fact, the only film credit he had when he was contacted for Bond was his amateur movie Schlock :

John David Landis[23] is an American film director, actor, screenwriter and producer born in Chicago in 1950. His family moved to Los Angeles when he was four months old.

Landis began his career by taking on various positions in the film industry as a gofer, stuntman or assistant director.

At the age of 21, he wrote, directed and self-produced his first film, Schlock (1973), a parody of King Kong in which he also played the lead role. This homemade film allowed him to be approached to direct the comedy The Kentucky Fried Movie (1977) which led him to direct National Lampoon's Animal House (1978), a huge success at box-office.

In the early 1980s, he wrote and directed two cult films in quick succession: the musical action comedy The Blues Brothers (1980), based on characters from Saturday Night Live, and An American Werewolf in London (1981), a horror comedy he had been planning to make for over ten years.

But while filming a segment of his next film, Twilight Zone: The Movie (1983), a helicopter crash killed three people. Accused of involuntary manslaughter, he was the subject of a trial that ended in his acquittal years later.

Cult comedy Trading Places (1983) was filmed directly after the Twilight Zone accident and helped Landis' image and career to improve, along with his directing of Michael Jackson's famous Thriller music video.

The rest of his career, however, was a long decline at the box office (apart from the enormous success of Coming to America in 1988), which included Beverly Hills Cop 3 (1994) and Blues Brothers 2000 (1998). He gave up directing in 1998 before attempting a comeback in 2010 with Burke and Hare which ended in another failure. He has not directed another film since.

Landis however remained active on television as executive producer and director like on Masters of Horror or Psych, including in animation field like with Superhero Kindergarten (2021).

During his career, Landis also made several appearances as an actor, often in small roles, cameos (like in Spider-Man 2), or appearances in his own film.

- John Landis[24] : I met Cubby at his house in Beverly Hills right off Sunset Boulevard. [...] I really liked him and he was very warm and generous. We talked about James Bond and we talked about ideas, and I just made up a bunch of stuff in the room, and he said, "Okay, can you leave for London next week?". So, he flew me to London and they really rolled out the red carpet. It was cold in London, and I'm from Los Angeles, and when I get there Cubby says, "Where's your coat?". I said, "I'm a schmuck, I didn't bring one". The next > day he walks in and had bought me a coat, and they got me this gigantic apartment called Park Lane overlooking Hyde Park with two bedrooms, a living room, and a kitchen.

During the writing, the screenwriter shared an office in London for a time with Anthony Burgess who also worked on the film. "He kept going back to this idea of kidnapping the Pope, but Cubby wouldn't go for it: No, we're not kidnapping the Pope"[25].

Landis remembers once telling Broccoli that he was disappointed not to see the Queen while he was in England. Shortly after Broccoli brought him to the Queen[26]! One of the examples of the great generosity of Cubby Broccoli which was so recognized by the people who worked with him in front of and behind the camera...

John Landis notably wrote a pre-title sequence that begins with Bond rappelling down the side of a 110-storey building at night. 007 then uses his razor-sharp tie clip to cut through a window and enter the building to "do whatever he has to do."

Suddenly guards are approaching, it seems 007 has been spotted. He heads back to the window, only to find that the guards on the roof have cut the rope he used to get there. In a desperate move, Bond pulls the cord from a telephone, ties one end to a piece of furniture and the other around his ankles, and dives "headfirst" out the window!

He drops two floors before the telephone cord snaps taut, stopping his fall. He then uses his tie clip to cut a new hole.

> - Bond : As La Rochefoucauld once said: out of the frying pan, into the shit.

The MCA Tower of Universal City (California) is given as an example.

And on this new Nicklaus line to Cubby, we find Bond face-to-face with a woman on a bed while her boyfriend, the big boss of the enemies, is near (on the toilets). Bond get out of here by going back to the building's face where he use the back of his tie (which contain suction cups).

Now there are two guards rappelling down toward Bond on the exterior on the building, and another one coming from a windows washer platform. Our hero leaps onto one of the attackers, leading to a high-altitude wrestling action sequence on the dangling ropes, which include Bond strangling an opponent with it, using the tie clip as a shuriken, and an enemy falling "screaming to the pavement bellow".

The guard on the washer platform tries to aim at Bond with a rifle, but 007 dodge by going back and forth on the rope like a pendulum, and menage to reach the underside of the platform. Bond cleverly makes the man to falls to his death and then uses the platform to lower himself to the ground.

So now standing on the sidewalk littered with bodies, Bond casually hails a taxi. As he drives off, another guard exits the building through the front door and is welcomed by the explosion of the platform's overheated engine.

In another version of this pre-title sequence, 007 use heated glove to burn through a safe in the building to access documents. The glove was later used to burn the hand of one of the henchman while repelling down the side of the building.

Other pre-title ideas from Landis period includes the Macy's New York parade where a "Mickey Mouse" balloon is envisaged as a mean of escape.

This a well as a pre-title in South or Central America where Roger Moore would not appear as immaculate as usual[27]. Bond's first appearance was to show him in torn clothes and bleeding as he takes refuge in a cathedral/ church to escape the local army who is hunting him. To hide, Bond disguises himself in the church as Jesus and appears crucified on a big cross. Cubby didn't like the idea: "So James is on the cross. [...] Are you fucking crazy?"[28].

For the plot of the film, it was at one point noted: "Known political terrorists groups (I.R.A., Al Fatah, S.L.A.) are converging in Portugal. Why? Bond is sent to infiltrate and find out. [...] Elaborate guerrilla training center, all nationalities and extremist philosophies being manipulated by Spectre for its own ends?"

Another plot idea was to have Spectre put in a water supply of a nation, a substance that cause sterility for 5 years, in order to gain an advantage.

> - John Landis[29] : Guy Hamilton and I talked about having a Captain Nemo type character in an underwater city. We also talked about having a submarine. I'm not sure if that came from Guy Hamilton or someone else but we were developing all those ideas. [...] We did [also] have a Russian agent.

Landis also writes a scene in which Bond fights a machine that turns out to be a Q's training[30].

> - John Landis[31] : I wrote a lot of stuff, [but] never wrote a screenplay. We never worked out the whole story. Our villain was Blofeld, Rosa Klebb's son. We had an underwater base and underwater vehicles, as well as a supertanker that captured submarines and could sink to the bottom of the ocean at anytime.

Yet, I was able to read about twenty pages of a rough treatment which contained different ideas than the ones Landis mentioned in interviews.

In it, after a pre-title sequence and its title sequence, there is a meeting of SPECTRE in which a man named Orson (likely a reference to Orson Welles) asserts his authority. Then, in a concept similar to that of the finished film, we witness a supertanker swallowing a Russian destroyer.

At MI6 headquarters, Bond appears to be preparing for a vacation, asking Q to make him a pair of water skis.

007 then leaves London by train to spend his holiday in the south of France. During the rail journey, he makes eye contact with a beautiful woman. A man passes by, and Bond suddenly realizes his wallet is gone. He chases the man, and the pursuit ends with both of them falling from the train. The man is dead, but Bond discovers he didn't have the wallet.

After walking through the French countryside, 007 stops at an auberge (inn) where, as it happens, Orson is dining. They meet, and Orson offers him a ride. But they have an affable conversation and Orson finally decide give the following order to his henchmen: "kill him"

The "henchman attempts to do so in a spectacular manner, Bond triumph".

Anyway Bond menage to reach Villefranche-sur-Mer and is with a girl in bikinis when HQ contact him.

007 returns to London and meets M along with an admiral (not at M's office but at the Admiraly of a nautical museum). They inform him that a British nuclear submarine has been reported missing. Bond asks if there were any other vessels near its last known position. Yes: a supertanker.

After collecting some gadgets from Q, 007 travels to Canada, where the tanker is anchored. He meets the captain, who seems innocent enough. "Bond pets the ship's cat" and leave.

However, 007 soon has second thoughts and requests a Navy helicopter to return to the tanker, which has sailed away in the meantime. As they approach, they pick up an SOS signal from the ship. But when they arrive, all they find is burning oil on the surface of the water: it seems the tanker has sank, no survivor.

- John Landis[32] : I had actually gone with Guy Hamilton to the North Atlantic to tour a supertanker. [...] I had this idea where Commander Bond goes out to this suspicious supertanker in a military helicopter. They land on deck, and he's met by the captain, who gives them a tour of the ship and everything seems completely innocuous except Bond sees a cat at one point, Blofeld's cat. They get into the copter and they're going away. Just as the ship disappears past the horizon [...] they receive an SOS that's coming from the tanker. You hear all this yelling and garbled noise and then suddenly there's a massive explosion and a gigantic wall of fire and they can feel the shockwave on the helicopter. They turn around and go right back to the supertanker, but don't see it. The sea is on fire, because there's oil everywhere. And they just see the tail as the supertanker's submerged and bodies floating on the surface. Anyway, it turns out that the supertanker, which is the same one that swallows the submarine, can also go underwater like a submarine. They just murdered some of their own crew and are lurking down at the bottom of the ocean, and now the supertanker's not suspicious anymore because it's been lost at sea as witnessed by Bond.

Back at his hotel, Bond is surprised to see Moneypenny. She has come to deliver some information about the tanker, and mentions she has "family in Ottawa" (Lois Maxwell, the actress who played Moneypenny, was actually Canadian).

Bond and Moneypenny go out to dinner together but soon realize they are being followed. This leads to a car chase, during which a "huge three falls across the road and onto a car".

Apparently, a logging camp sequence was planned here, including a henchman named Jean-Pierre who throws an axe that lands just a few feet from 007's head and "Bond find himself tied by ropes to a log that is rapidly approaching a ferocious great chain saw" (and somewhere, the words "Perils of Pauline" are written on some other notes taken by Landis).

After escaping alive, Bond visits the offices of the tanker's owner: Orson. The villain greets him and even "shows him a magic trick or two", explaining, "illusions are a passion with me". Bond says that it's a pity there were no survivors, but Orson replies that there was one: the captain.

From here things gets sketchy, like if theses pages were revisions. Orson shows to Bond his prize horse and Bond takes this opportunity to leap on it and flee. Some henchmen chase him with a car but end up in a wall.

Bond goes to Sweden or Norway to meet the captain.

The documents I have don't explain things very clearly, but apparently Bond ends up sneaking around a place that includes a tennis court, a swimming pool, a movie theater, and more (maybe located on a ship?). There, he discovers both the Russian and British atomic bombs. Suddenly, the entire location begins to rise into the air. Bond realizes that he is actually on an enormous blimp.

Bond is spotted and captured. His captors apparently plan to throw him off the blimp, but Bond requests a cigarette and a vodka martini and somehow manages to grab a parachute which he don during his fall.

Later, Bond visits the tanker's insurance company and meets a woman named Tootsie. He asks her why Orson seems unconcerned about the loss of his ship. She replies that Orson made a fortune on a trip he took three weeks ago with the tanker.

At one point, Bond and Tootsie make love and Orson's henchmen pay them a visit the next day.

Bond, visibly captured, is brought to Orson (on the supertanker) who makes more magic tricks and tell him about his master plan. From what I understand, Orson needs to detonate atomic bombs to set in motion a "perpetual motion" machine. Again, as far as I gather, this machine is a kind of engine for a tanker: so his goal being to create a ship that would move endlessly without the need of fuel or electricity.

Bond echoes what the audience is probably thinking when he asks Orson why he wants this, especially at the cost of thousands of lives in a nuclear explosion.

To do "anything I want" is the only answer he/we receive!

Bond is ready to act but is prevented to by Tootsie who point a gun at him. Orson explain that she is in reality a brilliant nuclear technician.

Bond is brought to a cell but manages to escape, abducting Tootsie in the process. He makes his way to a U.S. or French base of operations and explains everything, but they don't believe him. As a result, he and Tootsie are detained the time they try to reach Felix Leiter to confirm his claims.

007 (handcuffed to Tootsie) escape to detention and steal a boat to sabotage Orson's detonation device located in a deep shaft (there is wires to sever). Tootsie doesn't want to help.

Meanwhile, the Americans or French had found reasons to believe Bond and dispatch boats and planes toward Orson's tanker. A fierce battle erupts at sea. Bond manages to prevent the detonation just as his allies succeed in overpowering the tanker.

Later, Bond and Tootsie are in a hotel room when the police arrive to take her away.

Now in a plane, Bond reads that Orson's funeral will soon take place, attended by world dignitaries.

The story ends with Bond visiting the cemetery, where he and other agents dig up Orson's coffin. They don't find Orson's body in it but a bobby-trap which spray bullets, killing one of the agent. Bond thrown a grenade at the bobby-trap in the coffin, and the END.

"Years later [Cubby] offered me the opportunity to direct a Bond movie, [Licence To Kill]", remember Landis[33]. "I went to [Cubby's] house and met with Tim Dalton [...]. But I thought the script was lousy. [...] The script was not interesting. It was just dumb. I didn't like it. And they were down the line. They had already cast Talisa Soto. It was only like 10 weeks away or 12 weeks away from production"[34].

The spy who also gave a try to Stirling Silliphant

One of the writer who worked on The Spy Who Loved Me was Stirling Silliphant.

Stirling Silliphant[35] was born Sterling Dale Silliphant in Detroit in 1918. His family moved to California, where he later graduated from Hoover High School and majored in journalism at the University of Southern California. By 1930 his parents had divorced, and at some point in the early 1930's, both father and son changed the spelling of their first names from "Sterling" to "Stirling".

Stirling started working at the Disney Studio in 1936. During the war, he served as a US Navy lieutenant, mainly as a public relations officer. Upon his discharge in 1946, he was publicity director for the 20th Century Fox. Near 1953, he became a screenwriter and independent producer. He produced The Joe Louis Story (1953), then adapted a Jack Finney's novel 5 Against the House (1955) for Columbia. He wrote stories for The Mickey Mouse Club (1955) and Perry Mason soon followed.

Silliphant is best known for his involvement in two TV series of the sixties: Route 66 and Naked City. He adapted eight episodes of Naked City into a tie-in paperbacks as well, which were published in 1959.

Outside television, Silliphant wrote around fifty films. He is best remembered for his screenplay for In the Heat of the Night, for which he won an Academy Award in 1967, and the disaster films The Poseidon Adventure (1972) and The Towering Inferno (1974), staring Steve McQueen and Paul Newman. Silliphant also notably wrote The Enforcer (1976, Dirty Harry 3) and the Sylvester Stallone arm-wrestling movie Over the Top (1987).

Silliphant was also producer or executive producer on about twenty TV shows and films, including Shaft (1971) and its sequel. He latter wrote the screenplay of the third installment: Shaft in Africa (1973).

Being a close friend of Bruce Lee, under whom he studied martial arts, he did some project with him like the movies Marlowe (1969) and Circle of Iron (1978).

Tired of Hollywood, in 1988 Silliphant sold his two homes in California, his six cars and yacht, and moved to Thailand. There he continued to write for TV movies and mini-series up to his death, which happened in 1996, in the form of a prostate cancer.

Stirling Silliphant have a least wrote two treatments for the film. The one we are gonna to talk about is 107 page long (!), but contain most of the dialogues within it. It is dated June 6, 1975, which was around one and half month before the arrival of Maibaum on the film. I imagine it's incorporate some elements from the previous writers as well, in any case there is in it elements of the Landis's treatment we saw.

This treatment opens at the John Hancock Center (nowadays 875 North Michigan Avenue) in Chicago where a masked party is in progress. We discover James Bond in knight's armor among the guests, a shaken martini in hand. He heads towards the roof and finds "a man" who relieves him of his armor and equips him with suction cups and a rappelling rope.

Bond begins to rappel down the building when we see two twins, described as "both trim and flat-bellied, with crew-cuts", knocking out Bond's accomplice from behind. They throw him from the roof and 007 sees the body past him during its fall. While the twins are cutting his rope, 007 grabs onto the face of the building with the suction cups.

Bond moves on the facade with his suction cups, under the fire from the twins' bullets. Arriving in the middle of the building, Bond takes out a tool and cuts out a window before entering the building through the hole he created. He goes to a safe, places explosives on it and prepares himself a vodka martini with bottles from a bar while the safe door explodes. He takes out his Walther with a silencer already fixed and takes down a few guards. He retrieves in the safe the object which has brought him all the way from London: a Submarine Warfare Insignia.

Unfriendly footsteps are heard and it's time to leave. As Bond returns to the facade of the building with his suction cups, he sees the twins arriving towards him aboard a windows washer platform. 007 uses more explosives to blow up the rails of the platform and "Bond watches one of [the twins] passing less than a foot from him, [and] starts to say something of a light nature to ease the man's descent". Other guards shoot toward him from the hole in the windows and break the one Bond is clinging on, "the men in the window look grimly satisfied as they watch Bond's plunging body, until with shock and amazement they see the back-pack open and a small, but immensely efficient parachute zip open".

As Bond is parachuting down safely, we go to the credit sequence.

After that there is a S.P.E.C.T.R.E. meeting in a room filled with "oil portraits of previous chairmen of SPECTRE's board: Dr. No... Ernst Stavro Blofeld...". The members are described as millionaires of diverse nationalities who are ex-mafia, ex-Gestapo, ex-Smersh, etc. A spokesman says that by the rules of the organization, a chairman is declared dead if he fail to appear in a board meeting after 24 consecutives month, and "last night at midnight marks the end of the second year Ernst Stavro Blofeld has failed to contact any member of this fraternity".

So with Blofeld declared dead, a new chairman must be elected. A Greek member called Dimitrious want to be the chairman but others members disagrees before discovering that Dimitrious posted armed men behind them.

Suddenly a man called Janos Paterno in wheelchair enter in the room, flanked by two giants twins "both Mongolian, bald except for the warrior's pigtail". Paterno is described as huge/mountainous and rich, being the owner of two dozen multinational corporations.

Paterno drop a handkerchief on the ground and the twenty's Dimitrious men all turn toward Dimitrious and shoot him. "Sorry to be late, gentlemen", says Paterno, before announcing that he is applying for the position of chairman, with a plan to bring in 3 trillion dollars in gold to S.P.E.C.T.R.E.

Staking his life on the fact that he is able to produce this sum in 3 months, he is elected new chairman by the other members.

After the meeting a procession of Rolls Royce, Mercedes bring the members of S.P.E.C.T.R.E. to their respective private jets at Marseille airport (France). Paterno join Niki Athanagouras, wife (now widow) of Dimitrious, in one of the plane. She kiss him.

A strategic bomber lands at an RAF airfield outside London. Bond gets off the plane: he is greeted by M and an Admiral. Together they climb into a large military helicopter in which Q is present. Bond gives them the golden Submarine Warfare Insignia that he recovered at Chicago. Q analysis it and an X-ray image shows electronic circuits inside: the Insignia is a transmitter. As you can imagine, its a problem if nuclear submarines's crews wear an Insigna that could give away the positions of theses submarines.

The helicopter arrive at the Clyde naval base in Scotland, where Bond, M, the Admiral and Q board a submarine. They analyses the crew's Insignias: it's positive, theses are rigged. They ask the route of the submarine and Bond takes out a map which he superimposes: they are identical.

Direction an Admiralty conference room in London. The highest ranking officers of NATO are present, as well as M and Bond. The investigation revealed the submarine crew brought the Insignas at a ship's store in Gibraltar. Americans say they also received by mail copies of the confidential route of six of their submarine too. The Soviet are of course their prime suspect. 007 receive the mission to go to Gibraltar to investigate.

Before leaving England, Bond go the Q's lab and "saunters in with his usual insouciance toward Q and his gadgets". Q has his head underwater, since 12 minutes say an assistant; Q has perfected an "oxygen pill" which allow the swallower to breath underwater for around 15 minutes. Q give some to 007, Bond takes them reluctantly when he heard that you can't drink alcohol for 8 hour before taking them.

> - Bond: I've never gone without a drink for eight consecutive hours in my life. And I never shall.

Q also gives to our agent "arm fins which contain a small motor unit and a propeller", shoes from which a grenade can be ejected, and a multi-purpose briefcase. "Oh no, not another briefcase!" exclaim Bond. "My finest product, Commander", replies Q, without explaining us what it does.

007 take a "ferry train". He open the briefcase in his compartment and remove from it a sort of camera that he place on the ceiling. Bond leave his compartment for diner and when he come back, before entering, he look at his briefcase which contain a screen on which he can see the playback images from the camera. On it he see that a beautiful blonde has entered in his compartment and see her starting to undress by his bed. Bond is interrupted by a group of Belgian salesmen in the corridor who think that Bond is watching some kind of porn. Anyway, Bond decide to enter his compartment, saying "I believe you're sleeping in my bed". The girl has an Italian accent and protest: it is her compartment, not his. She consider his musculature and ask him to undress:

> - The girl: One other condition. [...] I don't want to know your name or the name of your wife and children or anything about your work. That's all [depressing]. And if you at any time whisper to me [that] you love me, I'll ring for the porter.

Bond approaches her and suddenly remove the knot at the back of her hair: the hair falls, revealing a gun concealed among them. He grab it before she can and throw it out the partly opened windows before having sex with her...

Later we find the two them lying in the bed, a cigarette in their mouths. Suddenly the compartment door explode and four Belgian salesmen like enters, guns in hands: "Get dressed, Mister Bond". Bond will no go without a fight and there is one in the cramped space of the compartment: he menage to overpower three of his opponent but the last one gain the upper hand on him. 007 is knock out and his opponents take his wallet, stop the train and throw him outside.

Bond regain consciousness, they throwed him in a french countryside bog. He walk until finding a farm town. An out of place black Roll Royce guarded by one Mongol twin is parked near the auberge toward which Bond is heading. The Mongol block 007's path.

> - Bond: I'm afraid I don't have a reservation.

The Mongol take a small steel dart and throw it to a bird on a distant branch. Hit. "Let the gentlemen enter!", order Janos Paterno to his henchman. Bond join him inside, there is at Janos's table a girl identical looking to the one he met in the train. Bond says to the auberge's employee he want to make a phone call, and noticing is wallet is gone, ask money to Paterno.

> - Bond: I wonder if I could trouble you for some change. [...] I suppose six hundred and thirty two pounds would strike you as a fairly ridiculous sum for a phone call. [But that happens to be the precise amount I was carrying].

Paterno give him 700£, Bond produce his lighter for light Paterno's cigarette and then go make his phone call. When he come back: Paterno and the girl are not here anymore. Bond obtain Paterno name from the auberge's employee, but not the one of the girl who was here all evening. Strange thinks Bond: it's impossible she was here and in the train at the time.

Anyway Bond go to Gibraltar where he is meet at the airport by MI6' man in place: John Howland. "Why ever did you take the train in the first instance?", remarks Howland while giving him a thick file about Paterno. They are followed, by two Russian named Alex and Vaska. "Vaska's wife just had a baby. Matter of fact, I'm the godfather", says Howland. What's worries him is the other car that follow them, behind the one of the Russian.

They go to the Rock Hotel, they notice Bond's room is bugged. Howland and Bond get in a laundry van to leave the hotel discreetly and heads to the British Naval Base of Gibraltar. Bond go the ship's store who sold the Insignias to the submarine's crew: the person in charge is cooperative and tells him that the Insignias the store buys are manufactured in Tangier.

Bond take a hydrofoil to Tangier and see on the boat "one of the most beautiful women he has ever seen", a "blonde beauty (Catherine Deneuve)". Later he/we will learn that her name is Lyuba Chervinsky.

Photo: french actress Catherine Deneuve in the film The wild (1975). As we will see later, Deneuve will also be referred in Maibaum's treatments, in which the Bond's girl was even at one point named "Katrina Denova": a Russian sounding of the name of the actress! In a script dated November 5, 1975, Maibaum will says about Anya Amasova that she "looks like Catherine Deneuve".

Tom Mankiewicz remembers that when he was rewriting the script himself at Broccoli house, he hears the latter talking to Deneuve's agent on the phone[36]. The agent asked for a salary of $400,000 but the actress said she was ready to reduce her fee to $250,000 because she really wanted to make this film. A sum, however, far too high for Cubby who replied "I've never paid more than eighty thousand dollars for a James Bond girl in my life"[37]. Earlier, Deneuve was also considered for the role of Tracy in On Her Majesty's Secret Service[38].

- Cubby Broccoli[39] : In fact I approached several well-known actresses for this film. Catherine Deneuve... Marthe Keller... Dominique Sanda. But their agents made things impossible. Everyone scents big money in a Bond film and starts talking about percentages. But I'm not about to give a percentage to any actress. [...] So we go for an unknown [actress]. And remember this: the money

> I saved by not using a well-known actress I spent [it] on that marvelous ski stunt.

Seeing a girl as beautiful, Bond approach her and start to seduce her; she seems interested and they arrange to meet later.

Bond arrive in Tangier and infiltrate the closed-for-the-night Insignas's factory.

Meanwhile, from far away in his "master control room" with "complex communications consoles as vast as those of NASA in Houston", Paterno observe Bond signal on a screen. He subtilized Bond's lighter at the auberge and replaced it by one with a tracking beacon. He order one of his technician to press a button.

Bond is cutting a glass on a window of the factory when suddenly the whole building explode from the inside. Bond is hurled back.

In the control room, Bond's lighter signal ceased to transmit. Paterno take a phone and says "Phase One has just been completed".

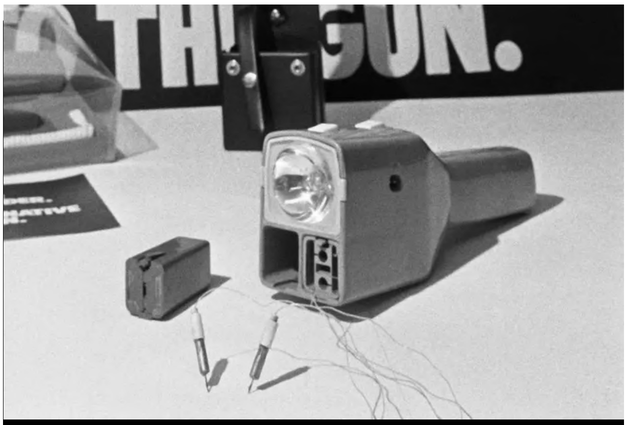
Bond is however still alive but shaken and stirred, he call Lyuba to says he will not be able to honor his date with her. He notice someone trying to enter his hotel room, takes his PPK and knock out the intruder. Bond turns the man over: it's Felix Leiter.

Leiter regains consciousness, Bond ask him why he is there: sent by the CIA to investigate on the bugged Insignias.

Two men burst in the room and one "produces an object resembling a flashlight. He points it at Bond and fires. A small gunpowder charge in the TASER (a new police weapon being made by a California aerospace engineer) [...] sends out a 50,000 volt charge".

007 fall on the ground, shaking. The two men put Bond and Leiter, both handcuffed, into a car and drive to an estate.

There, Bond and Leiter "are stripped to their shorts and strapped into chairs near a table on which a small generator with attached arms and cathode tubes and wires has been placed. Wires are attached to their toes, their ear lobes and their noses".



TASER's first electric pulse pistol came out in 1974, and it looks just like this. It was a new type of weapon at the time this treatment was written.

Lyuba Chervinsky enter the room, she wear a Russian uniform who identify her as a Major. Leiter recognize her and tell her name to Bond, precising she is from the KGB.

> - Bond: This is a fairly historic little moment. Her Majesty's Secret Service, the Central Intelligence Agency, and the KGB; all in one room. There's hope for the world, wouldn't you say, Major?
> - Lyuba: For the world, yes. For you and Mister Leiter no hope at all. Unless... There might be a possibility I could get a reversal of my orders to kill you both. If you tell me what I wish to know.

And that she want to know is how the West menage to determine the position of the Russian submarines. Bond and Leiter stare at her, she order a technician to power the generator. "I was going to ask you the same question", says Bond. "She doesn't like this answer. She speaks in Russian to one of the men. He disconnects the wires from Bond nose and connect them between Bond's legs".

"You wouldn't!" says Bond... Understood she is serious he quickly tell her that the West has the same problems than the Russian; she don't electrocute his testicles.

Lyuba leave the room and when she come back she says "I have been ordered to cooperate with you". "Allow me, Mister Bond", she adds while personally unhooks the electrode from his testicles. "Bond breathes more easily".

Leiter says that something drastic must have convinced her superiors if she have free them like that. Indeed:

> - Lyuba: They are insane! They ordered us to surrender one of our most cherished national monuments. As a girl I stood at the foot of it and wept at its heroic qualities, a triumph of Socialist realism. Machine Tractor Driver and Collective Farm Girl [...] created by Vera Mukhina. [...] If we don't give up the statue, they sell the secret of how they chart the position of our nuclear subs to the Americans.

"Don't start celebrating, Felix", says Bond, not knowing what the unknown blackmailer is asking to the West to not sell it to the Russian either.

We then see camera shoot in Moscow, where workers remove the sculpture from its pedestal with heavy equipment.

We see similar thing happening in other town of nuclear power countries: Winged Victory of Samothrace is removed from the Louvre (France), The Arnolfini Portrait is taken from London's National Gallery and Saint Jerome is discarded from New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Back at the Navy Headquarter in London, NATO officer are sad to has to give up theses national treasure. There was development: the bugged Insignias were not the only way the opposition use to tack the submarine, they have somehow another device to do it.

Bond go back to Universal Exports, try to throw is hat on the hat rack in front of Moneypenny, but misses! M join them with a young blonde man that he introduce to them as Rodney Higgins: the new 009. He will be 007's backup, says M who haven't confidence on his agent to not succumb the charms of Lyuba. Bond accept to take him with him reluctantly. There is little funny thing like Moneypenny and 009 making eye at each other or 009 successfully throwing his hat on the rack.

Bond says to M he have a plan: find Paterno, thinking S.P.E.C.T.R.E. responsible for the extortion and Paterno at its head.

> - Bond: Since he [Blofeld] killed my wife at the time [...] Why not elect Janos Paterno? His fortune is in excess of seven hundred million dollars, he owns shipping companies and communications industries. He certainly has the means to have developed a superior technology, He has fleets of ships, [...] deep-diving marine craft among them, of the kind which could pick up dropped art treasures from the ocean floor at depths far in excess of two thousand feet [600 meters]. [...] But one item remains: why did he go to such elaborate [lengths] to lead me to him at that auberge? [...] [His] giant Mongol [...] could have carved me up like a pheasant. Why did he wait until I arrived, conveniently, at the Tangier supplier?

(Well, the answers to this last question is never delivered in the rest of the treatment).

Paterno and other S.P.E.C.T.R.E. members are in their board room, now furnished with the art treasures. Theses treasure was only a sort foretaste (Paterno being an art enthusiast, he acquired them for himself): now he intent to ask one billion of dollars from each World's power.

007 and 009 comes out of Universal Export building:

> - Higgins: Delightful chap, that Q. I was particularly intrigued by his oxygen pills.
> - Bond: Obviously you don't drink.
> - Higgins: Carrot juice.

They approaches "Bond's sports car", Higgins set himself at the wheel. Bond stares at him.

> - Higgins: I drove the Grand Prix circuit the last two seasons. The Ferrari team.

They go to a London's industrial zone where there is a plant/slaughterhouse hosting the KGB local headquarter. Bond refuses to allow Higgins to come inside with him and he goes to meet Lyuba inside alone. The KGB computer will cross its data with the MI6's data that Bond brought: they hope to be thus able to define Paterno location.

While the computer is doing its work, Bond and Anya get in her yellow Rolls-Royce Corniche convertible and go to take a dip in a lake. We see the girl in bikini and they end up to make love in the water.

On the road to go back to the KGB headquarter:

> - Lyuba: I do hope, you're not going to be foolish about all this. Nothing has changed. Nothing can ever change our basic ideological differences.

Bond, who is at the wheel, pulls over to let pass a group of a hundred cross-country bicycle racers who was coming behind him. The cyclists surround the car, one of them pull out a gun. "While he's [Bond] debating his next move, the Major has already made hers: slipped out of her bikini bottoms, loomed up over Bond in the driver's seat and lashing out with the bikini like a sling, heavy round metal bally at either end of the tie, smashes the cyclist directly between the eyes".

Bond slams his foot on the gas pedal of the Corniche, some cyclist end up in its bonnet/ windshield; they moves away from the threat.

They go back to the meat plant, where Higgins is still waiting near Bond's car. Leiter is now here with them and the KGB's computer indicate that Paterno is likely in one of theses three European countries:

> - Lyuba: You and I, Mister Bond, will concentrate on Switzerland. Mister Leiter, you will take Germany. Mister Higgins, you France.

Meanwhile, a Russian submarine on patrol pick up the signal of a huge supertanker nearby. We see that it is "not an ordinary supertanker", there is armed men carrying new model of Uzi, and the two Mongol's twins are here as well as Paterno (and here a line seems to refer Paterno as [Orson] "Welles"). Buttons are pushed on a master console and "the entire deck and bow [of the supertanker] disappears like a sinking platform into the sea and at the point where it vanishes below the surface the ship seems to have developed a new bow, as though it is a ship within a ship. Below the surface we watch the incredible mechanism lowering deeper and deeper. [...] It is as though a gigantic lobster trap were being lowered to the bottom". The "giant steel arms" grab the Russian submarine and bring it into the supertanker while a jubilant Paterno open the champagne (a Dom Perignon, of course).

Bond and Lyuba are on a sailboat on Lake Geneva, observing a villa where they think Paterno could be. A boat from the villa come to them, Niki Athanagouras is inside and she invite them for lunch.

The three of them do that around the villa's pool, while "equally apparent is Major Chervinsky's growing impatience at Bond's charm toward the other woman". Lyuba ask if she often invite passerby to lunch; only when James Bond onboard replies Niki. They are astonished she knows Bond and she explain of whose she is the widow.

> - Niki: [Paterno] sent me. [...] He believes that I'm on his side. [...] [But] I want him dead! [...] Janos killed my husband. [...] I've been sent to find you, and bring you to him, so he can have you killed in some fashion [...] But by warning you, you can prepare, and when I do bring you to him: you can kill him.

Niki must take Bond by helicopter to Paterno's lair in the Alps. Lyuba find the plan ridiculous and have no trust in Niki, Bond on the other hand accept it.

They go Geneva airport. Bond and Niki will go to the lair alone; Lyuba, Leiter, 009 and Russian/American commandos will follow at a great distance in two other helicopters to launch an assault on the lair at the good moment.

The three helicopter fly in the Alps, in the American one Leiter says to Higgins that his true objective is to recover the MacGuffin for locating the submarine before the Russian do, they will probably have to kill the Russian commando and Lyuba.

> - Higgins: You mean, we kill women too?
> - Leiter: Haven't you heard of Women's Lib? Everybody gets an equal break now, no matter what his sex may be.

Bond and Niki land and enter an elevator of the carved in the rock lair. "Just as the steel door starts to slide shut Bond witnesses a hideous thing": laser beams "disintegrates" the American helicopter (and since 009 and Leiter fate are never mentioned anymore in the rest of this treatment, they seems to be really dead!). Bond is spared of the Russian helicopter destruction by the closing of the door.

007 turns accusingly to Niki who now have a gun pointed on him. Unknown to Bond, the audience see the Russian helicopter pilot avoiding the lasers and fly away.

Paterno in his wheelchair welcomes Bond in a room full of fine art. The twin girls (from the train and the auberge) join them, as the two Mongol twins "both in little more than G-strings, their marbled muscles shiny with oil".

> - Paterno: I was about to say, Mister Bond, you have nothing to fear in my home except a surplus of delights. You may elect whatever companionship for tonight you choose. The twins, or Niki, or all three.

Paterno order Bond to give his Q's briefcase to the Mongols.

> - Bond: I don't think so. This is a rather special attache case. I could have killed you the moment I walked in, but I prefer to negotiate.

Six armed men rush to Bond, he kill them with the briefcase which is a high-velocity machine-gun.

Paterno says that the dinner is served and leave the room. "Left alone in the reception hall, Bond makes his decision: he goes in to dinner".

"Over one of the most superbly prepared dinner he has ever eaten, Bond finds Paterno one of the most engaging monsters he has ever [...] faced. Paterno alternates between brilliant conversation about the state over the world [...] [and performs] sleight-of-hand tricks". (Orson Welles has a lifelong interest in magic and demonstrated his magic tricks in a number of films and television programmes, including 1967' Casino Royale, so one can wonder if Paterno's magic tricks are here cause filmmakers had Welles on mind).

While Bond is distracted, they stole his attache case. After dinner, Paterno gives Bond a tour of his "incredible" lair. "Art treasures are beyond the achievement of any single museum in the world", in fact some museums of the world display copies while the stolen originals are in this very room. They pass an empty pedestal:

> - Bond: What goes there?
> - Paterno: You do, Mister Bond.

But "not yet". Now Paterno give him a tour of his control room. Paterno have satellites and show on a screen the supertanker: "incredibly enough the entire one thousand foot [300 m] length of the tanker rides below the surface, moving like a gigantic submarine"! The ship will recover the gold that the Russian will drop in the ocean, "the bullion will land on that deck", explains Paterno.

Since the ransom doesn't arrive, Paterno decide to fire one of the nuclear warhead from the abducted Russian submarine onto a patch of tundra in Mongolia, to show the Russian his seriousness.

> - Paterno: I could destroy Moscow or Leningrad at [any] moment, but that would we trouble me. Not only because I have friends in those cities, but because it would anger the Russians; they are a very tenacious people.

Paterno says its system for locating submerged submarine is to complex to be explained to Bond, but it involve several sensor buoys within the seas. There is a computer unit in his wheelchair which is the control part of it.

Anyway the warhead hit its target and we see a nuclear mushroom in Mongolia on a screen. There is a beep on Paterno wheelchair:

> - Paterno: Your friends seem to have convinced the Swiss Air Force that neutrality should be abandoned. [...] Take that corridor, Mister Bond. At its end you will find two doors. One leads to a bedroom. The ladies will be waiting for you there. The other leads to another kind of room. My [Mongolian] friends...

Bond go to the corridor and have to choose between two identical doors. He enter one which "revealing a medieval torture chamber inside, fire burning, chains, racks, and in the middle of the room a huge bubbling pool where water [...] rushes steeply downward into the mountain".

- Bond: Sorry, I think I've got the wrong apartment.

A steel partition slide behind him, trapping him in the room. 007 says to the Mongolians he will box with them, "Marquess of Queensberry rules. And certainly not two of you at once". He tells to one of the twins: "would you hold my watch please. Let's say a three-minute round".

Suddenly the watch explodes the Mongolian face, "removing his head and a considerable portion of his upper torso". At the same time Bond has grab one of the ceiling's chains and swing onto the second twin, propelling him in the fire. The Mongol however survive and there is a hand-to-hand combat in the room, with a part where Bond dodges darts sends by the Mongol.

They end up on a waterfall which bring them to the edge of a high precipice. They fall but the Mongol grab a root, and Bond grabs the Mongol's ankle. Near them, there is Lyuba and a commando, climbing the mountain rock. They send Bond a rope: he catch it while the Mongol falls to his death.

Bond and Lyuba kisses. Bond want her to stop the assault: it is too risky, Paterno could obliterate Moscow in retaliation, and "he'd fly out before we could get [to] him". They climb down the mountain and leave.

There is another S.P.E.C.T.R.E. meeting with gold ingots now in the room. The Russian has paid, Paterno gloats. Now the British also have to pay: the billion in gold or London will be vaporized.

The gold is loaded in giant helicopters at Gibraltar, as well as a British commando of around 14 men in frogmen suit, led by Bond.

The helicopters drop the gold crates and the commando into the ocean. Equipped with Q's oxygen pill and Q's arm propeller, then men evolves underwater. They land on the submerged supertanker, plant explosive on a hatch and breach in. Now inside, there is a combat between the commando and the armed supertanker's crew. Half of the commando is kill while the supertanker is surfacing.

On the deck, Paterno watch the crew retrieve the gold, unaware of the combat bellow. Meanwhile the commando free the imprisoned Russian submarine crew.

"This is our BIG PRODUCTION NUMBER", says Stirling Silliphant, announcing a big fight between the commando helped by the 100 men of the Russian crew, against an army of 100 S.P.E.C.T.R.E.'s henchmen, all identical, "as though someone in a gigantic [orgasm] spawned a hundred identical twins". "I won't try to choreograph this battle [in this treatment], that is the duty of the screenplay. But it has to be a bitch, better (if that's possible) than any of the climactic battle scenes of the previous James Bond films. This one has to be the going-out-of-business special, the all-time topper "!

In any case, Paterno participate the fight: "his fancy [wheel]chair turns out to be a terrible war weapon. It fires bolts of electricity which take a frightful toll of Bond's forces"!

Bond pursue him but Paterno flee the supertanker on board of a hydrofoil. Bond call the troops of Gibraltar to chase the hydrofoil but Niki come with a helicopter and help Paterno to flee away. At least, as a consolation, the supertanker and the Russian submarine are secured.

Later, a commando of British, Russian and American troops, including Bond and Lyuba, led an assault on Paterno's Alps lair aboard gliders being towed by "a mechanical drone plane". The laser defenses, programmed to target engines sounds, is ineffective against theses silent gliders. Some gliders don't make it however: bad landings.

Demolition men's blow up the entrance, they storm the place but there is no sign of anyone inside. At least they find Paterno, Niki and the two twin girls: they seems to surrender. But suddenly Paterno fire the lightning bolts of his chair, killing men of the commando. Bond throw Lyuba on ground, and "as he's fallen, Bond has swung his sub-machine gun toward Paterno and locked his finger on the trigger at full fire. The entire clip rakes Paterno across his massive stomach, an institution into which he has poured hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of the finest foods and wines". Paterno die, as well as the three henchgirl, taken by the burst of Bond's machine-gun as well.

Bond remove the master computer unit box from Paterno's wheelchair and "turns to see that Lyuba's gun is leveled at him. Her men have disarmed the few surviving English and Americans".

Bond give her the box, saying "I really thought we could make some progress, the two of us. Think! With this we can make your people and my people sit down and put their guns away".

> - Lyuba: Always remember: [I will] always love you. [...] Goodbye, my love.

She climb in a helicopter that had just arrived and fly away with the box. Bond "can't be sure, but almost in his quiet fury, he has to admit that the girl is crying".

Lyuba is about to take off in a private jet at Geneva airport, when ambulances block the path of the plane. "This is a Red Cross Mission", announces Bond. Lyuba get off the plane.

> - Bond: I must take that box. If you don't give it to me, I have to tell you what's going to happen. Your jetliner will be intercepted by more NATO fighters than you ever dreamed possible [at] the moment you cross the Swiss border. Your pilot will then either land, as ordered, in Munich, or your plane will be shot down. How could I let that happen to the spy who loved me?

She tell him he is a fool, the box in her jet is a fake one, she left the real one in a railroad locker for him. Bond and his men leave, we see Lyuba smile as she take off in the jet. Did she lied?

Bond reach the locker: there is no box but a note accompanied with an object:

> - Lyuba's note: My darling, yes, I took the box, but it is not complete. It lacks a vital component without which it can not function. You have that component. I leave it with you, just as I leave my heart with you. Without it the box is not operative. Without you, neither am I. But that is the nature of life itself: far from perfect.

Bond look at the sky, "he can see the Russian jetliner heading East, back to Moscow. THE END".

My copy of the treatment we just saw was full of handwritten corrections (and I included some of them between brackets). At an unknown date, Stirling Silliphant delivered a new 100 page treatment which included theses revisions, now re-typed in a more presentable state.

The main difference with the previous June 6th treatment are:

- Janos Paterno is now described as "the son of a Hungarian actress and an Italian pickpocket".

- The Q's shoes from which a grenade can be ejected were removed (not a great loss, considering 007 never used them in the previous treatment).
- The single "Welles" occurrence has been replaced by "Paterno".
- When Paterno welcome Bond to his Alps's lair after Niki betrayed our agent:

> - Paterno: I see he accepted your story.
> - Niki: So quickly. I didn't even have the chance to make love to him.
> - Paterno: Pity. They say he's quite extraordinary.

- Lewis Gilbert[40] : I think it was around 11 or 12 writers [for this film], really, when you consider everyone who was hired to contribute in some way.

- Cubby Broccoli[41] : In total, we had fourteen writers, all very clever men with established reputations. But, in my view, they couldn't write Bond. Michael and I felt they had locked themselves into creating great set-piece sequences which didn't slot into a strong storyline. Dick Maibaum got us back to basics with his usual skill, but we still didn't have a clear, coherent structure for an exciting Bond movie. The more I talked to our writers, the more futile it seemed to be. We were now under pressure. One day Dana and I were at our home in California and we had all these scripts, close to a dozen of them, spread out all over the room. We sat and talked for hours, with Dana scribbling ideas down on paper. We rewrote the whole story, collected all the pages together and took the polar flight from Los Angeles direct to London. There was no time to sleep. We went straight from the plane into a meeting with Lewis Gilbert and Michael. Lewis looked through the pages, nodded and said it was the first time a producer had come to him with a storyline that worked.

Maibaum is back with the beginnings of a treatment

Despite all these scriptwriters, Broccoli and Hamilton can't get what they're looking for. It was then decided to call on a sure bet, Richard Maibaum, to take the writing of the film in the right direction. The franchise's veteran screenwriter was then hired around July 18, 1975.

A first undated treatment takes some elements already presents in Stirling Silliphant's treatment and opens with a pre-title sequence on "possibly" the island of Lanzarote, where the "most beautiful woman in the world" walks along a volcanic landscape towards a villa. In this villa James Bond is at the edge of the swimming pool, with champagne; the girl joins him in his hammock.

Offshore we see a boat with three fake fishermen watching Bond and the girl. Suddenly a helicopter arrives and captures the hammock before Bond can react. The kidnappers throw the girl back into the swimming pool. In the helicopter 007 discovers that M is present:

> \- Bond: What was that all about? I'm on holiday!
> \- M: Next time, don't take along Katrina Denova, the top lady agent in the KGB!

007 is speechless.

After the credits, we are at a naval base in Scotland; Bond, M, Q and an admiral board a nuclear submarine. There is a kind crisis atmosphere: it was discovered that the Russians were able to trace the route of this submersible.

After the meeting, Bond asks M where the information came from. His boss explains him that they were recently contacted by a Russian defector who said he was ready to sell them a major enemy naval advancement. M sent 006 and 008 to meet him but the man was already dead; an autopsy, however, revealed that he had [a microdot] on him containing the submarine's route. M then sends Bond on a mission to Gibraltar, because that's where the tracing came from.

Bond will meet M's man there, a certain Trevor. However, Bond realizes that the guy he is meeting is not the real Trevor when the latter doesn't exchange a pre-agreed recognition code with him. 007 forces the fake Trevor to lead him to the real one and they go to a "warehouse, cafe, etc?". As Bond frees the real Trevor, Russian agents arrive and 007 is knocked out after fighting valiantly.

When he regains consciousness, Bond is in Tangier and have electrodes placed on his testicles. The major Katrina Denova is in front of him and tortures him (he indeed receive an electrical charge between his legs): she wants to know how the English managed to trace Russian submarines. 007 replies that the English are victims of the same problem; the torture expert who accompanies Denova tells him that Bond is telling the truth.

We continue with a SPECTRE meeting which takes place in a building. Similar to Anthony Burgess period, Spectre suffers the setbacks of inflation as explained by Number One or "Welles" who is in a wheelchair. However, the organization's new operation is expected to be its most profitable to date. Indeed, thanks to the new submarine tracking system that Spectre has developed, every world power will likely be willing to pay top dollar for the data collected or the system itself. Number One lets his young scientific genius, Janus (and not Janos), speak to tell the other more about it.

However, "the only letter in Spectre [Janus] is interested in is T for Terror". Janus takes a remote control of the Welles wheelchair and sends him over the terrace where he falls 40 storeys and dies. Janus then declares himself the new Number One of the organization. "Young" members of Spectre who support Janus as Number One take their seats; another faction of Spectre composed of older members and led by a certain Lanros refuses Janus as leader and leaves the room.

In his descriptions Maibaum compares some members of Spectre to existing people. From left to right:

"An Eldridge Cleaver black [guy]" (American civil rights activist and member of the Black Panther Party).

"A Carlos type Latin [guy]" [character who will be named Marco in rewrites] (real name Ilich Ramírez Sánchez; "Carlos" or "the Jackal" is a terrorist particularly known for his attacks carried out in 1974 and 1975, a period in which Maibaum writes this treatment).

Meyer Lansky, one of the most powerful American mobsters, is used as a reference to describe Lanros.

"A girl who could be Patty Hearst" [character who will be named Gita in rewrites] (heiress who has be kidnapped in 1974 by an American far-left terrorist group, the Symbionese Liberation Army, before subsequently participating to the actions of this group following what appeared to be Stockholm syndrome. She was subsequently rehabilitated and granted a Presidential pardon by Bill Clinton. You can note that she also will be an inspiration for the character of Elektra King in The World Is Not Enough).

In Maibaum's treatments and first scripts, there are other members of the new faction who have small roles such as a Japanese from the Japanese Red Army, an "Arab" from Fatah and a German from Baader-Meinhof.

Janus explains to his faction that a new era is about to occur: a nuclear attack will free the world from governments and politics. Humanity will be able to evolve on its own thanks to science; only Spectre will be there to lead. He also says that members of the Lanros faction had deuterium bombs implanted in their bodies during surgical operations.

Janus activates the bombs and only Lanros survives, possibly due to a malfunction in the detonator.

Then there's a scene where we see a submarine victim of a malfunction. In London, M meets his KGB counterpart, a certain Gogol. They agree to an alliance: only Spectre would have the resources for such an operation and they are aware of the organization's recent internal tensions.

It should be noted that this beginning of a treatment was written at the time of Apollo-Soyuz, the first joint space mission between the Soviet Union and the United States, carried out at the end of July 1975. Perhaps this influenced the idea of an alliance between MI6 and KGB in this film?

Now allied, Bond and Katrina drive to Lanros' Greek villa. Bond goes to meet Lanros and warns him that he is in danger. Lanros then vaguely mentions an oil tanker and a certain Olsen. Katrina, who has remained in observation from afar, sees Janus' men with a detonator. Lanros explodes from the inside.

Lanros's men, thinking that Bond has killed their boss, go at his pursuit. Katrina stops a car near 007 and he gets in. He asks her why she saved him; she replies that it is to find out what Lanros said to him before dying.

Bond and Katrina receive a new mission: investigate an oil tanker named 402XZ who was near a British submarine which has just disappeared. They go to Rotterdam (Netherlands) where the ship is docked and the captain, named Olsen, greet Bond for a visit. Nothing seems suspicious. When they leave, Olsen contacts Janus.

The treatment ends there.

August 4, 1975' treatment: Amasova, Kronk, oil fields and Harrier

In early August 1975 (around the 4th), Maibaum finalized a complete 39-page treatment for the film. The pre-title is definitely in Lanzarote whose landscape is described as "lunar-like" with the villa located in a crater. A certain Luka (described as well-built and with a distinctive face; Maibaum also envisaged calling him Igor) is now part of the fishing boat's crew. This time a commando rappels down from the helicopter to capture the hammock. But the biggest difference lies in the dialogue that follows:

> - Bond: What's this in aid of? I'm on holiday with a lovely little French girl I happened to meet here and...
> - M: For your information, Double-O-Seven, your lovely little French girl is Anya Amasova [from the KGB].

At a naval base in Scotland, Bond, M, Q and an admiral get off a helicopter. They join a meeting room with other members of the Navy to talk about the fact that a submarine has been traced. Q himself isn't sure how the Russians did it: perhaps a tracking beacon or radioactive paint on the hull, but he's not convinced. The base commander orders a meticulous search of the submersible.

Bond travels to Gibraltar to meet M's man, who has been renamed Colonel Slogger Howard. Suddenly 007 twists the man's arm and threatens to throw him into the void: "you missed the recognition signal" and Howard is supposed to be right-handed. The man leads him to a cafe where Bond frees the real Howard before getting knocked out by someone (from behind and without a fight).

Bond regains consciousness tied to a sort of dentist's chair; electrodes placed on sensitive parts of his body (including the testicles). In front of him are Luka and Major Amasova:

> - Anya: How do the English track our submarines, Mr. Bond?

Bond is surprised: "but I came down to Gibraltar to find out how the Russians track ours". He asks if they didn't find a supposed English defector dead. Amasova believes 007 is telling the truth and orders him untied. Here 007 takes the opportunity to attack his captors and escape through a window; he discovers that he is in Tangier. They pursue him into the casbah where Bond engages in a hand-to-hand fight with Luka before managing to outrun his Russian pursuers.

This time we are told that the building where the Spectre meeting takes place is perhaps located in Barcelona. One of the agenda is the election of the new "Number One" of the organization. This time he is not named but we are told that he "looks amazingly like Orson Welles". The operation he plans is called The Whole Enchilada and he lets the youngest member of the assembly (in his late twenties), "whose genius has made all this possible", Kronk (and no longer Janus) (Number 8, Maibaum imagined at one point), to speak. The first thing Kronk does is to wish Number One a happy retirement before sending him forty floors down in his wheelchair. "I'm now Number One" Kronk declares but we see that there are voices against it in the organization, notably the one of a member named Landros (with a D now).

There is another meeting, between the members of the Kronk's faction of SPECTRE (all of whom are under 30). Kronk presses a piston which detonates bombs implanted inside members of the rival faction (located in cars, helicopters, buildings, etc.). Landros end up to be the only survivor of his own faction.

Landros returns to his villa in Greece and is told by his secretary that James Bond wants to see him. 007 explains to Landros that if he helps him to get his hands on the tracking system, he and the British secret service will make sure to protect him from Kronk's new Spectre. Landros may also have a bomb in him: he reveals to Bond that Spectre has a clinic in Lausanne where he had an operation (he no longer mentions the tanker, however).

Meanwhile we see Anya observing Bond and Landros through binoculars (the KGB and MI6 haven't yet joined forces in this treatment). She also sees Kronk approaching the villa, accompanied by one of his men named Marco. She tries to prevent them from pressing a detonator but too late: Landros explodes, throwing 007 against a wall.

Anya rescues Bond and takes him to an olive oil factory where he finds her superior, Boris Gogol aka "G". Turns out M is also there at the factory because like in the movie: MI6 and the KGB have decided to join forces.

Bond and Anya go to the Swiss clinic together. "There are only two ways to get into the hospital: you have to be either sick or injured", Bond tells her before suddenly knock her out with his fist. Bond brings the stunned Anya inside but is seen by Kronk who recognizes them. Disguised as a doctor, Kronk approaches them and takes charge of Anya while Bond investigates the clinic looking for medical records to identify the Spectre members. When Anya is about to regain consciousness, Kronk give her a shoots of anesthetic gas.

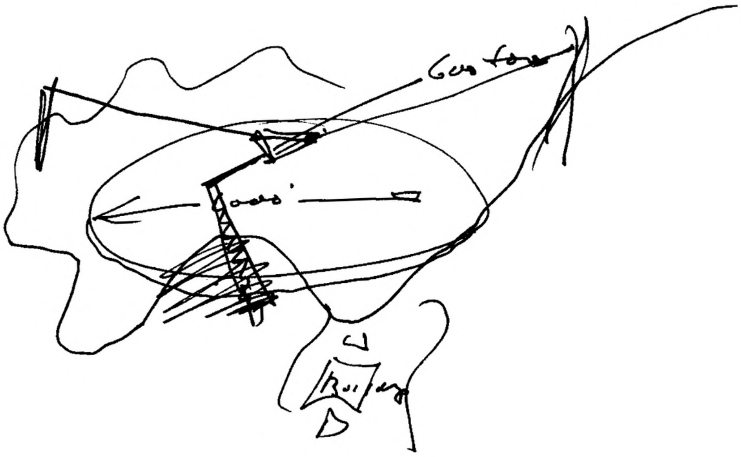
007 is suddenly attacked by Ganzer (Number 2 of the Spectre) and his men. Bond then throws a flammable oxygen tank down a chute that leads to an incinerator: boom, the clinic is now on fire. Bond then goes to pick up Anya, who is still unconscious, and heads towards the building exit, carrying her. They are joined by Luka and his KGB men who are driving a fire truck. Bond gives Anya to someone else and goes to get the files with Luka while the fake KGB firefighters spray gasoline on the building with fire hoses!

Once the files are loaded into the fire truck, Bond realizes that Anya is not with them. 007 goes to look for her through the flames and smoke, manages to find her and carries her to the outside of the building where he gives her mouth-to-mouth resuscitation. She insults him in Russian and they join Luka who transfers the files to another vehicle.

At MI6 HQ in London, Q shows M a model (with a submarine, a radio telescope on an island and a satellite) and explains that he believes Spectre is able to track nuclear submarines via the hot trails of radioactive water they leave in their wake.

> - Richard Maibaum[42] : I asked a general at a satellite tracking facility if this was a concept that could have any validity. He made a funny face, told me it was pretty close, and suddenly changed the subject.

They are interrupted by the Chief of Staff who tells them that the clinic's files brought back by Bond are encrypted.



Interestingly, Maibaum mentions (and draws) the Arecibo radio telescope in his notes (perhaps for Q's model, or for a full-scale plan of the structure later on?). Bond's fans would remember the Arecibo radio telescope as Trevelyan's base in GoldenEye.

Meanwhile at another Spectre meeting, Kronk says that Bond and Anya have become threats and that they must be eliminated.

Q boards a submarine to test his theory with a device that will show him whether it is correct or not. We then see a radio telescope coming out from an oil tanker, the S.S. Tabasco, who then spots the submarine. The tanker start to emits a distress signal to attract the submarine then suddenly the submersible's equipment malfunctions and the naval base loses track of the submarine with Q on board.

While waiting for their next orders, Bond and Anya are passing the time in St. Moritz, playing chess, climbing or skiing. A Spectre assassin named Gita is nearby. Bond and Anya presumably end up making love in their chalet.

The next day Moneypenny comes to St. Moritz to join them. On the way she comes across Luka's body: strangled to death. Moneypenny's cry alerts Anya who sees Gita aiming at the chalet with a ski pole from which a harpoon/spear with an explosive head is projected: Anya grabs a cushion so that he harpoon land into a soft surface. She then takes the harpoon and throws it back towards Gita like a javelin; it explodes but Gita manages to escape.

Moneypenny reports the disappearance of the submarine and Q to them; Anya says the Russians also lost a submersible. The clinic's file has been deciphered: many of the Spectre members who went there had experience as submarine crew. Moneypenny tells them that their new mission is to go under false identities (John Barkley and Alexandra Artzibata) to the port of "Rotterdam (Bantry Bay? Gironde Estary?)" to investigate an oil tanker that was in the vicinity of the submarine when it disappeared. They have a drink in memory of Q and another in Luka's once Moneypenny leaves.

- Bond: What should we drink to next?
- Anya (in Russian): To the spy who loved me.
- Bond: To the spy who loved me!

We find Kronk and Gita at a Spectre training school (Maibaum tells us that he doesn't punish her because she excites him sexually). This is an opportunity for us to learn that Spectre's plan includes the oil wells of the world and that the goal behind it is "the creation of conditions leading to the destruction of all established governments and their replacement by international anarchy". (Why Spectre wants anarchy will never be explained further than that in this treatment).

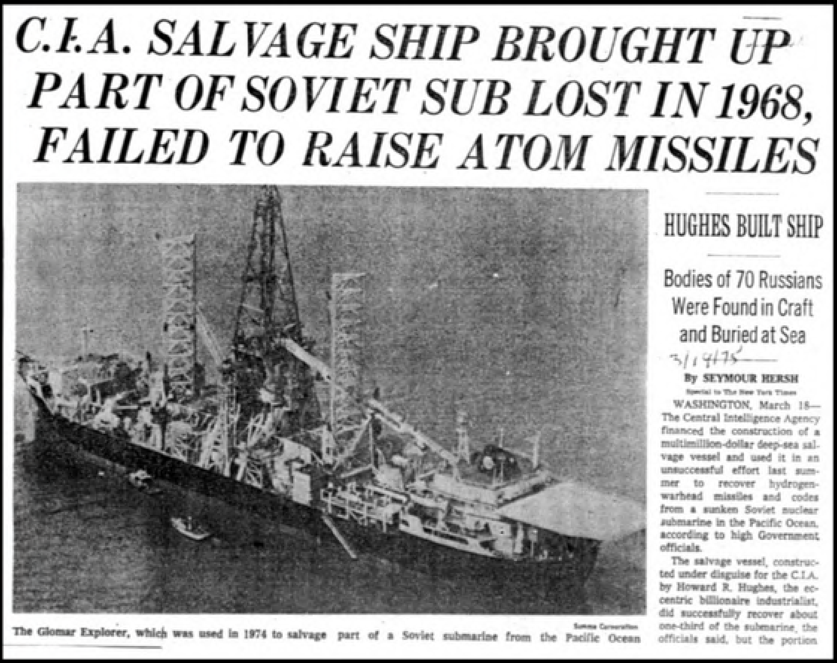
At its port, Bond and Anya board the S.S. Tabasco by posing as members of an insurance company. They meet the ship's captain, Olsen, who gives them a tour: they find nothing suspicious, "everything looked absolutely kosher", although Bond has the impression that something is wrong. When they go at a bar a little later, Bond manages to get his hands on it: to float that high, the ship's tanks had to be filled with water rather than oil.

To confirm this, Bond and Anya sneak into the refinery next to the ship to see what type of liquid is in the vats. Water it is. As they continue to explore the area, they discover that the refinery also houses the Spectre training school. They observe Gita training the recruits and speaking via a screen to Kronk: there is talk about global anarchy and the nuclear capabilities of the S.S. Tabasco.

Bond and Anya are spotted and hunted before being captured. They are enclosed in a tank where seawater is then pumped (actually John Landis had earlier written this idea on a paper: "room (cell) filling rapidly with water window with bars (grill) up top"). But just as it looks like that they will inevitably drown, Bond pulls out a magnetic mine hidden in the heel of his shoe and they manage to escape. After that they decide to separate: Bond goes to contact M while Anya stays around to tail Gita in case she leaves the refinery.

Bond returns to London. M arranged with Felix Leiter for the Americans to send one of their submarines to follow and board the tanker; Bond must rejoin its crew. Bond therefore embarks (without Anya) but "perhaps" with Leiter and, as in the film, the submarine ends up being swallowed by the tanker.

The revelation in the press in 1975 of Azorian Project, a CIA operation to recover the wreckage of a Russian submarine (K-129) that sank in the Pacific Ocean in 1968, also may have inspired one element of the film's storyline. For the purpose of the operation, the CIA had specially built a boat capable of raising the wreck and Howard Hughes was involved in the operation by lending his name to this ship in order to keep its purpose secret. A little like the Disco Volante, the Hughes Glomar Explorer had a trapdoor in the bottom of the hull from where a giant claw was lowered to the ocean floor to grasp the targeted submarine section.



C.I.A. SALVAGE SHIP BROUGHT UP PART OF SOVIET SUB LOST IN 1968, FAILED TO RAISE ATOM MISSILES

HUGHES BUILT SHIP

Bodies of 70 Russians Were Found in Craft and Buried at Sea

3/19/75

By SEYMOUR HERSH

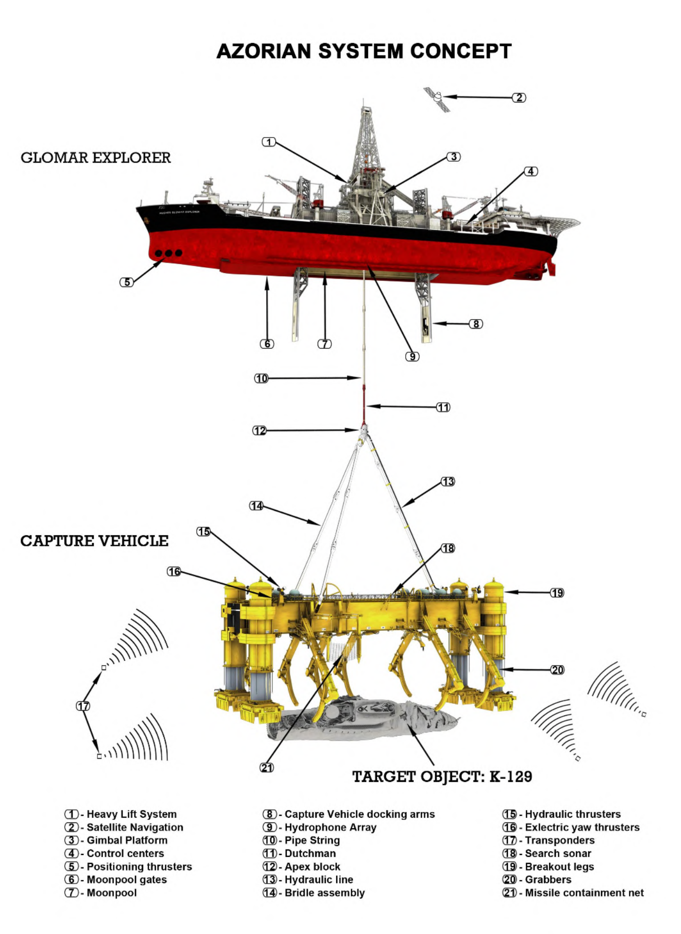
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 18—The Central Intelligence Agency financed the construction of a multimillion-dollar deep-sea salvage vessel and used it in an unsuccessful effort last summer to recover hydrogen-warhead missiles and codes from a sunken Soviet nuclear submarine in the Pacific Ocean, according to high Government officials.

The salvage vessel, constructed under disguise for the C.I.A. by Howard R. Hughes, the eccentric billionaire industrialist, did successfully recover about one-third of the submarine, the officials said, but the portion

Summa Corporation

The Glomar Explorer, which was used in 1974 to salvage part of a Soviet submarine from the Pacific Ocean



AZORIAN SYSTEM CONCEPT
GLOMAR EXPLORER CAPTURE VEHICLE
TARGET OBJECT: K-129
① - Heavy Lift System
② - Satellite Navigation
③ - Gimbal Platform
④ - Control centers
⑤ - Positioning thrusters
⑥ - Moonpool gates
⑦ - Moonpool
⑧ - Capture Vehicle docking arms
⑨ - Hydrophone Array
⑩ - Pipe String
⑪ - Dutchman
⑫ - Apex block
⑬ - Hydraulic line
⑭ - Bridle assembly
⑮ - Hydraulic thrusters
⑯ - Exlectric yaw thrusters
⑰ - Transponders
⑱ - Search sonar
⑲ - Breakout legs
⑳ - Grabbers
㉑ - Missile containment net

The "Hughes Glomar Explorer": officially a Howard Hugues manganese nodule drilling ship, secretly a CIA boat capable of recovering and containing an atomic submarine wreck.

The interior of the ship contains the other two missing submersibles and men from Spectre who aim their weapons at the American crew exiting their submarine. Bond is locked in the cells with the others, including Q who tells him he has found a way to unlock the cells.

Meanwhile, Spectre crews head out to sea in two of the hijacked submersibles and fire their Polaris missiles at two oil fields: one at Lake Maracaibo (Venezuela) and the other in Iraq. About these two big explosions, the screenwriter writes: "Special Effects [department] should have a ball. Scenes like this have never been seen before in a motion picture"!

1975 + Harrier + Fearless, together in this photo. The Fearless would eventually appear in the film, during the very final scenes.

(Even if it's basically already too late) Bond and Q end up leading a mutiny with the crew of the three submarines in order to take control of the tanker. A warship sent by M, the HMS Fearless, joins the battle and sends salvos at the tanker which partially explodes. Bond and the crews board the American submarine to escape the sinking tanker and surface near the Fearless. 007 joins the ship in a boat "(or water-cycle [jet ski])".

On board, M tells Bond by radio that Anya Amasova follo-wed Gita to a villa in Spain.

Bond then boards (with a pilot) a Harrier plane from the warship and the next thing we see is the Harrier landing in the swimming pool at Kronk's villa.

The Spy Who Loved Me will be the first film to feature a sort of jet ski.

Bond goes meet the Kronk (while the pilot takes off again). The villain invites him to share a meal during which Bond hides a deuterium pill in the caviar that Kronk eats. 007 reveals to him that he has now a bomb in him and forces his enemy to bring him to the villa's operations room where he finds (and transmits to M) the coordinates of the submarines used by Spectre.

Kronk activates a magnetic device which takes the detonator out of Bond's hands. They fight over the detonator and Bond gets it; however, Kronk pursues Bond so that he can't get a safe distance from him. 007 runs into Gita and collides with her; he eventually gets far enough away and activates the deuterium bomb in Kronk's body, which explodes with Gita who was near Kronk.

Bond retrieves a suitcase-sized important element of the tracking system, but finds himself confronted with a weapon: the one of Major Amasova. "My orders are quite explicit", she says before handing him her gun and saying "could you kill me?". Bond takes the gun but he is unable to shoot her too.

- Bond: We seem to have reached what is called a Mexican standoff, Major.
- Anya: I suggest we discuss it elsewhere, Double-O-Seven. Number One's executive jet is on an airstrip near by.

In flight, Bond throws the suitcase-sized element out of a window which then ends up at the bottom of the ocean, so that no one has it (like the ATAC at the end For Your Eyes Only). "Oops, clumsy of me". They say maybe they could agree on a place to meet once a year. And after camera shots showing English and Russian submarines destroy those which were in the hands of Spectre, we find Bond and Anya in a hammock in Lanzarote, as in the pre-title…

August 20' revised treatment: Deneuve, rifle-easel and garrote

A new 67-page treatment was completed by Maibaum on August 20, 1975. If the course of the pre-title in Lanzarote remains unchanged, it is interesting to note that Maibaum now compares Anya Amasova to someone to describe her: "one of the two most beautiful women in the world. The other is Catherine Deneuve for whom she could double".

During the scenes at the Scottish naval base (which Maibaum visited at one point with Cubby and Hamilton[43]), M this time tells Bond that the submarine's itinerary was simply received by post from an anonymous source.

Further on, when Bond is being interrogated/tortured by Luka and Amasova with the electrodes: "Bit of a shock seeing you again, Major", says Bond. We also notice that during the escape in the casbah, he bought clothes and a camel from a local in order to blend in with the crowd and outrun his pursuers.

The scene of Spectre's first meeting gives us some descriptions of the characters. Thus Kronk, whose first name is Elroy, is described as having a beard, fairly long hair, glasses and is pudgy.

Later a scene was added where we see Bond reporting to security outside Number Two's Greek villa, Landros, described as "converted from a medieval monastery fort surrounded by hills".

> - Bond: Tell Mr. Landros that James Bond on Her Majesty's Secret Service wants to see him on a matter of life and death.

Here Anya observes the scene from Greek ruins located a little further away, she have a beret and a painting easel. Later she converts the easel into a sniper rifle to shoot Marco, the man who is about to press the detonator to explode Landros (and who manage to do it).

> One of the legs is actually the barrel, part of the easel frame becomes the stock and half of another easel leg a silencer. Then she clamps the binoculars onto the barrel converting it into a telescopic sight. Finally she squeezes paint tubes which produce cartridges not oil paint.

After the death of Landros, Anya and Bond then go to the olive oil factory where M and Gogol are, Maibaum adds the rank of General for Gogol in this treatment.

> - G (to Bond): Now we are working together I can say this. You are my favorite son-of-a-bitch.

Before leaving for Lausanne, Bond and Anya stop for a break at a Greek tavern where a wedding is being celebrated. "We'll be less conspicuous here than waiting at the airport". During this they talk, with Anya saying she read in Bond's KGB file that his evaluation on the tactical use of sex was particularly high.

As before, Bond enters the clinic with Anya, whom he has knocked out. He is looking for Dr. Kleinschmidt that Landros had spoken to him about (there is no longer any matter of medical files to recover), unaware that he has just been killed by Kronk and Gita (disguised as a nurse); this is the reason for the presence of the latters. As 007 wanders through the clinic, Gita tries to strangle him with a garrote and the help of men from the Spectre; Bond defends himself by causing the explosion with the incinerator.

Through the smoke, Bond sees Gita with Kronk: he decides to pursue them but they take a chute which leads them to a Dynafoil water scooter with which they flee onto the lake near the clinic. Bond then goes to look for the still unconscious Anya and takes her out of the burning clinic while the firefighters (real firefighters) arrive. She regains consciousness after mouth-to-mouth resuscitation and Bond returns to the blaze to retrieve an object touched by Kronk (in order to get his fingerprints) and comes out.

Bond and Anya await their new orders in St. Moritz. Meanwhile M and G tell each other their agents could be used as bait: if someone come to kill them, it would be an opportunity to capture him and obtain information. M therefore sends 009 (who is a woman) to monitor the chalet and capture any assassin who comes near.

Meanwhile Q and the submarine he is in disappear. Bond and Anya in the chalet:

> - Bond: What's that you're reading? The Handy Manual For Dedicated Demolitionists?
> - Anya: A cook book. It has many excellent recipes.
> - Bond: Cook book? I didn't think you were that sort of girl.

Gita strangles Luka then 009 and fires her explosive harpoon into Bond and Anya's chalet which explodes. Unlike the previous treatment, Bond and Anya were not there because they were warned by Moneypenny who found the bodies when she came to see them.

> - Bond: If it's any consolation, [009 and Luka] were already very dead when we put them in there.

Moneypenny says that the fingerprints brought back by Bond belong to Elroy Kronk and gives some information about the character: he is a "scientific genius in every field", particularly in the low-resolution photography domain. He graduated from MIT at age of 13 and worked for the NSA in the past.

Bond and Anya go to inspect the tanker and then the adjoining refinery, equipped with black clothing, grappling hooks, ropes. Anya runs toward a fence and "does a tremendous graceful forward flip over it, landing on her feet".

> - Anya: I won a bronze medal in acrobatics at the Olympics. Olga Korbut took the silver. [...] I also took a bronze in the javelin throw.
> - Bond (after pole vaulting over the same barrier): Empire Games [Commonwealth Games], gold medal.

They discover the Spectre training school, where they find models of the tracking device, similar to the one Q had in the previous treatment. When they are locked in the cistern which fills with water after being captured, it is decided that Bond must use his intelligence rather than a gadget. Instead of the mine, they try (and succeed) to dislodge a grate above them that prevents them from getting out. Unable to do this by pulling it towards them (because it rests on a sort of framework), they throw a grappling rope around the rungs of a ladder located above the grid in order to create a sort of pulley which allows them to lift the grid from above. Also as they exit, there is a guard approaching; Bond pulls him to the tank out and fights/kills him underwater.

Olga Korbut, known as "Sparrow from Minsk" : Soviet gymnast who won four gold and two silver medals at the Summer Olympics between 1972 and 1976; before she was 22.

Further on, Bond parachutes into the sea to join the American submarine (Leiter isn't mentioned anymore) which is soon swallowed up by the S.S. Tabasco. The main difference on board of the tanker is that Bond and the other prisoners (plus reinforcements contacted by Bond, coming from the Fearless in attack launches) manage to take control of the Tabasco before the submarines have fired any of their warheads at the oil fields.

Bond joins the Fearless, then a Harrier, head to the Spanish villa to prevent Kronk from ordering his submarine crews to fire. There is something here that was sorely missing in the previous treatment: the pilot of the fighter plane now knocks out some guards and windows of the villa (still not with the Harrier's weapons though, but with the blast of the reactors). Bond confronts Kronk and learns his motives:

> - Kronk: But you don't understand, Mr. Bond. There is no deal. There never will be. I didn't take over Spectre for money. My sole purpose is to create chaotic conditions throughout the world which can only end in the destruction of all established institutions and governments. I am an anarchist, Mr. Bond. I want to give humanity a second chance, an opportunity to fulfill itself.

During the meal, 007 saw Kronk put a deuterium pill in his caviar dish. Bond takes advantage of the fact that he exposes his motivations for switching their dishes. So Kronk unknowingly swallows the pill he wanted Bond to swallow.

Gita arrives discreetly behind Bond with her garrote; however, Bond hears her and begins to fight her. Kronk takes advantage of the fact that Bond is busy with Gita to activate the pill's detonator and explodes himself; the explosion also kills Gita in the process.

Anya joins Bond (without pointing a gun at him) and together they find and transmit the coordinates of the Spectre' submarines to M and Gogol, who will then destroy them before they have fired any single warhead at oil field. Maibaum has some insight onto why they're doing it together: "(with Anya's help, of course, or Women's Lib wouldn't like it)"!

Now "we wait for the inevitable at long last showdown: who kills who to get the gizmo [the suitcase-sized tracking system]? [...] Instead Anya quietly tells Bond old Number One's executive jet is still on the airstrip". In the air: "Anya picks up the gizmo [...] at that moment the plane [piloted by 007] apparently hits a bit of turbulence [...] The gizmo slips out of Anya's grasp and falls out the window". "Oops", she said before the finale in Lanzarote.

A second copy I have of this treatment contain few handwritten commentaries from an unknown author. He thinks "the locations not interesting enough" and that it need "more gimmicks". The pre-title sequence "doesn't work", and the sequence where Bond and Anya are trapped in water in the refinery remind him too much the very recent movie The Drowning Pool. The author of theses notes doesn't particularly like the ending and says "there always double ending to Bond film... Perhaps leave one character alive who pops up at the end!".

Sardinia, Egypt, Norway, monastery and Jaws

A new undated 8-page treatment by Maibaum introduces important elements that will be found in the film. It was thought to be satisfactory enough to be transformed into a full script and Maibaum completed one of 154 pages on November 5, 1975. The plot described in these documents being remarkably very similar, I will only make a single summary:

The pre-generic has been relocated to Sardinia (but what happens there remains the same). It ends with:

> - M: Do you know who that woman is, Double-O-Seven?
> - Bond: Yes, sir. KGB.
> - M: Anya Amasova, one of their crack female agents.
> - Bond: She's indisputably female, sir. But why toss her back [out of the helicopter]?
> - M: Detente. Or haven't you heard?
> - Bond: Aren't we carrying it a bit far? With respect, sir, on my own I might have learned quite a lot after penetrating her cover...

In the scenes at the naval base it is revealed this time that the origin of the tracing doesn't come from Gibraltar but from Egypt. 007 goes to the British Embassy in Cairo where he meets an MI6 agent stationed there, Howard, who tells him that:

> - Howard: The chap who brought me the envelope's [with the submarine's itinerary] a hustler called Fahki. Buys and sells anything. Dancing girls. Camels. Fake antiquities. You name it.

Howard doesn't know who he's acting as an intermediary for, but there are plenty of secret agents in this town; it wouldn't be surprising if Bond had already been spotted the moment he set foot in the airport. Looking out the window they spot Marco (whose description still echoes to Carlos) in a Renault, listening to their conversations. After hearing that Bond is going to meet Fahki's brother, Marco brings into his car a character who will become emblematic of the saga... Jaws! The man is described thus:

> He is squat, with powerful neck and shoulders but unusually short arms and small stubby hands. He wears a white linen suit, has white hair. [...] He has small fish-like eyes, a flat nose, and an usually heavy underslung jaw.

Bond goes to the pyramids to meet Fahki's brother who works there as a tour guide. He's just scamming tourists by betting them that he can go up and down a pyramid in five minutes (while it's his accomplices who appear to wave to tourists on each floor while he waits downstairs). Bond appears before him and threatens to reveal the scam to the tourists if he doesn't tell him where Fahki is.

007 gets the information that he is at a cemetery in the City of the Dead and goes there. However, Jaws arrive ahead of him and kills Fahki by biting him with his steel teeth (after biting a steel chains).

(Perhaps the character of Horror in the novel inspired the one of Jaws? Maybe not. Horror is described as having teeth covered in steel but this is only a very anecdotal detail in the novel, appearing only at the corner of a line and he never uses theses to threaten or bite his victims, unlike Jaws).

After finding Fahki's body, Bond decides to go back to his brother at the pyramids. This time the "tourists" he is with are Russian and stab 007 with a hypodermic syringe.

Bond wakes up in front of a Anya and Luka (described as bald), ready to electrocute his masculine attributes. After their usual electrical shocks and discussions, he escapes from the room and discovers that he is on a tourist boat on the Nile, near Luxor. Anya pursues him with her men (she is armed with a Beretta); 007 spots some Egyptian soldiers at a table on the ship and has a conversation with them like "[we've met before]" when obviously they haven't. 007 stays near the soldiers to argue with them, forcing his pursuers to be unable to try anything. Anya fumes:

> - Anya: Comrades, we have disgraced ourselves. Let us teach that English pig a lesson he will never forget.

Arriving at the dock in Luxor, Bond and the soldiers disembark. The soldiers leave in a Jeep and Bond finds himself alone; he climbs into a taxi. The KGB gets into two other taxis to follow him. One of the pursuers, Peter, gets tired of waiting and steals the taxi before creating a traffic jam in front of Bond. 007 gets out of his taxi stuck in traffic and, dressed in the local style with a burnous, blends into the crowd and gets into a carriage. He is followed by two other carriages until the Karnak temple where 007 hides for hours behind a statue. He goes out after dark and knocks out Peter, the only KGB man who was still there looking for him.

Then there are the Spectre reunion scenes (now in Geneva, Maibaum plans to use the Intercontinental Hotel for the exteriors). Number One's wheelchair aims to be at the top of technology with an integrated telephone, a TV screen, microphone, rows of buttons, etc. It was notably Elroy Kronk who designed it. Before his death:

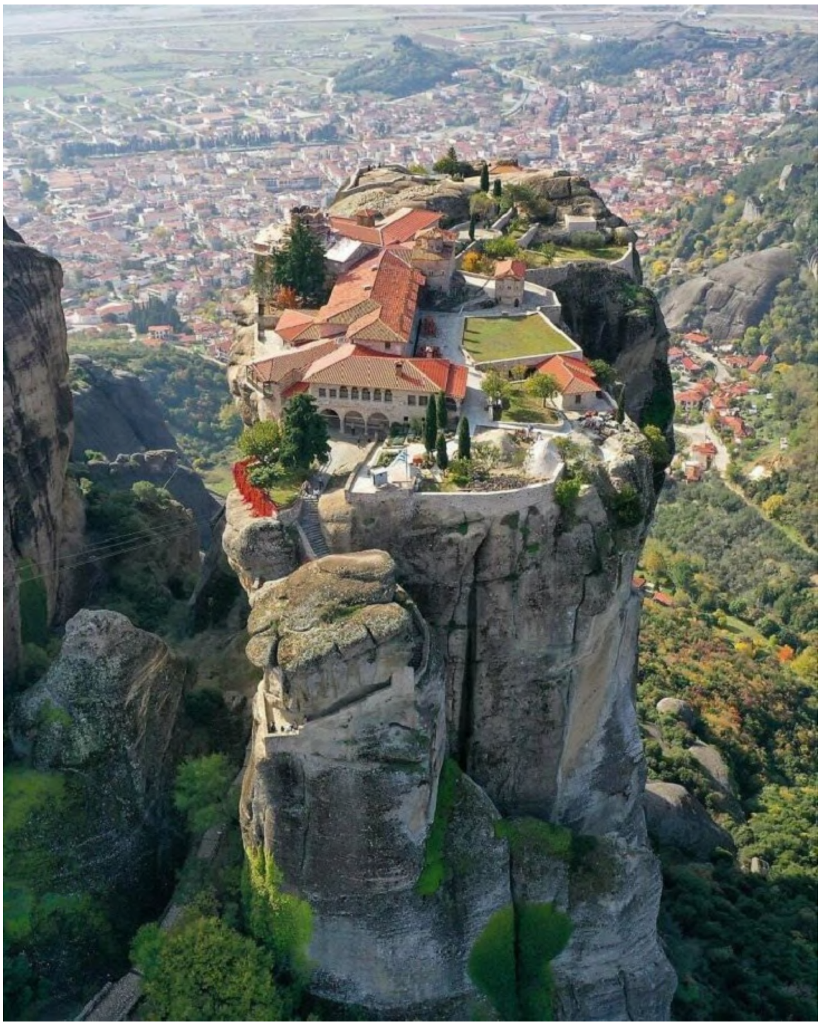
- Number One: Every nuclear power will pay to prevent the sale of the tracking system to any other. Let me assure you I have no intention of ever selling it to anyone. Our sole possession will be a source of perpetual blackmail. I estimate annual payments from all countries involved as... One hundred billion dollars.

Then Kronk takes power and eliminates older members of the organization supporting Landros.

George Sanders

On the side of MI6, Q develops a sort of, in inverted comas, "umbrella" to protect submarines from the detection rays of a satellite and asks permission to board a submersible. In Egypt (or Moscow in the treatment), Gogol gives Anya a new mission: go in Greece to kidnap and interrogate Landros. This is an opportunity to read that Maibaum describes Gogol as "a kind of Slavic George Sanders type".

007, however, arrives before Anya and talks with Landros. They drive off to take him to get checked out to see if he has a bomb inside him. However, on the way they are attacked by the KGB and Bond jumps out of the car. The KGB men kidnap Landros but don't get far: Spectre detonates the bomb inside his body. Anya is on a hill with a rifle/easel. She picks up by car a 007 who was fighting with Landros' men.



Anya drive him to a cliff where she forces him to climb into a basket in order to reach a monastery at the top of that cliff, in which the KGB members are disguised as monks... If by any chance you still doubt that it is the monastery which will appear in For Your Eyes Only, Maibaum specifies in the script that "the area is much like one called The Meteor[a]". 007 is locked in a cell with real monks but they help him escape by showing him a secret exit hatch. 007 knocks out a guard and slides down the basket rope to the bottom, as he/it swings with the wind.

Arriving at the bottom he finds himself facing Gogol... Accompanied by M. They go back to the monastery top where it is said that they will cooperate, even if on their side, each of the two agents receives the order to betray the other if they manage to get their hands on the tracking system.

Bond and Anya leave/come down from the monastery and get into a car, unaware that Rolz, a member of Spectre, has put a device in it that will trigger if the vehicle reaches 80 km/h. Arriving at said speed on a mountain road, the device punctures a tire of the car which then out of control, ends up at the bottom of a precipice, after the two agents jumped out of it. They turn towards Rolz and shoot the tires of his car which then meets the same fate as the other vehicle.

Bond and Anya set off again for Olso, Norway, as this is where Maibaum has relocated Spectre's clinic (although now as it is described as an institute / think tank) in theses versions. The Knork Institute (the spelling is "Kronk" backward) indeed recently developed a fishing satellite that uses technology similar to what they believe Spectre uses; so Gogol thinks it's worth taking a look at it.

NORAD (North American Aerospace Defense Command).

Meanwhile at the said Institute, Kronk from a room "like the one at NORAD" with a map displaying the positions of a hundred submarines; hijacks a British submarine, the HMS Ranger, in which Q is at. Gita at the Institute also kills Dr. Kyvig (whom Landros mentioned to Bond earlier) with a "mechanical butterfly" flying from her brooch/necklace and described as a "miniaturized remotely controlled aircraft" whose proboscis is a needle from which poison visibly comes out.

Bond and Anya arrive at Oslo airport where they are informed by Moneypenny of the disappearance of the submarine and the presence of a tanker that was nearby. They decide to go separate ways and meet at the Frognerparken; Anya gets into a taxi which turns out to be driven by Jaws.

As she waits for 007 between the statues of the parc, Jaws sneaks up behind her, ready to bite her. However Bond arrives in time and shocks Jaws with an electric stun gun (Taser).

They go to the Institute by motorbike. Here 007 no longer knocks Anya out: he enters (without her) and pretends to be looking for a job. Kronk and Marco receive him and tell him that there is no post available, neither there is any Dr. Kyvig.

Bond leaves and go with Anya for Bergen, to see the SS Tabasco (a photo of which was present in Kronk's office). Two Spectre trucks try to kill them on the road, but Bond pilots the bike in a way that doesn't happen, including jumping and dodging trees and rocks.

They board a train separately. At one point someone knocks on Bond's compartment door, he goes to open it thinking it's Anya, but it turns out to be someone else:

- Gita: Would you like company?
- Bond: If you're it I'd like that very much.
[...]
- Gita: I saw you in the waiting room. All the vibes were right and it's eight long hours to Bergen...
- Bond: I like your candid approach, miss...?
- Gita: Does it matter?

Mongstad refinery.

They make love while Anya, who saw Gita entering Bond's compartment, cannot sleep. During the act Gita thinks about killing him with her mechanical butterfly but changes her mind, finding he makes love to her so well. Once finished however, she takes action. Bond realizing what is happening, rolls Gita on top of him and it's her who is then killed by the butterfly's sting.

Later, Bond and Anya observe (without boarding) the tanker docked near the Mongstad refinery. 007 spots Jaws around and decides to go with Anya to a sauna to quietly discuss the fact that the waterline height of the tanker doesn't match the speed of the unloading tanks. "She has towels to cover the more censorable portions of her anatomy", Maibaum writes. They make love in the sauna while waiting for nightfall, during which they sneak aboard the Tabasco.

They then focus on the refinery and a Spectre man with a patch over one eye that they see. Using a gadget (an audio recorder-player in the form of a ring, used here to open voice locks), they get inside. They discover the training school for future Spectre's submarine crews. Spotted, they hide in a (cracking) tower from which they must emerge before ending up suffocated and/or incinerated. Bond uses a grenade to do this, the explosion plunging the refinery into darkness.

Subsequently Bond boards the American submarine USS Anthony Wayne, while Anya goes to investigate on the Institute side.

> - Captain Jones: I like it. Let's keep the crew cool. We're running a superspy movie tonight...
> - Bond: Never miss one.

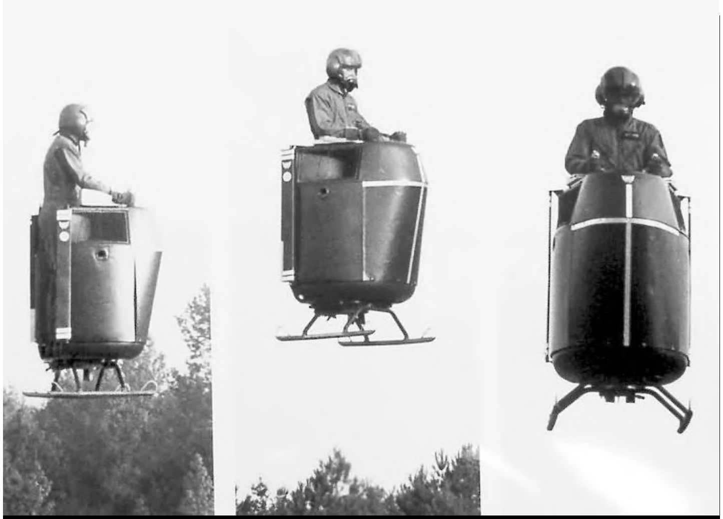
The submersible is captured by the tanker; Bond is in a cell with Q. On several occasions the script shows that Bond doesn't speak/understand Russian; this is strangely not the case for Q who is acting as a translator with the Russian crew.

Hidden in the food cart, 007 manages to get out of the cell and open the doors for the others (the English captain is named Talbot, the Russian Bolkov). There is then a battle between the prisoners and the crew of the Tabasco; Q initially tries to avoid the battle but still delivers a few melee blows a little further. The prisoners take control of the tanker and Kronk (who is not on board) gives the order to scuttle the ship (since it had no longer any use anyway).

"Djabi, Spectre fanatic, young Arab, converts himself into human torch and dives into oil tank"! Boom! The good guys flee the tanker aboard the Wayne submarine and join the Fearless with a WASP!

Bond borrows a Harrier and a pilot and goes to the Oslo Institute to confront Kronk and stop him from firing the missiles at the oil wells. There he is joined by Anya and Luka; they take down Marco and the man with the eyepatch (Bond got off the Harrier with an automatic in hand and grenades in his belt). In the NORAD-like room, Kronk says he swallowed deuterium and threatens to blow himself up with them with him, trying to buy time for the subs.



WASP : Williams Aerial Systems Platform.

> - Kronk: Yes, Mr. Bond. We want a world without governments. No armies, no navies, no law courts, no prisons...

Bond thinks Kronk is bluffing about the deuterium and shoots him in cold blood: no explosion. Fortunately, 007 and Anya seem to know about computers ("it's a simple IBM 370/76 computer system", says Bond) and they reprogram the submarines' targets so that they destroy each other (like in the film). Then Anya shoots sleeping powder at Bond from a cigarette.

When Bond regains consciousness, Anya and Luka are no longer there, as is the tracking device. However Anya left him a message with her location. He joins her in what is a foundry and she explains to him that she put him to sleep because of Luka's presence.

> - Anya: On the way [to the foundry], I gave Kuka the slip. I've been waiting for you...
> - Bond: Why?
> - Anya: Because we must talk. And settle what is between us. I don't want to betray you, James, or my country... [...] I always though people in our profession were only half-persons. Semi-monsters. I don't feel that way about us. I love you. Help me. What should we do?

Suddenly Jaws appears, entering by breaking a door which knocks Anya out of action. He and Bond then fight hand-to-hand, with Jaws managing to bite 007 several times. Similar to the film, Bond activates an electromagnet and sends Jaws into a furnace of the foundry.

Anya joins Bond with the tracking device:

> - Anya: Who kills whom for this, James?
> - Bond: My report will state Jaws took the bloody thing with him.
> - Anya: So will mine.

Together, they throw the tracking device into the furnace... Then find themselves together in Sardinia, like every year from now on.

Saltzman and Hamilton leave the Bond ship

During pre-production of The Spy Who Loved Me, the relationship between the two producers is at an all-time low and on the verge of exploding. It has been several years since the two producers each "alternated" a Bond film as "main" producer during filming; the two men becoming more and more irreconcilable.

In addition to the creative differences and the feeling of having to be behind Saltzman to extinguish (within quotation marks) the "fires" that he sometimes causes, Cubby is particularly frustrated by the low attention span that his partner can have, throwing himself permanently into various parallel projects:

> - Cubby Broccoli[44] : This is a personal opinion, but in essence Harry saw the 007 properties as the first step to conquering the world. Given a dozen pair of hands, Saltzman would be happiest having all the fingers in different pies. By contrast [for me], James Bond, cruising along to becoming perhaps the greatest success in motion pictures, was a sufficient challenge as far as I was concerned. So even as far back as our second or third picture together, Harry had one eye over the other side of the mountain. He'd make an appearance on the set or on location, do a lot of shouting, then he'd be off to France, Italy or someplace else, making a film, taking over a company, doing what he loves most of all: playing the celebrated entrepreneur.

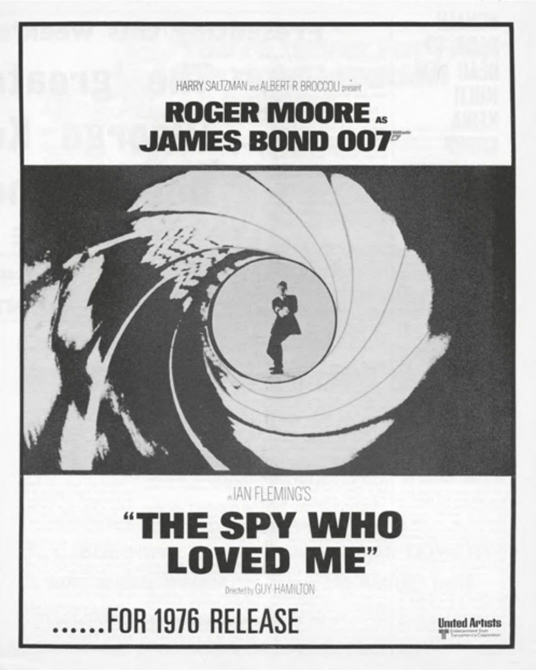
Outside Bond, Cubby Broccoli only made two films (including one with Saltzman) during his time producing Bond, making the franchise a priority to which he dedicated all his time. Saltzman, for his part, went on to produce or finance films such as the Harry Palmer trilogy, Falstaff (Campanadas a medianoche), Battle of Britain or Toomorrow, whose release was blocked for four decades following a complaint from director Val Guest because Saltzman wasn't paying him[45]. Harry acquires all kinds of intellectual property, often only to do nothing with it in the end.

The book When Harry Met Cubby has a passage that sums up Harry's versatile side well:

> [Len] Deighton always enjoyed these meetings with Saltzman, and never forgot one encounter in his office when his gaze was directed by Harry to a large cupboard piled high with screenplays, books and stage plays. "There's maybe 200 screen rights in there", Harry boasted. "There are things I'll probably never make". He grabbed one at random. "Look at this, I only bought it for the title. And this, let me show you this". Harry took a book off a shelf. "Read that", he said, opening it at the first page. Deighton read it. "Isn't that a great beginning", said Saltzman. Deighton agreed, it was a very gripping first paragraph. "That's all I bought it for", Harry admitted. "For that beginning".

Through acquisitions, commercial failures of some of his films, plus an investment that went wrong in Technicolor, Harry finds himself in financial difficulty despite the fortune he had made with Bond[46]. He is ready to put Danjaq as a pledge to bankers to repay its debts[47]. This is the final nail in the coffin of the relationship between the two producers. Cubby intends not to accept this and soon the two men find themselves face to face alongside their respective lawyers and legal advisors, including Michael G. Wilson on Broccoli's side[48].

In the end, Harry decided to resell his rights on Bond to United Artists in December 1975, without offering Broccoli the opportunity to buy them from him[49]. Saltzman thus abandons Bond and his position as co-producer; Broccoli now finds himself alone (with UA) in the production of the film. (After Bond, Saltzman had a film project which did not come to fruition and he left for Florida. After the death of his beloved wife he returned to England where he participated in the production of a few plays as well as only two other films[50]. He finally went to settling in France where he died in 1994, leaving behind his third wife Adriana and their three children).

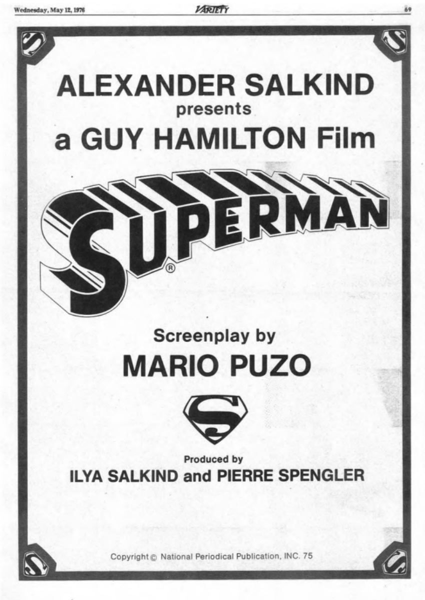


HARRY SALTZMAN and ALBERT R. BROCCOLI present
ROGER MOORE AS JAMES BOND 007
IAN FLEMING'S
"THE SPY WHO LOVED ME"
Directed by GUY HAMILTON
......FOR 1976 RELEASE
United Artists

"Directed by Guy Hamilton", said this promotional material at the time.

Before the issues between Broccoli and Saltzman had reached their conclusion, Guy Hamilton decided to leave The Spy Who Loved Me. At that time the Salkind brothers were preparing their Superman film, and Guy Hamilton wanted to be released from The Spy to direct it[51]. Hamilton will be announced as director of Superman in November 1975[52] and left the James Bond project. (As History would tell, Hamilton will not direct Superman, the film was finally released in 1978 and was directed by Richard Donner).

However Superman wasn't the only reason for Hamilton's departure, as Broccoli explains: "He claimed he couldn't continue to work with this terrible commotion going on between myself and Harry. [...] The legal wrangling was certainly the major reason for his leaving; Superman just sweetened the prospect"[53]. John Landis also recalls that Hamilton was frustrated by the bickering between the two producers and the delay that the film's development was taking because of it; "They're not going to make this fucking movie", he complained to Landis[54].



Wednesday, May 12, 1976
VARIETY
69
ALEXANDER SALKIND
presents
a GUY HAMILTON Film SUPERMAN
Screenplay by
MARIO PUZO
Produced by
ILYA SALKIND and PIERRE SPENGLER
Copyright © National Periodical Publication, INC. 75

Hamilton said of his last Bond films: "a lot of good ideas went out the window because if Cubby liked it, Harry didn't on principle" and vice versa[55].

Landis has the same memory: "[the producers were in separate offices]. Sometimes I would pitch it to Harry first and sometimes I would pitch it to Cubby first. They had the same response: What did the other one say? And basically if the other one liked it you were fucked. They were at war"[56].

- Tom Mankiewicz[57] : Guy Hamilton told me the quickest way to get a scene in that you really liked was to tell one of them that the other hated it. "That son of a bitch, he hates that scene? Well, that scene stays, goddammit!".

According to Maibaum, Cubby kept suggesting him to write the film, but Saltzman wouldn't allow it. So Cubby hired Maibaum through his own company, Warfield (which is true) and later transferred his contract to EON after Saltzman left[58].

Harry and Cubby were also not the only two who couldn't longer get along as Hamilton recalls: "I went to Hollywood for about a week to work with Dick Maibaum. Maibaum didn't want to work with me and I didn't want to work with Maibaum"[59].

Following the director's departure, Broccoli approached Peter Hunt (who wasn't available)[60] and then Lewis Gilbert, who had directed You Only Live Twice a few years earlier. Gilbert agrees to replace Hamilton. In December 1975, at almost the same time that Cubby and Harry's separation was announced, Gilbert was also announced as the new director of The Spy Who Loved Me[61].

KEN ADAM
CUBBY BROCCOLI
LEWIS GILBERT

Detour through Czechoslovakia and submersible car

At an unknown date, Maibaum provided a new 11-page treatment. This time the story begins on board the HMS Ranger submarine which is preparing to fire its missiles. World War III? No, just an exercise. Suddenly the submarine's systems malfunction and the commander exclaims when he sees something in the periscope that we don't see.

M is on the phone; he says he will assign his best agent to investigate the disappearance of the submersible. So James Bond who is in a hammock in Sardinia with a pretty girl (who is no longer Anya) is kidnapped by a helicopter sent by M.

On the Moscow side, we see Gogol also summoning his best agent. We see a "handsome rugged Russian, same type as Bond", but it's the girl who's in bed with him, Anya, who presents herself to the general.

After the credits, there are the scenes at the Clyde naval base. This time the tracing no longer comes from Cairo but from Prague in Czechoslovakia. In town, at the Knights of the Cross Monastery, Anya and Luka receive a report that 007 was seen at the airport.

Bond, at the embassy, is informed that it was a certain Lupek who brought the route of the submarine. Since Lupek works in a glass factory, Bond join a guided tour there. A pretty employee in front of him blows glass in the shape of a submarine at his attention. Intrigued, Bond approaches the girl and Maibaum describes her as "a bit of a nymphomaniac in a nice sort of way". He then learns that Lupek is an intermediary and that he is currently in an abandoned water mill.

Bond goes there but Jaws arrive first and kills Lupek. So 007 returns to the glass factory, where the KGB now waiting for him. There is then a hand to hand fight with lots of broken priceless glass objects, a bit like we will see in the following film, Moonraker (without katana here however). Bond doesn't emerge victorious as he is stabbed with a hypodermic syringe and is subsequently questioned with the electrodes. He escapes and finds himself "in Prague location to be found on recce" and loose his pursuers.

Further, during the Spectre reunion, Maibaum no longer wants Orson Welles for Number One, but Charles Gray who played Blofeld in Diamonds Are Forever. Spectre's operation is also renamed "Deep Snatch" (rather than "The Whole Enchilada"). Kronk takes power.

Amasova is ordered to kidnap Landros who is still a Greek, but this time who lives in Cairo. 007 also goes there and meets him in his villa before her. This time Bond and Landros are less alone than usual: there is a whole party in the villa with Anya among the guests. Bond and Landros talk in private then leave by car in order to give Landros an x-ray examination. The KGB and Spectre intervene, Landros explodes after Bond jumps off his car.

Anya arrives by car, but here Bond punches her in the jaw and knocks her out. He gets behind the wheel and drives her to the pyramids, where they talk through the tourists while she is his prisoner. Anyway Anya manages to slip away and meet a local KGB contact before Bond catch her again. The KGB man contacts Bedouins while Anya lures Bond into the desert, where he is then chased by Bedouins on camels.

007 takes a camel, catches up with Anya and makes her ride with him. They board a moving train to outrun the Bedouins. A little further Anya jumps off the train and heads towards an archaeological excavation site where there is a small pyramid. Bond pursues her and finds himself facing Gogol and M in the pyramid. There Bond and Anya are ordered by their superiors to go to Norway to investigate about the SS Tabasco and then on the Knork Institute.

They decide (especially her) that there will be no sex and to travel separately. At the airport Anya gets into a taxi driven by Jaws while Q hands 007 his "new sports car". Anya waits for Bond near a cable car and Bond saves her from Jaws in time with his Taser.

Then Gita, Marco and others appear on motorcycles. Bond and Anya get onto a motorbike themselves and there is a chase through and over buildings before they join the car given by Q and flee with (without a car chase).

(Without having gone to the Institute) they observe the tanker. While waiting for nightfall to infiltrate the boat, Bond suggests a picnic in a park. Champagne and caviar. However, it's not Anya who comes to join him, but Gita. She tries to kill him with the butterfly but he ends up killing herself with it. Anya arrives and sees Bond with Gita, she acts with jealousy before realizing that Gita is dead.

Bond and Anya then go to a sauna where they make love.

When night falls, Bond steers Q's car into the water where it transforms into a submarine. They watch the hull of the tanker when suddenly the car's electrical systems no longer respond. Bond and Anya are then stuck in the inoperative car, resting at the bottom of the water. They have a drink "to the spy who loved me". Just as they are about to suffocate from lack of oxygen, the car's systems revive and Bond is able to drive the car out of the water. Once done, they discover that the tanker has disappeared. (The tankers have have technology which disable the vehicles in its vicinity, it how it's abducting submarines and with Q's car breakdown and revived when the tanker sailed away).

> - Richard Maibaum[62] : Another innovation [...] was the car-sub. This was a suggestion of Lewis Gilbert, and was put into the script because he wanted something more astonishing than we already have.

In the next scene Bond parachutes to join the Wayne. For the first time, Anya is with him. Later captured inside the tanker, Bond and Anya form an escape that leads to a battle on board. They eventually join the Fearless and both get into a single Harrier plane to go to the Institute. There Bond kills Kronk who was bluffing and ends up being put to sleep by Anya.

He finds her at the foundry and confronts Jaws there. The final scene is not in Sardinia but in Q's underwater car, in each other's arms where they tell each other that they will have to go back at the surface eventually. When they do, they find themselves in front of Q and an entire recovery crew. Bond winces and makes the car dive for one last time...

January 8, 1976' script: ZYX, Ford and underwater bulldozer

After completing location scouting for the film in Budapest (Hungary)[63], Maibaum transformed his final treatment into a complete 124-page script which he completed on January 8, 1976. Here is what it's look like with a few revised pages from February 5:

The beginning is the same as before, we are just told that agent Amasova's code name is "ZYX" and that Gogol's secretary is named Monevitch (and described as "a male Moneypenny"). As Anya snaps to attention, the credits begin.

At the Prague embassy, Bond's informant is named Turner and Lupek's character has been renamed to Fehkes. Maibaum also renames the girl from the glass museum from Rosa to Rosika; Bond follows her to her house.

- Rosika: Why you follow me?
- Bond: I've never kissed a glass-blower...

[And after an endless kiss, which Bond is the first to break].

- Bond: I must say it's a breathtaking experience...
- Rosika: Is what else you not do?
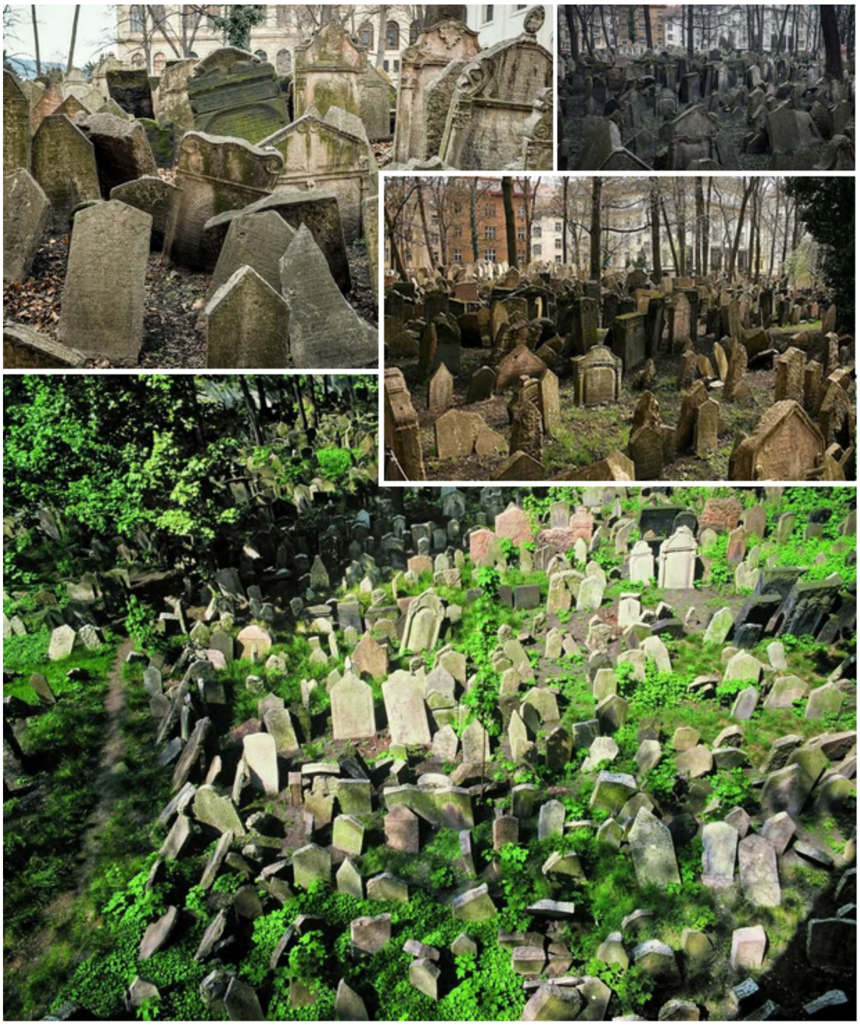
- Bond: I'll have to give that some thought. What haven't you done?
- Rosika: I never making love to me by [an] English.

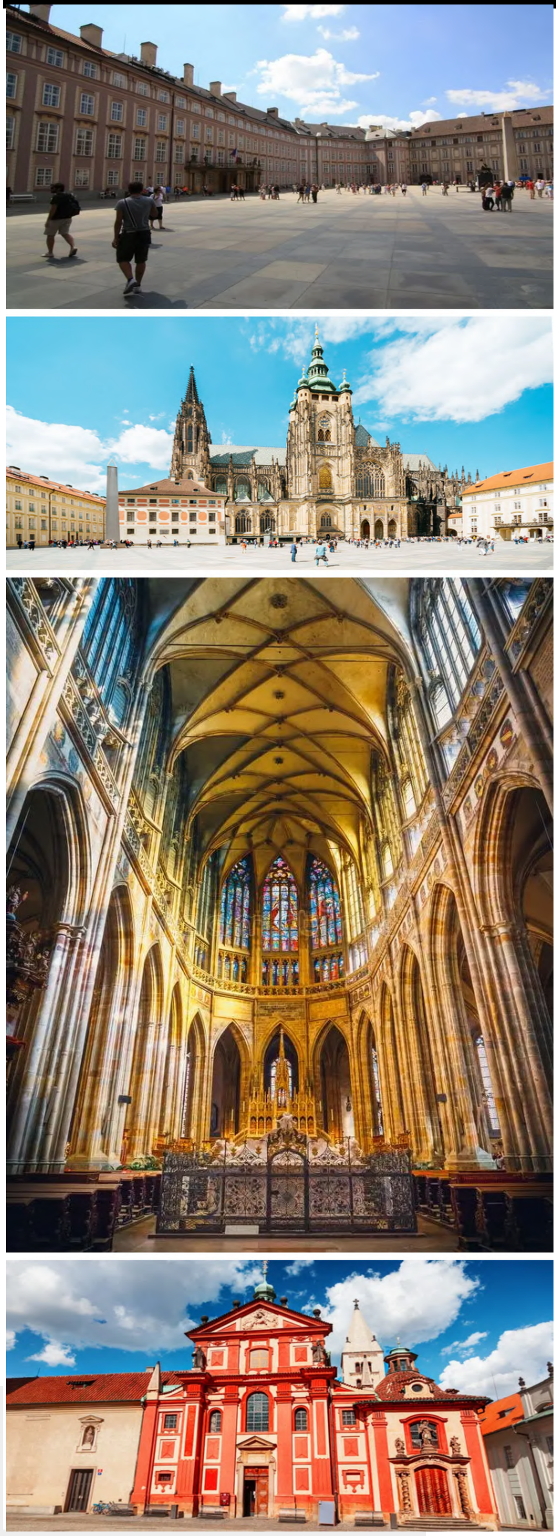
[After satisfying Mademoiselle, Bond learns that Fehkes is this time in the old Jewish cemetery].



Jaws (notably described as bald) kills Fehkes (described as a "pudgy Peter Lorre"). Bond sees Jaws and attaches a silencer to his PPK before tracking him down in the graveyard and losing him.

Bond therefore returns to the glass factory at night to search Fehkes' office (he uses a pen spraying acid to open a lock). Three KGB agents, including Luka, are waiting for him there. After the fight and the interrogation with the electrodes and the polygraph; Bond escapes and the location that was to be defined in the treatment has become Prague Castle, "a labyrinth of centuries old passageways, cellars, old fortifications, etc. (Actual location)".

After an indoor chase Bond exits through the Third Courtyard with a view on the St. Vitus Cathedral ("one of the most memorable sights of Prague", according to Maibaum). 007 enters the cathedral, comes out near the Saint-Georges basilica and loses his pursuers by mingling with a group of tourists on bicycles.



Third courtyard, St. Vitus Cathedral exterior and interior, and St. George Basilica.

At the Spectre reunion, Maibaum adds a white cat for Charles Gray and renames Elroy Kronk to Klement Kronk.

- Kronk: Let me introduce my family. This is Jaws. He was once tortured by the police who shattered his teeth and jawbones. I designed prosthetic ones to replace them...

From there this script starts to really deviate from the treatment. Bond, "disguised as an Arab", arrives on a donkey to an oasis where there is an old Beau Geste-like fort. With his clothes, Bond moves inside without raising suspicion and spots Landros, who is talking with Europeans, probably about taking back Spectre. Bond waits until Landros finds himself alone and, posing as his turbaned masseur, approaches him and breaks his bones by surprise:

- Bond: Talk, Landros. How does Spectre track nuclear submarines?
- Landros: Who the hell are you?
- Bond: Peter Pan.

Bond puts more pressure on Landros' body to make him speak and learns the name of Dr. Kyvig. He notices the scar from an operation and Bond realizes that Landros may not be the one responsible for the purge at Spectre as he suspected, but one of his victims. Bond then tells him about the bombs in the bodies. As they are about to leave the fort in Landros' Ferrari, the KGB raids and riddle the car with bullets. Bond jumps out before the Spectre's men blow it up with the Landros human bomb.

Bond spots Anya in a Land Rover and disarms her. They are now crossing a desert:

- Bond: You're an excellent driver.
- Anya: I have had extensive training in all types of transportation.
- Bond: So you're the fabulous female agent ZYX in person...
- Anya: I expected better of you, Double-O Seven. You'll be comparing me next with Mata Hari.
- Bond: So Mother Russia's gotten around to Women's Lib.
- Anya: [...] Sex in our profession is irrelevant. Merely a useful tool.
- Bond: I couldn't agree more.

After five years ...the first motion picture from the creators of "The Bridge On The River Kwai."
Columbia Pictures presents The SAM SPIEGEL · DAVID LEAN Production of LAWRENCE OF ARABIA
STARRING
ALEC GUINNESS · ANTHONY QUINN
JACK HAWKINS · JOSE FERRER
ANTHONY QUAYLE · CLAUDE RAINS · ARTHUR KENNEDY WITH OMAR SHARIF as 'Ali' ·
AND INTRODUCING
PETER O'TOOLE as 'LAWRENCE'
SCREENPLAY BY ROBERT BOLT · PRODUCED BY SAM SPIEGEL · DIRECTED BY DAVID LEAN
PHOTOGRAPHED IN SUPER PANAVISION 70® ·
A HORIZON PICTURE IN
TECHNICOLOR®

She asks him where they are going: somewhere where he can return the favor for the "electrifying bash" she had put on in his honor in Prague. Suddenly Bedouin bandits appear near them as the Land Rover runs out of gas. They are forced to stop, the Bedouins point their guns at them and Bond makes a reference to the 1962' film Lawrence of Arabia:

- Bond: I wonder what Peter O'Toole would do...

The Bedouins talk among themselves to decide what to do with them. Meanwhile Anya overpowers one and steals his camel; 007 joins her and climbs up behind her. The Bedouins pursue them on camels and gain ground. And just as Bond and Anya seem screwed, they come across a company of the Egyptian army on camels. The Bedouins are pursued and captured by the military.

- Bond: The U.S. Marines couldn't have timed it better.

Later, when they are both alone, there is a romantic sunset but she tells him that she doesn't share his "bourgeois penny post card sentimentality". At nightfall they huddle together to share the warmth of their bodies. While 007 sleeps, she leaves. However Bond had placed a tracking beacon in her clothes and the next day he caught her at the ruins in Luxor.

He puts her on a plane to Cairo where they join an MI6 hideout disguised as a restaurant. Bond discovers that M is not alone, Gogol is there too. They are ordered by their superiors to go investigate the tanker, which have been renamed SS Kronus. (However, they no longer have orders to investigate the Institute).

On a train to Bergen, Bond joins Anya in her compartment:

- Bond: It's eight hours from Oslo to Bergen...
- Anya: Seven.
- Bond: That's still a longish trip. There's really no point in being unfriendly. I suggest a few drinks, dinner in the dining car, and then.
- Anya: Thank you. I am on a diet.
- Bond: That's ridiculous. You haven't a surplus ounce on you, except in the proper places... [...] I still think my suggestion our cover should be lovers touring Europe was a good one.
- Anya: Obvious. Unnecessarily risky. If we are together too much we could be simultaneously liquidated. One of us must survive to accomplish our mission.

Bond sees that Anya's meal consists of black bread and thinks that, after all, it wouldn't be so bad for him to go to the restaurant car for dinner alone. There, while Bond eats, we also see Jaws sitting at a table nearby, noisily devouring food (including celery, which will be strangely important for a later script).

Later Jaws bites the lock of Anya's compartment door and appears to kill her. However, Jaws realizes that he actually bit into a watermelon with a wig on it ("All lady secret agents travel with several wigs, don't they?)", explains Maibaum). Bond and Anya appear, guns in their hands; however the arrival of the ticket inspector distracts them long enough for Jaws to launch himself through the window of the moving train and land on a hill after several rolls.

She thanks Bond for warning her and they go to sleep on their own compartment (and she locks the door). The next day Q welcomes them at the train station. He gives Bond the Taser and a car which turns out to be "the new model Ford sports car".

> - Q: Now pay attention, Double-O-Seven...
> - Bond: requested this item [myself], Q...
> - Q: Nevertheless we should review the modifications...
> - Bond: Q, there's a lady waiting.
> - Q: There usually is.

Q explains without being heard by us the specifications of the vehicle and asks Bond to try for once to bring back all his gadgets at the end of the mission. Bond leaves, telling Q that he really is a "superbrain"; Q thought about this compliment for a few seconds before approving it.

Bond and Anya go in the Ford to the Mongstag refinery to observe the SS Kronus. While waiting for nightfall, they check into a hotel under the name of Mr. and Mrs. John Ball. It's a bit of a step back in the film's writing process since it's an hotel made up of chalets/cabins like in previous treatments.

Anya comes out of the bathroom, shabbily dressed with poor taste:

> - Bond: You're a beautiful woman. Why do that to yourself?
> - Anya: The chic clothes I sometimes wear on a mission are costumes. Makeup is a disguise. You see me now as myself, an ordinary Soviet citizen completely disinterested in the frivolous degrading role expected of women in capitalist societies.

She takes out a pipe and starts smoking it. Bond, completely cooled in his ardor by ZYX's appearance and behavior, decides to go for a walk outside. There he meets Gita in a bikini who invites him to do not very Catholic things to her behind a hedge. Anya sees this through the cabin window and goes out. She also sees the mechanical butterfly when she approaches them and screams a warning to Bond who then returns Gita who meets the same fate as usual. This script has an interesting reference to On Her Majesty's Secret Service:

> - Bond (speaking of the butterfly): M can add this [one] to his collection.

They then decide to go to the hotel sauna where they end up having sex.

At nightfall they approach the tanker on foot, avoiding some searchlights. Anya takes out a KGB gadget: gloves and boots with suction cups on them, with which she climbs a tank to check its contents. Bond remains downstairs, trying to avoid Kazi (a Japanese member of the Spectre) who is patrolling the area.

Anya makes a noise, which then attracts Kazi's attention. Bond intervenes and fights hand-to-hand with the Japanese who has drawn a sword/katana. It ends with Bond drawing his Taser and knocking him out with it.

Anya comes back down and tells Bond that the tank is strangely empty. Suddenly bullets fizz near them: they have been spotted by security. Pursued, they fled towards the dunes. Suddenly a dozen of Spectre's henchmen arrive near them on motorcycles, including a man named Rolz. As they get back to the Ford, Bond give Anya a kind of spray that she uses on a biker: it projects a liquid plastic which solidifies quickly, preventing the biker who catch it on the hand from using his weapon.

The bikers are now chasing the Ford and Bond tells Anya to fasten her seat belt before propel the car into the water, where it becomes a submarine. Maibaum describes the transformation with shutters appearing on the window, seats that moving back and punctuates everything with a "(K. Adam, help!)".

They go to observe the tanker from below but as in the treatment, the Ford's systems become inoperable and Bond and Anya spend several hours trapped underwater. And while they lacking oxygen:

> \- Bond: This had to happen sooner or later. But I have no complaints. I've been lucky, had a good run, it couldn't go on forever...
> \- Anya: Tell me, James. Would you do it all over?
> \- Bond: I'm not sure. I've never told this to anyone but I can now since no one will ever know. I've always had a secret ambition to be a great ballet dancer.
> \- Anya: Amazing! That was mine, too. We could have done Swan Lake together at the Bolshoi. I have never failed on a mission before. Have you?
> \- Bond: No, but there's always a first time. Except in our business this first time's the last. [...] Don't worry, darling. I'm sure they'll make you a Hero of the Soviet Socialist Republics.
> \- Anya: But I already am one, James.

We discover that Bond can speak Russian (anew) in this script before the car starts working again when the tanker moves away.

On board of Kronus, once the American submarine was captured, Maibaum indicate that the prisoners had beards of several weeks and that there is women among the Spectre crew on the tanker (Q never boarded a submarine in this script, he is not among the prisoners). Here Bond doesn't get off the submarine with the other prisoners but hides in a torpedo tube. Hours later he comes out, swimming, with a knife between his teeth, then finds welding equipment from the tanker's crew which he puts on. With the helmet hiding his face, Bond moves through the ship and heads towards the cell switch which he activates to free the prisoners, including Anya.

The battle begins, with the American submarine's armory as the first prisoners' target for it's equipment. There is a small moment where both sides are out of ammunition and engage in hand-to-hand combat. Finally, with the ammunition contained in the submarine, the prisoners gain the advantage and end up taking the control room where there is a large map of the oil fields. The captain of the Kronus refuses the order to scuttle the ship and Djabi shoots him before dying as a human torch.

- Captain McGregor: [The] son of a bitch... Had me shot like a dog...
- Bond: Captain, can you hear me? Where's the tracking system?
- Captain McGregor: Kronk's Institute... Bergen.
- Bond: When's missile launch?
- Captain McGregor: Two... Hours.

The prisoners evacuate the tanker and Bond and Anya join the Fearless in WASP. The Harrier is piloted by Bond himself while Anya occupies the co-pilot's seat. With the reactor, Bond breaks a few windows/doors and sends people flying (including Jaws). On land they are joined by Luka and find Klement Kronk. There Maibaum plans to revisit the idea of human bombs by having the deuterium injected via a syringe rather than placed via surgery. So Kronk injects himself with something in front of our heroes. After Bond kills him, he explains to Anya that he knew he was bluffing because the substance in the syringe was not of the color of deuterium solution.

She puts 007 to sleep, there is the confrontation with Jaws in the foundry and the destruction of the tracking system (we don't know which of the two threw it into the oven, which is voluntary on Maibaum's part). Bond and Anya suggest the two of them go somewhere secluded to tie up the loose ends of the story about how Jaws took over the system.

We find them in the amphibious Ford when suddenly a Japanese' type of underwater bulldozer takes the car in its bucket.

Two models of amphibious bulldozer invented by Komatsu in the 70s.

- Anya: Spectre!

But no, it's Q who brings them back to the surface and who disapproves of the way Bond uses his equipment.

- Richard Maibaum[64] : With the car-sub incorporated, I was then able to work in an idea which have been floating around for some time; namely using a 47-ton underwater bulldozer which the Japanese had in fact developed. This had been suggested by an United Artists Production executive who had seen a photograph of this machine and suggested we use it in a James Bond film.

February 12, 1976' summary

On February 12, 1976, a 12-page treatment was written. This is basically a summary of the January 8 script. Interestingly, it all starts with an introduction:

> James Bond, Britain's Double-O Seven, and Anya Amasova, Russia's ZYX, as beautiful as Bond is handsome, are the two greatest secret agents in the world. The Spy Who Loved Me is the story of how they work together, under orders from their respective governments, to stop Spectre, an international criminal organization, from plunging both East and West into chaos.

In the content of the story is the same as before, with no interesting difference to note except that it says "they prepare to die together, making love" when the amphibious car broke down underwater.

February 27, 1976' script from: villainess, Omar and jetpack

A new 129 page script was completed by Maibaum on February 27, 1976. The first major change occur during the Spectre reunion. First, to enter the room, members must now scan a symbol implanted in their arm (Dr. Kyvig is now present during the meeting). Kronk after taking power and letting the furious Landros left, removes a fake bald head which then shows short hair. It is then revealed that Kronk is actually a woman!

> - Kronk: I never could have infiltrated the pigs without that.
> - Turner (the black): You're the greatest, sister Kronk!

> - Richard Maibaum[65] : The major alteration [...] I did [in this draft] was to change Kronk into a transvestite. This was intended to make Kronk a more weird a colourful character.

Maibaum also now gives Landros a scene where he visit a lead vault in a bank, to explain why the deuterium in his body doesn't explode when moment Kronk presses the detonator.

Bond arrives at Landros' fort, accompanied by a man from M named Yussif. However, he goes inside alone. To the question "who [are] you?", Bond now answers "Rudolph Valentino" instead of Peter Pan. 007 no longer pretends to be a masseur but puts a knife to Landros' throat while he sleeps. Maibaum also describes Landros' car as a "Ferrari limousine", undoubtedly an error on his part: the brand doesn't manufacture limousines.

Later in the desert, Anya suddenly maneuvers the Land Rover to eject Bond. 007 falls into the sand and shoots a tire with his PPK; the 4x4 crashes into a rock and Anya is thrown from it. With the car broken, they now have a 64-kilometre walk through the desert to Luxor. They spend the night against each other for warmth and during a sandstorm, spot an oasis. They notice that it is occupied by Bedouin drug smugglers, approach discreetly and steal a camel.

Rudolph Valentino (1895-1926), Italian/American actor.

Omar Sharif (1932-2015), Egyptian actor, here in the 1962 film Lawrence of Arabia. A film that The Spy Who Loved Me sought to reference several times during its writing. The film ended up making several of them, such as the clothes Bond (and Hosein) wear in the scene where he visits Sheik Hosein (the revised shooting script writes "Lawrence of Arabia" on the paper to describe 007's outfit), or the presence of an excerpt of the film's music when Bond and Anya stroll through the desert. Also in the film: an extract of Doctor Zhivago music, a movie in which Sharif play the main role.

Once the storm passes, the Bedouins begin pursuing Bond and Anya until they come across the Egyptian army, led by a lieutenant named Omar "who looks like [his] namesake Omar Sharif"! Maibaum imagines a whole battle in 11 stages between the Bedouins and the military with "expert advice on camel corps tactics and manoeuvers required".

Omar offers Anya to her take back to town; Bond can do nothing but follow them. He loses track of Anya in the temple of Karnak (ironically, she is hidden exactly where Bond was hiding in previous treatments). Bond returns alone to the MI6 hideout where he discover Anya, Gogol and M.

Anya is also less fierce than before since she sleeps with Bond on the train, after their encounter with Jaws. Further in the cabin hotel, the dialogues of Anya being shabbily dressed arriving earlier in this script (on the train), there is new dialogues here. So Anya suggests sleeping separately:

- Bond: After last night?
[...]
- Anya: We both know an emotional entanglement between agents is unthinkable.

She however agrees to have dinner with him and while they are at a table, Kronk (disguised as a man) and Gita are at another table not far away. Gita smiles at 007 and Anya says, "that girl's interested in you". Bond approaches her at the buffet:

- Bond: Try the herring in wine sauce. It's delicious.
[...]
- Gita: I'll be in the garden later.
- Bond: What a coincidence. So will I. Bon appétit.

Bond and Gita then meet in a sort of greenhouse and embrace, while Kronk hidden nearby operates a mechanical butterfly and approaches them. 007 sees the reflection of the butterfly in a window and turns Gita towards it before the strikes. Bond had indeed noticed that:

- Bond: Somebody didn't know the swallowtail pupilia doesn't pupitate this early in Scandinavia.

Bond and Anya end up observing the tanker. 007 decides to take a closer look, takes out a jetpack from the trunk of the Ford and flies onto a vat! After inspecting it, a helicopter piloted by Rolz appears in the air and begins to chase (and shooting) at 007 on the jetpack.

Bond goes to take refuge in a forest; 007 returns fire with a helmet-mounted machine gun and hits the co-pilot. Rolz continues the pursuit, shooting himself with the dead co-pilot's machine gun. But Bond has another trick up his sleeve: rockets fired from the jetpack explode the helicopter.

Bond returns to Anya at the Ford and lands. Suddenly six motorcycles arrive and chase them on an off-road terrain; Bond throws his car into the water. The car broke down and in this script the secret ambition Bond says he have is a trapeze artist (Anya says hers is a saddle-less horse rider).

The rest is similar to before except that the submariner Jonah Carter survives in this script; Bond and Anya join the Fearless by helicopter (and no longer by WASP).

Further on, upon arriving at the Institute aboard the Harrier, Maibaum writes (finally, I want to say!): "Bond could also use rockets [from the jet]". Kronk says that she wants a new world "without governments. No armies, no navies, no police, no law, no prisons, no schools, no churches"!

In this script it's Anya and not Bond who thinks that Kronk's bluffing. Kronk herself reveals that she was bluffing before rushing towards Bond with syringes. Anya takes down Kronk before she can touch Bond.

Enter Christopher Wood

Maibaum would later say of Lewis Gilbert: "He and I didn't get along, somehow didn't jive"[66]. Maibaum remembers that he was followed by Christopher Wood on this film: "Gilbert, the director, liked his work; I didn't", the screenwriter recalls in the post-Moonraker years[67].

Christopher Wood[68] (1935-2015), unfulfilled in his work in a communications/advertising agency, decided towards the end of the 1960s to start writing novels. This then resulted in a series of books Confessions of/from [a Window Cleaner, a Driving Instructor, a Travelling Salesman, etc.]. Sales were good enough for a film adaptation to be considered, with Wood serving as screenwriter to adapt his own novel for the screen. Failing to be a critical success, the erotic comedy Confessions of a Window Cleaner (1974) on the big screen proved to however be a commercial success and sequels, still written by Wood, were released.

Someone from the production of these films recommended Wood to director Lewis Gilbert who was working on a new film around 1975, Seven Nights in Japan: Wood becomes the screenwriter. While the film has not yet been released, Gilbert is entrusted with directing the new James Bond and decides to bring Christopher Wood back to help him on this new project.

This is how Wood received a phone call one day from Gilbert who asked him if he would be interested in reworking the script for The Spy Who Loved Me and take part in a scouting trip to Japan with some of the main members of the production[69]. Wood was enthusiastic about the idea and after negotiations between his agent and EON Production, he was hired. Wood, on the other hand, was much less enthusiastic about Fleming's novel, but knew from Gilbert that the film shouldn't be inspired by it in any case[70].

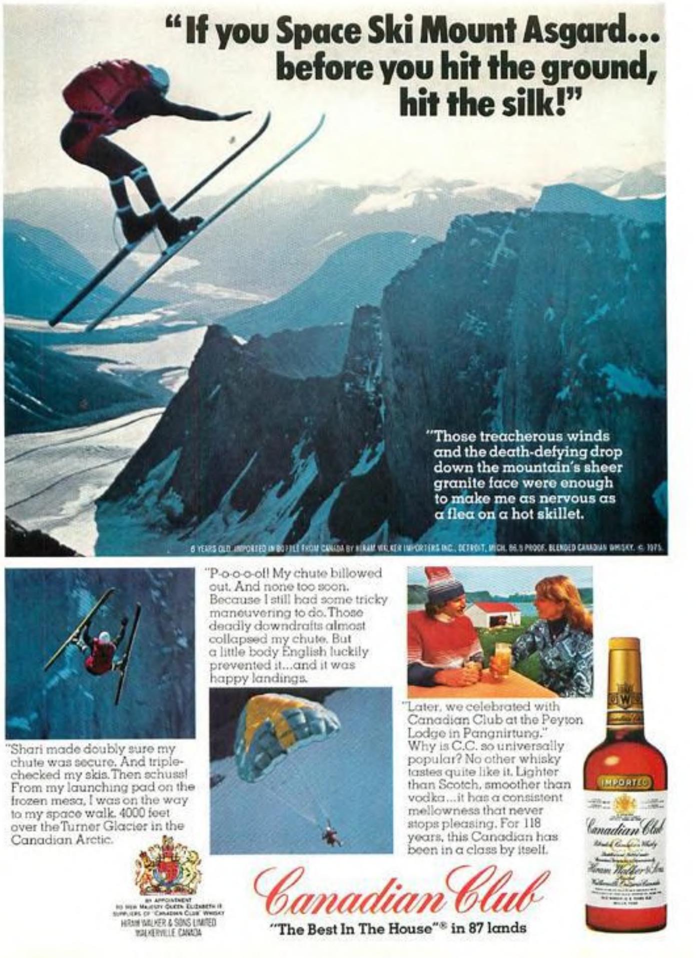
Reading the existing script, Wood found that the villains were the biggest problem: the new Spectre made up of a group of young political terrorists failed to impress him and he didn't find the concept "Bondian" enough in itself[71]. Broccoli also had a problem with the concept, as Maibaum recalls: "Rightly or wrongly, Cubby thought it was too political. So many young people in the world support those people that we would have scrambled sympathies in the picture"[72]. United Artist had the same feeling[73].

Speaking of villains, Wood is also unsure about Jaws, which he finds a bit too cartoony and in the same time escaped from a horror movie[74]. He's also not too excited about Norway[75]. According to Michael Wilson, the Bond girl also poses a problem: "the first time we met Christopher [in Paris], what we had to make sure was we had a good basic plot and a good relationship between Anya and Bond. [...] Our initial attack on the story [...] was to see whether the relationship between the main characters and the basic plot was solid and good"[76].

After the trip to Japan, Wood worked on the film's script from London[77]. To this end Wood doesn't work with Richard Maibaum as he explains: "I only saw Mr. Maibaum once in my life: when [one day] he was entering Cubby's office as I went out [...] and I do not think we were even introduced"[78]. When he began rewriting the script, Wood was also unaware of all the screenwriters who had worked on the film before Maibaum[79].

> - Christopher Wood[80] : The working routine developed at EON meant that I would wander round the office [at EON's South Audley Street building] after a leisurely breakfast, where Lewis would join me. We would discuss the script in Cubby's office if he wasn't there, or sometimes if he was. Ken Adam and Michael Wilson would join us from time to time. [...] After lunch there might be some more talk about the script but normally people would have other things to do and I would retire to the Park Lane apartment [owned by EON, where I was staying] and write, or perhaps doze. It was a pleasant, civilized time, and in the evening Michael Wilson and his wife Jane might invite me to dinner at their home or Cubby take me out for a meal and then on to the Clermont Club, where I would leave him playing backgammon.

April 22, 1976' script: Stavros, Aquapolis, P and Lotus



"If you Space Ski Mount Asgard... before you hit the ground, hit the silk!"
Canadian Club
"The Best In The House"® in 87 lands
IMPORTED
Canadian Club

"Those treacherous winds and the death-defying drop down the mountain's sheer granite face were enough to make me as nervous as a flea on a hot skillet.

"Shari made doubly sure my chute was secure. And triple-checked my skis. Then schuss! From my launching pad on the frozen mesa, I was on the way to my space walk. 4000 feet over the Turner Glacier in the Canadian Arctic.

"P-o-o-o-of! My chute billowed out. And none too soon. Because I still had some tricky maneuvering to do. Those deadly downdrafts almost collapsed my chute. But a little body English luckily prevented it...and it was happy landings.

"Later, we celebrated with Canadian Club at the Peyton Lodge in Pangnirtung."

Why is C.C. so universally popular? No other whisky tastes quite like it. Lighter than Scotch, smoother than vodka...it has a consistent mellowness that never stops pleasing. For 118 years, this Canadian has been in a class by itself.

Hiram Walker & Sons Limited
Walkerville Canada

Michael Wilson, reading an issue of the magazine Playboy, comes across an ad for whiskey of the Canadian Club's brand[81]. This one shows a skier launching himself from a precipice on Mount Asgard and then opening a parachute. Seeing this, Wilson thinks it could make a great stunt for the pre-title sequence. The skier in the ad, Rick Sylvester, is contacted: it turns out that the stunt is fake, a photo montage (taken, however, from a similar stunt performed a few years earlier by Sylverster in Yosemite), but Sylverster is nevertheless convinced of being able to do it for real[82]. It is therefore decide to include this stunt in the new scripts.

A "first draft" script dated April 22, 1976 credited solely to the name of Christopher Wood (122 pages) includes this stunt in particular. It turns out that someone had handwritten the words "Affidavit of Kevin McClory" on my copy. For the record, McClory discovered that the script of he film contained the SPECTRE organization and elements similar to the rival James Bond film he was trying to develop on his own, Warhead (which we will have the opportunity to talk about in another chapter). Objecting to all of this, as well as the use of Blofeld (although this name doesn't appear in any script/treatment we studied as part of the Spy Who Loved Me, only "Number One" is written), McClory takes legal action[83]. This would lead Christopher Wood and Richard Maibaum to go to the court to give their testimony. Michael Wilson's lawyer background will once again prove to be a plus for the production.

The script still opens on the submarine Ranger of which we saw the abduction after an exercise. A little further on Bond is in a mountain chalet, making love to a girl. As in the film, he receives a message via his watch to go and present himself to M.

- Bond: Somebody wants me.
- Girl: But I want you!
- Bond: You're not England.

Bond gets on skis (and while he is not being chased by anybody) jumps off a cliff and opens a parachute which, detail signed Wood[84], has the motif of the Union Jack. Below is a lake and as he falls, Bond grabs his ski pole and points it towards a boat before shooting a rope onto a harpoon from the pole. Bond hits the water, releases his parachute and the boat picks up speed. Bond, still on his skis, is now water skiing behind the boat where the harpoon embedded. He thus reaches the shore where he gets into a vehicle containing a radio with which he contacts M:

> - M: About time!! Have you been asleep 007?
> - Bond: Yes, sir. I did drop off for a few minutes.

On his side, Gogol still speaks to his secretary, renamed Rubelvitch (but who is still a man), to summon his agent, now "XXX". She is described as "a woman of quite extraordinary loveliness and sensitivity [...]. There is a quality of sadness and uncertainty about her as if she [...] was lacking something in her life".

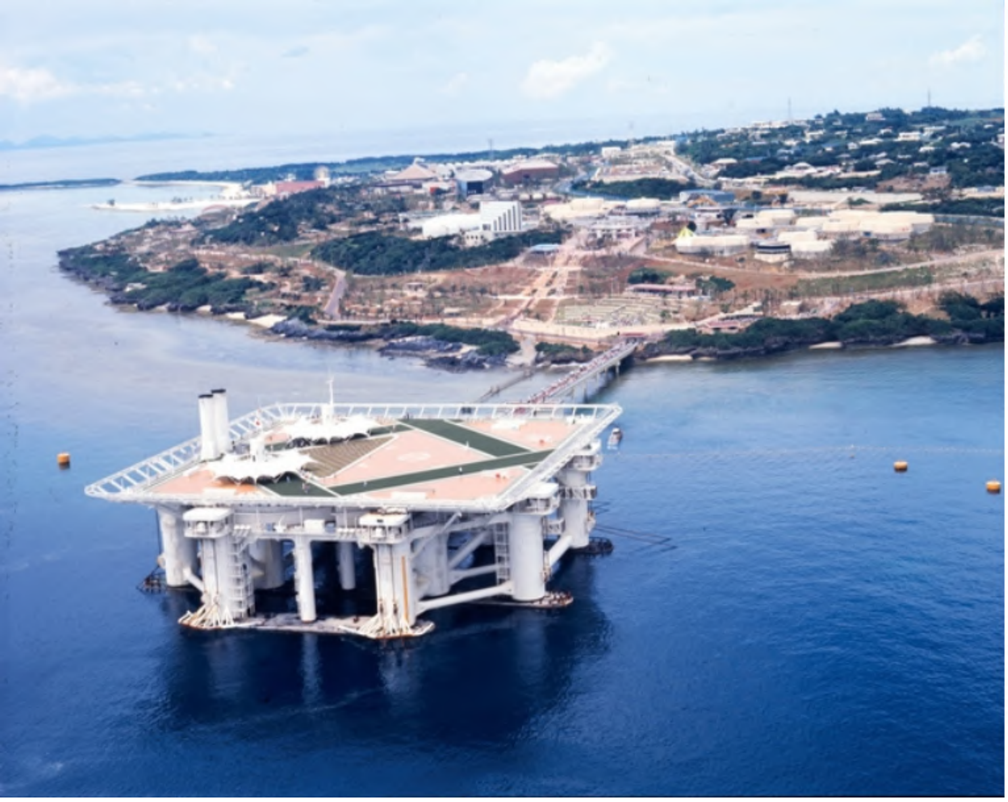
ROYAL NAVY
305

After the credits, we are treated with the scenes of the naval base which now contain Bond in Commander's uniform and a certain "Captain Hargreaves". Someone in Egypt (no longer Czechoslovakia) offers the British to buy the plans for the tracking system and that's where M sends his agent to investigate.

Bond goes to a museum in Cairo and meets an employee there named Farwagi (unaware that he is being observed by Anya and Luka). "Sterling, from London [...] I believe you have something to sell". Farwagi (it was also considered to name the character Fetish) tells him that this is not the right place to discuss it; he arranges a meeting at his home at 8:00 p.m., telling Bond that he also has another buyer on the case.

Meanwhile there is a Spectre meeting chaired by the villain named Markos "The Greek" Stavros, described as "cadaverous and fishlike". He told the other members that the tracking system operation was a real success, but "I regret to have to inform you that there has been an act of treachery in the organization". Stravos tells Number 5 that he took the liberty of summoning his secretary and when she arrives, she passes through a room that locks and floods; a shark comes and finishes her off.

The meeting is adjourned and the other members leave by helicopter which takes off from the dome of the "Aquapolis" which rises from the sea.



Edition De Luxe Post Cards
EXPO'75
Aerial, Marine and Nocturnal Views
第2集
EXPO'75
INTERNATIONAL OCEAN EXPOSITION, OKINAWA JAPAN, 1975
(標準版)
EXPO'75
海洋博
空から・海上・夜景から
第2集
沖縄国際海洋博覧会 記念絵はがき

The Aquapolis was a structure exhibited in Okinawa (Japan) as part of the International Ocean Exhibition of 1975-1976 (Expo '75) ; it was often described as a "floating city". Depending on weather conditions, the Aquapolis could partially rise or dive into the ocean, similar to Atlantis in the film. This is where Wood went on scooting trip with Gilbert, Adams and Broccoli shortly after the exhibition ended, with the intention of using the structure for the film[85]. However, scheduling problems and Ken Adam's dissatisfaction with the Aquapolis meant the idea was abandoned[86] (although shots of Stromberg's fish in the film were filmed in Okinawa[87]). The Aquapolis was kept in place well after the exhibition, where it remain open to the public until 1993 before being scrapped in 2000.

- Ken Adam[88] : It looked like a big floating oil platform, [...] I didn't like it. It was gigantic, though, and at first I tried to make it work for us by designing it in a way to make use of models and matte paintings. But I never could get anywhere on that. It had an immense heliport on the top of the structure, which wasn't necessary. You didn't need a heliport that big. When we were in Okinawa, the Aquapolis wasn't quite completed. They were still planning to give it huge solar panels. Since the Aquapolis was a big disappointment, I decided to design something entirely new.

Stavros looks away from the helicopter and sees Naomi, a very pretty Greek woman. He returns to the meeting room; we see that Noami has left her dress there. The walls of the meeting room now give way to glass windows through which the ocean is visible, with Noami swimming naked in it. "Stavros watches the fish nuzzling Naomi's naked body and it is clear that the sight turns him on. The flutter movement of his crossed self-hugging hands builds up and his mouth gulps faster. Naomi weaves upward and we move close in on Stavros's cold, unblinking fish-like eye".

Bond goes to Farwagi's house and runs into a woman named Felicca who informs him that his host will be late.

A similar scene was shot but cut in the editing process, as you can see from these pictures.

- Felicca (looking at the bed): He asked me to look after you. Is there anything that you would like? A drink, maybe?
- Bond (looking at the bed): There's something I'd like even better.
- Felicca: Oh yes?
- Bond: Information. [...] [Throwing Felicca half off the balcony]. Talk, or you'll be Egypt's first woman in space.

She tells him that Farwagi went to meet someone else at the City of the Dead. Bond says he'd better go and offers to "drop" her somewhere along the way if she wants.

At the City of the Dead there is Jaws, who before killing Farwagi, is drinking a can of beer. Jaws is notably described as having huge hands and it written: "(use miniature [of the can] to get [the] effect)". When he kills Farwagi we hear a sound "like someone crunching into stick of celery (Jaws's signature tune)".

Bond returns to the museum after finding the body, the Q pen he uses contains a drill (instead of acid). He finds a paper on which an appointment with a certain Landros has been written. Bond leaves Farwagi's office and is attacked by two KGB men in the museum which contains pottery, mummies, busts of pharaohs and other priceless objects which end up damaged in the battle that follows.

- The Los Angeles Times[89] : Broccoli is enthusiastic about the Egyptian location. "We've got some wonderful stuff here", he said. "Egypt's never been properly used as a background". Some of the more outrageous scenes, alas, had to be junked purely to save time. One had Bond in a tremendous fight in the mummy's room of the Cairo Museum-cannoning so hard against the mummies' cases that he caused the ancient kings to collapse in small, neat piles of dust.

Bond ends up getting knocked out with a statuette and is interrogated by the KGB. When his zipper is opened to place the electrodes:

- Bond: You might warm your hands first.

Anya enters the room and we can read that "as she looks down at Bond's crutch, her eyes widen in horror. Is it the size of our hero's dick or the nasty things that are being done to it?"! She reprimands her colleagues: we cannot question him if he is unconscious.

- Bond: I hope I didn't shock you.

As Luka detaches the electrodes, Bond activates the electric power and kicks him in the crotch before fleeing by jumping into the water from the boat they were on. Luka unloads a magazine into the water; 007 does not surface and disappears.

Bond goes to the "Luxor Club" (in a tuxedo) to find Landros but runs into Anya.

- Bond: What a surprise! Just popped in to check the voltage?
- Anya: If you had waited last night, I would have apologized.

Anya reveals some interesting information about Bond (even if the dates she gives don't match those of the film releases):

- Anya: Commander James Bond, Royal Navy. Recruited by the British secret service in 1963. Indicated in abstentio for the assassination of four Heroes of the Soviet Union. Married in 1970. Wid...
- Bond: All right, you've made your point.

Anya takes out a powder case and Bond takes it to check: there is indeed a cassette recorder in it. She leaves the bar to join Landros who is playing backgammon. Bond pushes a waiter so that a drink falls on Anya's dress and while she goes to the bathroom to clean up, he sits down opposite Landros. They play for money and the screenwriter writes in a note that his knowledge of the rules of backgammon is superficial but that he has written a scene that someone who doesn't know them should be able to follow.

In the dialogues, the game's bets reflect the selling price of the tracing system plans. Bond manages to win £128,000, which angers Landros before he is being informed that there is a phone call for him. "It's probably your bank manager", comments 007.

Similar to the movie, Jaws kills Landros. Bond leaves the Club to pursue him and narrowly misses being run over by Jaws in his car. Bond spots a "distinguished Arab and two wives" in the parking lot and steals his "enormous American car" to pursue Jaws. Before he drives off, Anya sits in the passenger seat with a gun in her hand.

- Bond: Do you want me to put my hands up?

Bond does this as the car moves dangerously towards another vehicle. 007 puts his hands back on the wheel at the last moment: Anya did not give in. She tells him to follow Jaws, Bond replies that they want the same thing: "he [Jaws] just took a bite out of my personal fortune". A herd of goats comes to block their way:

- Bond: I have always hated goats. If grass is full of chlorophyll, how can they smell so bad?

This isn't the only weird dialogue there since Bond follows up with a "Get your beard trimmed, Grandma!" towards a goat. Anya understands that Jaws is heading towards the "Mahazi temple" ("this is, of course, an invention. Site to be selected", clarify Wood) since Farwagi had interests there.

On site, Jaws recovers a microfilm but Anya arrives with her weapon. Jaws makes a move that sends dust into her eyes, grabs Bond's gun and twists it. There is a hand-to-hand fight between Bond and Jaws under a scaffold and like in the film, 007 brings the whole thing crashing down onto his enemy. Jaws is not dead however, and attacks them when they try to leave the temple in a car. Anya at the wheel manages to get rid of him but now the car looks like "a refugee from the Keystone Cops".

There is then something interesting: unlike the scripts that we have seen previously (and the ones we will see later), the character of Jaws here has lines of dialogue while he contacts an "Spectre Arab band" by radio. It's a simple "Yaaaaa!!!" at the beginning but Wood follows up with "Jaws splutters for a couple of seconds before shouting phrase in Arabic".

The car runs out of gas in the desert. An Arab on a camel and his wife walking behind approach them. In the next scene Bond and Anya took their clothes and the animal:

- Anya (walking behind Bond): I thought Englishmen were supposed to be chivalrous.
- Bond: They are, terribly. But we're Arabs now. Woman always walk behind; except when crossing a minefield. We'll attract less attention like this.

Gunshots land near them: the men Jaws talked with are now there and charging them on camels. Anya mounts behind Bond and they flees while Anya throws a necklace behind her containing explosives. They arrive at a dock where there is a sailboat:

> - Bond: Sorry, I don't know the Arabic for "please, may I borrow your boat?".
> - Anya (in Arabic): Please, may I borrow your boat?

There is oil barrels are on the pier and Bond and Anya light them to create a wall of fire between them and their pursuers. The barrels end up exploding along with the pier and the Arab gang of Spectre.

There is then a somewhat romantic scene on the boat as they sail into the dusk. Wood writes that he would like Anya to pronounce "James" as "Jimes" in (the entire) film. 007 says he hopes the microfilm won't get in their way and picking up its box, hears that it is empty.

> - Bond: Where is it?! Come on!! I'll strip you naked if I have to!
> - Anya (feigning disappointment): I thought you wanted to.
> [Anya takes the microfilm out of her dress and throws it into the water].
> - Anya: There. Now neither of our countries will have the tracking system at the expense of the other.
> - Bond: You...! (He stops himself from slapping her) Wait til I get you to Cairo!

In Cairo, Bond still dressed as an Arab, takes Anya to a metal workshop which hides an MI6 hideout.

> - Moneypenny: Why James! I've never seen you looking so chic/Sheik.
> - Bond: [...] May I present my prisoner? [...] Triple X, licensed to kill.
> - Anya: And dying to.

When Bond opens M's door he finds himself in front of Gogol, who has a gun in his hand. However it is a lighter and M joins them. Unusually, M allows himself a joke. Indeed the Soviet counterpart of Q, which is called P, is present:

> - M: So now you'll have to watch your Ps and Qs, ha, ha!

"Bond winces at M's joke and Anya raises eyebrows"! Anyway, Bond doesn't mention that Anya destroyed the microfilm and they go to a briefing room. They learn that the remains of a letter found in Farwagi's office mention a Greek island marine research laboratory owned by Markos Stavros, whom M describes as the richest man in the world. Their mission is to investigate this lead.

Before leaving they go to Q's laboratory, which Q and P share, not really in a collaborative atmosphere; they are "like two old ladies being forced to share a house". P is described as a version of Q with a beard, so much that Wood suggests that Desmond Llewelyn single-handedly plays both roles!

> - Q: Having to collaborate with the Russians. Have they gone raving mad?!
> - P: It is insanity to work with the British!

Esther Williams, American competitive swimmer and actress in films that notably featuring swimming scenes. She is the code name given by Bond to Q's underwater car in this script.

P presents Anya with a suspender belt that shoots darts and one lodge in a portrait of Brezhnev when he demonstrates it to her, which horrifies him. Bond asks Q to have "Esther Williams" for his mission; "Oh no!", exclaims Q.

P scolds Anya for not bringing back one of his gadgets intact, "do you think that the KGB are made of roubles?". He provides her with a new spare purse containing a blade, a hidden gun and a lipstick-grenade.

P and Q accuse each other of watching what the other does/provides and the scene ends with Anya calling Bond to P a "bourgeois chauvinist pig".

Bond and Anya are then on a train to Greece, undercover:

- Bond: I wonder how the railway company got the idea we were on our honeymoon.
- Anya: I wonder.

Similar to the previous scripts: they have separate compartments, Bond eats alone, hears Jaws eating his celery and foils his attempt to kill Anya. Jaws jumps out the window of the train and Anya decides to sleep alone. A flower in a bouquet in front of Bond have a phallic shape, Bond flicks it and the flower collapses; writes the screenwriter to emphasize the fact that he is not going to have sex tonight!

We later find our two spies at a hotel in Greece and we see that Bond has meanwhile received a new car, which this time is indeed a Lotus (but a red one). Anya asks him incidentally why he needs such a dashing car instead of a "simple peoples' car". We also learn during this scene that Bond learned the Greek language at Cambridge.

Anya sees through her glasses (which are actually binoculars) Naomi in a boat from Stravros' laboratory approaching the hotel. Bond goes to flirt with Naomi off-screen while Anya watches from afar with "disgust and repugnance". Bond returns to Anya and says he got from Naomi the opportunity to visit the laboratory, and in a line of dialogue that you probably didn't see coming:

- Anya: Huh. She is cheap and vulgar, Jimes. Do not trust her.
- Bond: You never have a good word for anybody, do you? You're like my mother.

Naomi brings Bond (alone) to the Aquapolis where he meets Stavros under the cover of a marine biologist. The scene and its dialogues are almost identical to the film. Afterwards Stavros addresses Jaws and Naomi saying, "That is James Bond. Let him get ashore and kill him!!".

Why not kill him directly in the Aquapolis isn't explained but allows the screenwriter to write a car chase scene. So just like in the film Bond, driving the Lotus with Anya at his side, avoids an explosive sidecar by zigzagging between two trucks. Bad guys in cars show up (Jaws not included) and Anya uses a lighter that P had previously given her to spray some sort of black paint on their windshields. They are then pursued by a plane equipped with machine guns and piloted by Naomi. Bond propels the Lotus into the water where it transforms into a submarine before launching a missile at the plane.

The car breaks down as in previous scripts and Bond sees this as an opportunity to have sex with Anya. However, unlike previous scripts, they don't spend hours underwater: Anya almost immediately presses a button on the car which makes it operational again. "I stole the plans [of this car] two years ago", she comments.

Bond and Anya then approach the Aquapolis and see a room with a huge globe, Bond activates a gadget in the car which is a camera. Their presence is detected and divers equipped with "underwater bazooka[s]" are dispatched. The weapon fired near the Lotus causes water infiltration and Bond clears the scene by hitting the divers and using two gadgets: exhaust pipe emit a cloud of black liquid and the rear bumper, which detaches from the vehicle, becomes a time bomb. The Lotus comes out of the water on a tourist beach.

Bond returns to the hotel (without Anya) where he discovers in his room a "beautiful, mature girl" named Hannah. Since he entered PPK by hand, the girl puts her hands in the air and "we see her well-formed breasts, or as much of them as the censors will allow before cutting to Bond's deadpan face". We don't know who Hannah really is (apparently an MI6 field agent) but it was Bond who brought her and she brings him a document on which is the position of all of Stavros' ships that were near of Ranger during its disappearance. Also relying on the photo of the globe taken earlier, Bond has a lead: the tanker Kronus (the names Tabriz and Kaonus were also considered, it was ultimately named Kronus in reference to Cronus/Kronos, the God who swallowed his childrens). Before going back to Anya, Bond beds Hannah.

Bond and Anya join the submarine USS Wayne which end up to be captured by the tanker. After disembarking the crew, two Spectre' men equipped with gas masks go check that no one remains on board of the submarine. Bond and Anya overpower them and emerge from the submersible incognito with the masks on their faces. They are later spotted and a shootout begins, Bond is captured and brought to Stavros who is on board the ship:

- Bond: Do you intend to hold the world to ransome, Stavros?

> - Stavros: No, I intend to destroy it. Or rather, initiate the destruction that I have every confidence will be more than satisfactorily carried out by others. [...] It is the antidote to the insanity of others, the sloth, depravity and incompetence that is irredressible [irreversible] by man or God. [...] This world has gone too far to be saved. We must destroy it and start again.
> - Bond: Even if millions die?
> - Stavros: They are just grains of sand on the beach of time, Mr. Bond.

Meanwhile the ship's crew and Jaws track down Anya who has not been captured. A guard in a trolley tries to crush her but she shifts and the trolley ends up in the sea. She also throws her lipstick-grenade into a vat of oil. Bond takes advantage of the explosion that shakes the ship to disarm a guard, jump into a monorail vehicle and go free the prisoners.

Bond dives towards the Wayne in order to secure its armory. He grabs the rivet gun (the thing used to make a hole in the hull to let the gas through) from the Kronus and takes out a few of Spectre's men with it. Meanwhile Stavros and Jaws flee the scene in a boat propelled from the tanker "like [a] V2 [rocket] taking off" (or more likely like a V1?).

While the prisoners board the Wayne to leave the burning tanker, Bond goes in search of Anya, who we haven't seen since the first explosion. He doesn't find her and returns to Wayne. He boards a Harrier with pilot on the Fearless.

> - Carter: God took six days to make the world and Bond has sixty minutes to save it.

Bond and the pilot take a little time to find the Aquapolis since it has submerged. Once found, Bond activates his ejection seat to join it (or jumps from the plane if there is no ejection seat on Harriers, write Wood). Bond swims and sees through a window that Anya is being held in the Aquapolis, but he is spotted. Stavros orders the "Swordfish" to be released: it is a radio-controlled metal object in the shape of a fish, designed to hunt and kill an intruder with its snout.

Bond fights desperately against the thing; there is also a (real) shark attracted by the blood from his wounds. Bond manages to make the robot Swordfish impale the shark in his place. Believing Bond is dead, Stavros repatriate the Swordfish and Bond takes the opportunity to cling to it in order to enter the Aquapolis.

He knocks Jaws out by surprise, frees Anya and they enter the control room where they "shoulder to shoulder unleashing a deadly volley from their machine guns". But as Stavros tells them, they arrive a few seconds too late: the submarines' missiles have just been fired (not towards oil fields but towards New York and Moscow).

Bond asks Anya to transmit the order to the submariners to reprogram their missiles in flight, so that they would self-destruct. While they are distracted by this, Stavros activates a self-destruct system on the Aquapolis:

> - Stavros: You have killed my dream and you will die with it!

Bond and Anya then try to leave the rapidly sinking Aquapolis while Stavros remains inside, peacefully dying, watching his fish "like a little boy at the zoo".

However, Bond must fight Jaws one last time: he is on their way while Anya has been knocked out. Jaws notably attacks 007 with a gaff but our hero ends up getting rid of him with an electromagnet. 007 joins Anya and makes what seems to be a reference to the novel Live and Let Die?:

> - Bond: Something he tried to eat disagreed with him. Come on!!

Bond and Anya surface with diving helmets that protect them from the pressure of the depths. "What do we do now?". "Don't worry, Q thinks of everything", Bond replies, pulling out a cigar case that transforms into a self-inflating life raft.

Later Bond and Anya are in bed:

> - Anya: I must go soon.
> - Bond: Will I see you again?
> - Anya: No.
> - Bond: That's sad.

Bond gives her some kind of wallet that she had dropped earlier. Here Wood seems to want to make a cameo in the film, since Bond sees in it the "photograph of [a] bearded man (me)" (which we never saw or heard about in the film, so what follows sounds like more of a last minute addition aimed at stretching the film a little more than something properly introduced). Anya notices the look of surprise on Bond's face:

> - Anya: You recognize that man?
> - Bond: Gregor Mendikov. KGB agent.
> - Anya: You killed him [?]
> - Bond: Yes.
> - Anya: I loved him.

Anya pulls out a gun and points it at Bond. She hesitates, her eyes eyes becoming moist. Bond seemed to have accepted his fate, but seeing her not shoot, he delicately takes the weapon from her hands and kisses her. As they go to make love we see that the gun had no magazine; Bond had clearly removed it earlier. And as the camera pans away with the end credits, we discover that the room they are in is not in a hotel but... In the Concorde!

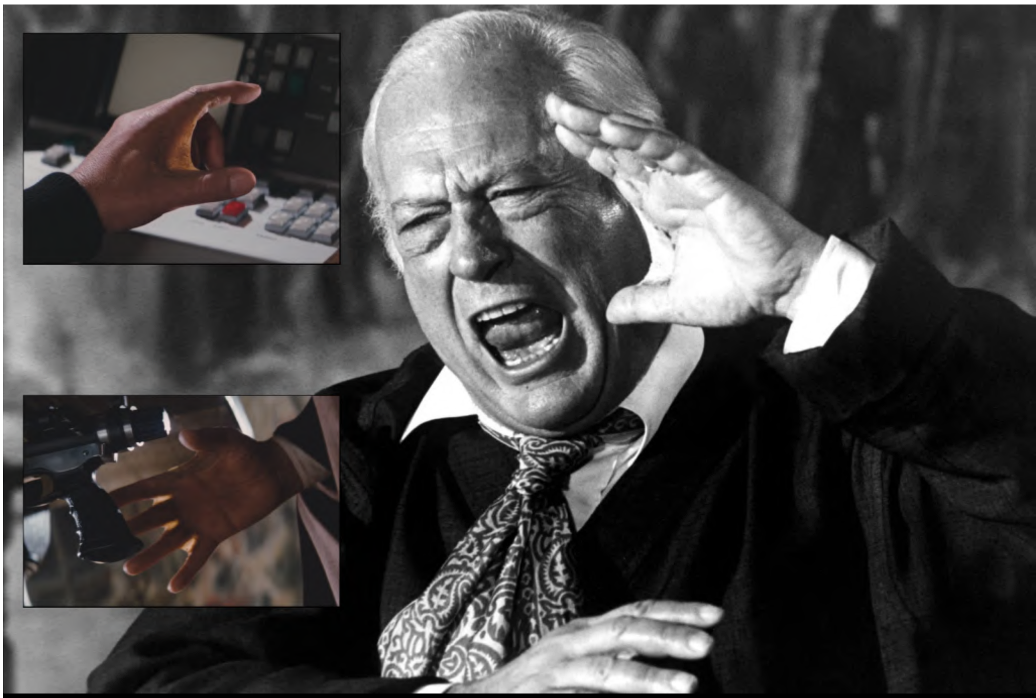
BRITISH AIRWAYS
G-BOAA

June 15, 1976' script

After a Second Draft, a Third Draft (May 25, 1976) and a Fourth Draft (June 3) which I do not have[90], a 145-page "shooting script" was completed on June 15, 1976. No name on the cover.

The pre-title sequence is now similar to the film. However, it is not Anya's lover that Bond kills during the chase in Austria (with a PPK and not a ski pole weapon), but her brother Sergei.

The villain is still named Markos Stavros, although his base is now named the "Atlantis". He has webbed hands (or at least one) (syndactyly) and is still Number One of Spectre. This time it's her own assistant who betrayed the organization, Sandor's character is now there and Naomi has an erotic ballet with a whale in front of Stavros when the other members of Spectre have left. These first scenes with the villain took place after Bond's (now present) meeting with Sheik Hosein, and not before.



Although you can easily miss it, the detail of the webbed hands is present in the film. Hence why Naomi tells Bond that the villain prefers not to shake hands.

Further Farwagi became (Aziz) Fekkesh again. Feliccia dies because of Sandor, and Bond has a brief fight with him. When Bond gains the upper hand, Sandor tries to escape by jumping onto the opposite balcony but slips; he is then suspended above the void, clinging to the balcony. Bond offers to lend him a hand to save him and learns that Fekkesh is at the pyramids. Bond keeps his promise but Sandor slips just before he can grab 007's hand and falls onto a glass roof.

After Fekkesh's death, 007 still goes to search his office at the museum where he fights against the KGB. Bond emerges victorious but cannot resist replacing a precious vase; Anya appears behind him and knocks him out. There are the interrogation scenes where the question is now "why did you kill Fekkesh?" ; Luka was renamed Ivan or Boris, and further the Landros' character is now referred to as Max Kalba. It should be noted that he is playing pool and that while Bond and Anya wait for him to come back from the phone, 007 carelessly rolls a ball onto the pool table which cashes all the others.

Things play out similarly to the movie in the desert with Jaws and Anya, then we arrive at MI6 HQ located in the "Temple of Ramses II". Interestingly, Q says he's developing gadgets "for your friend Hosein". There is no P anymore, but Q also has a young assistant named Glossop who has the dialogue that Q speaks in the film in the microfilm screening room.

Direction Sardinia by train; Jaws still gets tricked by a fruit with a wig on it. After he leaves through the window, Bond and Anya have sex. Then Bond takes out a lighter to light a cigarette; a lighter from Austria he tells her. She makes the connection with her brother's death, without telling him.

Q later brings them a "Lotus Special", Naomi takes them to Atlantis. Here the passage where Stavros shows him a model differs from the film:

> The [display] case contains a model of an underwater community, surviving by tilling the sea-bed and breeding edible fish. There are underwater bulldozers, bubble-shaped buildings, fish pens, mini-subs, etc. (C.f. Model of Aquapolis, Okinawa).
> - Stavros: If the population of the world continues to multiply at the present rate, existing sources of food production will be exhausted within fifty years. Believe me, Mr. Sterling, this will be the only hope of survival.
> - Bond: To live permanently under the sea?
> Stavros' voice becomes eerie and menacing.
> - Stavros: And why not? Surely you as a marine biologist understand the wisdom of what I am saying?
> His fingers separate angrily like the webbed spine on the back of a fish. Bond notices the movement, and the web between two of the fingers.

There is the Lotus chase and this time Bond has a gadget that projects "white liquid cement" to get rid of the pursuing car and Naomi is indeed in a helicopter (rather than a plane). Underwater, the enemy now has underwater vehicles and the front of the Lotus harpoons to project.

No more Hannah, instead there's a scene where Bond tells Anya that it's not right that she spent more rubles for taking two rooms instead of one. "As a state employee, I always have the taxpayers' interests at heart", he adds.

Bond and Anya no longer parachute towards the Wayne but are airlifted by helicopter there. On board the submarine, there is a scene where Anya assembles her weapon and Bond comes to bring her wallet that she left behind when she showered. They see the photo of Anya's brother; Bond tells him that he's sorry for killing him but that he didn't really had a choice. She makes him understand that she will avenge him one day.

On board of Kronus, there is an echo of a previous script with Bond again exiting the submarine through a torpedo tube instead of being with the other prisoners. He knocks out a guard, steals his uniform and his weapon. Meanwhile Stavros noticed that Anya was among the crew of the Wayne and has her brought to him. 007 is spotted by Stavros on a surveillance camera, is captured and also brought to him. Stavros explains his "new civilisation beneath the sea" project to them:

> - Bond: But why should countless millions of people in the old world die?
> - Stavros: Because they are in the process of polluting my dream. Year by year we are turning our oceans into stagnant ponds!

Stavros leaves the ship with Anya while Bond is escorted to the other prisoners. 007 escapes in a manner similar to the film, except he doesn't jump into the monorail. Instead he takes a corridor that takes him to the deck of the tanker where he is shot down by guards from high positions and chased by a helicopter. Bond spots a high-pressure water hose and uses it to crash the helicopter.

He manages to return inside the tanker and frees the prisoners. During the ensuing battle, the in quotation marks "impregnable" control room in which Bond ends up breaching with a nuclear missile detonator is now there (this was not the case in any of the previous scripts we studied).

> - Christopher Wood[91] : I saw the supertanker set being constructed. Ken [Adam]'s sets are great, and expensive: they set the writer a problem. Something that costly must absorb a large amount of screen time to justify the outlay. Thus, the writer is obliged to dream up lots of action in a static environment. Also see the space station in Moonraker!

Meanwhile in Atlantis, Stavros shows Anya some sort of large carnivorous plant that eats a mouse.

With the control room taken, Bond has the submarine targets reprogrammed using a calculator gadget on his digital watch to do the calculations.

Bond no longer joins Atlantis in a Harrier but aboard a simple motorboat. Stavros sends 007 the elevator but he arrives in the room differently:

> - Bond: I prefer stairs to elevators.
> [...]
> - Stavros: Do you see, Mr. Bond? We are sinking. When you came aboard, I put my Atlantis into a dive from which it can never recover.

Similar to the movie Stavros tries to kill him with a gun under the table, but Bond doesn't respond with his PPK. Instead Stavros disappears through a door and joins Anya. But with Atlantis disintegrating, Anya has managed to free herself from her bonds and when Stavros arrives; she hits him and he falls into the pool of his carnivorous plant where he get killed by it.

007 fights with Jaws but there is no more electromagnet: instead Bond sends Jaws into a pool containing a shark (Jaws will end up biting the animal).

> - Cubby Broccoli[92] : [Jaws] is caught in a deadly battle with a shark close to the end of the picture. I liked the character so much, I wanted him to survive the shark so that we could use him in another Bond. I remember Michael bantering, "Oh, what happens then… Jaws bites the shark?". "Michael, you said it! That's it!".

Bond finds Anya and they escape; she abandons the idea of avenging her brother. In Q's inflatable raft they see the Russian and British fleet approaching in the distance. Bond takes his calculator watch: "I calculate it's going to take them about an hour to get to us". I don't think I have to explain to you how they're going to spend that hour…

- Christopher Wood[93] : I had finished the script and all we had to do was hand it in to a grateful United Artists, accept a few well-deserved compliments and receive the money [...]. I remember Lewis's face when I came into the office after receiving the news from Los Angeles. He looked drawn. "They hated it. [...] They thought it was worse than the last versions [apparently Maibaum's]", said Lewis. [...] This was so unfair. [...] It was a million time better than those teenage terrorists blundering about in fucking fjord! [...] Cubby and Lewis told the studio that the present version of the script was the one they wanted to make, and that if United Artists did not like it, then they could always get stuffed and EON would find another backer. At least, that is what they told me they said. Regardless of what actually was said, the attitude of the studio underwent a remarkable change. Almost overnight they began to find things that they quite liked in the new script.

The shadow of Mankiewicz

Tom Mankiewicz also participated, secretly and on an unknown date, in a rewrite of the film as he explains in his memoirs:

> - Tom Mankiewicz[94] : Cubby asked me to rewrite The Spy Who Loved Me. He said, "Now, here's the deal. This has got to be done away from the Writers Guild [of America] [...]. Under the Eady Plan, we already have our three non-British subjects on this picture [...]. So you can't get credit because we'll lose our Eady Plan eligibility. And if it goes through the W*riters Guild*, you're probably going to get a credit because I'm asking for a big rewrite, but you can't have a credit, so I'm going to get into trouble with the Writers Guild. So nobody can know that you're on this picture. I'm going to pay you cash".

Mankiewicz agrees to rework the film's script in secret. He works at Cubby's home, "I had a typewriter and I was at the cottage down by the pool"[95].

> - Tom Mankiewicz[96] : The first thirty pages went off to England, and Roger Moore called Cubby and asked, "When did Mankiewicz get on this picture?". Cubby said, "He's not on the picture, Roger". He said, "Of course he is. He's on every fucking page. Tell him he's doing a good job".

It's in The Spy Who Loved Me that Mankiewicz wrote "my favorite lines in Bond that I ever wrote"[97], although they were left out of the film. These were taking place in a bar, when Bond met Anya there. Both know who the other is but they have never formally introduced themselves before. The dialogue in question must have had this flavor[98]:

> - Bond: For the lady, a Stolichnaya.
> - Anya: And for the gentleman, a vodka martini, shaken not stirred.
> [He turns to her].
> - Bond: I must say, you're much more beautiful than the pictures we have of you, colonel [major?].
> - Anya: I'm afraid the only picture we have of you, Mr. Bond, was taken in bed with one of our agents, a Miss Tatiana Romanova.
> - Bond: And was she smiling?
> - Anya: As I recall, her mouth was not immediately visible in the photograph.
> - Bond: Ah, then I was smiling.

"Censorship was so silly", comments Mankiewicz[99]. He adds, however, that "a lot of the dialogue" that ended up in the film is his[100], as is the character Professor Markowicz (who was not present in the June 15 script), named after himself.

Bond 77

To conclude on the scripts of The Spy Who Loved Me, let's analyze a "Revised final shooting script" dated August 23, 1976 containing revisions of August 27, September 14, 20, October 14, November 8, 19, 23, December 6, 1976 and January 20, 1977 (133 pages).

As you'd expect, it's all very similar to the film. Compared to previous scripts, this one notably includes the major additions of Frederick Gray, a fight scene on the train with Jaws, the villain being renamed to Karl Stromberg, Anya's lover and not brother. Also significant deletions such as the disappearance of the electrode interrogation scene and any mention of the criminal organization Spectre (traces of "Numero One", scratched by hand, however, remind us of its former presence). A copy of the script was also sent to Kevin McClory's lawyers to lift the legal injunction obtained by the latter.

Among the differences from the film, we note that Stromberg didn't kill Doctor Bechmann or Professor Markovitz. He just told them: "One last word... All your work here and all you have learned of my plans: you will now forget".

With Felicca, Bond was less tender: he pressed his gun to her jaw, holding her tightly: "Where's Fekkesh?". However, Bond threw himself to the ground with her instead of putting her in the path of the bullet (she die anyway) and, in the fight that followed, Sandor didn't hold on to 007's tie. It's Bond who prevented him from falling by holding him by his cuff, "your life's hanging by a thread". Sandor didn't fall because of 007 but because of the cuff which tore itself.

> \- Bond: Not a tailor I'd recommend.

(The fact that Fekkesh in the film has the key to the pyramid lock is a leftover from him working in a museum in earlier scripts).

After Bond and Anya got into the back of Jaws's van (each with their guns in hand), there was a dialogue not found in the film:

> \- Anya: You find Fekkesh dead, you find Kalba dead... You're always too late, aren't you, Mr. Bond?
> \- Bond: True. But always one step ahead of you, Major.

The "Lotus Special", also called "Wet Nellie" by Bond, is still red. Pages of the underwater sequence are marked as revised "in Nassau" (where the bulk of the filming of these sequences took place). When the car comes out of the water, 007 doesn't throw a fish (according to Lewis Gilbert, the fish was a later addition suggested by Roger Moore[101]) and everyone is greatly surprised: a man lets lotion run down his girlfriend's face, a child calls out to his mother and a volley ball hits a player' head.

After Bond frees the crews for the big battle in the Leparus (revised in Liparus), they go to the armory. However compared to the film, there was a short battle between Stromberg's armed men and the unarmed submariner men, before they gained access to the armory. Furthermore, before freeing the crews, Bond pulled a ruse by threatening Stromberg's guards with a weapon with no ammunition in it. One of the guard drop his weapon on the ground and Bond throw his to retrieve it.

- Richard Maibaum[102] : I never had Stromberg, or whomever the hell it was in that movie, or that interminable thing which went on in the tanker.

For Anya, Stromberg spoke an additional line: "Soon you will come to love my world. After all, there will be no other".

Bond kills Stromberg with a single shot (Wood felt that Roger's Bond was the type to shoot only once, while Cubby and others saw things differently[103]).

The ending is a little different. Inside the corridor, Bond reaches a door marked "Escape Chamber". He grabs the central wheel and begins to turn it. He turns to speak to Anya:

- Bond: Give me a hand. It's...

He stops dead and stare at her. She stands along the corridor, her gun raised towards him. Bond hesitates and takes a few steps forward. Anya shoots, the bullet lodge in the wall near his head. He stops, then slowly walks towards her, his eyes steady on her.

- Anya: I won't miss with the next one.
- Bond (still approaching): You couldn't have missed with the first one, if you'd really wanted to kill me.

Anya's face is blank, her finger tightens on the trigger. Bond is nearing her.

- Bond: Anya...

Her hand wavers. Bond extends his hand, and avoiding the gun, he places it on Anya's shoulder. She shakes her head as if she had just waking up. He draws her towards him. A third torpedo hits Atlantis and water seeps in.

- Bond: Go on, in!

As he pushes her into the doorway, the wall at the end of the corridor breaks away and a torrent of water rushes through. Bond throws himself through the escape chamber door as the deluge of water rushes down the corridor. He pushes Anya inside the room, there is just enough room for the two of them. He slams the door, seal it and tinkers with the control panel; the water begins to rush in. Clipped to the side of the piece is a plastic sphere about two feet in diameter. Bond grabs it, frees it and holds it.

- Anya: How long have we got?
- Bond: Long enough, I hope.

The water level continues to rise rapidly around them. The emergency hatch opens and Bond and Anya swim to the surface; 007 is still holding the plastic sphere. They begin to struggle near the surface.

The last torpedo smash against the surface of Atlantis, the entire structure disintegrate and begin to slowly sink towards the dark depths. The sea is calm, smooth. After a short pause, Anya's head breaks the surface. She finally swallows air. A few steps away, Bond emerges, still holding the plastic sphere. He too takes a deep breath of fresh air.

As she swims towards him, the sphere opens like a flower and takes the shape of a lifeboat. They begin to climb aboard and lie shoulder to shoulder on the side of the boat. As a mood of intimacy begins to take over the place, he turns away, opens a container and pulls out a bottle of champagne with two plastic cups. He gives one to Anya and fills both containers with the delicious liquid. They toast in silence and raise their cups to their lips.

- Bond: I thought you were going to kill me down there.
- Anya: So did I.
- Bond: What made you change your mind?
- Anya: Isn't it supposed to be a woman's privilege?

He raises his glass towards her and starts to smile:

- Bond: To the spy who loved me.

She smiles back, leans towards him and kisses him on the mouth. As he adjusts his position to return the gesture with interest, his wrist begins to beep. He looks at his watch from which a small typewritten ribbon sticks out. He tears off the end of the tape and runs his eyes over it with Anya: "007 REPORT SOONEST POSSIBLE M".

Bond delicately detaches the watch from his wrist, holds it above the edge of the boat by his finger before letting it reach the bottom of the sea as he will do in For Your Eyes Only. His eyes turn away from Anya to scan something in the distance. He frowns. Bond musters up what little enthusiasm he has left and says:

- Bond: It looks as if they've sent someone to pick me up.

A fleet of warships with ensigns fluttering in the wind cuts through the foam of the water at high speed. They make love while Jaws surfaces and swims away. Later, Bond does not respond that he is "keeping the British end up", but echoes General Gogol: "Gentlemen, we have just entered a new era of Anglo-Soviet cooperation".

Novelization

A novelization is the adaptation in novel form of a story originally developed in another media (film, television series, video game, etc.). To the extent that the film's script of The Spy Who Loved Me had nothing to do with the original novel, it was at one point decided that a novelization of it would be written. The precise circumstances surrounding this decision remain unclear but Peter Janson-Smith, chairman of Glidrose Publications, said[104]:

> We had no hand in [the Christopher Wood novelizations] other than we told the film people that we were going to exert our legal right to handle the rights in the books. They chose Christopher Wood because he was one of the screenwriters at the time, and they decided what he would be paid. We got our instructions on that, but from then on, these books-of-the-films became like any other Bond novel; we controlled the publication rights.

James Bond, the spy who loved me
CHRISTOPHER WOOD
Jonathan Cape's First Edition.

The Spy Who Loved Me was therefore the subject of a novelization by Christopher Wood himself. It was published in July 1977 in the United Kingdom under the title James Bond, The Spy Who Loved Me (in order to avoid confusion with Fleming's novel).

The novelization also marks the return of the literary James Bond after four years of absence since The Authorized Biography of John Pearson.

The tour de force that Wood has achieved with this one is to have been able to perfectly rewrite the course of the film in the literary style of Ian Fleming (and it has to be noted that Wood doesn't paraphrase passages from the scripts we have just seen during the 25 chapters of the novelization).

Having carte blanche[105] to write exactly what he wants and writing before the film is released and is probably finished, he thus creates some discrepancies with the film (in particular by including elements of the scripts which were left behind during its development), making the reading even more interesting. It is undoubtedly for these two reasons that this book received a very good critical reception from Bond fans.

In the novelization, the KGB is primarily referred to as SMERSH. This appears from the beginning, during the "pre-title" sequence in which Bond escapes on skis on the summit of the Aiguille de la Mort, a mountain range near the town of Chamonix. The novelization explains in detail how Bond ended up in the chalet with the girl, here named Martine Blanchaud, whom he met in a casino. After Fekkesh's death, SMERSH appears once again and captures Bond before torturing him by plugging a generator onto his genitals; this time they want him to give them a microfilm containing the plans of the system capable of locating submarines (Bond escapes after killing his two interrogators). The SMERSH members from the novelization include the Bond's girl Anya Amasova and her lover Sergei Borzov (killed by Bond during the ski chase) as well as Colonel-General Nikitin, a character mentioned in the novel From Russia, With Love, and which replaces the character of General Gogol (absent from the novelization). Nikitin is also a much less sympathetic type than Gogol...

Other differences include the villain Karl Stromberg, here bald and renamed Sigmund Stromberg (whose initials, SS, are noted by Bond in the novelization). An entire chapter is reserved for a sort of "biography" of the character in which we learn that he is originally from Sweden and was a student with an exceptional IQ who was interested in ocean fauna. He takes over his adoptive parents' funeral business after killing them, scamming his clients with it. At the end of the Second World War when almost the entire European merchant fleet was sunk, he invested his money in maritime transport where he made his fortune and managed to get rid of a Greek magnate and take over the magnate' interests in maritime transport. The detail of the webbed hands is present. His secretary, whom he murders with the shark, is called Kate Chapman.

Jaws also have the right to have his own "biography": of Polish nationality, his real name is Zbigniew Krycsiwiki and was arrested by the secret police during the repression of a riot in 1972. The police threw him into a cell and had a field day with their batons; thus reducing his jaw to boiling. Left for dead, he manages to escape from prison by killing a few guards and reach the port where he clandestinely boards one of the cargo ships of Stromberg's fleet. Discovered half-dead by the crew, Stromberg was notified and he decided to come and see the stowaway in person, intrigued by the reports he had received about his size and appearance. Jaws had a steel jaw implanted which would require fourteen operations. Sacrifice essential to make it work: it is connected to Jaws' vocal cords; it is therefore impossible for him to speak.

- Chapter 9: And Jaws pulled him [Fekkesh] down like a rag doll [...] and bit through the back of his neck as easily as if it had been a stick of celery. To Bond, the noise that ended the screams was like that of a stick breaking.

It is also explained how 007 manages to pass his Walther PPK in airports; the characters of Sheikh Hosein and Naomi don't exist in the novelization. 007 also never meet Moneypenny and Q (a certain Belling replacing Q in the slide scene). The henchman who falls from the roof in Cairo is not named and his fall ends on a piano; a death that Wood will reuse in Moonraker.

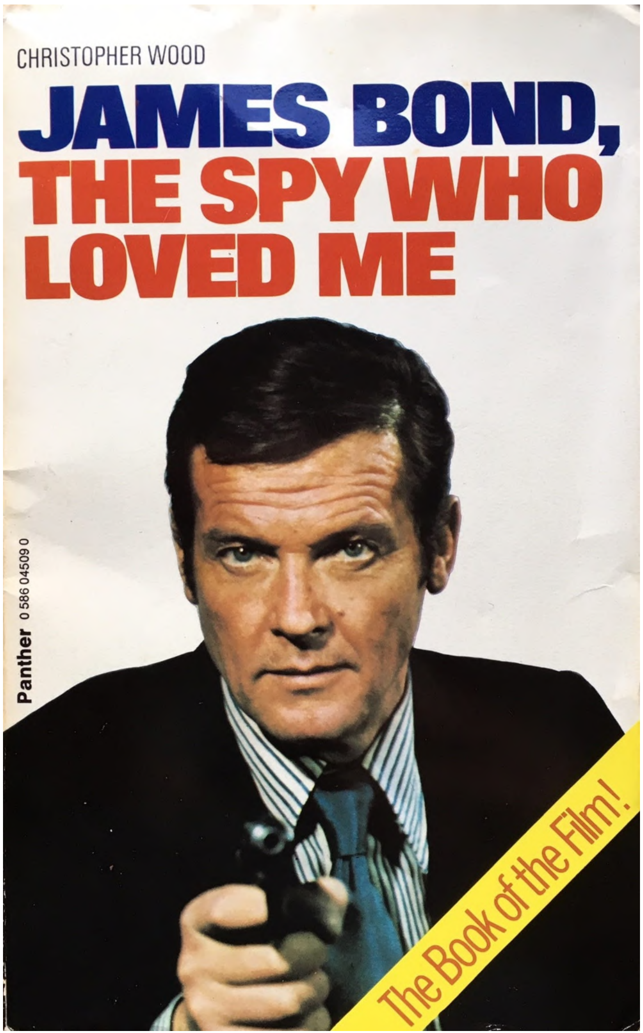
The Lotus Esprit is still red and Jaws is in the helicopter during the chase (Bond doesn't blow it up after diving). The gadget Bond tries to use on the pursuing car turns out to not work and Anya then shoots out the window with her gun, to get rid of the pursuers.

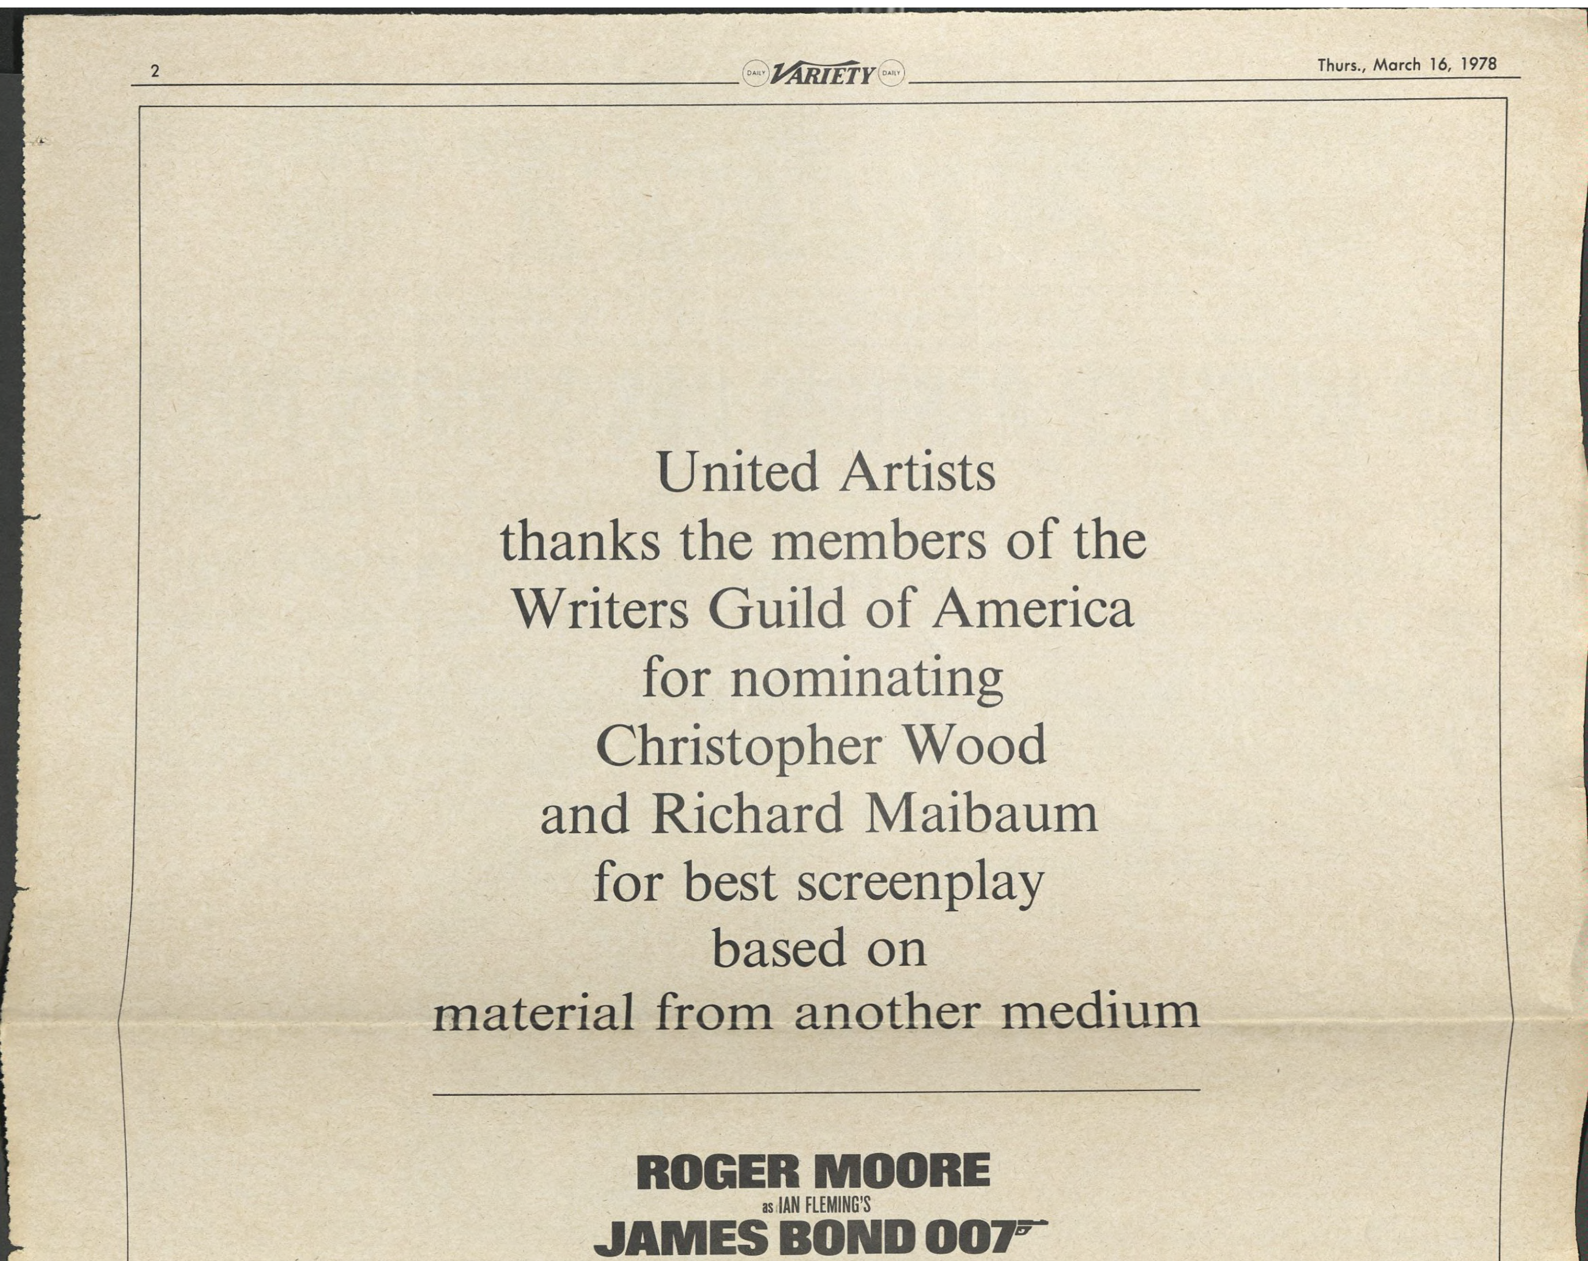
007 briefly pursue Stromberg on the "Lepadus". When Bond manages to confront him on the Atlantis, Stromberg triggers a self-destruct procedure aimed to sink the structure and committing suicide, taking Bond with him. Jaws remains attached to the magnet when the shark arrives (in the film Bond releases him into the pool) and is eaten by the animal. Anya's final confrontation with Bond, in which she points her gun at him, takes place while they are still on Atlantis.

The final scenes take place in Bond's personal home with his housekeeper May and Bond receiving a visit from Carter and then Anya.

We will also note that M's briefing takes place in the latter's office (and not in a naval base), the total absence of a train sequence where Jaws attacks our heroes in the film, or the fact that Bond joins the Atlantis swimming in a wetsuit rather than on a Wetbike. Moreover, Atlantis is reminiscent of Aquapolis in its description: "At first glance it resembled a drilling rig topped by a glass dome".

- Christopher Wood[106] : EON were not involved and I think the novelization was just another marketing tool as far as they were concerned.





2 DAILY VARIETY DAILY Thurs., March 16, 1978

United Artists
thanks the members of the Writers Guild of America for nominating Christopher Wood
and Richard Maibaum for best screenplay based on material from another medium

ROGER MOORE
as IAN FLEMING'S
JAMES BOND 007
"THE SPY WHO LOVED ME"

United Artists
A Transamerica Company

Amazingly, in such cases the production doesn't care to point out that the film retains nothing of the novel for this nomination for "Best Comedy Adapted to Another Medium". (The Spy Who Loved Me will lose out against Oh, God!).

Sources/references from chapter 10: The Spy Who Loved Me

1 "The Man with the Golden Typewriter", Ian Fleming's James Bond Letters, edited by Fergus Fleming (2015).
2 "Ian Fleming" biography by Andrew Lycett (1996).
3 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
4 A three hour behind the scenes video made by BBC Open University (1977).
5 For Michael G. Wilson biography, see for the sources:
"When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
EON Productions official website: https://www.eon.co.uk/about/
Tomorrow Never Dies official website http://www.tomorrowneverdies.com/bondmain.html
Michael G. Wilson's Wikipedia page.
6 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
7 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
8 For Anthony Burgess biography, see for the sources:
The International Anthony Burgess Foundation website: https://www.anthonyburgess.org/
"Anthony Burgess, 76, Dies; Man of Letters and Music" obituary by Herbert Mitgang in The New York Times (1993): https://archive.nytimes.com/www.nytimes.com/books/97/11/30/home/burgess-obit.html?scp=23&
"Obituary: Anthony Burgess" by Roger Lewis in The Independent (1993):
https://www.independent.co.uk/news/people/obituary-anthony-burgess-1506693.html
"Anthony Burgess dies at age 76" in The Washington Post (1993):
https://www.washingtonpost.com/archive/local/1993/11/26/anthony-burgess-dies-at-age-76/e35ecbb1-f865-4304-bebc-fc8fce035b3a/
"Anthony Burgess; Prolific Novelist, Linguist" obituary by Burt A. Folkart in The Los Angeles Times (1993):
https://www.latimes.com/archives/la-xpm-1993-11-26-mn-60936-story.html
Anthony Burgess's Wikipedia page.
9 You've Had Your Time autobiography by Anthony Burgess (1990).
10 You've Had Your Time autobiography by Anthony Burgess (1990).
11 You've Had Your Time autobiography by Anthony Burgess (1990).
12 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).
http://www.007forever.com/films/ws-tswlm.html
13 "The James Bond Films: a behind the scenes history" by Steven Jay Rubin (1983 edition).
And for Derek Marlowe biography, see for the sources:
Derek Marlowe's IMDb page.
Derek Marlowe's Wikipedia page
14 For Anthony Barwick biography, see for the sources:
Anthony Barwick's IMDb page.
Anthony Barwick's Wikipedia page
15 "Wild scripts - The Spy Who Loved Me" on 007forever website:
http://web.archive.org/web/20060614140459/http://www.007forever.com/films/ws-tswlm.html
16 "James Bond 'The Spy Who loved Me', 1977 - an early film treatment by Ronald Hardy", auction's page at Bellmans: https://app.bellmans.co.uk/en/auction/nov-gilbertfilm-2021-the-lewis-gilbert-film-script-and-production-archive/513-james-bond-the-spy-who-loved-me-1977-an-early-film-treatment-by-ronald-hardy
17 "James Bond 'The Spy Who loved Me', 1977 - an early film treatment by Ronald Hardy", auction's page at Bellmans: https://app.bellmans.co.uk/en/auction/nov-gilbertfilm-2021-the-lewis-gilbert-film-script-and-production-archive/513-james-bond-the-spy-who-loved-me-1977-an-early-film-treatment-by-ronald-hardy
18 "James Bond 'The Spy Who loved Me', 1977 - an early film treatment by Ronald Hardy", auction's page at Bellmans: https://app.bellmans.co.uk/en/auction/nov-gilbertfilm-2021-the-lewis-gilbert-film-script-and-production-archive/513-james-bond-the-spy-who-loved-me-1977-an-early-film-treatment-by-ronald-hardy
19 "The James Bond Films: a behind the scenes history" by Steven Jay Rubin (1983 edition).
20 "The James Bond Films: a behind the scenes history" by Steven Jay Rubin (1983 edition).
21 "The James Bond Films: a behind the scenes history" by Steven Jay Rubin (1983 edition).
"The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2012).
22 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
23 For John Landis biography, see for the sources:
John Landis's IMDb page.
John Landis's Wikipedia pages.
24 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
25 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
26 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
27 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
28 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
29 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
30 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

31 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

32 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

33 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).

34 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).

35 For Stirling Silliphant biography, see for the sources:
Silliphant's page on The Original Mickey Mouse Club Show: http://www.originalmmc.com/silliphant.html
"Stirling Silliphant; Oscar-Winning Writer" obituary by Myrna Oliver in The Los Angeles Times (1996): https://www.latimes.com/archives/la-xpm-1996-04-27-mn-63395-story.html
"Obituary: Stirling Silliphant" by Trevor Willsmer in Independent (1996): https://www.independent.co.uk/news/obituaries/obituary-stirling-silliphant-1345170.html
Stirling Silliphant's Wikipedia page.

36 My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).

37 My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).

38 "The Making of on Her Majesty's Secret Service" by Charles Helfenstein (2009).

39 "Brobdingnagian Bond Film Amid the Pyramid" by Roderick Mann in The Los Angeles Times (December 5, 1976).

40 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

41 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

42 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

43 "Saturday Night at the Movies 007 Screenwriter Richard Maibaum Part 2" on YouTube Steve Rubin's channel: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=80CBHIhQ6JI

44 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

45 "When Harry Met Cubby" by Robert Sellers, 2019.

46 "When Harry Met Cubby" by Robert Sellers, 2019.
"When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

47 "When Harry Met Cubby" by Robert Sellers, 2019.
"When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

48 "When Harry Met Cubby" by Robert Sellers, 2019.
"When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

49 "When Harry Met Cubby" by Robert Sellers, 2019.
"When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

50 "Harry Saltzman: Producer, showman, the man who gambled on James Bond and won" in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #4, spring 1996).

51 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
"Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

52 Daily Variety, 7.11.1975; via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

53 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

54 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).

55 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

56 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

57 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

58 "Saturday Night at the Movies 007 Screenwriter Richard Maibaum Part 2" on YouTube Steve Rubin's channel: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=80CBHIhQ6JI

59 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

60 "Saturday Night at the Movies 007 Screenwriter Richard Maibaum Part 2" on YouTube Steve Rubin's channel: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=80CBHIhQ6JI

61 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

62 1976 Maibaum's affidavit (in the court case against McClory).

63 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

64 1976 Maibaum's affidavit (in the court case against McClory).

65 1976 Maibaum's affidavit (in the court case against McClory).

66 Symposium by Richard Maibaum for the Writer's Guild of America, Beverly Hills, California, October 1987; via "Speaking of Writing" by Sylvia Kamion Maibaum and Richard Maibaum (2019).

67 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).

68 For Christopher Wood biography, see for the sources:

"James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).
Christopher Wood 's Wikipedia page.
69 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).
70 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).
71 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).
72 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).
73 "Saturday Night at the Movies 007 Screenwriter Richard Maibaum Part 2" on YouTube Steve Rubin's channel: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=80CBHIhQ6JI
74 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).
75 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).
76 A three hour behind the scenes video made by BBC Open University (1977).
77 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).
78 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).
79 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).
80 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).
81 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
"Inside The Spy Who Loved Me" DVD bonus.
"All My Flashbacks" autobiography by Lewis Gilbert (2010).
82 Rick Sylvester on Facebook (10 december 2012): https://www.facebook.com/RickSylvesterJamesBondStuntman/photos/a.213963372072009/217291841739162/
83 "Inside The Spy Who Loved Me" DVD bonus.
"*007 courts his copyrigh*t" article by John Andrews (unknown newspapers and date).
"James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).
84 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).
85 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).
86 "The James Bond Archives" by Jamie Russell and Paul Duncan (2012).
"The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).
87 Ken Adam in "Ken Adam: Designing Bond" DVD bonus.
88 "The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).
89 "Brobdingnagian Bond Film Amid the Pyramid" by Roderick Mann in The Los Angeles Times (December 5, 1976).
90 "James Bond ‘The Spy Who Loved Me', 1977 – two film scripts by Christopher Wood, one labelled ‘Michael Wilson' (4)" auction page on Bellmans website: https://app.bellmans.co.uk/en/auction/nov-gilbertfilm-2021-the-lewis-gilbert-film-script-and-production-archive/516-james-bond-the-spy-who-loved-me-1977-two-film-scripts-by-christopher-wood-one-labelled-michael-wilson-4
91 "Confessions of a screenplay writer", Wood's interview by Luke G. Williams on 007 Magazine website: http://www.007magazine.co.uk/confessions_of_a_screenplay_writer.htm
92 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
93 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).
94 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).
95 Mankiewicz's interview by Chauhan Dharmesh for Superman Cinema, via CapedWonder (2006): https://www.capedwonder.com/the-2006-tom-mankiewicz-interview
96 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).
97 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).
98 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).
99 "My Life as a Mankiewicz: An Insider's Journey through Hollywood" autobiography by Tom Mankiewicz (2012).
100 Mankiewicz's interview by Chauhan Dharmesh for Superman Cinema, via CapedWonder (2006): https://www.capedwonder.com/the-2006-tom-mankiewicz-interview
101 "All My Flashbacks" autobiography by Lewis Gilbert (2010).
102 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).
103 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).
104 "Classified Dossier: James Bond's (literary) agent" article by Raymond Benson in Crime Spree Magazine (March-April 2010).
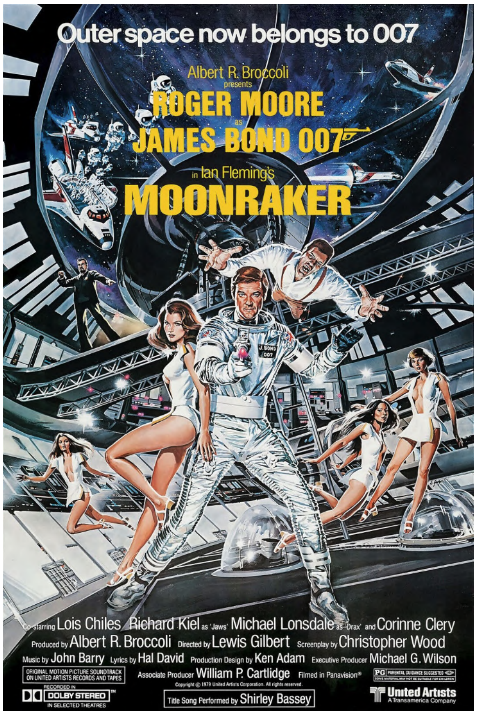
105 "Christopher Wood Interview" on MI6-HQ website (2005): https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_christopher_wood
106 "Confessions of a screenplay writer", Wood's interview by Luke G. Williams on 007 Magazine website: http://www.007magazine.co.uk/confessions_of_a_screenplay_writer.htm

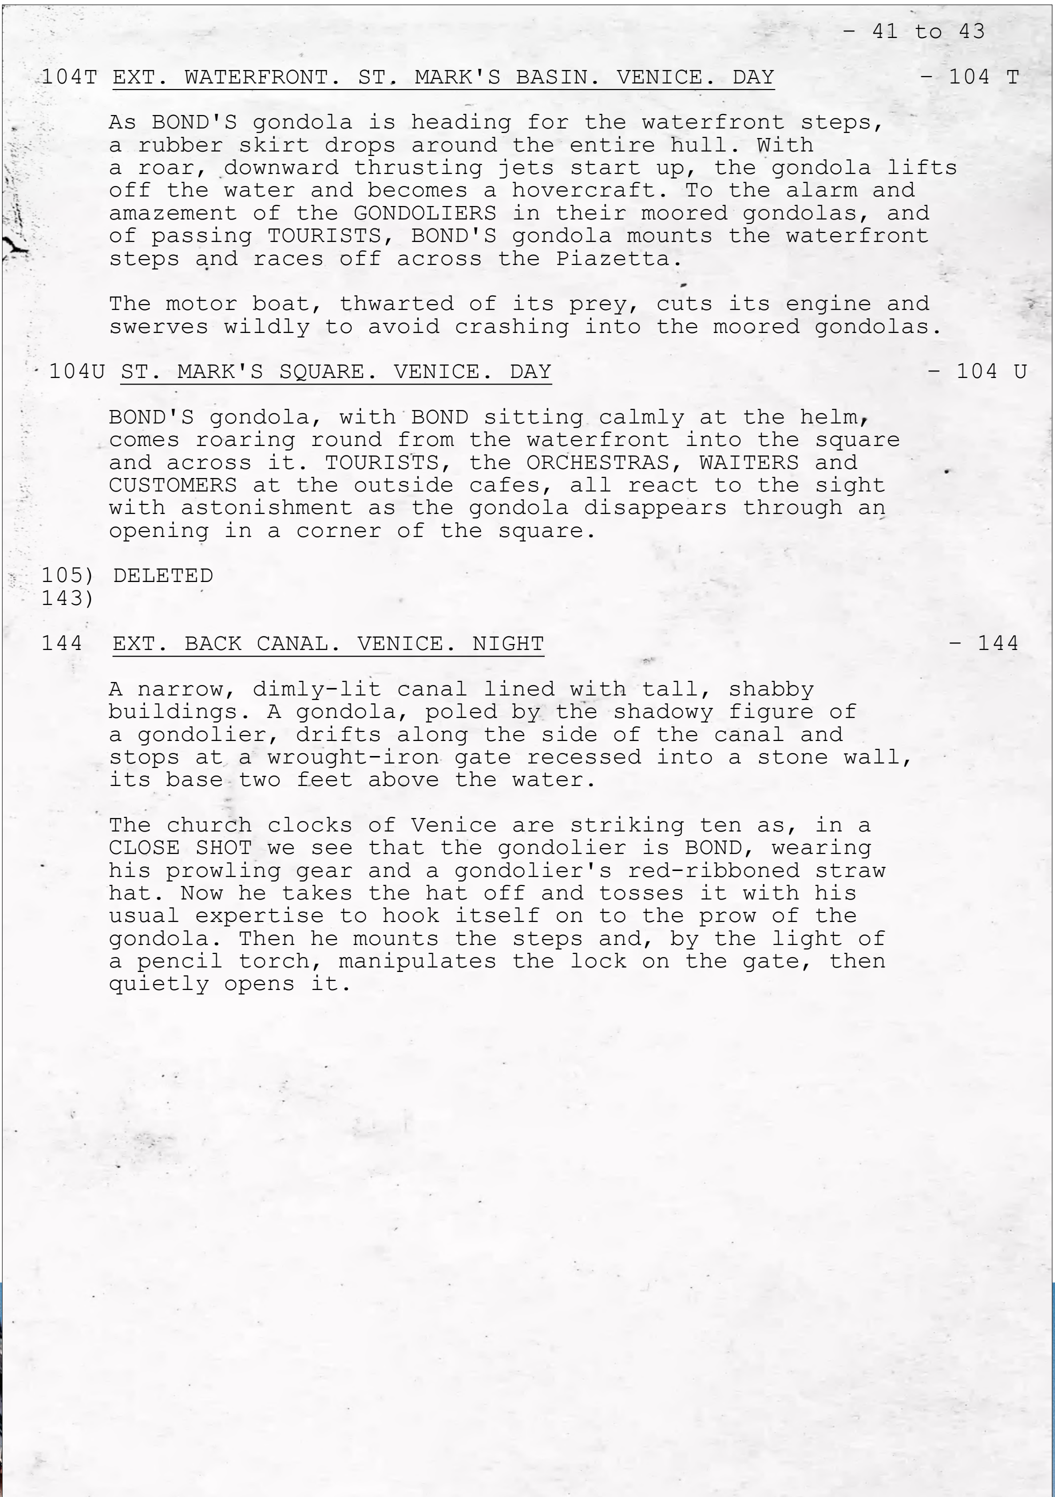


Outer space now belongs to 007
Albert R. Broccoli presents
ROGER MOORE
JAMES BOND 007
in Ian Fleming's
MOONRAKER
Co-starring Lois Chiles Richard Kiel as 'Jaws' Michael Lonsdale as 'Drax' and Corinne Clery
Produced by Albert R. Broccoli Directed by Lewis Gilbert Screenplay by Christopher Wood
Music by John Barry Lyrics by Hal David Production Design by Ken Adam Executive Producer Michael G. Wilson
Associate Producer William P. Cartlidge Filmed in Panavision®
Title Song Performed by Shirley Bassey
DOLBY STEREO
United Artists

Release date (premiere) :
26 June 1979

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Screenplay by Christopher Wood"

Director :..............................Lewis Gilbert
Producer :......................Albert R. Broccoli
Director photography :.....Jean Tournier
Set Designer :.............................Ken Adam
Composer :...............................John Barry
Editor :.......................................John Glen
Title sequence :...............Maurice Binder
Title song vocals :.............Shirley Bassey



- 41 to 43

104T EXT. WATERFRONT. ST. MARK'S BASIN. VENICE. DAY - 104 T

As BOND'S gondola is heading for the waterfront steps, a rubber skirt drops around the entire hull. With a roar, downward thrusting jets start up, the gondola lifts off the water and becomes a hovercraft. To the alarm and amazement of the GONDOLIERS in their moored gondolas, and of passing TOURISTS, BOND'S gondola mounts the waterfront steps and races off across the Piazetta.

The motor boat, thwarted of its prey, cuts its engine and swerves wildly to avoid crashing into the moored gondolas.

104U ST. MARK'S SQUARE. VENICE. DAY - 104 U

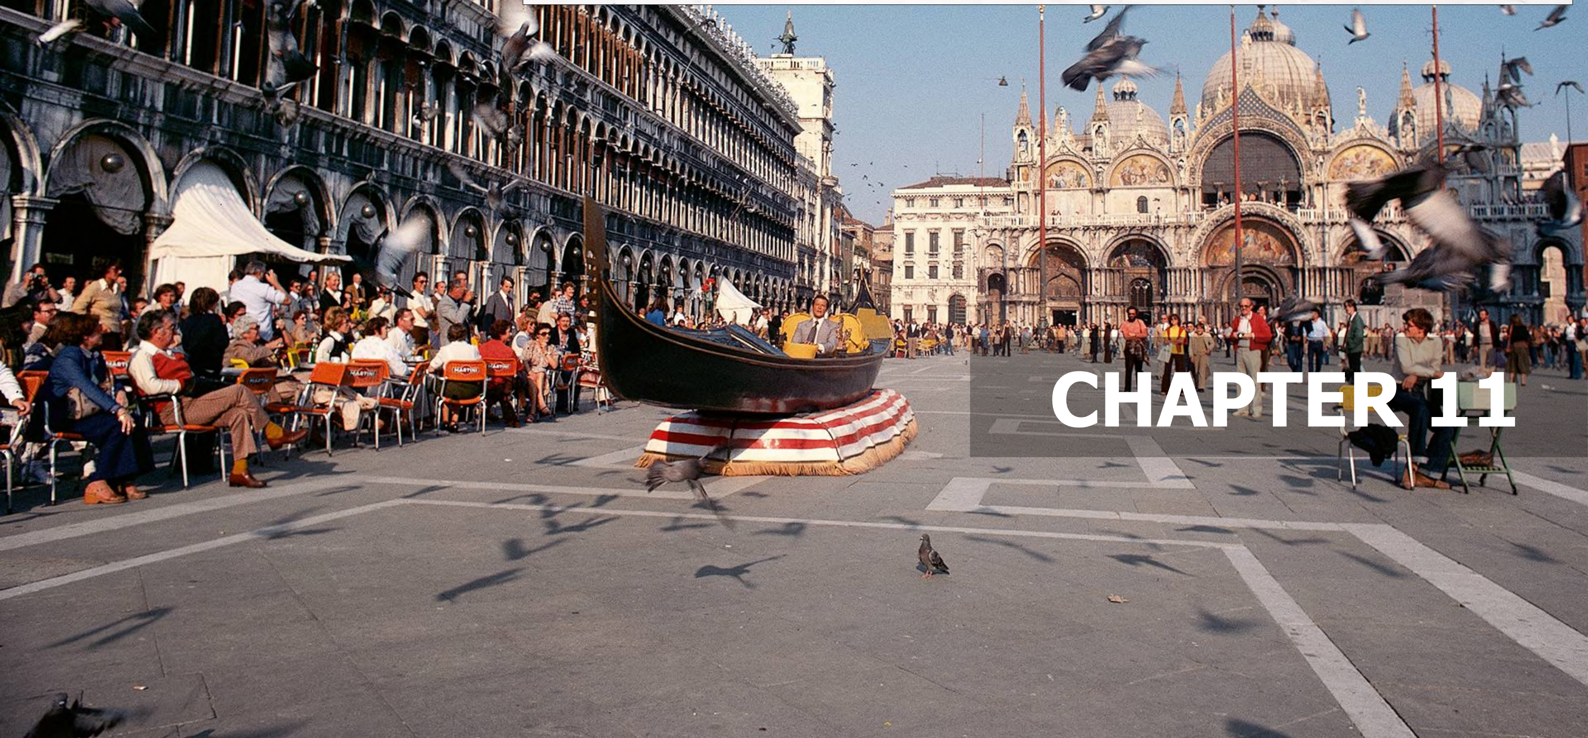
BOND'S gondola, with BOND sitting calmly at the helm, comes roaring round from the waterfront into the square and across it. TOURISTS, the ORCHESTRAS, WAITERS and CUSTOMERS at the outside cafes, all react to the sight with astonishment as the gondola disappears through an opening in a corner of the square.

105) DELETED
143)

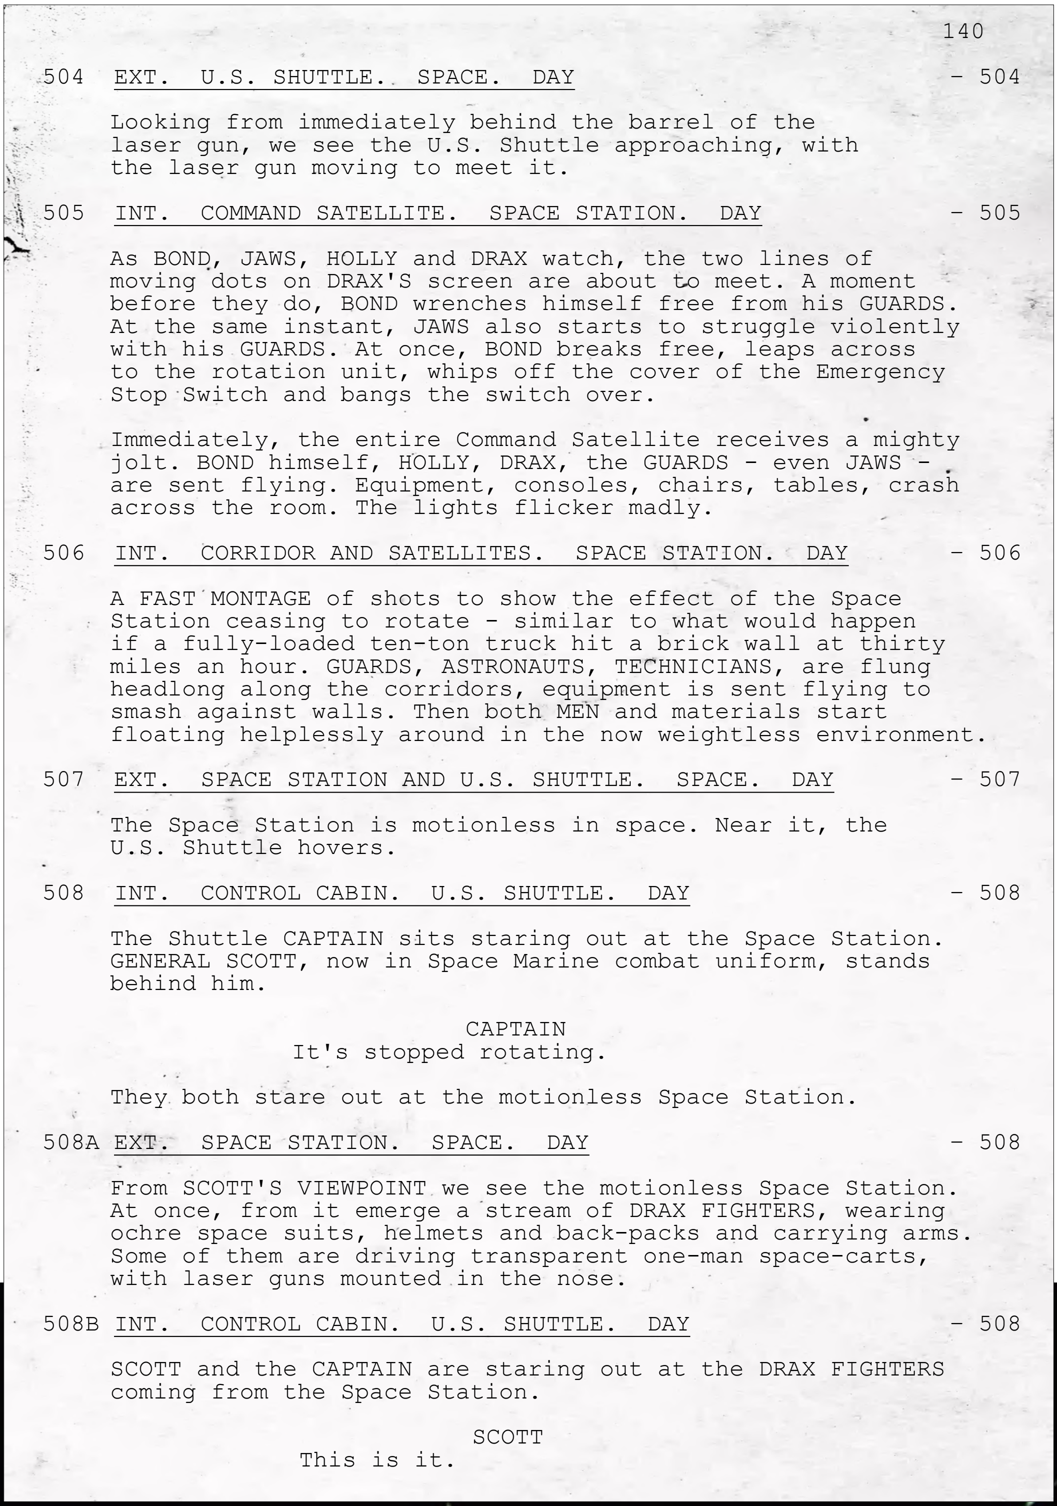
144 EXT. BACK CANAL. VENICE. NIGHT - 144

A narrow, dimly-lit canal lined with tall, shabby buildings. A gondola, poled by the shadowy figure of a gondolier, drifts along the side of the canal and stops at a wrought-iron gate recessed into a stone wall, its base two feet above the water.

The church clocks of Venice are striking ten as, in a CLOSE SHOT we see that the gondolier is BOND, wearing his prowling gear and a gondolier's red-ribboned straw hat. Now he takes the hat off and tosses it with his usual expertise to hook itself on to the prow of the gondola. Then he mounts the steps and, by the light of a pencil torch, manipulates the lock on the gate, then quietly opens it.



CHAPTER 11



140

504 EXT. U.S. SHUTTLE. SPACE. DAY - 504

Looking from immediately behind the barrel of the laser gun, we see the U.S. Shuttle approaching, with the laser gun moving to meet it.

505 INT. COMMAND SATELLITE. SPACE STATION. DAY - 505

As BOND, JAWS, HOLLY and DRAX watch, the two lines of moving dots on DRAX'S screen are about to meet. A moment before they do, BOND wrenches himself free from his GUARDS. At the same instant, JAWS also starts to struggle violently with his GUARDS. At once, BOND breaks free, leaps across to the rotation unit, whips off the cover of the Emergency Stop Switch and bangs the switch over.

Immediately, the entire Command Satellite receives a mighty jolt. BOND himself, HOLLY, DRAX, the GUARDS - even JAWS - are sent flying. Equipment, consoles, chairs, tables, crash across the room. The lights flicker madly.

506 INT. CORRIDOR AND SATELLITES. SPACE STATION. DAY - 506

A FAST MONTAGE of shots to show the effect of the Space Station ceasing to rotate - similar to what would happen if a fully-loaded ten-ton truck hit a brick wall at thirty miles an hour. GUARDS, ASTRONAUTS, TECHNICIANS, are flung headlong along the corridors, equipment is sent flying to smash against walls. Then both MEN and materials start floating helplessly around in the now weightless environment.

507 EXT. SPACE STATION AND U.S. SHUTTLE. SPACE. DAY - 507

The Space Station is motionless in space. Near it, the U.S. Shuttle hovers.

508 INT. CONTROL CABIN. U.S. SHUTTLE. DAY - 508

The Shuttle CAPTAIN sits staring out at the Space Station. GENERAL SCOTT, now in Space Marine combat uniform, stands behind him.

CAPTAIN
It's stopped rotating.

They both stare out at the motionless Space Station.

508A EXT. SPACE STATION. SPACE. DAY - 508

From SCOTT'S VIEWPOINT we see the motionless Space Station. At once, from it emerge a stream of DRAX FIGHTERS, wearing ochre space suits, helmets and back-packs and carrying arms. Some of them are driving transparent one-man space-carts, with laser guns mounted in the nose.

508B INT. CONTROL CABIN. U.S. SHUTTLE. DAY - 508

SCOTT and the CAPTAIN are staring out at the DRAX FIGHTERS coming from the Space Station.

SCOTT
This is it.

Cast:

James Bond :	Roger Moore
Hugo Drax :	Michael Lonsdale
Holly Goodhead :	Lois Chiles
Jaws :	Richard Kiel
Chang :	Toshiro Suga
Corinne Dufour :	Corinne Cléry
Manuela :	Emily Bolton
Dolly :	Blanche Ravalec
Gogol :	Walter Gotell
M :	Bernard Lee
Moneypenny :	Lois Maxwell
Q :	Desmond Llewelyn

Main filming locations: France, Brazil, Venice and UK

Moonraker is the Bond of the every excesses, between its scenario (which sharing some similitude with the previous film) that taking 007 beyond the atmosphere; its over-the-top action scenes, its winded humor, the return of Jaws, Ken Adam's gigantic sets and jaw-dropping locations, as well as the plethora of special effects and gadgets.
If Moonraker is considered by many as a film which as exceeded the limits of the acceptable, it is however for me a film that I greatly appreciate for its grandiloquent and spectacular side, a Roger Moore at ease and a course which never proves boring or difficult to follow.

MOONRAKER

Table of contents

Moonraker

Skulduggery in the azimut....680
Fleming's screenplay....681
Gerry Anderson's Moonraker....683
Cary Bates's Moonraker....685
When For Your Eyes Only became Moonraker....686
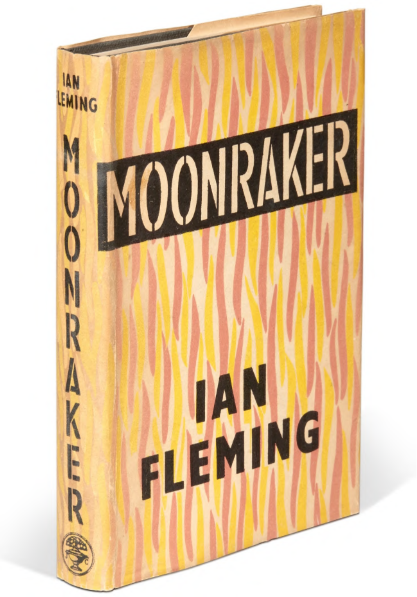
When Moonraker was too big for just one James Bond....692
Revisions....708
May 19, 1978 revised script....710
Novelization....712
Confessions of a screenwriter....712

Skulduggery in the azimut

For this 1955's novel, Ian Fleming already had the idea of it being adapted into a film before he even started writing it. In his words, he will describe Moonraker as "based on a film script I have had in my mind for many years"[1].

In this adventure, James Bond is entrusted by M with a rather particular personal mission: discover how Hugo Drax cheats at cards. This former British soldier, who is nevertheless a millionaire, has just offered to the England the construction of the Moonraker: an atomic missile with sufficient range to reach most European capitals. This should help protect the country from its enemies in this Cold War context. That evening, Bond goes to Blades, the private club frequented by M and Drax, and confirms his superior's suspicions of cheating before beating Drax at bridge.



IAN FLEMING
MOONRAKER
MOONRAKER
IAN FLEMING

After a man assigned to the security of the Moonraker has been found dead, Bond is sent to the project site (which is in Kent, England) to replace him and investigate. There he meets Drax's secretary, Gala Brand, who is in reality a member of the Special Branch infiltrated in Drax's enterprise. The scientists and other Drax employees are all German and Bond assumes there are some shady things going on behind the Moonraker project. His suspicions are confirmed when he and Gala escape death in a cliff explosion near Dover.

Later, Gala steals Drax's notebook and discovers that the Moonraker and its nuclear warhead are in fact targeting the city of London. However, she is captured by Willy Krebs, one of the Drax's henchmen.

After realizing Gala's disappearance, Bond pursues Drax in his Bentley 4½ Litre, but crashes and is captured.

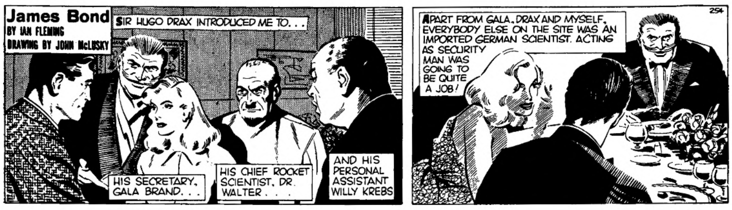
Bond and Gala are then placed under the launch pad of the Moonraker so that they will be incinerated by the propeller's flames when the missile will be launch. Drax reveals that he was never a British soldier and was actually Graf Hugo von der Drache of the Nazi army. He was mistaken for a British soldier after the Allies found him, disfigured, following a bombing (at that time he was wearing a British uniform to carry out a mission on behalf of the German army).

To take revenge for the German defeat, Drax wants to destroy London and is supported by the USSR which provided him with the warhead.

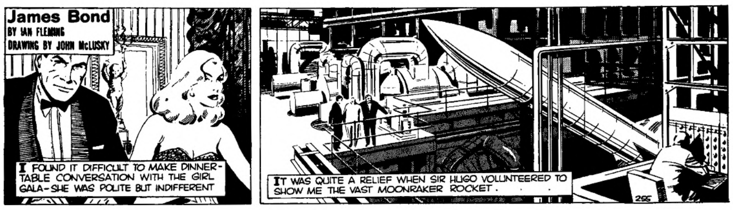
Bond and Gala manage to free themselves using a blowtorch and reprogram the gyroscope of Moonraker so that the missile ends its course in the North Sea rather than in London.

As they hope, the Moonraker crashes into the sea, near the Soviet submarine in which Drax was fleeing, killing him.

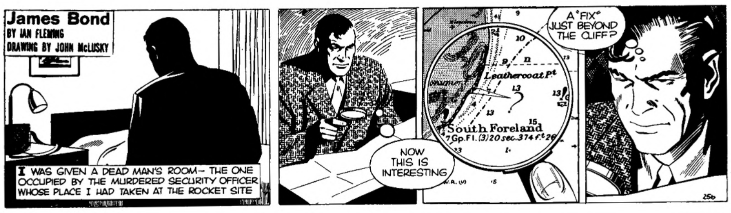
At the end of the novel Bond wants to spend time with Gala Brand, but they separate because she reveals to him that she will marry soon to another man. Bond therefore finds himself alone.



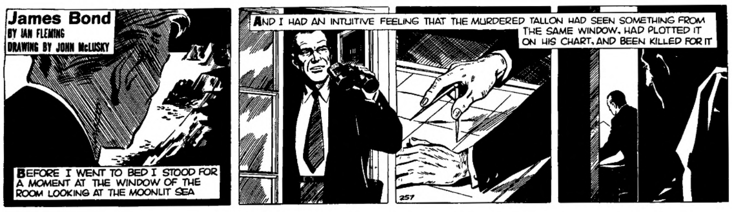
James Bond
BY IAN FLEMING
DRAWING BY JOHN McLUSKY
SIR HUGO DRAX INTRODUCED ME TO. . .
HIS SECRETARY, GALA BRAND. . .
HIS CHIEF ROCKET SCIENTIST, DR. WALTER . . .
AND HIS PERSONAL ASSISTANT WILLY KREBS
APART FROM GALA, DRAX AND MYSELF, EVERYBODY ELSE ON THE SITE WAS AN IMPORTED GERMAN SCIENTIST. ACTING AS SECURITY MAN WAS GOING TO BE QUITE A JOB!
254



James Bond
BY IAN FLEMING
DRAWING BY JOHN McLUSKY
I FOUND IT DIFFICULT TO MAKE DINNER-TABLE CONVERSATION WITH THE GIRL GALA-SHE WAS POLITE BUT INDIFFERENT
IT WAS QUITE A RELIEF WHEN SIR HUGO VOLUNTEERED TO SHOW ME THE VAST MOONRAKER ROCKET . . .
255



James Bond
BY IAN FLEMING
DRAWING BY JOHN McLUSKY
I WAS GIVEN A DEAD MAN'S ROOM- THE ONE OCCUPIED BY THE MURDERED SECURITY OFFICER WHOSE PLACE I HAD TAKEN AT THE ROCKET SITE
NOW THIS IS INTERESTING
Leathercoat Pt
South Foreland
7Gp.Fl.(3)20sec.374ft 26
A "FIX" JUST BEYOND THE CLIFF?
256



James Bond
BY IAN FLEMING
DRAWING BY JOHN McLUSKY
BEFORE I WENT TO BED I STOOD FOR A MOMENT AT THE WINDOW OF THE ROOM LOOKING AT THE MOONLIT SEA
AND I HAD AN INTUITIVE FEELING THAT THE MURDERED TALLON HAD SEEN SOMETHING FROM THE SAME WINDOW, HAD PLOTTED IT ON HIS CHART, AND BEEN KILLED FOR IT 257

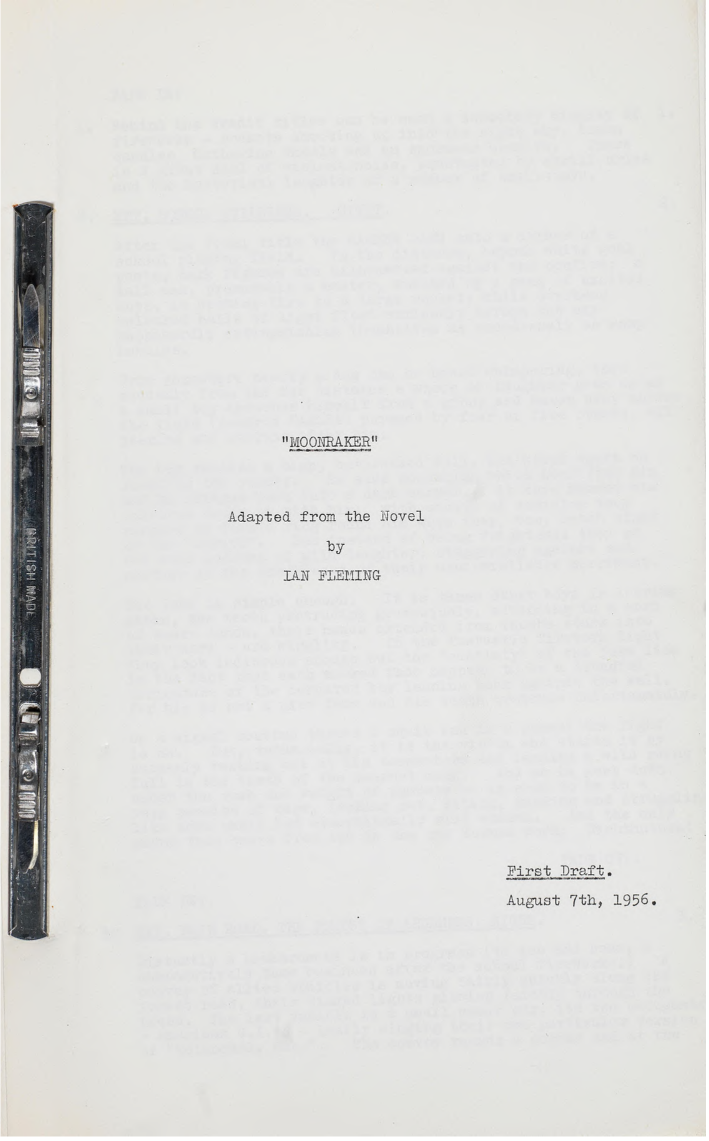
Fleming's screenplay

Shortly after writing the novel, Ian Fleming received offers for a film adaptation, including one from the Rank Organisation[2]. Fleming then himself began adapting Moonraker in a script for the Rank[3], and on August 7, 1956, a 120 pages first draft script/treatment was completed by the author[4].

Unfortunately, I don't have it and the little we know about it except that the script begins with Drax as a kid being chased at night by a bunch bullies of his private school in England[5]. They wear mask that caricature Drax's deformed tooth and corner him[6]. "It was, I think, at an English school I first learned to hate", tells us Hugo Drache in the script[7]. Hence, Bond guess in the novel was right:

> - Moonraker*'s novel: [Drax] heavy moustache served another purpose. It helped to hide a naturally prognathous upper jaw and a marked protrusion of the upper row of teeth. Bond reflected that this was probably due to sucking his thumb as a child, and it had resulted in an ugly splaying, or diastema, of what Bond had heard his dentist call "the centrals". [...] Bond could imagine that the hulking bully with the ogre's teeth had not been very welcome at an English private school. And being a foreign count with a mouthful of names would not have helped much.



"MOONRAKER"

Adapted from the Novel
by
IAN FLEMING

First Draft.
August 7th, 1956.

BRITISH MADE

After this first scene, there is another flashback with an older Drax, this time in the Ardennes (France) during the World War II, serving in the German army[8]. As in the novel, Drache disguised in a British soldier on a motorcycle attack an American-British scout car containing explosives, before being attacked and wounded by a German airplane[9].

Here Fleming adds another insult to the injury for Drache in the screenplay: his German unit (which contain Krebs) was planning to use the stolen explosives to blow up an Allied hospital[10]. And that is what they do: they blow up the hospital, unaware that Drache was transported there by allied soldiers following his Messerschmitts wounds[11]. Drache of course survive the explosion, but is disfigured, and plastic surgery will be applied to him later[12].

A shift to years later: Bond is introduced to the story while he is leaning over the open bonnet of his Bentley 4½ Litre: "A dark-haired man of rather savage good looks who is wearing a grey flannel suit and an expression of rapt wonder"[13].

M is not present in this script: the head of the British secret service is called Sir Charles Morland (Moneypenny is also absent)[14]. Strange, when you consider that Fleming had written in his novel that M initials were M. M. and given Miles as his first name... Anyway Morland role in the story is similar to the one of M in the book, even if the briefing with Bond takes place at Bond's home (rather than in Morland's office as you may expect)[15].

> - Jon Gilbert[16] : Gala Brand is altered to Jennifer/Jenny Brand and Major Tallon and Vallance of Scotland Yard are far more prominent here [in the screenplay]. There are some new characters: Tosh' a cockney pal of Bond, a card sharp who is brought in to humiliate Drax; therefore the key Bond/M vs. Drax Meyer card game is quite different.

Later scenes are similar to the novel including the presence of the cliff explosion and the car chase[17].

Drax also needs a name for his rocket that will captivate the British: "something almost flashy, piratical, romantic; so that in their imagination they can picture the thing sweeping up through the night sky, ruthless, all set to conquer continents and planets, principalities of stars, archipelagoes of Milky Ways in a perfect fever of Empire building, the Union Jack waving through the Heavens until great areas of the sky-maps have to be shaded red, roping it all in. (Breaking off and standing perfectly still) The Moonraker! [...] The power that can help to give me [...] world control, world domination"[18].

One of the most notable thing in the screenplay is that Drax is not affiliated with SMERSH contrary to the novel[19]. So at the end, he met his fate while he is on his yacht (rather than in a Russian submarine)[20].

The final scene also have a slight change since Bond's ally Tosh is revealed to be a Special Branch agent whose real name is Guy Talbot; and he happens to be the husband of Jenny Brand[21]. (While in the novel Brand is engaged with someone designated as Detective-Inspector Vivian).

Fleming delivered the script in September 1956[22]. The Rank Organisation wasn't interested enough in Moonraker obviously, since the film never saw the light of day.

Gerry Anderson's Moonraker

British producer/writer/director Gerry Anderson (1929-2012) was on the rise in the 1960s. His science fiction series with puppet characters (from the supermarionation process he developed) such as Thunderbirds, Stingray or Captain Scarlet were great successes. Harry Saltzman became interested in Anderson and had conversation with him about an a film adaptation of a novel called Cold War in a Country Garden in which a group of scientists are reduced to tiny size in an overgrown garden[23]. A Honey, I Shrunk the Kids kind of plot.

That film never happened but later, at the end of the 60s (or so it seems), Harry Saltzman approached Anderson again to make Moonraker:

> - Gerry Anderson[24] : What happened was that Harry Saltzman phoned me and said "Can you pop in? I'd like to see you". I went in and he said "Gerry, I want you to produce the next Bond picture, Moonraker, here's the book". I nearly took off and went into orbit!

Gerry Anderson with a Thunderbirds's miniature.

Anderson is quite excited about the project, he seems to understand that he could occupy the position of director plus screenwriter on it, and even co-producer[25]. On the other hand, he is a little cooled by Fleming's novel: "frankly [it] wasn't very exciting, and terribly out-of-date, as one would expect"[26].

Anderson calls on one of his usual writing collaborators: Tony Barwick, who has worked on many of his series. Together they write a treatment of approximately 83 pages for Moonraker[27].

In this one we find Drax with long, red hair, and a mustache, but who is apparently in a wheelchair[28]. As in the novel, Drax builds the Moonraker for the British government but one of its secret ambitions is to send it into orbit around the Moon[29]. Drax, who seems to want some sort of global disarmament, will threaten the governments of the world with his Moonraker: if one of them decides to fire a nuclear weapon on another country, Drax will bring back the Moonraker towards Earth to explode the planet[30]. Death by mutual destruction.

On the other hand, Drax also has other ambitions. He has a huge tanker with a rocket hidden in it[31]. The goal is to launch the rocket and explode it to releases radiation to Earth in order to kill the world's population[32]. Well, not all the population: as in the film, Drax aims to leave the planet to a super-race[33]. Himself and his specimens regularly expose themselves to radiation in view of this moment: their bodies are used to it so they will not die[34].

As in the novel M asks Bond to investigate Drax who cheats at cards; Bond and Drax play a game on his private jet[35]. 007 also explores Drax's base which is located under a channel[36].

Among the action scenes we find a chase in hovercrafts, another on a motorbike (taking place on the deck of the tanker since the boat is so enormous)[37]. Also Bond in an Aston Martin chased by a black Mercedes on the roads of Dover (there is a passage where he drops rolls of newspapers from a truck to get rid of the Mercedes, a reference to the novel)[38]. There was also supposed to be a scene with 007 in a one-place submarine provided by Q, where he was chased by dolphins with mines attached to them[39]!

Q also provided Bond with an explosive lighter, as well as a watch equipped with a diving depth gauge and capable of firing tranquilizer darts[40].

The film was to take place mainly in England with some scenes in Brazil (pre-title) and the Caribbean (where Drax had an oil refinery)[41]. There was also talk of a Nordic fjord[42].

Krebs' character was to be present, but having failed to kill Bond, Drax had to press a button on his desk which fired a dart at the inflatable (and lethal gas-filled) chair where Krebs was sitting[43].

Gala Brand was one of the Bond Girls in the treatment, at one point 007 and she had to get out of the tanker in which they were locked while the tanker sink at 90° (in order to get into position to launch the rocket hidden on its side)[44]. Unlike the novel, she ended up in Bond's arms at the end of the treatment[45].

Also at one point, when Drax was presumed dead, he reappeared and threatened to blow up the Moonraker in orbit around the Moon, in order to de-orbit the Moon from the Earth[46]!

Gerry Anderson hands the treatment over to Harry Saltzman. The same evening Saltzman calls three to say that he very like the treatment[47]. Eventually Anderson declined £20,000 for the treatment offered by Saltzman: "The whole reason for writing the treatment for Moonraker was that I desperately wanted to produce this Bond picture myself. [....] I had such a strong vision of the completed picture that I decided to forego the money rather than let anyone else make it. I had hoped that Harry would eventually come back to me and I'd produce the picture. But sadly this was not to be"[48].

A few years later, during the production of The Spy of Loved Me (on which Barwick notably worked for a time), Anderson understands that this film will have ideas similar to what he had written for Moonraker with Barwick, including the tanker.

> - Gerry Anderson[49] : As it happened, some friends of mine were working on The Spy Who Loved Me and they let me sneak a look at the script. I thought it had similarities with our treatment so I started legal proceedings against Cubby Broccoli, who had by then taken over all Saltzman's interests in Bond.

Anderson was immediately threatened by two major law firms[50]. Anderson and Broccoli end up make arrangements between themselves. Broccoli gives Anderson a sum of money and in exchange for which he undertakes not to sue him for any similarity he might find on The Spy Who Loved Me and its follow-up[51]. "Part of the deal was that I had to hand over the treatment and make sure any copies were destroyed. I accepted"[52]. It woulds turns out that Anderson kept a copy nevertheless, which was found after his death by his son[53].

Cary Bates's Moonraker

Cary Bates[54], born in the United States in 1948, began submitting cover ideas to DC comics at the age of 13. He joined DC as a writer at 17.

Bates is above all a comic book writer; he wrote several adventures featuring DC heroes such as Superman, Flash, Captain Atom, Batman and Supergirl. He remained with DC until the early 1990s.

In 2008, after twenty years of absence, he wrote comics True Believers for Marvel, then returned in 2010 to DC for more Superman and Flash.

Apart from writing comics, he has written episodes of cartoons such as Superboy or RoboCop: Alpha Commando. His only film credit is Christopher Columbus: The Discovery from 1992, produced by Alexander and Ilya Salkind (the producers of the 1978' Superman movie).

In 1972 Cary Bates was not approached by the production: "Considering I was a 24-old comic book writer at the time with no screen credits, it should surprise no one that neither Eon nor United Artists sought me out to work on a James Bond film", he explained to Mark Edlitz, author of The Lost Adventures of James Bond.

Bates, however wanting to write a 007 adventure, knows where Roald Dahl lives and he knows that the latter wrote the film You Only Live Twice. His idea is to get a recommendation from Dahl in order to be able to approach the people behind the Bond's films[55].

So Cary Bates decided to write a screenplay for Moonraker which he sent to Dahl: "he actually read it and sent me a very complimentary letter saying he liked my treatment and thought Broccoli would too"[56]. In 1974, EON finally purchased the script: "EON's lawyers were extremely strict about letting Broccoli and Saltzman read unsolicited material, [...] which shows how much stock they put in a positive Roald Dahl recommendation", says Bates[57].

In his scenario, Bates had the idea that Hugo Drax would send his men to steal a British nuclear submarine from the Clyde base and hide it in Loch Ness, near his HQ in Urquhart Castle[58]. The idea is that Drax demands a ransom by threatening to destroy European cities if he does not receive money and an electronic MacGuffin[59]. SPECTRE was also expected to be there and Tatiana Romanova was to return[60]. Bates remembers that there was a Russian agent (Tatiana?) who was to receive death by acupuncture[61]. Drax had two twins as henchmen: Pluto (heavy smoker) and Plato (alcoholic)[62].

007 was to investigate Drax undercover, by getting himself hired as the driver of his Rolls-Royce. Bond replaced it with a similar one created by Q. This saved his life later, when his cover was blown, he pressed a button that split the Q's Rolls in two, leaving behind the two twins located in the rear seats. New wheels were fitted and a car chase took place with the half Rolls[63].

When For Your Eyes Only became Moonraker

> - Cubby Broccoli[64] : [The Spy Who Loved Me] gave me a lot of personal satisfaction. Michael Wilson's many talents, fully tested as a lawyer, associate producer and creative input to the script, made an immensely important contribution to the film. He'd earned his spurs and the role of executive producer on the next Bond picture, Moonraker.

As shown in the end credits of The Spy Who Loved Me, the production plans after this film was to make For Your Eyes Only. However, the release of Star Wars in 1977 which pulverizes The Spy Who Loved Me at the box office (as well as all the other films of that same year) and the success of Close Encounters of the Third Kind, also ahead of Bond, seems to indicate that the public is interested in films with science fiction and space themes.

This doesn't come unnoticed to Cubby Broccoli[65] who decides to follow this trend: Bond will also go into space. However, it's about to remain anchored to the plausible: "we're not science fiction, we are in fact science fact", he said later[66].

The beginnings of the development of the script of the film, still named "For Your Eyes Only", begin with Tom Mankiewicz:

TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX Presents A LUCASFILM LTD PRODUCTION STAR WARS Starring MARK HAMILL HARRISON FORD CARRIE FISHER
PETER CUSHING
and
ALEC GUINNESS
Written and Directed by GEORGE LUCAS
Produced by GARY KURTZ
Music by JOHN WILLIAMS
PANAVISION® PRINTS BY DE LUXE® TECHNICOLOR®
STAR WARS

> - Tom Mankiewicz[67] : Cubby asked me to kick off Moonraker['s writing] because they didn't have any idea how to kick it off. Lewis, Cubby and I went to NASA. We got in those machines and we thought about some things. I wrote three or four pages for Lewis to kick off the thing because I was never going to write it. Some of it was NASA, and they did have an idea about a space shuttle swallowing whatever, and so I tried to piece together a barebones story form for Lewis to go and find himself a writer. I was on it for about three weeks.

The idea is to include in the film a vehicle similar to the future space shuttle that the NASA has been developing for several years now. One of the main motivations of the NASA behind the Space Shuttle program was to develop a reusable spacecraft, because until now rockets used for space missions were single-use. Other main goal of the NASA's program included an ability to carry large payloads and a crew of astronauts into space, including for deploying satellites or the construction of a space station.

For the filmmakers, the idea is also to have the release of the film coincides with the launch of the real Space Shuttle[68]. (In the end, the NASA shuttle completion/launch was delayed, and Moonraker was released almost two years before that NASA sends its first shuttle into space).

NASA
905
United States
NASA
Enterprise

Enterprise (left) was the first space shuttle built by the NASA. Completed around 1976, Enterprise wasn't intended to go into space: it's was a test shuttle which is launched/released from a Boeing 747. The NASA's second shuttle, Columbia (on the following page), was the one to had the honor of being the first one to go into space, on April 12, 1981.

USA

> - Michael Wilson[69] : I organized trips to India and to NASA in America, talking to the scientists, interpreting how the technical aspects of the script could be made rational. At the time, NASA was planning to get their space shuttle ogg round, and it was a running gag about whose would be the first [between them and us to "launch" its own]. In the end, we beat them.

Associate producer William Cartlidge recalls scouting trips to the Kashmir region searching for a monastery for the villain's lair and snow for a ski sequence[70]; there was also things about Mexico and an Indian village in Guatemala[71].

Mankiewicz recalls that the story involved the "kidnapping" of a space shuttle, a female assassin named "The Archer" with a bow and arrow and being killed at the Taj Mal, a fight against three fakirs and the Himalayas[72]. Mankiewicz also stated that Maibaum's idea of the remote-controlled poisoned butterfly brooch (carried by Gita in old scripts of the The Spy Who Loved Me) was also recycled here[73].

> - Tom Mankiewicz[74] : The[se] pictures take like a year and a half of your life. And for Cubby it's wonderful and for Roger it's wonderful and so on, but for me, it's not so wonderful.

"I wrote the original story for Moonraker with Cubby, Michael Wilson, and Lewis", says Mankiewicz, "we all got together, and flew to New York, and then met Christopher Wood, who took over from there"[75].

"Tom Mankiewicz had drafted the outline of a story that I was given to read. If this had any influence on the final script I cannot remember", says Wood[76].

> - Tom Mankiewicz[77] : I remember Cubby, Michael Wilson, and I all went up to NASA in San Jose and into the simulators and the [centrifugal] spinners and so on. Lewis Gilbert came out for a couple of days and I sort of wrote like six to ten pages. Jaws wasn't in them. Rio de Janeiro wasn't in them. Most of it wasn't. It was just to sort of kick them off, because they didn't know exactly what they wanted to do. The idea for the picture when I left it was really somebody swallowing a space shuttle. And then we wanted to see where you could hide a space shuttle. But the rest of it was written after that. Mine didn't take place in outer space at all.

Wood is not enthusiastic about taking Bond beyond the atmosphere, finding that space is empty and will cause slowness on screen[78].

He goes in Concorde on a scouting trip to Brazil with Broccoli, Lewis Gilbert and Ken Adam in particular. On site they visit Rio, Salvador de Bahia, Manaus, Brasilia as well as the Iguazu Falls[79]. It was the latter place that they had mainly come to see: "Cubby [discovered theses falls] when he was doing a publicity tour for The Spy Who loved Me. He was impressed, very impressed. The falls has to go into the next Bond movie; in fact they were the main reason for us coming to Brazil", remember Wood.[80].

The production of the film having been relocated to France (as taxation in the United Kingdom was considered too excessive to remain there), Wood stayed in a Parisian hotel during the writing of the film[81].

Somewhere, on an unknown date, it was decided to use elements from the novel Moonraker in the story such as the villainous Hugo Drax (was that already there in Mankiewicz?). On the other hand, the threat of a nuclear missile destroying London is considered too dated and not impressive enough compared to what Bond's films are used to delivering by now.

> - Cubby Broccoli[82] : Fleming's stories were tailored for the light read. They were never constructed with films in mind. Which is why we had to build on them, restyle them for the age of lasers, computers, space travel and genetic engineering. When he wrote Moonraker it was a little piddling rocket that went up to destroy London. Now people have gone to the moon. It's much more scientific, much more difficult, and much more advanced.

> - Michael Wilson[83] : We were very interested in making a spectacular film, a sort of extravagant film, that was the concept: bigger and better.

A summary of the treatment structure of "FEYO" (For Your Eyes Only) on January 1, 1978 begins with a pre-title containing the hijacking of the space shuttle with the destruction of the Boeing 747. A sequence follows with Bond in free fall after he jumped from a private jet[84]. Christopher Wood credits Michael G. Wilson for the free fall sequence[85].

Bond receives his briefing in M's office. Before leaving for Drax's factory in California, Bond had to take a detour to Paris[86]. In his memoirs Wood writes that 007 was to meet a contact named Lefevre at the Eiffel Tower restaurant[87]. The latter is about to say something interesting when he collapses, killed by the mechanical butterfly of a French woman at the table nearby. "Guess he saw the check", exclaims an American tourist. Bond starts chasing the girl who then rappels down the Eiffel Tower. 007 borrows a mobile painter's platform and jumps on the girl's rope when those of the platform give way. Arriving at the bottom, the Frenchwoman runs to join an accomplice in a car but the latter kills her and flees. A taxi stops near Bond who holds the girl's body in his arms. "Taxi, m'sieur?"; "Yes. Drop madame off at the morgue"[88].

"All this is quite jolly but it takes time and money, lot of money [to do]", Wood comments[89]. At least the sequence will not be lost since it will inspire a passage from A View to a Kill several years later...

Arriving in California, Bond is greeted at the airport by a certain Trudi who takes him to Drax[90]. Here he meets "Major Eve Scott (Holly Goodhead - or similar)", in charge of astronaut training[91]. He also meets Drax's Japanese henchman before the centrifuge scene.

Later Bond beds Trudi and she tries to lure him into a trap; but Bond is smart enough to survive. Trudi then pays for her failure at the hands of the Japanese[92].

Wood explained that in one iteration of the treatment, Chang (who was Drax's personal fitness trainer) killed Trudi by strangling her and made it look like an accident in the castle gym[93]. Wood also imagines at one point Drax summoning Trudi to the castle ramparts before activating a mechanism to make her fall from the ramparts to his dogs below[94].

007 thwarts a new assassination attempt and goes to Venice (the reason is still to be established, we read). In a scene similar to what we found in Maibaum during the writing of The Spy Who Loved Me, Bond goes to a glass factory where there is Eve and an employee who blows glass at him in the shape of a space shuttle[95]. Bond accompanies Eve to her hotel but is attacked: he escape on a jet-pack[96].

007 returns in the evening to the glass factory where he discovers a laboratory with gas. He gets attacked and unfortunately, I do not have the rest of this document.

1 – EXT.   BOEING 747 AIRLINER.   DAY – 1

Wispy clouds floating past disperse to reveal the Boeing 747. Mounted on top of its fuselage is the Space Shuttle. The Boeing is flying high. Far below one has an impression of a landscape of sub-arctic tundra.

2 – INT.   CONTROL CABIN.   BOEING 747 AIRLINER.   DAY – 2

The CAPTAIN and the FIRST OFFICER sit side by side at the controls.

3 – INT.   MAIN CABIN.   BOEING 747 AIRLINER.   DAY – 3

Immediately behind the first six rows of seats a slim steel ladder, bolted to the floor, rises at an angle to a circular sliding hatch in the roof of the cabin, big enough for a man to climb through. At present, the hatch is closed. Behind the ladder, the entire interior of the aircraft has been stripped of seats and is now being used for cargo. This consists of packages. The crates and packages are stencilled with various notices – " DANGER ", " SPARES ", " AUXILIARY EQUIPMENT " and so on. And on all of them sees the stencilled word " ENTERPRISE " with, beneath it, a distinctive, cross-shaped symbol.

The CAMERA MOVES IN to a CLOSE SHOT of one of the crates labelled " DANGER ". At once the letter " D "darkens, as if being scorched by extreme heat from behind. As the " D " is obliterated, the scorch mark moves down, then sideways, tracing a rectangle some two feet square. When it is nearly completed, the panel splinters and falls out.

Through the hole in the side of the crate emerges the 1st HIJACKER, holding a pencil – slim oxy–acetylene torch.
He is immediately followed by the 2nd HIJACKER, revolver in hand. Both men are in identical combat uniforms and are wearing re–breather mask and packs. The 1st HIJACKER moves quickly to the steel ladder, mounts it and operates a lever.
The hatch slides open, revealing a circular tube continuing on up, with steel rungs making an extension to the ladder.
The 1st HIJACKER climbs on up through the tube .

4 – EXT.   BOEING 747 AIRLINER.   DAY – – 4

A CLOSE SHOT showing the Space Shuttle mounted on the Boeing fuselage and emphasising that angled mounting, is in fact, also the liking column now being used by the HIJACKER.
On the side of the Space Shuttle is the word " ENTERPRISE " withe the same cross–shaped symbol symbol seen on the crates in the Boeing cargo hold.

Note that space shuttle was then named "Enterprise" (like the real one) and not "Moonraker".

On March 20, 1978, the production was on the possession of a script entitled "For Your Eyes Only"[97].

(Of this I only have the first page, which I attach to you on the previous page).

On May 8, it was noted that the name of the space shuttle should be renamed from Enterprise to Moonraker and the title of the movie/script change from For Your Eyes Only to Moonraker the 11th May[98].

Christopher Wood at his home at Brive-la-Gaillarde (France). Note the Fleming's portrait behind.

When Moonraker was too big for just one James Bond

I have an undated "Moonraker" script of 153 pages, or about 2.5 hours of content on screen (!). Much of the script matches what we find in the film; however this version of Moonraker is bigger, much bigger and ultimately, too big for just one 007 movie, as once noted Bill Koenig from The Spy Command website!

This script opens with a Boeing 747 in which an (all) American crew is transporting a Moonraker shuttle. Unlike the film, the navigation officer is called Kelly (and not Richard).

After the shuttle is hijacked, we find Bond in bad company on another plane; the pilot destroys the commands by firing a flare gun (not a revolver). 007 ejects the pilot and:

> In a close shoot from behind him, we see Bond, his hands grasping the sides of the emergency door opening. Then an enormous pair of hands come past camera into picture, spread themselves on Bond's back and, with a violent push, send him flying out into space. Now, in a close shot, we get our first full view of Jaws, his huge bulk filling the emergency door opening as he looks down in the direction he has sent Bond. He grins with evil satisfaction, his steel teeth glittering. Behind him, flames start sweeping through the aircraft.

After catching the free-falling pilot and grabbing his parachute, Bond sees Jaws approaching him. Unlike the film, the aerial combat between them is shorter but this is compensated by the fall of Jaws which is longer:

> Now Bond, still free-falling, straps himself into the parachute harness. He looks up to see, above him, Jaws free-falling. Bond pulls his ripcord and his parachute opens. As his descent is checked, Jaws, still free-falling, hurtles down past him.
>
> As Bond, steering his parachute expertly, drifts away to safety, we see that below him lies a small American Mid-West township. On its outskirts we glimpse the oval expanse of a giant circus tent, surrounded by its attendant trucks and caravans.
>
> Jaws, free-falling, looks down and reacts to the realisation that the ground is now only a few hundred feet below him. Desperately, he wrenches at his ripcord and it comes away in his hand.

A long description of a circus act performed by the Marcolini family follows:

> We see, below the falling Jaws, the oval expanse of the circus big-top, the canvas spread like a giant safety net.
>
> A packed audience gazes up into the heights of the huge tent as a roll of drums builds up in a growing crescendo of sound. The Magnificent Marcolinis are embarking on their death-defying high wire act. On the high wire, papa Marcolini in white singlet and red tights, stands balanced, holding a wheelbarrow, its wheel on the wire. In the wheelbarrow sits mama Marcolini, in a bra and panties of gold sequins. Head back, she balances a long pole horizontally on her tilted chin. On each end of the pole a chair is balanced.

In one chair sits fifteen-year-old Nino Marcolini, in the other sixteen-year-old Nina Marcolini, both in brightly coloured costumes.

Between his teeth papa holds a foot-long [30 centimeter] stick on the end of which is balanced, upright, another stick on which a plate is spinning. Mama, Nino and Nina all have sticks in both hands and balanced on their foreheads, all with spinning plates on them. All three are also revolving four-foot [1.2 meter] coloured rollers with their feet.

Now, as the drum-roll crescendo reaches its climax, papa Marcolini takes one perilous step, then another. The entire human edifice moves forward, plates spinning, rollers rolling. The audience gazes upwards, eyes wide, breath held.

Then, like a thunderbolt, with a great tearing of canvas, Jaws hurtles through the roof of the tent. He lands on the high wire a few feet in front of the Marcolinis. The result is catastrophic. Jaws bounces upwards, the Marcolinis fly in all directions, the uprights and rigging holding the high wire give way. The audience screams. As Jaws, returning from his bounce, joins the Marcolinis in a chaos of tumbling bodies, chairs, poles and plates, the entire big top caves in and buries them all in a churning, heaving sea of canvas.

From the midst of the billowing mass, two giant hands rip a long jagged tear in the canvas. Through the tear appears Jaws' head. He looks around him, then casts his eyes heavenwards despairingly. [His eyes focus on something].

[Bond is floating serenely away beneath his parachute. He looks down, smiling].

Title sequence.

A longer circus act and Jaws emerging from the big top will be filmed but cut during editing of the film.

After the credits, Bond meets M, Q and Frederick Gray. The dialogues are similar to the film with some differences; for example when Moneypenny tells Bond that he is late, he replies: "my flight was diverted" whereas in the film he will tell him: " I fell out of an aeroplane without a parachute". Another notable little difference in this scene: Bond's watch strap was supposed to be leather according to the script. Furthermore, Bond doesn't shoot a dart into a painting but into a bulletin board (without any comment from M):

- Bond: Remind me not to shake hands with you.

Finally instead of "you must get them in the stores for Christmas", Bond says: "Thank you, Q. Just what I've always wanted".

Bond flies to Los Angeles and is picked up at the airport by a certain Trudi Parker (who will be renamed Corinne Dufour in the film). On this subject, Christopher Wood said:

> - Christopher Wood[99] : I originally wrote the Corinne Cléry part in Moonraker as a sassy Californian chick [and] then, for financial reasons, the movie was shot in Paris with French actors and crew and Cléry was cast. Had I been given the chance, I would have rewritten the part for a French actress. It is another scene that distresses me, especially the terrible last line "I never learned to read". Not mine.

In the script, the insolent and American side of Trudi can be found from her first lines of dialogue with Bond:

- Bond: It's very kind of Mr Drax to send you to pick me up, Miss Parker.
- Trudi: You call me Trudi. I'll call you James. There's no need to be formal.
[...]
- Trudi: This is the Drax estate now.
She paraphrases the Western cliché with a cowboy accent.
- Trudi: As far as the eye can see, that's Drax country.

007 sees Drax's castle in the background and exclaims "Good heavens!". When their helicopter flies over the building and Bond sees the astronauts training:

- Trudi: They're the astronaut trainees.
- Bond: They look more like contestants for a Mr. and Miss Universe contest.
- Trudi: Mr. Drax went out of his way to select the finest physical specimens.

When Bond meets Drax, he is simply standing in front of a window (while in the film he plays the piano in the company of two pretty girls). His two dogs are German shepherds and not Dobermans (there is no part where he feeds them by snapping his fingers). The dialogues are similar to the film but it should be noted that instead of offering tea to Bond as in the film, Chang enters with a tray of two drinks and Drax says to 007: "Vodka Martini, shaken not stirred", thus showing that he knows his opponent's tastes. The end of this first meeting with Drax is also interesting:

- Drax: I must be candid with you, my dear Bond. I begin to fear all is not well with my organization.
- Bond: In what way, exactly?
- Drax: From each of my work centers, components have been going astray. At first, I thought these losses were accidental. Now I am sure they are not.
- Bond: Many components?
- Drax: To many.
- Bond: Enough to make a shuttle?
- Drax: Very possibly. That is my anxiety. I believe I am harbouring a traitor, Mr. Bond.

[Trudi walks in at that moment and Drax says she will escort him to Dr. Goodhead where Bond can ask her anything he wants to know].

Bond doesn't cut Holly when she explains to him that the Moonraker is capable of returning to Earth like a conventional aircraft. After the centrifuge scene (again similar to the movie), we come to the one where Bond seduces Trudi. In this one she says "What mother?" instead of "I never learnt to read" when Bond asks to her "What about that list of your mother's?".

007 wakes up later that night, the script tells us that at midnight Bond's watch plays the first bars of Good Save the Queen before Bond opens his eyes.

A few scenes later Bond goes to Venice, to Basilica Glassware (and not Venini Glass); there is an interesting stage indication there: "The following speeches by the guide are invented and will be replaced with accurate information)". Among the fictitious works of art in the guided tour there is one in the shape of a horse with its rider created by a certain "Alberto Bellini" and another which has the shape of a bowl, created by a certain "Grimalfi the Elder" who would have studied under the tutelage of "Georgio Agosta".

A few pages later, when Bond and Holly are talking after leaving the Basilica store, the script called for shots of someone watching them with binoculars from the bell tower of the Campanile.

When we get to the gondola chase, the script becomes really very interesting. This is more elaborate chase in the script: Bond is in his gondola when a man in a coffin on a hearse boat kills his rower (Franco) with a machine gun (and not a knife).

Bond presses a button that activates a motor and accelerates as the hearse boat turns around; the man in the coffin and his colleagues shooting towards 007 who puts his head down. Bond uses a microphone under his seat and makes a radio call saying:

- Bond: Calling Station Twenty-three. Station Twenty-three. Am being pursued.

Stand by with J.P. One.

Bond approaches a canal with a T-junction, the hearse boat still in pursuit. He begins to turn left, but sees almost at the last moment that an enemy boat with a gunner is in this channel. So he hastily turns right and is pursued by this new boat in addition to the hearse boat. 007 pulls his gun from his shoulder holster and begins shooting at them as bullets crash near him. Bond manages to hit the man in the coffin (one of the latter's colleagues then presses a button which closes the coffin).

The two enemy boats are now pursuing Bond's gondola from a parallel channel; 007's eyes are searching for something. Then Bond slows down and enters a boathouse located near a palazzo. The two enemy boats stop in front of the hangar, then one of Drax's henchmen throws a kind of grenade inside which is followed by the sound of a deaf explosion. Black smoke begins to come out of the hangar. Inside, Bond is apparently very busy with a large package that looks like a parachute...

Drax's men stand ready outside the hangar, waiting for Bond to come out. Suddenly, James Bond quickly pass through the smoke, propelled by a jet pack on his back! The henchmen stare at him with their mouths open, too surprised to shoot.

But wait: there's even better!

Suddenly, a helicopter with a machine gun mounted on it chases 007. Bond pilots his jet pack expertly, taking advantage of the fact that his vehicle is easier to handle than the one of his pursuers. After several turns, a shot from the helicopter manages to hit the jet pack and fuel begins to leak from the tank. Bond looks around for a means of escape, he dives and goes under a bridge. The pilot tries to raise the helicopter to try to pass over the bridge but too late: the helicopter crash straight in the bridge and explodes spectacularly (the script specifies that miniatures will be used for filming this scene).

Bond tries to find a place for an emergency landing: he goes through the glass roof of a luxury restaurant and lands between two tables. A waiter runs towards him and 007 gets into a sitting position:

- Bond: I'm afraid I haven't booked.

"Cubby has a jet pack fixation", explain Wood[100]. The screenwriter adds that originally, finding that doing a gondola chase in Venice would be too predictable, he wanted to do a chase scene in which 007 would be riding a motorcycle. However, Cubby found that motorcycles were a too down market type of vehicle for James Bond, according to the Wood[101].

In the next scene Bond infiltrates Basilica Glassware at night and discovers the laboratory. Things play out similarly to the film, but after the scientists' deaths, Chang suddenly appears behind Bond and attacks him (while he is still in the laboratory entrance). For a short time they fight here, with Bond tripping over a table that contains scientific equipment (a liquid stain appears on his shirt, near the pocket that contains the tube of deadly liquid he stole, but Bond is relieved to find that it is a stain of harmless liquid from a test tube that was on the table he tripped over).

Bond runs away to the glass museum, Chang comes out and throws a knife which ends up in the museum door as 007 opens it. Chang enters the museum after Bond and then dashes through shelves of antiques glass to reach him. The two men fight and 007 takes the work in the shape of a horseman (which the guide had spoken about) before changing his mind and instead taking a vase which seems of less inestimable value. Chang grabs a sword (the horse-shaped work is then broken by the sword). The fight continues and at one point Bond uses a broken edge of the vase to cut the rope of a glass candlestick which falls on Chang.

The fight moves to Basilica Glassware's workshop where there is a huge furnace. Chang takes a rod out of the oven with a hot tip and throws it at Bond like a spear. It stops in the air a few centimeters from Bond's face: an invisible plate of glass separated the two men! Bond goes to attack Chang, at one point drops from a cauldron containing liquid glass narrowly miss burning 007.

Then Bond takes the stairs and the fight moves to a room where there are wooden crates intended for Rio. Here things unfold similarly to the film with Chang who ends up falling on the piano of an orchestra.

This photo suggests that scenes were indeed shot in the workshop, but got cut during editing.

- Christopher Wood[102] : I was always trying to put Bond in a dangerous situation where the audience could empathize. E.g, in the glass factory I wanted him attacked with a white hot poker that would scorch, burn, mutilate objects within inches of Bond's face. We would see what would happen to his flesh should the poker made contact. The scene was not shot like that. All we got was the conventional mass destruction of precious objects

We find Holly on the balcony of her hotel (which is the Gritti Palace and not the Danieli) where a hand coming from behind suddenly covers her mouth and pulls her into the room. Bond picks her up and places her on the bed as she struggles. He asks her if she had anything to do with Chang's attack when suddenly his eyes are drawn to something: a bottle and two flutes of champagne.

- Holly: You're too suspicious. You suggested a drink, or had you forgotten?
- Bond: I'@ no idea you had such a good memory.
[Holly takes her handbag which is near the champagne; Bond deftly pushes it out of Holly's hands].
- Holly (angryly): What are you doing?
[Bond empties the contents of the bag onto the table].
- Bond: I'm too suspicious, remember?
- Holly: Did you think I was going for a gun?
- Bond: Nothing so crude.

Bond analyzes a lipstick: it's a sort of telescopic knife. A pen from a newspaper turns out to be a dart, the bag is a radio, and the perfume is a flamethrower. Bond then knows she is from the CIA and they decide to join forces by toasting:

> - Bond: Here's to co-operation, at all levels.
> [Holly looks at the double bed in her room].
> - Holly: I'm not certain I'd be wise to drink to that.
> [He places his and Holly's glasses next to him and pulls her towards him].
> - Bond: Holly, if we can't trust each other, who can we trust?
> [They kiss, Bond's hand discreetly searches a drawer: empty. In a mirror he sees Holly taking back her handbag; he stops her].
> - Bond: You don't need that.
> - Holly: A woman's lost without her make-up, James.
> - Bond: I think I may be lost with it.

As they make love, the camera was supposed to pan away to a window to show the canal with a boat carrying the remains of a piano with Chang embedded in it... The next day, Bond, M and Frederick Gray enter the laboratory with gas masks, but there is nothing left of the laboratory and Drax is there. Unlike in the film, Bond doesn't hide from Gray his intention to go to Rio:

> - Gray: I've never been so humiliated in my life. Your man should see a specialist, M.
> [Bond requests an analysis of the substance he recovered in the laboratory].
> - Gray: And what are you going to be doing?
> - Bond: I'm proceeding to Rio, as agreed. [He gives Gray an unloving nod] Good day, gentlemen.

According to Wood, at one point during the writing of the film Bond was supposed to arrive in Rio behind the wheel of a DeLorean and go to a football stadium where there was just a match taking place[103]. There Bond was to meet a local contact with a message for him, a contact which would be played by none other than the footballer of the Santos FC Pelé[104]!

However this is not the case in this script, instead 007 arrives in Concorde in Rio and is driven in a Rolls to the British embassy (and not to a hotel; he is not followed). There he meets a diplomat named Sir Giles Bentley who introduces him to a certain Miguel Santa:

> - Sir Giles: Allow me to introduce Miguel Santana, who will be at your disposal while you're with us.

Bond asks Miguel if the initials C & W mean anything to him; he replies that they are the one of an importer. (In the film the character of Miguel Santa will ultimately be changed to a woman, Manuela, but her role remains essentially the same). Bond and Miguel go to the C&W warehouse during the Rio Carnival, unaware that Jaws is in the crowd, wearing a Frankenstein mask. The script tells us that a boy of around 9 years old looks at Frankenstein-Jaws while laughing, then Jaws removes his mask in front of him, smiling: the child's expression changes, he screams in terror and runs away. We're told Jaws is "upset" by this.

Bond breaks into the warehouse while Miguel stay outside to guard. Jaws is going to attack Miguel, who takes out a knife: Jaws disarms him and is about to kill him when people arrive in the alley; Jaws then pretends to dance with him. But once the people have left, Jaws pushes Miguel against a gate and prepares to bite him...

When Bond leaves the warehouse he sees Miguel's arm through the bars, as if a finger was pointing towards him. Bond kneels next to Miguel's body and sees blood: he is dead. Jaws is probably no longer around. (Note that in the film, Jaws kills absolutely no one).

After that Bond takes the cable car to Sugarloaf Mountain. At the top he watches Drax's planes take off (this will be important for later) and runs into Holly. They decide to team up and take a cable car back down:

> - Holly: Beautiful view.
> - Bond: Not from where I'm standing.
> [She follows Bond's gaze: they see Jaws near the cable car station].
> - Holly: D'you know him?
> - Bond: Not socially. His name's Jaws. He kills people.
> - Holly: What can he do?
> - Bond: He'll think of something.

Like in the movie, Jaws blocks a big wheel with his hands and cuts a cable with his teeth. He joins them with another cable car and a fight begins. Bond and Holly end up escaping by sliding down the cable using a chain, with Jaws in a cable car not far behind. The main difference with the film is that there is no Dolly after Jaws and his cable car crash. (For the record, this character was not invented by Christopher Wood who hated Dolly[105]).

Bond and Holly are safe but are knocked out by a henchman. The script doesn't have them waking up in an ambulance, but in a luxurious yacht owned by Drax. Next to them is Jaws; Drax is eating an English breakfast at a table a little far away. 007 therefore meets the villain again:

> - Drax: Ah, Mr Bond! I see you are with us at last. Splendid. Poor Doctor Goodhead has been quite anxious about you... You find me enjoying your country's one indisputable contribution to Western civilisation: the English breakfast.

A servant brings two boiled eggs to Drax. He takes an egg spoon in one hand, a knife in the other. He looks at Bond, smiling mockingly:

> - Drax: Tell me: do you tap or cut?
> - Bond: It depends who I'm up against.
> [Drax drops the spoon].
> - Drax: I cut.
> [In one swift movement he cuts the top of the egg].
> - Drax: And that is what I'm going to do to you, my dear Bond, and to your devoted companion. Cut

By "cut", Drax means that he will tie up Bond and Holly before towing them along the coral reef with/behind his yacht:

- Drax (while eating and drinking): Do I intrigue you? Then let me enlighten you. When, soon, this vessel sails, you will both be tied to a long rope and towed behind it. Out there is a coral reef. The only passage through it is narrow. The boat will sail through the gap, but you will not... Why not, do you ask? [He gestures towards a paravane] Do you know what that is? [Bond frowns]. I see you do. A paravane, Doctor. Used for deepsea fishing. It will draw you, not behind the boat, but at an angle from it. The boat will sail through the gap in the coral reef, but you will be dragged across it. Your flesh will be ripped from your bones. Beyond the reef there are sharks. Your blood will attract them. They will come in their hundreds. You will be towed until there is nothing left but a rope's end, frayed and bloody.
- Bond: You're a sick man, Drax.
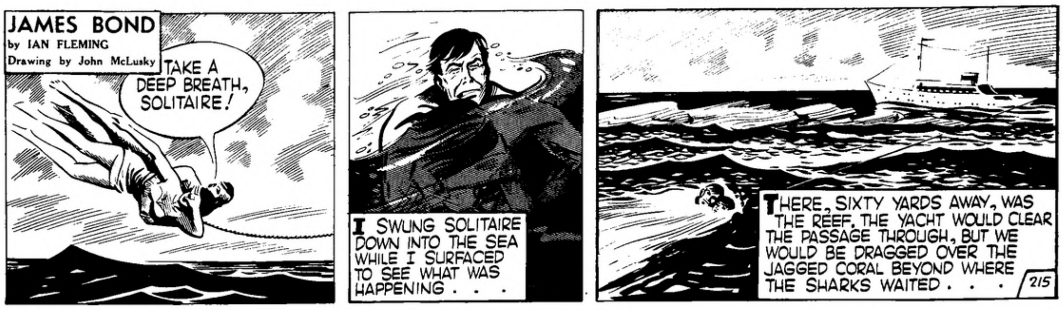
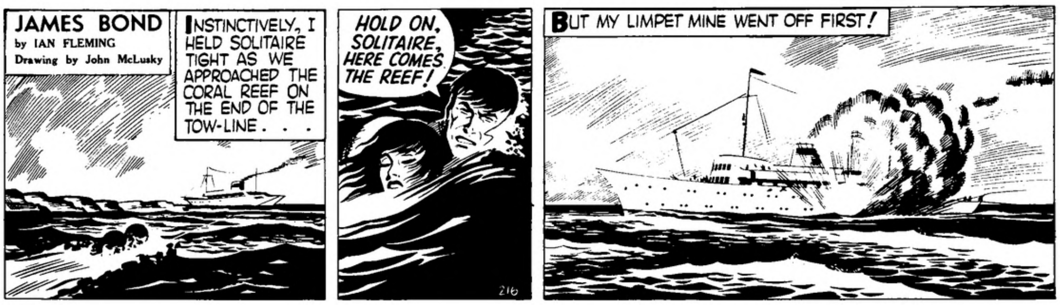
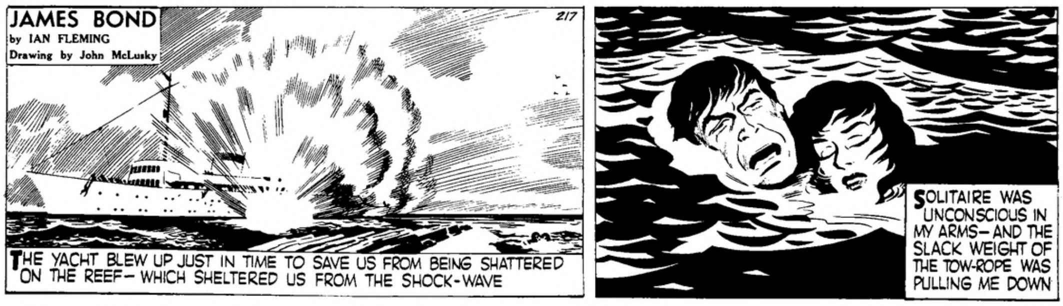
- Drax: Not as sick as you're going to be, Mr Bond.



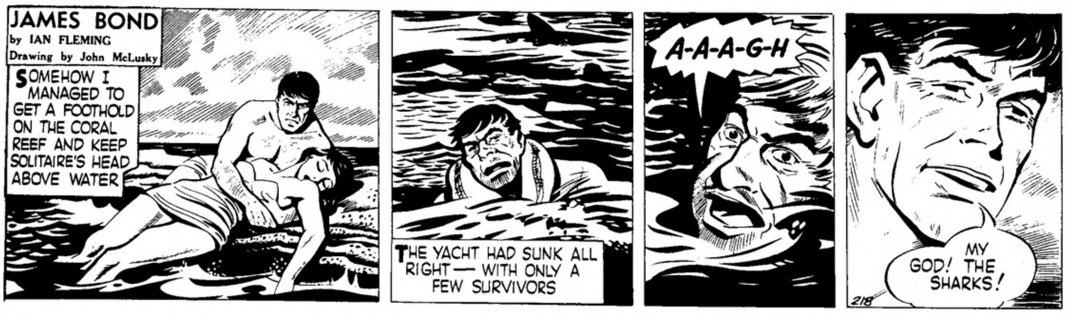
JAMES BOND
by IAN FLEMING
Drawing by John McLusky
TAKE A DEEP BREATH, SOLITAIRE!
I SWUNG SOLITAIRE DOWN INTO THE SEA WHILE I SURFACED TO SEE WHAT WAS HAPPENING . . .
THERE, SIXTY YARDS AWAY, WAS THE REEF. THE YACHT WOULD CLEAR THE PASSAGE THROUGH, BUT WE WOULD BE DRAGGED OVER THE JAGGED CORAL BEYOND WHERE THE SHARKS WAITED . . .
215



JAMES BOND
by IAN FLEMING
Drawing by John McLusky
INSTINCTIVELY, I HELD SOLITAIRE TIGHT AS WE APPROACHED THE CORAL REEF ON THE END OF THE TOW-LINE . . .
HOLD ON, SOLITAIRE, HERE COMES THE REEF!
216
BUT MY LIMPET MINE WENT OFF FIRST!



JAMES BOND
by IAN FLEMING
Drawing by John McLusky
217
THE YACHT BLEW UP JUST IN TIME TO SAVE US FROM BEING SHATTERED ON THE REEF— WHICH SHELTERED US FROM THE SHOCK-WAVE
SOLITAIRE WAS UNCONSCIOUS IN MY ARMS—AND THE SLACK WEIGHT OF THE TOW-ROPE WAS PULLING ME DOWN



JAMES BOND
by IAN FLEMING
Drawing by John McLusky
SOMEHOW I MANAGED TO GET A FOOTHOLD ON THE CORAL REEF AND KEEP SOLITAIRE'S HEAD ABOVE WATER
THE YACHT HAD SUNK ALL RIGHT — WITH ONLY A FEW SURVIVORS
A-A-A-G-H
MY GOD! THE SHARKS!
218

This sequence, imagined by Ian Fleming in the novel Live and Let Die (see the Daily Express's comics adaption on previous page) and already attempted at the time of writing the eponymous film, will later be reused in the film For Your Eyes Only with a few small differences...

Indeed, Drax also sent Jaws to 007's hotel to collect the latter's belongings; these include a leather suitcase. A dial with a line of numbers is on the side of this suitcase. Drax asks Bond to open it and he does: he moves the numbers and the latches, the opening click is heard. After a quick movement, Bond moves the numbers again and opens the suitcase wide. Drax has Jaws dump its contents (which include a Walther PPK, a knife sheath, and Bond's passport) overboard, then the suitcase is placed out of his sight. The script calls for a close-up of this suitcase: the numbers on the dial change from second to second and are now at 29.35. Drax leaves the yacht:

> - Drax: And now, regretfully, I have other more important business to attend to. I leave your demise to those with stronger stomachs and poorer imaginations. Farewell to you both, and bon voyage.

Drax gets off the yacht and gets into a limousine, then his crew prepares Bond and Holly (Jaws removes Bond's watch).

> - Holly: Have we any chance at all?
> - Bond: A chance? Yes. Time will tell.

The yacht begins to drag Holly and Bond; the latter struggles to get Holly's head out of the water. Meanwhile, on the boat, Jaws notices one of the henchmen looking at 007's suitcase with interest. With an angry growl, Jaws grabs the suitcase from the henchman and "smooth[ing] its surface sentimentally"; he doesn't notice the numbers on the dial which are now at 04.28. The yacht passes through the narrow passage and Bond and Holly continue their journey through the coral, 007 twisting to absorb the worst impacts. He winces when he bumps into sharp edges. Sharks follow them. The yacht has passed the coral reef and is heading out to sea.

Finally, Jaws looks at the dial on the suitcase which is at 0.07 and then notices the numbers which now change from 0.06 to 0.05, 0.04. He looks at the dial with growing suspicion then stands up, holding the suitcase by the handle, preparing to throw it overboard. The yacht explodes violently until it completely disintegrates! Fragments of wood and metal fall into the water as Bond carries the now unconscious Holly towards a piece of the wreckage before pushing with his legs towards the shore.

Jaws? He is very close, sitting astride on a piece of wood, still holding the handle of the suitcase. Weary resignation is visible in his eyes. Sharks devour the henchman who was inspecting the suitcase and Jaws rows away. Meanwhile Bond and Holly reach a tropical beach; we can see blood on 007's back as if he had been whipped. They undo their bonds saying, "I've heard of bondage, but this is ridiculous". Holly asks him what happened:

> - Bond: Plastic explosive in the lining of my briefcase. Close it the wrong way and it detonates. I fixed it before we sailed. I told you time would tell.
> - Holly: How did you know when to set it for?
> - Bond: I didn't. I guessed thirty minutes.
> - Holly: And how right you were... How right you always are.

Holly lies on her back, pulling Bond close to her and kissing him passionately.

We are now on a road which is in the middle of enormous meadows. 007 and Holly wait for Q who ends up showing up with an assistant. He arrives in a vehicle towing a horse box on which we can read Pegasus Riding Stables. Inside there are two mini-jets like the one of the movie Octopussy (one red and one white)!

- Q: Well, I've brought your mounts. You'd better be jolly careful with them.

After assembling this "couple or real thoroughbreds" (according to Q), Bond sits in the red jet and Holly in the white. After a final "look after the equipment", Q gives a thumbs up and they take off. While in the air, Bond asks over the radio, "Holly, d'you think you can handle one of these?". "I think so, James", she replies, maneuvering her jet and making it fly upside down, parallel to Bond's plane. The script specifies that Bond is speechless and she waves happily at him. We hear an anxiously Q on the radio, reminding them of what he said...

James Bond then plunges his plane towards the horse box where Q is located, the two planes "almost touch the roof of the box, Q dives to the ground, his head against the ground".

Shortly after, the two agents are on the trail of a Drax's transport plane. They follow him on radar to find out where he is going. The script calls for a shot of an Indian in a dugout canoe fishing in the jungle below as the two mini-jets pass next to each other overhead. Suddenly three other points appear on the radar:

- Holly: James, something coming up fast!

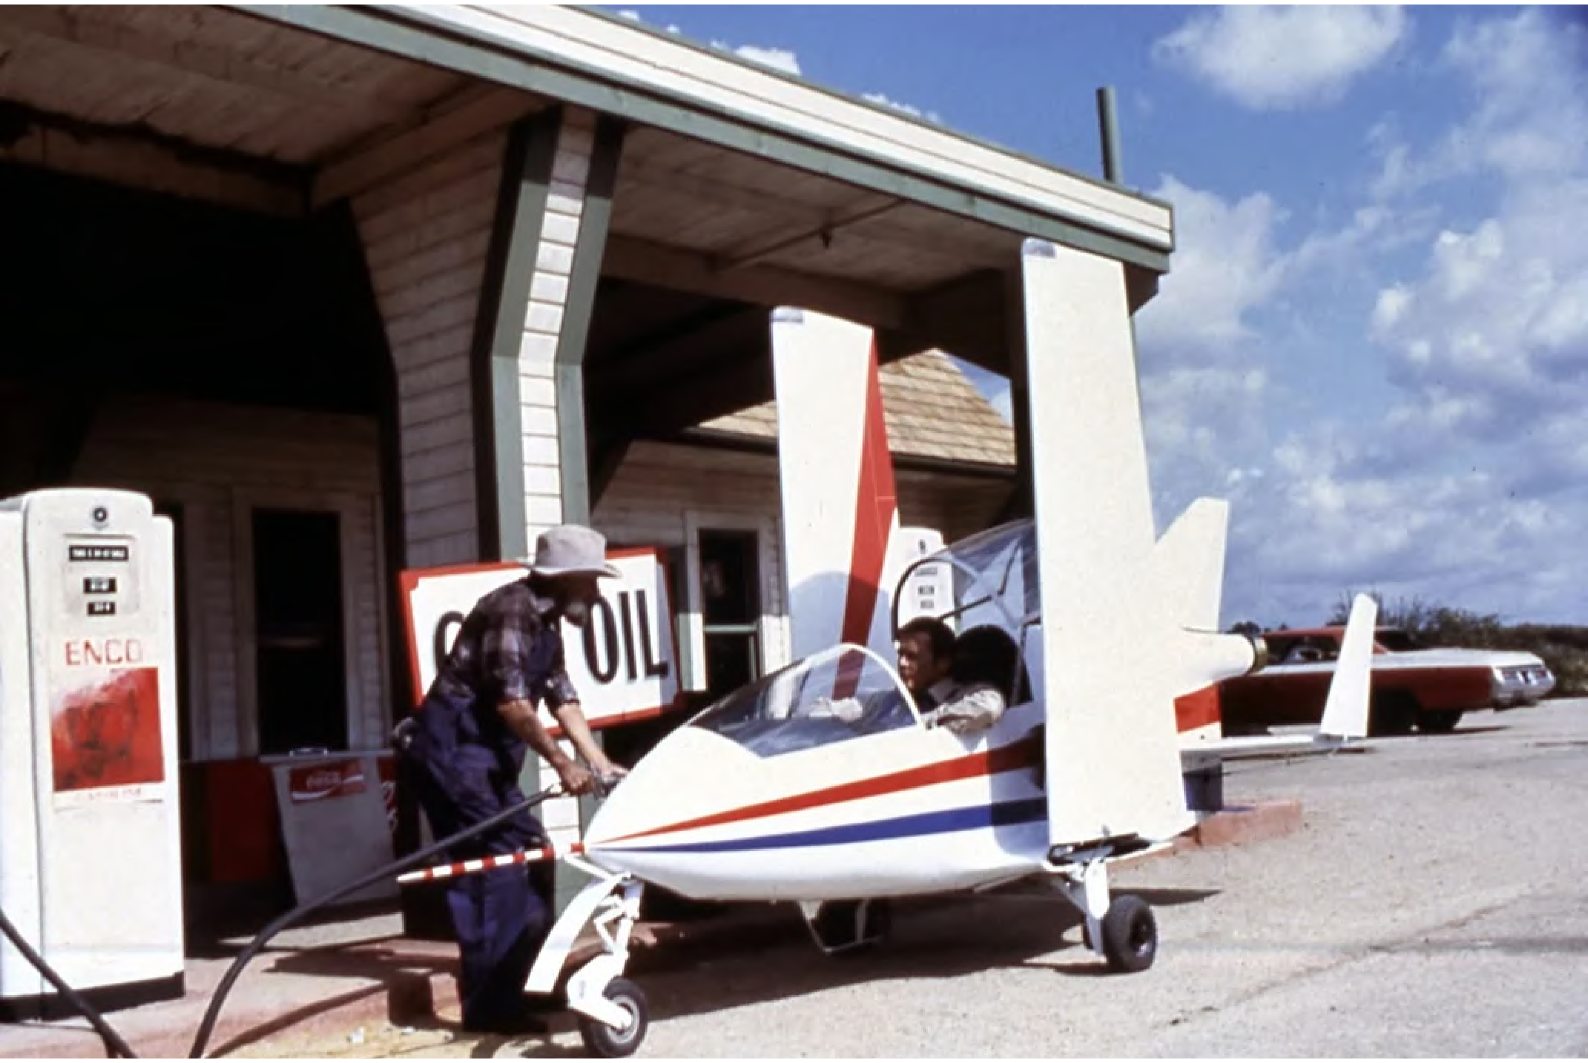
They look in their rearview mirrors and see three large jets sent by Drax that are in a triangular formation behind them; an aerial duel begins. Bond begins by doing a loop, pursued by one of the planes. Holly joins Bond, they fly parallel. Two of Drax's planes open fire on them, Bond and Holly dive then rise and suddenly change direction "in a terrifying scissors manoeuvre, they cross each other, seemingly only inches from collision". The two planes that chasing them instinctively follow them but end up crashing into each other with an explosion.

As Bond and Holly rise steeply vertically, they waggle their wings "in a gesture of triumph". Drax's third plane pursues Holly and manages to shoot her, smoke comes out of her plane which falls in a spiral; she manages to stabilize it to land in the middle of a lake. The plane begins to sink and Holly's fate remains unknown for now.

Drax's plane now opens fire towards Bond's plane. 007 dives into a gorge, the jet still in pursuit. They follow the course of the gorge, in this environment Bond has the advantage because his aircraft is more maneuverable than the one of his opponent. The gorge narrows abruptly, so that the space between the high cliffs is less than a mini-jet wing length. Bond tilts his plane at 90°, so that the wings are vertical, and manages to fit through the small space. His pursuer's plane is not so lucky: its two wings are torn off, it crashes and explodes violently.

Bond is however not out of danger yet, his fuel gauge now indicates zero and the engine is coughing. He manages to land the mini-jet on a country road. A truck arrives in front of him and Bond then narrowly turns towards a gas station and parks in front of one of the fuel pump. "Ordinary or Super?", asks the gas station attendant.



The script was getting long and very expensive, explains Wood about the absence of this sequence in the movie[106].

After this, Bond joins Q, M and Moneypenny at an MI6 ranch (not a monastery) on horseback with the music of The Magnificent Seven. The scene is similar to the movie although one small, minor difference exists: we are told that the place where Holly landed is an area in which the rare orchid, which is the base of Drax's deadly substance, can be found.

In the next scene Bond goes to the area with a gadgets' laden boat that the script calls the "Q-craft". He arrives at the wreckage of Holly's plane when gunfire is opened on him and a boat chase begins (Jaws is not present, however). In the end, 007 has to urgently get out of the boat and does so by using a hang glider. It crashes into the water and disappears from sight of the viewers. The hang glider is sucked into a whirlwind but Bond is safe.

007 sees a beautiful blonde dressed in a "strange, exotic costume; long split skirt, white cotton mantle swathing breast and head. She stands, seen through the rainbow haze of the spray from the torrent below, looking not at Bond, but across the gorge".

007 catches up a little later with the pretty blonde, who is now alongside two female servants and arrives at Drax's secret base. Bond flirts a little more than in the film: "I suppose a vodka martini would be out of the question?"; the blonde beauty smiles and shakes her head as only response. She and the two servants lead him to a swimming pool. Clean clothes are laid out on the other side. Additional servants appear with wine and platters containing roast chickens and exotic fruits. The blonde beauty gestures towards the pool and the food.

Looking tired, Bond takes off his wet and torn clothes and slides into the pool. The script calls for a shot of an orchid that a girl throws into the water. Of course the moment of relaxation is short-lived. As in the film, a giant anaconda appears. Bond fights against the animal, he grabs a spit from a tray of food to jam it in the anaconda's mouth. Finally 007 gets rid of the beast by sucking it into a pool drain valve:

> [Bond accidentally opens the valve with his feet]. The water rushes through, sucking the snake's tail into the drain. Bond, dragged underwater, sees what is happening and forces the valve open wider. The snake is slowly but surely drawn into the drain. Its head disappears.

Bond is captured (incidentally we are told that the color of Drax's technicians' uniforms is white, not yellow) and there is some interesting dialogue:

> - Bond: What the hell are you up to here, Drax?
> - Drax: It is a convention of the fiction beloved by parlour maids that the villain explains all before disposing of his victims. I do not intend to follow that precedent.
> - Bond: Not even the briefest elucidation, Drax? What about these orchids?

And later:

> - Bond: Where are those shuttles going, Drax?
> - Drax: You have distracted me enough.

It is also never explained in this script why Drax stole his own shuttle. What follows is quite similar to the film: Holly and Bond are placed in a room located under a Moonraker (basically the only scene in the film taken from the novel) and there is a small difference:

> - Holly: Can't we climb out?
> Even as she speaks, a circle of sharp steel points spring out from around the walls, angled downwards to prevent escape.

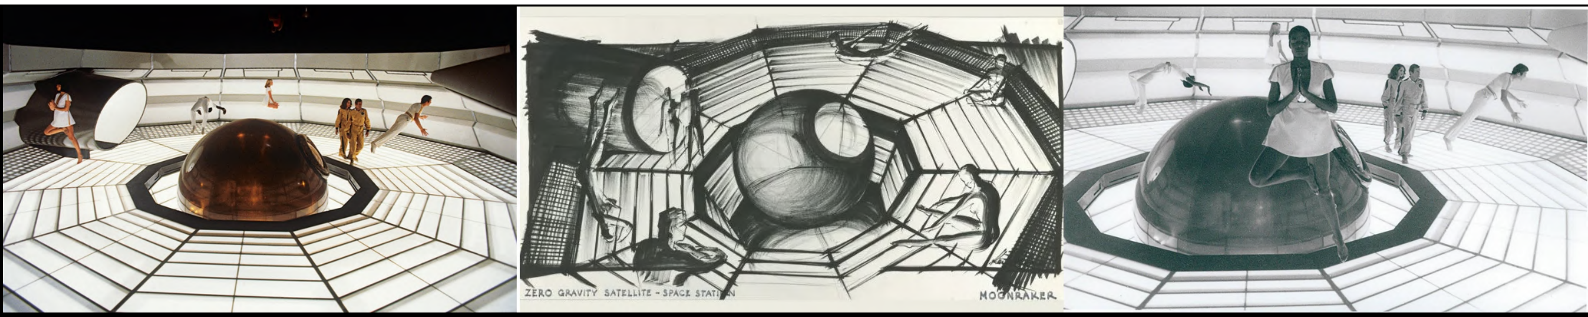
Bond and Holly escape thanks to Bond's watch and board a Moonraker shuttle who joins Drax's space station. Docking at the station is much more complex than in the film: as they approach the station (which looks like a large globe without branches) the six Moonraker open the doors of their cargo hold from which a kind of crane emerges:

> Now we have a general view of the entire operation. The six Moonrakers all have their cargo hatches open. A variety of components are being brought out and fitted together. Some unfold, others extend. The jointed crane-arms, expertly manipulated by the [...] operators, take on almost human attributes, reaching out, grasping with steel claws, cutting and welding with laser beams, assembling, clamping together. One of the shuttles cuts components with a laser beam that emits from its nose.
>
> As we watch, the Drax['s] Space Station takes shape. From the big central globe now extend six transparent tubular arms with, at each extremity, a satellite globe. [...] The whole complex reminds one of the now-familiar cross-shaped design of the Drax['s] symbol.

Drax's speech is much shorter (the egocentric part is missing) and when Holly and Bond search for the radar jamming center, they come across a sort of love chamber, where astronauts from the station are already working on the creation of a new race:

> From Bond's and Holly's viewpoint, we see, in the zero-gravity sphere, a number of beautiful young men and girls, in leotards, drifting weightlessly as they perform calisthenics and pose in meditative yoga positions. In the foreground a beautiful girl [...]. Bond is looking at [her] with interest. Holly moves away. Bond, with a regretful look back at the beautiful girl, follows and joins Holly, who has stopped at another internal window further along the gallery.
>
> From Bond's and Holly's viewpoint, we look into another circular chamber. It is glowing with a strange, ethereal light, which throbs like a human heartbeat. In the globe, floating in space, are the two lovers. The girl appears to be naked beneath a white diaphanous garment that billows erotically as she and her partner, also seemingly naked, move in a sensuous mating ballet. The girl's dress furls like a slow-breaking wave, their fingers touch, they embrace, the girl's fingers stretch out in weightless ecstasy.
>
> - Bond (dryly): Somebody's taking Drax's address to heart, anyway.



A similar scene was cut during editing as shown in these photos and concept art.

After Bond and Holly destroyed the jamming equipment, the space station is now visible from Earth's radar stations. The Americans contact the Soviet Union. However, this is not General Gogol who takes the call, but a certain General Kuchinsky (same dialogue as in the film).

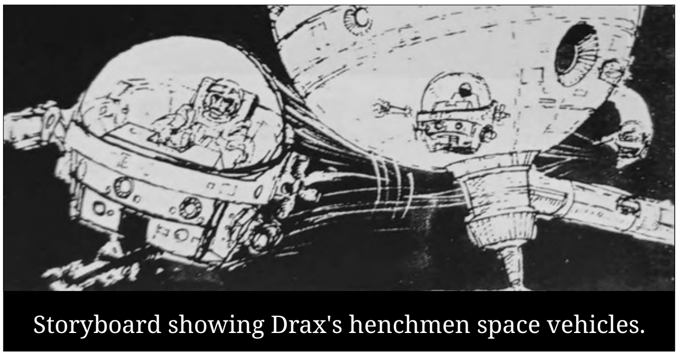
Bond and Holly end up getting captured but reinforcements arrive. The script specifies that the Americans wear white spacesuits while Drax's men wear black (not yellow) spacesuits. Some of Drax's men also have one-man space vehicles with lasers mounted on them!

Drax orders Jaws to eject Bond and Holly into space via an airlock, but in the same way as the film (although there is no Dolly), Jaws joins the allied camp.

The idea wasn't Wood's and although he didn't like it, he had to compose with it: "I was told that thousands of letters had been received, mostly from children (including Lewis's grandson), wanting Jaws to become a good guy and work with Bond"[107]. Lewis Gilbert also says that it was these letters that made production wanting to bring back Jaws's character[108].

Curiously, Drax is directly killed in this same scene (even before the Americans enter the space station):

> As the guards [struck by Jaws] crumple, dropping their weapons, Drax steps forward, astonished, momentarily off his guard. At once, Bond hits him flush on the jaw, jolting him back through the circular door straight into the airlock. Holly grabs the lever, pulls it and the door slides shut. Inside the airlock, Drax picks himself up and stands, his face contorted with rage, screaming abuse at them all. But nothing can be heard: the airlock is soundproof. With a small, grim smile, Bond turns to a second lever beside the inner door. But before he can grasp it, Jaws puts a huge hand out and moves Bond gently aside. Then he grasps the lever and, with a look of loathing at Drax, pulls it.
>
> Drax, his face now filled with horror, is ejected from the airlock [...] into space. Bond and Holly stand facing Jaws. His steel teeth glint as a great grin of goodwill spreads across his face.



Storyboard showing Drax's henchmen space vehicles.

The Americans arrive inside the station, get rid of the resistance, and General Scott comes upon them and says: "Doctor Goodhead! Bond! How in the world?". So this line of dialogue would suggest that Scott and Bond know each other?

The space station is about to disintegrate and Bond and Holly board Drax's shuttle to destroy the gas spheres. Like in the movie, Jaws helps undock their Moonraker and then we can read:

> Jaws stands at the window. Beside him is a statuesque redhead. [...] From Bond's and Holly's viewpoint, we see Jaws and the redhead standing at the window. Jaws holds up his hand, palm outwards, giving the peace sign.

The last pages are very similar to the film (except there is not the following line of dialogue: " Colonel Scott reports picking up two survivors: a tall man and a short blonde woman"; so we don't know what happened to Jaws and the redhead).

Revisions

Vernon Harris, as script editor on the film (Harris had written several Lewis Gilbert films in the past), did a pass of rewrites[109]. More surprisingly, comedy writing duo Dick Clement and Ian La Frenais were invited to participate in rewrites.

Dick Clement[110], born in 1937 in England, studied at Bishop's Stortford College, then spent a year in the United States. On his return, he completed his national service in the Royal Air Force. He then joined the BBC as a studio director and began writing scripts and comedy sketches.

Ian La Frenais[111], born in 1937 in Northumberland, is a child who loves art and writing. He attended Dame Allan's Boys School and completed his National Service in the British Army. After working as a salesman for a tobacco company, he began composing songs for a weekly satirical show on Tyne Tees Television, then moved to London where he worked for a market research company.

The two men meet in a pub through a mutual friend. Over time, and soaked in beer, they imagine a sketch.

Together, Dick Clement and Ian La Frenais enjoyed a long and successful career in film, television and theater, with works in the comedy genre. Their partnership began in the mid-1960s with the sitcom The Likely Lads, and by the end of the decade, they had written three feature films: The Jokers, Otley (directed by Clement) and Hannibal Brooks.

At the beginning of the 1970s, two other feature films were written by Clement and La Frenais: Villain and Catch Me a Spy. During this same period they created their sitcoms Whatever Happened to the Likely Lads? and Porridge ; plus a Porridge spin-off: Going Straight. There was also the writing of the big screen version of The Likely Lads and Porridge.

During the same period they adapted the novel Billy Liar in musical theater. Now living in California, they are writing an American version of Porridge as well as The Prisoner of Zenda (1979).

In the 1980s, Clement and La Frenais also contributed to a rewrite of the off-serie James Bond Never Say Never Again. They also write Auf Wiedersehen, Pet and continued in 1987 with Vice versa.

In the early 1990s they scripted and oversaw the production of the show Tracey Takes On... for about four years. There was the writing of The Commitments, Excess Baggage, Still Crazy and rewrites for two big Hollywood films directed by Michael Bay: The Rock and Pearl Harbor.

In 2005 Clement and La Frenais were writing television adaptations of novels for the BBC: The Rotters' Club and Archangel. In 2006 they were credited as writers on the animated film Flushed Away, while 2007 saw the release of the musical film Across the Universe, based on Beatles's songs. The Bank Job featuring Jason Statham is also a film they wrote.

Two new television series written by them were broadcasted in 2017: a new version of Porridge and Henry IX.

Clement and La Frenais remember being brought on board "to jazz up some scenes and to write better dialogue. We wrote some scenes improving the glassworks in Venice with Lois Chiles"[112]. They also wrote a scene set in a Brazilian brothel, which was never filmed[113].

- Ian La Frenais[114] : [They] say, "can you be in Paris tomorrow?". And you got a first-class ticket and stayed in a five-star hotel, the Rafael. I arrived before Dick and was taken out to dinner that night by Broccoli with Roger Moore and about six beautiful girls. [...] Broccoli said: "We had a logistical switch and we won't be able to go to South America. So we won't be able to use any of that stuff that you guys have done". I thought he could've called us in LA and told us this rather than fly us over.

According to Clement and La Frenais, nothing they wrote made it into the film except for a line of dialogue at the Venice glassworks, because "it's a fucking good line", adds La Frenais[115].

May 19, 1978 revised script

Now let's dive into another script from Moonraker of 150 pages. The date visible on the cover page is May 19, 1978 but in reality it has revised pages dating from June 20, August 1, 3, 14, 22, 29 and November 21, 1978.

This is a script that is much closer to the film than the one previously studied (there is notably no jet pack sequence, nor keelhauling, nor mini-jets), however there are some interesting differences. For example during the scene of the Boeing 747 transporting the Moonraker, it is specified that one of the crew members is wearing an R.A.F. uniform and the others NASA's one (so they are no longer all American).

Things become more interesting when Bond flies to Los Angeles, where he is picked up at the airport no longer by Trudi Parker but by a certain Sylvie Dufour (perhaps Sylvie will become Corinne in honor of the actress who will play her?). When 007 later wakes up next to her, the script says: "as it reaches the twelve, the watch plays the first eight bars of Rule Britannia. Bond's eyes snap open" (it is therefore no longer God Save the Queen).

A few pages later, when Bond and Holly are talking after leaving the Venini store, the script still called for a camera shots of someone observing them with binoculars (but this time from the Merceria rather than the Campanile). Bond finally gets into his gondola when a man on a hearse boat kills his rower with a knife. Bond presses a button and the gondola transforms; he kills the knife man with his pistol. The rest of the chase is similar to the film, including Bond traveling through St. Mark's Square on his boat's inflatable cushion.

Arriving in Rio, Bond is followed by Manuela. He orders his driver to turn right, but unlike in the film she still follows him:

> The Rolls approaches a busy crossroads. A tram comes from the cross street and starts across the intersection. It is packed with colorfully dressed passengers, crowding the rear platform and clinging to its sides. The Rolls cuts across the front of the tram and disappears as the tram continues across the intersection.
>
> Manuela, in her sports car, is forced to stop, her view of the Rolls temporarily obscured. As soon as the tram has passed, she accelerates across the intersection.
>
> The tram is moving along the street. Bond is hanging nonchalantly on to the side among the rest of the colorful passenger.

Director Lewis Gilbert on the cable car set.

Further on, during the fight on the cable car, another difference is to be noted: Holly uses her flamethrower perfume on Jaws (he then falls backwards into the trap door which leads inside the cable car cabin). Soon after, Jaws meets Dolly (described only as "she is petite [short], some five feet [1.5 m] tall, and pretty") and there's a strange dialogue:

> - Dolly: My name's Dolly.
> - Jaws: Ga-Ga, Gaga.
>
> A subtitle reads "Hello, Dolly".

Later, in Drax's space station, Bond and Holly disable the radar jamming system. The Americans then speak with General Gogol and there is a cameo from another character from The Spy Who Loved Me when their conversation ends:

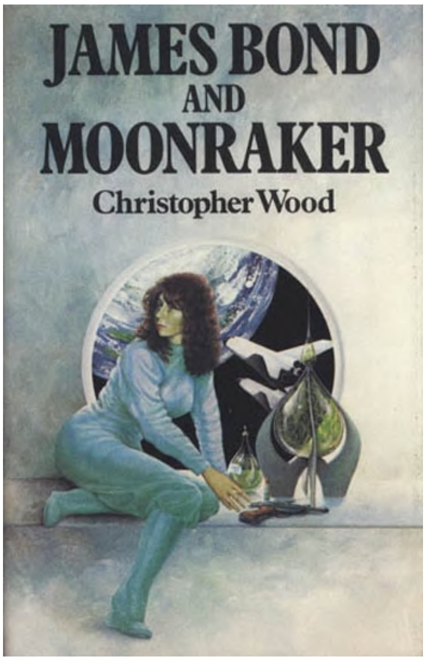
> [Gogol] smiles as he puts the phone down. The camera pans to reveal a beautiful brunette in bed beside him, smoking a cigarette. We know her as Anya Amasova.

The script specifies that Drax's astronauts wear "ochre" colored spacesuits, Bond also tries to bring Jaws and Dolly with him and Holly into the Moonraker 5 but the shuttle doors are blocked (Jaws doesn't say "Well, here's to us" after uncorking the champagne in the script).

> - Tom Mankiewicz[116] : I think it's the worst [Bond's film]. Too flabby. There's no real narrative. And there are too many scenes in it for me that deal in comedy. I mean, straight-out comedy. All I remember from that film is Jaws falling in love. It was total camp.

Novelization

Christopher Wood returns to Rio during filming[117]. However, as he was not often consulted on the script on site, he took the opportunity to advance the writing of the planned novelization of this film[118].



This one will be published under the title James Bond and Moonraker in 1979.

Unlike the novelization of The Spy Who Loved Me which showed significant differences between the book and the film, the one of Moonraker is almost identical to the movie.

Wood states that the reason why the Moonraker is sent to England is because it must receive anti-missile interception technology from Q-Branch.

The physical description of Drax is very close to the one Fleming gives in the novel (red hair, mustache, disfigured face, etc.) and we also find a Germanic trace in his voice. The character of Corinne Dufour exists only under the name Trudi Parker. The hunting scene doesn't exist in the novelization but Trudi meets her death in the same way. The gondola chase is shorter and has a different outcome: there is no inflatable cushion.

Further on, Chang doesn't fall on a piano but on a table in a restaurant. Upon his arrival in Rio, Bond in a Rolls Royce is followed by Manuela in a Ferrari, before he loses her by getting out of the car to grab himself onto a tram.

The character from Jaws doesn't appear in the parachute scene, nor in the boat chase in South America; his girlfriend Dolly doesn't exist at all in the novelization. On the cable car, Holly uses one of her gadgets (the flamethrower perfume) to counter Jaws.

A Soviet satellite is sent to Drax's space station before the Americans arrive and the novelization also includes the love chamber. Drax's men have vehicles during space combat, it is thanks to one of them that Jaws undocks the Moonraker 5 (with the help of a female Drax's astronaut). During space combat, Bond's priority is to neutralize a defensive turret during a spacewalk.

Drax's motivations are also deepened: in appearance he justifies his investment in the American space program for not to leaving the control of the space to the Soviets. The real goal of his extermination plan, however, is to resolve, among other things, future problems of overpopulation which would, according to him, lead to more famine, pollution and wars (which would cause the legacies of civilizations and the arts to disappear...).

- Christopher Wood[119] : It would have been fun to have had the opportunity to create an original James Bond novel; but I wasn't asked.

Confessions of a screenwriter

Well after his participation in the writing of two James Bond films, Christopher Wood published his memoirs in 2006: James Bond, the Spy I Loved. Brilliantly told and not without humor, this book is centered on the Bond and Confessions of/from periods of the screenwriter.

This provides first-hand information on the writing and behind the scenes of these films (which was particularly useful to me for the last two chapters of this book).

Unfortunately out of stock and with no digital version on sale, the rare second-hand copies of James Bond, the Spy I Loved can reach very high sums.

JAMES BOND,
THE SPY I LOVED
'My name is...'
CHRISTOPHER WOOD
segued from being the author of Confessions of a Window Cleaner to writing
The Spy Who Loved Me and Moonraker, two of the most successful James Bond films ever made. Here he recounts his adventures in the wonderful world of 007.

Sources/references from chapter 11: Moonraker

1 Copy inscribed by the author, held at the Lilly Library (Indiana, USA): https://liblilly.sitehost.iu.edu/etexts/fleming/index.shtml

2 "Ian Fleming" biography by Andrew Lycett (1996).

3 "Ian Fleming" biography by Andrew Lycett (1996).

4 "Moonraker: A first draft pre-production screenplay" at auction in Bonhams: https://www.bonhams.com/auction/22444/lot/103/moonraker-a-first-draft-pre-production-screenplay-august-7th-1956/

5 "Ground Zero" by Ajay Chowdhury in MI6 Confidential magazine (issue 74, volume 18, October 2024).
"Ian Fleming: The Complete Man" by Nicholas Shakespeare (2023).

6 "Ground Zero" by Ajay Chowdhury in MI6 Confidential magazine (issue 74, volume 18, October 2024).

7 "Ian Fleming: The Complete Man" by Nicholas Shakespeare (2023).

8 "Ground Zero" by Ajay Chowdhury in MI6 Confidential magazine (issue 74, volume 18, October 2024).

9 "Ground Zero" by Ajay Chowdhury in MI6 Confidential magazine (issue 74, volume 18, October 2024).

10 "Ground Zero" by Ajay Chowdhury in MI6 Confidential magazine (issue 74, volume 18, October 2024).

11 "Ground Zero" by Ajay Chowdhury in MI6 Confidential magazine (issue 74, volume 18, October 2024).

12 "Ground Zero" by Ajay Chowdhury in MI6 Confidential magazine (issue 74, volume 18, October 2024).

13 "Ian Fleming: The Complete Man" by Nicholas Shakespeare (2023).

14 "Ground Zero" by Ajay Chowdhury in MI6 Confidential magazine (issue 74, volume 18, October 2024).

15 "Ground Zero" by Ajay Chowdhury in MI6 Confidential magazine (issue 74, volume 18, October 2024).

16 "Ground Zero" by Ajay Chowdhury in MI6 Confidential magazine (issue 74, volume 18, October 2024).

17 "Ground Zero" by Ajay Chowdhury in MI6 Confidential magazine (issue 74, volume 18, October 2024).

18 "Ian Fleming: The Complete Man" by Nicholas Shakespeare (2023)..

19 "Ground Zero" by Ajay Chowdhury in MI6 Confidential magazine (issue 74, volume 18, October 2024).

20 "Ground Zero" by Ajay Chowdhury in MI6 Confidential magazine (issue 74, volume 18, October 2024).

21 "Ground Zero" by Ajay Chowdhury in MI6 Confidential magazine (issue 74, volume 18, October 2024).

22 "Ian Fleming: The Complete Man" by Nicholas Shakespeare (2023).

23 "Gerry Anderson: the authorized biography" by Simon Archer and Stan Nicholls (1997).

24 "Interview: Gerry Anderson" by Amanda Rae Prescott on Den of Geek website: https://www.denofgeek.com/tv/interview-gerry-anderson/

25 "Gerry Anderson: the authorized biography" by Simon Archer and Stan Nicholls (1997).

26 "Interview: Gerry Anderson" by Amanda Rae Prescott on Den of Geek website: https://www.denofgeek.com/tv/interview-gerry-anderson/

27 "Gerry Anderson: the authorized biography" by Simon Archer and Stan Nicholls (1997).
"SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw

28 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw

29 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw

30 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw

31 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw

32 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw

33 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw

34 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw

35 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw

36 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw

37 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw

38 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw

39 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw

40 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw

41 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw
42 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw
43 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw
44 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw
45 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw
46 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw
47 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw
48 "Gerry Anderson: the authorized biography" by Simon Archer and Stan Nicholls (1997).
49 "Gerry Anderson: the authorized biography" by Simon Archer and Stan Nicholls (1997).
50 "Gerry Anderson: the authorized biography" by Simon Archer and Stan Nicholls (1997).
51 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw
52 "Gerry Anderson: the authorized biography" by Simon Archer and Stan Nicholls (1997).
53 "SpyMaster Interview #49 - Jamie Anderson" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3QYeyZVUIpw
54 For Cary Bates biography, see for the sources:
Cary Bates's Wikipedia page.
55 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
56 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
57 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
58 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
59 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
60 "The James Bond Films: a behind the scenes history" by Steven Jay Rubin (1983 edition).
61 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
62 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
63 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
64 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
65 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
66 "Inside Moonraker" DVD's bonus.
67 Mankiewicz's interview by Chauhan Dharmesh for Superman Cinema, via CapedWonder (2006): https://www.capedwonder.com/the-2006-tom-mankiewicz-interview
68 "Inside Moonraker" DVD bonus.
69 "The James Bond Archives" by Colin Odell, Michelle Le Blanc and Paul Duncan (2012).
70 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
71 "Ken Adam: The Art of Production Design" by Christopher Frayling (2005); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
72 Bondage magazine, Mankiewicz's interview by Richard Schenkman (issue #8, 1980).
73 Bondage magazine, Mankiewicz's interview by Richard Schenkman (issue #8, 1980).
74 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
75 Bondage magazine, Mankiewicz's interview by Richard Schenkman (issue #8, 1980).
76 "Another interview with Christopher Wood" by Adam Farrington-Williams in Universal Exports website: https://www.universalexports.net/interviews/wood2.shtml
77 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
78 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).
79 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).
80 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).
81 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).
82 "The James Bond Archives" by Colin Odell, Michelle Le Blanc and Paul Duncan (2012).
83 "Inside Moonraker" DVD's bonus.
84 "James Bond 'Moonraker', 1979 – Director's script (3)" auction's page at Bellmans: https://app.bellmans.co.uk/en/auction/nov-gilbertfilm-2021-the-lewis-gilbert-film-script-and-production-archive/522-james-bond-moonraker-1979-director-s-script-3
85 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).

86 "James Bond 'Moonraker', 1979 – Director's script (3)" auction's page at Bellmans: https://app.bellmans.co.uk/en/auction/nov-gilbertfilm-2021-the-lewis-gilbert-film-script-and-production-archive/522-james-bond-moonraker-1979-director-s-script-3

87 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).

88 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).

89 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).

90 "James Bond 'Moonraker', 1979 – Director's script (3)" auction's page at Bellmans: https://app.bellmans.co.uk/en/auction/nov-gilbertfilm-2021-the-lewis-gilbert-film-script-and-production-archive/522-james-bond-moonraker-1979-director-s-script-3

91 "James Bond 'Moonraker', 1979 – Director's script (3)" auction's page at Bellmans: https://app.bellmans.co.uk/en/auction/nov-gilbertfilm-2021-the-lewis-gilbert-film-script-and-production-archive/522-james-bond-moonraker-1979-director-s-script-3

92 "James Bond 'Moonraker', 1979 – Director's script (3)" auction's page at Bellmans: https://app.bellmans.co.uk/en/auction/nov-gilbertfilm-2021-the-lewis-gilbert-film-script-and-production-archive/522-james-bond-moonraker-1979-director-s-script-3

93 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).

94 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).

95 "James Bond 'Moonraker', 1979 – Director's script (3)" auction's page at Bellmans: https://app.bellmans.co.uk/en/auction/nov-gilbertfilm-2021-the-lewis-gilbert-film-script-and-production-archive/522-james-bond-moonraker-1979-director-s-script-3

96 "James Bond 'Moonraker', 1979 – Director's script (3)" auction's page at Bellmans: https://app.bellmans.co.uk/en/auction/nov-gilbertfilm-2021-the-lewis-gilbert-film-script-and-production-archive/522-james-bond-moonraker-1979-director-s-script-

97 Facebook post on the group "James Bond: collecting James Bond toys and memorabilia": https://www.facebook.com/groups/james.bond.collecting/permalink/3432584590332920

98 "The James Bond Archives" by Colin Odell, Michelle Le Blanc and Paul Duncan (2012).

99 "A Conversation With Christopher Wood" in Dr. Shatterhand's Botanical Garden website: https://www.shatterhand007.com/QuestionRoom/ChristopherWood/ChristopherWoodInterview.html

100 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

101 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).

102 "A Conversation With Christopher Wood" in Dr. Shatterhand's Botanical Garden website: https://www.shatterhand007.com/QuestionRoom/ChristopherWood/ChristopherWoodInterview.html

103 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).

104 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).

105 "A Conversation With Christopher Wood" in Dr. Shatterhand's Botanical Garden website: https://www.shatterhand007.com/QuestionRoom/ChristopherWood/ChristopherWoodInterview.html

106 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).

107 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).

108 "The James Bond Archives" by Colin Odell, Michelle Le Blanc and Paul Duncan (2012).

109 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

110 For Dick Clement and Ian La Frenais biographies, see for the sources:
Dick Clement and Ian La Frenais's website: https://lafrenais-clement.uk/
"Celebrating Clement & La Frenais: Screen Writers" by Alex Westthorp in Den of Geek (2008): https://www.denofgeek.com/tv/celebrating-clement-la-frenais-screen-writers/
"Who the F Are Dick Clement and Ian La Frenais?" by John Pearson in Mr Feelgood (2021): https://mrfeelgood.com/articles/who-are-dick-clement-and-ian-la-frenais
"La Frenais, Ian (1936-) and Clement, Dick (1937-)" in BFI Screenonline: http://www.screenonline.org.uk/people/id/462850/index.html
"The Great Television Writers: Part 5 – Dick Clement and Ian La Frenais" by Martin Keady in The Script Lab (2019): https://thescriptlab.com/features/screenwriting-101/9063-the-great-television-tv-writers-part-5-dick-clement-ian-la-frenais/
"An Interview with the Likely Lads" in Cause UK (2019): https://www.causeuk.com/an-interview-with-the-likely-lads/
Dick Clement and Ian La Frenais's Wikipedia pages.

111 See the precedent lines.

112 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

113 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

114 "The Many Lives of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2019).

115 "SpyMaster Interview #26: Dick Clement & Ian La Frenais" on SpyHards Podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=vyroLCrV5Zo
116 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
117 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).
118 "James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).
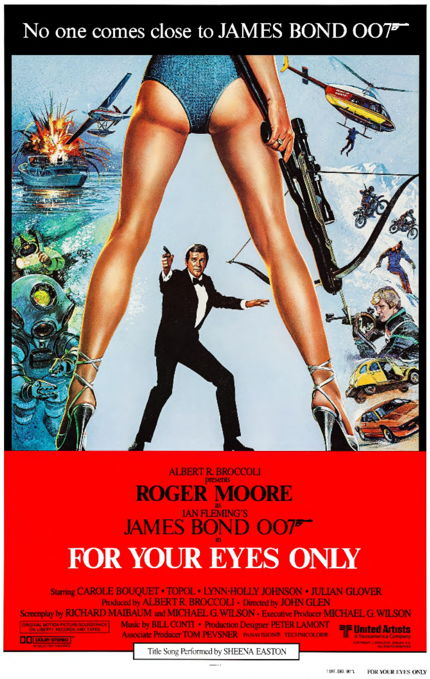
119 "Christopher Wood Interview" on MI6-HQ website (2005) : https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_christopher_wood



No one comes close to JAMES BOND 007
ALBERT R. BROCCOLI
presents
ROGER MOORE
as
IAN FLEMING'S
JAMES BOND 007
in
FOR YOUR EYES ONLY
Starring CAROLE BOUQUET • TOPOL • LYNN-HOLLY JOHNSON • JULIAN GLOVER
Produced by ALBERT R. BROCCOLI • Directed by JOHN GLEN Screenplay by RICHARD MAIBAUM and MICHAEL G. WILSON • Executive Producer MICHAEL G. WILSON
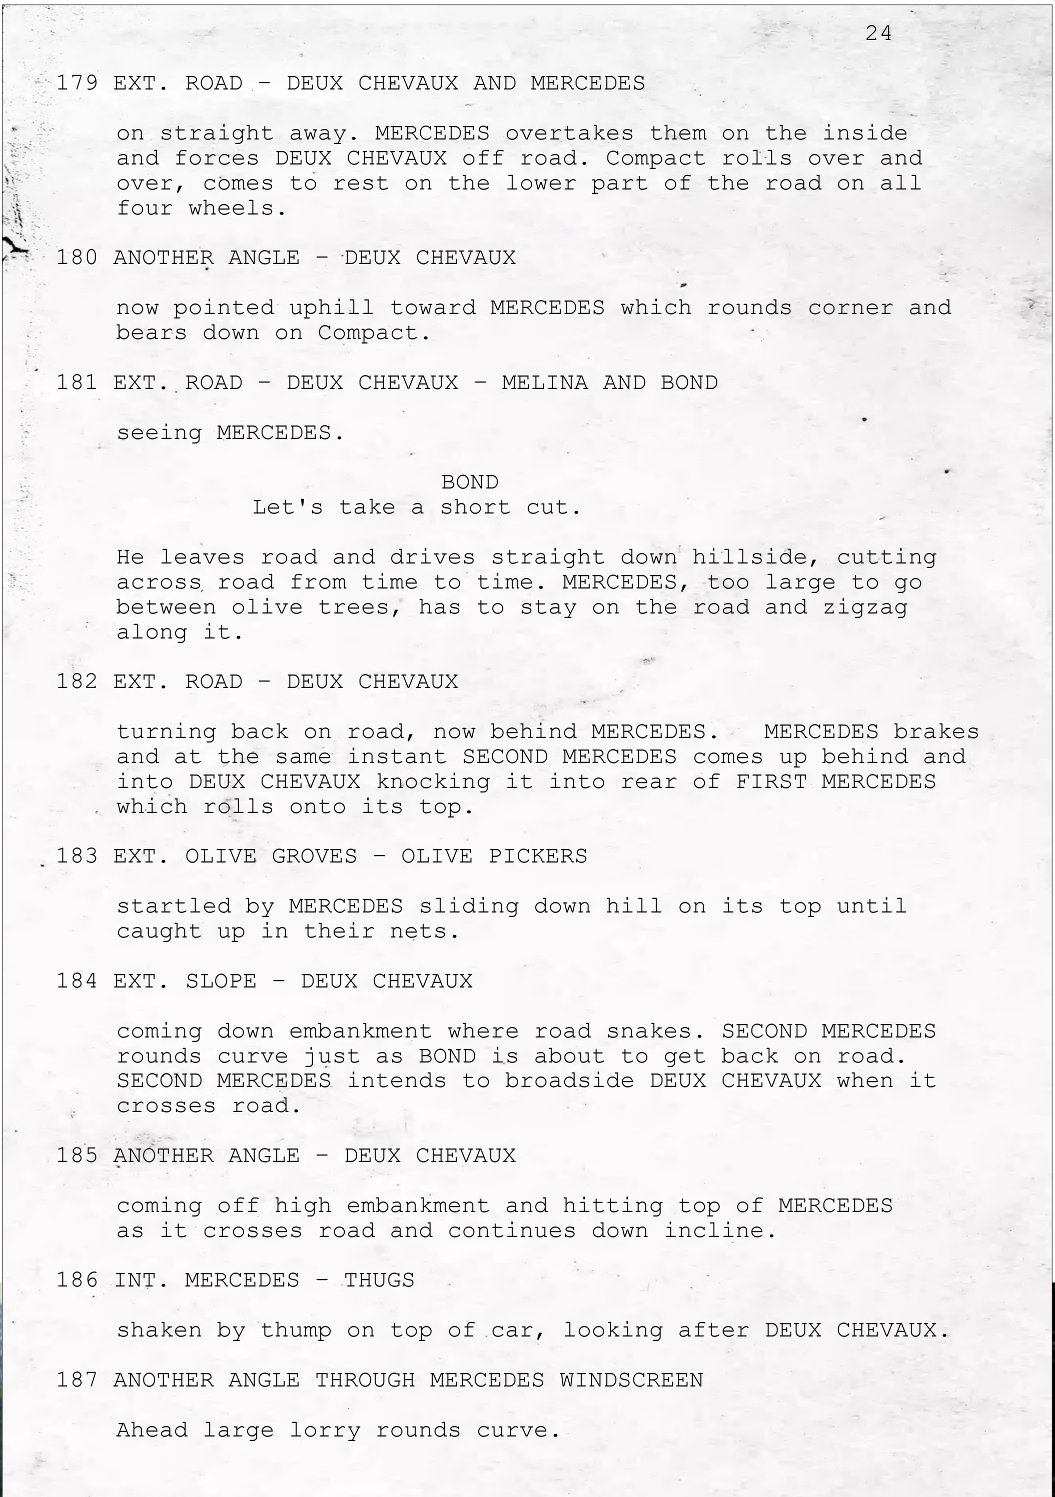
Music by BILL CONTI • Production Designer PETER LAMONT
Associate Producer TOM PEVSNER
United Artists
Title Song Performed by SHEENA EASTON

Release date (premiere) :
24 June 1981

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Screenplay by Richard Maibaum and Michael G. Wilson"

Director :....................................John Glen
Producer :......................Albert R. Broccoli
Executive producer :......Michael Wilson
Director photography :.........Alan Hume
Set Designer :.......................Peter Lamont
Composer :.................................Bill Conti
Editor :....................................John Grover
Title sequence :...............Maurice Binder
Title song vocals :.............Sheena Easton



24

179 EXT. ROAD - DEUX CHEVAUX AND MERCEDES

on straight away. MERCEDES overtakes them on the inside and forces DEUX CHEVAUX off road. Compact rolls over and over, comes to rest on the lower part of the road on all four wheels.

180 ANOTHER ANGLE - DEUX CHEVAUX

now pointed uphill toward MERCEDES which rounds corner and bears down on Compact.

181 EXT. ROAD - DEUX CHEVAUX - MELINA AND BOND

seeing MERCEDES.

BOND
Let's take a short cut.

He leaves road and drives straight down hillside, cutting across road from time to time. MERCEDES, too large to go between olive trees, has to stay on the road and zigzag along it.

182 EXT. ROAD - DEUX CHEVAUX

turning back on road, now behind MERCEDES. MERCEDES brakes and at the same instant SECOND MERCEDES comes up behind and into DEUX CHEVAUX knocking it into rear of FIRST MERCEDES which rolls onto its top.

183 EXT. OLIVE GROVES - OLIVE PICKERS startled by MERCEDES sliding down hill on its top until caught up in their nets.

184 EXT. SLOPE - DEUX CHEVAUX

coming down embankment where road snakes. SECOND MERCEDES rounds curve just as BOND is about to get back on road. SECOND MERCEDES intends to broadside DEUX CHEVAUX when it crosses road.

185 ANOTHER ANGLE - DEUX CHEVAUX

coming off high embankment and hitting top of MERCEDES as it crosses road and continues down incline.

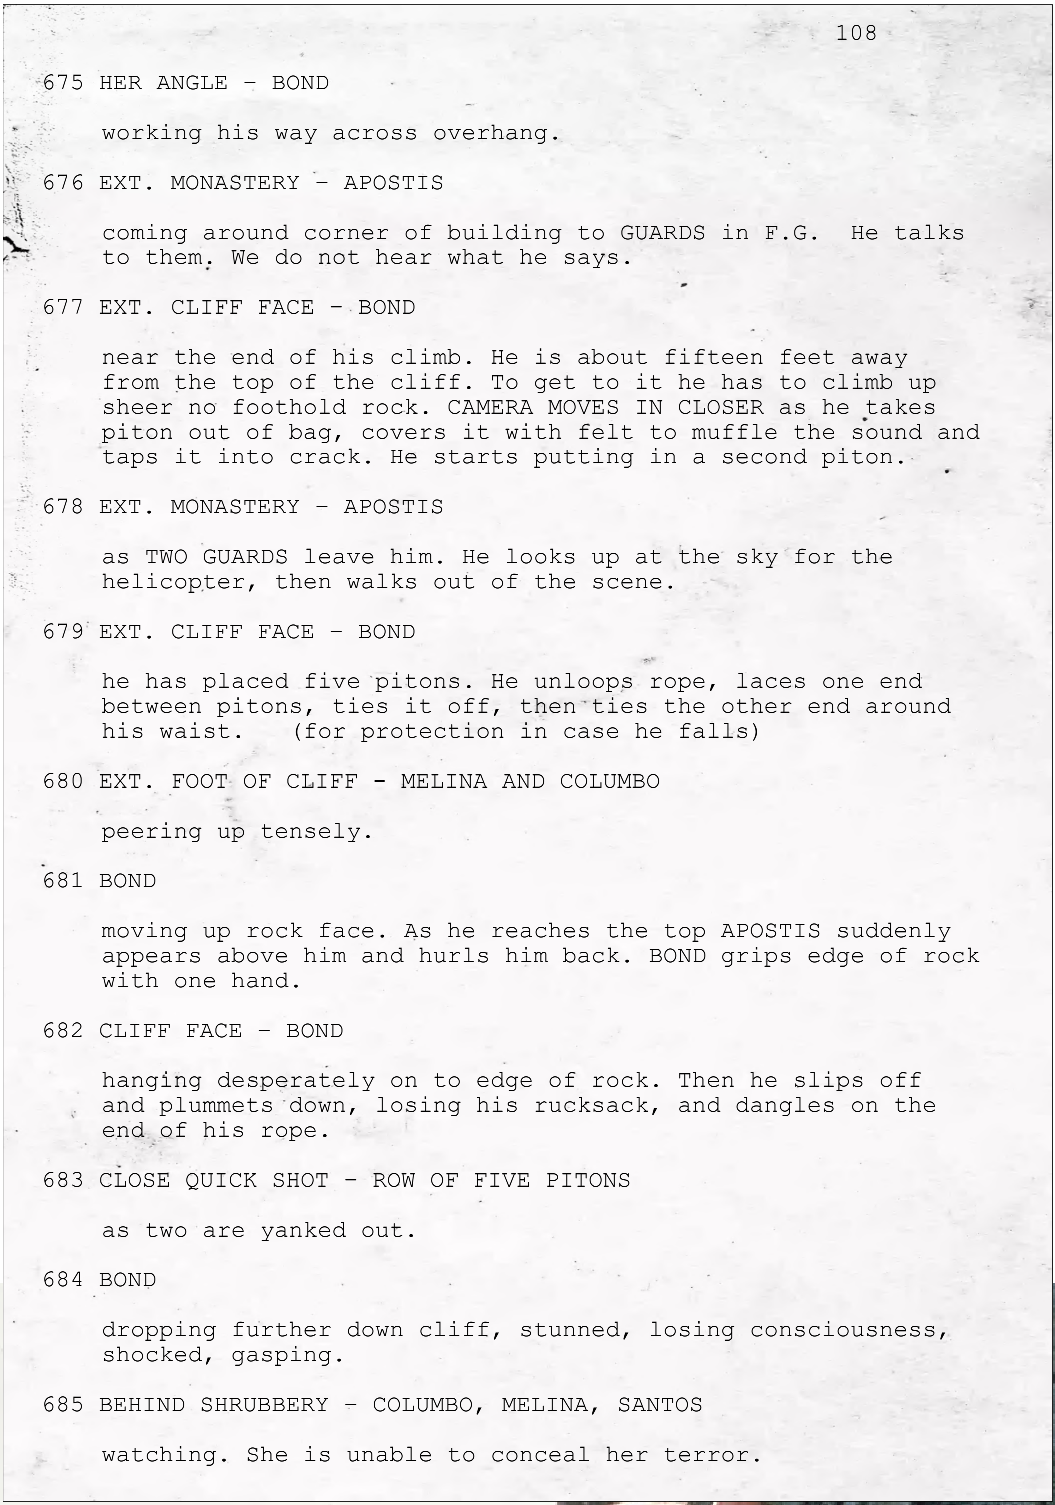
186 INT. MERCEDES - THUGS shaken by thump on top of car, looking after DEUX CHEVAUX.

187 ANOTHER ANGLE THROUGH MERCEDES WINDSCREEN

Ahead large lorry rounds curve.

CHAPTER 12

FOR YOUR EYES ONLY



108

675 HER ANGLE - BOND

working his way across overhang.

676 EXT. MONASTERY - APOSTIS

coming around corner of building to GUARDS in F.G. He talks to them. We do not hear what he says.

677 EXT. CLIFF FACE - BOND

near the end of his climb. He is about fifteen feet away from the top of the cliff. To get to it he has to climb up sheer no foothold rock. CAMERA MOVES IN CLOSER as he takes piton out of bag, covers it with felt to muffle the sound and taps it into crack. He starts putting in a second piton.

678 EXT. MONASTERY - APOSTIS

as TWO GUARDS leave him. He looks up at the sky for the helicopter, then walks out of the scene.

679 EXT. CLIFF FACE - BOND

he has placed five pitons. He unloops rope, laces one end between pitons, ties it off, then ties the other end around his waist. (for protection in case he falls)

680 EXT. FOOT OF CLIFF - MELINA AND COLUMBO peering up tensely.

681 BOND

moving up rock face. As he reaches the top APOSTIS suddenly appears above him and hurls him back. BOND grips edge of rock with one hand.

682 CLIFF FACE - BOND

hanging desperately on to edge of rock. Then he slips off and plummets down, losing his rucksack, and dangles on the end of his rope.

683 CLOSE QUICK SHOT - ROW OF FIVE PITONS

as two are yanked out.

684 BOND

dropping further down cliff, stunned, losing consciousness, shocked, gasping.

685 BEHIND SHRUBBERY - COLUMBO, MELINA, SANTOS

watching. She is unable to conceal her terror.

Cast:

James Bond :	Roger Moore
Kristatos :	Julian Glover
Melina Havelock :	Carole Bouquet
Milos Columbo :	Chaim Topol
Emile Leopold Locque :	Michael Gothard
Erich Kriegler :	John Wyman
Bibi Dahl :	Lynn-Holly Johnson
Ferrara :	John Moreno
Lisl von Schlaf :	Cassandra Harris
Jacoba Brink :	Jill Bennett
Hector Gonzales :	Stefan Kalipha
Gogol :	Walter Gotell
Bill Tanner :	James Villiers
Frederick Gray :	Geoffrey Keen
Moneypenny :	Lois Maxwell
Q :	Desmond Llewelyn

Main filming locations: Greece, Italy and UK

Change of direction for Bond with an episode displaying a more serious, down-to-earth tone and even displaying a return to Fleming. Despite this new approach, the landscapes and action scenes still remain spectacular and rhythmic. Small collateral damage of this realism: the villains are less memorable. Michael Wilson joins Maibaum in writing for the first time in this film and, after a few distant beginnings, the screenwriters were very quickly able to define the essence of the story that will find its way in the movie. For Your Eyes Only brings a new and welcome breath to the franchise and its interpreter.

Table of contents

For Your Eyes Only

One film, two short stories....720
Keep your feet on the Earth....722
Another go for Ronald Hardy....723
February 25, 1980' treatment: a Z like Zeno....724
The following: fugitive, kidnapping and climbing....726
March 7: Michael Wilson joins Maibaum for the writing?....729
March 10' treatment: New villains, Merlin and Acrojet....732
March 25' treatment: Melina, Cortina and shark sticks....736
April 7' treatment: Loc, stroll in Athens and buggies....743
April 14' treatment: A-T-A-C, Ferrara, ASP and parrot....748
May 26, 1980' revised script: 2CV, Lotus, Corfu and Mantis....750
Revisions: pre-title, gadgetized car and fall of Loc....761
"August 15"' script: disappearance of the log, Identigraph and Locque....766
"August 12, 1980"' scripts: final lap for M....772
"August 12, 1980"' revised script....775
The shadows of John Strong and Gail Morgan Hickman....776

One film, two short stories

Back in 1958: CBS made an offer to Ian Fleming for a 32-episode James Bond series[1]. He accepts and begins to write a few screenplays but the project falls apart. At the beginning of 1959, Fleming adapted the scripts of three episodes into short stories (a short story is a shorter novel). He published them in 1960 (grouped alongside two other written short stories published in the press earlier) in a collection called For Your Eyes Only.

IAN FLEMING
FOR YOUR EYES ONLY
FOR YOUR EYES ONLY
Ian Fleming

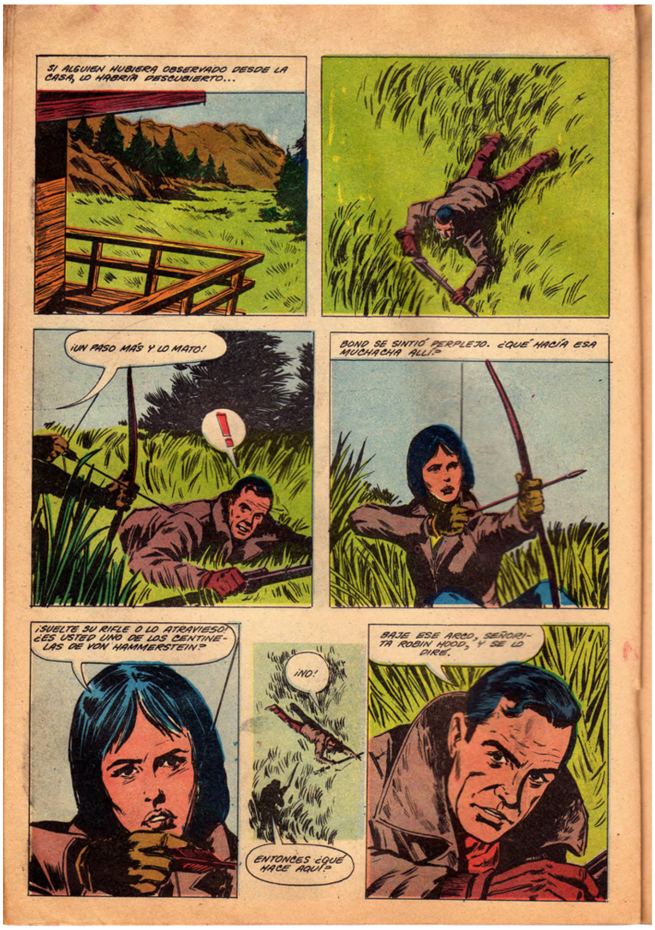
Among the five short stories present in this collection, we find For Your Eyes Only, based on what was supposed to be the third episode of the CBS series: Rough Justice[2].

In this short story a British couple, the Havelock(s), reside in one of the most beautiful properties in Jamaica. This one interests a former Gestapo Nazi named von Hammerstein, who is prepared to spend a fortune to acquire it. The latter sends a certain Major Gonzales to conclude the purchase of the house but the Havelocks don't want to sell. Gonzales coldly shoots them down.

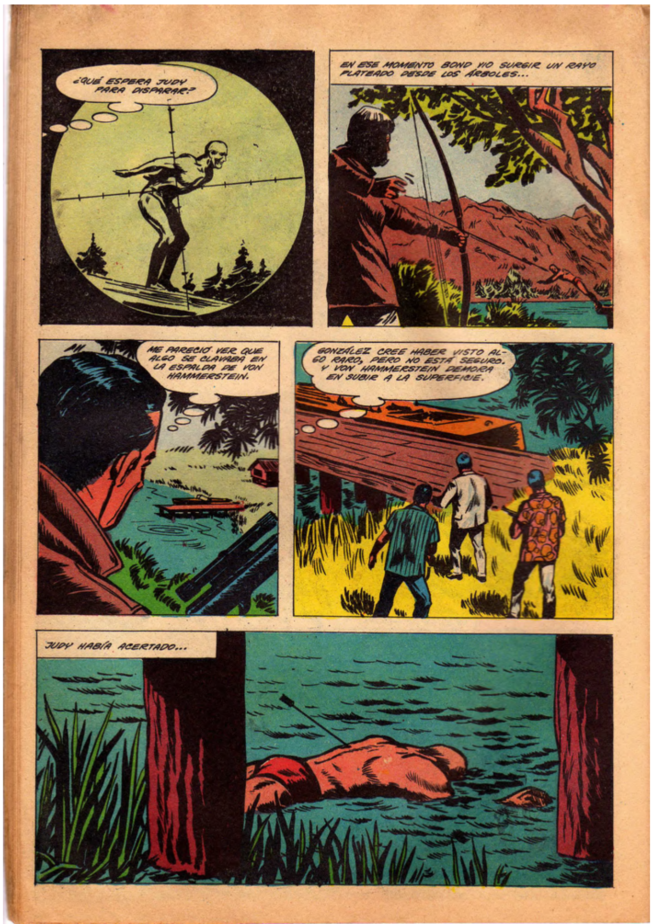
It turns out that the Havelocks were friends of M. In London, M then explains to James Bond that his friends were murdered and 007 agrees to avenge them for him. Bond travels to Ottawa (Canada), and unofficially receives help from the authorities. He uses an old smuggling route to secretly cross the US-Canada border to go into a wooded area of Vermont where von Hammerstein resides, at Echo Lake.

While there with a sniper rifle ready to assassinate his target, Bond meets a young girl armed with a bow. This is Judy Havelock, daughter of the murdered couple who seeks revenge on von Hammerstein.

She manages to pierce von Hammerstein's back with an arrow when he dives into the lake. Von Hammerstein's men including Gonzales react and shoot towards Bond, but 007 manages to eliminate them. After the shooting, Bond finds Judy, in shock and injured, kisses her then leaves for Canada and London with her.



SI ALGUIEN HUBIERA OBSERVADO DESDE LA CASA, LO HABRÍA DESCUBIERTO...
¡UN PASO MÁS Y LO MATO!
!
BOND SE SINTIÓ PERPLEJO. ¿QUÉ HACÍA ESA MUCHACHA ALLÍ?
¡SUELTE SU RIFLE O LO ATRAVIESO! ¿ES USTED UNO DE LOS CENTINELAS DE VON HAMMERSTEIN?
¡NO!
ENTONCES ¿QUÉ HACE AQUÍ?
BAJE ESE ARCO, SEÑORITA ROBIN HOOD, Y SE LO DIRÉ.



¿QUÉ ESPERA JUDY PARA DISPARAR?
EN ESE MOMENTO BOND VIO SURGIR UN RAYO PLATEADO DESDE LOS ÁRBOLES...
ME PARECIÓ VER QUE ALGO SE CLAVABA EN LA ESPALDA DE VON HAMMERSTEIN.
GONZÁLEZ CREE HABER VISTO ALGO RARO, PERO NO ESTÁ SEGURO. Y VON HAMMERSTEIN DEMORA EN SUBIR A LA SUPERFICIE.
JUDY HABÍA ACERTADO...

The second short story in the collection to inspire the screenwriters of the film is Risico.

Risico begins with James Bond being sent to Italy to find and destroy the source of a heroin trafficking bound for Great Britain. There, he must come into contact with a smuggler serving as an informant for the CIA: a man named Kristatos.

For a fee, Kristatos tells him who would be at the head of the network of traffickers: it is Enrico Colombo, known as "The Dove". Described by Kristatos as extremely dangerous, this man must be at all costs "destrutto" at the end of the operation. What Bond and Kristatos don't know is that Colombo recorded their conversation which took place in a restaurant.

007 manages to get closer to Lisl Baum, Colombo's mistress, but ends up being captured by Colombo.

The man tells Bond that it is actually Kristatos (helped by Russia) and not him who is at the origin of the drug trafficking. Bond agrees to join forces with Colombo to eliminate Kristatos and the Colombina (Colombo's boat) docks at a port north of Ancona where Kristatos's men unload a shipment of drugs.

Bond, Colombo and his men attack Kristatos's and discover Kristatos lurking near the drug warehouse, preparing to detonate a bomb. It explodes but doesn't kill Bond or Colombo. Kristatos tries to escape by car but Bond shoots him while he is behind the wheel. The short story ends with the prospect of Bond spending some good time with Lisl Baum.

The film For Your Eyes Only is the most "Flemingian" of the Moore' era. It will in fact be the actor's only film to took more than succinctly elements (other than the title and the names of the characters) from Bondian literature.

FOR YOUR EYES ONLY
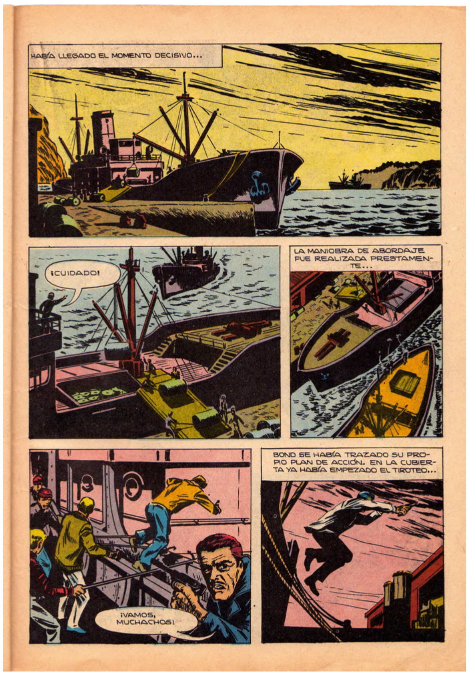
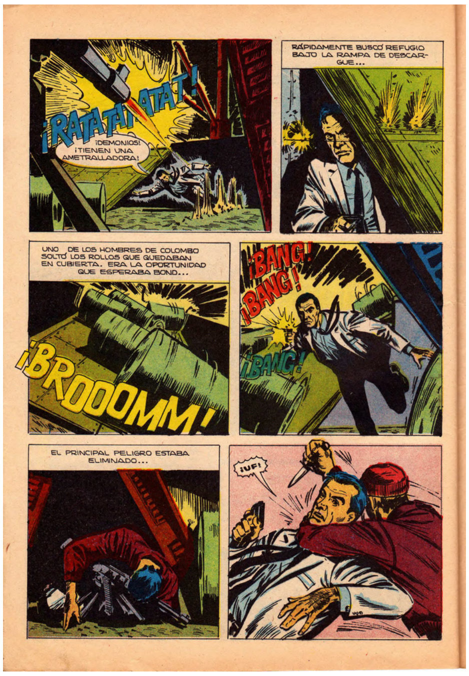
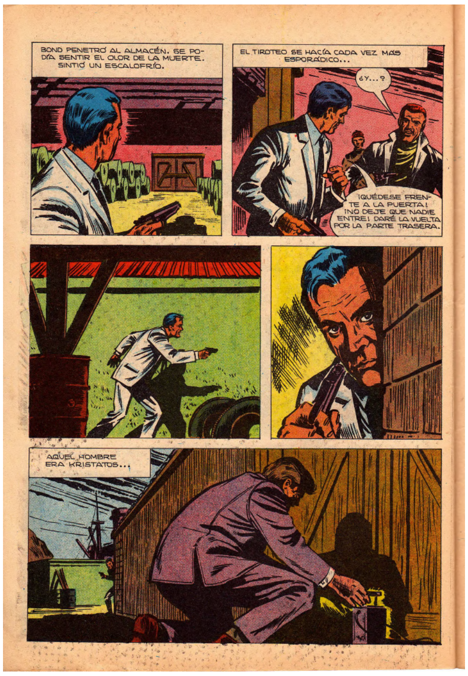
FOR YOUR EYES ONLY



HABÍA LLEGADO EL MOMENTO DECISIVO...
¡CUIDADO!
LA MANIOBRA DE ABORDAJE FUE REALIZADA PRESTAMENTE...
¡VAMOS, MUCHACHOS!
BOND SE HABÍA TRAZADO SU PROPIO PLAN DE ACCIÓN. EN LA CUBIERTA YA HABÍA EMPEZADO EL TIROTEO...



¡RATATATATAT!
¡DEMONIOS! ¡TIENEN UNA AMETRALLADORA!
RÁPIDAMENTE BUSCÓ REFUGIO BAJO LA RAMPA DE DESCARGUE...
UNO DE LOS HOMBRES DE COLOMBO SOLTÓ LOS ROLLOS QUE QUEDABAN EN CUBIERTA. ERA LA OPORTUNIDAD QUE ESPERABA BOND...
¡BROOOMM!
¡BANG! ¡BANG!
¡BANG!
EL PRINCIPAL PELIGRO ESTABA ELIMINADO...
¡UF!



BOND PENETRÓ AL ALMACÉN. SE PODÍA SENTIR EL OLOR DE LA MUERTE. SINTIÓ UN ESCALOFRÍO.
EL TIROTEO SE HACÍA CADA VEZ MÁS ESPORÁDICO...
¿Y...?
¡QUÉDESE FRENTE A LA PUERTA! ¡NO DEJE QUE NADIE ENTRE! DARÉ LA VUELTA POR LA PARTE TRASERA.
AQUEL HOMBRE ERA KRISTATOS...

Keep your feet on the Earth

> - Christopher Wood[3] : [In my time on Bond], Michael [Wilson] was always present at script conferences and made a lively contribution, without writing anything.

As we saw in the previous chapter, EON's first attempts at scripting For Your Eyes Only turned out to become Moonraker along the way.

After Moonraker, it is once again considered to do For Your Eyes Only and there is talk of bringing Bond back to Earth (literally and figuratively). The feeling is that this latest film has gone too far in terms of budgetary expenditure (even if upon its release Moonraker is one of the biggest box office successes of the saga), but also in what happened on screen. It seemed that EON's usual philosophy of making each new Bond's film bigger than the last one had reached its limits[4]. The idea now is to put the spectacular and the gadgets aside in order to return to a Bond in the style of From Russia with Love, On Her Majesty's Secret Service or even Goldfinger[5].

According to Michael Wilson: "I don't think it was so much budgetary because, although For Your Eyes Only did costed less, it was only marginally less"[6].

> - Michael Wilson[7] : The problem was that Moonraker was very successful and the studio wanted us to do another film like it. [...] The films would rapidly become ridiculous because we'd already gone to the outer limits of believably as it was.

> - Cubby Broccoli[8] : Everyone keeps on saying, "When are you going to do another Russia With Love type of thing?". So we're trying the adventure, Hitchcockian sort of thing, full of suspense, excitement and thrills.

> -John Glen (the director)[9] : We had gone as far into space as we could. We needed a change, a return to Bond's roots. We wanted to make the new film more of a thriller than a farce, without losing sight of what made Bond famous: his humor.

> - Cubby Broccoli[10] : Maibaum and Michael, preparing the script of For Your Eyes Only, decided to focus more upon character and story than the familiar set piece fireworks.

Christopher Wood was not renewed for this change of direction and would never return to work on the saga again. He wrote a few non-Bond films and novels until the 2000s, as well as his memoirs on Bond in 2006, before his death in 2015. He also tried to stay in touch with Michael Wilson: "I always write Michael Wilson a critique after each new [Bond's film] comes out. He never replies"[11].

Another go for Ronald Hardy

As stated The James Bond Archives, it is first towards the screenwriter Ronald Hardy (who, remember, had worked for a time on Diamonds Are Forever and The Spy Who Loved Me) that the filmakers turns.

He came up with a 160-page, gadget-free script on September 17, 1979. The villain is named Krek, a businessman who is fascinated by Egypt and plans to cause an ecological disaster using nuclear waste. The plot revolves around a young woman, Julia Havelock, whose parents were murdered by a certain Gonzales. The story began with the funeral of 006 (with whom Julia had a relationship) and Bond was tasked with investigating the death of his colleague.

February 25, 1980' treatment: a Z like Zeno

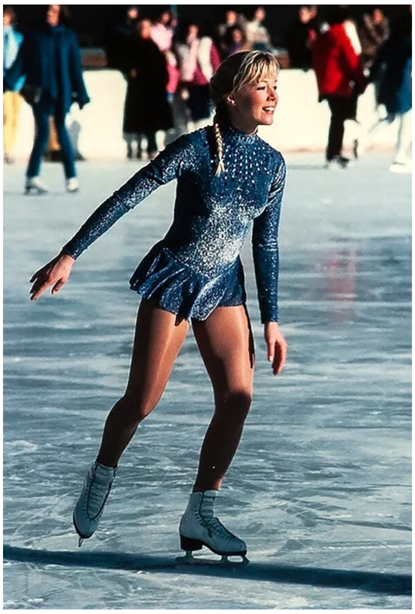
Ultimately Hardy was dismissed from the film and replaced by a sure bet: Richard Maibaum. A first beginning of a treatment was completed by the screenwriter on February 25, 1980.

Maibaum begins by introducing us to the villain and his goal: he is a Greek-American entrepreneur named Mike Zeno. Described as "shrewd, ruthless, daring" and a sort of "mystery man", Zeno doesn't just do legal business. Indeed he is, among other things, involved in smuggling throughout the world, particularly arms smuggling, which brought him substantial wealth.

The man has in his pay an expert/"brain" who conceive new plans for him: Y. Y. Coyle (don't ask me what the Y. Y. mean, it's never specified). The next illicit operation they plan to launch should be the most profitable they have ever carried out.

The idea is to blackmail Sir Edgar Twayne, a Cambridge professor who was once a Russian spy (should we see a reference to the Cambridge Five?). If Twayne doesn't want his past to be discovered, he will have to recover some kind of secret log which contains a history of MI6's activities, including their joint operations with the Americans (list of contacts, double agents, procedures, etc...). When they will have the log, Zeno and Coyle intend to sell it to the highest bidder: the British/Americans or the Russians.

To obtain the log, Twayne approaches one of his students, Antonia Wray, who is a computer specialist in MI6's Q-Branch. Twayne manages to persuade her that he needs the log to make a Daniel Ellsberg like presentation (Ellsberg is considered the first whistle-blower for having leaked top-secret documents on the Vietnam War in 1971).



We then meet Horst Grumbach, "an East German Olympic biathlon star who defected to the West after briefly serving as a KGB courier". He's Zeno's bodyguard (and the person who informed him that Twayne once worked for the KGB). In addition to protecting his employer, one of Grumbach's other tasks is to supervise the training of the "beautiful" and prodigious Bibi Dahl, aged 18. As in the film, she is a potential future Olympic skating champion and we are told that she "has enchanted Zeno ever since she was eleven when he found her skating on a frozen lake in Minnesota". It is also written that Zeno have a "sexual obsession for her" that he is waiting to consume and that Bibi is unaware of this; nor his criminal activities.

After this there is a transition in the text and what appears to be the pre-title sequence is written.

In Austria, a former British diplomat named Havelock watches birds from his garden. However, through his binoculars he sees Twayne who meets Zeno and Coyle on the terrace of a chalet. Since he doesn't know them, he doesn't notice anything suspicious. However, Grumbach saw that Havelock pointed his binoculars at his employer and the bodyguard is clearly determined not to take any chance.

Havelock, his wife and his daughter Judy (described as an "English beauty" in a miniskirt who shoot with a bow at a target in the garden), spend a peaceful time at home. Suddenly muffled sounds are heard and Judy finds the bodies of her two parents, killed by a certain Von Hammerstein with a silenced Luger. Unaware of Judy's presence, he leaves on a Vespa driven by Grumbach.

We now find M at MI6 HQ. He crosses a room filled with computers and enters another marked "EYES ONLY". Inside, his Chief of Staff is dictating a text to what is described as a sort of automatic typewriter which records/type what he says in the electronic MI6 logbook. During the dialogue that follows we learn that the access to this room is limited to only a handful of people and that 007 is currently on a mission, trying to locate an international hitman named Von Hammerstein. M was the best man at the Havelocks' wedding and sent his agent to track down and eliminate their killer, identified by Judy's description. M "is pissed off at Bond's slow progress and attributes it to his womanizing". (M and the Chief of Staff ask the computer to delete this sentence from the log and it disappears from the screen on which it was written).

Speaking of Bond, we see him in a wooded area near an (unidentified) town. Through the scope of his rifle he have Von Hammerstein in sight, near a swimming pool. Suddenly Judy appears before him, armed with a bow and arrows and dressed in "jeans and a man's shirt". Before he could approach/stop her, she had already planted an arrow in the back of Von Hammerstein's neck as he dove into water.

The armed men who surrounded the hitman, including Grumbach, react and she fires arrows at them. Bond approaches Judy but thinking he is one of them, she "furiously tries to fight him off". 007 lands a punch that knocks her out and puts her on his shoulders like a "fireman" and carries her through the woods, pursued by the opposition. He drop her down at one point to fight with karate, judo and others combat style; then he take her back on his shoulders up to "a car".

They get in and 007 drives towards the city; Judy begins to regain consciousness and he says he is from Scotland Yard. Suddenly a helicopter appears behind them with Grumbach and his men inside. 007 and Judy get out of their car at a building under construction. Grumbach and his men land the helicopter to pursue them on foot. While they are looking for them in the construction site, Bond with Judy goes to the helicopter, knocks out the pilot and takes control.

However, a crane above him prevents Bond from taking off vertically. 007 has no choice but to head forward, through the skeleton framework of metal beams of the building in construction, under the amazed eyes of Grumbach and of the construction workers. 007 enters the elevator shaft under construction and comes out by going up vertically, before leaving the scene.

Later, that night, we see Judy in Bond's arms in the cockpit of the helicopter landed on a parking lot.

The following: fugitive, kidnapping and climbing

Around the same time the envisaged following was written in an undated 6-pages treatment. This document seems more recent since "Bibi" Dahl is well integrated into the text (whereas in the previous one "Bibi" was written by hand, replacing another scratched and unreadable first name).

The treatment begins with a pre-title opening with Havelock senior seeing Zeno and Sir Edgar Twayne with his binoculars. The rest unfolds exactly as in the previous document: assassination by Von Hammerstein, Judy's revenge before Bond had the chance to do it, the helicopter crossing the metal structure of a 20-story building under construction, Bond and Judy making love in the aircraft landed on a parking lot.

After the credits, Bond is back in London. Q berates him for not bringing his equipment and Bond tries to flirt with Q's "assistant", Antonia, but she is not very receptive to his advances. Bond is then summoned to M's office and crosses paths with Williams, alias 009, who is not a fervent admirer of 007, on the contrary: "unfriendly to Bond whom he disapproves of".

M is not happy that his agent allowed himself a "vacation" with Judy without his consent and to punish him, he assigns him to work office at night. This is the opportunity for 007 to try his luck again with Antonia; she is immediately more receptive. Indeed, Bond doesn't know it but Twayne asked Antonia to cultivate a relationship with Bond.

Later M and General Gogol each receive a letter from Zeno who claims to be in possession of a copy of the MI6' log, citing an extract of it as a proof. How is this possible? (Well: this is never explained). Only M, his Chief of Staff, Moneypenny, Williams, and a few others including apparently Bond have access to the EYES ONLY room. Could there be a traitor within MI6? M receives a mysterious phone call from the bad guys who designate 007 as the traitor.

Bond is at his home, with Antonia in his bed. When he leaves the place, Twayne hides false evidence in Bond's safe. When MI6 emit a search warrant on Bond's house, Williams find the fake evidence.

007 is arrested and incarcerated in a location belonging to MI6. He manages to escape (with the help of M, but he doesn't know it). M orders Williams and other 00 agents to find the fugitive Bond.

Meanwhile Coyle orders Grumbach to eliminate Bond so that he cannot successfully prove his innocence. Coyle is right to be worried because 007 have suspicions about Antonia. Bond confront her and "perhaps roughs her up". She confesses but doesn't incriminate Twayne, saying that she made a copy of the log to make an Ellsberg-style disclosure herself.

Grumbach arrives and Antonia puts herself in his line of sight; she then protects Bond at the price of her life by taking the bullet in his place. "Bond, pursued by Grumbach, runs into Williams, also hunting for him". Grumbach and Williams end up exchanging gunshot with each other and Bond takes this opportunity to escape.

Bond now goes to M's house (apparently the one of On Her Majesty's Secret Service) and confronts him with a weapon; accusing M of wanting to frame him. M accuses him of treachery and presses an alarm button. Bond manages to escape. Here M confides to his Chief of Staff that he still trusts Bond and that not telling him it, motivates him to want to clear his name. Moreover, he is too afraid that Bond will speak under torture to take him to the confidence. Beside the real responsible must not think he is himself still wanted. What if Bond gets killed by another agent? It's a risk that M says he have to take.

Bond now thinks he must pretend to be dead so that people will stop looking for him. "With help of either Leiter or Capu of Union Corse" (i.e. Marc-Ange Draco), he organizes a fake plane crash with bodies inside, including one carrying documents and a dental prosthesis which will identify him as Bond. To do so, Bond parachutes from the moving plane, which without a pilot, crash!

After that, Bond spends time "raising a beard in hideout" and manages to remember from where he thinks he knows Grumbach: he is a biathlon champion and Bond is "also a biathlon devotee" tells us the screenwriter.

Bond investigates Grumbach's whereabouts and travels to Innsbruck in the Austrian Tyrol where he sees him supervising the training of the young Bibi Dahl. He also sees Zeno with them, understands that Bibi is his "protege" and that he is Grumbach's boss.

Bond follows Zeno to his chalet, tries to infiltrate the premises but is spotted by Coyle. Pursued, Bond is saved by the "sudden reappearance" of Judy Havelock who was in the vicinity to sell her family home (remember: the Havelocks and Zeno were neighbors).

Bond enlists Judy's help by revealing to her that Zeno is involved in the death of her parents. "Perhaps Bond, with Judy's aid, kidnaps Bibi, hoping Zeno will swap [the] log for her", hesitates Maibaum!

Well, and kidnapping her apparently did and the action is moving in Greece where the exchange is to take place. However, it appears that Bond and Judy are lousy kidnappers since Bibi manages to escape their grasp. She joins Zeno but "Bond with Judy's help gets [the] log" (don't ask me how). Then there is another undefined pursuit with Williams.

Bond and Judy end up being captured by Zeno. Here it is decided to reuse a scene from the novel Live and Let Die (and attempted in previous films) where Bond and the heroine are tied up and dragged behind the villain's boat.

- John Glen[12] : That was a scene which has been in and out of Bond scripts for as long as I can remember. It's a scene which no one really wanted to shoot, except for Cubby. The reason it was rejected by most directors was because it was such a complex sequence to shoot, with no guarantees you were going to get it, because it was a mixture of underwater and above water.

They manage to survive thanks to the help of Bibi, who fell in love with her kidnapper due to Stockholm syndrome. Zeno, furious, tries to kill Bibi but Bond saves her.

Zeno flees towards the place where Judy had stashed the log before she was captured. "Bond pursues Zeno, chase involving mountain climbing, etc, and ends up in [an] old Meteora monastery" which had been considered at the time of the writing of The Spy Who Loved Me.

Bond kills Zeno and Coyle there but is captured by Williams. 009 triumphantly brings Bond to M. However, to his disappointment, M reveals that 007 was never really a suspect and Bond divulges that he somehow learned that Twayne was involved. Twayne is then arrested.

In the finale Bond and Judy watch Bibi ice skating. However, Grumbach shows up and tries to eliminate them; "Bond and Grumbach duel each other on skis while shooting rifles at each other. Judy gets Grumbach with her trusty bow and arrow".

March 7: Michael Wilson joins Maibaum for the writing?

From left to right: producer Cubby Broccoli. Singer Sheena Easton, who performs the song in the film. John Glen who, after years as an editor and second unit director, is promoted to the role of director on this film. Michael Wilson, executive producer and co-writer of the film.

A new beginning of a treatment (9 page long) saw the light of the day on March 7, 1980. No author's name on the cover but it seems that this incomplete treatment marks a turning point in the writing of Bond films, with Michael G. Wilson actively joining Richard Maibaum in the writing of the film as co-writer (in addition to the executive producer role he also have on the production).

Indeed, according to Maibaum, in a letter he later wrote to the Writers Guild of America about the credit's attribution: "Michael Wilson and myself worked together as equal collaborators from March 7, 1980 to August ~~15~~ 6, 1980 in Hollywood and London on the treatment and screenplay of For Your Eyes Only. It was truly a joint effort in both discussion and actual writing and we consider the material inseparable in terms of individual contribution".

> - Michael Wilson[13] : As we got working more and more [on the film], Richard Maibaum asked me to take a stab at writing a few things; and then he suggested we become collaborators. We were collaborators then for the next 12 years, until he died in 1991. We did five [Bond's] films together.

> - Richard Maibaum[14]: [Wilson has a] lots of good ideas. He's a versatile, accomplished man. He's a lawyer, engineer, businessman, writer and all in all, a solid contributor

Over the years that would follow, the two men would use these terms to describe their working relationship:

> - Michael Wilson[15] : Dick is very experienced in this field [of screenwriting], he has written many Bond films over the years. I find him a great collaborator. The actual writing, we do separately, although we work together on revising the material. Sometimes, he will lead off and write the first draft and I'll rewrite behind him; sometimes, it's the other way around.

> - Richard Maibaum[16] : Michael [...] is the only man I've actually worked with on the Bonds. Other writers have come on before or after me, but never with me until Michael. He has lots of ideas and we like each other, which always helps.

Maibaum prefers to write on his trusty typewriter while Wilson favors a computer-type medium[17].

The March 7' treatment begins in the log's room Eyes Only where M and the Chief of Staff discuss Bond who is on a mission in Portugal. This mission consists of getting closer to Consuela, the Cuban mistress of Vlaslev or Vaslev: a treasurer in the pay of the USSR who finances terrorist groups. MI6 hopes that Consuela will warn them of future attacks.

We thus find 007 in bed with the girl in a villa near Lisbon. They discuss the terms of their cooperation, which notably includes an account number in Switzerland, when they are interrupted by Vlaslev accompanied by his terrorist clients. "Bond, Consuela in his arms, rolls off the bed with her, gets up, overturns bed onto opposition, retrieves Consuela, and pulls her onto balcony with him". They slide down a curved slope of the roof; 007 fights henchmen on the ground using martial arts and they reach a car.

Vlaslev chases them in a helicopter and there is the now usual scene of the construction site. However, the credits start just after the helicopter fly away from he construction site (no more love scene in a parking lot).

Bond goes to M's office after encountered Moneypenny and Williams. M asks him what happened to Consuela: 007 replies that he brought her back to England where he found her a job as a Playboy Bunny! He confesses to his superior that he thinks he was trapped: Vlaslev knew he would be there.

M also agrees, recently other agents had similar experiences: there could be a traitor within MI6. However, only M himself and the Chief of Staff have access to the agency log. An investigation should be carried out and M asks 007 to take care of it; which doesn't enchant the latter since it looks like office work... But it's an order, M tells him.

007 therefore begins his investigation with the Eyes Only room, where a man from Q-branch named Gridley explains to him that the computer system is functioning as normal.

Bond then goes to Q-branch where a technician is experimenting with a magnetic suitcase that deflects bullets. 007 asks Q if it is possible to "bug" a computer. "Nothing simpler, why?". "I might try bugging the KGB's in Moscow someday". Q feels like 007 is wasting his [Q's] time with such "impractical pipe dreams". Bond insists and asks Q to draw him a device that he could use to bug computer: 007 notices that the device drawn is similar to what he saw in the wiring of the log's computer.

007 follows the wiring, finds some sort of receiver and speaks again to a Q whose patience is increasingly tested:

> \- Bond: Just one more question, Q. If one wanted to fog a transmitter so reception became unintelligible, just exactly what would one do?
> \- Q: Why? Lower the amplification, of course. Any idiot knows that, Double-O-Seven.

Q reluctantly makes him a new technical drawing and 007 goes to install his jamming device, then inform M of his actions.

In a betting shop, a Romanian named Dinu Cluj responsible for listening to the bugged log's computer no longer receive anything and makes a phone call. MI6's maintenance technician Gridley gets knocked out in a park and a man who looks like him goes to the MI6 building pretending to be him. The fake Gridley repairs the bug device, leaves MI6 to go to Cluj's shop, unaware that he is being tailed by Bond.

The fake Gridley leaves to go elsewhere, but when he arrives near a post office, he notices that he is being followed by Bond. Then come a scene already tried on On Her Majesty's Secret Service and Diamonds Are Forever: a pursuit in the underground railway network of the post office. They take a chute and end up fighting on the tracks where the fake Gridley receives a blow which sends him flying onto the tracks where he dies when he is hit by a mail cart.

Bond decides to return to the betting shop and discreetly follows Cluj; he then sees him enter the Soviet Union embassy and the treatment ends there.

March 10' treatment: New villains, Merlin and Acrojet

Less than three days later, on March 10, 1980, a new 9-pages treatment revealing the rest was completed.

The first lines introduce us to the HMS Leeds, a British spy ship disguised as a cargo ship which contains top secret coding/decoding equipment on its board. The boat is accidentally hit by an oil tanker in the mist and sinks in Greek waters.

Jacques-Yves Cousteau's Calypso.

Since the government cannot afford to attract attention with an armada of navy ships to search for the wreck, M was entrusted with the recovery mission. The latter called on Havelock, a marine biologist who had once served under his command in the navy. On board the Amphitrite, the Havelock's ship "comparable to Cousteau's Calypso", Havelock located the wreck. M asks him to stay put until the navy's top brass decides how to proceed.

In a seaplane, Judy Havelock joins her parents; she is notably described as "a freelance natural history writer". The plane that transports her is piloted by a certain Gomez, who, as in the film, shoots her parents once Judy has been dropped off on the Amphitrite.

At MI6 we find the Chief of Staff dictating a new entry in the log. The character is finally named Tanner. We learn that Bond is abroad, in Athens, to track down and capture (alive for interrogation) Gomez, following the description given by Judy to the authorities.

The Acropolis of Athens.

Thus Bond is near Gomez at the Acropolis when he is attacked by a "gang of Greek heavies, led by Kriegler". Suddenly Judy appears and kills Gomez with a "spear gun". Bond overpower enemies with martial arts and flees with Judy in a car, only to be chased by Kriegler in a helicopter to a construction site.

After the usual scenes, 007 returns to London where he is assigned by M the mission of investigating the presence of a potential traitor. As before, Bond examines the wiring of the log's computer and discovers suspicious things in it (although it's no longer specified that Bond talks to Q). An IBM technician, O'Grady (in reality a Russian spy), is dispatched to MI6 when Bond jams the wiretapped transmissions. Bond follows the latter to a certain Clark (and no longer Cluj) who is in a betting shop.

Bond then tails Clark and, spotted, there is the scene in the underground postal railway network where Clark dies. In this treatment Bond finds something while searching the corpse's pockets: a letter to Innsbruck.

The envelope contains a cassette copy of the last log entries; Tanner and M have O'Grady arrested but he refuses to admit that he is working for the Russians.

Now MI6 is wondering why the part of the log containing information about the wreck of the HMS Leeds was to be sent by Clark to Innsbruck rather than to the Soviet embassy. Bond believes that Clark was playing both sides and wanted to keep this information for someone else who would pay him more than the Russians; maybe the person who hired Gomez.

The next logical step for 007 is to go to Innsbruck and observe the post office box which turns out to be in the name of "Columbo" (with a U, unlike the short story where it is Colombo). 007 sees a man named Coyle looking to see if there is mail and Bond follows him to a chalet. From there 007 sees another man (Kristatos) whom he tails to an ice rink where the man meet his protégée, Bibi. Here we are told that Bibi have a fifty-year-old Dutch trainer with a "grim" face "(shades of [Irma] Bunt and [Rosa] Klebb)": Vrow Brink (handwritten revised to Jacoba Brink).

Bond, who thinks that the man he followed is Columbo, approaches him to talk about Bibi's chances of winning; addressing him as Columbo. The man replies that he is not Columbo but Kristatos and invites him to a bar to have a drink.

Kristatos explains to Bond that Columbo is a marine smuggler who have a hand in with basically everything that is illegal: drugs, weapons, human trafficking, etc... Kristatos being himself in maritime transport and an insurer: he have problems with this Columbo who makes him lose several millions through his illegal activities. Kristatos says he is in a sort of crusade against him, "one fights fire with fire". He explains that he bribed one of Columbo's men, Coyle, to read Columbo's mail.

Anyone who has seen the film knows that this is all bullshit because "Kristatos' description of Columbo's character is precisely his own". Bond, however, is unaware of this for the moment and is not sure if he whether or not believes Kristatos, as we can read.

Kristatos leaves the bar and finds Kriegler who says to him that he recognizes Bond as the man from Athens, agent 007 (as described in the log). Kristatos then orders Kriegler to eliminate him.

Later "during various events", Bond recognizes Kriegler accompanied by henchmen and tries to escape them. He blends into a group of ski tourists heading towards a big ski jump. 007 sees that Kriegler is waiting for him with a rifle at the bottom of the jump and "somehow" exchanges his distinctive clothing with the ones of a thug pursuing him. Bond lets the thug jump before him and the latter is shot down by Kriegler. Before Kriegler realizes that he killed the wrong guy, Bond leap the ski jump and escapes into the crowd. Well not really, because someone knocks him out from behind.

The Bergisel Ski Jump at Innsbruck was probably a location that the writers had in mind.

It's kind of hard to know what's planned next, but apparently the bad guys are using an ice machine (resurfacer) from a skating rink to place/trap Bond under a layer of ice? Anyway Judy arrives and gets Bond out of there just before he freezes to death and takes him to a place where she warms him up with "good old body warmth".

She says she is in Austria to inform him of something she found in her father's calculations about the HMS Leeds. She knew where Bond was thanks to her "godfather" (who is none other than M).

Bond and Judy go to Greece. Deciding he needs help, 007 goes to meet Columbo, described as "(Pedro Armendáriz [Kerim Bey] type)". (It is not explained why Bond no longer sees him as a villain). Columbo is indeed a smuggler, but not of things very morally reprehensible, and he hates Kristatos.

It is now a battle over who will be the first of the two sides to reach the wreck of the HMS Leeds and recover on board the "Merlin" computer, which can decode messages from Russian satellites and even reprogram them to spy on their own country. Bond uses the Amphitrite until the boat is blown up by the Kristatos men; he then uses Columbo's ships. There is an underwater battle between divers from both sides near the wreck and Bond decides to destroy the wreck after recovering the Merlin. Interestingly, the treatment tells us that James Bond was once "a demolition expert in the [Royal] Navy".

However after this Kristatos manages to capture Bond, the Merlin and Judy. There's the scene where 007 and the girl are dragged behind Kristatos' boat until Columbo intervenes and attacks the boat and Kristatos while cutting the rope of the paravane that was dragging our heroes.

Kristatos, Kriegler and Brink manage to escape with the Merlin during the melee on the ship and take refuge in the Meteora monastery. Bond climbs the rock face, but not alone: with Columbo. However, they are discovered and Columbo dies!

007 manages to reach the top anyway and fights Kriegler and Coyle. Meanwhile Vrow Brink is busy lowering Kristatos and the Merlin to the ground via the monastery basket lift.

007 slides down the basket's rope and fights against Kristatos in the basket until he kills him. Brink stops lowering the basket and with Kriegler they shoot at Bond with guns. And while Bond is a stationary and easy target, suddenly an "acrojet" piloted by one of Columbo's men appears in the sky! In the co-pilot's seat: Judy with her spear gun force Brink and Kriegler to move away.

The BD-5J (also known as the "Acrostar") will skip its turn for this film but will be in the next one.

The acrojet throws a rope to Bond and thanks to it he descends with the Merlin from the basket to the ground. "If all this takes place during a windstorm it might even be more exciting", screenwriters wrote.

On the way to London to bring back the Merlin, Bond and Judy are attacked by Kriegler in an undetailed scene and they kill him.

The treatment ends in Bond's home where Judy, "who throughout the film hasn't succumbed to Bond's sexual charm", appears in a transparent nightie. "For your eyes only", she says to Bond who is about to have a good time with her...

- Richard Maibaum[18] : We tried to return to the earlier films with For Your Eyes Only, but we didn't have Sean to make it real. And I was very disappointed with the way the love story was handled. The whole idea was that the great lover James Bond can't get to first base with this woman because she's so obsessed with avenging her parents' death. Nothing was ever done with it. It was as if the director didn't feel there was a love story there at all.

March 25' treatment: Melina, Cortina and shark sticks

On March 25, 1980, 50 pages (!) of a new treatment were completed. For the record, this is the first time the name of Michael Wilson appears (alongside the one of Maibaum) on the cover page. Rather remarkably, we can already see in this treatment almost all the elements of the finished film, except for the first act.

In the first lines we observe that the HMS Leeds was renamed to SS Buchanan and that the "Merlin" became the "Nestor". This device no longer allows Russian satellites to be hacked but have the function of communicating with submerged submarines. The SS Buchanan still sink following a collision with an oil tanker.

The writers also rename another ship: the Havelock's Amphitrite becomes the Thetis (probably because according to Peter Lamont, the real yacht used for the filming was called Thetis[19]). More importantly, "Judy" Havelock becomes "Melina" Havelock and her parents are now Hillary (father) and Iona (mother).

The rest of the pre-title no longer takes place in Greece but in Austria near Vienna, in an "old castle? Hunting lodge?", hesitate the screenwriters. Anyway, while tracking Gomez, Bond falls into a trap but Melina appears and takes out the assassin with a bow and arrow (instead of a spear). Coyle chases them by helicopter to the construction site and there's a little addition here: Coyle tries to ram the helicopter with a crane when Bond is later at the controls of the aircraft. As he leaves the construction site, 007 reveals to Melina that his name is Bond, James Bond.

After the credits, Williams/009, who was absent from the previous treatment, returns in this one. Bond still shares his theory that he thinks he was trapped, but here M doesn't agree with him: he thinks the log is inviolable. M attributes what happened with Gomez to some sort of incompetence on the part of his agent and chose to reassign the case involving the SS Buchanan to 009.

M also assigns 007 to a desk job as a sort of disciplinary sanction. It is also from this treatment that we lose an important element of the literary short story: it is no longer indicated anywhere that M had more than a professional relationship with the Havelocks.

Less convinced than M that the log's computer is inviolable, Bond, armed with a wiring diagram, goes to do an inspection of the wiring and discovers that he was right. He talks about his discoveries to M. 007 is now at the wheel of a London taxi: he tails O'Grady and goes to hide a bug device in a telephone box towards which O'Grady is heading. O'Grady phones Clarke (now with a finale E) and the number appears on Bond's gadget.

There is the chase in the postal underground where O'Grady dies.

After this, Bond decides to telephone Clarke, and imitating O'Grady's voice he arranges a meeting with him in a park at Leicester. Bond is there at the wheel of his taxi: ready to tail Clarke when this one will leaves after getting tired of waiting for an O'Grady that doesn't come. However, a "Robert Morley type" gets into Bond's taxi and says "House of Lords!". "By the time Bond ejects him from the cab he has lost Clarke's".

Bond stops at a payphone to ask Moneypenny for the address linked to Clarke's phone number. It's a seedy betting shop in Soho that 007 goes to. There he sees Clarke handing an envelope to a certain Shankov. The latter goes out and looks for a taxi; Bond takes him in his.

Robert Morley, British actor.

> - Shankov: [To the] Russian embassy.

007 stops the taxi in a deserted alley and points his gun at Shankov:

> - Bond (with a Cockney accent): Scotland Yard!

Shankov asserts his diplomatic immunity. Bond then mocks him for believing he was from Scotland Yard: he says he is actually a thief and strips him of his possessions, including the envelope, before leaving.

There is now a scene in the Minister of Defense's office with M, Tanner and Bond. The important item that Bond recovered from Shankov turns out not to be the letter but a note found in his wallet on which are mentioned a meeting for Nestor and a post office box; no longer at Innsbruck but at Cortina d'Ampezzo, in Italy. The minister is panicked at the idea that the Russians could get their hands on the Nestor and thus communicate with the British submarines and transmit orders to them, "blow up our cities, [and] God knows what else!".

007 must therefore leave for Cortina but cannot help to poke M by saying "I'm no longer on the project, Minister". M reassigns him and asks him to go see Q before leaving.

Q gives 007 (only) a lighter which can "emits a solid particle gamma ray beam" capable of damaging the "molecular structure", such as material's ones.

Bond therefore goes to the Cortina post office box and sees that it belongs to a certain "Milos" Columbo (instead of "Enrico" from the short story). Bond then goes to buy a bottle of champagne and asks the seller to have it delivered to Columbo's post office box. Coyle comes to get the bottle and Bond tails him but loses it. Around where he lost Coyle, Bond comes across Williams (M hadn't relieved him of the mission, as he said to the Minister earlier: two agents are better than one). Williams says that he is gonna to contact Ferris, the local MI6' contact, and 007 and 009 arrange to meet later at the Cortina ski jump.

Bond now goes alone to an ice rink where he thinks Coyle may have head toward. Here is Bibi ("Swedish? Hungarian? Dutch?"), aged 17 now (instead of 18) and Jacoba Brink. Bond looks for Coyle in the crowd but cannot find him. A fifty-year-old man named Kristatos "who could have been played by [the late] Ezio Pinza" approaches Bond, telling him it is his protégée on the ice. Bond invites him to join him (he is seated at a table in some sort of restaurant). They discuss Bibi (but not Columbo); she comes to join them and the writers tell us that she is immediately attracted to Bond. Bibi whispers something to Kristatos and he invites Bond to come and have dinner at his chalet later; which doesn't seem to appeal to Brink.

Bond returns to his hotel and by jumping under the bed of his room he narrowly escapes death in the form of a bomb which was located in his fruit basket.

Ezio Pinza (1892-1957), Italian opera singer.

007 then goes to Kiristatos' chalet in which there is a portrait of Churchill. "The rest of the room reflects Kristatos' career and hobbies. A poor boy from Crete, he has grown wealthy in the marine insurance business, oil exploration, and shipping".

> - Kristatos: I will always be grateful to the English for liberating us from the Nazis.

Kristatos shows Bond a medal showing that he fought in the Greek resistance during the war, then fought against the communists. He produces a photo of himself as a young man alongside other armed teenagers and talks about them:

> - Kristatos: [...] This one a composer [now]. Ari became a mechanic. This one, unfortunately, turned out very bad. He is a pirate.
> - Bond: A pirate?

Doubled as a smuggler, Kristatos replies, specifying that his name is Milos Columbo, known as "The Dove".

> - Kristatos: We once were like brothers. Now he hates me.

007 is of course interested since this is the man he is tracking, but Kristatos says he doesn't know where Columbo is. He suggests to Bond that he should go to accompany (without him) Bibi to the biathlon.

Bibi and 007 ski to the biathlon and notably see one of the participants stand out in the competition: Kriegler. Bond tells her that he have to leave her because he have a meeting and she tells him to come see her later at the rink.

Bond goes to meet 009 near the ski jump and we see that Kriegler is going to join Coyle and a certain Fritz: together they observe the two Double-O agents. According to what he learned from Ferris, 009 says that Columbo is a smuggler... Then Williams is suddenly killed by Kriegler from a distance with a rifle. 007 dives on the ground and skis away, pursued by Coyle and Fritz. He goes up the ski jump, surrounded by tourists, and has an altercation with Fritz who has a knife. Bond manages to overpower him and steals his red bonnet during the fight.

007 launches onto the ski jump, Kriegler believing it's Fritz because the bonnet doesn't shoot. Fritz then jump but is shot down. Bond takes advantage of this to quickly flee away and, unlike the previous treatment, succeeds.

Bond joins Bibi at the ice rink; it's late and they are alone with Brink. Bibi gives him a pair of skates that she bought for him and he skates with her because "James Bond, as we know, can do anything, even figure skate with a potential Olympic champion". Bibi tells him that she will never forget him and gets on the tips of her skates to give him a shy kiss. Brink suddenly intervenes and the girls go to the locker room.

As he prepares to leave the rink, hockey players arrive and attack Bond. 007 manages to defend himself and hits them with a Zamboni. When he leaves, one of his attackers removes his mask: it's Kriegler.

Bond then joins Melina at the Acropolis in Athens. Here the writers give us some descriptions about the girl: Greek and English origins, marine archaeologist, solitary, "twenty-four and still a virgin, she poses a somewhat new challenge to James Bond's legendary reputation as a lover"!

007 asks her for help: does she know anything about her father's discoveries or a certain Milos Columbo? She tells him no and as far as she knows, her father was a simple archaeologist who worked on the temple of Aphrodite.

Bond tells her that he needs to meet Kristatos to get some more information from him and arranges to meet Melina later at his hotel. The writers point out that unlike "usual", the girl does not seem to be interested in Bond; "Melina Havelock is anything but a pushover".

007 joins Kristatos in a restaurant. The scene is quite similar to the film with Kristatos saying he thinks Bond is a narcotics agent and that Columbo may need to be eliminated. Kristatos point out Columbo who is at a nearby table accompanied by Lisl Baum. "An expensive Viennese whore", Kristatos pronounces to describe Baum. While they are talking, a waiter removes a chair from Bond and Kristatos' table: as in Fleming's short story, a recorder was in it.

Similar to the film Lisl makes a scene after Columbo whispers something in her ear and Bond (and Kristatos) drives her back to her hotel, which by a happy coincidence, is the same one where Bond lodge.

Bond follows Lisl inside the hotel lobby and invites her to his room for caviar and champagne; she accepts. "Melina, who decided to wait for Bond in the bar after all, comes out of it and sees him and Lisl go into the lift together"; she also sees Coyle in the hotel.

Bond is busy making love to Lisl when the phone rings: it's Melina and she tells him she saw Coyle. 007 thanks her, takes his gun and goes to inspect the surroundings. He hears someone running, goes after him but loses him. When he returns to Lisl, he finds her in the bathroom with her throat cut. This vision makes Bond sick, so much so that he "throws up in the sink"! A man armed with a knife comes out of the shadows: it's Andro, Kristatos' driver. As he prepares to kill 007, he is shot down by another guy armed with a gun: Karageorge.

Karageorge is joined by a certain Santos and both have their guns pointed at Bond. 007 thanks them but asks who they are; he gets knocked out as only answer.

Bond regains consciousness on the fishing vessel Comlumbinu and is brought before Columbo. The following dialogues are similar to the film: Kristatos is the real villain of the story and he collaborates with the Russians; Columbo intends to prove it to Bond this evening.

The Comlumbinu arrives at a port where a Kristatos's arms smuggling operation is underway. Columbo and his men attack; Bond stays as an observer but joins the battle when he sees that Coyle is there. Bond saves Columbo's life during the battle and sees Coyle with a detonator behind a warehouse. Boom! Columbo and Bond survived, they emerge from the debris and the writers tell us that 007's clothes are torn.

Coyle flees in a car and 007 runs after him: he shoots into the windshield. The car crashes and Bond opens the door: Coyle is dead. Columbo joins Bond and kisses him on both cheeks as 007, exhausted, "collapses against the side of the car".

The scene cuts to the underwater temple of Aphrodite. "After the carnage, violence, and brutality of the previous sequence, this is an incredibly beautiful peaceful scene". Bond finds Melina there and they get back on the Thetis. There are theses dialogues here:

> - Bond: Forgive me for not returning your call the other night but things got a little out of hand.
> - Melina: I am not interested in your sex life, Mr. Bond.
> - Bond: I didn't come here to discuss it, Miss Havelock. Where can we have a cup of coffee?

(Similar dialogues will be filmed but cut during film editing).

Bond tells her the truth about her parents death, Kristatos and the SS Buchanan. As they go to consult her parents' papers, she sheds a few tears; for a moment we think she's going to collapse in Bond's arms but she pulls herself together.

Bond and Melina are now in a two-seater submarine to explore the wreck of the spy ship. They are spotted by sonar and Kristatos is informed.

Except for the absence of the shark, things happen similarly to the film: Bond extracts the Nestor and an enemy diver in a large titanium suit equipped with pincers appears. Bond and Melina manage to lose him but come across a second enemy also equipped with a titanium suit. 007 takes out the lighter that Q gave him and emits particles towards the window of the enemy's suit. The glass explodes and water rushes into the villain's suit.

Bond and Melina return to their submarine. On the verge of leaving, they are however attacked (not by an enemy submarine) but by the first diver in a titanium suit they had previously lost on board the SS Buchanan. Bond steers the submarine toward the sharp coral to get rid of the diver and surfaces.

A "JIM suit" used in the film. In this treatment, the writers seemed to already have it in mind since they wrote that the suit described was already "now in use and was specially designed for deep sea diving". The material of the JIM, however, is not titanium but reinforced fiberglass.

The submarine returns to the Thetis and they are captured by Kristatos and his men. Out of reach of Bond's and Melina's ears, Kristatos tells Kriegler in a low voice that the KGB will be able to have the Nestor in exchange of the money at Saint-Cyril, as planned.

Kristatos then drags Bond and Melina behind his boat through the corals and sharks. "Bond turns over on his back to protect [Melina] from the coral".

> - Kristatos (to the pilot): We don't want them to drown before the sharks get them, do we?

As in the film, Bond attaches the rope that tows them to a reef and they escape, thanks to the oxygen bottle previously left at the temple of Aphrodite. Once Kristatos leaves, they surface. Bond kisses her and she responds warmly:

> - Bond (whispering): There's nothing like being keel hauled with a girl to break down her resistance.

They kiss again when Bond remembers the mission:

> - Bond: The Nestor! St. Cyril's! Kristatos said the KGB would pick it up there within three days.
> - Melina: How could you hear him say that, James? He was so far away.
> - Bond: I'm a lip reader, darling. That's sometimes better than a directional laser mike.

In a Greek church, Bond joins M who is disguised as a priest in a confessional. M tells him there are too many St. Cyrils to find the right one but 007 thinks Columbo can help.

At the good St. Cyril, Bond climbs (alone) the rock. Meanwhile Kristatos has troubles with Bibi and Brink when he tells them that they might go to Cuba:

> - Bibi: Cuba? Do they have ice cream there?
> - Kristatos: I will see to it that they do. And you will skate only for me. I will be your audience. And then perhaps when you are older...
> - Bibi: Yes, when I am older, what then?
> - Kristatos: We will be even happier with one another than we are now.
> [...]
> - Bibi: I know what you want, but you're too old, too old!

As in the film, a certain Apostis spots 007 and makes him fall about thirty meters then tries to dislodge the pitons from his safety rope. Bond uses his shoelaces to pull up the rope and kills Apostis by throwing a piton into his neck as if it was a throwing knife.

Bond brings the basket down for Melina, Columbo and his men (no suspicious guards here compared to the film). They take the dormitory guards prisoner. Bond fights a guard and pushes him (without himself) through a skylight. Kriegler draws to shoot Bond but Bibi jumps on him. Bond goes through the skylight, fights with Kriegler and finds himself in a bad position as the latter is strangling him. 007, however, manages to grab Bibi's skates and plants them in Kriegler's throat. The Nestor is retrieved.

Kristatos waits with Gogol, described as the "head of the Russian Secret Police", at the helipad. Instead of Kriegler, it is Bond that they see approaching. 007 begins to open fire on Kristatos; the latter then gets into the helicopter with Gogol. "Bond watches the helicopter lift off and disappear over the Meteoras": Kristatos managed to escape; although without the Nestor.

We later find Bond and Melina on the Thetis saying goodbye to Bibi and her new sponsor, Columbo. Bond is in a bed, "ready for [l']amour". Melina next to him is "obviously having stage fright" for her first time.

We see that a member of the crew of the Thetis turns out to be Kristatos, his face screaming for vengeance. He carries anti-shark weapons ("shark sticks") in each of his hands and attack them. During the fight the bed explodes due to a cartridge from the anti-shark weapon. Melina grabs a crossbow to kill Kristatos but Bond tries to stop her from doing so:

> - Bond: Don't do it, Melina. We'll turn him over to the police.

Melina decides to listen to 007 and Kristatos then steals the crossbow from her hands; Bond then blasts Kristatos with the anti-shark weapon. "The shark was on the wrong end of the shark stick", he comments.

Bond lies down on the sofa and Melina drops her dress on the floor: "for your eyes only, darling".

April 7' treatment: Loc, stroll in Athens and buggies

Maibaum and Wilson go back to work and delivered a new 65-page treatment on April 7, 1980.

This begins with a pre-title sequence "to be devised". "Perhaps" Bond on foot jumps over a car that tries to run him over, climbs on a motorcycle and is chased in the woods by enemies who throw incendiary grenades at him? Surrounded by fire, he makes a big jump to go over the flames and escape?

This replaces the scene of the helicopter going through the construction site.

(Only) after the credits there is the accident of the SS Buchanan then the death of Melina's parents.

At MI6 there is no more Williams and M's briefing to Bond takes place in the "Log Room" (formerly known as the "Eyes Only" room) of the log. Bond's mission is to find Gomez and find out who hired him to kill the Havelocks.

Gomez having been located in Austria, Bond goes near Vienna where scenes similar to the old pre-title take place. So Bond is trapped, but in a more apparent way than before, thanks to a line of dialogue:

> - Gomez: We have been expecting you, Señor Bond.

Two henchmen hold Bond while Gomez pulls out a knife to slit his throat. 007 struggles, sending both men flying and the knife out of Gomez's hands. As Gomez picks it up and is about to plant it, Melina saves 007 by killing the Cuban with her bow.

Bond and Melina get into the latter's car; he explains to her that he is from "Foreign Office. I never appreciated archery until now". They are pursued by a helicopter containing no longer a character named "Coyle" but named "Loc", described as "a South Vietnamese [who] looks disturbingly like the Saigon police official who blew out the brains of a hand-cuffed man in the early seventies for the U.S. TV audience".

The execution of Nguyễn Văn Lém by Nguyễn Ngọc Loan (whose face is better visible in the picture on the right) which actually took place in 1968.

As you imagine there is the scene where the helicopter passes through the elevator shaft of a building under construction. Then we see the helicopter landed in a parking lot at night, but Bond and Melina are not in it. They are in the hotel in the background:

> - Melina: You're a man any girl would find attractive, Mr. Bond. [But] I'm in mourning.
> - Bond: Life has to go on, you know. I'm sorry if I offended you.
> - Melina: You haven't. I feel you sincerely want to comfort me. Thank you.

Bond takes her back to the airport with the helicopter where they say goodbye. "He looks after her, his brow furrowed. James Bond, great lover, has encountered a new obstacle".

After that, things unfold as in the previous treatment: Bond is assigned to an office job, he discovers that the log is wiretapped, death of O'Grady in the postal network, scenes with Clarke and Shankov. Small difference though: Bond doesn't drive the taxi (an MI6 sub-agent, Zeck, does it while he sits in the back).

007 monitors the post box in Cortina d'Ampezzo, tail Loc but loses him. Bond no longer stumble on 009 but Ferris, the local MI6' contact, and asks him to investigate Columbo. Bond then meets Kristatos at the ice rink. Here the writers finally settled on Swede for Bibi Dahl's nationality.

When Bond returns to his hotel, he finds a different type of bomb than before in the person of Bibi who comes out of the shower and jumps into his bed. The dialogues and the kiss are similar to the film except that Bond doesn't tell her that he will buy her an ice cream: it's a lollipop in this treatment. (Note that critics of the time will welcome the novelty of having a scene where Bond rejects the advances of a woman).

Once Bibi leaves, Bond takes a pear from the fruit basket and has just time to dive under the bed before the basket explodes.

Later, after the Kristatos chalet scenes, Bond and Bibi go to the biathlon. Here we have "Erich" Kriegler who is described as an "Aryan profile, china-blue eyes, long silvery hair tied in the back ponytail style, and chin whiskers". Before engage on the biathlon, we see him meditate in the lotus position.

Kriegler kills Ferris with his rifle and there is the hunt for Bond at the ski jump. Here there is no longer any question of changing clothes to deceive Kriegler; instead Bond lands and follows directly with another jump from a sort of mound which catches Kriegler by surprise. Moreover, the hockey player who later removes his mask later is no longer Kriegler, but Fritz (who now survives the ski jump scene).

Before 007 meets Melina at the Acropolis, there is now a scene where he phones her (while she is at the National Archaeological Museum) to arrange the meeting with her.

At the Acropolis:

> - Melina: You said it was important. Why do you want to see me?
> - Bond: I can think of numerous charming possibilities I won't mention. [...] Tell me about the Acropolis.
> - Melina: Should I start with the sculptures Lord Elgin stole from The Parthenon over there in 1803?
> - Bond: I'm terribly sorry. I'd make the British Museum give them all back if it was up to me.

Before Bond leaves to see Kristatos, Melina wants to go for a walk around Athens together, "we'll tell each other about ourselves. We've never done that". Bond understands, however, that she is actually hoping that by walking together, her parents' killer comes across them and that she will thus be able to kill them.

> - Bond (laughing): Alright. I'm perfectly willing to be used as a decoy, but haven't you forgotten something? Your bow and arrow? Never mind. (He touches his jacket near his shoulder holster). If necessary I'll supply the firepower this time.

There is therefore a "montage" where Bond and Melina visit emblematic places in the city, without however ever being attacked.

Hadrian's Gate; Omonoia Square; Syntagma Square; and the Tower of the Winds are places that the writers planned to show us. (Note that the evzones, these presidential guards in skirts, were also to be shown on screen in an earlier scene).

Further on, Lisl Baum is first introduced to Bond as "Lisl van Schlaf" and is now given the title of Austrian countess. Melina still sees her passing through the hotel with Bond, but no longer sees Coyle (or Loc).

While Melina hangs out all night waiting for Bond, he spends time with the Countess in her bungalow on the beach. Telling her that he is a writer, Bond wants information on Columbo and try to lure her by promising her a diamond jewel. However, Lisl have other projects in mind:

> - Lisl: Enough of Columbo. [...] You make love like Wagner wrote music, divinely. Do it again.

007 complies and later tries to resume the conversation about Columbo; she reveals to him that she is not really a countess:

> - Lisl: My only connection with aristocracy is my great-great grandmother who was one of Kaiser Franz Joseph's cooks. I'm plain Lisl Baum, a manicurist from Vienna.

They go to the beach, she in a bikini, where as in the film they are attacked by Loc and Fritz driving buggies. Before seeing them more closely, Bond first believes that they are Columbo's men:

> - Bond: "There they are, Lisl. The chaps you were expecting.
> - Lisl: I don't know those men.

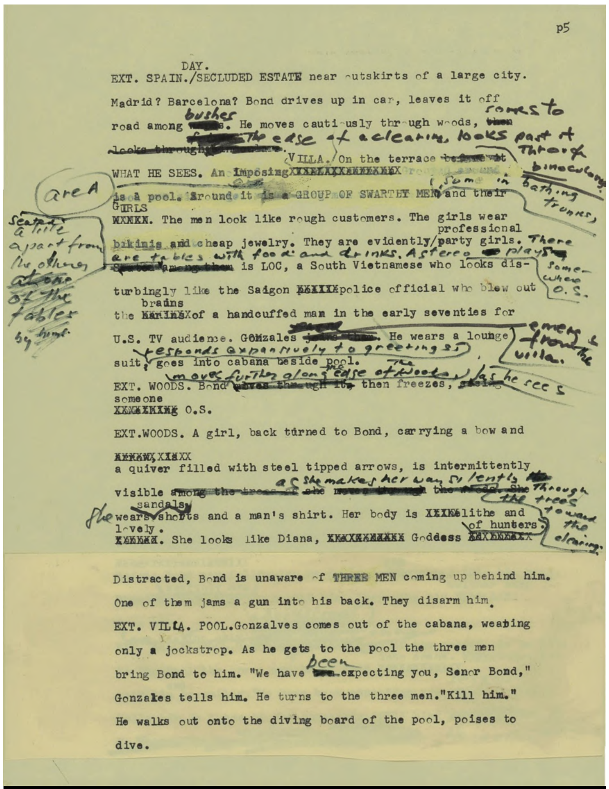
Lisl gets hit/killed by Loc and Bond is saved by Columbo's men. The rest is similar to the previous treatment: Columbo who brings 007 to attack the port, death of Loc, recovery of the Nestor, the two enemy divers, dragged behind the Kristatos's boat, the scenes at the monastery.

We notice that Bond no longer plants Kriegler in the neck with a Bibi's skate, but in the torso. However "inhumanly hard to kill", Kriegler removes the skate from his torso; Bond then gets Kriegler's gun and kills him with it.

Kristatos still escapes in Gogol's helicopter only to reappear later on the Thetis with shark sticks. During the fight, Bond now kills Kristatos with the crossbow while defending himself. Kristatos dead, 007 can finally have some good time with Melina (who is apparently not a virgin in this treatment).

April 14' treatment: A-T-A-C, Ferrara, ASP and parrot



p5

DAY.
EXT. SPAIN./SECLUDED ESTATE near outskirts of a large city.
Madrid? Barcelona? Bond drives up in car, leaves it off road among bushes. He moves cautiously through woods, ~~then~~ comes to the edge of a clearing, looks past it through binoculars ~~looks through~~.
VILLA. On the terrace ~~before it~~
WHAT HE SEES. An imposing XXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX is a pool. Around it ~~is a~~ GROUP OF SWARTHY MEN, some in bathing trunks, and their GIRLS.
XXXXX. The men look like rough customers. The girls wear professional bikinis and cheap jewelry. They are evidently/party girls. There are tables with food and drinks. A stereo plays somewhere O.S.
Seated a little apart from the others at one of the tables by himself ~~Spotted among them~~ is LOC, a South Vietnamese who looks disturbingly like the Saigon XXXXXpolice official who blew out brains
the XXXXXXof a handcuffed man in the early seventies for U.S. TV audience. GOnzales emerges from the villa. ~~joins them~~. He wears a lounge suit, responds expansively to greetings, goes into cabana beside pool.
moves further along the edge of woods, as he sees EXT. WOODS. Bond ~~moves through it~~, then freezes, ~~seeing~~ someone
XXXXXXXXX O.S.

EXT.WOODS. A girl, back turned to Bond, carrying a bow and XXXXXXXXXX
a quiver filled with steel tipped arrows, is intermittently as she makes her way silently through the trees toward the clearing.
visible ~~among the trees~~ ~~she~~ ~~moves through the woods. She~~ sandals
She wears ~~shorts~~ and a man's shirt. Her body is XXXXlithe and lovely.
of hunters.
XXXXXX. She looks like Diana, XXXXXXXXXXXX Goddess XXXXXXXX

Distracted, Bond is unaware of THREE MEN coming up behind him.
One of them jams a gun into his back. They disarm him.
EXT. VILLA. POOL.Gonzalves comes out of the cabana, weabing only a jockstrop. As he gets to the pool the three men bring Bond to him. "We have been expecting you, Senor Bond," Gonzakes tells him. He turns to the three men."Kill him."
He walks out onto the diving board of the pool, poises to dive.

Sometimes Bond films' writing can look like this: traces of white corrector, handwritten correction and cutting and pasting pieces of paper.

A few revisions by hand and cutting/pasting bring the treatment to 74 pages. Finished to be re-typed clean on April 14, 1980, this treatment by Richard Maibaum and Michael Wilson is still 72 pages long!

Here "Gomez" is closer to the Fleming's short story by definitively changing his name in "Hector Gonzales". He is described as "a pudgy, amiable looking Cuban in his late thirties with curly hair and a few gold teeth".

Melina's dad goes from Hillary to Timothy [Havelock] and has now a parrot with him named Max. Also an important change: the Nestor was renamed "A-T-A-C (Automatic Targeting Attack Communicator)".

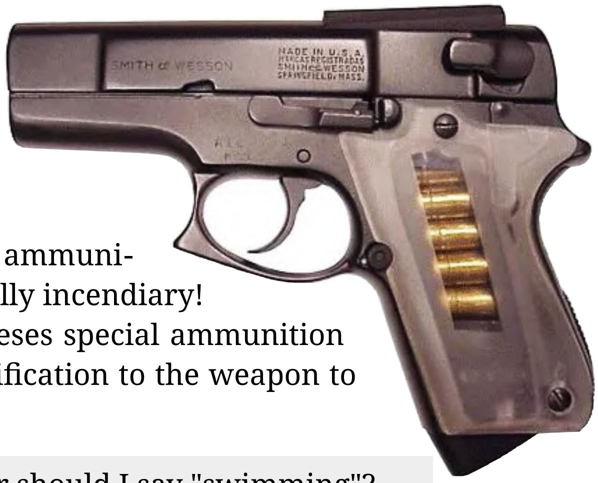
M explains to his agent that he must find Gonzales, "Operation Undertow" and hands him a folder on which it is written "FOR YOUR EYES ONLY".

Gonzales is now in Spain near "Madrid? Barcelona?" instead of Vienna, near a pool with lots of girls in bikinis and Loc. Bond goes there in a car (brand and model not provided). The writers compare Melina and her bow to "Diana, Goddess of hunters".

There are plans to give O'Grady the first name Tim. When Bond later makes his report, the note in Shankov's wallet no longer mention a post office box but of Loc's presence in Cortina d'Ampezzo. "Chung Lee Loc, a corrupt ex-Saigon police official last reported by Interpol to be working with Greek smugglers", explains M.

007 goes to see Q before leaving. He no longer gives him a lighter but instead asks Bond to give him his Walther PPK: a new weapon is given/assigned to 007:

- Q: The ASP, a 9mm Parabellum converted Smith and Wesson. [...] The grip is transparent plexiglass so that the operator can immediately tell the amount of remaining ammunition. This is a Guttersnipe sight with no sharp edges to catch on clothing. [...]



Q gives him magazines with three different types of ammunition: anti-personnel, armor-piercing for vehicles and finally incendiary! (Don't get excited though: Bond never appears to use theses special ammunition in the rest of the treatment). Q also says he made a modification to the weapon to make it operational underwater.

- Bond: It makes me feel like a walking arsenal. Or should I say "swimming"?

Q asks him to bring him the weapon in perfect condition and Bond tries to take his PPK back as he leaves. Q, without even seeing him, tells him to put the PPK down.

Interestingly, author John Gardner would also give Bond an ASP in his novels a few years later, in 1986.

007 lands at Cortina airport and is greeted there by the MI6's local contact, "Ferrara" (instead of "Ferris"). Bond goes to his hotel, he is followed by Klaus, a henchman (formerly named Fritz in previous treatments), disguised as a bellboy. Ferrara phones 007 to tell him that he spotted Loc in the hotel lobby. Bond tails Loc but loses him near the rink and meets Kristatos.

007 returns to his hotel and notices that the hair he had placed near the door is no longer there. He discovers that Bibi is in his room. Once she leaves, Ferrara joins Bond in his room and 007 tells him about Kristatos. Ferrara says he knows him and that he helps the British from time to time:

- Bond: Can he be trusted?
- Ferrara: Can anyone be?

Ferrara is about to make a "martini, shaken not stirred, right?" to Bond when suddenly 007 throws him to the ground. Just in time: there was a bomb.

- Ferrara: How did you know?

[...]

- Bond: A real waiter wouldn't have tried to give me change for my tip.

Much further on, when Bond and the girl recover the A-T-A-C from the wreck of the SS Buchanan, Bond kills one of the two enemy divers with his ASP.

After being dragged behind Kristatos' boat, Bond and Melina are found by the crew of the Thetis. Here Bond no longer obtains the information about Saint Cyril because he read it on Kristatos's lips but thanks to the parrot Max, who repeats the sentence previously made by the bad guys.

- Richard Maibaum[20] : There was a scene there where a parrot was in [...] and there was also a scene where Bond was knocked out and then there was something in the plot spoken between the villain and one of the subvillains and I had it that Bond could lip read at a distance and therefore knew what they were talking about. And Cubby said, "Ah, I don't like that". He couldn't see that far and all that sort of stuff. And then so in exasperation I said, "Then what the hell do you want Cubby? You want that goddamn parrot to hear what he says and say it at the right moment?". He says, "That's what I want". Not only was that in the picture, but we got the best finale out of that thing and because the parrot was always saying, "Give us a kiss, will you, give us a kiss, will you?" [at the end of the film].

The rest is similar to before except that at the very end, after Melina undresses in front of Bond, we have the parrot repeating "Don't ever stop! Don't ever stop!".

May 26, 1980' revised script: 2CV, Lotus, Corfu and Mantis

A first script for the film was completed on May 26, 1980 and bears only Maibaum's name. The copy I own is 158 pages (!) and is a revised version, including handwritten ones, with some pages dated June 19 and July 3, 1980.

The pre-title sequence is still undefined and the British spy ship SS Buchanan became the Morgana. It is now sinking because of an old mine stuck in its fishing net.

Tanner is dictating an entry into the log when 007 arrives in the Log Room for his briefing:

> - Tanner: Double O Section daily activity report, August 14, 1981. Operation Barbed Wire. Double 0-Nine, Finley, reports from Kabul prospective KGB defector, Martov, was suddenly recalled to Moscow.

Later Chung Lee Loc is described as having a pockmarked face.

If 007's car is still not identified, Melina's is however now described as a Citroën 2 CV (Deux Chevaux, literally meaning Two Horsepower). They are chased by two Mercedes.

> - Bond (in the car): What's your name? Robina Hood?

The cars take a downhill full of bends and the enemies catching up with them, Bond suggests to Melina who is at the wheel to cut through the olive trees. Mercedes are too wide to do the same and must stay on the road. To avoid losing them, the Mercedes's drivers accelerate; one comes too fast into a corner, brakes too late and ends up crashing into a tree. The Mercedes behind, trying to avoid crashed car in front, also ends up in a tree.

007 and Melina are out of danger and back on the road when suddenly a child crosses in front of them. By avoiding him, Melina crashes the 2 CV into a ditch. Local farmers help them get the car back on the road and it's Bond who gets behind the wheel this time. Shortly after, Loc appears in the sky with a helicopter. They abandon the 2 CV at a construction site where they steal the helicopter in the usual scene.

- John Glen[21] : That chase [with the 2 CV] was going to culminate in the helicopter chase. I felt this was a little too similar to what we had done previously in [The] Spy [Who Loved Me]. Then what happened was that we were all scratching our heads trying to think of a good opening sequence. [...] Cubby then came in from Los Angeles, and he was very tired. [...] He asked if we had an idea. I came up with an idea which is basically what is in the film now. When I told Cubby the story of it, he said, "I don't like that very much. Think of something better than that". I think it's a good point that if someone's tired, just come back with jet lag, they aren't in the best frame of mind to be receptive to any ideas. Anyway, about a month later, we sat down again, and still no one else had come up with a good idea. We were getting pretty desperate: we were getting pretty close to shooting. I just reiterated my idea, and he said, "I think it's terrific". I said, "I told you it was". He denied it completely.

Later, the day Bond inspects the log wiring is described as September 6, 1981 (so several weeks after the briefing in the Log Room from the beginning of the script; and it falls on a Sunday).

When Bond tails O'Grady with the help of agent Zeck, the Robert Morley character getting into the taxi is back, but 007 gets back in the vehicle before him, telling him:

- Bond: Emergency. My cat's having kittens.

007 is still pursuing "Ronald O'Grady" in the underground postal complex of the King Edward Building. Later, the Russian "Ossip Shankov" is described as "he looks like Peter Ustinov".

Bond just knocks him out when he says he have diplomatic immunity (instead of adding that he's not from the authorities but a thug).

- Q: I'll take your Walther PPK, Double 0-Seven. We're retiring it. Put it on the desk.

The actor/writer Peter Ustinov.

CONTINUED:

BOND
(dead pan, needling M)
I'm no longer assigned to Operation Undertow, Sir.

M
(snapping at him)
You've just been re-assigned.
Contact Ferrara, our man in Northern Italy.

INT. Q'S LABORATORY – Q AND BOND

Q is holding a box.

M'S VOICE
(continuing)
And stop by Q's on your way out!

Q
I'll take your Walther PPK,
Double 0-Seven. We're retiring
it. Put it on the desk.

Bond complies reluctantly. Q opens box, takes out an A-S-P 9mm.

Q
The A-S-P, a 9mm Parabellum converted Smith and Wesson.
Twenty-three ounces fully loaded with 8 rounds in the clip, 9mm
Luger ammunition coated in black teflon. Transparent plexiglass so operator can always tell the amount of remaining ammunition.
Three clips. First is Winchester
Wesson 100 grams soft point antipersonnel round. Second clip contains 9mm full jacketed submachine gun shells, high velocity for penetrating armor and engine blocks. Third clip contains incendiary ammunition.

BOND
(straight-faced)
It seems a bit much, Q.

Armed with his new ASP, Bond arrives in Cortina d'Ampezzo. Here Bond's car is identified as a Lotus; he meets Ferrara who drives a Fiat. 007 goes to the Miramonti Hotel where Claus (with a C) is disguised as a bellboy.

Unlike the previous treatments studied, Bond goes to the ice rink because Ferrara tells him to go there to meet one of his "reliable contact". So the meeting between Bond and "Ari Kristatos" seems less fortuitous than before for us and 007. He give us some details about Bibi and we see that she is no longer of Swedish origin:

> - Kristatos: Six years ago, she was eleven, she wore an old pair of wooden skates when I found her dancing across a frozen pond in Holland. An American girl, from a broken home, she was sent here to drudge on a farm for her grandparents. Since then she has been my most absorbing interest.

However, it is a different type of information that Bond needs:

> - Bond: I need information. The whereabouts of a certain person engaged in a venture that threaten the security of the free world...

After surviving the explosion when Ferrara tries to make a Martini at the hotel:

> - Bond: Mother warned me about the evils of drink.

After the scene at Kristatos' chalet where Columbo is mentioned, Bond accompanies Bibi to the Biathlon. On the ski path, however, our 17-year-old girl deliberately made Bond fall into the snow; she rolls over to him and begins to hug him, then she "tries to put her tongue between his lips".

> - Bond: Behave yourself, Bibi, or I'll report you to the International Amateur Athletic Union!

(There is another version in which it was "or I'll report you to Brink"). She whispers something in his ear to which he reacts with "mock horror" and says he should wash Bibi's mouth out with snow before disengaging from her. It is written that Bond "represses his [own] amusement"!

Kriegler happens to shot down Ferrara while trying to shoot Bond (at the moment he was bending down to readjust his skis) and there is the scene at the ski jump in which we can feel the excitement in the head of its author:

> A never before seen sight: two long ski jumpers in midair only a few feet apart. They have 150 meters to go. Both lean far forward. Bond is so closely behind Claus he is virtually using him as a shield. Kriegler holding is rifle, unable to draw a bead on Bond.

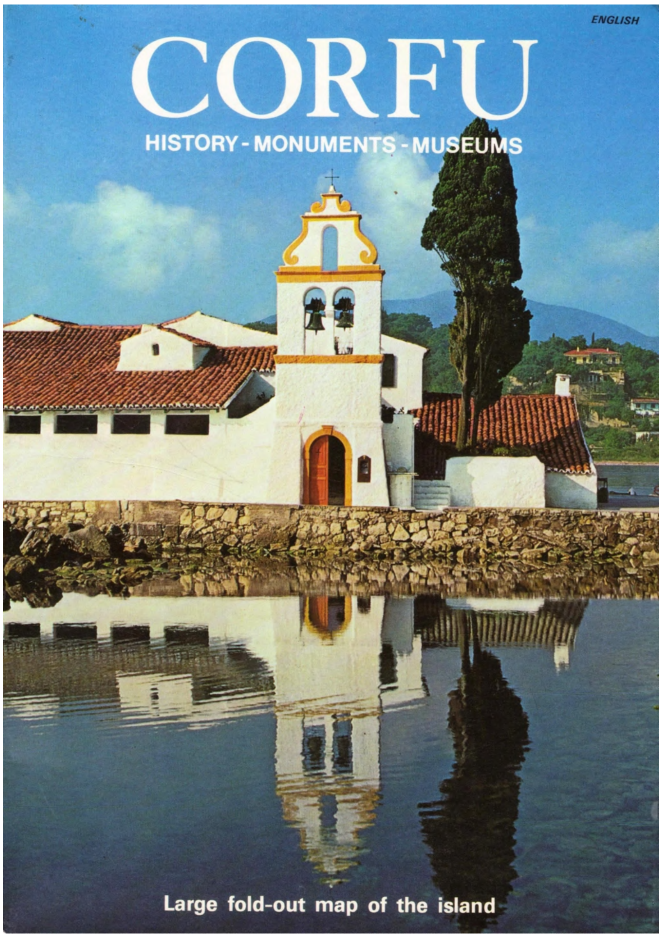
Bond returns to Bibi at the ice rink:

> - Bibi: James, you old party-pooper! You see? I'm irresistible!
> - Bond: That's close, but the word's "irreverent".
> - Bibi: Me? I go to church every Sunday. What took you so long?

After hitting the hockey players with the Zamboni and dumping snow on them (like in a deleted scene from the film); Bond walks away whistling Walking in a winter wonderland.

Arriving in Greece, the scenes are no longer located in Athens but in Corfu. Here the writers refer to the book/guide Corfu: history - monuments - museums from which they draw information and visuals of the places.

Claus (Charles Dance) in the deleted scene after Bond dumped the snow on him.



ENGLISH
CORFU HISTORY - MONUMENTS - MUSEUMS
Large fold-out map of the island

The writers mention the photo above of Corfu: history - monuments - museums for the introductory shot of the island. A very similar view will be present in the film.

We still find Melina in a museum and the script demand that Bond join her there, in front of the "Gorgon", which takes up an entire wall of the Corfu Archaeological Museum.

Above is a general view of the Gorgon. Below is what the writers exactly saw in Corfu: history - monuments - museums.

- Bond: So that's the lady who turned people into stone when they saw her face... I seem to have the same effect on you...

As they walk through the museum, Bond tells her he is investigating Columbo and that he is going to meet a man (Kristatos) tonight who should tell him more. We see that they are being observed by Apostis, who "looks vaguely like a smaller Tony Quinn" with a mustache.

Tony Quinn

- Melina: I'm not afraid to be seen with you. It's only four thirty. Corfu is beautiful in the late afternoon. I'll show it to you. [...] If anything happens... We'll be together, the way we were in Spain.

They therefore take a ride through iconic places in Corfu, including in a horse-drawn carriage.

We learn in particular that Melina studied at the Scripps Institution of Oceanography in California.

General views of Spianada Square and the gates/archs of the Palace of St. Michael and St. George.

- Bond: Boyfriends?
- Melina: A few. No one now. You know why.

Bond notices that they are being followed by Apostis. Apostis walks away and enters the mixed toilets of a store. Bond decides to follow him there, but doesn't see Apostis inside (disguised as a woman, Apostis came out before Bond's eyes).

Bond and Melina go to the Old Fortress; Bond sees Apostis again, dressed as a woman, and jumps on him:

- Bond: Next time you leave a WC in drag put the seat down! Now talk! Who do you work for? Columbo?

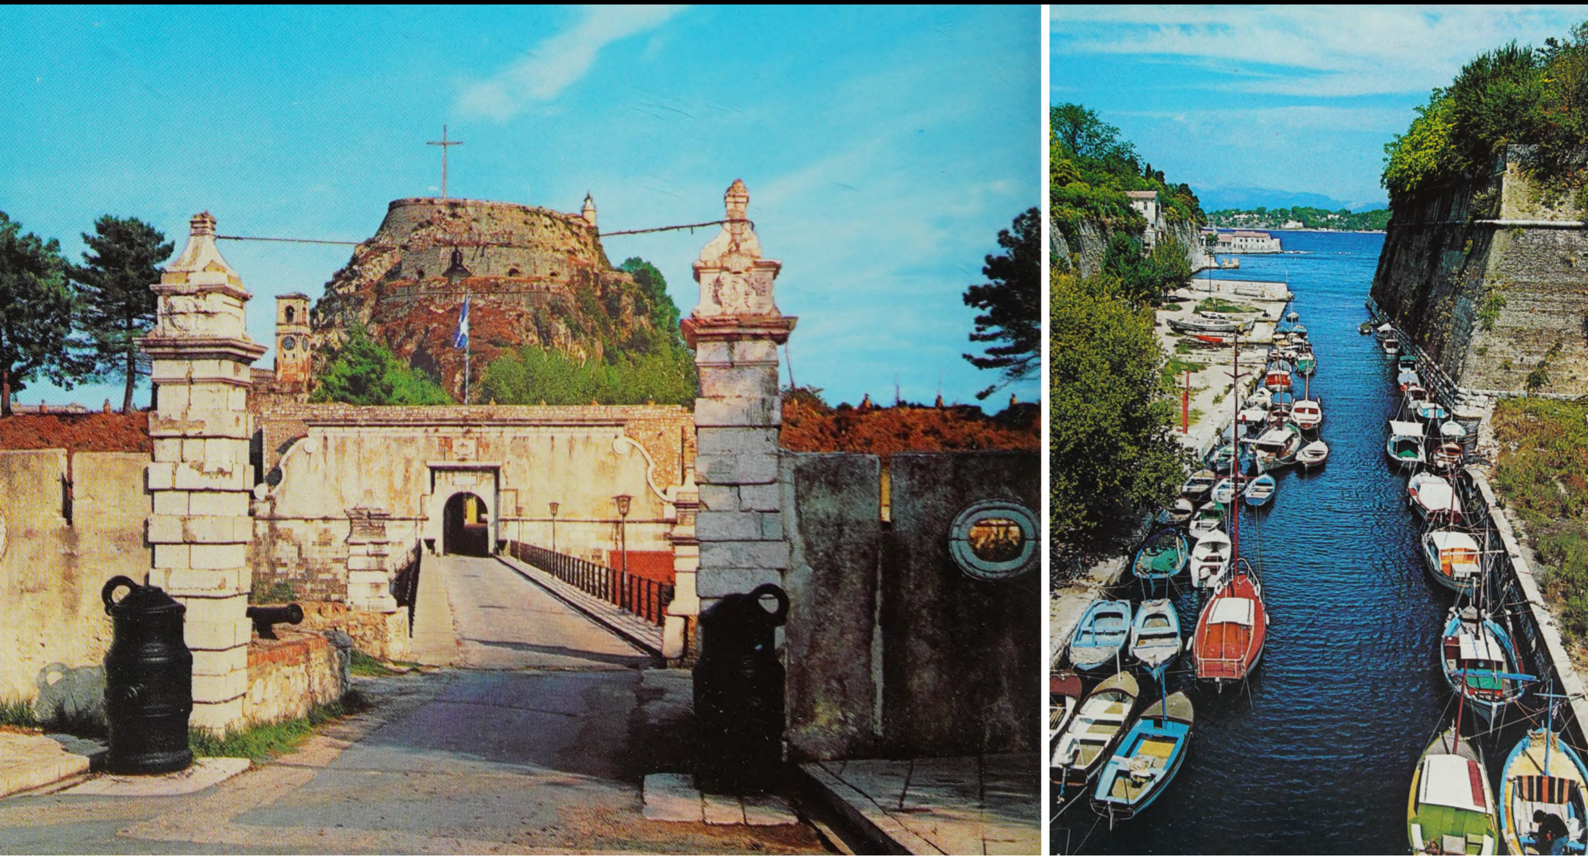
"See plate [X or Y of the guide to Corfu]" write the screenwriters. The photos/plates in question on the left: the St. Georges gate; Liston Street with its arches (behind which Apostis hides before going to the toilet); the Maitland Rotunda and the Old Fortress (including a horse-drawn carriage).

Apostis tries to flee but Bond pursues him; he hits him and Apostis staggers towards the railing of the bridge of the Fortress and falls from it into the water. Bond doesn't see it, but he survived.

Eddie
KASTAMONITIS

Above are general views of the Old Fortress. Although this entire sequence will ultimately not be filmed, the filmmakers did however set up their cameras at the Old Fortress to film sequences of the attack on the warehouse and the pursuit of Locque that follow.

Below are photos of the bridge and its underneath that the writers actually saw in the Corfu's guide.



Bond then goes to join Kristatos. Unlike the treatment studied earlier, before the restaurant there is now first a scene in a casino: the Gastouri's Achilleion one (as it will be the case in the movie).

Photos of the Achilleion in Corfu: history - monuments - museums to which the writers refer.

Bond wears a white jacket topped with a black bow tie.

> - Kristatos: Do you play?
> - Bond: Rarely. I prefer games of chance, not percentages. Roulette requires a computer.
> - Kristatos: Mine must be malfunctioning [then]. Five thousand on double zero... And a thousand on seven... For my friend here.

Kristatos therefore knows that Bond's code name is 007 and they go to the Achilleion restaurant where they are served dry martinis. At one point Columbo leaves (to listen to the recording that was hidden in the chair), leaving Lisl von (with an O) Schlaf alone at his table:

> - Bond: The Countess looks bored. I'll ask her to dance.
> - Kristatos: I don't advise it. Columbo is notoriously jealous.

- Bond: I live dangerously.

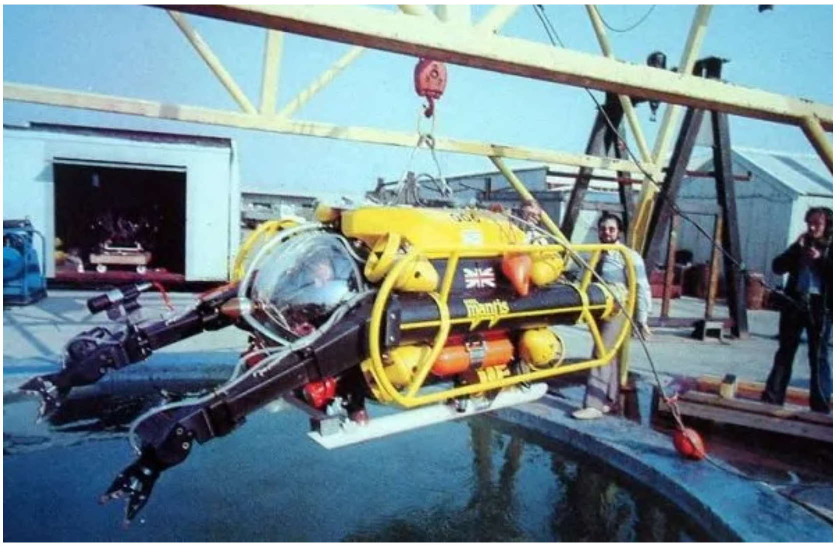
So Bond does this and the stage directions say, "She looks him over again. Could any woman refuse? She rises and precedes him toward dance floor".

So they dance; he says something to her that she takes badly (he asks her to go out with him the next evening) and she returns to the Columbo table. Later after the fake argument with Columbo, she leaves with 007 where she is ultimately killed during the buggys sequence.

Further on, arriving at the port warehouse battle, the script contains drug cylinders in addition to weapons crates.

During the exploration of the wreck of the Morgana, the shark (here holding a human leg in its mouth) is added; they also encounter an octopus that Bond is ready to kill with a knife before Melina tells him that it is a harmless animal. Bond will later use an octopus to throw it at the enemy diver who then wastes time removing it from his helmet while Bond now uses the ATAC explosive charge to get rid of him. "May he rest in pieces", Maibaum tries again after having failed to place this sentence in On Her Majesty's Secret Service and Diamonds Are Forever.

There is no longer a second diver, this one has been replaced by an enemy Mantis submarine. The vehicle is described in great detail (the submarine is not an invention of the screenwriters but an already existing model; its designer Graham Hawkes is for a matter of fact the person who pilot it in the film). However, the filmmakers intend to add a little additional refinement mounted on the Mantis: a sort of underwater machine gun/bazooka.



Melina's submarine is holding up under projectiles but the situation can change at any moment. 007 have an idea: with his flashlight he sends a signal in Morse code to the enemy, saying that they have won and that they are surrendering. The Mantis pilot replies them to surface. However, when passing near the hole in the wreck of the Morgana; Bond crashes into the Mantis and traps it inside.

- Bond: First hole in one underwater [in history].

Further in the script:

- Columbo: There are easier ways to deal with Kristatos. Are you sure he went to St. Cyril's?
- Bond (a trace sheepishly): We were told he did.
- Columbo: [Then] wait till he leaves.
- Bond: I'm fighting the clock, my government wants something he took there.
- Columbo: Not narcotics.
- Bond: Enormously more dangerous.

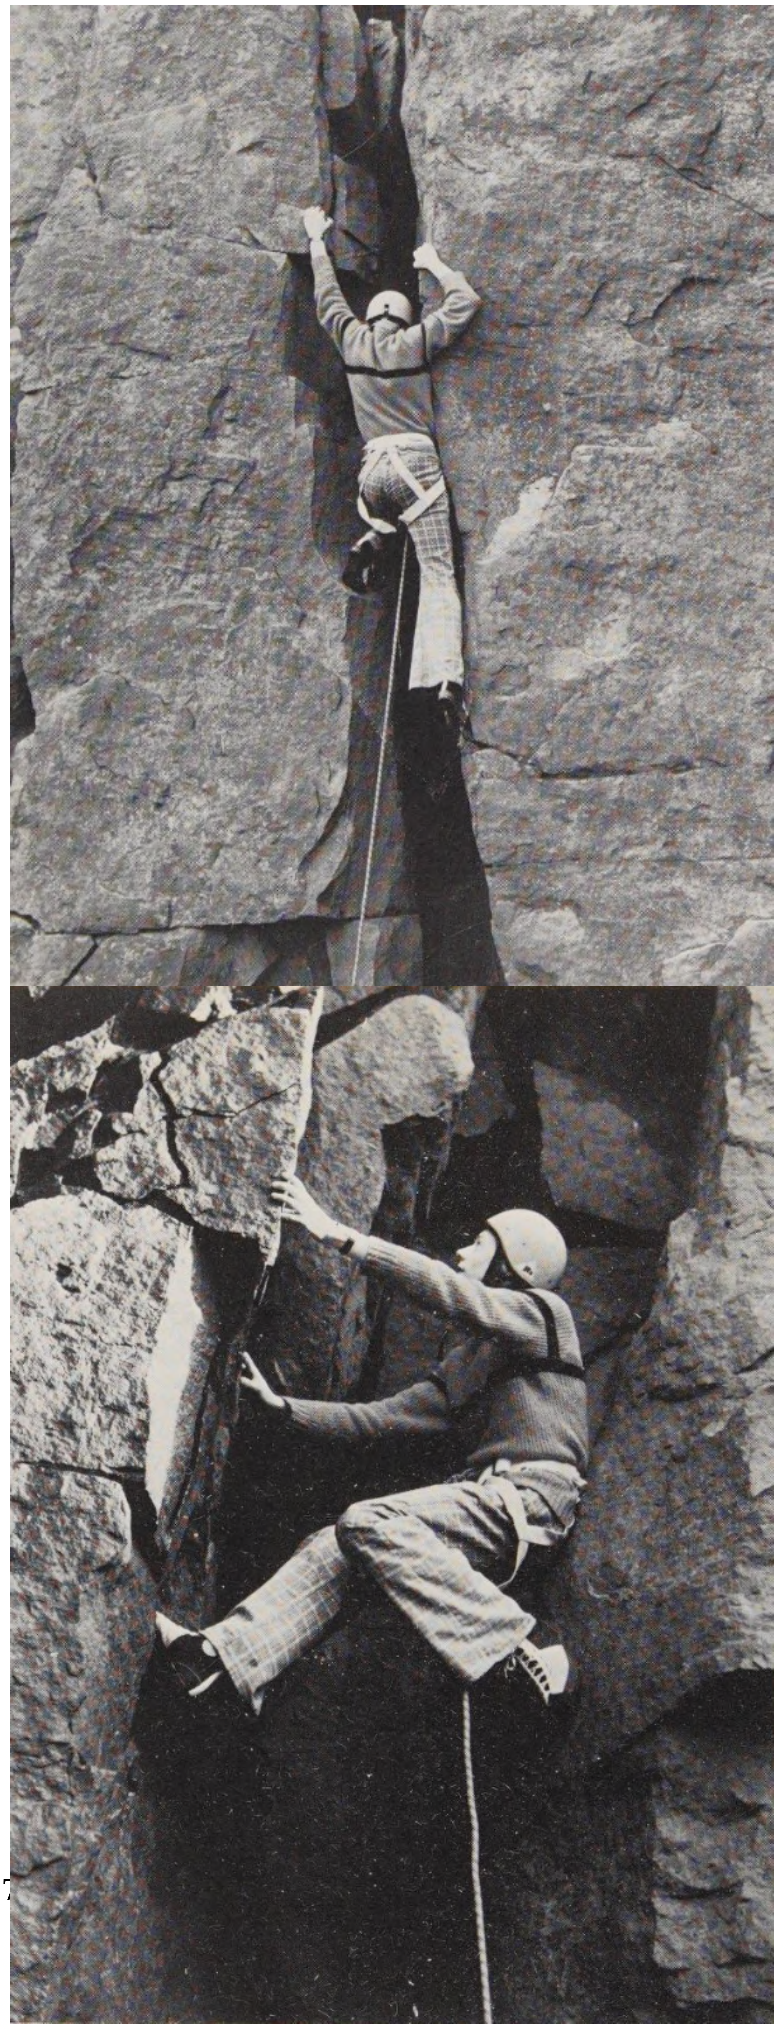
- Columbo (after a beat): Whatever it is I owe you a few lives. Count on me.

When shortly after Kristatos tells Bibi that they are going to Cuba, he says "I will be your audience" and adds "and perhaps my friend Fidel [Castro]"!

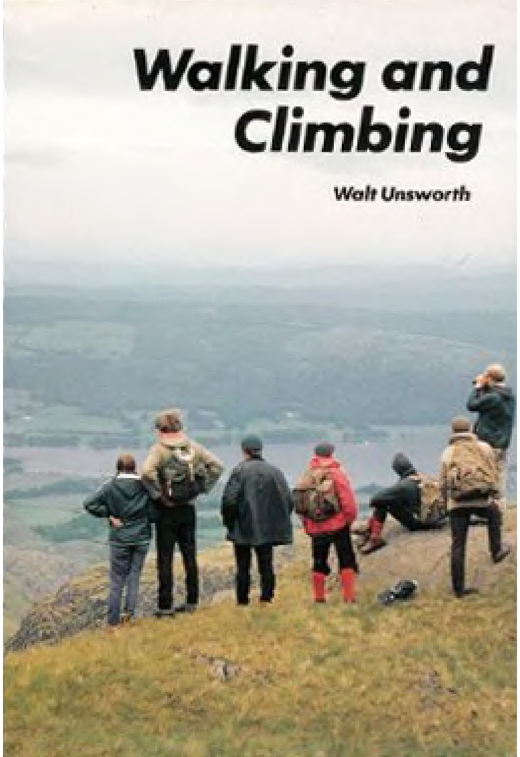
For the climbing scenes, the script asks at one point to refer to the book Walking and Climbing by Walt Unsworth. Rather unusual, the script specifies the name of the actor playing Gogol but completely screws up by writing Walter "Godoy" instead of "Gotell".

Here 007 kills Kriegler with the gun more in cold blood while Kreigler has the equivalent of his hands in the air. Columbo and Kristatos have a knife duel; Kristatos is about to finish off his opponent when he sees Bond and Melina arriving and then flees with Gogol in the helicopter.

Finally, when later on the Thetis Bond tries to stop Melina from killing Kristatos, there's an interesting line: "When you kill for revenge some thing in you dies. Forget it".



On the right two illustrations taken from Unsworth's Walking and Climbing representing movements found in the film's scripts.



Revisions: pre-title, gadgetized car and fall of Loc

- Michael Wilson[22] : Generally Cubby Broccoli and myself think about sort of a basic idea. Then I sit down and work with the writers, and take to a certain stage, we bring the director in. And director then is involved in the writing process as well. I think that's very important that the producer and the director and the writers work right closely with one another, because it means that we all have a similar vision of what the film is about. And a similar idea of how the film is gonna to be seen, and produced and directed. [...] [John Glen] is very much involved in the writing of the script.

- John Glen[23] : I was very much involved. When we first started we had a four page treatment. Mike Wilson, Dick Maibaum and myself were very close together for a very concentrated period. This was interrupted by going on surveys and, having seen the surveys, we would come back and write or rewrite action scenes to fit the locale, which was a wonderful opportunity.

Another revised script of unknown date turns out to be incomplete. It has pages dated 13 and 18 June as well as 3, 8, 14 and 16 July, 1980. I will skip certain details in this one to mention them later in the section dedicated to the "August 15" script.

The pre-title is now defined and includes Tracy's grave, the priest (a fake one, the real one is gagged with his wife), the helicopter remote-controlled by the man in the wheelchair, passing through a gas plant, dropping the man with the cat (here in the river).

According to Michael Wilson: "It was John Glen who came up with the idea of [Bond] going to Tracy's grave. He wanted to show a continuity of the Bond's stories, that he was still the same character"[24].

- John Glen[25] : I was delighted and surprised to be offered For Your Eyes Only, but the first thing Cubby said to me was "You've got to find a new Bond. Roger's getting too old and he's getting too expensive". [...] So I went out all around the world testing likely Bonds, [...] it got back to Roger that I was testing other people for the role of Bond. He was still negotiating, [...] Cubby was a good poker player, and if he could convince Roger that we were looking for someone else, then it gave him a bit of an edge in the bargaining department. I didn't realize it, but I think I was a bit of a tool in this ploy. [...] When Cubby told me I had to find a new Bond, I thought to myself that I've got to remind the audience of the history of Bond. Of course On Her Majesty's Secret Service was very much on my mind. So I wrote a scene to introduce a new Bond involving the gravesite of his wife, Tracy, [...] then devised the helicopter action scene that would follow it. The whole point was to introduce a new Bond. That was my way of doing it, but of course when Roger agreed to do the film, I thought, "It's actually a very good sequence, isn't it, to remind the audience of Bond's past? [So] why not?". So we kept the introduction, and it's a nice touch with Roger putting the flowers on the grave.

- John Glen[26] : Years before at Pinewood Studios, I saw the son of one of our technicians had a remote-control car. That gave me the spark to think about this remote-controlled helicopter.

Melina is now 28 years old (instead of 24) and she is now, on a page dated June 13, equipped with a crossbow instead of a bow at Gonzales' villa. The Lotus now has an anti-theft protection that is explosive to say the least. The chase in 2 CV is deprived of its climax with the helicopter now that a similar scene is already present in the pre-title. On the other hand, the car chase section is a little longer than before, including a passage where Bond drives through a farm gate just wide enough for the Dedeuche. The wider Mercedes also manages to pass: by sacrificing its body wings. As the chickens fly outside the path of the cars, a farmer turns to his wife, commenting laconically: "[ah], touristas!".

The end of the chase is also in the same style:

Comes to an old rickety bridge used mainly for foot traffic. [...] The Mercedes is closing fast. The Mercedes is on the bridge, but it is too wide: the wheels slip off either side. The bridge collapses. The Mercedes falls into a ravine and bursts into flame. [...]
- Bond: They burned their bridges...

When Bond investigates on his own toward the MI6 log' computer, he once again comes to disturb Q as was the case in certain treatments:

- Bond: Q, I am interested in computer bugging, thought you could give me some tips.
- Q: 007, Don't you ever read this section's manuals? Q Section does not go through years of painstaking research and study to produce these books for its own amusement. This was circulated to the Double 0 section last year.

The pursuit in the postal rail network is also a little more elaborate than before. O'Grady goes down a chute reserved for mail, 007 follows him. The villain then boards a departing mail train; Bond barely manages to get on the last carriage. He goes to the other wagon towards O'Grady who throws a bag of mail at him: the PPK falls from 007's hands and ends up on an electrified rail. Bond and O'Grady are now fighting hand-to-hand on the moving train but 007, having his back turned to the direction of the train, doesn't see an obstacle behind him. O'Grady sees it and dives to avoid it. Bond is struck by the obstacle and O'Grady takes the opportunity to strangle him but 007 struggles by sticking his fingers in his eyes. While fighting, they fall from the train and find themselves on the track. O'Grady grabs a brick and hits Bond with it, managing to knock him down towards the tracks. When he hears another train arriving he moves a little away from 007: he is going to let the train finish him off. However Bond kicks a rail switch and the train bearing down on him is diverted at the last moment onto the rail where O'Grady is now standing! End of the game for the latter.

Bond is no longer assigned an ASP anymore and Melina is now present in Cortina d'Ampezzo. She is attacked by bikers in a scene similar to the film.

Further on, Bond on skis is attacked by Loc and Klaus on snowmobiles. He takes refuge at the ski jump and after jumping it, the pursuit now continues, this time with Claus and Kriegler riding motorcycles. This includes the sequence with the bobsled that will be found in the film.

Bond exits the bobsleigh track to a level where Ferrara is waiting for him with the Lotus (and Bond gets into the car). Kriegler does the same but crashes his motorcycle. Someone comes to pick him up in a Mercedes and a chase begins against the Lotus on an icy road, then onto a frozen lake.

- Ferrara: This beats sitting behind a desk in Milan.

DN
5996
US
DN
US 5603
DN
US 5603

On said lake there are people racing sailboats on ice. The Lotus manages to pass through without a scratch but the Mercedes hits some sailboats; which, however, doesn't stop it. Kriegler leans out of the window to shoot:

- Ferrara: It's getting hot.
- Bond: Wish you were behind your desk now?

007 presses a button and mines fall from the back of the Lotus and explode on the ice. The Mercedes disappears into a hole.

Bond and Ferrara are not out of the woods however: men armed with bazookas appear on snowmobiles in front of them. 007 presses another button: a reticule appears on the windshield and 4 rockets launch towards the snowmobiles.

They arrive at a snow embankment; Bond presses a button and tracks/treads come out from under the wheels on both sides of the Lotus: "the car is now a snowmobile"! Having now enough traction, Bond climbs the embankment while Klaus crashes his snowmobile into the hole where the Mercedes had fallen.

Many of these ideas will be reused during the writing of The Living Daylights. Moreover, in an earlier version dated June 18, 1980, Bond didn't release mines to get rid of the Mercedes but pressed a button which made a circular saw appear at the level of the rear wheel of the Lotus, with it he traced a circle in ice. Like the police car in The Living Daylights which Bond will similarly trap, the Mercedes inside the circle sinks.

(Another shorter/simplistic version was also written at one time, in which the Lotus was initially not pursued by a Mercedes but only by three snowmobiles (one driven by Kriegler) equipped with rocket launchers. Bond pressed the button to deploy the tracks and was chased in the snow until he also deployed rockets from his Lotus and got rid of his enemies).

With no more adversaries in sight, Bond goes to see Bibi at the rink; he tells Ferrara to take the Lotus and go to the airport to leave the country. Before leaving, Ferrara goes to Bond's hotel but Loc, who is there, runs into him. After beating/interrogating Ferrara tied to a chair, Loc shoots him in the head.

After confronting the hockey players, Bond returns to his hotel and finds Ferrara's body with a dove pin.

Bond meet Melina who is with a curator, but not in a museum: at the Acropolis (again). There is no longer scene where they wander around Athens or Corfu together; the dialogues take place at the Acropolis and at the end they kiss. Melina tells him that she doesn't know why she did that and that he'd better leave.

007 reunites with Kristatos at the Achilleion; this time Bond bets a little at the casino but no longer dances with Lisl. Melina now sees Bond with Lisl at the casino rather than at his hotel and there is now a third buggy in Lisl's death scene.

Further into the warehouse, on a page dated July 3, Loc's death was rewritten to resemble the movie. His car now ends up balanced on a ledge with Loc still alive in it. 007 pushes it into the void after throwing the dove pin found on Ferrara's body to Loc.

- John Glen[27] : I was aware that we were at a crossroads in the depiction of the [Bond] character and I fought hard to show Bond kick the car. Roger [Moore, who was against the idea] ultimately agreed it was the right decision.

We also note that the Havelocks submarine is now named the Neptune.

"August 15"' script: disappearance of the log, Identigraph and Locque

"My final... (2nd draft?)" and "completed August 15, 1980" we can read on the cover page of this 118 script which now very closely resembles the film. The thing consists mainly of pages dated 24 and 31 July, heavily hand-edited.

The script opens with a pre-title sequence that is almost identical to the one of the film except that when the "man in wheel chair" or "man with cat" (depending on the pages) speaks for the first time, there is a small reference to Diamonds Are Forever (1971), a careful way of making the public understand that it is indeed Blofeld (whose name, however, does not appear in any script):

> - Voice: Good afternoon, Mr. Bond. I thought we should celebrate the tenth anniversary of our last meeting. Don't concern yourself with the pilot, [he was] one of my less useful people.

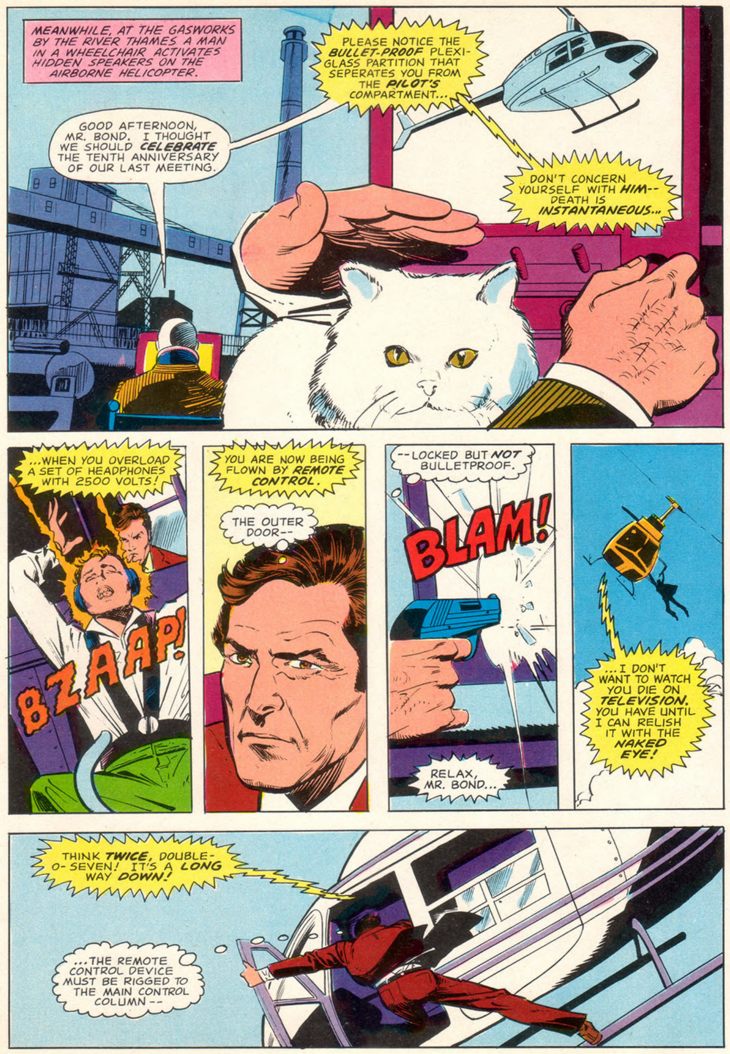
At one point, the man drives the helicopter under a bridge at the last moment and says to 007:

> - Voice: Relax, Mr. Bond. I don't want to watch you die on television. You have until I can relish it with the naked eye.

To exit the helicopter, Bond uses his Walther to shoot the door lock, and as the helicopter passes through the building, it was not going to be a straight line flight: Bond had to steer the aircraft in various galleries and exit through a hole in the roof.

In general, the man in the wheelchair is much less talkative than in the film, for example when 007 impales the wheelchair with the helicopter, the man doesn't speak (so no stainless steel lines of dialogue). Bond doesn't drop him into a chimney, but into the Thames where he falls into the water with a "large fountain-like splash". 007 "grimly" says one of his puns: "The party's a washout..." and the credits start.

> - Richard Maibaum[28] : It was supposed to be Blofeld, but that line: "I'll buy you a delicatessen in stainless steel": I had nothing to do with it. It was phoned in on the set by somebody. I don't know who. It's probably the worst line in the whole damn thing.



MEANWHILE, AT THE GASWORKS BY THE RIVER THAMES A MAN IN A WHEELCHAIR ACTIVATES HIDDEN SPEAKERS ON THE AIRBORNE HELICOPTER.
GOOD AFTERNOON, MR. BOND. I THOUGHT WE SHOULD CELEBRATE THE TENTH ANNIVERSARY OF OUR LAST MEETING.
PLEASE NOTICE THE BULLET-PROOF PLEXI-GLASS PARTITION THAT SEPERATES YOU FROM THE PILOT'S COMPARTMENT...
DON'T CONCERN YOURSELF WITH HIM-- DEATH IS INSTANTANEOUS...
...WHEN YOU OVERLOAD A SET OF HEADPHONES WITH 2500 VOLTS!
BZAAP!
YOU ARE NOW BEING FLOWN BY REMOTE CONTROL.
THE OUTER DOOR--
--LOCKED BUT NOT BULLETPROOF.
BLAM!
RELAX, MR. BOND...
...I DON'T WANT TO WATCH YOU DIE ON TELEVISION. YOU HAVE UNTIL I CAN RELISH IT WITH THE NAKED EYE!
THINK TWICE, DOUBLE-O-SEVEN! IT'S A LONG WAY DOWN!
...THE REMOTE CONTROL DEVICE MUST BE RIGGED TO THE MAIN CONTROL COLUMN --

Marvel's comic book adaptation of the film includes certain parts from the scripts that will not be found in the film.

- John Glen[29] : That was Cubby's line. He invented that line, and we all thought it came very, very out of left field in a way. I'm not sure how amusing it was. [...] It probably perplexed quite a lot of people as well. It was a sop to Cubby Broccoli, shall we say. He was the boss, and it was his line.

One theory is that this is an obscure reference to mafia language in the old days meaning offering a bribe; delis with stainless steel counters being the best as you could cut the meat and wipe it easily (unlike a wooden counter). But this has never been confirmed. (The dubber decided to transform it into "I would offer you a fortune... In stainless steel" in the french version of the film).

After the credits some ships were renamed: the Morgana was transformed into the St. Georges and the Thetis became the Triana. The script includes an exchange between Timothy Havelock and the parrot Max:

- Havelock: Get up in there [the cage], Max.
- Max: Can't get it up, can't get it up.
- Havelock: Watch your language, Max. Melina's coming.

- Richard Maibaum (to Michael Wilson): Incidentally I don't like the parrot's line about not being able to get it up. Who did it hear say that? One of the crew? Havelock? It's also very tasteless. I suggest Havelock say "Give us a kiss, ducks" to Max.

A more important development is that there is no longer at all this concept of a log of MI6' activities and all the scenes linked to it disappeared. Instead 007 finds M in his usual office and is sent to Spain. Here "Loc" has been renamed "Lock" with a K; this was then scratched out to be replaced by hand with "Locque". The scriptwriters no longer define him as South Vietnamese (Bond will describe him to Q as "Caucasian" later; a previously written version also gave him English nationality). Locque is described as having "a cadaverous impassive face" topped with "incongruous" glasses and a hat.

The script (still) calls for a "nude" girl by the pool.

The chase in a 2CV (of an unspecified color) is now similar to the film, although Bond is a little less talkative.

When he returns to London, all the scenes with the log and O'Grady have been replaced by something similar to the film with the "Identigraph". The screenwriters were probably inspired by the "Identicast" of the novel Goldfinger:

- Goldfinger*, chapter 5: The Records duty officer was already at the controls of the Identicast in the projection room. He said to Bond, "Could you give me the > main lines of the face, sir? That'll help me leave out the slides that are obviously no good".

> Bond did so and sat back and watched the lighted screen.
> The Identicast is a machine for building up an approximate picture of a suspect, or of someone who has perhaps only been glimpsed in a street or a train or in a passing car. It works on the magic lantern principle. The operator flashes on the screen various head-shapes and sizes. When one is recognized it stays on the screen. Then various haircuts are shown, and then all the other features follow and are chosen one by one; different shapes of eyes, noses, chins, mouths, eyebrows, cheeks, ears. In the end there is the whole picture of a face, as near as the scanner can remember it, and it is photographed and put on record.
> It took some time to put together Goldfinger's extraordinary face, but the final result was an approximate likeness in monochrome. Bond dictated one or two notes about the sunburn, the colour of the hair and the expression of the eyes, and the job was done.

Arriving in Q's Lab, there is the gag of the arm in a cast, and Bond asks Q if there is a model for the legs. Q replies that he is working on it and 007: "The KGB should get a kick out of that". Bond says the umbrella would be good for Wimbledon (a tennis tournament) and there is no car being rebuilt.

They make a robot portrait (in 3D) and the man identified by the Identigraph turns out to be "Albert Vincent Lock", crossed out and corrected by hand to "Emile Leopold Locque". The description of his past that Q reads is similar to what we find in the film (except for an additional line indicating that he was a mercenary in the Congo and the East Indies).

We find Bond going to Cortina d'Ampezzo at the wheel of the "Bond's car (same type we saw in Spain but different colour)". Surprisingly he is not alone: Q is with him!

> - Bond: She handles like a dream, Q.

Bond stops the car and Q gets out. It turns out that Q is coming to Cortina for a vacation and has obviously asked Bond to drop him off (Q doesn't reappears further in the script). These passages with Q will be crossed out by hand.

007 no longer meets Ferrara at his hotel but at the location of the film. The dialogues with Melina (27 years old), however, are a little different from the film:

> - Melina: You saved my life.
> - Bond: You saved mine in Madrid. Why are you in Cortina?
> - Melina: This message, to meet here today at the Albergo Aurora.
> - Bond: Message?
> - Melina: The English Consul in Corfu phoned the Triana and forwarded it. He said I would know who sent it; I thought it was you.
> - Bond: It wasn't, and he wasn't the Consul, but it explains those motorcycles. [I never sent a telegram. Get in. The railway station].

There is no longer the scene of the bomb at the hotel but Kristatos' chalet is still present. The action scene in the snow remains similar to the previous script except that the entire chase between the Lotus, the Mercedes and the snowmobiles has been removed.

...MORE APPROPRIATE FOR A DESSERT THAN A--
--SNOW JOB!
WHOOOSH!
OUTSIDE...
I'M LATE AGAIN, FERRARA OLD MAN... DREADFULLY SORRY, BUT--
DEAD.
STRANGLED.
SOMETHING CLENCHED IN HIS HAND...

The story moves to the ice rink where the script of course includes the deleted scene where 007 covers the hockey players with snow; "A snow job", comments Bond.

Bond now discovers Ferrara dead in the car but doesn't immediately realize that he is dead:

> Ferrara seated in front. Bond, somewhat the worst for wear, approaches car.
> - Bond: We've got a lot to sort out. Where can we get a drink?
> Ferrara remains motionless and silent. Bond turns to him.

In the next scene, Bond meet Melina on a dock in Corfu (not the Acropolis).

> - John Glen[30] : On For Your Eyes Only we were intending to shoot in Athens, around the Acropolis. So we went there and quite frankly didn't like what we saw. It looked impossible and the local cooperation wasn't very good and they're sensitive about people even walking on the ground and anyway it's not the most attractive place in the world.

Things are slightly different compared to the film, Melina's desire for revenge is particularly mentioned more:

> - Melina: James! How did you know I was here?
> - Bond: phoned the boat. They said you'd just left.
> - Melina: Have you anything to tell me?
> - Bond: I'm meeting a man at the Casino tonight who may be helpful.
> - Melina: Where are you staying?
> - Bond: The Corfu Palace.
> - Melina: I'll ring you there. When will you get back from the casino?
> - Bond: Melina, I know how you feel and you've been very patient...
> - Melina: I don't know how much longer I can be. I work day and night to keep myself occupied, but I never forget, not for a moment, what I've sworn to do.
> - Bond: Actually I called to warn you. After you left Cortina I ran into a few more extremely hostile persons. So be careful.

> - Melina: Careful? I'd welcome them. I have to lay in provisions for the crew. Come along if you like.

They walk the streets of Corfu:

> - Bond: I like Corfu. Where's your home, Melina?
> - Melina: Home's always been the Triana, the sea, the Greek islands, Turkey, North Africa, wherever father's work took us..
> - Bond: A water gypsy. Wasn't it a lonely life for a young girl?
> - Melina: I never thought so, the crews all spoiled me... Then I went to boarding school in England and after that Scripp's Oceanography Institute in California (To a melon seller) Two crates of theses. Have them on the quay by six...
> [...]
> [Bond sees her smile].
> - Bond: That's better... A ray of Greek sunlight.
> - Melina: I'm not really an unhappy person. It's just that... I have to go back...
> - Bond: Not yet, please.

They are now in a garden:

> - Melina: I love the Aegean sunsets. So did my father... Why would anyone kill him? He only wanted to enrich people's lives. (Bond puts his hands around her, she turns her face towards him and they end up kissing...). I shouldn't have let that happen, not yet, we'd better go...

In the following scenes, Bond is at the casino then its restaurant. Milos Columbo is described as a "tanned, well-groomed, well-tailored man in his middle fifties. Ruggedly handsome, he looks as though he had a zest for life, an ironical sense of humor, and undeniable authority". Funny thing, when Bond follows Lisl to her beach house (in fact he still lures her by promising her a diamond jewelry), the script tells us that "Bond's things-I-do-for-England look fleets across his face".

For Locque's death, Bond simply gave his enemy's car a "little push" and say once he is dead: "He never looked better".

Later, the Mantis no longer fires projectiles at Melina's submarine but uses its standard equipment and Bond no longer pretends to surrender: the scene is similar to the film.

In the weeks leading up to the completion of this script, several iterations of the Kriegler fight were imagined. In one of them Kriegler at one point grabs a large stone like in the film, but drops it to the floor, creating a hole leading to a cistern below into which Bond throws him. In this script the fight against Erich Kriegler is more similar to the film, although it ends with 007 walking Kriegler onto the end of a loose floorboard which then rises and hits Kriegler in the crotch. Holding the stone, he loses his balance and falls through the window.

More importantly: this time Kristatos fails to escape in the general's helicopter. Indeed Kristatos and Columbo have their knife duel:

> - Kristatos: Let us see who cuts whose throat, Milos!

- Columbo: I should have cut yours forty years ago!

Bond and Melina catch up with Kristatos who was fleeing towards the helicopter. As in the film, 007 stops the girl from killing him with her crossbow while Columbo throws his knife at Kristatos who was about to stab Bond. It should be noted that after killing his enemy, Columbo "makes the sign of the cross over him".

One notable difference with the film however: Bond doesn't throw the A.T.A.C. in the void; he keeps it in his hands while General Gogol decides to leave empty-handed the monastery.

The ending of the script is also different from the one of the film: near the Triana and the sunken temple, Columbo divers go underwater at night with lamps. We can see the naked silhouettes of Bond and Melina swimming near the temple. On the deck of a boat on the surface, there are Columbo, one arm in a sling, Bibi and Brink.

- Bibi: Isn't it super? Uncle Milos is my new sponsor!

M and the minister arrive on the deck of Columbo's boat; the minister asks if they should salute the Triana. Columbo (who received a medal from the British) illuminates the Triana with spotlights and the light reveals Bond and Melina on a mattress, a bucket of champagne next to them. Melina tries to cover herself with a large towel and Columbo turns off the light and hands a speaker to the minister.

- Minister: Congratulations, Mr. Bond. We're all delighted with your performance.
- M: Don't dawdle out here too long, Double-O Seven. You're needed on active service. So get on with it!
[Melina is still draped in her towel, Max is in his cage].
- Melina: For your eyes only, darling.
- Max: Darling, darling...

The camera follows the towel that Melina throws at Max's cage who whistles ecstatically, and the end.

"August 12, 1980"' scripts: final lap for M

In my possession are three different scripts: all dated August 12, 1980 on the cover, although probably none of them are from that date.

A first 122 pages written by Richard Maibaum and Michael G. Wilson is very faithful to the film. No big difference with that one of August 15 except that it is more presentable and more recent than the latter because handwritten modifications such as Locque or St. Georges appear typed here.

The shooting of the film began in September 1980[31]. My second script "August 12" is also 122 pages but contains a revised page from November 14, 1980.

This script is the last one in my possession to still contain the character of M. As many of you know: Bernard Lee, the actor who played M since Dr No, died of stomach cancer on January 16, 1981. The film was still in the filming stage and the traditional scene in M's office hadn't yet been filmed. The actor, despite his state of health, had tried to film a scene in November 1980, but unable to remember his lines, it was too much for him and he had to apologize[32].

Consequently, as a tribute to the actor who was unable to participate in the film, it was decided to rewrite the script a little bit in order to not include M's character in it (these revisions are dated from the beginning of November, before Lee's death). Still nowadays, For Your Eyes Only is the only EON' James Bond in which M does not appear. (Note that the Marvel comic book adaptation does however contain M).

The "original" office scene with M's character was almost exactly the same as in the movie (taking place with Tanner and Frederick Gray), as you can see below:

- Moneypenny: James!
- Bond: Moneypenny, a feast for my eyes.
- Moneypenny: How about the rest of you?

[He embraces her from behind].

- Bond: We'll get around to that...

She skillfully disengages herself.

- Moneypenny: Unfortunately M wants you immediately...
- Bond: I'll be right back...
- Moneypenny: I can't wait...

[He enters M's office; Tanner is there too].

- Bond: Sir, Chief of Staff.
- M (no time for amenities): Are you aware of our A.T.A.C. system, Double-O-Seven?
- Bond: A.T.A.C. Automatic Targeting Attack Communicator. Uses an ultra-low frequency coded transmitter to order our submarines to launch ballistic missiles.

> - M: Five days ago our spy ship St. Georges sank in the Ionian Sea. She was A.T.A.C. equipped.
> - Tanner: If that transmitter falls into the wrong hands our entire Polaris fleet would be useless.
> - Bond: Every order could be countermanded.
> - M: Worse. Our submarines could be ordered to attack our own cities.
> - Bond: Have we begun a salvage operation, sir?
> - M: An official operation was out of the question. The St. Georges was off the Albanian coast.
> - Tanner: We asked Sir Timothy Havelock, the marine archaeologist, to locate the wreck on the Q.T. Before he could report back he and his wife were killed by a Cuban hitman, Hector Gonzales. Greek police identified him from a description by Melina, the Havelock daughter. Operation Undertow. All the information's in here [a file For Your Eyes Only].
> - M: Gonzales is at a villa near Madrid. Isolate him and apply the necessary pressure to learn who hired him...

Further on, after the sequences in Spain, the script moves on to a scene in the minister's office, except that most of the dialogues which are spoken by Tanner in the film, are spoken here by M in the script. After the Identigraph scene, it is not Tanner who is informed that the man who has been identified is Locque, but M.

> - Roger Moore[33] : Desmond [Llewelyn] [Q] always had reams of the most impossible dialogue to utter. And if that wasn't bad enough, I would sit down with the script [continuity] girl, write gobbledygook dialogue, get her to type it up, give it to John Glen and say, "This is the new dialogue, give it to Desmond one minute before the take". Poor Desmond fell for it every time.

In Cortina, Kristatos gives us some information about Bibi:

> - Kristatos: An American girl from a broken home, I have taken her as my ward.... To provide the training she deserves but her parents cannot afford. The day she wins the gold medal will be the greatest of my life.

When Kristatos introduces Brink to Bond, 007 says, "I've heard of Jacoba Brink [before]". The scene at Kristatos' chalet finally disappeared: the dialogues have been moved to the ice rink's scene as in the film.

Later the ski chase which will be filmed will be faithful to the one described in the script, except that the men in the bobsleigh, distracted by Bond, were supposed to crash.

When Bond returns to Melina in Corfu after killing Locque, he finds her underwater and they go back up to the Triana:

> - Bond (to crew member): Thanks for the gear. (He turns to Melina) Fifth century B.C.? Temple of Apollo, submerged by an earthquake.
> - Melina: I called your hotel. You weren't there.
> - Bond: Things got a bit out of hand.
> - Melina: I'm not interested in your sex life, Mr. Bond.
> - Bond: I didn't come here to discuss it. I need your help. It's time we joined forces. Where can we...?

[They go to her father's office and Melina asks him where the St. George sank, etc.].

Deleted scene from the film where similar dialogues took place.

When the story moves to Saint Cyril, it isn't Q who meets Bond in the confessional, but M disguised as an Orthodox priest (same dialogue as in the film, except that Bond says "sir").

